PREFACE

Welcome to the 153rd edition of The Statesman's Yearbook—a concise reference work containing over 1,500 pages of data on the political, economic and social landscape of all the countries of the world plus territories.

The 2017 edition includes a thought-provoking essay on the history and current state of democracy, which has undergone a radical transformation as many countries see more and more polarized parties and candidates being highly influential at elections, holding the balance of power or even taking power. Who would have thought even ten years ago that a professional comedian would become a country's president in 2016, as happened in Guatemala?

As well as the essay, our preliminary pages also include a factsheet with fascinating figures and information about democracy. In late 2015 we ran an essay competition on our website and we are pleased to include the winning piece in this year's book too.

In addition to information on nation states, we have an extensive section on major international organizations and leading think tanks. This year for the first time we're including data for individual countries on civil and criminal justice world rankings from a renowned annual survey.

We also have an accompanying website at www.statesmansyearbook.com, for which a site license is required to access most of the content. This is updated regularly throughout the year and contains additional material that isn't included in the book. One of the features is our archive going back to the first edition in 1864. In 2014 we added to our website a series of infographics, special features on prominent world leaders and 'snapshot' articles, written by Palgrave Macmillan authors on a range of topics relevant to our readership all of which is free for everyone to enjoy.

We always welcome feedback on the book and our website. Please email us on sybcomments@palgrave.com.

WHAT FUTURE FOR DEMOCRACY?

Barry Turner investigates democracy's role in the modern world

Democracy is in poor health. Freedom House, a watchdog group which reports on political rights and civil liberties, calculates that of 195 countries assessed over the last eight years, there has been a net decline in freedom. Democracy has languished in Bangladesh, Kenya, Thailand and Venezuela and would appear to be in terminal collapse in Russia and Turkey.

Expectations that the Arab Spring would spread democracy throughout the Middle East have been disappointed. Meanwhile, in the US and Europe where modern democracy was born and nurtured, there is widespread disillusionment with a system of government that is prone to inefficiency and to a none too subtle form of corruption which favours the wealth and power of a small minority.

If voting patterns are anything to go by, political participation is in sharp decline. According to the OECD, levels of voting in national and local elections are down 70 per cent on 30 years ago. In several of what are dubbed 'advanced' countries there is a disturbing trend towards authoritarianism, a desire for a strong leader who will sort things out. Shades of the 1930s begin to close in.

And it has all happened so quickly. A mere quarter century ago, at the end of the Cold War, futurologists were as one in declaring that unrepresentative governments, of whatever political hue, had no future. What has gone wrong? Before venturing into muddy waters it would be as well to agree on what we mean by democracy. Commonly-held features can be identified—the right to vote in open and honestly managed elections, liberty of conscience, freedom of speech, universal education, minimum living standards, the protection of minority rights and the private ownership of property. But none of these are absolutes. Even the interpretation of something as apparently fundamental as freedom of speech fluctuates wildly between democracies. Similarly, across the range of democracies, the right to vote is more or less free depending upon the electoral system in place.

Throughout history there have been ebbs and flows in the direction and interpretation of democracy. The early Athenians were the first to practise a form of government by which citizens could debate and decide collectively on matters of general concern. The idea made no sense to Plato and Aristotle who argued that democracy, in handing power to the commonality, was a recipe for the destruction of the state. It was a contention that was to be echoed down the ages by the promoters of strong government led by a political messiah, royal or otherwise. A more charitable view of the commonality was fed into the mainstream by Christianity. With each person judged to be spiritually equal in the sight of God, every individual was able to claim certain rights which a ruler was bound to respect.

Pre-eminent among the post-medieval philosophers, Thomas Hobbes attempted a rational foundation for the exercise of sovereign power by deducing that citizens willingly ceded some of their rights in return for protection. Their freedom was to do whatever they liked outside whatever was explicitly forbidden by law. With the advance towards a more structured society, elitism prevailed. The concept of private property was intrinsically linked to the state, and only by its mandate could it exist. However, in denying the authority of the Church, the Protestant Reformers experienced self-government in religious and social matters and got a taste for true democracy. During the English Civil War (1642–49), the Puritan Colonel Rainboro famously asserted, 'the poorest he that is in England hath a life to live as the richest he'. It followed that 'every man that is to live under a government ought first by his own consent put himself under that government'. In rejecting a distinction between those born to rule and the rest who were born to obey, he made an argument familiar today in countries groping towards some form of democracy.

A century on from the English Civil War, upheavals on both sides of the Atlantic restored democracy to the forefront of political discourse. In America, the newly created states began with a clean political slate on which to draw the framework for government at regional and national level. The constitution-makers stressed individual rights to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness as the essential safeguard against government abuse of power. What emerged was a hands-off type of administration that suited the vigorous, self-reliant society that was pioneering the new America.

The contrast with France in the wake of its own revolution could not have been greater. Maximilien Robespierre, the dominant figure of the Revolution, defined democracy as 'a state in which the sovereign people, guided by laws which are its own work, does by itself all it can do well, and by delegates all that it could not'. In other words, having chosen their representatives, the people had to accept what was enacted in their name. The two ideals remain distinct and thus a source of confusion in any discussion of the function and organization of democracy. Following to varying degrees the example of France, other European countries tend to favour the state over the individual. In the US, the reverse holds good.

As depicted in popular history, the 19th to the early 20th centuries was a people's march towards liberal democracy. But with the expansion of civil rights, the creation of political parties and wider participation in elections came counter-movements aimed at restraining democracy, driven by fear of rule by the mob. At its mildest the philosophy of restraint was expressed by Edmund Burke, who argued that once elected, representatives should be permitted to exercise independent judgment without pandering to popular opinion. But this was too subtle for uncompromising authoritarians who leaned on nationalism, with religious overtures, as the strongest antidote to democracy. When, as in Europe's revolutions of 1830 and 1848, regimes were overthrown, they were quickly succeeded by other authoritarian rulers.

At the same time, the resort to violent revolution proved the need for every ruler, of whatever persuasion and power, to be able to draw on a generous measure of popular support. If democracy has within it the assumption of government by consent, every government, however dictatorial, has within it an element of democracy. Nationalism, furthermore, can implode. This became clear after 1914 when hundreds of thousands of young patriots marched off to slaughter in northern France. Their sacrifice brought the old European order crashing down.

With the widening of the franchise, notably to women, the framework of modern Western democracy was put in place. But it was not secure. Two forces threatened to overwhelm democracy—fascism and communism. Each movement usurped the name of democracy for its own ends. Democracy's finest hours came in 1945 with the defeat of fascism and in 1989 with the collapse of Soviet communism. By 2000 the number of democracies had increased from 66 in 1987 to 121. The momentum of the freedom march was judged to be unstoppable. But we were wrong. Democracy has stalled and there is now a real threat of a roll-back.

In the wide-ranging debate on what needs to be done to revitalize democracy, politicians are inclined to believe that once economic growth is back on track all will be well. It could happen. Anything could happen. But the emergence from recession should not fool us into believing that democracy is in the clear. The fault lines go much deeper. For one thing, our technology-driven industrial revolution destroys more jobs than it creates. Andrew McAfee of MIT's Sloan School of Management estimates that 50 per cent of current jobs will eventually be automated out of existence. The almost inevitable scarcity of employment is the biggest single threat to democracy. When a rising generation feels itself economically and politically emasculated, it is liable to lash out at those held to be responsible, notably elected politicians who have failed to deliver on their promises. Riots in American inner cities and in the French suburbs are a disturbing pointer to the future.

Globalization has become a hate word for the disaffected. While the dismantling of international trade restrictions has reduced the number of people in absolute poverty, at the same time the gap between rich and poor countries has widened, as has the gap between rich and poor within each country. Inequality is on display for all to see in the games played by powerful interest groups who make no pretence of representing the general public. Cosy capitalism feeding on greed is apparent everywhere as powerful lobbies vie with each other for a bigger share of government favours and handouts. Leading companies are now so powerful as to be beyond government (i.e. democratic control) and can frustrate political mandates by relocating the hub of their activities to wherever the profit is greatest and interference minimal. The commercial world's big players no longer think of national boundaries as setting any limit on their activities.

Public cynicism at the way business succeeds in manipulating governments is diluted by party pledges to spend, spend, spend. But this has done nothing to improve the health of democracy. Quite the reverse. With the state taking on more and yet more responsibilities, the machinery of government has become dependent on an overweight bureaucracy that is remote from the lives of ordinary citizens. A safe generalization is that bureaucracy feeds on itself to become ever fatter.

Those in power profess their enthusiasm for communicating with the people but they do so in a hectoring, propagandist manner aimed more at manipulation than enlightenment. Taking its cue, the media treats politics as a knockabout contest, a branch of the entertainment industry with not quite the pulling power of sport. The gulf between government and people is nowhere better demonstrated than in the evolution of the European Union, a noble idea that is foundering on the refusal of the administrative elite to accept the need for public accountability.

There are those, an increasing number, who argue that democracy in the Western tradition is simply no longer workable. For inspiration they look to China and other vibrant Asian economies where authoritarianism is tempered by self-government in small things that can be decided without upsetting the system. Technocrats in political guise are able to plan long-term policies that are said to be too complex for the vagaries of democracy dependent on promises and bribes of popular election.

While conceding that in our interconnected world it makes sense to delegate decision-making to experts in such matters as global warming, safeguarding computer networks, cracking down on money laundering and combating terrorism, the all-embracing rule by technocrats throws up too many fears of the abuse of power. Scant regard for human rights and the arrogance of unelected officials suggest that the path of 'managed' capitalism is anything but smooth.

Instead of giving up on democracy, we should focus on making it work better for the 21st century. A start could be made by recognizing that democracy creates many of its own problems by trying to do too much. The top heavy welfare state, unsustainable in the long run, spreads its favours too widely. If democracy is to be saved, the resources of the state must be redirected towards those of the greatest need. This means putting a brake on the hand-out of goodies to the relatively wealthy. In the US the housing subsidy to the richest fifth, by allowing mortgage interest to be tax deductible, is four times the amount spent on public housing for the poorest fifth.

Targeting the outcasts—the socially deprived who, under the present system, have little hope of breaking out of the poverty cycle—will greatly improve their life chances. But the challenge is not simply to raise standards to achieve greater equality of opportunity. Rather, we should be looking to creating a society which evens the balance between earning a living and the time allocated to family and to life enrichment.

One way of encouraging voters to play a more active role in determining how their country should be run is demonstrated in the direct democracy practised in Switzerland where 50,000 signatures on a petition, just over one per cent of the total of qualified voters, are enough to submit any new countrywide law to a vote of the whole people. With twice that number of signatures a proposal for a new law can be voted on, effectively sidelining parliament.

Critics argue that what suits a small, relatively uncomplicated society is less obviously attractive to a large, diverse country. A more serious objection has to do with framing referendum questions that can be clearly understood. Furthermore, the resort to a nationwide vote on sensitive issues can offend human rights. In Switzerland a 2009 poll banned the construction of minarets attached to mosques—even though the Swiss constitution protects freedom of religion. It is easy to imagine that an over-hasty resort to a referendum in the wake, say, of a terrorist atrocity could lead to a majority vote for the return of barbaric punishments. Abrupt changes in public mood are no guide to good government.

This is not to dismiss the value of referendums but merely to suggest that they must be judged in relation to other aspects of a working democracy. It is relevant to note that Switzerland has a long tradition of linking referenda to devolution. The delegation of power away from the centre is vital to the re-energizing of democracy. There are encouraging signs that national politicians are beginning to realize this. In Britain, until recently a highly centralized state, devolution to Scotland and Wales is being extended to clearly identifiable regions such as Greater Manchester. France is beginning to move the same way with a new regional structure that is close to German federalism, the favoured model for decentralization.

The only way forward for the EU as a whole is for more democracy, not less. Democracy may not always produce the 'right' results according to the mandarins but the alternative is a breakdown in the system and the collapse of what until now has been one of the more successful exercises in international co-operation. The policy of subsidiarity, so often discussed for the EU, so seldom practised, should now be implemented in full. More European legislation should be referred to national parliaments in draft form; each member state should be free to decide its own tax policies; the Council of Ministers should meet in public and the European Parliament should be given increased powers.

A foremost concern must be the role of money in democratic elections. Even if wealth alone is not a guarantee of electoral success, the fact that it is near impossible to aspire to high office without strong financial support is a denial of democratic rights. Those who donate expect to be rewarded. Clearly spending limits need to be imposed but the much favoured alternative of relying on state subsidy tends to benefit the established parties. The better solution is to put a strict upper limit on individual and company donations, monitored by an independent watchdog. One of the welcome side effects of this would be the encouragement of parties to broaden their support.

Despite the current tribulations, there is comfort for true democrats in knowing that while there are open and free elections, politicians who are ineffectual or who take too much upon themselves while ignoring those who put them in power are certain, eventually, to meet their comeuppance. In Italy, the voters dismissed an oligarchic prime minister who discovered that wealth and media power are not in themselves enough to secure re-election. Democracy in Nigeria triumphed in 2015 when the incumbent president was ejected in a largely peaceful election, an example to much of the rest of Africa where democracy is respected more in theory than in practice.

There is comfort too in knowing that while the authority of elected assemblies is increasingly called into question, citizens are finding other ways of making their opinions count. While, by clever manipulation of the media, pressure groups representing dubious causes can exercise an influence out of all proportion to their popular appeal, there is a profusion of voluntary organizations, including leading charities, which engage the interest and energy of those who might otherwise belong to political parties.

Consumers also have the potential to make their wishes known. Every company needs its market; a threat to withdraw the market by ceasing to buy a particular product concentrates minds wonderfully. The role of consumer democracy in restraining business pretensions should not be underrated. Meanwhile, the potential of the internet to stimulate democracy by disseminating information and by promoting dialogue has still to be tested. Though an increasing proportion of news and comment is appearing online in countries where the media is otherwise tightly controlled, the censors are already at work. Even in the older democracies the freedom of the internet and its ability to create dissent is being cited within political circles as justification for official secrecy. For democracy to thrive this, of all exclusions, is in urgent need of demolition. The model here is the Swedish constitution, which rules that legal justification is required before a public authority can refuse access to documents or information.

Above all, politicians need to remind voters of the virtue of freedom. Democracies are typically richer than non-democracies, are less likely to go to war and have a better record of fighting corruption. Democracy allows for the voice of the people to be heard. It is in the nature of democracy that it will always be a shifting concept, defined at any one time by a mix of high ideas and socio-economic practicalities. What may fit one country at a particular time may not necessarily suit all. But the fundamentals are clear enough.

Those of us who are lucky to live in relatively free societies must recognize the need to protect and nourish what we have, the better to support those who, sooner or later, will want to join the club.

2,500 YEARS OF DEMOCRACY: DID YOU KNOW?

Democracy, according to the Oxford English Dictionary, is ‘a system of government in which all the people of a state or polity ... are involved in making decisions about its affairs, typically by voting to elect representatives to a parliament or similar assembly’.

Democracy as a form of government is generally considered to have been born in ancient Athens, with Cleisthenes (born c. 570 BC) regarded as ‘the father of Athenian democracy’. Our word democracy comes from the Greek demokratia meaning ‘rule by the people’.

Writing in the fourth century BC, Aristotle said: ‘If liberty and equality, as is thought by some, are chiefly to be found in democracy, they will be best attained when all persons alike share in the government to the utmost.’ The UN Universal Declaration of Human Rights, meanwhile, states that ‘the will of the people shall be the basis of the authority of government’.

The world’s oldest extant elected parliament is Iceland’s Alþingi, established around 930 AD.

With 834m. eligible voters as of 2014, India is the world’s largest democracy.

The first nation to grant universal adult suffrage—that is to say, votes for all adult citizens regardless of economic or social status or gender—was New Zealand in 1893.

The most common minimum age for voting in national elections is 18, although Argentina, Austria, Brazil, Cuba, Ecuador and Nicaragua all extend the right to 16-year-olds. Voting is also extended to those aged 16 in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, Serbia and Slovenia if they are in employment, and in Hungary and Indonesia if they are married.

The election for the presidency of Cabo Verde held in 2001 was decided by just 12 votes (out of more than 153,000 votes cast).

It is estimated that candidates and their supporters at the 2012 US Presidential election spent in excess of US$7bn., making it the most expensive election in the country’s history.

According to the Economist Intelligence Unit’s 2014 Democracy Index (based on 60 indicators), the five best-functioning democracies in the world are (in descending order) Norway, Sweden, Iceland, New Zealand and Denmark.

The five lowest-scoring nations (of 167 included in the survey) were (in descending order) Syria, Equatorial Guinea, Chad, Central African Republic and North Korea last.

Since 2007 the United Nations has observed 15 September as International Day of Democracy.

87-8% of the world’s countries were formal democracies as of 2011, up from 44-7% in 1985. Nonetheless, over a third of the world’s population was living under authoritarian regimes, with China accounting for more than half of the global population not residing in a formal democratic system.

Between 1960 and 1979, three-quarters of Africa’s leaders were deposed by violent means. That figure had fallen to 19% in the period 2000–05.

Outside of China and the petro-chemical states, the world’s 25 richest nations are all formal democracies.

As of 2015, nine independent countries used the word ‘Democratic’ in their full, official names: Algeria, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Ethiopia, North Korea, Laos, Nepal, São Tomé e Príncipe, Sri Lanka and Timor-Leste.

As of April 2013, 20-8% of those elected to parliament around the world were women, up from 11-7% in Jan. 1997.

Rwanda has the largest percentage of female parliamentarians of any nation, with 63-8% of the lower house comprising women.

Speaking in the UK’s House of Commons in 1947, Sir Winston Churchill remarked: ‘Many forms of Government have been tried, and will be tried in this world of sin and woe. No one pretends that democracy is perfect or all-wise. Indeed, it has been said that democracy is the worst form of government except all those other forms that have been tried from time to time.’

GAH-KAI LEUNG ON EDWARD SAID

Gah-Kai Leung's essay on Edward Said was chosen as The Statesman's Yearbook essay competition winner for 2015

Edward Said's name has remained fixed in my memory since I first encountered it while still in secondary school. At the time, I had become conscious of my Chineseness and in particular the fact that my parents came from Hong Kong, an ex-British colony. I had been trying to understand the fact that my English literature syllabus consisted mostly of dead white Britons, while excluding people like me from elsewhere in the Anglosphere. It turned out that Said had been wrestling with this same question some four decades before. He did not run for any offices, but his legacy shows that sometimes in politics it is the diplomacy of ideas, not gunboats, which wins the day.

Said is best remembered for Orientalism, first published in 1978, which argued that Western perceptions of the East—or the Orient—were tainted by colonial prejudices and that more importantly, this was necessary to rationalize the imperial project. He assembled evidence ranging from Delacroix paintings to Flaubert novels to travel writing in order to interrogate the Orient's almost mythological hold on the Western imagination. These works of art and culture essentialized the East as backward, feminine, exotic and threatening while simultaneously constructing the West as developed, masculine, familiar and benign. Orientalism has since become the foundational text in post-colonial studies, which investigates how a country processes the political and cultural ramifications of colonialism. It is required reading in universities and has gone on to influence fields as wide-ranging as history, sociology, literature, anthropology, development studies and international relations. It is arguably his greatest achievement.

Said rose to become professor of English and comparative literature at Columbia University, but did not confine himself to the comfortable surroundings of the academy. His fears of a twentieth-century Orientalism and its destructive consequences for foreign policy saw him travel the world delivering impassioned speeches to packed audiences. He criticized the Israeli presence in the Middle East—going as far as calling it the longest running military occupation in modern times—and denounced American aggression in the same region. This made him something of a firebrand among his Columbia peers, but also won him many admirers. He put the 'public' into the term 'public intellectual'.

Throughout his career, Said continued to write books which together catalogue in both personal and political terms the legacies of colonialism, from his memoir Out of Place to his groundbreaking Culture and Imperialism. In the latter, Said implored readers not to try to 'classify others or put them in hierarchies' and above all not to 'constantly reiterate how "our" culture or country is number one'. Said did not live to see the present age, but this quotation demonstrates his remarkable prescience in an era still living in the shadow of the war on terror, still dominated by the rise of Islamic State abroad and immigration crises at home, still riven by ideological, cultural and religious tensions. It is time to reconsider his work. We need Edward Said more than ever.

2015 IN 1,000 WORDS

Islamic State, Al-Qaeda, Al-Shabab, Boko Haram, the Taliban—all manifestations of a militant Islamist ideology that again left a trail of violence across many countries in 2015. In Syria, particularly, Islamic State's extremist jihadist quest to establish a caliphate across the Middle East further aggravated the civil war between the domestic opponents and supporters of President Assad's regime and also the fragile relations between their proxy international backers—Western and conservative Gulf Arab nations on one side and Iran and an increasingly assertive Russia on the other. In addition, Russia's military intervention in Syria provoked a diplomatic crisis with Turkey when a Russian jet was shot down for allegedly violating Turkish airspace. Elsewhere, assaults by Boko Haram caused hundreds more civilian deaths in Nigeria, and sectarian divisions fuelled a Shia rebellion in Yemen. Moreover, a resurgent Taliban prompted a partial postponement of the US troop withdrawal from Afghanistan, while Al-Qaeda and Islamic State took advantage of factional and sectarian strife to establish themselves in an unstable Libya. More specifically, there were devastating attacks inflicting hundreds of civilian deaths in France (in Paris), in Tunisia (in Sousse and Tunis), in Kenya (in Garissa, by Somalia-based Al-Shabab), in Turkey (in Ankara) and in Egypt (where a Russian civil airliner was brought down by a bomb).

Meanwhile, the European Union was confronted by its worst humanitarian crisis in recent times as over a million foreign refugees and migrants—principally from Syria, Iraq, Kosovo, Albania and Afghanistan seeking an escape from conflict, oppression or economic deprivation—streamed into the continent by often dangerous routes and illegal means. In turn, such an uncontrolled movement of people undermined internal EU free movement conventions, prompted national border closures and fuelled xenophobic populism in some EU countries.

EU leaders also had to contend with ongoing economic stagnation in the eurozone, poor relations with Russia in the wake of that country's more aggressive stance towards Ukraine and other neighbours, the threat of a Greek exit from the single currency and UK demands for EU institutional and sovereignty reform. In Greece, voters in two general elections and a national referendum backed a new left-wing Syriza government that rejected the economic austerity programme being imposed by the EU and IMF, but was nevertheless forced to negotiate further conditional bailout credit lines. Meanwhile, the election of an all-Conservative government in the UK saw Prime Minister David Cameron press for a repatriation of powers from Brussels to the British parliament amid growing public disaffection with EU membership. At the same time the UK election decimated Liberal Democrat parliamentary representation and prompted a change of leadership—and a left-wing policy lurch—in the opposition Labour Party.

In Myanmar the veteran human rights campaigner Aung San Suu Kyi led the opposition National League for Democracy to victory in parliamentary elections, heralding the end of repressive military control of the country, while the electoral success in Nigeria of former military dictator Muhammadu Buhari marked the first democratic handover of political power to an opposition candidate since the country's independence. There were also important polls ushering in other new leaders in Sri Lanka, Poland, Portugal, Canada and Argentina, as inconclusive voting in Spain led to coalition negotiations stretching into 2016. Meanwhile, Malcolm Turnbull deposed Tony Abbott as the Liberal Party prime minister of Australia, and women were allowed to vote and stand for public office for the first time in Saudi Arabia in municipal elections.

Major diplomatic achievements included the signature of a comprehensive agreement between Iran and the United Nations Security Council's five permanent members—China, France, Russia, the UK and the USA—plus Germany, lifting a number of US, EU and UN sanctions on Iran in return for a scaling down of the country's nuclear development activities. Also, the USA and Cuba reopened their respective embassies, 54 years after diplomatic ties had been severed in 1961. In Colombia the government and the leftist rebel group FARC agreed a Cuban-brokered deal aiming to end a conflict spanning over 50 years. And for its efforts to build democracy in Tunisia since the 2011 revolution, the National Dialogue Quartet, representing trade unionists, lawyers, human rights activists and employers, won the 2015 Nobel Peace Prize.

In social affairs the ebola virus, mainly concentrated in West Africa, was gradually contained during the year having claimed around 11,000 lives, while the Chinese communist government announced the abandonment of the country's controversial one-child policy in force for the previous 35 years. Ireland became the first country to legalize same-sex marriage by national referendum.

The world economy remained constrained as the rate of growth in China—a principal driver of global performance—slowed to its lowest level for more than 20 years, generating stock market turbulence. The IMF nevertheless voted to add the yuan as the fifth member of its special drawing rights (SDR) currency basket alongside the US dollar, Japanese yen, British pound and the euro. The year also saw the finalization of the Trans-Pacific Partnership free trading accord between 12 countries representing 40% of the world's economy (although excluding China). Corporate malpractice meanwhile came to light as major German motor manufacturer and exporter Volkswagen admitted installing sophisticated computer software in its diesel cars to cheat pollution emissions tests. Alleged top-level administrative corruption also tainted the reputations of FIFA and the IAAF, the international sporting authorities governing football and athletics.

In another bad year for disasters, Nepal, Pakistan and Afghanistan suffered crippling earthquakes, killing thousands, while avalanches in Afghanistan claimed 300 more lives. In China explosions at an industrial warehouse in Tianjin laid waste a 2-km surrounding area, and in Saudi Arabia hundreds died in a stampede of Muslim worshippers near Makkah (Mecca) in the hajj pilgrimage. As well as the downing of the Russian airliner over Egypt, a German passenger aircraft crashed in the French Alps in an apparent suicidal act by the co-pilot.

Amid further weather extremes, 2015 was deemed the warmest year on record, underlying a landmark UN climate change agreement reached in December on limiting the global average temperature rise.

CHRONOLOGY

Week beginning 5 April 2015

In Haiti, foreign minister Duly Brutus resigned and was subsequently replaced by Lener Renaud on an interim basis.

A new coalition government comprised of the Estonian Reform Party, the Social Democratic Party, and the Union of Pro Patria and Res Publica was approved by parliament in Estonia. Taavi Rõivas remained prime minister and key cabinet positions were retained by members of the previous government.

A cabinet reshuffle took place in Malaŵi. Atupele Muluzi became minister of home affairs and internal security while other key portfolios remained unchanged.

Week beginning 12 April 2015

Omar Hassan Ahmed al-Bashir was re-elected to a fifth term as president of Sudan, claiming victory in the first elections held since the secession of South Sudan in 2011. Bashir took 94.0% of the vote against 15 other candidates. However, several opposition parties had boycotted the elections citing the government's repressive measures against civil society and the media.

Week beginning 19 April 2015

Parliamentary elections took place in Finland. The Centre Party (KESK) won 49 seats, the Finns Party (PS) 38, the National Coalition Party (KOK) 37, the Social Democratic Party (SDP) 34, the Green League (VIHR) 15, the Left Alliance (VAS) 12, the Swedish People's Party (SFP) 9 and the Christian Democrats (KD) 5. One representative from the province of Åland was also elected. Prime minister Alexander Stubb of the KOK resigned later that month to allow the formation of a new government that would be led by Juha Sipilä of KESK.

Almaz Baketayev was appointed acting finance minister of Kyrgyzstan following Olga Lavrova's resignation earlier in the month.

Loretta Lynch was sworn in as attorney general of the United States, making her the first African-American woman and second woman to hold the position.

Faure Gnassingbé was re-elected president of Togo, receiving 58.8% of the vote against Jean-Pierre Fabre with 32.5% and three other candidates. Turnout was 60.9%.

Week beginning 26 April 2015

Parliamentary elections took place in Benin. The Cowry Forces for an Emerging Benin–Amana Alliance supporting president Yayi Boni won, taking 33 of 83 seats, ahead of Union Makes the Nation with 13.

Nursultan Nazarbayev was again re-elected president of Kazakhstan, extending his mandate by another five years. He subsequently reappointed prime minister Karim Masimov at the head of an unchanged government.

A cabinet reshuffle took place in the Comoros. Abdoulkarim Mohamed was appointed minister of external relations and Houmed M'saidie minister of the interior.

South Korean prime minister Lee Wan-koo, who had been implicated in a bribery scandal, had his resignation accepted by president Park Geun-hye. The premiership remained vacant following Lee's departure.

In Saudi Arabia, the second cabinet reshuffle since King Salman bin Abdulaziz Al-Saud's accession to the throne three months earlier took place. Salman's nephew and interior minister Prince Mohammad bin Naif bin Abdulaziz Al-Saud was designated as the new heir apparent to the throne, becoming deputy prime minister. Additionally, Adel bin Ahmed Al-Jubeir became foreign minister, taking over from Prince Saud Al-Faisal bin Abdulaziz Al-Saud who retired having held the position since 1975.

Temir Sariyev was sworn in as prime minister of Kyrgyzstan, succeeding Dzhoomart Otorbayev who had resigned a week earlier following government turmoil surrounding the country's financial crisis. Sariyev's cabinet included several new appointments, with Adylbek Kasymaliev becoming finance minister and Oleg Pankratov economy minister. Other key positions remained unchanged.

Week beginning 3 May 2015

Avigdor Lieberman resigned as foreign minister of Israel, declaring that he would not join Binyamin Netanyahu's new government which was being formed at the time.

Despite polls suggesting a very close result, the Conservative Party won an outright majority of 331 seats at general elections in the United Kingdom. The Labour Party won 232 seats, down from 258, and the Liberal Democrats lost 49 seats taking their total tally down to 8. However, the Scottish National Party made huge gains, increasing its share of seats at Westminster by 50 to 56 and becoming the third largest party. As a consequence, prime minister David Cameron was able to form a new all-Conservative administration, changes to which included Michael Gove as secretary of state for justice and Sajid Javid as secretary of state for business, innovation and skills. Conservative ministers holding key portfolios before the election retained their positions.

Week beginning 10 May 2015

In a cabinet reshuffle in Chile, Jorge Burgos became interior minister, Rodrigo Valdés finance minister and José Antonio Gómez defence minister. Other key portfolios remained unchanged.

David Granger of A Partnership for National Unity (in coalition with the Alliance for Change) was elected president of Guyana, winning with 50.3% of the vote.

In Micronesia, Peter M. Christian was appointed president.

Macedonian prime minister Nikola Gruevski reshuffled his cabinet following protests in the capital against his government. Mitko Chavkov became interior minister while other key portfolios remained unchanged.

Andreja Katič was sworn in as defence minister of Slovenia, taking over from Janko Veber. Veber had been dismissed the previous month following allegations he had illegally utilized Slovenia's military intelligence to assess the privatization of the state's telecommunications service.

A cabinet reshuffle took place in Algeria. Noureddine Bedoui became interior minister and Abderrahmane Benkhalfa finance minister.

In Guatemala, Alejandro Maldonado was sworn in as vice president following the resignation of Roxana Baldetti the previous week amid a corruption scandal.

In Israel, prime minister Binyamin Netanyahu's new five-party coalition government was approved by the Knesset. Included in the cabinet were Silvan Shalom as deputy prime minister and interior minister, and Moshe Kahlon as finance minister. Netanyahu took on the foreign affairs portfolio himself.

Week beginning 17 May 2015

In Burundi, Alain Aimé Nyamitwe was sworn in as minister of external affairs and Emmanuel Ntahomvukiye as minister of national defence following a cabinet reshuffle.

Andrzej Duda won presidential elections in Poland, taking 51.5% of the vote against Bronisław Komorowski with 48.5% in a second round run-off.

Parliamentary elections took place in Suriname in which the National Democratic Party won 26 of 51 seats. The V7 coalition was second with 18 followed by A-Combination with 5. Two other parties won a seat each.

In Madagascar, president Hery Rajaonarimampianina lost a parliamentary vote of no confidence by 121 votes to 4. Opposition parties (holding a majority of seats in parliament) claimed that he had violated the constitution and parliamentary conventions since coming to power in January 2014. However, his attempted impeachment was later dismissed by the constitutional court in June.

A new coalition government led by Juha Sipilä of the Centre Party was appointed in Finland. It included Timo Soini as deputy prime minister and minister of foreign affairs, and Petteri Orpo as interior minister. Former prime minister Alexander Stubb—who had been replaced by Sipilä—joined the government as finance minister.

Raimonds Vējonis won presidential elections in Latvia after five rounds of parliamentary voting. Vējonis, who was the incumbent defence minister, defeated three other candidates.

Ameenah Gurib-Fakim was elected president of Mauritius.

Week beginning 7 June 2015

Parliamentary elections took place in Turkey. The ruling Justice and Development Party (AKP) lost 53 seats compared to the polling in 2011, taking 258 of 550 seats with 40.9% of the vote. Opposition parties increased their representation in parliament with the Republican People's Party gaining 132 seats (25.0%), the Nationalist Movement Party 80 (16.3%) and the People's Democratic Party 80 (13.1%). The elections were marred by violence amid accusations of fraud and corruption, but were judged to be fair by European Parliament and OSCE observers.

In Vanuatu, the government of prime minister Joe Natuman lost a confidence vote in parliament by 27 votes to 25. The following day Sato Kilman took over as premier for the fourth time and appointed a new cabinet that included Hosea Nevu as minister of internal affairs and Serge Vohor as minister of foreign affairs.

Chiril Gaburici announced his resignation as prime minister of Moldova following allegations he had falsified his school diplomas. Natalia Gherman took over as interim prime minister later in the month.

Week beginning 14 June 2015

The Palestinian Fatah– Hamas unity government led by prime minister Rami Hamdallah resigned following claims by president Mahmoud Abbas that it was unable to function in Gaza. Abbas subsequently asked Hamdallah to form a new government.

In Benin, a new government was sworn in. Lionel Zinsou was appointed prime minister, heading a cabinet that included new appointees Saliou Akadiri as foreign minister and Placide Azandé as interior minister. Other key portfolios remained unchanged.

Parliamentary elections took place in Denmark. The Social Democratic Party won 47 of 175 mainland seats with 26.3% of the vote, the Danish People's Party 37 with 21.1%, the Liberal Party 34 with 19.5%, the Unity List—the Red-Greens 14 with 7.8% and the Liberal Alliance 13 with 7.5%. Other parties won ten seats or fewer. Although the Social Democratic Party won the most seats, the Liberal Party-led 'Blue bloc' took 90 seats compared to 85 for the Social Democratic Party-led 'Red bloc'.

French prime minister Manuel Valls survived a parliamentary vote of no confidence, which gained only 198 of the required 289 votes. The vote was called by opposition parties denouncing Valls' decision to bypass parliament in pushing through a number of economic reforms using an obscure constitutional mechanism.

Hwang Kyo-ahn was sworn in as prime minister of South Korea following Lee Wan-koo's resignation in April.

Week beginning 5 July 2015

A referendum on whether to accept financial bailout conditions offered by the European Commission, the International Monetary Fund and the European Central Bank took place in Greece; 61.3% of voters rejected the terms of the deal that was described by prime minister Alexis Tsipras as 'humiliating'. Finance minister Yanis Varoufakis, who had clashed with EU leaders during the negotiations, resigned the following day and was replaced by Efkleidis Tsakalotos.

In a cabinet reshuffle in Zimbabwe, Ignatius Chombo was sworn in as home affairs minister. Other key portfolios remained unchanged.

A cabinet reshuffle took place in Laos, including Khammanh Sounvileuth taking over as interior affairs minister and Brig.-Gen. Somkeo Silavong as public security minister.

Raimonds Vējonis was sworn in as president of Latvia, becoming the EU's first head of state affiliated to a green party. Raimonds Bergmanis subsequently took over the defence portfolio recently vacated by Vējonis.

Gen. Pak Yong-sik was confirmed by the North Korean government as the country's new defence minister. His predecessor, Hyon Yong-chol, had allegedly been executed in April on insubordination charges.

Week beginning 12 July 2015

The 'Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action' was signed between Iran and the five permanent members of the UN Security Council—China, France, Russia, the United Kingdom and the United States—plus Germany. The treaty, which had been subject to a number of delays and extensions since the adoption of its precursor (the 'Joint Plan of Action') in November 2013, lifted a number of US, EU and UN sanctions on Iran in return for a scaling down of the country's nuclear development activities.

Dési Bouterse was re-elected as president of Suriname. He ran unopposed.

In Bosnia and Herzegovina, Dragan Čović took over the eight-month rotating presidency chairmanship.

In Estonia, Marina Kaljurand was sworn in as foreign minister, replacing Keit Pentus-Rosimannus who resigned at the start of the month.

Week beginning 19 July 2015

A major cabinet reshuffle took place in Burkina Faso amid rising tensions between prime minister Isaac Zida and military officials. President Michel Kafondo took over the defence portfolio from the prime minister, in addition to the security portfolio held by Col. Auguste Denise Barry. Zida subsequently handed over the foreign affairs portfolio to Moussa Nebie.

In cabinet changes in the Central African Republic, Samuel Ranga was sworn in as foreign minister and Dominique Saïd Paguindji as public security minister.

The USA and Cuba reopened their respective embassies in Havana and Washington, D.C. 54 years after diplomatic ties were severed in 1961. Relations had been normalized following months of secret negotiations between the two countries held in Canada and Vatican City State.

Presidential elections took place in Burundi. Incumbent president Pierre Nkurunziza won with 69.4% of the vote against his nearest rival, Agathon Rwasa, with 19.0%. Several opposition parties boycotted the election amid controversy over Nkurunziza's eligibility for a third term. However, their names (including Agathon Rwasa, who had called for a boycott) appeared on the ballot paper nonetheless. Turnout was 73.4%.

In the Maldives, vice president Mohamed Jameel Ahmed lost a parliamentary vote of no confidence by 78 votes to 2. He was replaced by Ahmed Adeb.

Week beginning 26 July 2015

Valeriu Streleț of the Liberal Democratic Party became prime minister of Moldova following Chiril Gaburici's resignation in June. His new government included Anatol Șalaru as defence minister, Vladimir Cebotari as justice minister and Ruxanda

Glavan as minister of health. Other key portfolios remained the same.

In Georgia, corrections minister Giorgi Mghebrishvili became interior minister. He took over from Vakhtang Gomelauri, who had been appointed head of the state's security agency.

Week beginning 2 August 2015

In Bhutan, Lyonpo Damcho Dorji was appointed foreign minister taking over from Rinzin Dorji.

Despite opposition from president Tsakhiagiin Elbegdorj, Mongolian prime minister Chimed Saikhanbileg dismissed all six Mongolian People's Party members from his cabinet following a parliamentary endorsement.

Andrzej Duda was sworn in as president of Poland following his victory at the elections in May. He took over from Bronisław Komorowski, whose five-year term came to an end following a narrow defeat to Duda over two voting rounds.

Week beginning 9 August 2015

A cabinet reshuffle took place in the Republic of the Congo. Jean-Claude Gakosso became foreign minister with all other key portfolios remaining unchanged.

In Libya, the prime minister of the Tobruk-based government, Abdullah al-Thaney, announced his resignation on television after being blamed for the lack of amenities and security by members of the public. However, he withdrew his offer to resign the following week.

In Guinea-Bissau, the government of prime minister Domingos Simões Pereira was dismissed by president José Mário Vaz following a series of disagreements, notably over the allocation of aid money and the appointment of a new armed forces chief. Baciro Djá was sworn in as Pereira's replacement eight days later.

The inauguration of a new government in Suriname included Ashwin Adhin as vice-president, Niermala Badrising as foreign minister, Ronni Benschop as defence minister, Gillmore Hoefdraad as finance minister and Mike Noersalim as home affairs minister.

The United National Front for Good Governance alliance led by the United National Party won parliamentary elections in Sri Lanka. Taking 106 of 225 seats, the UNFGG increased its share of seats by 46 but failed to gain a majority, with the United People's Freedom Alliance (led by the Sri Lanka Freedom Party) winning 95 seats. Four other alliances and parties took the remaining 24 seats.

Turkish prime minister Ahmet Davutoğlu returned his mandate to president Recep Tayyip Erdoğan after failing to find a coalition partner to form a government following the June election. At the request of the president, Davutoğlu subsequently formed an interim government to oversee fresh elections scheduled to take place in November. Included in the cabinet were Selami Altınok as interior minister and Feridun Hadi Sinirlioğlu as foreign minister.

In the Netherlands, the government of prime minister Mark Rutte survived a parliamentary vote of no confidence by 120 votes to 13. The motion was put forward by the Eurosceptic politician Geert Wilders over Rutte's backing of a proposed aid package for Greece, which reneged on a pre-election promise that no further assistance would be given to the debt-stricken country.

Alexis Tsipras resigned as prime minister of Greece and called for new elections, stating that 'Greeks would have to decide whether he had represented them courageously with the creditors' during the financial bailout talks with European Union institutions and the IMF. A week later, Vassiliki Thanou-Christophilou was appointed head of an interim government that included Antonis Maniatis as interior minister and Petros Molyviatis as foreign minister.

In a cabinet reshuffle in Thailand, Apisak Tantivorawong became finance minister and Don Pramudwinai foreign minister.

Mexican president Enrique Peña Nieto reshuffled his cabinet, with José Antonio Meade moving from the ministry of foreign affairs to the social development ministry—a move widely regarded as a precursor to a potential presidential bid by Meade in 2018. Claudia Ruiz Massieu took over the foreign affairs portfolio.

Week beginning 30 August 2015

Giorgi Kvirikashvili was sworn in as foreign minister of Georgia, taking over from Tamar Beruchashvili.

Guatemalan president Otto Pérez Molina resigned after prosecutors presented evidence of his involvement in the same customs ring scandal that had prompted the resignation of alleged co-colluder and vice-president Roxana Baldetti in May. Vice-president Alejandro Maldonado Aguirre took over the presidency on an interim basis. Having been stripped of his immunity from prosecution by Congress, Molina was subsequently arrested and jailed.

Samuel Weymouth Tapley Seaton was sworn in as governor-general of St Kitts and Nevis. Seaton had been acting as governor-general since May when Sir Edmund Wickham Lawrence was removed from office by the new government.

A new cabinet comprised chiefly of members of the Sri Lanka Freedom Party and the United National Party was appointed in Sri Lanka. It included S. B. Nawinne as minister of internal affairs, north western development and cultural affairs and Mangala Samaraweera as minister of foreign affairs.

Week beginning 6 September 2015

In the first round of presidential elections in Guatemala, Jimmy Morales of the Frente de Convergencia Nacional took 23.8% of the vote, Sandra Torres of the Unidad Nacional de la Esperanza 19.8% and Manuel Baldizón of the Libertad Democrática Renovada 19.6%. 11 other candidates received less than 7% of the vote each. Turnout was 71.1%. A run-off between Morales and Torres was scheduled to take place seven weeks later.

A new government led by prime minister Baciro Djá was named in Guinea-Bissau. However, two days later the supreme court ruled that Djá's appointment in August was unconstitutional, stating that parliament had not been properly consulted. Djá immediately resigned as prime minister.

The People's National Movement won 23 of 41 seats at parliamentary elections in Trinidad and Tobago. PNM leader Keith Rowley was sworn in as prime minister two days later, taking over from Kamla Persad-Bissessar whose United National Congress took only 18 seats. Rowley's cabinet included Colm Imbert as finance minister and Dennis Moses as foreign minister.

In Hungary, István Simicskó took over from Csaba Hende as defence minister. Hende had resigned amid an influx of migrants illegally entering the country and delays in the construction of a 160-km (100-mile) fence between Hungary and Serbia.

In Northern Ireland, Peter Robinson temporarily stood aside as first minister after parties rejected a proposal to adjourn power-sharing institutions in the wake of allegations that the IRA had been involved in a recent murder in Belfast. Robinson stated that the continued existence of IRA structures 'pushed devolution to the brink' following Sinn Féin's denial that the organization still existed. He appointed Arlene Foster to serve again as acting first minister, having previously done so in 2010.

A cabinet reshuffle in Gabon, which aimed to create a unified government before the 2016 elections, included Pacôme Moubelet Boubeya as interior minister and Mathias Otounga Ossibadjouo as defence minister. However, a number of opposition members turned down positions in the cabinet.

INTERNATIONAL ORGANIZATIONS

United Nations (UN)

Origin and Aims. The United Nations is an association of states, or intergovernmental organizations, pledged to maintain international peace and security and to co-operate in solving international political, economic, social, cultural and humanitarian problems. The name 'United Nations' was devised by US President Franklin D. Roosevelt and was first used in the Declaration by United Nations of 1 Jan. 1942, during the Second World War, when 26 nations pledged to continue fighting the Axis Powers.

The United Nations Charter was drawn up by the representatives of 50 countries at the United Nations Conference on International Organization, which met in San Francisco from 25 April to 26 June 1945. Delegates started with proposals worked out by the representatives of China, the Soviet Union, the United Kingdom and the United States at Dumbarton Oaks (Washington, D.C.) from 21 Aug. to 28 Sept. 1944. The Charter was signed on 26 June 1945 by the representatives of the 50 countries. Poland, which was not represented at the Conference, signed later and became one of the original 51 member states. The United Nations came into existence officially on 24 Oct. 1945, with the deposit of the requisite number of ratifications of the Charter with the US Department of State. United Nations Day is celebrated on 24 Oct.

In recent years, most of the UN's work has been devoted to helping developing countries. Major goals include the protection of human rights; saving children from starvation and disease; providing relief assistance to refugees and disaster victims; countering global crime, drugs and disease; and assisting countries devastated by war and the long-term threat of landmines.

Members. New member states are admitted by the General Assembly on the recommendation of the Security Council. The Charter provides for the suspension or expulsion of a member for violation of its principles, but no such action has ever been taken. The UN has 193 member states, comprising every internationally recognized sovereign state, with the exception of the Holy See. (For a list of these, see below.)

Finance. Contributions from member states constitute the main source of funds. These are in accordance with a scale specified by the Assembly, and determined primarily by the country's share of the world economy and ability to pay, in the range 0.001%–22.000%. The Organization is prohibited by law from borrowing from commercial institutions.

A Working Group on the Financial Situation of the United Nations was established in 1994 to address the long-standing financial crisis caused by non-payment of assessed dues by many member states. As of 31 May 2012 member states owed the UN a total of US$23,458m., of which the USA owed US$1,135m. (46%). Total regular budget debts as of 31 May 2012 were US$1,006m., of which the USA's share was US$744m. (74%).

Official languages: Arabic, Chinese, English, French, Russian and Spanish.

Structure. The UN has five principal organs established by the founding Charter (formerly six). All have their headquarters in New York except the International Court of Justice, which has its seat in The Hague. These core bodies work through dozens of related agencies, operational programmes and funds, and through special agreements with separate, autonomous, intergovernmental agencies, known as Specialized Agencies, to provide a programme of action in the fields of peace and security, justice and human rights, humanitarian assistance, and social and economic development. The five principal UN organs are:

1. The General Assembly, composed of all members, with each member having one vote. Meeting once a year, proceedings begin on the Tuesday of the third week of Sept. The 70th Session opened on 15 Sept. 2015.

At least three months before the start of each session, the Assembly elects a new President, 21 Vice-Presidents and the chairs of its six main committees, listed below. To ensure equitable geographical representation, the presidency of the Assembly rotates each year among the five geographical groups of states: Africa, Asia, Eastern Europe, Latin America and the Caribbean, and Western Europe and other States. Special sessions may be convoked by the Secretary-General if requested by the Security Council, by a majority of members, or by one member if the majority of the members concur. Emergency sessions may be called within 24 hours at the request of the Security Council on the vote of any nine Council members, or a majority of United Nations members, or one member if the majority of members concur. Decisions on important questions, such as peace and security, new membership and budgetary matters, require a two-thirds majority; other questions require a simple majority of members present and voting.

The work of the General Assembly is divided between six Main Committees, on which every member state is represented: the Disarmament and International Security Committee (First Committee); the Economic and Financial Committee (Second Committee); the Social, Humanitarian and Cultural Committee (Third Committee); the Special Political and Decolonization Committee (Fourth Committee); the Administrative and Budgetary Committee (Fifth Committee); and the Legal Committee (Sixth Committee).

There is also a General Committee charged with the task of co-ordinating the proceedings of the Assembly and its Committees, and a Credentials Committee, which examines the credentials of representatives of Member States. The General Committee consists of 28 members: the President and 21 Vice-Presidents of the General Assembly and the chairs of the six main committees. The Credentials Committee consists of nine members appointed by the Assembly on the proposal of the President at each session. In addition, the Assembly has a number of subsidiary organs, divided into Boards (of which there were 7 in Feb. 2016), Commissions (7), Committees (29), Councils and Panels (5), and Working Groups and Others (13).

The General Assembly has the right to discuss any matters within the scope of the Charter and, with the exception of any situation or dispute on the agenda of the Security Council, may make recommendations accordingly. Occupying a central position in the UN, the Assembly receives reports from other organs, admits new members, directs activities for development, sets policies and determines programmes for the Secretariat and approves the UN budget. The Assembly appoints the Secretary-General, who reports annually to it on the work of the Organization.

Under the 'Uniting For Peace' resolution (377) adopted by the General Assembly in Nov. 1950, the Assembly is also empowered to take action if the Security Council, because of a lack of unanimity of its permanent members, fails to exercise its primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security in any case where there appears to be a threat to the peace, breach of the peace or act of aggression. In this event, the General Assembly may consider the matter immediately with a view to making appropriate recommendations to members for collective measures, including, in the case of a breach of the peace or act of aggression, the use of armed force to maintain or restore international peace and security.

The first Emergency Special Session of the Assembly was called in 1956 during the Suez Crisis by Yugoslavia, which cited Resolution 377; demands were made for the withdrawal of British, French and Israeli troops from Egypt. On the Assembly's recommendations, the United Nations Emergency Force (UNEF I) was formed as the UN's first armed peacekeeping force.

Over the years a number of programmes and funds have been established to address particular humanitarian and development concerns. These bodies usually report to the General Assembly. They include: the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF); Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR); United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD); United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and Population Fund (UNFPA); United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP); United Nations World Food Programme (WFP); United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC).

President: Mogens Lykketoft (Denmark) was elected President for the Seventieth Session in 2015.

2. The Security Council has primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security. Under the Charter, the Security Council alone has the power to take decisions that member states are obligated to carry out. A representative of each of its members must be present at all times at UN Headquarters, but it may meet elsewhere as best facilitates its work.

The Presidency of the Council rotates monthly, according to the English alphabetical order of members' names. The Council consists of 15 members: five permanent and ten non-permanent elected for a two-year term by a two-thirds majority of the General Assembly. Each member has one vote. Retiring members are not eligible for immediate re-election. Any other member of the United Nations may participate without a vote in the discussion of questions specially affecting its interests.

Decisions on procedural questions are made by an affirmative vote of at least nine members. On all other matters, the affirmative vote of nine members must include the concurring votes of all permanent members (subject to the provision that when the Council is considering methods for the peaceful settlement of a dispute, parties to the dispute abstain from voting). Consequently, a negative vote from a permanent member has the power of veto. If a permanent member does not support a decision but does not wish to veto it, it may abstain. From 1945–91 the USSR employed its veto 119 times, the USA 69 times, the UK 32 times, France 18 times and China three times (including once before the People's Republic of China took over Taiwan's seat at the UN in 1971). From 1992–Feb. 2016 the USA vetoed 14 resolutions, Russian Federation 13 and China eight; France and the UK did not veto any resolutions.

The Council has three standing committees—the Committee of Experts, the Committee on Admission of New Members and the Committee on Council Meetings away from Headquarters. It may establish ad hoc committees and commissions, which include all Council members.

When a threat to peace is brought before the Council, it may undertake mediation, setting out principles for a settlement, and may take measures to enforce its decisions by ceasefire directives, economic sanctions, peacekeeping missions or, in some cases, by collective military action. For the maintenance of international peace and security, the Council can, subject to special agreements, call on the armed forces, assistance and facilities of the member states. It is assisted by a Military Staff Committee consisting of the Chiefs of Staff of the permanent members of the Council or their representatives.

The Council also makes recommendations to the Assembly on the appointment of the Secretary-General and, with the Assembly, elects the judges of the International Court of Justice.

Peacekeeping. The Charter contains no explicit provisions for peacekeeping operations (PKOs), yet they have the highest profile of all the UN's operations. PKOs are associated with humanitarian intervention though their emergence was primarily a result of the failure of the Charter's collective security system during the Cold War and the absence of a UN Force. The end of the Cold War and the rise of intra-state conflict led to a proliferation of PKOs from the late 1980s and a greater proportion of armed missions. However, notable failures in the early and mid-1990s, such as the missions to Somalia in 1993 and to Rwanda in 1994, account for a drop in PKOs and shorter mandates. In 1992 then Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali presented the 'Agenda for Peace', which laid out four phases to prevent or end conflict: preventative diplomacy; peacemaking with civilian and military means; peacekeeping, in its traditional sense of operations in the field; and post-conflict peace-building, an area seen as comparatively neglected in previous missions. Then Secretary-General Kofi Annan presented a report aimed at conflict prevention in July 2001 emphasizing inter-agency co-operation and long-term strategies to prevent regional instability. There have been 71 peacekeeping operations in total since 1948. The first mission—consisting of unarmed observers—was to monitor the ceasefire during the First Arab–Israeli War.

Recent History. In Nov. 2002 the Security Council held Iraq in 'material breach' of disarmament obligations. Weapons inspectors, led by Hans Blix (Sweden), returned to Iraq four years after their last inspections. Amid suspicion that Iraq was failing to comply, the USA, the UK and Spain reserved the right to disarm Iraq without a further Security Council resolution. Other Council members, notably China, France, Germany and Russia, opposed such action. In April 2003 US forces, supported by the UK, brought an end to Saddam Hussein's rule. In June 2004 the UN recognized the transfer of sovereignty to the interim government of Iraq. In 2005 the Council referred cases to the International Criminal Court (ICC) for the first time, asking the court to investigate the situation in Darfur, Sudan. Instability in Sudan saw the establishment of peacekeeping missions in Darfur (2007), the disputed Abyei region and newly independent South Sudan (both 2011). Other peacekeeping missions established in recent years include Liberia (2003), Côte d'Ivoire (2004), Haiti (2004), Timor-Leste (2006), Democratic Republic of the Congo (2010), Libya (2011), Mali (2013) and the Central African Republic (2014). In April 2012 the Security Council established a mission in Syria to monitor the cessation of armed violence and to oversee a UN–League of Arab States six-point peace plan. However, with continuing violence obstructing implementation of the mandate, the mission was ended in Aug. 2012. In Jan. 2013 sanctions were tightened against North Korea in response to rocket tests carried out by Pyongyang the previous month. In Jan. 2016, by contrast, sanctions were lifted against Iran following implementation of the Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action limiting Iran's nuclear development activities.

Reform. The composition of the Security Council, with its five permanent members having qualified as the principal Second World War victors, has been subject to intense debate in recent years. The lack of permanent representation from Latin America and the Caribbean or from Africa and the Islamic World is frequently cited to demonstrate that the Council is unrepresentative. However, reform is in the hands of the permanent members and a unanimous agreement has proved elusive. In Sept. 2004 Brazil, Germany, India and Japan (the G4) launched a joint bid for permanent membership, along with a seat for an African state. In March 2005 then Secretary-General Annan proposed either six new permanent members and three new non-permanent members or the election of a new type of member, eight of which would be elected for a four-year period. The World Summit in Sept. 2005 failed to agree on Security Council reform but pledged to continue negotiations.

Non-Permanent Members. Angola, Malaysia, New Zealand, Spain and Venezuela (until 31 Dec. 2016); Egypt, Japan, Senegal, Ukraine and Uruguay (until 31 Dec. 2017).

Finance. The budget for UN peacekeeping operations in 2015–16 is US$8.3bn. In June 2015 outstanding contributions to peacekeeping totalled US$1.6bn.

3. The Economic and Social Council (ECOSOC) is responsible under the General Assembly for co-ordinating international economic, social, cultural, educational, health and related matters.

The Council consists of 54 member states elected by a two-thirds majority of the General Assembly for a three-year term. Members are elected according to the following geographic distribution: Africa, 14 members; Asia, 11; Eastern Europe, 6; Latin America and Caribbean, 10; Western Europe and other States, 13. A third of the members retire each year. Retiring members are eligible for immediate re-election. Each member has one vote. Decisions are made by a majority of the members present and voting.

The Council holds one five-week substantive session a year, alternating between New York and Geneva, and one organizational session in New York. The substantive session includes a high-level meeting attended by Ministers, to discuss economic and social issues. Special sessions may be held if required. The President is elected for one year and is eligible for immediate re-election.

The subsidiary machinery of ECOSOC includes:

Eight Functional Commissions. Statistical Commission; Commission on Population and Development; Commission for Social Development; Commission on the Status of Women; Commission on Narcotic Drugs (and Subcommittee on Illicit Drug Traffic and Related Matters in the Near and Middle East); Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice; Commission on Science and Technology for Development; United Nations Forum on Forests.

Five Regional Economic Commissions. ECA (Economic Commission for Africa, Addis Ababa, Ethiopia); ESCAP (Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific, Bangkok, Thailand); ECE (Economic Commission for Europe, Geneva, Switzerland); ECLAC (Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean, Santiago, Chile); ESCWA (Economic Commission for Western Asia, Beirut, Lebanon).

Three Standing Committees. Committee for Programme and Co-ordination; Commission on Non-Governmental Organizations; Committee on Negotiations with Intergovernmental Agencies.

In addition, the Council may consult international non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and, after consultation with the member concerned, with national organizations. Over 3,000 organizations have consultative status. NGOs may send observers to ECOSOC's public meetings and those of its subsidiary bodies, and may submit written statements relevant to its work. They may also consult with the UN Secretariat on matters of mutual concern. The term of office of the members listed below expires on 31 Dec. of each year.

Members. Afghanistan (2018), Algeria (2018), Antigua and Barbuda (2016), Argentina (2017), Australia (2018), Bangladesh (2016), Belgium (2018), Botswana (2016), Brazil (2017), Burkina Faso (2017), Chile (2018), China (2016), Democratic Republic of the Congo (2016), Republic of the Congo (2016), Czech Republic (2018), Estonia (2017), Finland (2016), France (2017), Georgia (2016), Germany (2017), Ghana (2017), Greece (2017), Guatemala (2016), Guyana (2018), Honduras (2017), India (2017), Iraq (2018), Ireland (2017), Italy (2018), Japan (2017), Kazakhstan (2016), South Korea (2016), Lebanon (2018), Mauritania (2017), Moldova (2018), Nigeria (2018), Pakistan (2017), Panama (2016), Peru (2018), Portugal (2017), Russia (2016), Rwanda (2018), Serbia (2016), Somalia (2018), South Africa (2018), Sweden (2016), Switzerland (2016), Togo (2016), Trinidad and Tobago (2017), Uganda (2017), United Kingdom (2016), United States of America (2018), Vietnam (2018), Zimbabwe (2017).

Finance. In 2012, US$24,186m. in socio-economic development assistance grants was provided through the organizations of the UN system.

4. The International Court of Justice (ICJ) is the principal judicial organ of the UN. It has a dual role: to settle in accordance with international law the legal disputes submitted to it by States; and to give opinions on legal questions referred to it by authorized international organs and agencies.

The Court operates under a Statute of the United Nations Charter. Only States may apply to and appear before the court. The Court is composed of 15 judges, each of a different nationality, elected by an absolute majority by the General Assembly and the Security Council to nine-year terms of office. The composition of the Court must reflect the main forms of civilization and principal legal systems of the world. For a number of years the composition of the Court has maintained the following geographical balance: five seats on the bench are occupied by judges from Western Europe and other western states, three seats are occupied by African judges, three by Asian judges, two by judges from Eastern Europe and two by judges from Latin America. Elections are held every three years for one-third of the seats; retiring judges may be re-elected. Judges do not represent their respective governments but sit as independent magistrates. They must have the qualifications required in their respective countries for appointment to the highest judicial offices, or be jurists of recognized competence in international law. Candidates are nominated by the national panels of jurists in the Permanent Court of Arbitration (PCA) established by The Hague Conventions of 1899 and 1907. The Court elects its own President and Vice-President for a three-year term, and is permanently in session.

Decisions are taken by a majority of judges present, subject to a quorum of nine members, with the President having a casting vote. Judgment is final and without appeal, but a revision may be applied for within ten years from the date of the judgment on the ground of new decisive evidence. When the Court does not include a judge of the nationality of a State party to a case, that State has the right to appoint a judge ad hoc for that case. While the Court normally sits in plenary session, it can form chambers of three or more judges to deal with specific matters. Judgments by chambers are considered as rendered by the full Court. In 1993, in view of the global expansion of environmental law and protection, the Court formed a seven-member Chamber for Environmental Matters.

Judges. The nine-year terms of office of the judges currently serving end on 5 Feb. of each year indicated: Ronny Abraham, President (France; 2018), Abdulqawi A. Yusuf, Vice-President (Somalia; 2018), Antônio Augusto Cançado Trindade (Brazil; 2018), Dalveer Bhandari (India; 2018), Sir Christopher Greenwood (UK; 2018), Xue Hanqin (China; 2021), Giorgio Gaja (Italy; 2021), Hishashi Owada (Japan; 2021), Peter Tomka (Slovakia; 2021), Julia Sebutinde (Uganda; 2021), James Crawford (Australia; 2024), Patrick L. Robinson (Jamaica; 2024), Mohamed Bennouna (Morocco; 2024), Kirill Gevorgian (Russia; 2024), Joan E. Donoghue (USA; 2024).

Competence and Jurisdiction. In contentious cases, only States may apply to or appear before the Court. The conditions under which the Court will be open to non-member states are laid down by the Security Council. The jurisdiction of the Court covers all matters that parties refer to it and all matters provided for in the Charter or in treaties and conventions in force. Disputes concerning the jurisdiction of the Court are settled by the Court's own decision. The Court may apply in its decision:

- (a) international conventions;
 - (b) international custom;
 - (c) the general principles of law recognized by civilized nations;
 - (d) as subsidiary means for the determination of the rules of law, judicial decisions and the teachings of highly qualified publicists.
- If the parties agree, the Court may decide a case ex aequo et bono.

Since 1946 the Court has delivered 119 judgments on disputes concerning inter alia land frontiers and maritime boundaries, territorial sovereignty, the use of force, interference in the internal affairs of States, diplomatic relations, hostage-taking, the right of asylum, nationality, guardianship, rights of passage and economic rights.

The Court may also give advisory opinions on legal questions referred to it by the General Assembly, the Security Council, other duly authorized UN organs and agencies of the UN system.

Since 1946 the Court has given 27 advisory opinions, concerning inter alia admission to United Nations membership, reparation for injuries suffered in the service of the United Nations, the territorial status of South-West Africa (Namibia) and Western Sahara, expenses of certain United Nations operations, the status of human rights informers, the threat or use of nuclear weapons and legal consequences of the construction of a wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory.

Finance. Parties before the Court are not required to pay fees or administrative or linguistic costs, since these are borne by the UN. The only expenses incurred by States parties to cases before the ICJ are the fees of their counsel and advocates. States that would, however, experience financial difficulties may apply to the Trust Fund set up in 1989 by the Secretary-General of the UN. The Court has a budget of approximately US$26m. per year (US$51.4m. for the biennium 2014–15).

5. The Secretariat services the other four organs of the UN, carrying out their programmes, providing administrative support and information. It has a staff of 8,900 at the UN Headquarters in New York and around the world. At its head is the Secretary-General, appointed by the General Assembly on the recommendation of the Security Council for a five-year, renewable term. The Secretary-General acts as chief administrative officer in all meetings of the General Assembly, Security Council and Economic and Social Council. An Office of Internal Oversight, established in 1994 under the tenure of former Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali (Egypt), pursues a cost-saving mandate to investigate and eliminate waste, fraud and mismanagement within the system. The Secretary-General is assisted by Under-Secretaries-General and Assistant Secretaries-General. A new position of Deputy Secretary-General was agreed by the General Assembly in Dec. 1997 to assist in the running of the Secretariat and to raise the economic, social and development profile of the UN. Peacekeeping operations (PKOs) are chiefly run by Secretariat officials, who present a report to, and are authorized by, the Security Council.

Finance. The financial year coincides with the calendar year. The budget for the two-year period 2016–17 is US$5.40bn., compared to US$5.53bn. for 2014–15.

The Trusteeship Council was one of the principal organs, but has been inactive since 1994. It was established to ensure that governments responsible for administering Trust Territories take adequate steps to prepare them for self-government or independence. It consisted of the five permanent members of the Security Council. The task of decolonization was completed in 1994, when the Security Council terminated the Trusteeship Agreement for the last of the original UN Trusteeships (Palau), administered by the USA. All Trust Territories attained self-government or independence either as separate States or by joining neighbouring independent countries. The Council formally suspended operations on 1 Nov. 1994 following Palau's independence. By a resolution adopted on 25 May 1994 the Council amended its rules of procedure to drop the obligation to meet annually and agreed to meet as occasion required.

The proposal from then Secretary-General Kofi Annan, in the second part of his reform programme, in July 1997, was that it should be used as a forum to exercise their 'trusteeship' for the global commons, environment and resource systems. However, in his 2005 report, In Larger Freedom, Annan called for the deletion of the Council from the UN Charter.

Current Leaders

Ban Ki-moon

Position

Secretary-General

Introduction

A career diplomat and politician with a reputation as a mediator and administrator, Ban Ki-moon served as South Korea's foreign minister before becoming the eighth UN Secretary-General in Jan. 2007 and the first Asian to head the UN since 1971. In 2011 he ran unopposed for a second five-year term and was unanimously re-elected in June to serve until the end of 2016.

Early Life

Ban Ki-moon was born on 13 June 1944 in Chungju, Chungcheongnam province, South Korea. After graduating in international relations from Seoul University in 1970, he joined the ministry of foreign affairs and in 1972 was posted to New Delhi. In the early 1980s he studied at the Kennedy School of Government at Harvard University, gaining a master's degree in public affairs in 1984. He joined the South Korean permanent observer mission at the UN in New York and rose to become first secretary.

From July 1987–May 1990 Ban was posted to the Korean embassy in Washington, becoming director-general of American affairs in 1990. In 1992, after South and North Korea adopted the joint declaration on the denuclearization of the Korean peninsula, Ban was vice chairman of the South–North joint nuclear control commission. He was made deputy minister for policy planning and international organizations in 1995 and in 1996 became national security adviser to the president.

Ban was appointed ambassador to Vienna in May 1998, where he resumed his involvement in nuclear control issues as chairman of the preparatory commission for the comprehensive nuclear-test-ban treaty in 1999. From Jan. 2000–March 2001 he served as South Korea's vice minister of foreign affairs. When South Korea took the presidency of the 56th UN General Assembly in 2001, he worked as chef de cabinet to the president of the assembly.

In Feb. 2003 Ban became foreign policy adviser to the then South Korean president, taking over the foreign affairs portfolio the following year and leading negotiations on the North Korean nuclear issue.

Ban declared his candidacy for the post of UN Secretary-General in Feb. 2006. He was considered an experienced diplomat with a non-confrontational style, although some critics suggested that his low-key manner might prove a weakness. He was formally appointed on 13 Oct. 2006, taking office on 1 Jan. 2007.

Career in Office

Faced with ever-increasing UN peacekeeping activities, Ban has prioritized more effective operational delivery and has also supported the principle of UN structural reform. Ongoing challenges during his tenure have included the division of Cyprus, Iran's and North Korea's defiance of the UN over nuclear development, the rehabilitation of war-torn Afghanistan, various conflicts across Africa, civil war in Syria and stalemate in the Israeli–Palestinian peace process. More recently he has also been confronted by the consequences of Islamist extremism in Nigeria, Iraq and Somalia, political and security destabilization in Ukraine, Libya and Yemen, an ebola virus epidemic in West Africa, and escalating tensions between Iran and Saudi Arabia.

In Jan. 2015 Ban noted that threats to stability and security around the globe were pushing the UN's response capacities to the limit, with more than 100m. people needing assistance and an unprecedented number of UN personnel deployed in highly volatile environments. Then in Oct., expressing strong criticism of the international community, he said that 'in the face of blatant inhumanity, the world has responded with disturbing paralysis' to conflicts and their devastating effect on civilians. He called for greater international commitment to maintaining peace, adding that 'the continuing failure to act is a disgrace'. Meanwhile, he commended the landmark agreement reached in Dec. at a major UN conference in Paris, France to mitigate global warming and climate change.

Universal Declaration of Human Rights

On 10 Dec. 1948 the General Assembly of the United Nations adopted and proclaimed the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

Preamble

Whereas recognition of the inherent dignity and of the equal and inalienable rights of all members of the human family is the foundation of freedom, justice and peace in the world,

Whereas disregard and contempt for human rights have resulted in barbarous acts which have outraged the conscience of mankind, and the advent of a world in which human beings shall enjoy freedom of speech and belief and freedom from fear and want has been proclaimed as the highest aspiration of the common people,

Whereas it is essential, if man is not to be compelled to have recourse, as a last resort, to rebellion against tyranny and oppression, that human rights should be protected by the rule of law,

Whereas it is essential to promote the development of friendly relations between nations,

Whereas the peoples of the United Nations have in the Charter reaffirmed their faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person and in the equal rights of men and women and have determined to promote social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom,

Whereas Member States have pledged themselves to achieve, in co-operation with the United Nations, the promotion of universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Whereas a common understanding of these rights and freedoms is of the greatest importance for the full realization of this pledge,

Now, Therefore THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY proclaims THIS UNIVERSAL DECLARATION OF HUMAN RIGHTS as a common standard of achievement for all peoples and all nations, to the end that every individual and every organ of society, keeping this Declaration constantly in mind, shall strive by teaching and education to promote respect for these rights and freedoms and by progressive measures, national and international, to secure their universal and effective recognition and observance, both among the peoples of Member States themselves and among the peoples of territories under their jurisdiction.

Article 1. All human beings are born free and equal in dignity and rights. They are endowed with reason and conscience and should act towards one another in a spirit of brotherhood.

Article 2. Everyone is entitled to all the rights and freedoms set forth in this Declaration, without distinction of any kind, such as race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status. Furthermore, no distinction shall be made on the basis of the political, jurisdictional or international status of the country or territory to which a person belongs, whether it be independent, trust, non-self-governing or under any other limitation of sovereignty.

Article 3. Everyone has the right to life, liberty and security of person.

Article 4. No one shall be held in slavery or servitude; slavery and the slave trade shall be prohibited in all their forms.

Article 5. No one shall be subjected to torture or to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

Article 6. Everyone has the right to recognition everywhere as a person before the law.

Article 7. All are equal before the law and are entitled without any discrimination to equal protection of the law. All are entitled to equal protection against any discrimination in violation of this Declaration and against any incitement to such discrimination.

Article 8. Everyone has the right to an effective remedy by the competent national tribunals for acts violating the fundamental rights granted him by the constitution or by law.

Article 9. No one shall be subjected to arbitrary arrest, detention or exile.

Article 10. Everyone is entitled in full equality to a fair and public hearing by an independent and impartial tribunal, in the determination of his rights and obligations and of any criminal charge against him.

Article 11. (1) Everyone charged with a penal offence has the right to be presumed innocent until proved guilty according to law in a public trial at which he has had all the guarantees necessary for his defence.

(2) No one shall be held guilty of any penal offence on account of any act or omission which did not constitute a penal offence, under national or international law, at the time when it was committed. Nor shall a heavier penalty be imposed than the one that was applicable at the time the penal offence was committed.

Article 12. No one shall be subjected to arbitrary interference with his privacy, family, home or correspondence, nor to attacks upon his honour and reputation. Everyone has the right to the protection of the law against such interference or attacks.

Article 13. (1) Everyone has the right to freedom of movement and residence within the borders of each state.

(2) Everyone has the right to leave any country, including his own, and to return to his country.

Article 14. (1) Everyone has the right to seek and enjoy in other countries asylum from persecution.

(2) This right may not be invoked in the case of prosecutions genuinely arising from non-political crimes or from acts contrary to the purposes and principles of the United Nations.

Article 15. (1) Everyone has the right to a nationality.

(2) No one shall be arbitrarily deprived of his nationality nor denied the right to change his nationality.

Article 16. (1) Men and women of full age, without any limitation due to race, nationality or religion, have the right to marry and to found a family. They are entitled to equal rights as to marriage, during marriage and at its dissolution.

(2) Marriage shall be entered into only with the free and full consent of the intending spouses.

(3) The family is the natural and fundamental group unit of society and is entitled to protection by society and the State.

Article 17. (1) Everyone has the right to own property alone as well as in association with others.

(2) No one shall be arbitrarily deprived of his property.

Article 18. Everyone has the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion; this right includes freedom to change his religion or belief, and freedom, either alone or in community with others and in public or private, to manifest his religion or belief in teaching, practice, worship and observance.

Article 19. Everyone has the right to freedom of opinion and expression; this right includes freedom to hold opinions without interference and to seek, receive and impart information and ideas through any media and regardless of frontiers.

Article 20. (1) Everyone has the right to freedom of peaceful assembly and association.

(2) No one may be compelled to belong to an association.

Article 21. (1) Everyone has the right to take part in the government of his country, directly or through freely chosen representatives.

(2) Everyone has the right of equal access to public service in his country.

(3) The will of the people shall be the basis of the authority of government; this will shall be expressed in periodic and genuine elections which shall be by universal and equal suffrage and shall be held by secret vote or by equivalent free voting procedures.

Article 22. Everyone, as a member of society, has the right to social security and is entitled to realization, through national effort and international co-operation and in accordance with the organization and resources of the State, of the economic, social and cultural rights indispensable for his dignity and the free development of his personality.

Article 23. (1) Everyone has the right to work, to free choice of employment, to just and favourable conditions of work and to protection against unemployment.

(2) Everyone, without any discrimination, has the right to equal pay for equal work.

(3) Everyone who works has the right to just and favourable remuneration ensuring for himself and his family an existence worthy of human dignity, and supplemented, if necessary, by other means of social protection.

(4) Everyone has the right to form and to join trade unions for the protection of his interests.

Article 24. Everyone has the right to rest and leisure, including reasonable limitation of working hours and periodic holidays with pay.

Article 25. (1) Everyone has the right to a standard of living adequate for the health and well-being of himself and his family, including food, clothing, housing and medical care and necessary social services, and the right to security in the event of unemployment, sickness, disability, widowhood, old age or other lack of livelihood in circumstances beyond his control.

(2) Motherhood and childhood are entitled to special care and assistance. All children, whether born in or out of wedlock, shall enjoy the same social protection.

Article 26. (1) Everyone has the right to education. Education shall be free, at least in the elementary and fundamental stages. Elementary education shall be compulsory. Technical and professional education shall be made generally available and higher education shall be equally accessible to all on the basis of merit.

(2) Education shall be directed to the full development of the human personality and to the strengthening of respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms. It shall promote understanding, tolerance and friendship among all nations, racial or religious groups, and shall further the activities of the United Nations for the maintenance of peace.

(3) Parents have a prior right to choose the kind of education that shall be given to their children.

Article 27. (1) Everyone has the right freely to participate in the cultural life of the community, to enjoy the arts and to share in scientific advancement and its benefits.

(2) Everyone has the right to the protection of the moral and material interests resulting from any scientific, literary or artistic production of which he is the author.

Article 28. Everyone is entitled to a social and international order in which the rights and freedoms set forth in this Declaration can be fully realized.

Article 29. (1) Everyone has duties to the community in which alone the free and full development of his personality is possible.

(2) In the exercise of his rights and freedoms, everyone shall be subject only to such limitations as are determined by law solely for the purpose of securing due recognition and respect for the rights and freedoms of others and of meeting the just requirements of morality, public order and the general welfare in a democratic society.

(3) These rights and freedoms may in no case be exercised contrary to the purposes and principles of the United Nations.

Article 30. Nothing in this Declaration may be interpreted as implying for any State, group or person any right to engage in any activity or to perform any act aimed at the destruction of any of the rights and freedoms set forth herein.

United Nations System

Programmes and Funds. Social and economic development, aimed at achieving a better life for people everywhere, is a major part of the UN system of organizations. At the forefront of efforts to bring about such progress is the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the UN's global development network. UNDP works with people at all levels of society to help build nations that can withstand crisis, and drive and sustain the kind of growth that improves the quality of life for everyone. In 2014 UNDP programmes helped: empower people and build more resilient communities in 161 countries; create nearly 1m. jobs, 41% of them for women; strengthen livelihoods in low-income communities, benefitting 11.2m. people; combat climate change and mitigate its impacts in 140 countries; register 18m. new voters, including nearly 4m. in Afghanistan; train 2m. health workers to fight HIV/AIDS, tuberculosis and malaria; improve energy access for 1.3m. people.

UNDP assistance is provided only at the request of governments and in response to their priority needs, integrated into overall national and regional plans. Its activities are funded entirely through voluntary contributions outside the regular UN budget. 80% of UNDP's core programme resources go to low-income countries and Least Developed Countries (LDCs), with more than 50% of UNDP's core programme resources going to Africa. Headquartered in New York, the UNDP is governed by a 36-member Executive Board, representing both developing and developed countries.

In addition to its regular programmes, UNDP administers various special-purpose funds, such as the UN Capital Development Fund (UNCDF), which offers a unique combination of investment capital, capacity building and technical advisory services to promote microfinance and local development in the LDCs and the United Nations Volunteers (UNV), which is the UN focal point for promoting and harnessing volunteerism for effective development. Together with the World Bank and the United Nations

Environment Programme (UNEP), UNDP is one of the three implementing agencies of the Global Environment Facility (GEF), the world's largest fund for protecting the environment.

UNDP works with governments and local communities on their own solutions to global and national development challenges. In each country office, the UNDP Resident Representative normally also serves as the Resident Coordinator of development activities for the UN system as a whole.

Administrator: Helen Clark (New Zealand).

United Nations development and humanitarian agencies include the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF). It was established in 1946 by the United Nations General Assembly as the United Nations International Children's Emergency Fund, to meet the emergency needs of children of post-war Europe. In 1953 the organization became a permanent part of the UN and its mandate was expanded to carry out long-term programmes to benefit children worldwide. Guided by the Convention on the Rights of the Child and its Optional Protocols and the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination Against Women, UNICEF supports programmes to improve the wellbeing of children and women in more than 150 countries and territories. UNICEF also provides relief and rehabilitation assistance in emergencies.

UNICEF's strategic plan for 2014–17 emphasizes that all children should have an opportunity to survive, develop and reach their full potential, without discrimination, bias or favouritism. UNICEF's strategy to achieve this incorporates several strands, including:

- (a) maternal, newborn and child health interventions from pregnancy to adolescence and promotion of healthy behaviours
- (b) proven HIV prevention and treatment interventions for children, pregnant women and adolescents
- (c) safe drinking water, sanitation and healthy environments
- (d) nutritional support
- (e) equitable and inclusive education
- (f) prevention of and response to violence, abuse, exploitation and neglect of children
- (g) improved policy environment and systems for disadvantaged and excluded children

UNICEF's work in recent years has contributed to progress towards several Millennium Development Goals, including the steady decline of under-five mortality; a reduction in the number of primary-age out-of-school children; a decrease in the number of underweight children aged under five; an increase in birth registration; sustainable access to safe drinking water; and prevention of mother-to-child transmission and new infections among young people of HIV.

Executive Director: Anthony Lake (USA).

The United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) became operational in 1969 and is the leading provider of United Nations assistance in the field of population. Its mandate is to build the knowledge and the capacity to respond to needs in population and family planning; to promote awareness in both developed and developing countries of population problems and possible strategies to deal with these problems; to assist their population problems in the forms and means best suited to the individual countries' needs; to assume a leading role in the United Nations system in promoting population programmes, and to co-ordinate projects supported by the Fund.

UNFPA's mission is to ensure that every pregnancy is wanted, every childbirth is safe and every young person's potential is fulfilled. Since UNFPA started working in 1969 the number of women dying from complications of pregnancy or childbirth has been halved. It works in more than 150 countries and territories that are home to the vast majority of the world's people. In 2013 UNFPA total gross contribution revenue was US$976.8m.

Main programme expenses by focus area are: maternal and newborn health, 26.2%; family planning, 24.6%; programme co-ordination and assistance, 10.4%. UNFPA's The State of World Population report is published annually.

Executive Director: Dr Babatunde Osotimehin (Nigeria).

The United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP), established in 1972, works to encourage sustainable development through sound environmental practices everywhere. UNEP has its headquarters in Nairobi, Kenya and regional offices in Bangkok, Geneva, Manama, Panama City and Washington, D.C. Its activities cover a wide range of issues, from atmosphere and terrestrial ecosystems, to the promotion of environmental science and information, to an early warning and emergency response capacity to deal with environmental disasters and emergencies. UNEP's present priorities include: environmental information, assessment and research; enhanced co-ordination of environmental conventions and development of policy instruments; fresh water; technology transfer and industry; and support to Africa. Information networks and monitoring systems established by the UNEP include: the Global Environment Information Exchange Network (INFOTERRA); Global Resource Information Database (GRID); the International Register of Potentially Toxic Chemicals (IRPTC); and the recent UNEP.net, a web-based interactive catalogue and multifaceted portal that offers access to environmentally relevant geographic, textual and pictorial information. In June 2000 the World Conservation and Monitoring Centre (WCMC) based in Cambridge, UK became UNEP's key biodiversity assessment centre. UNEP's latest state-of-the-environment report is the UNEP Year Book 2014.

Executive Director: Achim Steiner (Germany).

Other UN programmes working for development include: the UN Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), which promotes international trade, particularly by developing countries, in an attempt to increase their participation in the global economy; and the World Food Programme (WFP), the world's largest international food aid organization, which is dedicated to both emergency relief and development programmes.

The United Nations Human Settlements Programme (UN-Habitat), which assists over 600m. people living in health-threatening housing conditions, was established in 1978. The 58-member UN Commission on Human Settlements (UNCHS), Habitat's governing body, meets every two years. The Centre serves as the focal point for human settlements action and the co-ordination of activities within the UN system.

The United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC) educates the world about the dangers of drug abuse; strengthens international action against drug production, trafficking and drug related crime; promotes efforts to reduce drug abuse, particularly among the young and vulnerable; builds local, national and international partnerships to address drug issues; provides information, analysis and expertise on the drug issue; promotes international co-operation in crime prevention and control; supports the development of criminal justice systems; and assists member states in addressing the challenges and threats posed by the changing nature of transnational organized crime.

Executive Director: Yury Fedotov (Russia).

The UN work in crime prevention and criminal justice aims to lessen the human and material costs of crime and its impact on socio-economic development. The UN Congress on the Prevention of Crime and Treatment of Offenders has convened every five years since 1955 and provides a forum for the presentation of policies and progress. The Thirteenth Crime Congress (Doha, 2015) had as its theme 'Integrating crime prevention and criminal justice into the wider United Nations agenda to address social and economic challenges and to promote the rule of law at the national and international levels, and public participation'. The Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, a functional body of ECOSOC, established in 1992, seeks to strengthen UN activities in the field, and meets annually in Vienna. The interregional research and training arm of the UN crime and criminal justice programme is the United Nations Interregional Crime and Justice Research Institute (UNICRI) in Rome.

Humanitarian assistance to refugees and victims of natural and man-made disasters is also an important function of the UN system. The main refugee organizations within the system are the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) and the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA).

UNHCR was created in 1951 to resettle 1.2m. European refugees left homeless in the aftermath of the Second World War. It was initially envisioned as a temporary office with a projected lifespan of three years. However, in 2003, in a move to strengthen UNHCR's capacity to carry out its work more effectively, the General Assembly removed the time limitation on the organization's mandate and extended it indefinitely, until 'the refugee problem is solved'. Today, with some 46.3m. persons of concern across the globe, UNHCR has become one of the world's principal humanitarian agencies. Its Executive Committee currently comprises 98 member states. With its Headquarters in Geneva, UNHCR has a national and international staff of more than 9,700 working in 126 countries. The organization has twice been awarded the Nobel Peace Prize. UNHCR is a subsidiary organ of the United Nations General Assembly.

The work of UNHCR is humanitarian and non-political. International protection is its primary function. Its main objective is to promote and safeguard the rights and interests of refugees. In so doing UNHCR devotes special attention to promoting access to asylum and seeks to improve the legal, material and physical safety of refugees in their country of residence. Crucial to this status is the principle of non-refoulement, which prohibits the expulsion from or forcible return of refugees to a country where they may have reason to fear persecution. UNHCR pursues its objectives in the field of protection by encouraging the conclusion of intergovernmental legal instruments in favour of refugees, by supervising the implementation of their provisions and by encouraging governments to adopt legislation and administrative procedures for the benefit of refugees. UNHCR is often called upon to provide material assistance (e.g. the provision of food, shelter, medical care and essential supplies) while durable solutions are being sought. Durable solutions generally take one of three forms: voluntary repatriation, local integration or resettlement in another country.

UNHCR co-operates both multilaterally and bilaterally with a wide range of partners in order to fulfil its mandate for refugees and other people of concern to the Office. Partners include UN co-ordination bodies, other UN agencies and departments, intergovernmental organizations, non-governmental organizations (NGOs), universities and research institutes, regional organizations, foundations and corporate entities from the private sector, as well as governments, host communities and refugee and other displaced population representatives. In response to calls by the international community to improve the global humanitarian response capacity, today UNHCR is playing an active role in the inter-agency 'cluster leadership approach' with respect to protecting and assisting internally displaced persons. UNHCR's involvement is focused on conflict-generated situations of internal displacement, where it leads the protection 'cluster', the camp co-ordination and camp management 'cluster' and the emergency shelter 'cluster'. At present, UNHCR is funded almost entirely by voluntary contributions. In 2014 UNHCR's expenditure amounted to US$3.36bn.

High Commissioner: Filippo Grandi (Italy).

UNRWA was created by the General Assembly in 1949 as a temporary, non-political agency to provide relief to the nearly 750,000 people who became refugees as a result of the disturbances during and after the creation of the State of Israel in the former British Mandate territory of Palestine. 'Palestine refugees', as defined by UNRWA's mandate, are persons or descendants of persons whose normal residence was Palestine for at least two years prior to the 1948 conflict and who, as a result of the conflict, lost their homes and means of livelihood. UNRWA has also been called upon to help persons displaced by renewed hostilities in the Middle East in 1967. The situation of Palestine refugees in south Lebanon, affected in the aftermath of the 1982 Israeli invasion of Lebanon, was of special concern to the Agency in 1984. UNRWA provides education, health, relief and social services to eligible refugees among the 4.8m. registered Palestine refugees in its five fields of operation: Jordan, Lebanon, Syria, the West Bank and the Gaza Strip. Its mandate is renewed at intervals by the UN General Assembly, and has most recently been extended until 30 June 2017. The regular budget for 2013 amounted to US$675.3m.

Commissioner-General: Pierre Krähenbühl (Switzerland).

The Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) represents the world's commitment to universal ideals of human dignity. The UN's activities in the field of human rights are the primary responsibility of the High Commissioner for Human Rights, a post established in 1993 under the direction and authority of the Secretary-General. The High Commissioner is nominated by the Secretary-General for a four-year term, renewable once. The principal co-ordinating human rights organ of the UN was until mid-2006 the 53-member Commission on Human Rights, set up by ECOSOC in 1946. On 15 March 2006 the UN General Assembly voted overwhelmingly to abolish the Commission after it was criticized for having member countries with poor human rights records. A 47-member Human Rights Council was established as its successor and held its first session in June 2006.

High Commissioner: Prince Zeid bin Ra'ad (Jordan).

Research and Training Institutes. There are four research and training institutes within the UN, all of them autonomous.

United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research (UNIDIR). Established in 1980 to undertake research on disarmament and security with the aim of assisting the international community in their disarmament thinking, decisions and efforts. Through its research projects, publications, small meetings and expert networks, UNIDIR promotes creative thinking and dialogue on both current and future security issues, through examination of topics as varied as tactical nuclear weapons, refugee security, computer warfare, regional confidence-building measures and small arms.

Address: Palais des Nations, 1211 Geneva 10, Switzerland.
Website: <http://www.unidir.org>

United Nations Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR). Founded in 1965, UNITAR is the leading UN institute offering training on global and strategic challenges. As an autonomous body within the UN system, UNITAR is led by an Executive Director, governed by a Board of Trustees and is supported by voluntary contributions from governments, intergovernmental organizations, foundations and the private sector. With 27,000 beneficiaries in 2012 the Institute provides short executive training to national and local government officials of UN member states and civil society representatives around the world. UNITAR aims to meet the growing demand, especially from the least developed countries, for capacity development in the fields of environment, peace, security and diplomacy, and governance.

Address: Palais des Nations, 1211 Geneva 10, Switzerland.

United Nations Interregional Crime and Justice Research Institute (UNICRI). Established in 1967 to support countries worldwide in crime prevention and criminal justice, UNICRI offers technical co-operation, research and training at various levels for governments and the international community as a whole. The institute particularly focuses on security and counter-terrorism, counter-trafficking and preventing money laundering.

Address: 10 Viale Maestri del Lavoro, 10127 Turin, Italy.
Website: <http://www.unicri.it>

United Nations Research Institute for Social Development (UNRISD). Established in 1963 to conduct multidisciplinary research into the social dimensions of contemporary problems affecting development, it aims to provide governments, development agencies, grassroots organizations and scholars with a better understanding of how development policies and processes of economic, social and environmental change affect different social groups.

Address: Palais des Nations, CH-1211 Geneva 10, Switzerland.
Website: <http://www.unrisd.org>

Other UN Entities. In addition to the operational programmes and funds and the research and training institutes there are a number of other entities that fall within the UN system.

International Computing Centre (ICC). The Centre was established in 1971 as a common service, providing a wide range of Information and Communication Technology Services, on a cost recovery basis, to its users worldwide. More than 25 organizations, funds and programmes of the UN system currently use its services and participate in its governance.

Joint UN Programme on HIV/AIDS (UNAIDS). In 1996 the Assembly reviewed implementation of the global strategy for the prevention and control of AIDS, and progress of the Joint UN Programme on HIV/AIDS (UNAIDS), which became operational in 1996. The impact of the HIV/AIDS epidemic was seen to be expanding and intensifying, particularly in developing countries, and new resource mobilization mechanisms were called for to support countries in combating HIV/AIDS. UNAIDS brings together the HIV/AIDS responses of 11 co-sponsor UN agencies, providing an overall framework for action and ensuring better co-ordination between its members. The co-sponsor agencies are: International Labour Organization (ILO), Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), United Nations Entity for Gender Equality and the Empowerment of Women (UN Women), United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC), United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA), World Bank, World Food Programme (WFP) and World Health Organization (WHO). The proposed budget for 2012–13 amounted to US$484.8m.

Address: 20 avenue Appia, 1211 CH-Geneva 27, Switzerland.
Website: <http://www.unaids.org>

UN Office for Project Services (UNOPS). Established in 1995, the self-funding unit provides a range of services for other organizations in the UN system, the private sector, NGOs and academic institutions. Services offered include procurement, recruitment and human resources, and loan supervision.

Address: Marmorvej 51, PO Box 2695, 2100 Copenhagen, Denmark.

United Nations Entity for Gender Equality and the Empowerment of Women (UN Women). Established in July 2010, UN Women supports international political negotiations to formulate globally agreed standards for gender equality and helps UN member states to implement those standards by providing expertise and financial support. It merges and builds on the work of four previously distinct parts of the UN system: the Division for the Advancement of Women (DAW), the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women (INSTRAW), the Office of the Special Adviser on Gender Issues and Advancement of Women (OSAGI) and the United Nations Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM).

Address: 405 East 42nd St., New York, NY 10017, USA.

United Nations Office for Disaster Risk Reduction (UNISDR). Established in 1999 after the UN General Assembly adopted an international strategy for disaster reduction, UNISDR is the focal point in the UN system for the co-ordination of disaster risk reduction (DRR) and the implementation of the international blueprint for DRR. Its core areas of work include ensuring DRR is applied to climate change adaptation, increasing investments for DRR, building disaster-resilient cities, schools and hospitals, and strengthening the international system for DRR.

Address: 9–11 rue de Varembe, CH-1211 Geneva 20, Switzerland.

United Nations System Staff College (UNSSC). Established in 2002 as the pre-eminent learning arm of the UN, the College develops, co-ordinates and provides cross-organization training programmes with a view to strengthening collaboration within the UN system and increasing operational effectiveness. The UNSSC reaches an average of 7,000 beneficiaries worldwide every year.

Address: Viale Maestri del Lavoro 10, 10127 Turin, Italy.

United Nations University (UNU). Sponsored jointly by the UN and UNESCO, UNU is guaranteed academic freedom by a charter approved by the General Assembly in 1973. It is governed by the UNU Council, composed of 13 appointed members who serve six-year terms (in an individual capacity, not as representatives of their countries), three ex officio members (the UN Secretary-General, the UNESCO Director-General and the UNITAR Executive Director) and the UNU Rector. Unlike a traditional university with a campus, students and faculty, it works through networks of collaborating institutions and individuals to undertake multidisciplinary research on problems of human survival, development and welfare; and to strengthen research and training capabilities in developing countries. It also provides postgraduate fellowships and PhD internships to scholars and scientists from developing countries. The University focuses its work within two programme areas: peace and governance, and environment and development.

Information. The UN Statistics Division in New York provides a wide range of statistical outputs and services for producers and users of statistics worldwide, facilitating national and international policy formulation, implementation and monitoring. It produces printed publications of statistics and statistical methods in the fields of international merchandise trade, national accounts, demography and population, gender, industry, energy, environment, human settlements and disability, as well as general statistics compendiums including the Statistical Yearbook and World Statistics Pocketbook. Many of its databases are available on CD-ROM and the internet.

Specialized Agencies of the UN

The intergovernmental agencies related to the UN by special agreements are separate autonomous organizations which work with the UN and each other through the co-ordinating machinery of the Economic and Social Council. Of these, 19 are 'Specialized Agencies' within the terms of the UN Charter, and report annually to ECOSOC.

Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO)

Origin. In 1943 the International Conference on Food and Agriculture, at Hot Springs, Virginia, set up an Interim Commission, based in Washington, with a remit to establish an organization. Its Constitution was signed on 16 Oct. 1945 in Quebec City. Today, membership totals 194 countries plus two associate members. The European Union was made a member as a 'regional economic integration organization' in 1991.

Aims and Activities. The aims of FAO are to raise levels of nutrition and standards of living; to improve the production and distribution of all food and agricultural products from farms, forests and fisheries; to improve the living conditions of rural populations; and, by these means, to eliminate hunger. Its priority objectives are to encourage sustainable agriculture and rural development as part of a long-term strategy for the conservation and management of natural resources; and to ensure the availability of adequate food supplies, by maximizing stability in the flow of supplies and securing access to food by the poor.

In carrying out these aims, FAO promotes investment in agriculture, better soil and water management, improved yields of crops and livestock, agricultural research and the transfer of technology to developing countries; and encourages the conservation of natural resources and rational use of fertilizers and pesticides; the development and sustainable utilization of marine and inland fisheries; the sustainable management of forest resources and the combating of animal disease. Technical assistance is provided in all of these fields, and in nutrition, agricultural engineering, agrarian reform, development communications, remote sensing for climate and vegetation, and the prevention of post-harvest food losses. In addition, FAO works to maintain global biodiversity with the emphasis on the genetic diversity of crop plants and domesticated animals; and plays a major role in the collection, analysis and dissemination of information on agricultural production and commodities. Finally, FAO acts as a neutral forum for the discussion of issues, and advises governments on policy, through international conferences like the World Food Summit in 1996, the World Food Summit: five years later in 2002 and the World Summit on Food Security in 2009, all held in Rome.

Special FAO programmes help countries prepare for, and provide relief in the event of, emergency food situations, in particular through the rehabilitation of agriculture after disasters. The Special Programme for Food Security, launched in 1994, is designed to assist target countries to increase food production and productivity as rapidly as possible, primarily through the widespread adoption by farmers of available improved production technologies, with the emphasis on high-potential areas. FAO provides support for the global co-ordination of the programme and helps attract funds. The Emergency Prevention System for Transboundary Animal and Plant Pests and Diseases (EMPRES), established in 1994, strengthens FAO's existing contribution to the prevention, control and eradication of diseases and pests before they compromise food security, with locusts and rinderpest among its priorities. The Global Information and Early Warning System (GIEWS) provides current information on the world food situation and identifies countries threatened by shortages to guide potential donors. The interagency Food Insecurity and Vulnerability Information and Mapping System initiative (FIVIMS) was established in 1997, with FAO as its secretariat. Together with the UN, FAO sponsors the World Food Programme (WFP).

Finance. The FAO regular budget for the 2014–15 biennium was US$1,005.6m. FAO's overall programme of work is funded by assessed and voluntary contributions. Member countries' assessed contributions comprise the regular budget, set at the biennial FAO Conference.

The total FAO Budget planned for 2014–15 was US$2.4bn. Of this amount 41% was to come from assessed contributions paid by member countries, with 59% mobilized through voluntary contributions from Members and other partners.

The voluntary contributions provided by members and other partners support technical and emergency (including rehabilitation) assistance to governments for clearly defined purposes linked to the results framework, as well as direct support to FAO's core work. The voluntary contributions were expected to reach approximately US$1.4bn. in 2014–15.

In 2012–13, 407 projects totalling US$106.2m. were approved for development support.

Organization. The FAO Conference, composed of all members, meets every other year to determine policy and approve the FAO's budget and programme. The 49-member Council, elected by the Conference, serves as FAO's governing body between conference sessions. Much of its work is carried out by dozens of regional or specialist commissions, such as the Asia-Pacific Fishery Commission, the European Commission on Agriculture and the Commission on Plant Genetic Resources. The Director-General is elected for a renewable six-year term.

International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (IBRD) — The World Bank

Origin. Conceived at the UN Monetary and Financial Conference at Bretton Woods (New Hampshire, USA) in July 1944, the IBRD, frequently called the World Bank, began operations in June 1946, its purpose being to provide funds, policy guidance and technical assistance to facilitate economic development in its poorer member countries. The Group comprises four other organizations: the International Development Association (IDA), which provides interest-free loans and grants to governments of the poorest countries; the International Finance Corporation (IFC), which provides loans, equity and technical assistance to stimulate private sector investment in developing countries; the Multilateral Investment Guarantee Agency (MIGA), which provides guarantees against losses caused by non-commercial risks to investors in developing countries; and the International Centre for Settlement of Investment Disputes (ICSID), which provides international facilities for conciliation and arbitration of investment disputes.

Members. Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Armenia, Australia, Austria, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belarus, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cabo Verde, Cambodia, Cameroon, Canada, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Republic of the Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Croatia, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Eritrea, Estonia, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, Georgia, Germany, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Kiribati, South Korea, Kosovo, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Laos, Latvia, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libya, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Macedonia, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Marshall Islands, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Micronesia, Moldova, Mongolia, Montenegro, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Palau, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Russia, Rwanda, St Kitts and Nevis, St Lucia, St Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, San Marino, São Tomé e Príncipe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Serbia, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Slovakia, Slovenia, Solomon Islands, Somalia, South Africa, South Sudan, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Switzerland, Syria, Tajikistan, Tanzania, Thailand, Timor-Leste, Togo, Tonga, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Turkmenistan, Tuvalu, Uganda, Ukraine, United Arab Emirates, UK, USA, Uruguay, Uzbekistan, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Vietnam, Yemen, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Activities. The Bank obtains its funds from the following sources: capital paid in by member countries; sales of its own securities; sales of parts of its loans; repayments; and net earnings. A resolution of the Board of Governors of 27 April 1988 provides that the paid-in portion of the shares authorized to be subscribed under it will be 3%.

The Bank is self-supporting, raising most of its money on the world's financial markets. In the fiscal year ending 30 June 2015 allocable income totalled US$686m., compared to US$769m. for the year ending 30 June 2014.

In the fiscal year 2015 the Bank lent US$23.5bn. for 112 new operations. Cumulative lending had totalled US$629bn. by June 2015.

The Consultative Group to Assist the Poor (CGAP) works toward a world in which everyone has access to the financial services they need to improve their lives. Established in 1995 and housed at the World Bank, CGAP combines a pragmatic approach to market development with an evidence-based advocacy platform to advance poor people's access to finance. Its global network of members includes over 30 development agencies, private foundations and national governments that share a common vision of improving the lives of poor people with better access to finance.

For the purposes of its analytical and operational work, in 2015 the IBRD characterized economies as follows: low income (average annual per capita gross national income of $1,045 or less); lower middle income (between $1,046 and $4,125); upper middle income (between $4,126 and $12,735); and high income ($12,736 or more).

A wide variety of technical assistance is at the core of IBRD's activities. It acts as executing agency for a number of pre-investment surveys financed by the UN Development Programme. Resident missions have been established in 64 developing member countries and there are regional offices for East and West Africa, the Baltic States and South-East Asia, which assist in the preparation and implementation of projects. The Bank maintains a staff college, the World Bank Institute in Washington, D.C., for senior officials of member countries.

Access to Information. Effective 1 July 2010, the World Bank Policy on Access to Information marked a pivotal shift in the World Bank's approach to making information available to the public. Now the public can obtain more information about projects under preparation, projects under implementation, analytic and advisory activities, and Board proceedings. The policy also includes a clear process for making information publicly available and a right to appeal if information seekers believe they were improperly or unreasonably denied access to information or there is a public interest case to override an exception that restricts certain information.

Organization. As of Feb. 2016 the Bank had 188 members, each with voting power in the institution, based on shareholding which in turn is based on a country's economic growth. The president is selected by the Bank's Board of Executive Directors. The Articles of Agreement do not specify the nationality of the president but by custom the US Executive Director makes a nomination, and by a long-standing, informal agreement, the president is a US national (while the managing director of the IMF is European). The initial term is five years, with a second of five years or less.

Jim Yong Kim

Position

President

Introduction

Jim Yong Kim, a medical scientist and anthropologist, became president of the World Bank in July 2012. He is the first development professional to hold the post and has signalled his support for pursuing private enterprise growth alongside environmental sustainability and social protection.

Early Life

Jim Yong Kim was born on 8 Dec. 1959 in Seoul, South Korea, but moved to the USA aged five and became a US citizen. Having graduated in biology from Brown University in 1982, he received his medical degree in 1991 and a PhD in anthropology in 1993, both from Harvard.

In 1987 he co-founded Partners in Health (PIH), a non-profit organization pioneering community-based health care programmes in low-income areas and developing countries. Working initially in Boston and Haiti, Kim steered the expansion of PIH into Peru in the 1990s. Its success in treating a range of diseases was widely recognized and its model later adopted by the World Health Organization (WHO).

In 2003 Kim stepped down as executive director of PIH to become director of the WHO's HIV/AIDS department, where he led the '3 by 5' initiative to treat 3m. new HIV/AIDS patients in developing countries with antiretroviral drugs by 2005. The programme was credited with greatly accelerating the provision of effective HIV/AIDS treatment and reached its target in 2007.

Kim has held a range of teaching and research posts at Harvard since 1993. In 2006 the University appointed him chair of its department of social medicine (later renamed the department of global health and social medicine), where he developed a global health delivery programme. He has also served as head of the François-Xavier Bagnoud Center for Health and Human Rights at the Harvard School of Public Health, and as chief of the Brigham and Women's Hospital Division of Social Medicine and Health Inequalities.

In 2009 Kim left Harvard to become president of Dartmouth College, where he established a centre for health care delivery science. In March 2012 President Obama nominated him for the presidency of the World Bank and in April 2012 he beat two rivals in an election for the post. Both his opponents—the Nigerian finance minister, Ngozi Okonjo-Iweala, and a Colombian economist, José Antonio Ocampo—had argued that the president should be from a developing nation.

Kim took office on 1 July 2012. In Nov. 2012 he identified tackling climate change as crucial to ending poverty, announcing that the World Bank would integrate environmental sustainability into future development plans. Achieving this while promoting economic growth in emerging nations has been a key challenge. In Oct. 2013 he highlighted a shift in strategy, stating that the Bank would 'become more of a game-changing catalyst that draws billions of dollars of private sector capital into poor countries'. He added: 'In particular, we will leverage our fund for the poorest—the International Development Association—to bring in other sources of capital ... especially for fragile and conflicted states.'

In 2014 Kim attracted attention for his emphasis on gay rights and anti-discrimination in the Bank's international lending criteria and also for his plans to reform and modernize the Bank's internal organization and structures. In June 2015 he said that developing countries, which had been the engine of economic growth following the financial crisis, were facing a more difficult environment in the wake of lower commodity prices and the prospect of higher borrowing costs that would impact globally. Later in the year, at the annual meeting of the IMF and World Bank in Oct., he urged countries to keep improving access to, and quality of, education and to show ambition in combating climate change.

International Development Association (IDA)

A lending agency established in 1960 and administered by the IBRD to provide assistance on concessional terms to the poorest developing countries. Its resources consist of subscriptions and general replenishments from its more industrialized and developed members, special contributions and transfers from the net earnings of IBRD. Officers and staff of the IBRD serve concurrently as officers and staff of the IDA at the World Bank headquarters.

In fiscal year 2012 IDA commitments totalled US$14.8bn.; new commitments totalled 160 new operations. Since 1960 IDA has lent US$255bn. to 108 countries.

International Finance Corporation (IFC)

Established in 1956 to help strengthen the private sector in developing countries, through the provision of long-term loans, equity investments, quasi-equity instruments, standby financing, and structured finance and risk management products. It helps to finance new ventures and assist established enterprises as they expand, upgrade or diversify. In partnership with other donors, it provides a variety of technical assistance and advisory services to public and private sector clients. To be eligible for financing, projects must be profitable for investors, must benefit the economy of the country concerned, and must comply with IFC's environmental and social guidelines.

The majority of its funds are borrowed from the international financial markets through public bond issues or private placements. Its authorized capital is US$2.58bn.; total capital at 30 June 2012 was US$20.6bn. IFC committed US$20.4bn. in total financing in fiscal year 2012 and committed 560 projects in 103 countries. It has 184 members.

Multilateral Investment Guarantee Agency (MIGA)

Established in 1988 to encourage the flow of foreign direct investment to, and among, developing member countries, MIGA is the insurance arm of the World Bank. It provides investors with investment guarantees against non-commercial risk, such as expropriation and war, and gives advice to governments on improving climate for foreign investment. It may insure up to 90% of an investment, with a current limit of US$50m. per project. In March 1999 the Council of Governors adopted a resolution for a capital increase for the Agency of approximately US$850m. In addition US$150m. was transferred to MIGA by the World Bank as operating capital. In Feb. 2016 it had 181 member countries. Like IDA and ICSID, it is located at the World Bank headquarters in Washington (see above).

International Centre for Settlement of Investment Disputes (ICSID)

Founded in 1966 to promote increased flows of international investment by providing facilities for the conciliation and arbitration of disputes between governments and foreign investors. The Centre does not engage in such conciliation or arbitration. This is the task of conciliators and arbitrators appointed by the contracting parties, or as otherwise provided for in the Convention. Recourse to conciliation and arbitration by members is entirely voluntary.

In Feb. 2016 its Convention had 160 signatory countries. 350 cases had been concluded by it and 209 were pending. Disputes involved a variety of investment sectors: agriculture, banking, construction, energy, health, industrial, mining and tourism.

ICSID also undertakes research, publishing and advisory activities in the field of foreign investment law. Like IDA and MIGA, it is located at the World Bank headquarters in Washington (see above).

International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO)

Origin. The Convention providing for the establishment of the ICAO was drawn up by the International Civil Aviation Conference held in Chicago in 1944. A Provisional International Civil Aviation Organization (PICA0) operated for 20 months until the formal establishment of ICAO on 4 April 1947. The Convention on International Civil Aviation superseded the provisions of the Paris Convention of 1919 and the Pan American Convention on Air Navigation of 1928.

Functions. It assists international civil aviation by establishing technical standards for safety and efficiency of air navigation and promoting simpler procedures at borders; develops regional plans for ground facilities and services needed for international flying; disseminates air-transport statistics and prepares studies on aviation economics; fosters the development of air law conventions and provides technical assistance to states in developing civil aviation programmes.

Organization. The principal organs of ICAO are an Assembly, consisting of all members of the Organization, and a Council, which is composed of 36 states elected by the Assembly for three years, which meets in virtually continuous session. In electing these states, the Assembly must give adequate representation to: (1) states of major importance in air transport; (2) states which make the largest contribution to the provision of facilities for the international civil air navigation; and (3) those states not otherwise included whose election would ensure that all major geographical areas of the world were represented. The budget approved for 2012 was $93.1m. CDN.

International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD)

The idea for an International Fund for Agricultural Development arose at the 1974 World Food Conference. An agreement to establish IFAD entered into force on 30 Nov. 1977, and the agency began its operations the following month. IFAD is an international financial institution and a United Nations specialized agency dedicated to eradicating rural poverty in developing countries. It mobilizes resources from its 173 member countries to provide low-interest loans and grants to help middle and low-income member countries fight poverty in their poor rural communities. IFAD works with national partners to design and implement innovative initiatives that fit within national policies and systems. These enable poor rural people to access the assets, services, knowledge, skills and opportunities they need to overcome poverty. Since starting operations in 1978, IFAD has invested more than US$16.3bn. in 974 projects and programmes that have reached around 438m. people.

Organization. The highest body is the Governing Council, on which all 173 member countries are represented. Operations are overseen by an 18-member Executive Board (with 18 alternate members), which is responsible to the Governing Council. The Fund works with many partner institutions, including the World Bank, regional development banks and financial agencies, and other UN agencies; many of these co-finance IFAD programmes and projects.

International Labour Organization (ILO)

Origin. The ILO was established in 1919 under the Treaty of Versailles as an autonomous institution associated with the League of Nations. An agreement establishing its relationship with the UN was approved in 1946, making the ILO the first Specialized Agency to be associated with the UN. An intergovernmental agency with a tripartite structure, in which representatives of governments, employers and workers participate, it seeks through international action to improve labour and living conditions, to promote productive employment and social justice for working people everywhere. On its fiftieth anniversary in 1969 it was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize. In Feb. 2016 it numbered 186 members.

Functions. The ILO's programme and budget set out four strategic objectives for the Organization at the turn of the century: i) to promote and realize fundamental principles and rights at work; ii) to create greater opportunities for women and men to secure decent employment and income; iii) to enhance the coverage and effectiveness of social protection for all; iv) to strengthen tripartism and social dialogue. The International Labour Conference 2013 adopted a budget of US$801.3m. for the 2014–15 biennium.

One of the ILO's principal functions is the formulation of international standards in the form of International Labour Conventions and Recommendations. Member countries are required to submit Conventions to their competent national authorities with a view to ratification. If a country ratifies a Convention it agrees to bring its laws into line with its terms and to report periodically how these regulations are being applied. More than 8,000 ratifications of 189 Conventions had been deposited by 31 Jan. 2016. Procedures are in place to ascertain whether Conventions thus ratified are effectively applied. Recommendations do not require ratification, but member states are obliged to consider them with a view to giving effect to their provisions by legislation or other action. By 31 Jan. 2016 the International Labour Conference had adopted 204 Recommendations.

In June 1998 delegates to the 86th International Labour Conference adopted an ILO Declaration in Fundamental Principles and Rights at Work, committing the Organization's member states to respect the principles inherent in a number of core labour standards: the right of workers and employers to freedom of association and the effective right to collective bargaining, and to work toward the elimination of all forms of forced or compulsory labour, the effective abolition of child labour and the elimination of discrimination in respect of employment and occupation.

Activities. In addition to its research and advisory activities, the ILO now conducts more than 1,000 technical co-operation programmes in over 80 countries with the help of some 60 donor institutions worldwide. The ILO has decentralized most such activities to its regional, area and branch offices in over 40 countries. Decent Work Country Programmes have been established as the main vehicle for delivery of ILO support to countries.

The ILO's standard-setting and technical co-operation are reinforced by an extensive research, training, education and publications programme. It has established two specialized educational institutions: the International Institute for Labour Studies in Geneva, and the International Centre for Advanced Technical and Vocational Training in Turin.

The International Institute for Labour Studies promotes the study and discussion of policy issues. The core theme of its activities is the interaction between labour institutions, development and civil society in a global economy. It identifies emerging social and labour issues by opening up new areas for research and action; and encourages systematic dialogue on social policy between the tripartite constituency of the ILO and the international academic community, and other public opinion-makers.

The International Training Centre was set up in 1965 to lead the training programmes implemented by the ILO as part of its technical co-operation activities. Member states and the UN system also call on its resources and experience, and a UN Staff College was established on the Turin Campus in 1996.

In June 2009 the International Labour Conference unanimously adopted a 'Global Jobs Pact' to address the social and employment impact of the recent international financial and economic crisis. The Pact promotes a productive recovery centred on investments, employment and social protection. It provides an internationally agreed basis for policy-making designed to reduce the time lag between economic recovery and a recovery with decent work opportunities.

Organization. The International Labour Conference is the supreme deliberative organ of the ILO; it meets annually in Geneva. National delegations are composed of two government delegates, one employers' delegate and one workers' delegate. The Governing Body, elected by the Conference, is the Executive Council. It is composed of 28 government members, 14 workers' members and 14 employers' members. Ten governments of countries of industrial importance hold permanent seats on the Governing Body. These are: Brazil, China, France, Germany, India, Italy, Japan, Russia, UK and USA. The remaining 18 government members are elected every three years. Workers' and employers' representatives are elected as individuals, not as national candidates.

International Maritime Organization (IMO)

Origin. The International Maritime Organization (formerly the InterGovernmental Maritime Consultative Organization) was established as a specialized agency of the UN by a convention drafted in 1948 at a UN maritime conference in Geneva. The Convention became effective on 17 March 1958 when it had been ratified by 21 countries, including seven with at least 1m. gross tons of shipping each. The IMCO started operations in 1959 and changed its name to the IMO in 1982.

Functions. To facilitate co-operation among governments on technical matters affecting merchant shipping, especially concerning safety and security at sea; to prevent and control marine pollution caused by ships; to facilitate international maritime traffic. The IMO is responsible for convening international maritime conferences and for drafting international maritime conventions. It also provides technical assistance to countries wishing to develop their maritime activities, and acts as a depositary authority for international conventions regulating maritime affairs. The World Maritime University (WU), at Malmö, Sweden, was established in 1983; the IMO International Maritime Law Institute (IMLI), at Valletta, Malta and the IMO International Maritime Academy, at Trieste, Italy, both in 1989.

Organization. The IMO has 170 members and three associate members. The Assembly, composed of all member states, normally meets every two years. The 40-member Council acts as governing body between sessions. There are four principal committees (on maritime safety, legal matters, marine environment protection and technical co-operation), which submit reports or recommendations to the Assembly through the Council, and a Secretariat. The budget for 2014–15 amounted to €64,304,000.

International Monetary Fund (IMF)

Established in 1945 as an independent organization, the International Monetary Fund began financial operations on 1 March 1947. An agreement of mutual co-operation with the UN came into force on 15 Nov. 1947. The first amendment to the Articles of Agreement, creating the special drawing right (SDR), the IMF's reserve asset, took effect on 28 July 1969. The second amendment took effect on 1 April 1978, and established a new code of conduct for exchange arrangements in the wake of the collapse of the par value system. The third amendment came into force on 11 Nov. 1992; it allowed for the suspension of voting and related rights of any member that failed to settle its outstanding obligations to the IMF. The fourth Amendment, in force from 10 Aug. 2009, provided for a special one-time allocation of SDRs. A fifth amendment, effective 18 Feb. 2011, expanded the Fund's investment authority. The sixth amendment, which took effect on 3 March 2011, strengthened the representation of emerging economies through ad hoc quota increases. On 26 Jan. 2016 the seventh amendment, concerning quota and governance reform, was enacted.

Members. Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Armenia, Australia, Austria, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belarus, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cabo Verde, Cambodia, Cameroon, Canada, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Republic of the Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Croatia, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Eritrea, Estonia, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, Georgia, Germany, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Kiribati, South Korea, Kosovo, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Laos, Latvia, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libya, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Macedonia, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Marshall Islands, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Micronesia, Moldova, Mongolia, Montenegro, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Palau, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Russia, Rwanda, St Kitts and Nevis, St Lucia, St Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, San Marino, São Tomé e Príncipe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Serbia, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Slovakia, Slovenia, Solomon Islands, Somalia, South Africa, South Sudan, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Switzerland, Syria, Tajikistan, Tanzania, Thailand, Timor-Leste, Togo, Tonga, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Turkmenistan, Tuvalu, Uganda, Ukraine, United Arab Emirates, UK, USA, Uruguay, Uzbekistan, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Vietnam, Yemen, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Aims. To promote international monetary co-operation, the expansion of international trade and exchange rate stability; to assist in the removal of exchange restrictions and the establishment of a multilateral system of payments; and to alleviate any serious disequilibrium in members' international balance of payments by making the financial resources of the IMF available to them, usually subject to economic policy conditions.

Activities. The IMF is mandated to oversee the international monetary system and monitor the economic and financial policies of its member countries. The IMF highlights possible risks to domestic and external stability and advises on policy adjustments.

Lending. A core responsibility of the IMF is to provide loans to member countries experiencing balance of payments problems. This financial assistance enables countries to rebuild their international reserves, stabilize their currencies, continue paying for imports and restore conditions for strong economic growth, while undertaking policies to correct underlying problems. Unlike development banks, the IMF does not lend for specific projects.

The IMF has various loan instruments, or 'facilities', that are tailored to address the specific circumstances of its diverse membership. Nonconcessional loans are provided mainly through Stand-By Arrangements (SBAs) and the Extended Fund Facility (which is useful primarily for longer-term needs). The Flexible Credit Line (FCL) was introduced in 2009, for countries with very strong fundamentals, policies and track records of policy implementation.

The IMF also offers special financing facilities for low-income countries. A new Poverty Reduction and Growth Trust, effective from Jan. 2010, incorporates: the Extended Credit Facility, which provides flexible medium-term support; the Standby Credit Facility, which addresses short-term and precautionary needs; and the Rapid Credit Facility, which offers emergency support with limited conditionality. The IMF also provides emergency assistance to support recovery from natural disasters and conflicts, in some cases at concessional interest rates.

A major reform of the IMF's lending facilities took place in March 2009. Conditions linked to IMF loan disbursements are to be better focused and more adequately tailored to the varying strengths of countries' policies and fundamentals. The flexibility of the SBA has been enhanced. In addition, access limits have been doubled, the cost and maturity structure of the Fund's lending has been simplified and its lending facilities have been streamlined.

Technical assistance. The IMF provides technical assistance in its areas of core expertise: macroeconomic policy, tax policy and revenue administration, expenditure management, monetary policy, the exchange rate system, financial sector sustainability, and macroeconomic and financial statistics. About 90% of IMF technical assistance goes to low and lower-middle income countries. The IMF operates nine regional technical assistance centres: in the Pacific (Fiji), the Caribbean (Barbados), five in Africa (Gabon, Ghana, Mali, Mauritius and Tanzania), the Middle East (Lebanon) and Central America (Guatemala).

Finances. Quota subscriptions from member countries are the IMF's main source of financing. A member's quota is largely determined by its economic position relative to other members; it is also linked to their drawing rights on the IMF, their voting power and their share of SDR allocations. Quotas are generally reviewed at least every five years, although the 15th General Quota Review, which under normal circumstances would have been completed in Dec. 2015, has been delayed. The IMF can supplement its resources through borrowing if it believes that resources might fall short of members' needs.

The General Arrangements to Borrow (GAB) and New Arrangements to Borrow (NAB) are credit arrangements between the IMF and a group of member countries and institutions to provide supplementary resources to the IMF to deal with an exceptional situation that poses a threat to the stability of that system. The GAB, established in 1962, enables the IMF to borrow specified amounts of currencies from 11 industrial countries (or their central banks) under certain circumstances, at market-related rates of interest. The potential credit available to the IMF under the GAB totals SDR 17bn., with an additional SDR 1.5bn. available under an associated arrangement with Saudi Arabia. The NAB, which came into effect in 1998, is a set of credit arrangements between the IMF and 38 member countries and institutions. Importantly, the NAB is the facility of first and principal recourse vis-à-vis the GAB. The maximum amount of resources available to the IMF under the NAB and GAB is SDR 370bn.

In April 2009 the G20 agreed to increase the lending resources available to the IMF by up to US$500bn., thereby tripling total pre-crisis lending resources. The increase was to be made through immediate bilateral financing from IMF member countries and by subsequently incorporating this financing into an expanded and more flexible NAB increased by up to US$500bn. This objective was achieved by Sept. 2009.

Bilateral loans. Under such an agreement, the member normally commits to allow the Fund to make drawings up to a specified ceiling during the period for which drawings can be made. In 2009 the IMF signed a number of bilateral loan agreements.

IMF notes. Some official creditors may prefer to invest in paper or notes issued by the IMF. In 2009 the IMF's Executive Board approved a new framework for issuing notes to the official sector. China was the first country to have signed such a note purchase agreement.

SDR allocations. The IMF may allocate SDRs to members in proportion to their IMF quotas. Such an allocation provides each member with a costless asset. There have been three general SDR allocations, made in response to a long-term global need for reserve assets: (i) SDR 9.3bn., distributed in 1970–72; (ii) SDR 12.3bn., distributed in 1979–81; and (iii) SDR 162.1bn., distributed in Aug. 2009. A special one-off allocation of SDRs amounting to SDR 21.5bn. was implemented on 9 Sept. 2009. This allocation was for those countries that joined the Fund after 1981—more than one fifth of the IMF membership—and had never received an SDR allocation. As a result of reforms implemented in Jan. 2016, the combined quotas of the IMF's 188 members totalled US$659bn.

Governance reform. Implemented on 28 April 2008 this reform made quotas more responsive to economic realities by increasing the representation of fast-growing economies while at the same time giving low-income countries more say in the IMF's decision making. The reform built on an initial step agreed by the IMF's membership in Sept. 2006 to have ad hoc quota increases for four countries—China, South Korea, Mexico and Turkey. In Dec. 2010 the IMF Board of Governors approved a shift in quota share to dynamic emerging markets and developing countries of more than 6% using the quota formulas at the time as the basis. The reforms came into effect in Jan. 2016 as part of the IMF's 14th General Quota Review.

Organization. The highest authority is the Board of Governors; each member government is represented. The Board of Governors has delegated many of its powers to the 24 executive directors in Washington, D.C., who are appointed or elected by individual member countries or groups of countries. The managing director is selected by the executive directors and serves as chairman of the Executive Board, but may not vote except in case of a tie. The term of office is for five years, but may be extended or terminated at the discretion of the executive directors. The managing director is responsible for the ordinary business of the IMF, under the direction of the executive directors, and supervises a staff of about 2,400. There are three deputy managing directors. As of Feb. 2016 the IMF had 188 members.

The IMF Institute is a specialized department providing training in macroeconomic analysis and policy, and related subjects, for officials of member countries. In addition to training offered in Washington, D.C., the IMF also offers training for country officials through a network of seven regional training institutes and programmes. These are: the IMF-Singapore Regional Training Institute; the Africa Training Institute (in Mauritius); the Joint Partnership for Africa Institute (in Côte d'Ivoire); the Joint China-IMF Training Program (in Dalian, China); the IMF-Middle East Center for Economics and Finance (in Kuwait); the Joint Regional Training Center for Latin America (in Brazil); and the Joint Vienna Institute (in Austria).

Current Leaders

Christine Lagarde

Position

Managing Director

Introduction

Christine Lagarde became managing director of the IMF in July 2011 against a backdrop of global financial instability and uncertainty. The 11th consecutive European to head the Fund, she promised to give more voting power to developing nations. Her key challenges have included formulating the IMF response to continuing sovereign debt crises and weak global economic growth.

Early Life

Born on 1 Jan. 1956 in Paris, Christine Lagarde attended school in Le Havre, France and Holton-Arms School in Bethesda, Maryland, USA before studying law at the Université de Paris X-Nanterre. After obtaining a master's degree from the Institut d'études politiques d'Aix-en-Provence, in 1981 she joined the Paris office of international law firm Baker & McKenzie, specializing in anti-trust law, employment law, and acquisitions and mergers.

Made a partner in 1987, she served on the executive committee from 1995–2004, moving to Chicago in 1999 when she became chairman of the global executive committee. As a member of a Washington-based think tank, the Centre for Strategic and International Studies, Lagarde headed the US–Poland defence industries working group from 1995–2002, promoting the interests of US and Polish companies.

She returned to France in 2005 to serve as minister for foreign trade in Dominique de Villepin's government, overseeing the growth of exports. She was minister of agriculture and fisheries from May–June 2007, before being appointed finance minister by President Sarkozy. With the onset of the global economic crisis in 2008 she gained a reputation as an astute negotiator, winning praise domestically for her representation of French interests on the international stage. In 2010 she was closely involved in the negotiations over IMF bailout loans for eurozone countries.

IMF managing director Dominique Strauss-Kahn resigned in May 2011, accused of sexual assault, and Lagarde emerged as the favourite to replace him, ahead of Agustin Carstens of Mexico. She was backed by the USA and, despite widely expressed concern over continued European dominance of the Fund, she also won support from the BRIC nations of Brazil, Russia, India and China.

Career in Office

Lagarde took office on 5 July 2011, promising to implement reforms to IMF governance, including more voting power for emerging nations. Her main preoccupation, however, has been the containment of sovereign debt crises in economically advanced countries around the world, and particularly in the eurozone where the IMF has contributed financial support to several countries in an international effort to sustain the viability of the European single currency.

In Oct. 2013 she acknowledged that the worldwide financial turmoil had shaken faith in prosperity through globalization, but stressed the need for continued international policy collaboration in the face of 'transitions on an epic scale'. A year later she called for resolute policies to prevent economic growth from settling into a 'new mediocre', with unacceptably low job creation and inclusion. She was similarly downbeat in Dec. 2015, commenting that the world faced another year of 'disappointing and uneven' growth. She approved the first rise that month in borrowing costs in the USA since 2006 as necessary, but warned that higher interest rates, economic slowdown in China and depressed commodity markets could undermine the already tepid and vulnerable global recovery. Earlier, in Nov., she heralded the inclusion of China's yuan in the basket of currencies that comprise the IMF's lending reserves.

In Dec. 2015 a French judicial commission ruled that Lagarde should stand trial for alleged negligence over a controversial decision she had made while minister of finance in France. She was appointed for a second term as IMF managing director in Feb. 2016.

International Telecommunication Union (ITU)

Origin. Founded in Paris in 1865 as the International Telegraph Union, the International Telecommunication Union took its present name in 1934 and became a specialized agency of the United Nations in 1947. Therefore, the ITU is the world's oldest intergovernmental body.

Functions. To maintain and extend international co-operation for the improvement and rational use of telecommunications of all kinds, and promote and offer technical assistance to developing countries in the field of telecommunications; to promote the development of technical facilities and their most efficient operation to improve the efficiency of telecommunication services, increasing their usefulness and making them, so far as possible, generally available to the public; to harmonize the actions of nations in the attainment of these ends.

Organization. The supreme organ of the ITU is the Plenipotentiary Conference, which normally meets every four years. A 48-member Council, elected by the Conference, meets annually in Geneva and acts as the ITU's governing body in the interval between Plenipotentiary Conferences. A General Secretariat manages the administrative and financial aspects of the ITU's activities. The Secretary-General is also elected by the Conference. The ITU is made up of three sectors: Radiocommunication Sector; Telecommunication Standardization Sector; and Telecommunication Development Sector. The ITU has 193 member countries; a further 700 scientific and technical companies, public and private operators, broadcasters and other organizations are also members.

Headquarters: Place des Nations, CH-1211 Geneva 20, Switzerland.

United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO)

Origin. UNESCO's Constitution was signed in London on 16 Nov. 1945 by 37 countries and the Organization came into being in Nov. 1946 on the premise that: 'Since wars begin in the minds of men, it is in the minds of men that the defences of peace must be constructed'. In Feb. 2016 UNESCO had 195 members including the UK, which rejoined in 1997 having left in 1985, and the USA, which rejoined in 2003 having left in 1984. There are also ten associate members that are not members of the UN (Anguilla, Aruba, British Virgin Islands, Cayman Islands, Curaçao, Faroe Islands, Macao, Montserrat, Sint Maarten and Tokelau).

Aims and Activities. UNESCO's primary objective is to contribute to peace and security in the world by promoting collaboration among the nations through education, science, communication, culture and the social and human sciences in order to further universal respect for justice, democracy, the rule of the law, human rights and fundamental freedoms, affirmed for all peoples by the UN Charter. Africa and gender equality are the Organization's two chief global priorities.

Education. Various activities support and foster national projects to renovate education systems and develop alternative educational strategies towards a goal of lifelong education for all. The World Development Forum in Dakar in 2000 set an agenda for progress towards this aim expressed as six goals. Two of these, attaining universal primary education by 2015 and gender parity in schooling by 2005, were also UN Millennium Development Goals. Three elements define the context for pursuing this purpose: promoting education as a fundamental right, improving the quality of education and stimulating experimentation, innovation and policy dialogue.

Science. UNESCO seeks to promote international scientific co-operation and encourages scientific research designed to improve living conditions and to protect ecosystems. Several international programmes to better understand the Earth's resources towards the advancement of sustainable development have been initiated, including the Man and the Biosphere (MAB) programme, the International Hydrological Programme (IHP), the Intergovernmental Oceanographic Commission (IOC) and the International Geoscience Programme (IGCP).

Culture. Promoting the preservation of heritage, both tangible and intangible, cultural diversity and intercultural dialogue is the principal priority of UNESCO's cultural programmes. UNESCO's World Heritage List, now covering 1,031 sites around the world, promotes the preservation of monuments, cultural landscapes and natural sites.

Communication. Activities are geared to promoting the free flow of information, freedom of expression, press freedom, media independence and pluralism. Another priority is to promote multilingualism on the internet, bridge the digital divide and help disadvantaged groups in North and South participate in the knowledge societies created through the information and communication technologies. To this end, UNESCO promotes access to public domain information, as well as encouraging the creation of local content.

Social and Human Sciences. UNESCO works to advance knowledge and intellectual co-operation in order to facilitate social transformations conducive to justice, freedom, peace and human dignity. It seeks to identify evolving social trends and develops and promotes principles and standards based on universal values and ethics, such as the Universal Declaration on the Human Genome and Human Rights (1997) and the International Declaration on Human Genetic Data (2003).

Organization. The General Conference, composed of representatives from each member state, meets biennially to decide policy, programme and budget. A 58-member Executive Board elected by the Conference meets twice a year and there is a Secretariat. The regular budget for the biennium 2012–13 was US$465m., with significant extra-budgetary contributions for specific programmes provided by both public and private bodies.

There are also ten separate UNESCO institutes and centres: the International Bureau of Education (IBE), in Geneva; the UNESCO Institute for Lifelong Learning (UIL), in Hamburg; the International Institute for Educational Planning (IIEP), in Paris and Buenos Aires; the International Institute for Capacity Building in Africa (IICBA), in Addis Ababa; the International Institute for Higher Education in Latin America and the Caribbean (IESALC), in Caracas; the Institute for Information Technologies in Education (IITE), in Moscow; the UNESCO Institute for Statistics (UIS), in Montreal; the UNESCO International Centre for Technical and Vocational Education and Training (UNEVOC), in Bonn; the UNESCO-IHE Institute for Water Education (UNESCO-IHE), in Delft; and the International Centre for Theoretical Physics (ICTP), in Trieste.

United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO)

Origin. UNIDO was established by the UN General Assembly in 1966 and became a UN specialized agency in 1985.

Aims and Activities. UNIDO helps developing countries in the formulation of policies and programmes in the field of industrial development; analyses trends, disseminates information and co-ordinates activities in their industrial development; acts as a forum for consultations and negotiations directed towards the industrialization of developing countries; and provides technical co-operation to developing countries for the implementation of their development plans for sustainable industrialization in their public and private sectors.

UNIDO focuses its efforts on three thematic priority areas: poverty reduction through productive activities; trade capacity-building; and energy and the environment. Activities under the thematic priorities are reflected in UNIDO's medium-term programme frameworks and biennial programme documents.

Organization. As part of the United Nations common system, UNIDO has the responsibility for promoting industrialization throughout the developing world, in co-operation with its 170 member states. Its headquarters are in Vienna, Austria. UNIDO maintains a field network of 29 regional and country offices around the world, some of which cover more than one country. In addition, 17 UNIDO desks—which generally involve UNIDO staff being placed in United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) offices in selected countries—are operational. UNIDO maintains offices in Brussels, Geneva and New York.

The General Conference meets every two years to determine policy and approve the budget. The 53-member Industrial Development Board (membership according to constitutional lists) is elected by the General Conference. The General Conference also elects a 27-member Programme and Budget Committee for two years and appoints a Director-General for four years.

Finance. UNIDO's financial resources come from the regular and operational budgets, as well as voluntary contributions, budgeted for 2012–13 at US$153.2m., US$28.8m. and US$273.1m. respectively, totalling US$455.2m. The regular budget derives mainly from assessed contributions from member states with a marginal proportion provided from such other sources as interest income, sales publications and government contributions to the UNIDO field offices.

The Constitution of UNIDO provides for 6% of the net regular budget to be used for the Regular Programme of Technical Cooperation. These resources are primarily used for supporting the Organization's operational and normative activities. The operational budget derives mainly from support cost income (of 5–13%) earned from the implementation of technical co-operation activities. Technical co-operation is funded mainly from voluntary contributions from donor countries and institutions as well as UNDP, the Multilateral Fund for the Implementation of the Montreal Protocol, the Global Environment Facility and the Common Fund for Communities.

Universal Postal Union (UPU)

Origin. The UPU was established in 1875, when the Universal Postal Convention adopted by the Postal Congress of Berne on 9 Oct. 1874 came into force. It has 192 member countries.

Functions. The UPU provides co-operation between postal services and helps to ensure a universal network of up-to-date products and services. To this end, UPU members are united in a single postal territory for the reciprocal exchange of correspondence. A Specialized Agency of the UN since 1948, the UPU is governed by its Constitution, adopted in 1964 (Vienna), and subsequent protocol amendments (1969, Tokyo; 1974, Lausanne; 1984, Hamburg; 1989, Washington; 1994, Seoul; 1999, Beijing; 2004, Bucharest; 2008, Geneva).

Organization. It is composed of a Universal Postal Congress which meets every four years; a 41-member Council of Administration, which meets annually and is responsible for supervising the affairs of the UPU between Congresses; a 40-member Postal Operations Council; and an International Bureau which functions as the permanent secretariat, responsible for strategic planning and programme budgeting. A new UPU body, the Consultative Committee, was created at the Bucharest Congress. This committee represents the external shareholders of the postal sector as well as UPU member countries. The budget for annual expenditure between 2013 and 2016 was 37.2m. Swiss francs.

World Health Organization (WHO)

Origin. An International Conference convened by the UN Economic and Social Council to consider a single health organization resulted in the adoption on 22 July 1946 of the Constitution of the World Health Organization, which came into force on 7 April 1948.

Functions. WHO's objective, as stated in the first article of the Constitution, is 'the attainment by all peoples of the highest possible level of health'. As the directing and co-ordinating authority on international health, it establishes and maintains collaboration with the UN, specialized agencies, governments, health administrations, professional and other groups concerned with health. The Constitution also directs WHO to assist governments to strengthen their health services; to stimulate and advance work to eradicate diseases; to promote maternal and child health, mental health, medical research and the prevention of accidents; to improve standards of teaching and training in the health professions, and of nutrition, housing, sanitation, working conditions and other aspects of environmental health. The Organization is also empowered to propose conventions, agreements and regulations, and make recommendations about international health matters; to develop, establish and promote international standards concerning foods, biological, pharmaceutical and similar substances; to revise the international nomenclature of diseases, causes of death and public health practices.

Methods of work. Co-operation in country projects is undertaken only on the request of the government concerned, through the six regional offices of the Organization. Worldwide technical services are made available by headquarters. Expert committees, chosen from the 47 advisory panels of experts, meet to advise the Director-General on a given subject. Scientific groups and consultative meetings are called for similar purposes. To further the education of health personnel of all categories, seminars, technical conferences and training courses are organized, and advisors, consultants and lecturers are provided. WHO awards fellowships for study to nationals of member countries.

Activities. The main thrust of WHO's activities in recent years has been towards promoting national, regional and global strategies for the attainment of the main social target of the member states: 'Health for All in the 21st Century', or the attainment by all citizens of the world of a level of health that will permit them to lead a socially and economically productive life. Almost all countries indicated a high level of political commitment to this goal; and guiding principles for formulating corresponding strategies and plans of action were subsequently prepared.

WHO has organized its responsibilities into four priorities: enhancing global health security, which includes preventing, detecting and containing disease outbreaks, preparing the world for controlling pandemic influenza, combating new diseases such as SARS, preparing for emergencies and responding quickly to minimize death and suffering; accelerating progress on the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) by reducing maternal and child mortality, tackling the global epidemics of HIV/AIDS, tuberculosis and malaria, promoting safe drinking water and sanitation, promoting gender equality and increasing access to essential medicines; responding to non-communicable disease such as cardiovascular diseases, diabetes and cancers by reducing smoking, promoting a healthy diet and physical activity and reducing violence and road traffic crashes; promoting equity in health through strengthening health systems to reach everyone, particularly the most vulnerable people.

World Health Day is observed on 7 April every year. The 2016 theme for World Health Day was 'Diabetes'; the theme for 2015 was 'Food safety'. World No Tobacco Day is held on 31 May each year; International Day Against Drug Abuse on 26 June; World AIDS Day on 1 Dec.

The number of cancer cases is expected to increase by 37% between 2007 and 2030. The incidence of lung cancers in women and prostate cancers in men in the Western world is becoming far more prevalent. The incidence of other cancers is also rising rapidly, especially in developing countries. Heart disease and stroke, the leading causes of death in richer nations, will become more common in poorer countries. The number of people affected by diabetes has risen from 171m. in 2000 to 387m. in 2014, and has been forecast by the International Diabetes Federation to increase to 592m. by 2030. There is likely to be a huge rise in some mental and neurological disorders, especially dementias and particularly Alzheimer's disease, which is projected to affect 34m. people by 2025. In 2013 an estimated 650m. people suffered from mental and neurological disorders. Dementia affected an estimated 36m. people in 2012 and some 50m. worldwide suffered from epilepsy.

These projected increases are reported to be owing to a combination of factors, not least population ageing and the rising prevalence of unhealthy lifestyles. Average life expectancy at birth globally was 71 years in 2014. It is around 50 years in a few low-income countries, well over 70 years in many countries and exceeds 80 years in some. In 2014 there were an estimated 589m. people over 65. By 2030 that number is expected to rise to 995m., representing nearly 12% of the world's population.

According to WHO, the top ten causes of death in the world in 2012 were: coronary (ischaemic) heart disease, 7.4m. deaths; stroke, 6.7m.; chronic obstructive pulmonary disease, 3.1m.; lower respiratory infections, 3.1m.; trachea, bronchus and lung cancers, 1.6m.; HIV/AIDS, 1.5m. (down from a peak of 2.4m. in 2005); diarrhoeal diseases, 1.5m.; diabetes mellitus, 1.5m.; road injury, 1.3m.; hypertensive heart diseases, 1.1m. Tobacco kills nearly 6m.

people each year. In total, its use is responsible for the death of almost one in ten adults worldwide.

In response, WHO has called for an intensified and sustained global campaign to encourage healthy lifestyles and attack the main risk factors responsible for many of these diseases: unhealthy diet, inadequate physical activity, smoking and obesity.

The WHO Framework Convention on Tobacco Control (WHO FCTC) was developed in response to the globalization of the tobacco epidemic, and is the first global health treaty negotiated under the auspices of the World Health Organization. The provisions in the Treaty require countries to ban tobacco advertising, sponsorship and promotion; establish new packaging and labelling of tobacco products with prominent health warnings; establish smoking bans in public places, increase price and tax on tobacco products; and strengthen legislation to clamp down on tobacco smuggling, among other measures.

World Health Report 2013: Research for Universal Health Coverage assesses how the most important health care issues can be tackled by creatively harnessing research around the world, stating that all countries should be producers of research as well as consumers. The report champions a global and open research environment, in which scientific dialogue may yield new solutions to localized health problems. Emphasis is placed on increased healthcare affordability and greater co-operation between governments and the research community.

Organization. The principal organs of WHO are the World Health Assembly, the Executive Board and the Secretariat. Each of the 194 member states has the right to be represented at the Assembly, which meets annually in Geneva. The 34-member Executive Board is composed of technically qualified health experts designated by as many member states as elected by the Assembly. The Secretariat consists of technical and administrative staff headed by a Director-General, who is appointed for not more than two five-year terms. Health activities in member countries are carried out through regional organizations which have been established in Africa (Brazzaville), South-East Asia (New Delhi), Europe (Copenhagen), Eastern Mediterranean (Cairo) and Western Pacific (Manila). The Pan American Sanitary Bureau in Washington serves as the regional office of WHO for the Americas. It is the oldest international health agency in the world and is the secretariat of the Pan American Health Organization (PAHO).

Finance. The total two-year budget for 2014–15 was US$4.0bn.

Current Leaders

Margaret Chan Fung Fu-chun

Position

Director-General

Introduction

Dr Margaret Chan was appointed Director-General of WHO on 9 Nov. 2006 to secure a scheduled five-year term from 4 Jan. 2007 to 30 June 2012. In May 2012 she was reappointed for a second term until the end of June 2017.

Early Life

Chan was born in 1947 in Hong Kong. She graduated in medicine from the University of Western Ontario, Canada in 1977, and joined the Hong Kong department of health as a medical officer in Dec. 1978. In 1985 she gained an MSc. in public health from the National University of Singapore. In June 1994 she became the health department's first female director. Her nine-year tenure was marked by outbreaks of H5N1 avian influenza in 1997 and SARS in 2003.

In 2003 Chan joined WHO as director of the department for protection of the human environment. She was promoted to director of communicable diseases surveillance and response in June 2005 and also became the representative of the director-general for pandemic influenza. In Sept. that year she was appointed assistant director-general for communicable diseases. When Dr Lee Jong-wook died in May 2006, Chan was nominated by China to succeed him as Director-General.

Career in Office

Chan identified improvements in health of women and in Africa as key to her term. However, she courted early controversy when, in Feb. 2007, she was accused of favouring pharmaceutical companies over the sick in developing countries by humanitarian groups lobbying for cheaper generic drugs. Then in April she was criticized for her defence of WHO's refusal to extend membership to Taiwan. In June 2007 new international health regulations obliged governments to report potential pandemics to Chan as WHO Director-General immediately. In June 2009 WHO declared a global swine flu pandemic. The outbreak, first detected in March, had seemingly peaked in many countries by the end of the year, but Chan warned against complacency in tracking the evolution of the virus.

In Jan. 2011 Chan warned that the WHO was overextended and facing serious funding shortfalls, necessitating administrative, budgetary and programmatic reform. She said that the organization needed to redirect resources in a more targeted manner, avoiding wasteful duplication with other health financiers and concentrating on areas where it could make the most impact. The ebola virus epidemic in West Africa in 2014–15 further exposed weaknesses in the organization's ability to respond to crises. In Oct. 2015 Chan welcomed the UN's adoption the previous month of the 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development aiming to 'ensure healthy lives and promote well-being for all at all ages'. In Feb. 2016, in response to the rapid spread in much of Latin America of the mosquito-borne Zika virus that is thought to cause birth defects, WHO formally declared a public health emergency of international concern.

World Intellectual Property Organization (WIPO)

Origin. The World Intellectual Property Organization (WIPO) was established in 1967 following the conclusion of the Convention Establishing the World Intellectual Property Organization in Stockholm. It was given a mandate by its member states to promote the protection of intellectual property (IP) through co-operation among states and in collaboration with other international organizations. The WIPO Convention entered into force on 26 April 1970 and WIPO became a specialized agency of the United Nations in 1974.

Aims and Activities. WIPO administers 26 treaties that deal with different legal and administrative aspects of intellectual property, notably the Paris Convention for the Protection of Industrial Property, the Patent Cooperation Treaty and the Bern Convention for the Protection of Literary and Artistic Works. WIPO is dedicated to developing a balanced and accessible international intellectual property (IP) system that rewards creativity, stimulates innovation and contributes to economic development while safeguarding the public interest.

In Dec. 2008 WIPO member states adopted a new strategic framework for the Organization comprising nine strategic goals that are designed to enable WIPO to more effectively respond to an evolving technological, cultural and geo-economic environment. In addition to goals relating to the balanced evolution of the international normative framework of IP, to facilitating the use of IP for development and to the provision of premier global IP services, WIPO's new goals include a focus on building respect for IP; on developing global IP infrastructure; on responsive communication; on becoming a world reference source for IP information; and on addressing IP in relation to global policy challenges such as climate change, public health and food security.

WIPO's activities fall broadly into three clusters of activities, namely: the progressive development of international IP law; IP capacity-building programmes to support the efficient use of IP, particularly in developing countries; and services to industry that facilitate the process of obtaining IP rights in multiple countries. Also, alternative dispute resolution options for private parties are available through the WIPO Arbitration and Mediation Center.

Organization. As at Feb. 2016 WIPO had 188 member states. WIPO is unique among the family of UN organizations in that it is largely self-financing. The budget for the 2012–13 biennium was 648m. Swiss francs. Over 90% of the Organization's budget comes from earnings derived from the services that WIPO provides to industry and the private sector. The remainder of the budget is made up mainly of revenue generated by WIPO's Arbitration and Mediation Center, the sale of publications and contributions from member states.

World Meteorological Organization (WMO)

Origin. A 1947 (Washington) Conference of Directors of the International Meteorological Organization (est. 1873) adopted a Convention creating the World Meteorological Organization. The WMO Convention became effective on 23 March 1950 and WMO was formally established. It was recognized as a Specialized Agency of the UN in 1951.

Functions. (1) To facilitate worldwide co-operation in the establishment of networks of stations for the making of meteorological observations as well as hydrological and other geophysical observations related to meteorology, and to promote the establishment and maintenance of centres charged with the provision of meteorological and related services; (2) to promote the establishment and maintenance of systems for the rapid exchange of meteorological and related information; (3) to promote standardization of meteorological and related observations and ensure the uniform publication of observations and statistics; (4) to further the application of meteorology to aviation, shipping, water problems, agriculture and other human activities; (5) to promote activities in operational hydrology and to further close co-operation between meteorological and hydrological services; and (6) to encourage research and training in meteorology and, as appropriate, to assist in co-ordinating the international aspects of such research and training.

Organization. WMO has 185 member states and six member territories responsible for the operation of their own meteorological services. Congress, which is its supreme body, meets every four years to approve policy, programme and budget, and adopt regulations. The Executive Council meets at least once a year to prepare studies and recommendations for Congress, and supervises the implementation of Congress resolutions and regulations. It has 37 members, comprising the President and three Vice-Presidents, as well as the Presidents of the six Regional Associations (Africa, Asia, South America, North America, Central America and the Caribbean, South-West Pacific, Europe), whose task is to co-ordinate meteorological activity within their regions, and 27 members elected in their personal capacity. There are eight Technical Commissions composed of experts nominated by members of WMO, whose remit includes the following areas: basic systems, climatology, instruments and methods of observation, atmospheric sciences, aeronautical meteorology, agricultural meteorology, hydrology, oceanography and marine meteorology. A permanent Secretariat is maintained in Geneva. There are four regional offices for Africa, Asia and the South-West Pacific, the Americas and Europe. The proposed budget for 2012–15 was 276.0m. Swiss francs for regular resources plus 175.0m. Swiss francs for voluntary resources.

World Tourism Organization (UNWTO)

Origin. Established in 1925 in The Hague as the International Congress of Official Tourist Traffic Associations. Renamed the International Union for Official Tourism Organizations after the Second World War when it moved to Geneva, it was renamed the World Tourism Organization in 1975 and moved its headquarters to Madrid the following year.

The World Tourism Organization became an executing agency of the United Nations Development Programme in 1976 and in 1977 a formal co-operation agreement was signed with the UN itself. With a UN resolution on 23 Dec. 2003 the World Tourism Organization became a specialized agency of the United Nations.

Aims. The World Tourism Organization exists to help nations throughout the world maximize the positive impacts of tourism, such as job creation, new infrastructure and foreign exchange earnings, while at the same time minimizing negative environmental or social impacts.

Membership. The World Tourism Organization has three categories of membership: full membership which is open to all sovereign states; associate membership which is open to all territories not responsible for their external relations; and affiliate membership which comprises a wide range of organizations and companies working either directly in travel and tourism or in related sectors. In Feb. 2016 the World Tourism Organization had 157 full members, six associate members and more than 480 affiliate members.

Organization. The General Assembly meets every two years to approve the budget and programme of work and to debate topics of vital importance to the tourism sector. The Executive Council is the governing board, responsible for ensuring that the organization carries out its work and keeps within its budget. The World Tourism Organization has six regional commissions—Africa, the Americas, East Asia and the Pacific, Europe, the Middle East and South Asia—which meet at least once a year.

Specialized committees of World Tourism Organization members advise on management and programme content.

Other Organs Related to the UN

International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA)

Origin. An intergovernmental agency, the IAEA was established in 1957 under the aegis of the UN and reports annually to the General Assembly. Its Statute was approved on 26 Oct. 1956 at a conference at UN Headquarters.

Functions. To enhance the contribution of atomic energy to peace, health and prosperity throughout the world; and to ensure that Agency assistance and activities are not used for any military purpose. In addition, under the terms of the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty (NPT), non-nuclear-weapon states are required to allow the IAEA to verify that their nuclear activities are peaceful. Similar responsibilities are given to the IAEA as part of the nuclear-weapon-free zone treaties in Latin America, the South Pacific, Africa and Southeast Asia.

Activities. The IAEA gives advice and technical assistance to developing countries on a wide range of aspects of nuclear power development. In addition, it promotes the use of radiation and isotopes in agriculture, industry, medicine and hydrology through expert services, training courses and fellowships, grants of equipment and supplies, research contracts, scientific meetings and publications. In 2013 support for operational projects for technical co-operation involved 3,509 expert and lecturer assignments, 5,331 meeting participants, 3,041 participants in training courses and 2,005 fellows and scientific visitors.

The IAEA uses technical safeguards procedures to verify that nuclear equipment or materials are used exclusively for peaceful purposes. IAEA safeguards were applied in 2014 in 180 States at 1,267 nuclear facilities, with 2,732 inspections conducted. The five nuclear-weapon states recognized by the NPT (China, France, Russia, UK and USA) are not required to accept safeguards but have concluded Voluntary Offer Agreements that permit the IAEA access to some of their civil nuclear activities.

Organization. The Statute provides for an annual General Conference, a 35-member Board of Governors and a Secretariat headed by a Director-General and currently staffed by nearly 2,600 people from over 100 countries. The IAEA had 167 member states in Feb. 2016.

There are also research laboratories in Austria and Monaco. In addition, the International Centre for Theoretical Physics was established in Trieste, Italy, in 1964, and is operated jointly by UNESCO and the IAEA.

World Trade Organization (WTO)

Origin. The WTO came into being on 1 Jan. 1995. The bulk of the WTO's current work comes from the 1986–94 negotiations called the Uruguay Round and earlier negotiations under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT), which was created in 1948.

Aims and Activities. The WTO agreements have been negotiated and signed by the bulk of the world's trading nations and provide the legal ground rules for international commerce. They act as contracts, binding governments to keep their trade policies within agreed limits. The goal is to help producers of goods and services, exporters and importers conduct their business, while allowing governments to meet social and environmental objectives. The system's overriding purpose is to help trade flow as freely as possible.

The WTO agreements cover goods, services and intellectual property. They spell out the principles of liberalization and the permitted exceptions. They include individual countries' commitments to lower customs tariffs and other trade barriers, and to open and keep open services markets. They set procedures for settling disputes. The agreements are not static; they are renegotiated from time to time and new agreements can be added to the package. The WTO began new negotiations under the 'Doha Development Agenda' launched in Nov. 2001. In Dec. 2013 all 159 member countries agreed to the 'Bali package', an agreement to facilitate cross-border trade. It was the first comprehensive agreement between all members in the organization's history and analysts estimated that it could add up to US$1trn. to the global economy.

Governments are required to make their trade policies transparent by notifying the WTO about laws in force and measures adopted. Various WTO councils and committees seek to ensure that these requirements are being followed and that WTO agreements are being properly implemented. All WTO members must undergo periodic scrutiny of their trade policies and practices, each review containing reports by the country concerned and the WTO Secretariat.

The Dispute Settlement Understanding written into the WTO agreements provides a neutral procedure based on an agreed legal foundation when conflicts of interest arise between trading nations. Countries bring disputes to the WTO if they think their rights under the agreements are being infringed. Judgments by specially appointed independent experts are based on interpretations of the agreements and individual countries' commitments.

Special provision is provided for developing countries, including longer time periods to implement agreements and commitments, measures to increase their trading opportunities and support to help them build their trade capacity, to handle disputes and to implement technical standards. The WTO organizes hundreds of technical co-operation missions to developing countries annually. It also holds numerous courses each year in Geneva for government officials. Aid for Trade aims to help developing countries improve the skills and infrastructure needed to expand their trade.

The WTO maintains regular dialogue with non-governmental organizations, parliamentarians, other international organizations, the media and the general public on various aspects of the WTO and the ongoing Doha negotiations, with the aim of enhancing co-operation and increasing awareness of WTO activities.

Organization. As of Feb. 2016 the WTO had 162 members, accounting for around 95% of world trade. The WTO is run by its member governments and derives its income from annual contributions from its members. All major decisions are made by the membership as a whole, either by ministers (who usually meet at least once every two years) or by their ambassadors or delegates (who meet regularly in Geneva). Day-to-day work in between the ministerial conferences is handled by three bodies: the General Council, the Dispute Settlement Body and the Trade Policy Review Body. All three consist of all the WTO members. The previous GATT Secretariat now serves the WTO, which has no resources of its own other than its operating budget. The budget for 2015 was 197,203,900 Swiss francs.

Preparatory Commission for the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty Organization (CTBTO)

The Preparatory Commission for the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty Organization (CTBTO Preparatory Commission) is an international organization established by the States Signatories to the Treaty on 19 Nov. 1996. It carries out the necessary preparations for the effective implementation of the Treaty, and prepares for the first session of the Conference of the States Parties to the Treaty.

The Preparatory Commission consists of a plenary body composed of all the States Signatories, and the Provisional Technical Secretariat (PTS). Upon signing the Treaty a state becomes a member of the Commission. Member states oversee the work of the Preparatory Commission and fund its activities. The Commission's main task is the establishment of the 337 facility International Monitoring System and the International Data Centre, its provisional operation and the development of operational manuals. The Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty prohibits any nuclear weapon test explosion or any other nuclear explosion anywhere in the world. As of Feb. 2016 the Treaty had 183 States Signatories and 164 ratifications.

Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons (OPCW)

The OPCW is responsible for the implementation of the Chemical Weapons Convention (CWC), which became effective on 29 April 1997. The principal organ of the OPCW is the Conference of the States Parties, composed of all the members of the Organization.

Given the relative simplicity of producing chemical warfare agents, the verification provisions of the CWC are far-reaching. The routine monitoring regime involves submission by States Parties of initial and annual declarations to the OPCW and initial visits and systematic inspections of declared weapons storage, production and destruction facilities. Verification is also applied to chemical industry facilities which produce, process or consume dual-use chemicals listed in the convention.

The OPCW also co-ordinates assistance to any State Party that falls victim of chemical warfare as it fosters international co-operation in the peaceful application of chemistry.

By Feb. 2016 a total of 192 countries and territories were States Parties to the Chemical Weapons Convention.

UN Conventions

Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities

The UN Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities was adopted on 13 Dec. 2006 and came into force on 3 May 2008. With 82 signatories to the Convention and 44 signatories to the Optional Protocol, it holds the record for the highest number of signatories to a UN convention on its opening day. As of Feb. 2016 it had 160 signatories.

The Convention recognizes the human rights of disabled people who have physical, mental and/or sensory long-term impairments that may affect their full participation in society. Article 1 lays out the convention's aim 'to promote, protect and ensure the full and equal enjoyment of all human rights and fundamental freedoms by all persons with disabilities, and to promote respect for their inherent dignity'. Member states are obliged to ensure the equality and non-discrimination, health, education and employment of disabled people. Every four years, each member state must submit a report on relevant measures taken. A committee of 18 independent experts monitors the implementation of the convention and normally meets in Geneva, Switzerland twice a year.

United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification

The United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification (UNCCD) was adopted in Paris in 1994 and came into force in Dec. 1996. Its 195 signatory parties (194 states and the EU) meet every other year and work to combat the effects of desertification, drought and land degradation. Specific attention is paid to Africa, where desertification is most prevalent. The ten-year strategy covering 2008–18 focuses on improving living conditions of affected parties, improving the condition of affected ecosystems and mobilizing resources to build relationships between national and international participants.

The UNCCD encourages co-operation between nations and with international non-governmental organizations. The body also works closely with the Convention on Biological Diversity (CBD) and the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change (UNFCCC). In March 2014 Canada became the first member state to withdraw from the convention, having announced its intention to do so a year earlier with then Prime Minister Stephen Harper claiming that it had become too bureaucratic. He maintained that less than a fifth of the money that Canada gave to the organization went on programming.

United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change

The Convention was produced at the 1992 UN Conference on Environment and Development with the stated aim of reducing global greenhouse gas emissions to 'a level that would prevent dangerous anthropogenic (human induced) interference with the climate system'. Signatories agreed to take account of climate change in their domestic policy and to develop national programmes that would slow its progress. However, no mandatory targets were established for the reduction of emissions so the treaty remained legally non-binding. Instead it operates as a 'framework' document, with provisions for regular updates and amendments. By Feb. 2016, 196 states and territories plus the European Union had signed and ratified the Convention.

The first of these additions was the Kyoto Protocol in 1997. Under the protocol, 37 developed countries were committed to reducing their collective emissions of six greenhouse gases to at least 5% below 1990 levels. These targets were scheduled to be met in the period 2008–12. By 2012 results were mixed. The EU had reduced emissions by 21.0% and Russia by 50.3%, while the USA's had risen by 2.7%, Canada's by 42.2%, New Zealand's by 111.4% and Turkey's by 163.3%. In Dec. 2011 Canada announced it would be the first signatory to formally withdraw from the agreement. A second commitment period of the Kyoto Protocol began on 1 Jan. 2013. The USA has not ratified the protocol. China and India, also amongst the world's top five producers of emissions, are exempt from the protocol's constraints by virtue of their status as developing countries.

The members of the UNFCCC meet on an annual basis. The conference in Indonesia in 2007 led to the creation of the 'Bali Roadmap', which timetable negotiations for a protocol to succeed Kyoto, a process continued at the 2008 conference in Poland. The subsequent Copenhagen Accord of 2009 was not legally binding and failed to set out concrete measures for tackling climate change. The 2011 conference, held in Durban, South Africa, advanced negotiations on the implementation of the Kyoto Protocol, the Bali Action Plan and the Cancún Agreements. At the 18th conference in Doha, Qatar in 2012 plans were laid for the development of a successor protocol by 2015 to be implemented by 2020. The 2014 conference, in Lima, Peru, saw a framework agreement approved by 194 nations for setting national pledges for submission at the conference in Paris, France in 2015. The Paris conference duly concluded a global agreement on countering climate change, although no country-specific goals were set. A follow-up conference is scheduled to be hosted in Morocco in Nov. 2016.

European Union (EU)

Origin. The Union is founded on the existing European communities set up by the Treaties of Paris (1951) and Rome (1957), supplemented by revisions, the Single European Act in 1986, the Maastricht Treaty on European Union in 1992, the Treaty of Amsterdam in 1997, the Treaty of Nice in 2000 and the Treaty of Lisbon in 2009.

Members. (28). Austria, Belgium, Bulgaria, Croatia, Cyprus (Greek-Cypriot sector only), the Czech Republic, Denmark, Estonia, Finland, France, Germany, Greece, Hungary, Ireland, Italy, Latvia, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Malta, the Netherlands, Poland, Portugal, Romania, Slovakia, Slovenia, Spain, Sweden and the UK.

History. European disillusionment with nationalism after the Second World War fostered a desire to bind key European states—France and (West) Germany—to each other and prevent future conflict. In 1946 Winston Churchill called for a moral union in the form of a 'united states of Europe'. Unsupported by the British Government, Churchill chaired the 1948 European Congress of The Hague, a meeting of 800 Europeanists that resulted in the creation of the Council of Europe, a European assembly of nations whose aim (Art. 1 of the Statute) was: 'to achieve a greater unity between its members for the purpose of safeguarding and realizing the ideals and principles which are their common heritage'.

The formation of the Benelux Economic Union in 1948 provided a model for a regional customs union; the free movement of goods, people, capital and services was achieved by 1960. Further European integration and the eradication of tariff trade barriers were encouraged by the US-financed European Recovery Program (Marshall Plan) and the Organisation for European Economic Co-operation (later the OECD). Western European co-operation was also spurred on by distrust of Soviet power in the East, leading to the Brussels Treaty of 1948; the collective defence pact that established the Western European Union (WEU). The North Atlantic Treaty of 1949 cemented Western European (and American) security co-operation.

Jean Monnet, a French economic advisor, suggested joint development to solve Franco-German tensions over the industrial power of the Ruhr and Saarland. Monnet's plan was championed by the French foreign minister, Robert Schuman, whose Declaration of 9 May 1950 (now celebrated as Europe Day) proposed the pooling of coal and steel production. Belgium, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Luxembourg and the Netherlands signed the Treaty of Paris establishing the European Coal and Steel Community (ECSC), regarded as a first step towards a united Europe. However, the European Defence Community (EDC) of 1952 was rejected by the French Parliament, ending hopes for a European Political Community. Encouraged by the success of the ECSC, European integrationists pressed for further economic co-operation. The European Economic Community (EEC) and the European Atomic Energy Community (EAEC or Euratom) were subsequently created under separate treaties signed in Rome on 25 March 1957. The treaties provided for the establishment by stages of a common market with a customs union at its core, the development of common transport and agricultural policies, and the promotion of growth and research in the nuclear industries for peaceful purposes. Euratom was awarded monopoly powers of acquisition of fissile materials for civil purposes (it is not concerned with the military uses of nuclear power).

The executives of the three communities (ECSC, Euratom, EEC) were amalgamated by a treaty signed in Brussels in 1965, forming a single Council and single Commission of the European Communities, which today constitutes the core of the EU. The Commission is advised on matters relating to Euratom by a Scientific and Technical Committee.

Enlargement. On 30 June 1970 membership negotiations began between the European Community and the UK, Denmark, Ireland and Norway. On 22 Jan. 1972 all four countries signed a Treaty of Accession but Norway rejected membership in a referendum in Nov. The UK, Denmark and Ireland became full members on 1 Jan. 1973 (though Greenland exercised its autonomy under the Danish Crown to secede in 1985). Greece joined on 1 Jan. 1981; Spain and Portugal on 1 Jan. 1986. The former German Democratic Republic entered into full membership on reunification with Federal Germany in Oct. 1990 and, following referenda in favour, Austria, Finland and Sweden became members on 1 Jan. 1995. In a referendum in Nov. 1994 Norway again rejected membership. On 1 May 2004 a further ten countries became members—Cyprus, the Czech Republic, Estonia, Hungary, Latvia, Lithuania, Malta, Poland, Slovakia and Slovenia. On 1 Jan. 2007 Bulgaria and Romania also became members. Most recently Croatia became a member on 1 July 2013.

Single European Act. The enlarging of the Community resulted in renewed efforts to promote European integration, culminating in the signing in 1986 of the Single European Act. The SEA represented the first major revision of the Treaty of Rome. It provided for greater involvement of the European Parliament in the decision-making process and it extended Qualified Majority Voting (QMV). The SEA also removed barriers within the EEC to movement and transnational business.

Maastricht Treaty on European Union. Following German reunification, closer European integration was pursued in the political as well as economic spheres. The Maastricht Summit of Dec. 1991 produced a new framework—a European Union based on three ‘pillars’: a central pillar of the existing European Communities and two supporting pillars based on formal intergovernmental co-operation. One pillar comprised a Common Foreign and Security Policy (CFSP) and the other focused on justice and home affairs, including policing, immigration and law enforcement. Signed in Feb. 1992, the Treaty on European Union laid down a timetable for the creation of a common currency (subject to specific conditions, including an opt-out clause for the UK). The Community Charter of Fundamental Social Rights for Workers, signed in 1989 by all members except the UK, was strengthened by a protocol, allowing member states to use EC institutions to co-ordinate social policy. The UK agreed to abide to the protocol in 1998. Ratification by member states of the Maastricht Treaty proved controversial. In June 1992 it was rejected in a Danish referendum but approved in a second referendum in May 1993. Ratification was finally completed during 1993, with the UK ratifying on 2 Aug. The European Union (EU) came into being officially on 1 Nov. that year.

Treaty of Amsterdam. The Turin Inter-Governmental Conference (IGC) of 1996 failed to advance the reform programme, in part because of the British Conservative Government’s opposition to extending EU powers. The election in 1997 of a more Europeanist Labour Government led to the adoption of most of the IGC’s proposals at the Amsterdam summit in 1997. Designed to further political integration, the Treaty did little more than adjust the institutions to prepare for EU enlargement. Strengthened policies included police co-operation, freedom of movement and the promotion of employment. Elements of the justice and home affairs ‘pillar’ were transferred to the Communities. The treaty also allows for member states to progress with selected areas of policy at different rates.

Treaty of Nice. Many of the problems unanswered at Amsterdam were left until the Dec. 2000 IGC at Nice. However, the tense summit failed to find consensus on key institutional reforms. The Treaty included a reweighting of votes in the Council of Ministers, adjustments to the composition of the Commission and several extensions to QMV. Ireland rejected the Treaty in a referendum in June 2001; this was reversed in the referendum in Oct. 2002. The Treaty came into effect on 1 Feb. 2003.

Charter of Fundamental Rights. The Charter, based on the Universal Declaration of Human Rights (UDHR), contains several provisions such as workers’ rights and the right to good administration that are not included in the political and civil rights of the European Convention on Human Rights (ECHR). The Treaty was proclaimed by the European Parliament, the Commission and the Council—at the Nice IGC in 2000—but was not incorporated in the Treaty of Nice.

European Convention. In Dec. 2001 the Laeken European Conference adopted the Declaration on the Future of the European Union, committing the EU to becoming more democratic, transparent and effective, while opening the way to a constitution for the people of Europe. The European Council set up a convention, comprising 105 members—chaired by Valéry Giscard d’Estaing, a former French president—to draft the Treaty establishing a Constitution for Europe (the EU constitution), to be ratified by all member states. The Treaty was to confer legal personality on the European Union, giving it the right to represent itself as a single body under international law. The constitution included provision for a President of the European Council, to replace the current six-month rotating presidency, to be elected by member states for 2½-year terms. The European Parliament was to be granted co-legislative powers in all policy areas with the Council. A new position of Union Minister of Foreign Affairs would have merged the responsibilities of the external relations Commissioner and the High Representative for the CFSP. The constitution incorporated the Charter of Fundamental Rights. Member states would have had reduced powers of veto, although the veto was to have remained in key areas including taxation, defence and foreign policy. Plans for the new constitution to be ready for EU governments to sign after the ten new members joined on 1 May 2004 were dropped when the Brussels summit of Dec. 2003 ended in stalemate over the weighting of voting rights in the Council of Ministers. On 29 Oct. 2004 the Treaty was approved for ratification by the 25 member countries, either by referendum or parliamentary vote. On 29 May 2005, after nine countries had ratified the Treaty, France became the first to reject it; the Netherlands followed suit three days later. Subsequently a further seven countries ratified the Treaty. In addition, Bulgaria and Romania ratified the constitution as part of their preparations for joining the EU. With ratification in the Czech Republic, Denmark, Ireland, Poland, Portugal, Sweden and the UK delayed indefinitely, the treaty’s progress stalled.

In June 2007 the European Council initiated talks on a replacement Reform Treaty (the Treaty of Lisbon). Drafting was completed in Oct. 2007, with the intention that the treaty should be signed and ratified by all member governments in time for the European parliamentary elections of June 2009. The treaty removes much of the constitutional terminology in the draft constitution text, reduces the reach of the European charter of human rights and allows for individual states to opt out of certain legislative areas. It does, nonetheless, retain many of the draft constitution’s provisions, including a reformed EU presidency, a representative for EU foreign affairs and security and the recognition of the EU as a full legal personality. The treaty was subject to ratification in the parliaments of member countries. There were calls in several countries for the reform to be put to a public vote, but only Ireland was required by its constitution to hold a referendum. The treaty was rejected in the Irish referendum held on 13 June 2008 but accepted in a second referendum on 2 Oct. 2009. On 3 Nov. 2009 the Czech Republic was the final nation to ratify the treaty, which came into effect on 1 Dec. 2009. On 1 Jan. 2010 Herman Van Rompuy, formerly Belgium’s prime minister, was sworn in as the first president of the European Council.

Recent and Future Enlargement. On 15 July 1997 the European Commission adopted Agenda 2000, which included a detailed strategy for consolidating the Union through enlargement as far eastwards as Ukraine, Belarus and Moldova. It recommended the early start of accession negotiations with the Czech Republic, Estonia, Hungary, Poland and Slovenia under the provision of Article O of the Maastricht Treaty, whereby ‘any European State may apply to become a member of the Union’ (subject to the Copenhagen Criteria set by the European Council at its summit in 1993).

In 2002 it was announced that ten countries would be ready to join in 2004: Cyprus, the Czech Republic, Estonia, Hungary, Latvia, Lithuania, Malta, Poland, Slovakia and Slovenia. Following a series of referenda held in 2003 they all became members on 1 May 2004. Bulgaria and Romania signed an accession treaty in April 2005 and became members on 1 Jan. 2007. Entry talks with Croatia began in Oct. 2005—it was recognized as an official candidate country in June 2004—in response to greater co-operation with the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia. It signed the accession treaty in Dec. 2011 and became the 28th country to join the EU on 1 July 2013. Turkey became an official candidate country in Dec. 1999 and talks on membership began in Oct. 2005. However, they then stalled for a number of years over several key areas before being revived in Dec. 2015. Switzerland applied for membership in May 1992 but this was rejected by a Swiss referendum later that year. The first Switzerland-EU summit, in 2004, brought Switzerland closer to the EU with a series of bilateral agreements. A referendum in June 2005 approved joining the Schengen Accord (see below). The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia (FYROM) applied for membership in March 2004. Montenegro applied for membership in Dec. 2008, as did Albania in April 2009, Iceland in July 2009 and Serbia in Dec. 2009. Macedonia became an official candidate country in Dec. 2005, as did Iceland in June 2010, Montenegro in Dec. 2010, Serbia in March 2012 and Albania in June 2014. However, in June 2013 Iceland formally suspended negotiations until after a national referendum. Then in March 2015 the government requested that ‘Iceland should not be regarded as a candidate country for EU membership’.

Recent History. In Sept. 2009 José Manuel Barroso began his second five-year term as European Commission president. Two months later, Herman Van Rompuy was elected as the European Council’s first permanent president—and in effect the first president of the EU. In Dec. 2009 the Lisbon Treaty entered into force.

The impact of the global financial crisis was felt acutely within the EU. In 2010 Greece became the first eurozone economy to seek an EU bailout, with Ireland, Portugal, Spain and Cyprus all following suit by March 2013. In Dec. 2013 Ireland became the first nation to exit its bailout programme.

Three new financial supervisory bodies were inaugurated in Jan. 2011: the European Banking Authority, the European Insurance and Occupational Pensions Authority, and the European Securities and Markets Authority. In Jan. 2012 a ‘fiscal pact’ aimed at limiting government spending and borrowing (with penalties for those countries breaching limits) was signed by all of the then 27 EU members except the Czech Republic and the UK. In Oct. 2012 the European Stability Mechanism was inaugurated with a maximum lending capacity of €500bn., creating a permanent bailout fund. Eurozone unemployment reached a record high of 12.1% in April 2013 but has gradually fallen since then and was 10.4% in Dec. 2015.

The EU was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize in 2012 for its six decades of work promoting peace, democracy and human rights. In July 2013 Croatia became the EU’s 28th member state. In 2014 the EU condemned Russia’s ‘clear violation of Ukrainian sovereignty’ following its annexation of Crimea and imposed a number of punitive measures including diplomatic sanctions, asset freezes and visa bans. Also in 2014 Jean-Claude Juncker, former prime minister of Luxembourg, succeeded José Manuel Barroso as European Commission president and Donald Tusk, the former Polish premier, took over from Herman Van Rompuy as European Council president.

In 2015 victories in two Greek parliamentary elections of the far-left Syriza party, which sought to reject EU-imposed austerity measures, fuelled uncertainty and instability in the eurozone. The EU also faced a migration crisis that year as its members received over 1.2m. asylum applications (almost half from people fleeing the civil war in Syria). The number of applications was nearly twice that for 2014, which itself was the highest number since 1992. Germany received more applications than any other EU state, although Sweden received the most relative to its population.

Objectives. The Maastricht Treaty claimed the ultimate goal of the EU is ‘an ever closer union among the peoples of Europe, in which decisions are taken as closely as possible to the citizen’. However, there are competing views over what that ‘union’ should be: political confederation or federation or primarily economic union. Priorities include: economic and monetary union; further expansion of the scope of the Communities; implementation of a common foreign and security policy; and development in the fields of justice and home affairs. The Lisbon Strategy, presented in 2000, strives to turn the EU into ‘the most competitive and dynamic knowledge-based economy in the world’. Yet tensions remain over how to balance economic growth measures and social welfare provisions.

Structure. The EU’s main institutions are: the European Commission, an independent policy-making executive with powers of proposal; the Council of the European Union (known informally as the Council of Ministers), a decision-making body drawn from the national governments (headed by a permanent president since ratification of the Treaty of Lisbon); the European Council, which defines the general political direction and priorities of the EU; the European Parliament, which has joint legislative powers in most policy areas and final say over the EU budget; the Court of Justice of the European Union, including the EU’s supreme court; the European Court of Auditors, which checks the financing of the EU’s activities; and the European Central Bank, which is responsible for maintaining price stability in the euro area.

Defence. At the 1999 Helsinki European Conference, plans were drawn up for the formation of a rapid response capability that could be deployed at short notice. The success of Operation Artemis in 2003 (when an EU peacekeeping force, spearheaded by France, intervened in the humanitarian crisis in the Democratic Republic of the Congo) led to the statement at the Franco-British summit in Nov. 2003 that the EU should be able and willing to deploy forces within 15 days in response to a UN request. The ‘EU Battlegroup Concept’ was approved in 2004, reached its initial operational capability in Jan. 2005 and its full operational capability in Jan. 2007. The battlegroups are considered to be the smallest self-sufficient military unit capable of stand-alone operations or deployment in the initial phase of larger operations. The battlegroups are particularly suited for tasks such as conflict prevention, evacuation and humanitarian operations; however, they have yet to be deployed. There are currently 18 battlegroups, typically consisting of around 1,500 personnel. Two battlegroups remain on standby at any one time, rotating every six months. The European Union’s first ever peacekeeping force (EUFOR) officially started work in Macedonia on 1 April 2003.

The European Union Institute for Security Studies (EUISS) was created by a Council Joint Action in July 2001 with the status of an autonomous agency. It contributes to the development of the Common Foreign and Security Policy (CFSP) through research and debate on major security and defence issues. The European Defence Agency, headed by Federica Mogherini, the EU’s High Representative, was founded by the Council in July 2004 to improve defence co-ordination, especially crisis management.

Major Policy Areas. The major policy areas of the EU were laid down in the 1957 Treaty of Rome, which guaranteed certain rights to the citizens of all member states. Economic discrimination by nationality was outlawed, and member states were bound to apply 'the principle that men and women should receive equal pay for equal work'.

The Single Internal Market. The core of the process of economic integration is characterized by the removal of obstacles to the four fundamental freedoms of movement for persons, goods, capital and services. Under the Treaty, individuals or companies from one member state may establish themselves in another country (for the purposes of economic activity) or sell goods or services there on the same basis as nationals of that country. With a few exceptions, restrictions on the movement of capital have also been ended. Under the Single European Act the member states bound themselves to achieve the suppression of all barriers to free movement of persons, goods and services by 31 Dec. 1992. Since then the economies of the member states have expanded to such an extent that in 2007 the EU replaced the USA as the world's largest economy.

The Schengen Accord abolished border controls on persons and goods between certain EU states plus Norway and Iceland. It came into effect on 26 March 1995 and was signed by Austria, Belgium, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Greece, Iceland, Italy, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, Spain and Sweden. Ireland and the United Kingdom were the only EU member states at the time that decided not to participate in the accord. The ten countries that joined the EU in 2004 signed the treaty, which came into force in nine of them (the Czech Republic, Estonia, Hungary, Latvia, Lithuania, Malta, Poland, Slovakia and Slovenia) on 21 Dec. 2007. Only Cyprus has yet to implement it. Switzerland became the 25th country to join the Schengen area on 12 Dec. 2008 and Liechtenstein the 26th on 19 Dec. 2011. Other signatory countries still to implement it are Bulgaria, Croatia and Romania, which signed as part of their accession terms. Six countries—Austria, Denmark, France, Germany, Norway, and Sweden—imposed controls on some or all of their borders with neighbouring Schengen countries in the wake of the migration crisis that escalated in the course of 2015 and the Paris Islamist attacks in Nov. of that year.

Economic and Monetary Union. The establishment of the single market provided for the next phase of integration: economic and monetary union. The European Monetary System (EMS) was founded in March 1979 to control inflation, protect European trade from international disturbances and ultimately promote convergence between the European economies. At its heart was the Exchange Rate Mechanism (ERM). The ERM is run by the finance ministries and central banks of the EU countries on a day-to-day basis; monthly reviews are carried out by the EU Monetary Committee (finance ministries) and the EU Committee of Central Bankers. Sweden is not in the ERM; the UK suspended its membership on 17 Sept. 1992. In Jan. 1995 Austria joined the ERM. Finland followed in 1996, and in Nov. that year the Italian lira, which had been temporarily suspended, was readmitted.

With the introduction of the euro, exchange rates have been fixed for all member countries. The member countries are Austria, Belgium, Cyprus, Estonia, Finland, France, Germany, Greece, Ireland, Italy, Latvia, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Malta, the Netherlands, Portugal, Slovakia, Slovenia and Spain.

European Monetary Union (EMU). The single European currency with 11 member states came into operation in Jan. 1999, although it was not until 2002 that the currency came into general circulation. Greece subsequently joined in Jan. 2001, Slovenia in Jan. 2007, Cyprus and Malta in Jan. 2008, Slovakia in Jan. 2009, Estonia in Jan. 2011, Latvia in Jan. 2014 and Lithuania in Jan. 2015. The euro became legal tender from 1 Jan. 2002 across the region (apart from in Cyprus, Estonia, Latvia, Lithuania, Malta, Slovakia and Slovenia). National currencies were phased out by the end of Feb. 2002 in the 12 countries that were using the euro from 1 Jan. 2002. The eurozone is the world's second largest economy after the USA in terms of output and the largest in terms of trade. EMU currency consists of the euro of 100 cents. EU member countries not in the EMU select a central rate for their currency in consultation with members of the euro bloc and the European Central Bank. The rate is set according to an assessment of each country's chances of joining the eurozone.

An agreement on the legal status of the euro and currency discipline, the Stability and Growth Pact, was reached by all member states at the Dublin summit on 13 Dec. 1996. Financial penalties are meant to be applied to member states running a GDP deficit (negative growth) of up to 0.75%. If GDP falls between 0.75% and 2%, EU finance ministers have discretion as to whether to apply penalties. France and Germany exceeded their deficit limits repeatedly despite the efforts of the Commission to penalize them, resulting in the Council of Ministers' decision to relax the regulations in 2005 in an effort to make the law more enforceable. Members running an excessive deficit are automatically exempt from penalties in the event of a natural disaster or if the fall in GDP is at least 2% over one year.

In Jan. 2012 the Treaty on Stability, Coordination and Governance in the Economic and Monetary Union (also known as a 'fiscal compact') was signed by 25 of the then 27 EU member states. It was designed to co-ordinate budget policy across the eurozone in a bid to prevent further unmanageable sovereign debt. The move followed a widespread debt crisis resulting from the global economic downturn, with Ireland, Greece and Portugal all requiring bailouts. The Czech Republic and the UK, both outside the eurozone, declined to sign the treaty.

Environment. The Single European Act made the protection of the environment an integral part of economic and social policies. Public support for EU environmental activism is strong, as evinced by the success of Green parties in the parliamentary elections. Community policy aims to prevent pollution (the Prevention Principle), rectify pollution at source, impose the costs of prevention or rectification on the polluters themselves (the Polluter Pays Principle), and promote sustainable development. The European Environment Agency (see page 37) was established to ensure that policy was based on reliable scientific data.

In March 2002 the then 15 EU member states agreed to the 1997 Kyoto Protocol to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change, which committed the EU to reduce its emissions of greenhouse gases by 8% of 1990 levels between 2008–12. By 2012 EU emissions had fallen by 21.0%, although three of the 15 nations failed to achieve their national targets.

The Common Agricultural Policy (CAP). The objectives set out in the Treaty of Rome are to increase agricultural productivity, to ensure a fair standard of living for the agricultural community, to stabilize markets, to assure supplies, and to ensure reasonable consumer prices. In Dec. 1960 the Council laid down the fundamental principles on which the CAP is based: a single market, which calls for common prices, stable currency parities and the harmonizing of health and veterinary legislation; Community preference, which protects the single Community market from imports; common financing which seeks to improve agriculture and to stabilize markets against world price fluctuations through market intervention, with levies and refunds on exports. The CAP has made the EU virtually self-sufficient in food.

Following the disappearance of stable currency parities, artificial currency levels have been applied in the CAP. This factor, together with over-production owing to high producer prices, meant that the CAP consumed about two-thirds of the Community budget. In May 1992 it was agreed to reform the CAP and to control over-production by reducing the price supports to farmers by 29% for cereals, 15% for beef and 5% for dairy products. In June 1995 the guaranteed intervention price for beef was decreased by 5%. In July 1996 agriculture ministers agreed a reduction in the set-aside rate for cereals from 10% to 5%. Fruit and vegetable production subsidies were fixed at no more than 4% of the value of total marketed production, rising to 4.5% in 1999. Compensatory grants are made available to farmers who remove land from production or take early retirement. The CAP reform aims to make the agricultural sector more responsive to supply and demand.

Customs Union and External Trade Relations. Goods or services originating in one member state have free circulation within the EU, which implies common arrangements for trade with the rest of the world. Member states can no longer make bilateral trade agreements with third countries; this power has been ceded to the EU. The Customs Union was achieved in July 1968.

In Oct. 1991 a treaty forming the European Economic Area (EEA) was approved by the member states of the then EC and European Free Trade Association (EFTA). The EEA consists of the 28 EU members plus Iceland, Liechtenstein and Norway. Although a Swiss referendum rejected ratification of the EEA in Dec. 1992, Switzerland has a bilateral agreement with the EU.

As part of the accession process, the EU has Stabilisation and Association Agreements in force with Albania, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Macedonia, Montenegro and Serbia. Customs unions came into force with Andorra in 1991, Turkey in 1995 and San Marino in 2002. Association agreements, which could lead to customs union, have been made with several states in the Middle East, North Africa and Central America.

Free trade agreements are in force with some 30 countries and territories (often as a component of other agreements). There are partnership and co-operation agreements with a number of Eastern European and Central Asian states (as well as Iraq).

In June 2013 the European Commission and the USA launched negotiations on a Transatlantic Trade and Investment Partnership. Talks with Canada on a Comprehensive Economic and Trade Agreement began in May 2009. As part of the agreement, over 99% of import tariffs will be removed in an attempt to create new market access opportunities in services and investment. Ratification was expected to be completed by mid-2016 with the agreement coming into force by early 2017.

In the Development Aid sector, the EU has an agreement (the Cotonou Agreement, signed in 2000, the successor of the Lomé Convention, originally signed in 1975 but renewed and enlarged in 1979, 1984 and 1989) with 77 African, Caribbean and Pacific (ACP) countries that removes customs duties without reciprocal arrangements for most of their imports to the Community. Since 2002, under the terms of the Cotonou Agreement, the EU and all participating ACP nations have been in talks to establish Economic Partnership Agreements (EPAs) designed to end non-reciprocal trade agreements that conflict with WTO rules. In May 2013 the EU resolved to exclude any nations that failed to take the necessary steps to ratify their EPAs by 1 Oct. 2014. As of that date EPAs had been concluded with 49 ACP countries covering over 900m. people on four continents.

The application of common duties has been conducted mainly within the framework of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT), which was succeeded in 1995 by the establishment of the World Trade Organization.

Fisheries. The Common Fisheries Policy (CFP) came into effect in Jan. 1983. All EU fishermen have equal access to the waters of member countries (a zone extending up to 200 nautical miles from the shore), with the total allowable catch for each species being set and shared out between member countries according to pre-established quotas. In some cases 'historic rights' apply, as well as special rules to preserve marine biodiversity and ensure sustainable fishing.

A number of agreements are operating with third countries (with Cabo Verde, Comoros, Côte d'Ivoire, the Faroe Islands, Gabon, Guinea-Bissau, Iceland, Liberia, Madagascar, Mauritania, Mauritius, Morocco, Norway, São Tomé e Príncipe, Senegal and the Seychelles) allowing reciprocal fishing rights. When Greenland withdrew from the Community in 1985, EU boats retained their fishing rights subject to quotas and limits, which were revised in 1995 owing to concern about the overfishing of Greenland halibut.

Transport. Failure to create a common transport policy, as expected by the Treaty of Rome, led in 1982 to parliamentary proceedings against the Council at the Court of Justice. Under the Maastricht Treaty, the Community must contribute to the establishment and development of Trans-European Networks (TENs) in the areas of transport, telecommunications and energy infrastructures. Funding is via the Connecting Europe Facility (CEF), which has a budget of €29.3bn. for 2014–20. Of this, €23.2bn. is allocated to transport projects (up from €8.0bn. for 2007–13). Common transport policy includes safety agreements, such as lorry weight and driver hours limits, the easing of border crossings for commercial vehicles and progress towards a common transport market. Rail plans include a 35,000 km high-speed train (HST) network, incorporating France's TGV and Germany's ICE networks.

Competition. The Competition (anti-trust) law of the EU is based on two principles: that businesses should not seek to nullify the creation of the common market by the erection of artificial national (or other) barriers to the free movement of goods; and that there should not be any abuse of dominant positions in any market. These two principles have led to the outlawing of prohibitions on exports to other member states, of price-fixing agreements and of refusal to supply; and to the refusal by the Commission to allow mergers or takeovers by dominant undertakings in specific cases.

Funds. There are two Structural Funds: the European Regional Development Fund (promoting economic and social cohesion through the reduction of imbalances between regions or social groups) and the European Social Fund (combating unemployment, developing human resources and promoting integration into the labour market). These Structural Funds along with the Cohesion Fund are the financial instruments of EU regional policy, which is intended to narrow the development disparities among regions and member states.

Finances. The budget (or Multiannual Financial Framework) for 2014–20 totals €960bn., representing a real terms cut of 3.3% on the 2007–13 budget (the first cut in EU history). The reduction, opposed by many members, was championed by major net-contributors including Finland, Germany, the Netherlands, Sweden and the UK.

Spending is divided under five broad headings: smart and inclusive growth (47%); sustainable growth: natural resources (39%); global Europe (6%); administration (6%); and security and citizenship (2%).

EU revenue in €1m.:

Customs duties	21,998.0
GNI-based own resource	99,075.6
VAT-based own resource	17,667.4
Miscellaneous	5,199.1
Total	143,940.1

Expenditure for 2014 was €142,497.0m., of which common agricultural policy spending accounted for €55,478.1m. (38.9% of the total).

The resources of the Community (the levies and duties mentioned above, and up to a 1.4% VAT charge) have been agreed by Treaty. The Budget is made by the Council and the Parliament acting jointly as the Budgetary Authority. The Parliament has control, within a certain margin, of non-obligatory expenditure (where the amount to be spent is not set out in the legislation concerned), and can also reject the Budget. Otherwise, the Council decides.

EU Institutions

European Commission

The European Commission consists of 28 members. The Commission President is selected by a consensus of member state heads of government and serves a five-year term. The Commission acts as the EU executive body and as guardian of the Treaties. In this it has the right of initiative (putting proposals to the Council of Ministers for action) and of execution (once the Council has decided). It can take the other institutions or individual countries before the European Court of Justice should any of these fail to comply with European Law. Decisions on legislative proposals made by the Commission are taken in the Council of the European Union. Members of the Commission swear an oath of independence, distancing themselves from partisan influence from any source. The Commission operates through 44 Directorates-General and services. As of Feb. 2016 there were also six executive agencies set up for fixed periods to manage EU programmes. They were: the Consumers, Health and Food Executive Agency (CHAFEA); the Education, Audiovisual and Culture Executive Agency (EACEA); the European Research Council Executive Agency (ERC Executive Agency); the Executive Agency for Small and Medium-sized Enterprises (EASME); the Innovation and Networks Executive Agency (INEA); and the Research Executive Agency (REA).

At the European Summit held in Nice in Dec. 2000 it was decided that from 2005 each EU member state would have one commissioner until the number of members reached 27 (which happened on 1 Jan. 2007). Under the terms of the Treaty of Lisbon, in 2014 the Commission was to comprise representatives from two-thirds of the member states on a rotating basis. However, in Dec. 2008 it was agreed that even if the Treaty of Lisbon entered force (which it did on 1 Dec. 2009), the principle of one commissioner per member state would be maintained. It was a position upheld by the European Council in May 2013 for the Commission that was to take office on 1 Nov. 2014.

The current Commission took office in Nov. 2014. Members, their nationality and political affiliation in their respective countries (S-Socialist/Social Democrat; C-Christian Democrat/Conservative; L-Liberal) in Feb. 2016 were as follows:

President: Jean-Claude Juncker (Luxembourg, C).

The commissioners are:

First vice-president: Frans Timmermans (Netherlands, S); responsible for better regulation, interinstitutional relations, the rule of law and the charter of fundamental rights.

Vice-president: Federica Mogherini (Italy, S); high representative of the Union for foreign affairs and security policy.

Vice-president: Kristalina Georgieva (Bulgaria, C); responsible for budget and human resources.

Vice-president: Andrus Ansip (Estonia, L); responsible for the digital single market.

Vice-president: Maroš Šefčovič (Slovakia, S); responsible for energy union.

Vice-president: Valdis Dombrovskis (Latvia, C); responsible for the euro and social dialogue.

Vice-president: Jyrki Katainen (Finland, C); responsible for jobs, growth, investment and competitiveness.

Agriculture and Rural Development: Phil Hogan (Ireland, C).

Climate Action and Energy: Miguel Arias Cañete (Spain, C).

Competition: Margrethe Vestager (Denmark, L).

Digital Economy and Society: Günther Oettinger (Germany, C).

Economic and Financial Affairs, Taxation and Customs: Pierre Moscovici (France, S).

Education, Culture, Youth and Sport: Tibor Navracsics (Hungary, C).

Employment, Social Affairs, Skills and Labour Mobility: Marianne Thyssen (Belgium, C).

Environment, Maritime Affairs and Fisheries: Karmenu Vella (Malta, S).

European Neighbourhood Policy and Enlargement Negotiations: Johannes Hahn (Austria, C).

Financial Stability, Financial Services and Capital Markets Union: Lord Jonathan Hill (UK, C).

Health and Food Safety: Vytenis Andriukaitis (Lithuania, S).

Humanitarian Aid and Crisis Management: Christos Stylianides (Cyprus, C).

Internal Market, Industry, Entrepreneurship and SMEs: Elżbieta Bieńkowska (Poland, C).

International Co-operation and Development: Neven Mimica (Croatia, S).

Justice, Consumers and Gender Equality: Věra Jourová (Czech Republic, L).

Migration, Home Affairs and Citizenship: Dimitris Avramopoulos (Greece, C).

Regional Policy: Corina Crețu (Romania, S).

Research, Science and Innovation: Carlos Moedas (Portugal, C).

Trade: Cecilia Malmström (Sweden, L).

Transport: Violeta Bulc (Slovenia, L).

Jean-Claude Juncker

Position

President

Introduction

On 15 July 2014 former Luxembourg premier Jean-Claude Juncker became the first elected president of the European Commission under provisions in the 2009 Treaty of Lisbon. He succeeded José Manuel Barroso when he took office on 1 Nov. 2014 and is scheduled to serve a five-year term.

Early Life

Juncker was born in Redange-sur-Attert in Luxembourg on 9 Dec. 1954. He studied law at the University of Strasbourg and was admitted to the Bar of Luxembourg in Feb. 1980. An active member of the Christian Social Party (CSV), he chaired its youth organization from 1979–84. Appointed state secretary for employment and social affairs in 1982, he was elected to parliament for the first time in 1984 and became minister of labour, social security and budget. When Luxembourg held the presidency of the European Community in 1985, Juncker chaired the council of ministers for social affairs and the budget.

In 1990 he was elected leader of the CSV. As president of the Council of the European Union's economic and financial affairs council in 1991, he was among the co-authors of the Treaty of Maastricht. He was a governor of the World Bank from 1989–95, and from 1995–2013 was the country's representative governor of the European Investment Bank and the International Monetary Fund.

In Jan. 1995 he was appointed prime minister. In Oct. 2000 his government oversaw the abdication of Grand Duke Jean in favour of his son, Prince Henri. Following his re-election in 2004, Juncker formed a coalition government with the Socialist Workers' Party (LSAP). From Jan.–June 2005 he headed Luxembourg's six-month presidency of the European Union. From 2005–13 he served as the permanent president of the Eurogroup of eurozone finance ministers. At the height of the 2008–09 financial crisis, he played a key role in drafting several national bailout packages.

In the June 2009 elections the CSV increased its representation in the Chamber of Deputies and Juncker began his fourth term as prime minister at the head of a CSV–LSAP coalition. On 11 July 2013 he resigned as prime minister and called for snap elections following claims of misconduct by the country's security agency, which the prime minister oversees. He remained head of a caretaker government until Dec. 2013 when he was succeeded by Xavier Bettel.

On 7 March 2014 Juncker was elected as the lead candidate of the European People's Party (EPP) for the presidency of the European Commission. The European Council approved his candidacy on 27 June, and on 15 July the European Parliament elected him with 422 votes from 729 cast.

Career in Office

A firm believer in European integration, Juncker has often been accused of being a 'federalist' by his eurosceptic critics. He has expressed willingness to discuss repatriating some powers back to member states, but stands firm on key treaty mainstays such as the free movement of people—a position at odds with British demands for reforms, which could potentially lead to the UK's exit from the EU after a referendum that was to be held on 23 June 2016.

To boost growth and employment across Europe, in Nov. 2014 he launched a €315bn. strategic investment scheme in partnership with the European Investment Bank. He also supports negotiations for an EU–US free trade treaty and advocates the creation of a digital single market. Although a champion of tax reform in the EU, Juncker has been plagued by claims that under his premiership Luxembourg turned into a major European centre of corporate tax avoidance.

In 2015 Juncker's Commission sought to develop a co-ordinated approach to managing the burgeoning refugee crisis generated by mass migration into the EU, particularly from Syria, Iraq, Kosovo, Albania and Afghanistan.

Statistical Office of the European Communities (Eurostat)

Eurostat is a directorate-general of the European Commission. Its mission is to provide the EU with a high-quality statistical service. It receives data collected according to uniform rules from the national statistical institutes of member states, then consolidates and harmonizes the data, before making them available to the public. The data are available from the Eurostat website.

Council of the European Union (Council of Ministers)

The Council of Ministers consists of ministers from the 28 national governments and is the only institution which directly represents the member states' national interests. It is the Union's principal decision-making body. Here, members legislate for the Union, set its political objectives, co-ordinate their national policies and resolve differences between themselves and other institutions. The presidency rotates every six months. The Netherlands had the presidency during the first half of 2016 and Slovakia has the presidency during the second half of 2016; Malta will have it during the first half of 2017 and the United Kingdom during the second half of 2017. The Netherlands, Slovakia and Malta are co-operating in a triple presidency over an 18-month period. There is only one Council, but it meets in different configurations depending on the items on the agenda. The meetings are held in Brussels, except in April, June and Oct. when all meetings are in Luxembourg. Around 100 formal ministerial sessions are held each year.

Decisions are taken either by qualified majority vote or by unanimity. Since the entry into force of the Single European Act in 1987 an increasing number of decisions are by majority vote, although some areas such as taxation and social security, immigration and border controls are reserved to unanimity. At the Nice Summit in Dec. 2000 agreement was reached that a further 39 articles of the EU's treaties would move to qualified majority voting. 26 votes were then needed to veto a decision (blocking minority), and member states were allocated the following number of votes: France, Germany, Italy and the UK, 10; Spain, 8; Belgium, Greece, the Netherlands and Portugal, 5; Austria and Sweden, 4; Denmark, Finland and the Republic of Ireland, 3; Luxembourg, 2. During a six-month transitional period that followed the accession of the ten new member states on 1 May 2004 these vote weightings remained unchanged, while the new members were allocated the following number of votes: Poland, 8; Czech Republic and Hungary, 5; Estonia, Latvia, Lithuania, Slovakia and Slovenia, 3; Cyprus and Malta, 2. When Bulgaria and Romania joined the EU on 1 Jan. 2007 the allocation of vote weightings became: France, Germany, Italy and the UK, 29; Poland and Spain, 27; Romania, 14; the Netherlands, 13; Belgium, the Czech Republic, Greece, Hungary and Portugal, 12; Austria, Bulgaria and Sweden, 10; Denmark, Finland, the Republic of Ireland, Lithuania and Slovakia, 7; Cyprus, Estonia, Latvia, Luxembourg and Slovenia, 4; Malta 3. After Croatia joined the EU on 1 July 2013, it received a vote weighting of seven while those for other members remained the same. Qualified majority voting was extended following the introduction of the Treaty of Lisbon. On 1 Nov. 2014 an amended procedure, the 'double majority' rule, was introduced. When the Council votes on a proposal by the Commission or the EU's High Representative for Foreign Affairs and Security Policy, a qualified majority is reached if 55% of EU countries vote in favour (16 out of 28) and the proposal is supported by countries representing at least 65% of the total EU population. When the Council votes on a proposal not made by the Commission or the High Representative, a decision is adopted if there are 72% of EU country votes in favour and they represent at least 65% of the EU population. Until 31 March 2017 any EU country may request that a decision be taken in accordance with the rules in force before 1 Nov. 2014 (a majority of member states, i.e. 15 out of 28, and a minimum of 260 votes out of the total 352 votes cast in favour). Each member state has a national delegation in Brussels known as the Permanent Representation, headed by Permanent Representatives, senior diplomats whose committee (Coreper) prepares ministerial sessions. Coreper meets weekly and its main task is to ensure that only the most difficult and sensitive issues are dealt with at ministerial level.

The General Secretariat of the Council provides the practical infrastructure of the Council at all levels and prepares the meetings of the Council and the European Council by advising the Presidency and assisting the Coreper and the various committees and working groups of the Council.

Legislation. The Community's legislative process starts with a proposal from the Commission (either at the suggestion of its services or in pursuit of its declared political aims) to the Council, or in the case of co-decision, to both the Council and the European Parliament. The Council generally seeks the views of the European Parliament on the proposal, and the Parliament adopts a formal Opinion after consideration of the matter by its specialist Committees. The Council may also (and in some cases is obliged to) consult the Economic and Social Committee and the Committee of the Regions which similarly deliver an opinion. When these opinions have been received, the Council will decide. Most decisions are taken on a majority basis, but will take account of reservations expressed by individual member states.

Provisions of the Treaties and secondary legislation may be either directly applicable in member states or only applicable after member states have enacted their own implementing legislation. Community law, adopted by the Council (or by Parliament and the Council in the framework of the co-decision procedure) may take the following forms: (1) Regulations, which are of general application and binding in their entirety and directly applicable in all member states; (2) Directives, which are binding upon each member state as to the result to be achieved within a given time, but leave to the national authorities the choice of form and method of achieving this result; and (3) Decisions, which are binding in their entirety on their addressees. In addition the Council and Commission can issue recommendations, opinions, resolutions and conclusions which are essentially political acts and not legally binding.

Transparency. In order to make its decision-making process more transparent to the European citizens, the Council has, together with the European Parliament and the Commission, introduced a set of rules concerning public access to the documents of the three institutions. A considerable number of Council documents can be accessed electronically via the Council's public register of documents, whereas other documents which may not be directly accessible can be released to the public upon request. With a view to ensure the widest possible access to its decision-making process, some Council debates and deliberations are open to the public.

The European Council

Since 1974 Heads of State or Government have met at least twice a year (until the end of 2002 in the capital of the member state currently exercising the presidency of the Council of the European Union, since 2003 primarily in Brussels) in the form of the European Council or European Summit as it is commonly known. Its membership includes the President of the European Commission, and the President of the European Parliament is invited to make a presentation at the opening session. The European Council has become an increasingly important element of the Union, setting priorities, giving political direction, providing the impetus for its development and resolving contentious issues that prove too difficult for the Council of the European Union. It has a direct role to play in the context of the Common Foreign and Security Policy (CFSP) when deciding upon common strategies, and at a more general level, when deciding upon the establishing of closer co-operation between member states within certain policy areas covered by the EU-treaties. Moreover, during recent years, the European Council has played a preponderant role in defining the general political guidelines within key policy areas with a bearing on growth and employment and in the context of the strengthening of the EU as an area of freedom, security and justice. With the entry into force of the Treaty of Lisbon on 1 Dec. 2009, it has become a full EU institution.

Donald Tusk

Position

President

Introduction

Donald Tusk, prime minister of Poland from 2007–14, became the European Union's president of the European Council on 1 Dec. 2014. Considered to be on the political centre-right, he is the first president from an eastern European member state.

Early Life

Donald Franciszek Tusk was born on 22 April 1957 in Gdańsk. He read history at the University of Gdańsk and, as a long-time critic of the communist administration, helped to establish the student committee of the Solidarity movement, which grew out of nationwide industrial unrest in 1980. He subsequently co-founded the Independent Polish Students' Association (NZS). Following the authorities' crackdown on Solidarity in 1981, Tusk and other activists were forced underground. He earned a living as a builder, an experience subsequently presented as evidence of his empathy with 'ordinary people'.

In the late 1980s Tusk left Solidarity for the nascent liberal movement and in 1991 joined the Liberal Democratic Congress (KLD), which contested the first multi-party elections in Oct. that year on a free-market platform of privatization, freedom of movement and accession to the EU. Tusk took one of the KLD's 37 seats in the Sejm. Although he was re-elected as a deputy in the 1993 elections, the KLD fared poorly and in March 1994 merged with the Democratic Union to form a new centre-right party, Freedom Union (UW). The UW secured 13.4% of the vote in the 1997 elections and became a junior partner in Jerzy Buzek's coalition government. Tusk was elected to the Senate and from 1998–2001 served as vice-speaker.

Having failed to win the chairmanship of the UW in 2000, Tusk resigned from the party and helped launch Civic Platform (PO) in early 2001, with Maciej Płażyński at the helm. The PO performed strongly in the 2001 elections, taking 65 seats in the Sejm and becoming the largest opposition party. In June 2003 Tusk became the PO's chairman. He was a vocal critic of the left-leaning SLD government, particularly its economic policies. Although Tusk's standing improved as the SLD became mired in corruption scandals, he failed in his 2005 bid for the presidency, losing to Lech Kaczyński of the Law and Justice Party. Later in 2005 the PO suffered further electoral defeat to Law and Justice, led by Jarosław Kaczyński (Lech's twin brother), who became prime minister.

Tusk remained leader of the PO and took a more aggressive approach in the run-up to the early election called for Oct. 2007, which followed the collapse of the Law and Justice-led coalition amid corruption allegations. He accused Kaczyński of incompetence on international relations and of failing to prevent the mass movement of Poles to Britain and Ireland in search of work. He campaigned to speed up privatization, lower taxes and reduce business bureaucracy to encourage investors. In parliamentary elections on 21 Oct. 2007 the PO emerged victorious and Tusk took office as prime minister in Nov.

Tusk pledged to create jobs and promote economic development by cutting bureaucracy and regulation. However, the global financial meltdown of 2008 undermined Poland's growth prospects and prompted the government to launch an economic stimulus programme and to negotiate a one-year US$20.6bn. credit line with the IMF, which was approved in May 2009.

On the international stage, Tusk oversaw the withdrawal in Oct. 2008 of Poland's last troops stationed in Iraq. Plans agreed in 2008 for Poland to host a controversial missile defence shield for the USA were abandoned in Sept. 2009 when the US president announced the scrapping of key elements of the system. Tusk nevertheless insisted that the USA and Poland would remain close allies. In July 2011 Poland assumed the EU's six-month rotating presidency for the first time since its accession in 2004.

In Oct. 2011 Tusk's PO was returned to power. However, having introduced unpopular fiscal measures in May 2012—including pension reform and increasing the retirement age—his administration lost ground in opinion polls to the opposition Law and Justice Party. In Oct. that year the government narrowly won a parliamentary vote of confidence after pledging US$95bn. in infrastructure and other investments to boost growth. In 2013 Tusk's administration survived further parliamentary confidence votes but anti-government sentiment continued over the unpopular fiscal measures.

Tusk was selected as the next president of the European Council in Aug. 2014, winning support from a number of EU leaders including the UK's David Cameron, and took office on 1 Dec. 2014, succeeding Herman Van Rompuy. He resigned as Polish prime minister on 9 Sept. 2014.

Career in Office

Working alongside European Commission president Jean-Claude Juncker and charged with priority-setting, mediation and chairing meetings of EU leaders, Tusk was faced by a number of critical challenges in 2015. These included the eurozone's stagnating economy, the EU's deteriorating relations with Russia over interference in Ukraine, the threat of a Greek exit from the European single currency (described by Tusk as an 'idiotic scenario'), controversial UK demands for EU institutional and sovereignty reform, and credible management of the migration crisis caused by the mass influx of refugees from beyond the EU's borders. Other issues on his agenda include forging a single EU market in digital services, a centralized 'energy union' and a free trade deal with the USA.

President: Donald Tusk (Poland).

European Parliament

The European Parliament consists of 751 members (up from 736 elected in 2009 before Croatia joined the European Union, but down from 766 prior to the May 2014 elections). All EU citizens may stand or vote in their adoptive country of residence. Germany returned 96 members in 2014 (and returned 99 in 2009), France 74 (72 in 2009), Italy and the UK 73 each (72 each in 2009), Spain 54 (50 in 2009), Poland 51 (50 in 2009), Romania 32 (33 in 2009), the Netherlands 26 (25 in 2009), Belgium, Czech Republic, Greece, Hungary and Portugal 21 each (22 each in 2009), Sweden 20 (18 in 2009), Austria 18 (17 in 2009), Bulgaria 17 (17 in 2009), Denmark, Finland and Slovakia 13 each (13 each in 2009), Croatia, Ireland and Lithuania 11 each (12 each for Ireland and Lithuania in 2009—Croatia only became a member of the European Union in 2013), Latvia and Slovenia 8 each (Latvia with 8 in 2009 and Slovenia with 7), Cyprus, Estonia, Luxembourg and Malta 6 each (6 each in 2009, apart from Malta with 5). Turnout declined from 62.0% at the first direct elections in 1979 to 43.0% in 2009, before rising for the first time in 2014 to 43.1%.

Political groupings. In Feb. 2016 the European People's Party (EPP) had 216 seats, Progressive Alliance of Socialists and Democrats (S&D) 190, European Conservatives and Reformists (ECR) 75, Alliance of Liberals and Democrats for Europe (ALDE) 70, European United Left/Nordic Green Left (GUE/NGL) 51, Greens/European Free Alliance (Greens/EFA) 50, Europe of Freedom and Direct Democracy (EFDD) 45, Europe of Nations and Freedom (ENF) 38, Non-attached members (NI) 15.

The Parliament has a right to be consulted on a wide range of legislative proposals and forms one arm of the Community's Budgetary Authority. Under the Single European Act, it gained greater authority in legislation through the 'concertation' procedure under which it can reject certain Council drafts in a second reading procedure. Under the Maastricht Treaty, it gained the right of 'co-decision' on legislation with the Council of Ministers on a restricted range of domestic matters. The President of the European Council must report to the Parliament on progress in the development of foreign and security policy. It also plays an important role in appointing the President and members of the Commission. It can hold individual commissioners to account and can pass a motion of censure on the entire Commission, a prospect that was realized in March 1999 when the Commission, including the President, Jacques Santer, was forced to resign following an investigation into mismanagement and corruption. Parliament's seat is in Strasbourg where the one-week plenary sessions are held each month. In the Chamber, members sit in political groups, not as national delegations. The other two main bodies are the Bureau—consisting of the President, 14 Vice-Presidents and five Quaestors (in a consultative capacity) elected for a two-and-a-half year period—which is responsible for budgetary and administration issues, and the Conference of Presidents, which is a governing body composed of the presidents of each of the parliament's political groups.

Location: Brussels, but meets once a month in Strasbourg.

President of the Court of Justice: Koen Lenaerts (Belgium).

President of the General Court: Marc Jaeger (Luxembourg).

President of the Civil Service Tribunal: Sean Van Raepenbusch (Belgium).

European Court of Auditors

The European Court of Auditors was established by a treaty of 22 July 1975 which took effect on 1 June 1977. It consists of 28 members (one from each member state) and was raised to the status of a full EU institution by the 1993 Maastricht Treaty. It audits the accounts and verifies the implementation of the budget of the EU.

Address: 12, rue Alcide De Gasperi, L-1615 Luxembourg.

President: Vítor Manuel da Silva Caldeira (Portugal).

European Central Bank

The European System of Central Banks (ESCB) is composed of the European Central Bank (ECB) and 28 National Central Banks (NCBs). The NCBs of the member states not participating in the euro area are members with special status; while they are allowed to conduct their respective national monetary policies, they do not take part in decision-making regarding the single monetary policy for the euro area and the implementation of these policies. The Governing Council of the ECB makes a distinction between the ESCB and the 'Eurosystem' which is composed of the ECB and the 19 fully participating NCBs.

Members. The 19 fully participating National Central Banks are from: Austria, Belgium, Cyprus, Estonia, Finland, France, Germany, Greece, Ireland, Italy, Latvia, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Malta, Netherlands, Portugal, Slovakia, Slovenia and Spain. The other nine EU members (those which do not use the euro as their currency) have special status.

Functions. The primary objective of the ESCB is to maintain price stability. Without prejudice to this, the ESCB supports general economic policies in the Community with a view to contributing to the achievement of the objectives of the Community. Tasks to be carried out include: i) defining and implementing the monetary policy of the Community; ii) conducting foreign exchange operations; iii) holding and managing the official foreign reserves of the participating member states; iv) promoting the smooth operation of payment systems; v) supporting the policies of the competent authorities relating to the prudential supervision of credit institutions and the stability of the financial system.

The ECB has the exclusive right to issue banknotes within the Community.

Organization. The ESCB is governed by the decision-making bodies of the ECB: the 25-member Governing Council and the Executive Board. The Governing Council is the supreme decision-making body and comprises all members of the Executive Board plus the governors of the NCBs forming the Eurosystem. The Executive Board comprises the president, vice-president and four other members, appointed by common accord of the heads of state and government of the participating member states. There is also a General Council which will exist while there remain members with special status.

Other EU Structures

European Investment Bank (EIB)

The EIB is the financing institution of the European Union, created by the Treaty of Rome in 1958 as an autonomous body set up to finance capital investment furthering European integration. To this end, the Bank raises its resources on the world's capital markets where it mobilizes significant volumes of funds on favourable terms. It directs these funds towards capital projects promoting EU economic policies. Outside the Union the EIB implements the financial components of agreements concluded under European Union development aid and co-operation policies. The members of the EIB are the member states of the European Union, who have all subscribed to the Bank's capital. Its governing body is its Board of Governors consisting of the ministers designated by each of the member states, usually the finance ministers.

Address: 98–100 Blvd Konrad Adenauer, L-2950 Luxembourg.

Advisory Bodies There are two main consultative committees whose members are appointed in a personal capacity and are not bound by any mandatory instruction.

1. European Economic and Social Committee. The 350-member committee is consulted by the Council of Ministers or by the European Commission, particularly with regard to agriculture, free movement of workers, harmonization of laws and transport. It is served by a permanent and independent General Secretariat, headed by a Secretary-General.

Address: Rue Belliard 99, B-1040 Brussels, Belgium.

Website: <http://www.eesc.europa.eu>

Secretary-General: Luis Planas Puchades (Spain).

2. Committee of the Regions. A political assembly which provides representatives of local, regional and city authorities with a voice at the heart of the European Union. Established by the Maastricht Treaty, the Committee consists of 350 full members and an equal number of alternates appointed for a four-year term. It must be consulted by the European Commission and Council of Ministers whenever legislative proposals are made in areas which have repercussions at the regional or local level. The Committee can also draw up opinions on its own initiative, which enables it to put issues on the EU agenda.

Council of Europe

Origin and Membership. In 1948 the Congress of Europe, bringing together at The Hague nearly 1,000 influential Europeans from 26 countries, called for the creation of a united Europe, including a European Assembly. This proposal, examined first by the Ministerial Council of the Brussels Treaty Organization, then by a conference of ambassadors, was at the origin of the Council of Europe, which is, with its 47 member States, the widest organization bringing together all European democracies. The Statute of the Council was signed at London on 5 May 1949 and came into force two months later.

The founder members were Belgium, Denmark, France, Ireland, Italy, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, Norway, Sweden and the UK. Turkey and Greece joined in 1949, Iceland in 1950, the Federal Republic of Germany in 1951 (having been an associate since 1950), Austria in 1956, Cyprus in 1961, Switzerland in 1963, Malta in 1965, Portugal in 1976, Spain in 1977, Liechtenstein in 1978, San Marino in 1988, Finland in 1989, Hungary in 1990, Czechoslovakia (after partitioning, the Czech Republic and Slovakia rejoined in 1993) and Poland in 1991, Bulgaria in 1992, Estonia, Lithuania, Romania and Slovenia in 1993, Andorra in 1994, Albania, Latvia, Macedonia, Moldova and Ukraine in 1995, Croatia and Russia in 1996, Georgia in 1999, Armenia and Azerbaijan in 2001, Bosnia and Herzegovina in 2002, Serbia in 2003 (as Serbia and Montenegro until 2006), Monaco in 2004 and Montenegro in 2007.

Membership is limited to European states which 'accept the principles of the rule of law and of the enjoyment by all persons within [their] jurisdiction of human rights and fundamental freedoms'. The Statute provides for both withdrawal (Article 7) and suspension (Articles 8 and 9). Greece withdrew during 1969–74.

Aims and Achievements. Article 1 of the Statute states that the Council's aim is 'to achieve a greater unity between its members for the purpose of safeguarding and realizing the ideals and principles which are their common heritage and facilitating their economic and social progress'; 'this aim shall be pursued ... by discussion of questions of common concern and by agreements and common action'. The only limitation is provided by Article 1 (d), which excludes 'matters relating to national defence'.

The main areas of the Council's activity are: human rights, the media, social and socio-economic questions, education, culture and sport, youth, public health, heritage and environment, local and regional government, and legal co-operation. As of Feb. 2016, 189 Conventions and Agreements had entered into force covering such matters as social security, cultural affairs, conservation of European wildlife and natural habitats, protection of archaeological heritage, extradition, medical treatment, equivalence of degrees and diplomas, the protection of television broadcasts, adoption of children, transportation of animals, cybercrime and the manipulation of sports competitions.

European Social Charter. The Charter defines the rights and principles which are the basis of the Council's social policy, and guarantees a number of social and economic rights to the citizen, including the right to work, the right to form workers' organizations, the right to social security and assistance, the right of the family to protection and the right of migrant workers to protection and assistance. Two committees, comprising independent and government experts, supervise the parties' compliance with their obligations under the Charter. A revised charter, incorporating new rights such as protection for those without jobs and opportunities for workers with family responsibilities, was opened for signature on 3 May 1996 and entered into force on 1 July 1999.

Human rights. The promotion and development of human rights is one of the major tasks of the Council of Europe. The European Convention on Human Rights, signed in 1950, set up special machinery to guarantee internationally fundamental rights and freedoms. The European Commission of Human Rights which was set up has now been abolished and has been replaced by the new European Court of Human Rights, which came into operation on 1 Nov. 1998. The European Court of Human Rights in Strasbourg, set up under the European Convention on Human Rights as amended, is composed of a number of judges equal to that of the Contracting States (currently 47). There is no restriction on the number of judges of the same nationality. Judges are elected by the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe for a term of six years. The terms of office of one half of the judges elected at the first election expired after three years, so as to ensure that the terms of office of one half of the judges are renewed every three years. Any Contracting State (State application) or individual claiming to be a victim of a violation of the Convention (individual application) may lodge directly with the Court in Strasbourg an application alleging a breach by a Contracting State of one of the Convention rights.

President of the European Court of Human Rights: Guido Raimondi (Italy).

The Development Bank, formerly the Social Development Fund, was created in 1956. The main purpose of the Bank is to give financial aid in the spheres of housing, vocational training, regional planning and development.

The European Youth Foundation provides money to subsidize activities by European youth organizations in their own countries.

Structure. Under the Statute, two organs were set up: an intergovernmental Committee of [Foreign] Ministers with powers of decision and recommendation to governments, and an interparliamentary deliberative body, the Parliamentary Assembly (referred to in the Statute as the Consultative Assembly)—both served by the Secretariat. A Joint Committee acts as an organ of co-ordination and liaison between the two and gives members an opportunity to exchange views on matters of important European interest. In addition, a number of committees of experts have been established. On municipal matters the Committee of Ministers receives recommendations from the Congress of Local and Regional Authorities of Europe. The Committee meets at ministerial level once a year; the ministers' deputies meet once a week. The chairmanship of the Committee is rotated on a six-monthly basis.

The Parliamentary Assembly consists of 318 parliamentarians elected or appointed by their national parliaments (Albania 4, Andorra 2, Armenia 4, Austria 6, Azerbaijan 6, Belgium 7, Bosnia and Herzegovina 5, Bulgaria 6, Croatia 5, Cyprus 3, the Czech Republic 7, Denmark 5, Estonia 3, Finland 5, France 18, Georgia 5, Germany 18, Greece 7, Hungary 7, Iceland 3, Ireland 4, Italy 18, Latvia 3, Liechtenstein 2, Lithuania 4, Luxembourg 3, Macedonia 3, Malta 3, Moldova 5, Monaco 2, Montenegro 3, Netherlands 7, Norway 5, Poland 12, Portugal 7, Romania 10, Russia 18, San Marino 2, Serbia 7, Slovakia 5, Slovenia 3, Spain 12, Sweden 6, Switzerland 6, Turkey 12, Ukraine 12, UK 18). It meets three times a year for approximately a week.

Although without legislative powers, the Assembly acts as the powerhouse of the Council, initiating European action in key areas by making recommendations to the Committee of Ministers. As the widest parliamentary forum in Western Europe, the Assembly also acts as the conscience of the area by voicing its opinions on important current issues. These are embodied in Resolutions. The Ministers' role is to translate the Assembly's recommendations into action, particularly as regards lowering the barriers between the European countries, harmonizing their legislation or introducing, where possible, common European laws, abolishing discrimination on grounds of nationality, and undertaking certain tasks on a joint European basis.

Organization for Security and Co-operation in Europe (OSCE)

The OSCE is a pan-European security organization of 57 participating states. It has been recognized under the UN Charter as a primary instrument in its region for early warning, conflict prevention, crisis management and post-conflict rehabilitation.

Origin. Initiatives from both NATO and the Warsaw Pact culminated in the first summit Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe (CSCE) attended by heads of state and government in Helsinki on 30 July–1 Aug. 1975. It adopted the Helsinki Final Act laying down ten principles governing the behaviour of States towards their citizens and each other, concerning human rights, self-determination and the interrelations of the participant states. The CSCE was to serve as a multilateral forum for dialogue and negotiations between East and West.

The Helsinki Final Act comprised three main sections: 1) politico-military aspects of security: principles guiding relations between and among participating States and military confidence-building measures; 2) co-operation in the fields of economics, science and technology and the environment; 3) co-operation in humanitarian and other fields.

From CSCE to OSCE. The Paris Summit of Nov. 1990 set the CSCE on a new course. In the Charter of Paris for a New Europe, the CSCE was called upon to contribute to managing the historic change in Europe and respond to the new challenges of the post-Cold War period. At the meeting, members of NATO and the Warsaw Pact signed an important Treaty on Conventional Armed Forces in Europe (CFE) and a declaration that they were 'no longer adversaries' and did not intend to 'use force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any state'. All 34 participants adopted the Vienna Document comprising Confidence and Security-Building Measures (CSBMs), which pertain to the exchange of military information, verification of military installations, objection to unusual military activities etc., and signed the Charter of Paris. The Charter sets out principles of human rights, democracy and the rule of law to which all the signatories undertake to adhere, and lays down the basis for East-West co-operation and other future action. The 1994 Budapest Summit recognized that the CSCE was no longer a conference and on 1 Jan. 1995 the CSCE changed its name to the Organization for Security and Co-operation in Europe (OSCE).

Members. Albania, Andorra, Armenia, Austria, Azerbaijan, Belarus, Belgium, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Bulgaria, Canada, Croatia, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Denmark, Estonia, Finland, France, Georgia, Germany, Greece, Holy See, Hungary, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Latvia, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Macedonia, Malta, Moldova, Monaco, Mongolia, Montenegro, Netherlands, Norway, Poland, Portugal, Romania, Russian Federation, San Marino, Serbia, Slovak Republic, Slovenia, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, Tajikistan, Turkey, Turkmenistan, Ukraine, UK, USA and Uzbekistan. Partners for co-operation: Afghanistan, Algeria, Australia, Egypt, Israel, Japan, Jordan, South Korea, Morocco, Thailand and Tunisia.

Organization. The OSCE's regular body for political consultation and decision-making is the Permanent Council. Its members, the Permanent Representatives of the OSCE participating States, meet weekly in the Hofburg Congress Center in Vienna to discuss and take decisions on all issues pertinent to the OSCE. The Forum for Security Co-operation (FSC), which deals with arms control and confidence- and security-building measures, also meets weekly in Vienna. Summits—periodic meetings of Heads of State or Government of OSCE participating States—set priorities and provide orientation at the highest political level. In the years between these summits, decision-making and governing power lies with the Ministerial Council, which is made up of the Foreign Ministers of the OSCE participating States. In addition, a Senior Council also meets once a year in special session as the Economic Forum. The Chairman-in-Office has overall responsibility for executive action and agenda-setting. The Chair rotates annually. The Secretary-General acts as representative of the Chairman-in-Office and manages OSCE structures and operations.

The Secretariat is based in Vienna and includes a Conflict Prevention Centre which provides operational support for OSCE field missions. There are some 400 staff employed in OSCE institutions, and about 1,000 professionals, seconded by OSCE-participating states, work at OSCE missions and other field operations, together with another 2,500 local staff.

The Office for Democratic Institutions and Human Rights is located in Warsaw. It is active in monitoring elections and developing national electoral and human rights institutions, providing technical assistance to national legal institutions, and promoting the development of the rule of law and civil society.

The Office of the Representative on Freedom of the Media is located in Vienna. Its main function is to observe relevant media developments in OSCE participating States with a view to providing an early warning on violations of freedom of expression.

The Office of the High Commissioner on National Minorities is located in The Hague. Its function is to identify and seek early resolution of ethnic tensions that might endanger peace, stability or friendly relations between the participating States of the OSCE.

The budget for 2012 was €148.1m.

European Bank for Reconstruction and Development (EBRD)

History. The European Bank for Reconstruction and Development was established in 1991 when communism was collapsing in central and eastern Europe and ex-Soviet countries needed support to nurture a new private sector in a democratic environment.

Activities. The EBRD is the largest single investor in the region and mobilizes significant foreign direct investment beyond its own financing. It is owned by 64 countries and two intergovernmental institutions. But despite its public sector shareholders, it invests mainly in private enterprises, usually together with commercial partners. Today the EBRD uses the tools of investment to help build market economies and democracies in 30 countries from Central Europe to Central Asia.

It provides project financing for banks, industries and businesses, for both new ventures and investments in existing companies. It also works with publicly-owned companies, to support privatization, restructuring of state-owned firms and improvement of municipal services. The EBRD uses its close relationship with governments in the region to promote policies that will bolster the business environment. Respect for the environment is part of the strong corporate governance attached to all EBRD investments.

Organization. All the powers of the EBRD are vested in a Board of Governors, to which each member appoints a governor, generally the minister of finance or an equivalent. The Board of Governors delegates powers to the Board of Directors, which is responsible for the direction of the EBRD's general operations and policies. The President is elected by the Board of Governors and is the legal representative of the EBRD. The President conducts the current business of the Bank under the guidance of the Board of Directors.

European Free Trade Association (EFTA)

History and Membership. The Stockholm Convention establishing the Association was signed on 4 Jan. 1960 and entered into force on 3 May 1960. Founder members were Austria, Denmark, Norway, Portugal, Sweden, Switzerland and the UK. With the accession of Austria, Denmark, Finland, Portugal, Sweden and the UK to the EU, EFTA was reduced to four member countries: Iceland, Liechtenstein, Norway and Switzerland. In June 2001 the Vaduz Convention was signed. It liberalizes trade further among the four EFTA States in order to reflect the Swiss–EU bilateral agreements.

Activities. Free trade in industrial goods among EFTA members was achieved by 1966. Co-operation with the EU began in 1972 with the signing of free trade agreements and culminated in the establishment of a European Economic Area (EEA), encompassing the free movement of goods, services, capital and labour throughout EFTA and the EU member countries. The Agreement was signed by all members of the EU and EFTA on 2 May 1992, but was rejected by Switzerland in a referendum on 6 Dec. 1992. The agreement came into force on 1 Jan. 1994.

The main provisions of the EEA Agreement are: free movement of products within the EEA from 1993 (with special arrangements to cover food, energy, coal and steel); EFTA to assume EU rules on company law, consumer protection, education, the environment, research and development, and social policy; EFTA to adopt EU competition rules on anti-trust matters, abuse of a dominant position, public procurement, mergers and state aid; EFTA to create an EFTA Surveillance Authority and an EFTA Court; individuals to be free to live, work and offer services throughout the EEA, with mutual recognition of professional qualifications; capital movements to be free with some restrictions on investments; EFTA countries not to be bound by the Common Agricultural Policy (CAP) or Common Fisheries Policy (CFP).

The EEA-EFTA states have established a Surveillance Authority and a Court to ensure implementation of the Agreement among the EFTA-EEA states. Political direction is given by the EEA Council which meets twice a year at ministerial level, while ongoing operation of the Agreement is overseen by the EEA Joint Committee. Legislative power remains with national governments and parliaments.

EFTA has formal relations with several other states. Free trade agreements have been signed with Turkey (1991), Israel and Czechoslovakia (1992, with protocols on succession with the Czech Republic and Slovakia in 1993), Poland and Romania (1992), Bulgaria and Hungary (1993), Estonia, Latvia, Lithuania and Slovenia (1995), Morocco (1997), the Palestine Liberation Organization on behalf of the Palestinian Authority (1998), the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia and Mexico (2000), Jordan and Croatia (2001), Singapore (2002), Chile (2003), Lebanon and Tunisia (2004), South Korea (2005), the Southern African Customs Union (2006), Egypt (2007), Canada and Colombia (2008), Albania, the Gulf Co-operation Council and Serbia (2009), Peru and Ukraine (2010), Hong Kong and Montenegro (2011), Bosnia and Herzegovina and Central American States (Costa Rica and Panama) (2013), and Central American States (Guatemala) (2015). Agreements with the countries that have joined the European Union in the meantime have been replaced by the relevant arrangements between the EFTA states and the EU. Negotiations on free trade agreements are ongoing with Algeria, Central American States (Honduras), Georgia, India, Indonesia, Malaysia, the Philippines, Russia, Belarus and Kazakhstan (although as at Feb. 2016 negotiations with these three countries were on hold), Thailand and Vietnam. There are currently Joint Declarations on Co-operation with Mercosur (2000), Mongolia (2007), Mauritius (2009), Pakistan (2012), Myanmar (2013) and Ecuador (2015).

Organization. The operation of the free trade area among the EFTA states is the responsibility of the EFTA Council which meets regularly at ambassadorial level in Geneva. The Council is assisted by a Secretariat and standing committees. Each EFTA country holds the chairmanship of the Council for six months. For EEA matters there is a separate committee structure.

European Space Agency (ESA)

History. Established in 1975, replacing the European Space Research Organization (ESRO) and the European Launcher Development Organization (ELDO).

Members. Austria, Belgium, Czech Republic, Denmark, Estonia, Finland, France, Germany, Greece, Hungary, Ireland, Italy, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, Norway, Poland, Portugal, Romania, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, United Kingdom. Canada takes part in some projects under a co-operation agreement.

Activities. ESA is the intergovernmental agency in Europe responsible for the exploitation of space science, research and technology for exclusively peaceful purposes. Its aim is to define and put into effect a long-term European space policy that allows Europe to remain competitive in the field of space technology. It has a policy of co-operation with various partners on the basis that pooling resources and sharing work will boost the effectiveness of its programmes. Its space plan covers the fields of science, Earth observation, telecommunications, navigation, space segment technologies, ground infrastructures, space transport systems and microgravity research.

CERN – The European Organization for Nuclear Research

Founded in 1954, CERN is the world's leading particle physics research centre. By studying the behaviour of nature's fundamental particles, CERN aims to find out what our Universe is made of and how it works. CERN's biggest accelerator, the Large Hadron Collider (LHC), became operational in Sept. 2008. One of the beneficial byproducts of CERN activity is the Worldwide Web, developed at CERN to give particle physicists easy access to shared data. One of Europe's first joint ventures, CERN now has a membership of 21 member states: Austria, Belgium, Bulgaria, Czech Republic, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Greece, Hungary, Israel, Italy, the Netherlands, Norway, Poland, Portugal, Slovak Republic, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, United Kingdom. Some 6,500 scientists, half of the world's particle physicists, use CERN's facilities. They represent 500 institutions and 85 nationalities.

Council of the Baltic Sea States

Established in 1992 in Copenhagen following a conference of ministers of foreign affairs.

Members. Denmark, Estonia, Finland, Germany, Iceland, Latvia, Lithuania, Norway, Poland, Russia, Sweden and the European Commission.

Aims. To promote co-operation in the Baltic Sea region in the field of trade, investment and economic exchanges, combating organized crime, civil security, culture and education, transport and communication, energy and environment, human rights and assistance to democratic institutions.

The Council meets at ministerial level once a year, chaired by rotating foreign ministers; it is the supreme decision-making body. Between annual sessions the Committee of Senior Officials and three working groups meet at regular intervals. In 1999 ministers of energy of the CBSS member states agreed to achieve the goal of creating effective, economically and environmentally sound and more integrated energy systems in the Baltic Sea region. Ten summits at the level of heads of government of CBSS member states and the President of the European Commission have taken place; in 1996 and then every other year since up to and including 2014. The Baltic Sea Region Energy Cooperation (BASREC) is made up of energy ministers from the region and is chaired by the energy minister from the chair country of the CBSS.

Danube Commission

History and Membership. The Danube Commission was constituted in 1949 according to the Convention regarding the regime of navigation on the Danube signed in Belgrade on 18 Aug. 1948. The Belgrade Convention, amended by the Additional Protocol of 26 March 1998, declares that navigation on the Danube from Kelheim to the Black Sea (with access to the sea through the Sulina arm and the Sulina Canal) is equally free and open to the nationals, merchant shipping and merchandise of all states as to harbour and navigation fees as well as conditions of merchant navigation. The Commission holds annual sessions and is composed of one representative from each of its 11 member countries: Austria, Bulgaria, Croatia, Germany, Hungary, Moldova, Romania, Russia, Serbia, Slovakia and Ukraine.

Functions. To ensure that the provisions of the Belgrade Convention are carried out; to establish a uniform buoying system on all navigable waterways; to establish the basic regulations for navigation on the river and ensure facilities for shipping; to coordinate the regulations for river, customs and sanitation control as well as the hydrometeorological service; to collect relevant statistical data concerning navigation on the Danube; to propose measures for the prevention of pollution of the Danube caused by navigation; and to update its recommendations regularly with a view to bringing them in line with European Union regulations on inland waterway navigation.

Alliance of Small Island States (AOSIS)

The Alliance of Small Island States was established in 1990 by a coalition of small island and low-lying coastal nations. It seeks to co-ordinate members' lobbying efforts within the United Nations system in relation to the environmental and developmental challenges facing them—especially the adverse effects of climate change.

Organization. The AOSIS has no formal charter or permanent secretariat. However, there is a Bureau, made up of the chairperson and two vice-chairs, appointed from the UN Permanent Representatives of countries from each of the organization's three regional groupings (the Caribbean; the Pacific; and Africa, Indian Ocean, Mediterranean and South China Sea).

Members. As of Feb. 2016 AOSIS comprised 37 nation states (plus the New Zealand dependencies of the Cook Islands and Niue): Antigua and Barbuda, Bahamas, Barbados, Belize, Cabo Verde, Comoros, Cuba, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Fiji, Federated States of Micronesia, Grenada, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Jamaica, Kiribati, Maldives, Marshall Islands, Mauritius, Nauru, Palau, Papua New Guinea, St Kitts and Nevis, St Lucia, St Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Singapore, Seychelles, São Tomé e Príncipe, Solomon Islands, Suriname, Timor-Leste, Tonga, Trinidad and Tobago, Tuvalu and Vanuatu. A further five non-sovereign territories have observer status.

Amnesty International (AI)

Origin. Founded in 1961 by British lawyer Peter Benenson as a one-year campaign for the release of prisoners of conscience, Amnesty International has grown to become a worldwide organization, winning the Nobel Peace Prize in 1977.

Activities. AI is a worldwide movement of people campaigning for human rights. It acts independently and impartially to promote respect for internationally recognized human rights standards.

Historically, the focus of AI's campaigning has been: to free all prisoners of conscience (a term coined by Peter Benenson); to ensure a prompt and fair trial for all political prisoners; to abolish the death penalty, torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading punishments; to end extrajudicial executions and 'disappearances'; to fight impunity by working to ensure perpetrators of such abuses are brought to justice. AI is independent of any government or political ideology, and neither supports nor opposes the views of the victim it seeks to protect.

AI has over 3m. members, subscribers and regular donors in more than 150 countries. Major policy decisions are taken by an International Council comprising representatives from all national sections. AI's national sections, members and supporters are primarily responsible for funding the movement. In 2012 the Amnesty International movement's total income was £225,340,000.

Every year AI produces a global report detailing human rights violations in all regions of the world.

Commonwealth

The Commonwealth is a free association of sovereign independent states. It numbered 53 members in Feb. 2016. With a membership of over 2bn. people, it represents around 30% of the world's population. There is no charter, treaty or constitution; the association is expressed in co-operation, consultation and mutual assistance for which the Commonwealth Secretariat is the central co-ordinating body.

Origin. The Commonwealth was first defined by the Imperial Conference of 1926 as a group of 'autonomous Communities within the British Empire, equal in status, in no way subordinate one to another in any aspect of their domestic or external affairs, though united by a common allegiance to the Crown, and freely associated as members of the British Commonwealth of Nations'. The basis of the association changed from one owing allegiance to a common Crown, and the modern Commonwealth was born in 1949 when the member countries accepted India's intention of becoming a republic at the same time as continuing 'her full membership of the Commonwealth of Nations and her acceptance of the King as the symbol of the free association of its independent member nations and as such the Head of the Commonwealth'. In Feb. 2016 the Commonwealth consisted of 32 republics and 21 monarchies, of which 16 are Queen's realms. All acknowledge the Queen symbolically as Head of the Commonwealth. The Queen's legal title rests on the statute of 12 and 13 Will. III, c. 3, by which the succession to the Crown of Great Britain and Ireland was settled on the Princess Sophia of Hanover and the 'heirs of her body being Protestants'.

A number of territories, formerly under British jurisdiction or mandate, did not join the Commonwealth: Egypt, Iraq, Transjordan, Myanmar (then Burma), Palestine, Sudan, British Somaliland and Aden. Six countries, Ireland in 1948, South Africa in 1961, Pakistan in 1972, Fiji in 1987, Zimbabwe in 2003 and the Gambia in 2013 have left the Commonwealth. Pakistan was readmitted to the Commonwealth in 1989, South Africa in 1994, Fiji in 1997. Nigeria was fully suspended in 1995 for violation of human rights but was fully reinstated on 29 May 1999. Pakistan was suspended from the Commonwealth's councils following a coup in Oct. 1999 but was readmitted in May 2004. It was again suspended in Nov. 2007 after President Musharraf declared emergency rule but was readmitted in May 2008. Fiji was suspended from the Commonwealth's councils in June 2000 following a coup there but was readmitted in Dec. 2001 following the restoration of democracy. They were again suspended from the councils following the coup of Dec. 2006 and fully suspended from membership in Sept. 2009, before being readmitted in Sept. 2014 following the first parliamentary elections in more than eight years. Zimbabwe was suspended from the Commonwealth's councils for a year on 19 March 2002 for a 'high level of politically motivated violence' during the vote that saw President Robert Mugabe re-elected. In March 2003 it was suspended for a further nine months. The suspension was extended at the Abuja meeting in Dec. 2003. Mugabe responded by withdrawing Zimbabwe from the Commonwealth. Mozambique, admitted in Nov. 1995, was the first member state not to have been a member of the former British Commonwealth or Empire.

⁷Left 1961, rejoined 1994.

Aims and Conditions of Membership. Membership involves acceptance of certain core principles, as set out in the Harare Declaration of 1991, and is subject to the approval of other member states. The Harare Declaration charted a course to take the Commonwealth into the 21st century affirming members' continued commitment to the Singapore Declaration of 1971, by which members committed themselves to the pursuit of world peace and support of the UN.

The core principles defined by the Harare Declaration are: political democracy, human rights, good governance and the rule of law, and the protection of the environment through sustainable development. Commitment to these principles was made binding as a condition of membership at the 1993 Heads of Government meeting in Cyprus.

The Millbrook Action Programme of 1995 aims to support countries in implementing the Harare Declaration, providing assistance in constitutional and judicial matters, running elections, training and technical advice. Violations of the Harare Declaration will provoke a series of measures by the Commonwealth Secretariat, including: expression of disapproval, encouragement of bilateral actions by member states, appointment of fact-finders and mediators, stipulation of a period for the restoration of democracy, exclusion from ministerial meetings, suspension of all participation and aid and finally punitive measures including trade sanctions. A nine-member Commonwealth Ministerial Action Group on the Harare Declaration (CMAG) may be convened by the Secretary-General as and when necessary to deal with violations. The Group held its first meeting in Dec. 1995. Its terms of reference are as set out in the Millbrook Action Programme.

The Commonwealth Parliamentary Association was founded in 1911. As defined by its constitution, its objectives are to 'promote knowledge of the constitutional, legislative, economic, social and cultural aspects of parliamentary democracy'. Its principal governing body is the General Assembly, which meets annually during the Commonwealth Parliamentary Conference and is composed of members attending that Conference as delegates. The Association elects a 35-member Executive Committee, which controls and manages the activities and business of the Association.

Commonwealth Secretariat. The Commonwealth Secretariat is an international body at the service of all 53 member countries. It provides the central organization for joint consultation and co-operation in many fields. It was established in 1965 by Commonwealth Heads of Government as a 'visible symbol of the spirit of co-operation which animates the Commonwealth', and has observer status at the UN General Assembly.

The Secretariat disseminates information on matters of common concern, organizes and services meetings and conferences, coordinates many Commonwealth activities, and provides expert technical assistance for economic and social development through the multilateral Commonwealth Fund for Technical Co-operation. The Secretariat is organized in divisions and sections which correspond to its main areas of operation: political affairs, economic affairs, human rights, gender affairs, youth affairs, education, information, law, health and a range of technical assistance and advisory services.

Commonwealth Heads of Government Meetings (CHOGMs). Outside the UN, the CHOGM remains the largest inter-governmental conference in the world. Meetings are held every two years. The 2002 CHOGM in Coolom, Australia, scheduled for Oct. 2001 but postponed following the attacks on the United States of 11 Sept. 2001, was dominated by the Zimbabwe issue, as was the meeting held in Abuja, Nigeria in Dec. 2003. The last meeting was held in Nov. 2015 in Malta. The next CHOGM is scheduled to be held in the United Kingdom in 2018. A host of Commonwealth organizations and agencies are dedicated to enhancing inter-Commonwealth relations and the development of the potential of Commonwealth citizens. They are listed in the Commonwealth Yearbook, which is published by the Secretariat.

Commonwealth Day is celebrated on the second Monday in March each year. The theme for 2016 was 'An Inclusive Commonwealth'.

Overseas Territories and Associated States. There are 14 United Kingdom overseas territories (see pages 1284–1300), seven Australian external territories (see pages 155–8), two New Zealand dependent territories and two New Zealand associated states (see pages 897–8). A dependent territory is a territory belonging by settlement, conquest or annexation to the British, Australian or New Zealand Crown.

United Kingdom Overseas Territories administered through the Foreign and Commonwealth Office comprise, in the Indian Ocean: British Indian Ocean Territory; in the Mediterranean: Gibraltar, the Sovereign Base Areas of Akrotiri and Dhekelia in Cyprus; in the Atlantic Ocean: Bermuda, Falkland Islands, South Georgia and South Sandwich Islands, British Antarctic Territory, St Helena and Dependencies (Ascension and Tristan da Cunha); in the Caribbean: Montserrat, British Virgin Islands, Cayman Islands, Turks and Caicos Islands, Anguilla; in the Western Pacific: Pitcairn Group of Islands.

The Australian external territories are: Ashmore and Cartier Islands, Australian Antarctic Territory, Christmas Island, Cocos (Keeling) Islands, Coral Sea Islands, Heard and McDonald Islands, and Norfolk Island. The New Zealand external territories are: Tokelau Islands and the Ross Dependency. The New Zealand associated states are: Cook Islands and Niue.

Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS)

The Commonwealth of Independent States, founded on 8 Dec. 1991 in Belarus, is a community of independent states that proclaimed itself the successor to the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics (USSR) in some aspects of international law and affairs. When negotiations on its founding began in 1990, it sought to embrace all the 15 constituent republics of the USSR at that date. The founding members—Russia, Belarus and Ukraine—were subsequently joined by Armenia, Azerbaijan, Georgia, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Moldova, Tajikistan, Turkmenistan and Uzbekistan. However, Turkmenistan withdrew as a permanent member in 2005 to become an associate member and Georgia withdrew altogether in 2009.

Member states are committed to recognizing the independence and sovereignty of other members, to respecting human rights including those of national minorities and to observing existing boundaries. Members agreed that Russia should take up the seat at the United Nations formerly occupied by the USSR. In March 1994 the CIS was accorded observer status at the UN. Ukraine's continued involvement with the CIS (as a participating state rather than as a full member) has been thrown into doubt after Russia's annexation of Crimea in March 2014, with some politicians calling for a complete withdrawal.

The principal organs of the CIS, according to the agreement concluded in Alma-Ata on 21 Dec. 1991, are the Council of Heads of States and the Council of Heads of Government. There is also a Council of Defence Ministers, established in Feb. 1992, and a Council of Foreign Ministers (Dec. 1993). The Secretariat is the standing working organ.

Eurasian Economic Union (EEU)

The EEU came into being on 1 Jan. 2015 as the successor organization to the Eurasian Economic Community (EurAsEC, founded in 2000). It was established by treaty in May 2014 and provides for the free movement of goods, services, capital and labour across member states.

Membership. As of Feb. 2016 there were five member states: Armenia, Belarus, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan and Russia.

Organization. The Supreme Council is the highest authority, consisting of the heads of state of the members. There is also an Intergovernmental Council, made up of the heads of government. The Eurasian Economic Commission serves as the permanent regulatory body, charged with supporting the operation and development of the Union and drafting proposals for economic integration. The Court of the EEU seeks to ensure the uniform application of all relevant treaties.

International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC)

The International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) is a Swiss-based impartial, neutral and independent organization ensuring humanitarian protection and assistance for victims of war and other situations of violence.

Established in 1863, the ICRC is a founding member of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement and of international humanitarian law, notably the Geneva Conventions.

The ICRC is mandated by the international community to be the guardian and promoter of international humanitarian law. It has a permanent mandate under international law to take impartial action for prisoners, the wounded and sick, and civilians affected by conflict.

The ICRC aims to ensure that civilians not taking part in hostilities are spared and protected; to visit prisoners of war and security detainees and ensure that they are treated humanely and according to recognized international standards that forbid torture and other forms of abuse; to transmit messages to and reunite family members separated by armed conflict; to help find missing persons; to offer or facilitate access to basic health care facilities; to provide food, safe drinking water, sanitation and shelter in emergencies; to promote respect for, monitor compliance with and contribute to the development of international humanitarian law; to help reduce the impact of mines and explosive remnants of war on people; and to support national Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies to prepare for and respond to armed conflict and situations of violence.

The ICRC is a global presence with offices in over 80 countries and some 12,000 staff worldwide. Its HQ is in Geneva, Switzerland.

International Criminal Court (ICC)

Origin. As far back as 1946 an international congress called for the adoption of an international criminal code prohibiting crimes against humanity and the prompt establishment of an international criminal court, but for more than 40 years little progress was made. In 1989 the end of the Cold War brought a dramatic increase in the number of UN peacekeeping operations and a world where the idea of establishing an International Criminal Court became more viable. The United Nations Conference of Plenipotentiaries on the Establishment of an International Criminal Court took place from 15 June–17 July 1998 in Rome, Italy.

Aims and Activities. The International Criminal Court is a permanent court for trying individuals who have been accused of committing genocide, war crimes and crimes against humanity, and is thus a successor to the ad hoc tribunals set up by the UN Security Council to try those responsible for atrocities in the former Yugoslavia and Rwanda. Ratification by 60 countries was required to bring the statute into effect. The court began operations on 1 July 2002 with 139 signatories and after ratification by 76 countries. By Feb. 2016 the number of ratifications had increased to 123. Its first trial, with Thomas Lubanga facing war crimes charges for his role in the Democratic Republic of the Congo's civil war, opened on 26 Jan. 2009 and was not concluded until 14 March 2012. Lubanga was found guilty of conscripting and enlisting children under the age of 15 and using them to participate in hostilities.

Judges. The International Criminal Court's first 18 judges were elected in Feb. 2003, with six serving for three years, six for six years and six for nine years. Every three years six new judges are elected. At present the 18 judges, with the year in which their term of office is scheduled to end, are: Joyce Aluoch (Kenya, 2018); Chung Chang-ho (South Korea, 2024); Chile Eboe-Osuji (Nigeria, 2021); Silvia Fernández de Gurmendi (Argentina, 2018); Robert Fremr (Czech Republic, 2021); Geoffrey A. Henderson (Trinidad and Tobago, 2021); Olga Venecia Herrera Carbuccion (Dominican Republic, 2021); Piotr Hofmański (Poland, 2024); Péter Kovács (Hungary, 2024); Antoine Kesia-Mbe Mindua (Democratic Republic of the Congo, 2024); Sanji Mmasenono Monageng (Botswana, 2018); Howard Morrison (United Kingdom, 2021); Kuniko Ozaki (Japan, 2018); Raul Pangalangan (Philippines, 2021); Marc Pierre Perrin de Brichambaut (France, 2024); Bertram Schmitt (Germany, 2024); Cuno Tarfusser (Italy, 2018); Christine Van Den Wyngaert (Belgium, 2018).

Prosecutor. Fatou Bensouda (Gambia) was unanimously elected the second prosecutor of the Court on 12 Dec. 2011 and succeeded Luis Moreno-Ocampo (Argentina) on 16 June 2012.

International Institute for Democracy and Electoral Assistance (IDEA)

Created in 1995, International IDEA is an intergovernmental organization that supports sustainable democratic change through providing comparative knowledge, assisting in democratic reform, and influencing policies and politics. International IDEA focuses on the ability of democratic institutions to deliver a political system marked by public participation and inclusion, representative and accountable government, responsiveness to citizens' needs and aspirations, and the rule of law and equal rights for all citizens.

Aims and Activities. International IDEA undertakes work through three activity areas: providing comparative knowledge derived from practical experience on democracy-building processes—elections and referendums, constitutions, political parties, women's political empowerment and democracy self-assessments—from diverse contexts around the world; assisting political actors in reforming democratic institutions and processes, and engaging in political processes when invited to do so; influencing democracy-building policies and assistance to political actors.

Membership. International IDEA had 28 full member states and one observer state in Feb. 2016.

Organization. International IDEA has regional operations in Latin America, Africa, the Middle East, Asia and the Pacific, and has a staff of over 70 worldwide.

International Mobile Satellite Organization (IMSO)

Founded in 1979 as the International Maritime Satellite Organization (Inmarsat) to establish a satellite system to improve maritime communications for distress and safety and commercial applications. Its competence was subsequently expanded to include aeronautical and land mobile communications. Privatization, which was completed in April 1999, transferred the business to a newly created company and the Organization remains as a regulator to ensure that the company fulfils its public services obligations. The company has taken the Inmarsat name and the Organization uses the acronym IMSO. In Feb. 2016 the Organization had 101 member parties.

International Olympic Committee (IOC)

Founded in 1894 by French educator Baron Pierre de Coubertin, the International Olympic Committee is an international non-governmental, non-profit organization whose members act as the IOC's representatives in their respective countries, not as delegates of their countries within the IOC. The Committee's main responsibility is to supervise the organization of the summer and winter Olympic Games. It owns all rights to the Olympic symbols, flag, motto, anthem and Olympic Games.

Aims. 'To contribute to building a peaceful and better world by educating youth through sport, practised without discrimination of any kind and in the Olympic Spirit, which requires mutual understanding with a spirit of friendship, solidarity and fair play.'

Finances. The IOC receives no public funding. Its only source of funding is from private sectors, with the substantial part of these revenues coming from television broadcasters and sponsors.

International Organization for Standardization (ISO)

Established in 1947, the International Organization for Standardization is a non-governmental federation of national standards bodies from 161 countries worldwide, one from each country. ISO's work results in international agreements which are published as International Standards. The first ISO standard was published in 1951 with the title 'Standard reference temperature for industrial length measurement'.

Some 19,500 ISO International Standards are available on subjects in such diverse fields as information technology, textiles, packaging, distribution of goods, energy production and utilization, building, banking and financial services. ISO standardization activities include the widely recognized ISO 9000 family of quality management system and standards and the ISO 14000 series of environmental management system standards. Standardization programmes are now being developed in completely new fields, such as food safety, security, social responsibility and the service sector.

Mission. To promote the development of standardization and related activities in the world with a view to facilitating the international exchange of goods and services, and to developing co-operation in the spheres of intellectual, scientific, technological and economic activity.

International Road Federation (IRF)

The IRF is a non-profit, non-political service organization whose purpose is to encourage better road and transportation systems worldwide and to help apply technology and management practices to give maximum economic and social returns from national road investments.

Founded following the Second World War, over the years the IRF has led major global road infrastructure developments, including achieving 1,000 km of new roads in Mexico in the 1950s, and promoting the Pan-American Highway linking North and South America. The IRF works together with members and associates in 118 countries, promoting social and economic benefits that flow from well planned and environmentally sound road transport networks. It publishes World Road Statistics, covering over 200 countries and territories.

International Seabed Authority (ISA)

The ISA is an autonomous international organization established under the UN Convention on the Law of the Sea (UNCLOS) of 1982 and the 1994 Agreement relating to the implementation of Part XI of the UNCLOS. It came into existence on 16 Nov. 1994 and became fully operational in June 1996.

The administrative expenses are met from assessed contributions from its members. Membership numbered 167 in Feb. 2016; the budget for the biennium 2015–16 was US$15,743,143.

The UNCLOS covers almost all ocean space and its uses: navigation and overflight, resource exploration and exploitation, conservation and pollution, fishing and shipping. It entitles coastal states and inhabitable islands to proclaim a 12-mile territorial sea, a contiguous zone, a 200-mile exclusive economic zone and an extended continental shelf (in some cases). Its 320 Articles and nine Annexes constitute a guide for behaviour by states in the world's oceans, defining maritime zones, laying down rules for drawing sea boundaries, assigning legal rights, duties and responsibilities to States, and providing machinery for the settlement of disputes.

Organization. The Assembly, consisting of representatives from all member states, is the supreme organ. The 36-member Council, elected by the Assembly, includes the four largest importers or consumers of seabed minerals, four largest investors in seabed minerals, four major exporters of the same, six developing countries representing special interests and 18 members from all the geographical regions. The Council is the executive organ of the Authority. There are also two subsidiary bodies: the Legal and Technical Commission (currently 24 experts) and the Finance Committee (currently 15 experts). The Secretariat serves all the bodies of the Authority and under the 1994 Agreement is performing functions of the Enterprise (until such time as it starts to operate independently of the Secretariat). The Enterprise is the organ through which the ISA carries out deep seabed activities directly or through joint ventures.

Activities. In July 2000 the ISA adopted the Regulations for Prospecting and Exploration for Polymetallic Nodules in the Area. Pursuant thereto, it signed exploration contracts with eight contractors who have submitted plans of work for deep seabed exploration. These are: Institut Français de Recherche pour l'Exploitation de la Mer (IFREMER) and Association Française pour l'Etude de la Recherche des Nodules (AFERNOD), France; Deep Ocean Resources Development Co. Ltd (DORD), Japan; State Enterprise Yuzhmorgeologiya, Russian Federation; China Ocean Minerals Research and Development Association (COMRA); Interoceanmetal Joint Organization (IOM), a consortium sponsored by Bulgaria, Cuba, Czech Republic, Poland, Russia and Slovakia; the government of the Republic of Korea; the Republic of India; and the Federal Institute for Geosciences and Natural Resources, Germany.

Workshops are held on a range of topics, normally once a year. In the past these have included: environmental management needs for exploration and exploitation of deep seabed minerals; a standardized system of data interpretation; and prospects for international collaboration in marine environmental research.

International Telecommunications Satellite Organization (ITSO)

Founded in 1964 as Intelsat, the organization was the world's first commercial communications satellite operator. Today, with capacity on a fleet of geostationary satellites and expanding terrestrial network assets, Intelsat continues to provide connectivity for telephony, corporate network, broadcast and internet services.

Organization. In 2001 the member states of the organization implemented restructuring by transferring certain assets to Intelsat Ltd, a new commercial company under the supervision of the International Telecommunications Satellite Organization, now known as ITSO. In 2009 Intelsat Ltd moved its corporate headquarters to Luxembourg and became Intelsat S.A. ITSO's mission is to ensure that Intelsat provides public telecommunications services, including voice, data and video, on a global and non-discriminatory basis. The governing body of ITSO is the Assembly of Parties, which normally meets every other year. The Executive Organ is headed by the Director-General and is responsible to the Assembly of Parties. The Director-General supervises and monitors Intelsat's provision of public telecommunications services. There were 149 member countries in Feb. 2016.

International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC)

Origin. Founded in Nov. 2006, the ITUC was formed through a unification process that included the merger of the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions (ICFTU) and the World Confederation of Labour (WCL) with the addition of several national centres that had not been affiliated with either organization. The WCL was established in 1920 as the International Federation of Christian Trade Unions, but went briefly out of existence in 1940 owing to the suppression of affiliated unions by the Nazi and Fascist regimes. It reconstituted in 1945 and became the WCL in 1968. The founding congress of the ICFTU took place in London in Dec. 1949 following the withdrawal of some Western trade unions from the World Federation of Trade Unions (WFTU), which was founded in 1945 but had come under Communist control.

Aims. The ITUC aims to defend and promote the rights of workers, particularly the right to trade union organization and collective bargaining; to combat discrimination at work and in society; to ensure that social concerns are put at the centre of global economic, trade and finance policies; to support young people's rights at work; and to promote the involvement of women in trade unions. Its main campaigns are: Qatar 2022: Re-Run the Vote; World Day for Decent Work; Get Organised!; Count Us In!; Domestic Workers—12+12; and Post-2015 Development Framework.

Organization. The Congress meets every four years to set policies and to elect the General Secretary and the General Council, composed of 70 members, which is the main decision-making body between congresses. The President and Deputy Presidents are appointed by the General Council. The Founding Congress was held in Vienna in Nov. 2006. Its second Congress was held in 2010 in Vancouver and its third in Berlin in 2014.

The ITUC has regional organizations for Africa, the Americas, Asia-Pacific and Europe. It has offices that deal with the International Labour Organization (Geneva), and the United Nations, the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund

(Washington, D.C.). There are also offices in Amman, Hong Kong, Moscow, Sarajevo and Vilnius.

The ITUC is a member of the Council of Global Unions, which was created in 2006 as a tool for structured co-operation and co-ordination.

International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea (ITLOS)

The International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea (ITLOS), founded in Oct. 1996 and based in Hamburg, adjudicates on disputes relating to the interpretation and application of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea. The Convention gives the Tribunal jurisdiction to resolve a variety of international law of the sea disputes such as the delimitation of maritime zones, fisheries, navigation and the protection of the marine environment. Its Seabed Disputes Chamber has compulsory jurisdiction to resolve disputes amongst States, the International Seabed Authority, companies and private individuals, arising out of the exploitation of the deep seabed. The Tribunal also has compulsory jurisdiction in certain instances to protect the rights of parties to a dispute or to prevent serious harm to the marine environment, and over the prompt release of arrested vessels and their crews upon the deposit of a security. The Tribunal is composed of 21 judges, elected by signatories from five world regional blocs: five each from Africa and Asia; four from Western Europe and other States; four from Latin America and the Caribbean; and three from Eastern Europe. The judges serve a term of nine years, with one third of the judges' terms expiring every three years.

Founded in 1933, the UICC is an international non-governmental association of 775 member organizations in 156 countries.

Objectives. The UICC is the only non-governmental organization dedicated exclusively to the global control of cancer. Its objectives are to advance scientific and medical knowledge in research, diagnosis, treatment and prevention of cancer, and to promote all other aspects of the campaign against cancer throughout the world. Particular emphasis is placed on professional and public education.

Membership. The UICC is made up of voluntary cancer leagues, patient organizations, associations and societies as well as cancer research and treatment centres and, in some countries, ministries of health.

Activities. The UICC creates and carries out programmes around the world in collaboration with several hundred volunteer experts, most of whom are professionally active in UICC member organizations. It promotes co-operation between cancer organizations, researchers, scientists, health professionals and cancer experts, with a focus in four key areas: building and enhancing cancer control capacity, tobacco control, population-based cancer prevention and control, and transfer of cancer knowledge and dissemination. The next UICC World Cancer Congress is scheduled to take place in Paris in Oct.–Nov. 2016.

Inter-Parliamentary Union (IPU)

Founded in 1889 by William Randal Cremer (UK) and Frédéric Passy (France), the Inter-Parliamentary Union was the first permanent forum for political multilateral negotiations. The Union is a centre for dialogue and parliamentary diplomacy among legislators representing every political system and all the main political leanings in the world. It was instrumental in setting up what is now the Permanent Court of Arbitration in The Hague.

Activities. The IPU fosters contacts, co-ordination and the exchange of experience among parliaments and parliamentarians of all countries; considers questions of international interest and concern, and expresses its views on such issues in order to bring about action by parliaments and parliamentarians; contributes to the defence and promotion of human rights—an essential factor of parliamentary democracy and development; contributes to better knowledge of the working and development of representative institutions and to the strengthening of representative democracy.

Membership. The IPU had 167 members and ten associate members in Feb. 2016.

INTERPOL (International Criminal Police Organization)

Organization. INTERPOL was founded in 1923, disbanded in 1938 and reconstituted in 1946. The International Criminal Police Organization—INTERPOL was created to ensure and promote the widest possible mutual assistance between all criminal police authorities within the limits of the law existing in the different countries worldwide and the spirit of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, and to establish and develop all institutions likely to contribute effectively to the prevention and suppression of ordinary law crimes.

Aims. INTERPOL provides a co-ordination centre (General Secretariat) for its 190 member countries. Its priority areas of activity concern criminal organizations, public safety and terrorism, drug-related crimes, financial crime and high-tech crime, trafficking in human beings and tracking fugitives from justice. INTERPOL centralizes records and information on international offenders; it operates a worldwide communication network.

INTERPOL's General Assembly is held annually. The General Assembly is the body of supreme authority in the organization. It is composed of delegates appointed by the members of the organization.

The Executive Committee, which meets four times a year, supervises the execution of the decisions of the General Assembly. The Executive Committee is composed of the president of the organization, the three vice-presidents and nine delegates.

The General Secretariat is the centre for co-ordinating the fight against international crime. Its activities, undertaken in response to requests from the police services and judicial authorities in its member countries, focus on crime prevention and law enforcement.

As of Feb. 2016 INTERPOL's Sub-Regional Bureaus were located in Abidjan, Bangkok, Buenos Aires, Harare, Nairobi, San Salvador and Yaoundé.

Headquarters: 200 Quai Charles de Gaulle, 69006 Lyon, France.

Médecins Sans Frontières/Doctors Without Borders (MSF)

Origin. Médecins Sans Frontières/Doctors Without Borders was founded in 1971 by a small group of doctors and journalists who believed that all people have a right to emergency relief.

Functions. MSF was one of the first non-governmental organizations to provide both urgently needed medical assistance and to publicly bear witness to the plight of the people it helps. Today MSF is an international medical humanitarian organization with 19 sections and several additional offices around the world. Every year MSF sends around 3,000 volunteer doctors, nurses, other medical professionals, logistical experts, water and sanitation engineers, and administrators to join approximately 25,000 locally hired staff to provide medical aid in over 60 countries. MSF was awarded the 1999 Nobel Peace Prize.

Nobel Prizes

When the scientist, industrialist and inventor Alfred Nobel died in 1896, he made provision in his will for his fortune to be used for prizes in Physics, Chemistry, Physiology or Medicine, Literature and Peace. The Norwegian Nobel Committee awards the Nobel Peace Prize, and the Nobel Foundation in Stockholm (founded 1900; Mailing address: Box 5232, SE-10245, Stockholm, Sweden) awards the other four prizes plus the Sveriges Riksbank Prize in Economic Sciences in Memory of Alfred Nobel (often referred to as the Nobel Memorial Prize in Economic Sciences). The Prize Awarding Ceremony takes place on 10 Dec., the anniversary of Nobel's death. The last ten recipients of the Nobel Peace Prize, worth 8m. Sw. kr. in 2015 (unchanged since 2012, although down from 10m. Sw. kr. for the previous 11 years), are:

2006 – Muhammad Yunus and Grameen Bank of Bangladesh for their efforts to create economic and social development from below.

2007 – the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change and Al Gore for their efforts to build up and disseminate greater knowledge about man-made climate change.

2008 – Martti Ahtisaari (Finland) for his important efforts, on several continents and over more than three decades, to resolve international conflicts.

2009 – Barack Obama (USA) for his extraordinary efforts to strengthen international diplomacy and co-operation between peoples.

2010 – Liu Xiaobo (China) for his long and non-violent struggle for fundamental human rights in China.

2011 – Ellen Johnson-Sirleaf (Liberia), Leymah Gbowee (Liberia) and Tawakkul Karman (Yemen) for their non-violent struggle for the safety of women and for women's rights to full participation in peace-building work.

2012 – the European Union (EU) for its contribution for over six decades to the advancement of peace and reconciliation, democracy and human rights.

2013 – the Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons (OPCW) for its extensive work to eliminate chemical weapons.

Islamic Development Bank

The Agreement establishing the IDB (Banque islamique de développement) was adopted at the Second Islamic Finance Ministers' Conference held in Jeddah, Saudi Arabia in Aug. 1974. The Bank, which is open to all member countries of the Organization of the Islamic Conference, commenced operations in 1975. Its main objective is to foster economic development and social progress of member countries and Muslim communities individually as well as jointly in accordance with the principles of the Sharia. It is active in the promotion of trade and the flow of investments among member countries, and maintains a Special Assistance Fund for member countries suffering natural calamities. The Fund is also used to finance health and educational projects aimed at improving the socio-economic conditions of Muslim communities in non-member countries. A US$1.5bn. IDB Infrastructure Fund was launched in 1998 to invest in projects such as power, telecommunications, transportation, energy, natural resources, petro-chemical and other infrastructure-related sectors in member countries.

Members (56 as of Feb. 2016). Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Azerbaijan, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Benin, Brunei, Burkina Faso, Cameroon, Chad, Comoros, Côte d'Ivoire, Djibouti, Egypt, Gabon, Gambia, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Lebanon, Libya, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Mauritania, Morocco, Mozambique, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Palestine, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Sudan, Suriname, Syria, Tajikistan, Togo, Tunisia, Turkey, Turkmenistan, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, Uzbekistan, Yemen.

President: Ahmed Mohamed Ali Al-Madani (Saudi Arabia).

2014 – Kailash Satyarthi (India) and Malala Yousafzai (Pakistan) for their struggle against the suppression of children and young people and for the right of all children to education.

2015 – National Dialogue Quartet (Tunisia) for its decisive contribution to the building of a pluralistic democracy in Tunisia in the wake of the Jasmine Revolution of 2011.

Sveriges Riksbank Prize in Economic Sciences in Memory of Alfred Nobel

The Sveriges Riksbank Prize in Economic Sciences in Memory of Alfred Nobel was set up by the Swedish central bank in 1968. The last ten recipients of the prize, worth 8m. Sw. kr. in 2015 (unchanged since 2012, although down from 10m. Sw. kr. for the previous 11 years), are:

2006 – Edmund S. Phelps (USA) for his analysis of intertemporal tradeoffs in macroeconomic policy.

2009 – Elinor Ostrom (USA) for her analysis of economic governance, especially the commons, and Oliver E. Williamson (USA) for his analysis of economic governance, especially the boundaries of the firm.

2010 – Peter A. Diamond (USA), Dale T. Mortensen (USA) and Christopher A. Pissarides (Cyprus) for their analysis of markets with search frictions.

2012 – Alvin E. Roth (USA) and Lloyd S. Shapley (USA) for the theory of stable allocations and the practice of market design.

North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO)

Origin. On 4 April 1949 the foreign ministers of Belgium, Canada, Denmark, France, Iceland, Italy, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, the UK and the USA signed the North Atlantic Treaty, establishing the North Atlantic Alliance. In 1952 Greece and Turkey acceded to the Treaty; in 1955 the Federal Republic of Germany; in 1982 Spain; in 1999 the Czech Republic, Hungary and Poland; in 2004 Bulgaria, Estonia, Latvia, Lithuania, Romania, Slovakia and Slovenia; and in 2009 Albania and Croatia, bringing the total to 28 member countries.

Functions. The Alliance was established as a defensive political and military alliance of independent countries in accordance with the terms of the UN Charter. Its fundamental role is to safeguard the freedom and security of its members by political and military means. It also encourages consultation and co-operation with non-NATO countries in a wide range of security-related areas to help prevent conflicts within and beyond the frontiers of its member countries. NATO promotes democratic values and is committed to the peaceful resolution of disputes. If diplomatic efforts fail, it has the military capacity needed to undertake crisis-management operations alone or in co-operation with other countries and international organizations.

Reform and Transformation of the Alliance. Following the demise of the Warsaw Pact in 1991, and the improved relations with Russia, NATO established security dialogue and co-operation with the states of Central and Eastern Europe and those of the former USSR. These changes were reflected in the publication in 1991 of a new Strategic Concept for the Alliance outlining NATO's enduring purpose and nature, and its fundamental security tasks. Further changes in the security environment during the 1990s led to the development of the current Strategic Concept, published in 1999 to address new risks such as terrorism, ethnic conflict, human rights abuses, political instability, economic fragility, and the spread of nuclear, biological and chemical weapons and their means of delivery. A new Strategic Concept, which reflects new and emerging security threats, was published at a NATO summit meeting in Nov. 2010.

The Euro-Atlantic Partnership. In 1991 the North Atlantic Co-operation Council (NACC) was established as a forum for dialogue with former Warsaw Pact countries. The NACC was replaced in 1997 by the Euro-Atlantic Partnership Council (EAPC), which brings together all 50 NATO and partner countries in the Euro-Atlantic area for dialogue and consultation on political and security-related issues. It provides the overall political framework for NATO's co-operation with partner countries and the bilateral relationships developed between NATO and individual partner countries under the Partnership for Peace (PfP) programme, which was launched in 1994.

Since its launch, the PfP programme has been adapted to expand and intensify political and military co-operation throughout Europe. Core objectives are: the facilitation of transparency in national defence planning and budgeting processes; democratic control of defence forces; members' maintenance of capability and readiness to contribute to operations under the authority of the UN; development of co-operative military relations with NATO (joint planning, training and exercises) in order to strengthen participants' ability to undertake missions in the fields of peacekeeping, search and rescue, and humanitarian operations; development, over the longer term, of forces better able to operate with those of NATO member forces. NATO will consult with any active partner which perceives a direct threat to its territorial integrity, political independence or security.

One of the most tangible aspects of co-operation between partner countries and NATO has been their individual participation in NATO-led peace-support operations. In Feb. 2016 NATO had 22 PfP partners: Armenia, Austria, Azerbaijan, Belarus, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Finland, Georgia, Ireland, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Malta, Moldova, Montenegro, Russia, Serbia, Sweden, Switzerland, Tajikistan, Turkmenistan, Ukraine and Uzbekistan.

Country Relations. On 27 May 1997 in Paris, NATO and Russia signed the Founding Act on Mutual Relations, Co-operation and Security, committing themselves to build together a lasting peace in the Euro-Atlantic area, and establishing a new forum for consultation and co-operation called the NATO-Russia Permanent Joint Council. In May 2002 the Permanent Joint Council was replaced by a new NATO-Russia Council which brought together all NATO member countries and Russia in a forum in which they would work as equal partners, identifying and pursuing opportunities for joint action in areas of common concern. However, NATO's ties with Russia deteriorated during 2014 when Moscow sanctioned the annexation of Crimea following the ousting of Ukraine's pro-Russian president, Viktor Yanukovich, in Feb. of that year.

At the meeting in Sintra, Portugal in May 1997 a NATO-Ukraine Charter on a Distinctive Partnership was drawn up and signed in Madrid in July, establishing the NATO-Ukraine Commission (NUC). Dialogue and co-operation has become well-established with NATO and individual allies supporting Ukraine's ongoing reform efforts, particularly in the defence and security sectors.

NATO launched the Mediterranean Dialogue with six countries of the Mediterranean (Egypt, Israel, Jordan, Mauritania, Morocco and Tunisia) in 1995. In 1997 allied foreign ministers agreed to enhance the Dialogue. A new committee, the Mediterranean Co-operation Group, was established to take the Mediterranean Dialogue forward and Algeria joined in March 2000. Later, in 2004, NATO also launched the Istanbul Co-operation Initiative that aims to develop bilateral co-operation with countries in the broader Middle East. Bahrain, Kuwait, Qatar and the United Arab Emirates have since joined the Initiative.

Relations with other international organizations. NATO is gradually developing a strategic partnership with the European Union. Efforts to strengthen the security and defence role of NATO's European allies were initially organized through the Western European Union (WEU) during the 1990s, when there was a growing realization of the need for European countries to further develop defence capabilities and to assume greater responsibility for their common security. In 2000 the crisis management responsibilities of the WEU were increasingly assumed by the EU. Institutionalized relations between NATO and the EU were launched in 2001. The political principles underlying the NATO-EU relationship were set out in the Dec. 2002 NATO-EU Declaration on ESDP (European Security and Defence Policy). These decisions paved the way for the two organizations to work out the modalities for the transfer of responsibilities to the EU for the NATO-led military operations in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia in 2003 and, from Dec. 2004, in Bosnia and Herzegovina.

NATO and the UN share a commitment to maintaining international peace and security and have been co-operating in this area since the early 1990s with consultations established between NATO and UN specialized bodies on a range of issues including crisis management, combating human trafficking, mine action and the fight against terrorism.

NATO and the OSCE work together to build security and promote stability in the Euro-Atlantic area, co-operating at both the political and the operational level in areas such as conflict prevention, crisis management and addressing new security threats.

Operations. One of the most significant aspects of NATO's transformation has been the decision to undertake peace-support and crisis-management operations in the Euro-Atlantic area and further afield.

In the wake of the disintegration of the former Yugoslavia, the Alliance has focused much of its attention on the Balkans. NATO first committed itself to peacekeeping in Bosnia and Herzegovina in Dec. 1995, through the NATO-led Implementation Force (IFOR), which was replaced by the Stabilization Force (SFOR) in 1996. Improvements in the security situation allowed NATO to hand over its operation to the EU in Dec. 2004.

Since 1999, following a 78-day air campaign against the Yugoslav regime to bring an end to the violent repression of ethnic Albanians, NATO has led a peacekeeping mission in Kosovo (the Kosovo Force, or KFOR). NATO also intervened in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia at the request of the government to help avoid a civil war in 2001, and maintained a small peacekeeping presence there until March 2003, when the operation was handed over to the EU.

Following the attacks on New York and Washington, D.C. on 11 Sept. 2001, NATO invoked article five of the Washington Treaty (the collective defence clause) for the first time in its history, declaring it considered the attack on the USA as an attack against all members of the Alliance. It subsequently launched a series of initiatives aimed at curtailing terrorist activity. Operation Active Endeavour is a maritime operation led by NATO's naval forces to detect and deter terrorist activity in the Mediterranean. Operation Eagle Assist was one of the measures requested by the USA in the aftermath of the attacks in Sept. 2001. Aircraft from NATO's Airborne Warning and Control System (AWACS) patrolled American airspace from mid-Oct. 2001 to mid-May 2002.

In Aug. 2003 NATO took over responsibility for the International Security Assistance Force (ISAF) in Afghanistan. Initially centred on the capital, Kabul, by Oct. 2006 it covered the entire country. Troop numbers peaked at 140,000 in 2011, but ISAF ceased combat operations at the end of 2014. On 1 Jan. 2015 the NATO-led Operation Resolute Support began to train, advise and assist the Afghan National Security Forces. As of Dec. 2015 its personnel numbered 12,900.

From 2004 until 2011 NATO helped train Iraqi military personnel and supported the development of security institutions in Iraq. From 2005 to 2007 it provided logistical support to the African Union's mission in Darfur, Sudan.

In late 2008 NATO conducted counter-piracy operations in the Gulf of Aden, where piracy threatened to undermine international humanitarian efforts in Africa, as well as the safety of commercial maritime routes and international navigation. Since 2009 NATO has conducted a similar operation off the Horn of Africa.

From March until Oct. 2011 a coalition of NATO allies and partners conducted Operation Unified Protector in Libya. Using only air and sea resources, its aim was to protect civilians, enforce an air embargo and maintain a no-fly zone. It was widely regarded as instrumental in the downfall of the Libyan leader, Col. Gaddafi.

Since the establishment in 1998 of the Euro-Atlantic Disaster Response Co-ordination Centre to serve as a focal point for co-ordinating the disaster-relief efforts of NATO member states and partner countries, NATO plays an increasingly important role in humanitarian relief. Most notably, in 2005 some NATO capabilities and forces were deployed to support relief efforts following Hurricane Katrina in the USA and the devastating earthquake in Pakistan and in 2010 after the Haitian earthquake and flooding in Pakistan.

In Sept. 2014 the outgoing NATO Secretary General, Anders Fogh Rasmussen, identified Russian aggression in Ukraine and the militant Islamic State group's advance in the Middle East as the chief threats to Western security. In the same month, in a widely perceived response, NATO announced the creation of a rapid-deployment 'spearhead' force numbering several thousand personnel. As of Feb. 2016 it was continuing air policing missions begun in 2014 to monitor airspace violations in the wider region.

Defence capabilities. This widened scope of NATO military operations is radically transforming the military requirements of the Alliance. The large defence forces of the past are being replaced by more flexible, mobile forces which are able to deploy at significant distances from their normal operating bases and to engage in the full range of missions, ranging from high-intensity combat to humanitarian support. A modernization process was launched at the Prague Summit in 2002 to ensure that NATO could effectively deal with the security challenges of the 21st century and measures to enhance the Alliance's military operational capabilities were agreed. A new capabilities initiative (the Prague Capabilities Commitment) and a NATO Response Force were created and the Alliance's military command structure streamlined. In addition, steps were taken to increase efforts in the areas of intelligence sharing and crisis response arrangements, as well as greater co-operation with partner countries. Five nuclear, biological and chemical (NBC) weapons defence initiatives were also endorsed, as well as the creation of a multinational chemical, biological, radiological and nuclear battalion. At subsequent NATO summit meetings in Istanbul in 2004 and Riga in 2006, further initiatives were taken to promote the Alliance's ongoing transformation.

Organization. The North Atlantic Council (NAC) is the highest decision-making body and forum for consultation within the Atlantic Alliance. Composed of Permanent Representatives of all the member countries, it meets at least once a week and also meets at higher levels involving foreign ministers, defence ministers or heads of state or government. The authority and powers of decision-making and status and validity of its decisions remain the same at whatever level it meets. All decisions are taken on the basis of consensus, reflecting the collective will of all member governments. The NAC is the only body within the Atlantic Alliance which derives its authority explicitly from the North Atlantic Treaty.

The Military Committee is responsible for making recommendations to the NAC and the Defence Planning Committee on military matters and for supplying guidance to the Allied Commanders. Composed of the Chiefs-of-Staff of member countries (Iceland, which has no military forces, may be represented by a civilian), the Committee is assisted by an International Military Staff. It meets at Chiefs-of-Staff level at least twice a year but remains in permanent session at the level of national military representatives. The military command structure of the Alliance is divided into two strategic commands, one based in Europe and the other based in the USA.

Finance. The greater part of each member country's contribution to NATO, in terms of resources, comes indirectly through its expenditure on its own national armed forces and on its efforts to make them interoperable with those of other members so that they can participate in multinational operations. Member countries usually incur the deployment costs involved whenever they volunteer forces to participate in NATO-led operations, although in 2006 agreement was reached on using common funding for some aspects of deployments on a trial basis.

Member countries make direct contributions to three budgets managed directly by NATO: namely the Civil Budget, the Military Budget and the Security Investment Programme. Member countries pay contributions to each of these budgets in accordance with agreed cost-sharing formulae broadly calculated in relation to their ability to pay.

Under the terms of the Partnership for Peace strategy, partner countries undertake to make available the necessary personnel, assets, facilities and capabilities to participate in the programme, and share the financial cost of any military exercises in which they participate.

Current Leaders

Jens Stoltenberg

Position

Secretary General

Introduction

Jens Stoltenberg became Secretary General of NATO on 1 Oct. 2014. Previously a three-term prime minister of Norway, he is a social democrat with a reputation for consensus-building. He succeeded Denmark's Anders Fogh Rasmussen at NATO.

Early Life

Jens Stoltenberg was born in Oslo on 16 March 1959, the son of politicians (his father, Thorvald, served as Norway's defence minister). He studied economics at Oslo University, where he joined the Norwegian Labour Party (Det Norske Arbeiderpartiet, DNA). In 1985 he was appointed leader of the Labour Youth League and from 1985–89 was vice president of the International Union of Socialist Youth. He also worked briefly at the National Statistics Office and was an economics lecturer at Oslo University before serving for two years as leader of the Oslo Labour Party (1990–92).

Elected a member of the Storting (parliament) for Oslo in the Sept. 1993 general election, Stoltenberg served as minister of trade and energy from 1993–96 and oversaw Norway's accession to the European Economic Area in 1994. In Oct. 1996 he was named minister of finance, a post he held for a year until the DNA lost power to the conservative Christian People's Party, led by Kjell Magne Bondevik. When Bondevik resigned in March 2000, Stoltenberg (by then deputy leader of the DNA) was asked to form a government as the youngest prime minister in Norway's history.

Having ushered in controversial reforms to the welfare state, Stoltenberg suffered a heavy defeat in the parliamentary elections of Sept. 2001 to a centre-right coalition led by Bondevik. A DNA party leadership battle between Stoltenberg and Thorbjørn Jagland (leader since 1992) ensued with Stoltenberg emerging victorious. He became prime minister for a second time on 17 Oct. 2005, following the victory of a coalition comprising the DNA, Socialist Left Party and the Centre Party. Stoltenberg vowed to further reform the welfare system and develop Norway's knowledge-based economy.

In 2006 his administration approved the expansion of exploration in the oil- and gas-rich Barents Sea and also the merger of Norway's two largest energy companies, Statoil and Norsk Hydro (with the government having a controlling stake in the combined group). Stoltenberg withdrew the small Norwegian military contingent from Iraq, but contributed nearly 600 troops to the NATO-led peacekeeping force in Afghanistan. In Sept. 2009 his centre-left coalition was returned to power in parliamentary elections. In 2010 he finalized an agreement with Russia to resolve a long-running border dispute over the Barents Sea. The rapprochement continued with the creation, in 2012, of a visa-free zone along the boundary between the two countries.

In July 2011 a right-wing extremist set off a bomb in central Oslo, killing eight people, before going on a shooting rampage at a Labour Party youth camp near the capital and murdering another 69 victims. Stoltenberg responded to the attacks by calling for 'more democracy, more openness'. He sought re-election at the 2013 elections, but his coalition failed to secure a majority, despite the Labour Party winning most seats and the highest share of the vote. He was succeeded as prime minister on 16 Oct. 2013 by Erna Solberg.

Career in Office

In March 2014 Stoltenberg was named Secretary General of NATO, an appointment championed by German Chancellor Angela Merkel. Upon assuming office, he was faced with an escalating security crisis in Ukraine. Stoltenberg, who as Norway's prime minister had sought closer ties with Russia, nonetheless fiercely criticized its annexation of Crimea, stating that the action offered a 'brutal reminder of the necessity of NATO'. He responded by deploying warships in the Black Sea and fighter planes in neighbouring NATO members.

Citing increased Russian aggression and the rise of the militant Islamic State movement, Stoltenberg said in Nov. 2014 that 'threats are coming closer' and called on European member states to arrest the cuts in defence spending that have left the USA shouldering an increasingly large burden of the NATO budget. Despite Russian opposition, in 2015 NATO members formally invited Montenegro to join the alliance in a reaffirmation, according to Stoltenberg, of its open door policy towards potential member states, including Georgia. Following the shooting down of a Russian warplane by the Turkish military for allegedly violating Turkish airspace while conducting air strikes in Syria in Nov., Stoltenberg called for 'calm and de-escalation' as the alliance sought to lower tensions.

Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD)

Origin. Founded in 1961 to replace the Organisation for European Economic Co-operation (OEEC), which was established in 1948 and linked to the Marshall Plan. The change of title marks the Organisation's altered status and functions: it ceased to be a European body with the accession of Canada and USA as full members and became a forum of global influence adding development to its list of core priorities. The Organisation aims to promote policies designed to achieve the highest sustainable economic growth and employment, as well as raising standards of living in member countries, while maintaining financial stability, thereby contributing to the development of the world economy; to contribute to sound economic expansion in member as well as non-member economies in the process of economic development; and to contribute to the expansion of world trade on a multilateral, non-discriminatory basis in accordance with international obligations.

Members. Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, Chile, Czech Republic, Denmark, Estonia, Finland, France, Germany, Greece, Hungary, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Japan, South Korea, Luxembourg, Mexico, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Poland, Portugal, Slovakia, Slovenia, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, Turkey, UK and USA. Discussions that began in May 2007 on the possible future accession of Russia were suspended in March 2014 following its annexation of Crimea.

Activities. The OECD's main fields of work are: economic policy; statistics; energy; development co-operation; sustainable development; public governance and territorial development; international trade; financial and enterprise affairs; tax policy and administration; food, agriculture and fisheries; environment; science, technology and industry; biotechnology and biodiversity; education; employment, labour and social affairs; entrepreneurship, small and middle-sized enterprises; and local development.

Relations with non-members. In order to ensure its continuing relevance as a hub for dialogue and action on globally significant policy issues, the OECD has developed an active global relations strategy and maintains co-operative relations with many economies outside the OECD. Officials from non-member economies increasingly discuss policy with their counterparts from member countries and conduct peer assessments while sharing each other's policy experiences. In 2007 the OECD launched a process of enhanced engagement with five countries whose engagement in the work of the OECD is particularly important for the fulfilment of the Organisation's mandate to promote policy convergence and global economic development: Brazil, China, India, Indonesia and South Africa. It aims to bring these countries closer to the OECD by engaging them actively in the OECD's analytical and policy development work, while supporting their own reform processes.

Other activities with non-OECD members are grouped around Global Forums in 12 policy areas. Created by Committees as stable, active networks of policy makers in OECD member and non-member economies, as well as other stakeholders, the Global Forums focus on: agriculture, biotechnology, competition, development, education, environment, finance, international investment, the knowledge economy, public governance, taxation and trade. A regional approach provides for targeted co-operation with non-OECD economies in Europe, Asia, Latin America, the Middle East and Northern Africa (MENA), and in Africa more generally, where the OECD supports the objectives of the New Partnership for Africa's Development (NEPAD) and the initiatives of the African Partnership Forum.

Relations with developing countries. Developing countries participate in many of the OECD's above-mentioned activities with non-members. The principal body dealing with issues related to development co-operation is the Development Assistance Committee (DAC). Its 28 members are major aid donors, collectively providing US$134.8bn. in 2013, representing almost 85% of total official development assistance (ODA) worldwide. The DAC largely focuses on how to spend and invest this aid so as to help its partners achieve the Millennium Development Goals and produces analysis and guidance on a range of topics, including aid for trade, aid effectiveness, capacity development, poverty reduction, environment, conflict and fragility, gender equality, good governance, evaluation and aid architecture.

The OECD Development Centre links OECD member countries and developing countries in Africa, Asia and Latin America by helping policy-makers in OECD and developing countries find solutions to the challenges of development, poverty alleviation and the curbing of inequality through recommendations designed to promote constructive policy change. Annual publications include the Latin American Economic Outlook and, jointly with the African Development Bank, the African Economic Outlook.

Relations with other international organizations. Under a protocol signed at the same time as the OECD Convention, the European Commission takes part in the work of the OECD. EFTA may also send representatives to attend OECD meetings. Formal relations also exist with the Asian Development Bank, Inter-American Development Bank, World Bank, IMF, UNCTAD, WHO and the Parliamentary Assemblies of the Council of Europe and NATO.

Relations with civil society. Consultations with civil society organizations (CSOs) take place across the whole range of the OECD's work. The Business and Industry Advisory Committee to the OECD (BIAC) and the Trade Union Advisory Committee to the OECD (TUAC) have consultative status enabling them to discuss subjects of common interest and be consulted in a particular field by the relevant OECD Committee or its officers. Since 2000 the OECD has organized the annual OECD Forum, an international public conference offering business, labour and civil society the opportunity to discuss key issues of the 21st century with government ministers and leaders of international organizations.

Organization. The governing body of the OECD is the Council, comprising representatives of each member country and in which the European Commission participates. It usually meets once a year at the level of government ministers, with a rotating chairmanship at ministerial level among member governments. The Council also meets regularly, under the chairmanship of the Secretary-General at the level of Permanent Representatives to OECD (ambassadors who head resident diplomatic missions). It is responsible for all questions of general policy and may establish subsidiary bodies as required to achieve the aims of the Organisation. Decisions and recommendations of the Council are adopted by consensus of all its members.

An Executive Committee, a Budget Committee and an External Relations Committee assist the Council although they have limited decision-making power within their fields of competence. In addition, the Executive Committee in Special Session meets, usually twice a year, and is attended by senior government officials. Most of the work of the OECD is prepared and carried out by about 250 specialized bodies (Committees, Working Parties, etc.). All members are normally represented on these bodies, except a few which have a more restricted membership. Funding is by member state contributions based on a formula related to their size and economy.

The International Energy Agency (IEA) and the Nuclear Energy Agency (NEA) are also part of the OECD system.

Unrepresented Nations and Peoples Organization (UNPO)

UNPO is an international organization created by nations and peoples around the world who are not represented in the world's principal international organizations, such as the UN. Founded in 1991, UNPO had 42 members as at Feb. 2016 representing nearly 300m. people worldwide.

Membership. Open to all nations and peoples unrepresented, subject to adherence to the five principles that form the basis of UNPO's charter: equal right to self-determination of all nations and peoples; adherence to internationally accepted human rights standards; to the principles of democracy; promotion of non-violence; and protection of the environment. Applicants must show that they constitute a 'nation or people' as defined in the Covenant.

Functions and Activities. UNPO offers an international forum for occupied nations, indigenous peoples, minorities and oppressed majorities, who struggle to regain their lost countries, preserve their cultural identities, protect their basic human and economic rights, and safeguard their environment.

It does not represent those peoples; rather it assists and empowers them to represent themselves more effectively. To this end, it provides professional services and facilities as well as education and training in the fields of diplomacy, human rights law, democratic processes, conflict resolution and environmental protection. Members, private foundations and voluntary contributions fund the Organization.

In total six former members of UNPO (Armenia, Belau, Estonia, Georgia, Latvia and Timor-Leste) subsequently achieved full independence and gained representation in the UN. Belau is now called Palau. Current members Bougainville and Kosovo have achieved a degree of political autonomy. Kosovo declared itself an independent state in 2008, although both Serbia and Russia oppose its sovereignty.

World Council of Churches

The World Council of Churches was formally constituted on 23 Aug. 1948 in Amsterdam. In Feb. 2016 member churches numbered 358 from around 150 countries.

Origin. The World Council was founded by the coming together of Christian movements, including the overseas mission groups gathered from 1921 in the International Missionary Council, the Faith and Order Movement, and the Life and Work Movement. On 13 May 1938, at Utrecht, a provisional committee was appointed to prepare for the formation of a World Council of Churches.

Membership. The basis of membership (1975) states: 'The World Council of Churches is a fellowship of Churches which confess the Lord Jesus Christ as God and Saviour according to the Scriptures and therefore seek to fulfil together their common calling to the glory of the one God, Father, Son and Holy Spirit.' Membership is open to Churches which express their agreement with this basis and satisfy such criteria as the Assembly or Central Committee may prescribe. Today, Churches of Protestant, Anglican, Orthodox, Old Catholic and Pentecostal confessions from all over the world belong to this fellowship. The Roman Catholic Church is not a member of the WCC but works closely with it.

Activities. The WCC's Central Committee comprises the Programme Committee and the Finance Committee. Within the Programme Committee there are advisory groups on issues relating to communication, women, justice, peace and creation, youth, ecumenical relations and inter-religious relations. Following the WCC's 8th General Assembly in Harare, Zimbabwe in 1998 the work of the WCC was restructured. Activities were grouped into four 'clusters'—Relationships; Issues and Themes; Communication; and Finance, Services and Administration. The Relationships cluster comprises four teams (Church and Ecumenical Relations, Regional Relations and Ecumenical Sharing, Inter-Religious Relations and International Relations), as well as two programmes (Action by Churches Together and the Ecumenical Church Loan Fund). The Issues and Themes cluster comprises four teams (Faith and Order; Mission and Evangelism; Justice, Peace and Creation; and Education and Ecumenical Formation).

Organization. The governing body of the World Council, consisting of delegates specially appointed by the member Churches, is the Assembly, which meets every seven or eight years to frame policy. It has no legislative powers and depends for the implementation of its decisions upon the action of member Churches. The 10th General Assembly, held in Busan, South Korea from 30 Oct.–8 Nov. 2013, had as its theme 'God of life, lead us to justice and peace'. A 150-member Central Committee meets annually to carry out the Assembly mandate, with a smaller 26-member Executive Committee meeting twice a year.

World Federation of Trade Unions (WFTU)

Origin and History. The WFTU was founded on a worldwide basis in 1945 at the international trade union conferences held in London and Paris, with the participation of all the trade union centres in the countries of the anti-Hitler coalition. The aim was to reunite the world trade union movement at the end of the Second World War. The acute political differences among affiliates, especially the east–west confrontation in Europe on ideological lines, led to a split. A number of affiliated organizations withdrew in 1949 and established the ICFTU. The WFTU now draws its membership from the industrially developing countries like India, Vietnam and other Asian countries, Brazil, Peru, Cuba and other Latin American countries, Syria, Lebanon, Kuwait and other Arab countries, and it has affiliates and associates in more than 20 European countries. It has close relations with the International Confederation of Arab Trade Unions, the Organization of African Trade Union Unity as well as the All-China Federation of Trade Unions. The 16th Congress was held in Athens, Greece in April 2011. There are ten Trade Unions Internationals (TUIs) constituted within the WFTU.

The WFTU has 86m. members in 120 countries. It has regional offices in Damascus, Havana, Johannesburg, Libreville, New Delhi and Nicosia and Permanent Representatives accredited to the UN in New York, the FAO in Rome and UNESCO in Paris.

African Development Bank

Established in 1964 to promote economic and social development in Africa.

Regional members. (54) Algeria, Angola, Benin, Botswana, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cabo Verde, Cameroon, Central African Republic, Chad, Comoros, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Republic of the Congo, Côte d'Ivoire, Djibouti, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Eritrea, Ethiopia, Gabon, Gambia, Ghana, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Kenya, Lesotho, Liberia, Libya, Madagascar, Malawi, Mali, Mauritania, Mauritius, Morocco, Mozambique, Namibia, Niger, Nigeria, Rwanda, São Tomé e Príncipe, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Somalia, South Africa, South Sudan, Sudan, Swaziland, Tanzania, Togo, Tunisia, Uganda, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Non-regional members. (26) Argentina, Austria, Belgium, Brazil, Canada, China, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, India, Italy, Japan, South Korea, Kuwait, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, Saudi Arabia, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, Turkey, UK, USA.

Within the ADB Group are the African Development Fund (ADF) and the Nigeria Trust Fund (NTF). The ADF, established in 1972, provides development finance on concessional terms to low-income Regional Member Countries which are unable to borrow on the non-concessional terms of the African Development Bank. Membership of the Fund is made up of 27 non-African State Participants and the African Development Bank. The NTF is a special ADB fund created in 1976 by agreement between the Bank Group and the Government of the Federal Republic of Nigeria. Its objective is to assist the development efforts of low-income Regional Member Countries whose economic and social conditions and prospects require concessional financing.

African Union (AU)

History. The Fourth Extraordinary Session of the Assembly of the Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) held in Sirté, Libya on 9 Sept. 1999 decided to establish an African Union. At Lomé, Togo on 11 July 2000 the OAU Assembly of the Heads of State and Government adopted the Constitutive Act of the African Union, which was later ratified by the required two-thirds of the member states of the Organization of African Unity (OAU); it came into force on 26 May 2001. The Lusaka Summit, in July 2001, gave a mandate to translate the transformation of the Organization of African Unity into the African Union, and on 9 July 2002 the Durban Summit, in South Africa, formally launched the African Union.

Members. Algeria, Angola, Benin, Botswana, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cabo Verde, Cameroon, Central African Republic, Chad, Comoros, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Republic of the Congo, Côte d'Ivoire, Djibouti, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Eritrea, Ethiopia, Gabon, Gambia, Ghana, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Kenya, Lesotho, Liberia, Libya, Madagascar, Malawi, Mali, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mozambique, Namibia, Niger, Nigeria, Rwanda, Sahrawi Arab Democratic Republic (Western Sahara), São Tomé e Príncipe, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Somalia, South Africa, South Sudan, Sudan, Swaziland, Tanzania, Togo, Tunisia, Uganda, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Aims. The African Union aims to promote unity, solidarity, cohesion and co-operation among the peoples of Africa and African states, and at the same time to co-ordinate efforts by African people to realize their goals of achieving economic, political and social integration.

Activities. The African Union became fully operational in July 2002, and is working towards establishing the organs stipulated in the constitutive act. These include a Pan-African parliament, an Economic, Social and Cultural Council (ECOSOCC) and a Peace and Security Council (which have now been inaugurated), plus a Central Bank (which has not yet been launched).

The African Court on Human and Peoples' Rights was established in 2004. A protocol to set up an African Court of Justice entered into force in 2009, but has been superseded by a plan to create an African Court of Justice and Human Rights—also incorporating the Court on Human and Peoples' Rights—which had yet to come to fruition as of Feb. 2016. Supporters of the proposal hope that this court will eventually supplant the International Criminal Court in prosecuting human rights abuses in Africa.

The African Union has established several peacekeeping forces, including in Burundi (2003–04), the Darfur region of Sudan (initially from 2004, and as part of a hybrid AU–UN mission since 2007), Somalia (since 2007) and the Central African Republic (since 2013).

Bank of Central African States (BEAC)

The Bank of Central African States (Banque des Etats de l'Afrique Centrale) was established in 1973 when a new Convention of Monetary Co-operation with France was signed. The five original members, Cameroon, Central African Republic, Chad, Republic of the Congo and Gabon, were joined by Equatorial Guinea in 1985. Under its Convention and statutes, the BEAC is declared a 'Multinational African institution in the management and control of which France participates in return for the guarantee she provides for its currency'.

Governor: Lucas Abaga Nchama (Equatorial Guinea).

Central Bank of West African States (BCEAO)

Established in 1962, the Central Bank of West African States (Banque Centrale des Etats de l'Afrique de l'Ouest) is the common central bank of the eight member states that form the West African Monetary Union (WAMU). It has the sole right of currency issue throughout the Union territory and is responsible for the pooling of the Union's foreign exchange reserve; the management of the monetary policy of the member states; the keeping of the accounts of the member states treasury; and the definition of the banking law applicable to banks and financial establishments.

Members. Benin, Burkina Faso, Côte d'Ivoire, Guinea-Bissau, Mali, Niger, Senegal, Togo.

Governor: Tiémoko Meyliet Koné (Côte d'Ivoire).

Common Market for Eastern and Southern Africa (COMESA)

COMESA is an African economic grouping of 19 member states who are committed to the creation of a Common Market for Eastern and Southern Africa. It was established in 1994 as a building block for the African Economic Community and replaced the Preferential Trade Area for Eastern and Southern Africa, which had been in existence since 1981.

Members. Burundi, Comoros, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Djibouti, Egypt, Eritrea, Ethiopia, Kenya, Libya, Madagascar, Malawi, Mauritius, Rwanda, Seychelles, Sudan, Swaziland, Uganda, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Objectives. To facilitate the removal of the structural and institutional weaknesses of member states so that they are able to attain collective and sustainable development.

Activities. COMESA's Free Trade Area (FTA) was launched on 31 Oct. 2000 at a Summit of Heads of States and Government in Lusaka, Zambia. The FTA participating states have zero tariff on goods and services produced in these countries.

In addition to creating the policy environment for freeing trade, COMESA has also created specialized institutions like the Eastern and Southern African Trade and Development Bank (PTA Bank), the PTA Reinsurance Company (ZEP-RE), the Clearing House and the COMESA Court of Justice, to provide the required financial infrastructure and service support. COMESA has also promoted a political risk guarantee scheme, the Africa Trade Insurance Agency (ATI), a Leather and Leather Products Institute (LLPI), as well as a cross-border insurance scheme, the COMESA Yellow Card.

East African Community (EAC)

The East African Community (EAC) was formally established on 30 Nov. 1999 with the signing in Arusha, Tanzania of the Treaty for the Establishment of the East African Community. The Treaty envisaged the establishment of a Customs Union, as the entry point of the Community, a Common Market, subsequently a Monetary Union and ultimately a Political Federation of the East African States. In Nov. 2003 the EAC partner states signed a Protocol on the Establishment of the East African Customs Union, which came into force on 1 Jan. 2005. The Common Market came into force on 1 July 2010.

Members. Burundi, Kenya, Rwanda, South Sudan, Tanzania, Uganda.

Secretary General: Dr Richard Sezibera (Rwanda).

East African Development Bank (EADB)

Established originally under the Treaty for East African Co-operation in 1967 with Kenya, Tanzania and Uganda as signatories, a new Charter for the Bank (with the same signatories) came into force in 1980. Rwanda was admitted as a member in 2008. Under the original Treaty the Bank was confined to the provision of financial and technical assistance for the promotion of industrial development in member states but with the new Charter its remit was broadened to include involvement in agriculture, forestry, tourism, transport and the development of infrastructure.

Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS)

Founded in 1975 as a regional common market, ECOWAS later also became a political forum involved in the promotion of a democratic environment and the pursuit of fundamental human rights. In July 1993 it revised its treaty to assume responsibility for the regulation of regional armed conflicts, acknowledging the inextricable link between development and peace and security. Thus it now has a new role in conflict management and prevention through its Mediation and Security Council, which monitors the moratorium on the export, import and manufacture of light weapons and ammunition. However, it still retains a military arm, the Economic Community of West African States Monitoring Group (generally known as ECOMOG). It is also involved in the war against drug abuse and illicit drug trafficking. There are plans to introduce a single currency, the eco, in ECOWAS member countries by 2020.

Members. Benin, Burkina Faso, Cabo Verde, Côte d'Ivoire, Gambia, Ghana, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Liberia, Mali, Niger, Nigeria, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Togo.

Organization. The institutions of ECOWAS are: the Commission, the Community Parliament, the Community Court of Justice and the ECOWAS Bank for Investment and Development.

Intergovernmental Authority on Development

The Intergovernmental Authority on Development was created on 21 March 1996 and has its origins in the Intergovernmental Authority on Drought and Development, which had been established in 1986. It has three priority areas of co-operation: conflict prevention, management and humanitarian affairs; infrastructure development; food security and environment protection.

Members. Djibouti, Eritrea, Ethiopia, Kenya, Somalia, South Sudan, Sudan, Uganda.

Headquarters: Ave. Georges Clemenceau, PO Box 2653, Djibouti, Republic of Djibouti.

Executive Secretary: Mahboub Maalim (Kenya).

Lake Chad Basin Commission

Established by a Convention and Statute signed on 22 May 1964 by Cameroon, Chad, Niger and Nigeria, and later by the Central African Republic (Sudan has also been admitted as an observer), to regulate and control utilization of the water and other natural resources in the Basin; to initiate, promote and co-ordinate natural resources development projects and research within the Basin area; and to examine complaints and promote settlement of disputes, with a view to promoting regional co-operation.

In Dec. 1977, at Enugu in Nigeria, the 3rd summit of heads of state of the commission signed the protocol for the Harmonization of the Regulations Relating to Fauna and Flora in member countries, and adopted plans for the multi-donor approach towards major integrated development for the conventional basin. An international campaign to save Lake Chad following a report on the environmental degradation of the conventional basin was launched by heads of state at the 8th summit of the Commission in Abuja in March 1994. Lake Chad has declined in size from 25,000 sq. km in the 1960s to its current size of 2,500 sq. km. The 10th summit, held in N'Djaména in 2000, saw agreement on a US$1m. inter-basin water transfer project.

Executive Secretary: Sanusi Imran Abdullahi (Nigeria).

Niger Basin Authority

As a result of a special meeting of the Niger River Commission (established in 1964), to discuss the revitalizing and restructuring of the organization to improve its efficiency, the Niger Basin Authority was established in 1980. Its responsibilities cover the harmonization and co-ordination of national development policies; the formulation of the general development policy of the Basin; the elaboration and implementation of an integrated development plan of the Basin; the initiation and monitoring of an orderly and rational regional policy for the utilization of the waters of the Niger River; the design and conduct of studies, researches and surveys; the formulation of plans, the construction, exploitation and maintenance of structure, and the elaboration of projects.

Members. Benin, Burkina Faso, Cameroon, Chad, Côte d'Ivoire, Guinea, Mali, Niger, Nigeria.

Official languages: English and French.

Headquarters: BP 729, Niamey, Niger.

Executive Secretary: Maj.-Gen. (ret'd) Collins Remy Umunakwe Ihekire (Nigeria).

Southern African Customs Union (SACU)

Established by the Customs Union Convention between the British Colony of Cape of Good Hope and the Orange Free State Boer Republic in 1889, the Southern African Customs Union was extended in 1910 to include the then Union of South Africa and British High Commission Territories in Africa and remained unchanged after these countries gained independence. South Africa was the dominant member with sole-decision making power over customs and excise policies until the 2002 SACU Agreement which created a permanent Secretariat, a Council of Ministers headed by a minister from one of the member states on a rotational basis, a Customs Union Commission, Technical Liaison Committees, a SACU tribunal and a SACU tariff board.

Members. Botswana, Lesotho, Namibia, South Africa, Swaziland.

Aims. To promote economic development through regional co-ordination of trade.

Headquarters: Private Bag 13285, Windhoek, Namibia.

Executive Secretary: Paulina Mbala Elago (Namibia).

Southern African Development Community (SADC)

The Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference (SADCC), the precursor of the Southern African Development Community (SADC), was formed in Lusaka, Zambia on 1 April 1980, following the adoption of the Lusaka Declaration—Southern Africa: Towards Economic Liberation—by the nine founding member states.

Members. The nine founder member countries were Angola, Botswana, Lesotho, Malaŵi, Mozambique, Swaziland, Tanzania, Zambia and Zimbabwe. The Democratic Republic of the Congo, Madagascar, Mauritius, Namibia, the Seychelles and South Africa have since joined. The Seychelles left in July 2004 but rejoined in Aug. 2007. As a result there are now 15 members.

Aims and Activities. SADC's Common Agenda includes the following: the promotion of sustainable and equitable economic growth and socio-economic development that will ensure poverty alleviation with the ultimate objective of its eradication; the promotion of common political values, systems and other shared values that are transmitted through institutions that are democratic, legitimate and effective; and the consolidation and maintenance of democracy, peace and security.

In contrast to the country-based co-ordination of sectoral activities and programmes, SADC has now adopted a more centralized approach through which the 21 sectoral programmes are grouped into four clusters; namely: Trade, Industry, Finance and Investment; Infrastructure and Services; Food, Agriculture and Natural Resources; Social and Human Development and Special Programmes.

SADC has made significant progress in implementing its integration agenda since the 1992 Treaty came into force. Since then, more than 20 Protocols to spearhead the sectoral programmes and activities have been signed. Those Protocols that have entered into force include: Immunities and Privileges; Combating Illicit Drugs; Energy; Transport, Communications and Meteorology; Shared Watercourse Systems; Mining; Trade; Education and Training; Tourism; and Health.

Agency for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean (OPANAL)

The Agency (Organismo para la Proscripción de las Armas Nucleares en la América Latina y el Caribe) was established following the Cuban missile crisis to guarantee implementation of the world's first Nuclear-Weapon-Free-Zone (NWFZ) in the region. Created by the Treaty of Tlatelolco (1967), OPANAL is an inter-governmental agency responsible for ensuring that the requirements of the Treaty are enforced. OPANAL has played a major role in establishing other NWFZs throughout the world.

Organization. The Agency consists of three main bodies: the General Conference which meets for biennial sessions and special sessions when deemed necessary; the Council of OPANAL consisting of five member states which meet every two months plus special meetings when necessary; and the Secretariat General.

Members of the Treaty. Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Bahamas, Barbados, Belize, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cuba, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Grenada, Guatemala, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Jamaica, Mexico, Nicaragua, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, St Kitts and Nevis, St Lucia, St Vincent and the Grenadines, Suriname, Trinidad and Tobago, Uruguay, Venezuela.

Andean Community

On 26 May 1969 an agreement was signed by Bolivia, Chile, Colombia, Ecuador and Peru establishing the Cartagena Agreement (also referred to as the Andean Pact or the Andean Group). Chile withdrew from the Group in 1976. Venezuela, which was actively involved, did not sign the agreement until 1973. In 1997 Peru announced its withdrawal for five years. In 2006 Venezuela left as a result of Colombia and Peru signing bilateral trade agreements with the USA.

The Andean Free Trade Area came into effect on 1 Feb. 1993 as the first step towards the creation of a common market. Bolivia, Colombia, Ecuador and Peru have fully liberalized their trade. A Common External Tariff for imports from third countries has been in effect since 1 Feb. 1995.

In March 1996 at the Group's 8th summit in Trujillo in Peru, the then member countries (Bolivia, Colombia, Ecuador, Peru, Venezuela) set up the Andean Community, to promote greater economic, commercial and political integration between member countries under a new Andean Integration System (SAI).

The member countries and bodies of the Andean Integration System are working to establish an Andean Common Market and to implement a Common Foreign Policy, a social agenda, a Community policy on border integration, and policies for achieving joint macroeconomic targets.

Organization. The Andean Presidential Council, composed of the presidents of the member states, is the highest-level body of the Andean Integration System (SAI). The Commission and the Andean Council of Foreign Ministers are legislative bodies. The General Secretariat is the executive body and the Andean Parliament is the deliberative body of the SAI. The Court of Justice, which began operating in 1984, resolves disputes between members and interprets legislation. The SAI has other institutions: Andean Development Corporation (CAF), Latin American Reserve Fund (FLAR), Simón Bolívar Andean University, Andean Business Advisory Council, Andean Labour Advisory Council and various Social Agreements.

Further to the treaty signed by 12 South American countries in May 2008, it is anticipated that the Andean Community will gradually be integrated into the Union of South American Nations.

Association of Caribbean States (ACS)

The Convention establishing the ACS was signed on 24 July 1994 in Cartagena de Indias, Colombia, with the aim of promoting consultation, co-operation and concerted action among all the countries of the Caribbean, comprising 25 full member states and three (now eight) associate members.

Members. Antigua and Barbuda, Bahamas, Barbados, Belize, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cuba, Dominica, Dominican Republic, El Salvador, Grenada, Guatemala, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Jamaica, Mexico, Nicaragua, Panama, St Kitts and Nevis, St Lucia, St Vincent and the Grenadines, Suriname, Trinidad and Tobago, Venezuela.

Associate members. Aruba, Curaçao, France (on behalf of French Guiana, St Barthélemy and St Martin), Guadeloupe, Martinique, Netherlands (on behalf of Bonaire, Saba and Sint Eustatius), Sint Maarten, and the Turks and Caicos Islands.

The CARICOM Secretariat, the Latin American Economic System (SELA), the Central American Integration System (SICA) and the Permanent Secretariat of the General Treaty on Central American Economic Integration (SIECA) were declared Founding Observers of the ACS in 1996. The United Nations Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (ECLAC) and the Caribbean Tourism Organization (CTO) were admitted as Founding Observers in 2000 and 2001 respectively.

Functions. The objectives of the ACS are enshrined in the Convention and are based on the following: the strengthening of the regional co-operation and integration process, with a view to creating an enhanced economic space in the region; preserving the environmental integrity of the Caribbean Sea which is regarded as the common patrimony of the peoples of the region; and promoting the sustainable development of the Greater Caribbean. Its current focal areas are trade, transport, sustainable tourism and natural disasters.

Organization. The main organs of the Association are the Ministerial Council and the Secretariat. There are Special Committees on: Trade Development and External Economic Relations; Sustainable Tourism; Transport; Natural Disasters; Budget and Administration. There is also a Council of National Representatives of the Special Fund responsible for overseeing resource mobilization efforts and project development.

Headquarters: ACS Secretariat, 5–7 Sweet Briar Road, St Clair, PO Box 660, Port of Spain, Trinidad and Tobago.

Caribbean Community (CARICOM)

Origin. The Treaty of Chaguaramas establishing the Caribbean Community and Common Market was signed by the prime ministers of Barbados, Guyana, Jamaica and Trinidad and Tobago at Chaguaramas, Trinidad, on 4 July 1973.

Six additional countries and territories (Belize, Dominica, Grenada, St Lucia, St Vincent and the Grenadines, Montserrat) signed the Treaty on 17 April 1974, and the Treaty came into effect for those countries on 1 May 1974. Antigua acceded to membership on 4 July that year; St Kitts and Nevis on 26 July; the Bahamas on 4 July 1983 (not Common Market); Suriname on 4 July 1995.

Members. Antigua and Barbuda, Bahamas, Barbados, Belize, Dominica, Grenada, Guyana, Haiti, Jamaica, Montserrat, St Kitts and Nevis, St Lucia, St Vincent and the Grenadines, Suriname, and Trinidad and Tobago. Anguilla, Bermuda, the British Virgin Islands, the Cayman Islands and the Turks and Caicos Islands are associate members.

Objectives. The Caribbean Community has the following objectives: improved standards of living and work; full employment of labour and other factors of production; accelerated, co-ordinated and sustained economic development and convergence; expansion of trade and economic relations with third States; enhanced levels of international competitiveness; organization for increased production and productivity; the achievement of a greater measure of economic leverage and effectiveness of member states in dealing with third States, groups of States and entities of any description; enhanced co-ordination of member states' foreign and foreign economic policies; enhanced functional co-operation.

At its 20th Meeting in July 1999 the Conference of Heads of Government of the Caribbean Community approved for signature the agreement establishing the Caribbean Court of Justice. They mandated the establishment of a Preparatory Committee comprising the Attorneys General of Barbados, Guyana, Jamaica, St Kitts and Nevis, St Lucia and Trinidad and Tobago assisted by other officials, to develop and implement a programme of public education within the Caribbean Community and to make appropriate arrangements for the inauguration of the Caribbean Court of Justice prior to the establishment of the CARICOM Single Market and Economy. To this end at its 23rd Meeting in July 2002 the Heads of Government agreed on immediate measures to inaugurate the Court by the second half of 2003, although delays meant it was not inaugurated until April 2005. Among the measures adopted was the establishment of a Trust Fund with a one-time settlement of US$100m. to finance the Court.

Structure. The Conference of Heads of Government is the principal organ of the Community, and its primary responsibility is to determine and provide the policy direction for the Community. It is the final authority on behalf of the Community for the conclusion of treaties and for entering into relationships between the Community and international organizations and States. It is responsible for financial arrangements to meet the expenses of the Community.

The Community Council of Ministers is the second highest organ of the Community and consists of Ministers of Government responsible for Community Affairs. The Community Council has primary responsibility for the development of Community strategic planning and co-ordination in the areas of economic integration, functional co-operation and external relations.

The Secretariat is the principal administrative organ of the Community. The Secretary-General is appointed by the Conference (on the recommendation of the Community Council) for a term not exceeding five years, and may be reappointed. The Secretary-General is the Chief Executive Officer of the Community and acts in that capacity at all meetings of the Community Organs.

Associate Institutions. Caribbean Development Bank (CDB); University of Guyana (UG); University of the West Indies (UWI); Caribbean Law Institute (CLI)/Caribbean Law Institute Centre (CLIC); Organisation of Eastern Caribbean States.

Organisation of Eastern Caribbean States (OECS)

Founded in 1981 when seven eastern Caribbean states signed the Treaty of Basseterre agreeing to co-operate with each other to promote unity and solidarity among the members.

Members. Antigua and Barbuda, Dominica, Grenada, Montserrat, St Kitts and Nevis, St Lucia, St Vincent and the Grenadines. Anguilla, the British Virgin Islands and Martinique have associate membership.

Functions. As set out in the Treaty of Basseterre: to promote co-operation among the member states and to defend their sovereignty and independence; to assist member states in the realization of their obligations and responsibilities to the international community with due regard to the role of international law as a standard of conduct in their relationships; to assist member states in the realization of their obligations and responsibilities to the international community with due regard to the role of international issues; to establish and maintain, where possible, arrangements for joint overseas representation and common services; to pursue these through its respective institutions by discussion of questions of common concern and by agreement on common action.

The Authority is the highest decision-making body of the OECS, comprising the heads of government of the member countries. The OECS is administered by a Central Secretariat (based in Castries, St Lucia), headed by a director general who is responsible to the Authority. The secretariat is divided into four principal divisions: the division of the office of the director general; social and sustainable development division; corporate services division; and economic affairs division.

In June 2010 a Revised Treaty of Basseterre was signed. It came into effect in Jan. 2011, establishing the OECS Economic Union. Under its terms, member states agreed to the removal of trade barriers, the free movement of labour and capital, the establishment of a regional assembly of parliamentarians and the implementation of a common external tariff. Membership of the Economic Union initially comprised Antigua and Barbuda, Dominica, Grenada, St Kitts and Nevis, St Lucia, and St Vincent and the Grenadines.

subsequently amended by the Protocol of Buenos Aires (1967) and the Protocol of Cartagena de Indias (1985).

Members. Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Bahamas, Barbados, Belize, Bolivia, Brazil, Canada, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cuba (suspended 1962*), Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Grenada, Guatemala, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Jamaica, Mexico, Nicaragua, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, St Kitts and Nevis, St Lucia, St Vincent and the Grenadines, Suriname, Trinidad and Tobago, USA, Uruguay, Venezuela. *In June 2009 the OAS voted to lift Cuba's suspension, although Cuba had stated that it did not wish to rejoin the organization.

Permanent Observers. Albania, Algeria, Angola, Armenia, Austria, Azerbaijan, Belgium, Benin, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Bulgaria, China, Croatia, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Denmark, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Estonia, EU, Finland, France, Georgia, Germany, Ghana, Greece, Holy See, Hungary, Iceland, India, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Kazakhstan, South Korea, Latvia, Lebanon, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Macedonia, Malta, Monaco, Montenegro, Morocco, the Netherlands, Nigeria, Norway, Pakistan, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Russia, Saudi Arabia, Serbia, Slovakia, Slovenia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sweden, Switzerland, Thailand, Tunisia, Turkey, UK, Ukraine, Vanuatu, Yemen.

Aims and Activities. To strengthen the peace and security of the continent; promote and consolidate representative democracy; promote by co-operative action economic, social and cultural development; and achieve an effective limitation of conventional weapons.

In Sept. 2001 an Inter-American Democratic Charter was adopted, declaring: 'The peoples of the Americas have a right to democracy and their governments have an obligation to promote and defend it.' The Charter compels the OAS to take action against any member state that disrupts its own democratic institutions.

Organization. Under its Charter the OAS accomplishes its purposes by means of:

(a) The General Assembly, which meets annually. The Secretary-General is elected by the General Assembly for five-year terms. The General Assembly approves the annual budget which is financed by quotas contributed by the member governments. The budget in 2012 amounted to US$85-35m.

(b) The Meeting of Consultation of Ministers of Foreign Affairs, held to consider problems of an urgent nature and of common interest.

(c) The Councils: The Permanent Council, which meets on a permanent basis at OAS headquarters and carries out decisions of the General Assembly, assists the member states in the peaceful settlement of disputes, acts as the Preparatory Committee of that Assembly, submits recommendations with regard to the functioning of the Organization, and considers the reports to the Assembly of the other organs. The Inter-American Council for Integral Development (CIDI) directs and monitors OAS technical co-operation programmes.

(d) The Inter-American Juridical Committee which acts as an advisory body to the OAS on juridical matters and promotes the development and codification of international law. 11 jurists, elected for four-year terms by the General Assembly, represent all the American States.

(e) The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights which oversees the observance and protection of human rights. Seven members elected for four-year terms by the General Assembly represent all the OAS member states.

(f) The General Secretariat, which is the central and permanent organ of the OAS.

(g) The Specialized Conferences, meeting to deal with special technical matters or to develop specific aspects of inter-American co-operation.

Organization of American States (OAS)

Origin. On 14 April 1890 representatives of the American republics, meeting in Washington at the First International Conference of American States, established an International Union of American Republics and, as its central office, a Commercial Bureau of American Republics, which later became the Pan-American Union. This international organization's object was to foster mutual understanding and co-operation among the nations of the western hemisphere. This led to the adoption on 30 April 1948 by the Ninth International Conference of American States, at Bogotá, Colombia, of the Charter of the Organization of American States. This co-ordinated the work of all the former independent official entities in the inter-American system and defined their mutual relationships. The Charter of 1948 was

Pacific Alliance

Origin and Aims. The Pacific Alliance was founded in June 2012 through the Pacific Alliance Framework Agreement. The group had informally come together with the signing of the Lima Declaration a year earlier.

Its principal aims are to encourage free trade and economic integration between member states, facilitate freedom of movement and pursue multilateral ties with other regions. A number of jointly-run embassies and consulates have been opened.

Organization. The Alliance holds regular summits attended by heads of member states. This is the leading decision-making body. There is also a Council of Ministers, comprising ministers of foreign affairs and foreign trade, as well as a High-Level Group made up of their deputy ministers.

Membership. In Feb. 2016 there were four members: Chile, Colombia, Mexico and Peru, with a combined GDP exceeding US$1.7trn. Costa Rica and Panama were in the process of joining as of Feb. 2016. Countries with observer status in Feb. 2016 were: Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, China, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Finland, France, Georgia, Germany, Greece, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Israel, Italy, Japan, South Korea, Morocco, Netherlands, New Zealand, Paraguay, Poland, Portugal, Singapore, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, Thailand, Trinidad and Tobago, Turkey, UK, USA, Uruguay.

SIECA (Secretaría de Integración Económica Centroamericana) was created by the General Treaty on Central American Economic Integration in Dec. 1960. The General Treaty incorporates the Agreement on the Regime for Central American Integration Industries. In Oct. 1993 the Protocol to the General Treaty on Central Economic Integration, known as the Guatemala Protocol, was signed.

Members. Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua, Panama.

Official language: Spanish.

Headquarters: 4a Avenida 10–25, Zona 14, Ciudad de Guatemala, Guatemala.

Secretary-General: Carmen Gisela Vergara (Panama).

Southern Common Market (MERCOSUR)

Founded in March 1991 by the Treaty of Asunción between Argentina, Brazil, Paraguay and Uruguay, MERCOSUR committed the signatories to the progressive reduction of tariffs culminating in the formation of a common market on 1 Jan. 1995. This duly came into effect as a free trade zone affecting 90% of commodities. A common external tariff averaging 14% applies to 80% of trade with countries outside MERCOSUR. Details were agreed at foreign minister level by the Protocol of Ouro Preto signed on 17 Dec. 1994.

In 1996 Chile negotiated a free trade agreement with MERCOSUR which came into effect on 1 Oct. Subsequently Bolivia, Chile, Colombia, Ecuador, Guyana, Peru and Suriname have all been granted associate member status. Bolivia began the accession process to full membership in 2012. Mexico and New Zealand have observer status. Venezuela, which had associate membership between 2004 and 2006, became the fifth member of MERCOSUR in July 2006, although it was not going to have full voting rights until all the other full members had ratified its entry into the organization. Paraguay was the only country still to approve Venezuela's full membership, but it was suspended from MERCOSUR in June 2012 following the impeachment of its president, Fernando Lugo. With Paraguay suspended, Venezuela was then formally admitted in July 2012. Paraguay was readmitted in Aug. 2013 after the swearing-in ceremony of its new democratically-elected president, Horacio Cartes.

Organization. The member states' foreign ministers form a Council responsible for leading the integration process, the chairmanship of which rotates every six months. The permanent executive body is the Common Market Group of member states, which takes decisions by consensus. There is a Trade Commission and Joint Parliamentary Commission, an arbitration tribunal whose decisions are binding on member countries, and a secretariat in Montevideo.

Further to the treaty signed by 12 South American countries in May 2008, it is anticipated that MERCOSUR will gradually be integrated into the Union of South American Nations.

Union of South American Nations (UNASUR)

History. Established in May 2008 in Brazil, it is anticipated that the Union of South American Nations will eventually supersede MERCOSUR and the Andean Community, creating an enlarged customs union with a single market, parliament, secretariat and central bank, based on the European Union structure. UNASUR is the successor body to the now defunct South American Community of Nations (CSN/SACN), founded in 2004. Despite initial problems, progress was made at UNASUR's fourth Summit in Nov. 2010 culminating in the 'Georgetown Declaration', with the attending heads of state and government and foreign ministers highlighting their commitment to working together to achieve a better South America. The Treaty establishing UNASUR became effective on 11 March 2011.

Organization. There is a permanent secretariat based in Quito, Ecuador. A proposed South American parliament is planned for Cochabamba, Bolivia. The heads of state of member nations meet annually.

Members. Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Ecuador, Guyana, Paraguay (suspended following the impeachment of President Fernando Lugo in June 2012 but then readmitted in Aug. 2013 following the swearing-in of Horacio Cartes as its new democratically-elected president), Peru, Suriname, Uruguay, Venezuela.

Asian Development Bank

A multilateral development finance institution established in 1966 to promote economic and social progress in the Asian and Pacific region, the Bank's strategic objectives are to foster economic growth, reduce poverty, improve the status of women, support human development (including population planning) and protect the environment.

The bank's capital stock is owned by 67 member countries, 48 regional and 19 non-regional. The bank makes loans and equity investments, and provides technical assistance grants for the preparation and execution of development projects and programmes; promotes investment of public and private capital for development purposes; and assists in co-ordinating development policies and plans in its developing member countries (DMCs).

The bank gives special attention to the needs of smaller or less developed countries, giving priority to projects that contribute to the economic growth of the region and promote regional co-operation. Loans from ordinary capital resources on non-concessional terms account for about 80% of cumulative lending. Loans from the bank's principal special fund, the Asian Development Fund, are made on highly concessional terms almost exclusively to the poorest borrowing countries.

Regional members. Afghanistan, Armenia, Australia, Azerbaijan, Bangladesh, Bhutan, Brunei, Cambodia, China, Cook Islands, Fiji, Georgia, Hong Kong, India, Indonesia, Japan, Kazakhstan, Kiribati, South Korea, Kyrgyzstan, Laos, Malaysia, Maldives, Marshall Islands, Micronesia, Mongolia, Myanmar, Nauru, Nepal, New Zealand, Pakistan, Palau, Papua New Guinea, Philippines, Samoa, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Sri Lanka, Taiwan, Tajikistan, Thailand, Timor-Leste, Tonga, Turkmenistan, Tuvalu, Uzbekistan, Vanuatu and Vietnam.

Non-regional members. Austria, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Ireland, Italy, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, Turkey, UK, USA.

Organization. The bank's highest policy-making body is its Board of Governors, which meets annually. Its executive body is the 12-member Board of Directors (each with an alternate), eight from the regional members and four non-regional. The ADB has resident missions in a number of countries. There are also three representative offices: in Tokyo, Frankfurt and Washington, D.C.

Official language: English.

Asian Infrastructure Investment Bank (AIIB)

The Chinese government announced proposals for the establishment of the Asian Infrastructure Investment Bank in Oct. 2013. Articles of agreement, which form the bank's legal basis, were adopted in May 2015 and the institution was formally launched in Dec. that year, with an initial capitalization of US$100bn.

Aims and Activities. The bank aims to provide financial backing for infrastructure development projects in Asia and to promote regional co-operation to address development challenges. It is expected that the AIIB will work in co-operation with existing international development banks.

Organization. The senior decision-making body is the Board of Governors, comprising one governor from each member state. It is scheduled to meet once a year. A Board of Directors, made up of 12 Governors, oversees the day-to-day running of the organization. There is also a Secretariat, headed by the Secretary-General.

Members. By the end of 2015, 57 nations (37 regional and 20 non-regional) had signed the founding Articles of Agreement and have until the end of 2016 to ratify them in order to secure membership. On 25 Dec. 2015 the AIIB came into force when ratification passed the statutory requirement of at least ten countries holding over 50% of initial capital stock subscriptions. As of Feb. 2016, 30 countries had become full members.

Asia-Pacific Economic Co-operation (APEC)

Origin and Aims. APEC was established in 1989 to take advantage of the interdependence among Asia-Pacific economies, by facilitating economic growth for all participants and enhancing a sense of community in the region. Begun as an informal dialogue group, APEC is the premier forum for facilitating economic growth, co-operation, trade and investment in the Asia-Pacific region. APEC has a membership of 21 economic jurisdictions that together account for 40% of the world population, 43% of world trade and 55% of world GDP. APEC is working to achieve what are referred to as the 'Bogor Goals' of free and open trade and investment in the Asia-Pacific area.

Members. Australia, Brunei, Canada, Chile, China, Hong Kong, Indonesia, Japan, South Korea, Malaysia, Mexico, New Zealand, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Philippines, Russia, Singapore, Taiwan, Thailand, USA and Vietnam.

Activities. APEC works in three broad areas to meet the Bogor Goals. These three broad work areas, known as APEC's 'Three Pillars', are: Trade and Investment Liberalisation—reducing and eliminating tariff and non-tariff barriers to trade and investment, and opening markets; Business Facilitation—reducing the costs of business transactions, improving access to trade information and co-ordinating policy and business strategies to facilitate growth, and free and open trade; Economic and Technical Co-operation—assisting member economies build the necessary capacities to take advantage of global trade and the new economy. In 2015 the Philippines hosted APEC meetings under the theme 'Building Inclusive Economies, Building a Better World'. The host for 2016 is Peru, using the theme 'Quality Growth and Human Development'.

Association of South East Asian Nations (ASEAN)

History and Membership. ASEAN is a regional inter-governmental organization formed by the governments of Indonesia, Malaysia, the Philippines, Singapore and Thailand through the Bangkok Declaration which was signed by their foreign ministers on 8 Aug. 1967. Brunei joined in 1984, Vietnam in 1995, Laos and Myanmar in 1997 and Cambodia in 1999. Papua New Guinea also has observer status. The ASEAN Charter, signed in Nov. 2007, established the group as a legal entity and created permanent representation for members at its secretariat in Jakarta.

Objectives. The main objectives are to accelerate economic growth, social progress and cultural development, to promote active collaboration and mutual assistance in matters of common interest, to ensure the political and economic stability of the South East Asian region, and to maintain close co-operation with existing international and regional organizations with similar aims.

Activities. Principal projects concern economic co-operation and development, with the intensification of intra-ASEAN and global trade; joint research and technological programmes; co-operation in transportation and communications; promotion of tourism, South East Asian studies, cultural, scientific, educational and administrative exchanges. An ASEAN Free Trade Area (AFTA) agreement was signed in 1992. ASEAN member countries have in the meantime made significant progress in the lowering of intra-regional tariffs through the Common Effective Preferential Tariff (CEPT) Scheme for AFTA. The ASEAN Charter of 2007 established a schedule for the elimination of non-tariff barriers and other restrictions on trade. On 1 Jan. 2010 ASEAN signed a free trade agreement with China, creating the world's largest free trade area by population (encompassing 1.9bn. people) and the third largest by economic value.

Heads of government who met in Bangkok in Dec. 1995 established a South-East Asia Nuclear-Free Zone, which was extended to cover offshore economic exclusion zones. Individual signatories were to decide whether to allow port visits or transportation of nuclear weapons by foreign powers through territorial waters. The first formal meeting of the ASEAN Regional Forum (ARF) to discuss security issues in the region took place in July 1994 and was attended by the then six members (Brunei, Indonesia, Malaysia, Philippines, Singapore and Thailand). Also in attendance were ASEAN's dialogue partners (Australia, Canada, the EU, Japan, South Korea, New Zealand and the USA), consultative partners (China and Russia) and observers (Laos, Papua New Guinea and Vietnam). The ARF ministerial meeting now takes place on an annual basis.

ASEAN is committed to resolving the dispute over sovereignty of the Spratly Islands, a group of more than 100 small islands and reefs in the South China Sea. Some or all of the largely uninhabited islands have been claimed by Brunei, China, Malaysia, the Philippines, Taiwan and Vietnam. The disputed areas have oil and gas resources. The subject dominated the April 2013 ASEAN summit after tensions rose in 2012 as China pressed its claims, and did so again at the 2014 summit (following clashes between Chinese and Vietnamese coastguard vessels in disputed waters) and once more at the 2015 summit.

The ASEAN Economic Community (AEC) was established in Dec. 2015. Originally outlined in 1997, the AEC aims to produce a single market across all ASEAN member states.

Organization. The highest authority is the meeting of Heads of Government, which takes place twice annually. The highest policy-making body is the annual Meeting of Foreign Ministers, commonly known as AMM, the ASEAN Ministerial Meeting, which convenes in each of the member countries on a rotational basis in alphabetical order. The AEM (ASEAN Economic Meeting) meets each year to direct ASEAN economic co-operation. The AEM and AMM report jointly to the heads of government at summit meetings. The central secretariat in Jakarta is headed by the Secretary-General, a post that revolves among the member states in alphabetical order every five years.

ASEAN-Mekong Basin Development Co-operation (Mekong Group)

The ministers and representatives of Brunei, Cambodia, China, Indonesia, Laos, Malaysia, Myanmar, Philippines, Singapore, Thailand and Vietnam met in Kuala Lumpur on 17 June 1996 and agreed the following objectives for the Group: to co-operate in the economic and social development of the Mekong Basin area and strengthen the link between it and ASEAN member countries, through a process of dialogue and common project identification.

Priorities include: development of infrastructure capacities in the fields of transport, telecommunications, irrigation and energy; development of trade and investment-generating activities; development of the agricultural sector to enhance production; sustainable development of forestry resources and development of mineral resources; development of the industrial sector, especially small to medium enterprises; development of tourism; human resource development and support for training; co-operation in the fields of science and technology.

Colombo Plan

History. Founded in 1950 to promote the development of newly independent Asian member countries, the Colombo Plan has grown from a group of seven Commonwealth nations into an organization of 25 countries. Originally the Plan was conceived for a period of six years but the Consultative Committee gave the Plan an indefinite life span in 1980.

Members. Afghanistan, Australia, Bangladesh, Bhutan, Brunei, Fiji, India, Indonesia, Islamic Republic of Iran, Japan, South Korea, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Malaysia, Maldives, Mongolia, Myanmar, Nepal, New Zealand, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Philippines, Saudi Arabia, Singapore, Sri Lanka, Thailand, USA and Vietnam.

Aims. The aims of the Colombo Plan are: (1) to provide a forum for discussion, at local level, of development needs; (2) to facilitate development assistance by encouraging members to participate as donors and recipients of technical co-operation; and (3) to execute programmes to advance development within member countries. The Plan currently has the following programmes: Programme for Public Administration (PPA); South-South Technical Co-operation Data Bank Programme (SSTC/DB); Drug Advisory Programme (DAP); Programme for Private Sector Development (PPSD); Colombo Plan Staff College for Technician Education (CPSC).

Structure. The Consultative Committee is the principal policy-making body of the Colombo Plan. Consisting of all member countries, it meets every two years to review the economic and social progress of members, exchange views on technical co-operation programmes and review the Plan's activities. The Colombo Plan Council represents each member government and meets several times a year to identify development issues, recommend measures to be taken and ensure implementation.

Economic Co-operation Organization (ECO)

The Economic Co-operation Organization (ECO) is an intergovernmental regional organization established in 1985 by Iran, Pakistan and Turkey and the successor of the Regional Co-operation for Development (RCD). ECO was expanded in 1992 to include seven new members: Afghanistan, Azerbaijan, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Tajikistan, Turkmenistan and Uzbekistan. The organization's objectives, stipulated in its Charter, the Treaty of İzmir, include the promotion of conditions for sustained economic growth in the region. Transport and communications, trade and investment, and energy are the high priority areas in ECO's scheme of work although industry, agriculture, health, science and education, drug control and human development are also on the agenda.

The Council of Ministers (COM) remains the highest policy and decision-making body of the organization, meeting at least once a year and chaired by rotation among the member states.

ECO Summits were instituted with the First Summit held in Tehran in 1992. A further 11 Summits have been held since then, most recently in Baku in 2012.

The long-term perspectives and priorities of ECO are defined in the form of two Action Plans: the Quetta Plan of Action and the Istanbul Declaration and Economic Co-operation Strategy.

ECO enjoys observer status with the United Nations, World Trade Organization and the Organization of Islamic Conference.

Pacific Islands Forum (PIF)

In Oct. 2000 the South Pacific Forum changed its name to the Pacific Islands Forum. As the South Pacific Forum it held its first meeting of Heads of Government in New Zealand in 1971. The Agreement Establishing the Forum Secretariat defines the membership of the Forum and the Secretariat. Decisions are reached by consensus. The administrative arm of the Forum, known officially as the Pacific Islands Forum Secretariat, is based in Suva, Fiji. In Oct. 1994 the Forum was granted observer status to the UN.

Members. Australia, Cook Islands, Fiji, Kiribati, Marshall Islands, Micronesia, Nauru, New Zealand, Niue, Palau, Papua New Guinea, Samoa, Solomon Islands, Tonga, Tuvalu and Vanuatu.

Associate Members. French Polynesia, New Caledonia, Tokelau.

Observers. The ACP Group, American Samoa, Asian Development Bank, the Commonwealth, Guam, the Commonwealth of the Northern Marianas, the United Nations, Wallis and Futuna, Western and Central Pacific Fisheries Commission, and the World Bank. Special Observers. International Organization for Migration, Timor-Leste.

Functions. The Secretariat's mission is to provide policy options to the Pacific Islands Forum, and to promote Forum decisions and regional and international co-operation. The organization seeks to promote political stability and regional security; enhance the management of economies and the development process; improve trade and investment; and efficiently manage the resources of the Secretariat.

Activities. The Secretariat has four core divisions: Trade and Investment; Political and International Affairs; Development and Economic Policy; Corporate Services. It provides policy advice to members on social, economic and political issues. Since 1989 the Forum has held Post Forum Dialogues with key dialogue partners at ministerial level. There are currently 17 partners: Canada, China, Cuba, EU, France, India, Indonesia, Italy, Japan, South Korea, Malaysia, Philippines, Spain, Thailand, Turkey, UK and USA.

Organization. Established in 1972, the South Pacific Bureau for Economic Co-operation (SPEC) began as a trade bureau before being reorganized as the South Pacific Forum Secretariat in 1988. The Secretariat is headed by a Secretary-General and Deputy Secretary-General who form the Executive. The governing body is the Forum Officials Committee, which acts as an intermediary between the Secretariat and the Forum. The Secretariat operates four Trade Offices in Auckland, Beijing, Sydney and Tokyo.

The Secretary-General is the permanent Chair of the Council of Regional Organisations in the Pacific (CROP), which brings together nine main regional organizations in the Pacific region: Forum Fisheries Agency (FFA); Pacific Aviation Safety Office (PASO); Pacific Islands Development Programme (PIDP); Pacific Islands Forum Secretariat (PIFS); Pacific Power Association (PPA); Secretariat for the Pacific Community (SPC); Secretariat of the Pacific Regional Environment Programme (SPREP); South Pacific Tourism Organisation (SPTO); and University of the South Pacific (USP).

Secretariat of the Pacific Community (SPC)

Until Feb. 1998 known as the South Pacific Commission, this is a regional intergovernmental organization founded in 1947 under an Agreement commonly referred to as the Canberra Agreement. It is funded by assessed contributions from its 26 members and by voluntary contributions from member and non-member countries, international organizations and other sources.

Members. American Samoa, Australia, Cook Islands, Fiji, France, French Polynesia, Guam, Kiribati, Marshall Islands, Federated States of Micronesia, Nauru, New Caledonia, New Zealand, Niue, Northern Mariana Islands, Palau, Papua New Guinea, Pitcairn Islands, Samoa, Solomon Islands, Tokelau, Tonga, Tuvalu, USA, Vanuatu, and Wallis and Futuna.

Functions. The SPC has three main areas of work: land resources, marine resources and social resources. It conducts research and provides technical assistance and training in these areas to member Pacific Island countries and territories of the Pacific.

Organization. The Conference of the Pacific Community is the governing body of the Community. Its key focus is to appoint the Director-General, to consider major national or regional policy issues and to note changes to the Financial and Staff Regulations approved by the CRGA, the Committee of Representatives of Governments and Administrations. It meets every two years. The CRGA meets once a year and is the principal decision-making organ of the Community. There are also regional offices in Fiji and Micronesia.

Headquarters: BP D5, 98848 Nouméa Cedex, New Caledonia.

Shanghai Cooperation Organisation (SCO)

Origin and Aims. The Shanghai Cooperation Organisation was founded in June 2001, having evolved out of the Shanghai Five grouping formed in 1996. All member states come from the Eurasia region.

Its principal aims are to promote closer defence, economic and cultural co-operation between member states and to 'strengthen mutual confidence and good neighbourly relations'.

Organization. The SCO's highest decision-making organ is the Heads of State Council, which meets once a year, as does a Heads of Government Council. There are also regular meetings of member states' foreign ministers and other government officials. In addition, there are two permanent bodies—a Secretariat based in Beijing, China and a Regional Counter-Terrorism Structure in Tashkent, Uzbekistan. The SCO has observer status at the UN General Assembly.

Membership. As of Feb. 2016 there were six permanent members: China, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Russia, Tajikistan and Uzbekistan. There are also six observer states (Afghanistan, Belarus, India, Iran, Mongolia and Pakistan) and six dialogue partners (Armenia, Azerbaijan, Cambodia, Nepal, Sri Lanka and Turkey). At the SCO annual summit in Sept. 2014 a framework was put in place for admitting new members. India, Pakistan and Iran have requested full membership, with India and Pakistan expected to be granted that status during 2016. The SCO would then comprise member states accounting for over 40% of the world's population.

South Asian Association for Regional Co-operation (SAARC)

SAARC was established to accelerate the process of economic and social development in member states. The foreign ministers of the seven member countries met for the first time in New Delhi in Aug. 1983 and adopted the Declaration on South Asian Regional Co-operation whereby an Integrated Programme of Action (IPA) was launched. The charter establishing SAARC was adopted at the first summit meeting in Dhaka in Dec. 1985.

Members. Afghanistan, Bangladesh, Bhutan, India, Maldives, Nepal, Pakistan, Sri Lanka. Observers. Australia, China, EU, Iran, Japan, South Korea, Mauritius, Myanmar, USA.

Objectives. To promote the welfare of the peoples of South Asia; to accelerate economic growth, social progress and cultural development; to promote and strengthen collective self-reliance among members; to promote active collaboration and mutual assistance in the economic, social, cultural, technical and scientific fields; to strengthen co-operation with other developing countries and among themselves. Agreed areas of co-operation under the Integrated Programme of Action (IPA) include agriculture and rural development; human resource development; environment, meteorology and forestry; science and technology; transport and communications; energy; and social development.

A SAARC Preferential Trading Arrangement (SAPTA) designed to reduce trade tariffs between SAARC member states was signed in April 1993, entering into force in Dec. 1995. In 1998 at the Tenth Summit in Colombo, the importance of achieving a South Asian Free Trade Area (SAFTA) as mandated by the Malé Summit in 1997 was reiterated and it was decided to set up a Committee of Experts to work on drafting a comprehensive treaty regime for creating a free trade area. The Colombo Summit agreed that the text of this regulatory framework would be finalized by 2001.

Organization. The highest authority of the Association rests with the heads of state or government, who meet annually at Summit level. The Council of Foreign Ministers, which meets twice a year, formulates policy, reviews progress and decides on new areas of co-operation. The Council is supported by a Standing Committee of Foreign Secretaries, by the Programming Committee and by 11 Technical Committees which are responsible for individual areas of SAARC's activities. There is a secretariat in Kathmandu, headed by a Secretary-General, who is assisted in his work by seven Directors, appointed by the Secretary-General upon nomination by member states for a period of three years which may in special circumstances be extended.

Gulf Co-operation Council (GCC)

Origin. Also referred to as the Co-operation Council for the Arab States of the Gulf (CCASG), the Council was established on 25 May 1981 on signature of the Charter by Bahrain, Kuwait, Oman, Qatar, Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates.

Aims. To assure security and stability of the region through economic and political co-operation; promote, expand and enhance economic ties on solid foundations, in the best interests of the people; co-ordinate and unify economic, financial and monetary policies, as well as commercial and industrial legislation and customs regulations; achieve self-sufficiency in basic foodstuffs.

Organization. The Supreme Council formed by the heads of member states is the highest authority. Its presidency rotates, based on the alphabetical order of the names of the member states. It holds one regular annual session in addition to a mid-year consultation session. Attached to the Supreme Council are the Commission for the Settlement of Disputes and the Consultative Commission. The Ministerial Council is formed of the Foreign Ministers of the member states or other delegated ministers and meets quarterly. The Secretariat consists of the following sectors: Political Affairs, Military Affairs, Legal Affairs, Human and Environment Affairs, Information Centre, Media Department, Gulf Standardization Organization (GSO), GCC Patent Office, Secretary-General's Office, GCC Delegation in Brussels, Technical Telecommunications Bureau in Bahrain. In Jan. 2003 it launched a customs union, introducing a 5% duty on foreign imports across the trade bloc.

Finance. The annual budget of the GCC Secretariat is shared equally by the six member states.

League of Arab States

Origin. The League of Arab States (often referred to as the Arab League) is a voluntary association of sovereign Arab states, established by a Pact signed in Cairo on 22 March 1945 by the representatives of Egypt, Iraq, Saudi Arabia, Syria, Lebanon, Jordan and Yemen. It seeks to promote closer ties among member states and to co-ordinate their economic, cultural and security policies with a view to developing collective co-operation, protecting national security and maintaining the independence and sovereignty of member states, in order to enhance the potential for joint Arab action across all fields.

Members. Algeria, Bahrain, Comoros, Djibouti, Egypt, Iraq, Jordan, Kuwait, Lebanon, Libya, Mauritania, Morocco, Oman, Palestine, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, Somalia, Sudan, Syria*, Tunisia, United Arab Emirates and Republic of Yemen. Observers. Brazil, Eritrea, India and Venezuela. *Membership suspended since Nov. 2011 after calls for the government to end violence against civilian protesters by a set date were ignored.

Aims and Activities. In the political field, the League is entrusted with defending the supreme interests and national causes of the Arab world through the implementation of joint action plans at regional and international levels. It examines any disputes that may arise between member states with a view to finding a peaceful resolution. The Joint Defence and Economic Co-operation Treaty signed in 1950 provided for the establishment of a Joint Defence Council as well as an Economic Council (renamed the Economic and Social Council in 1977). Economic, social and cultural activities constitute principal and vital elements of the joint action initiative.

Against the backdrop of the 2011 Arab Spring, the League backed a UN resolution authorizing action in Libya against Col. Gaddafi's air defences and suspended Syria for its government's oppression of the opposition movement. At the 2012 Arab League summit, Syria's seat was granted in principle to the opposition, although it remained vacant as of Feb. 2016. In March 2014 Secretary-General Nabil el-Araby had stated that it would not be filled until the opposition had completed the formation of its institutions. In 2011 the League supported a Palestinian bid for UN recognition and in 2014 championed an unsuccessful move to push through a UN resolution calling for an Israeli-Palestinian peace deal within 12 months and the withdrawal of Israeli troops from the disputed territory by 2017.

Arab Common Market. An Arab Common Market came into operation on 1 Jan. 1965. Initial plans to abolish customs duties on agricultural products, natural resources and industrial products by incremental reductions never came to fruition although the concept remains an ambition shared by many people in the Arab world.

Organization. The machinery of the League consists of a Council, 11 specialized ministerial committees entrusted with drawing up common policies for the regulation and advancement of co-operation in their fields (information, internal affairs, justice, housing, transport, social affairs, youth and sports, health, environment, telecommunications and electricity), and a permanent secretariat.

The League is considered to be a regional organization within the framework of the United Nations at which its Secretary-General is an observer. It has permanent delegations in New York and Geneva for the UN and in Addis Ababa for the African Union (AU), as well as offices in a number of cities throughout the world.

Organization of Arab Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC)

Established in 1968 to promote co-operation and close ties between member states in economic activities related to the oil industry; to determine ways of safeguarding their legitimate interests, both individual and collective, in the oil industry; to unite their efforts so as to ensure the flow of oil to consumer markets on equitable and reasonable terms; and to create a favourable climate for the investment of capital and expertise in their petroleum industries.

Members. Algeria, Bahrain, Egypt, Iraq, Kuwait, Libya, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, Syria, Tunisia*, United Arab Emirates. *Tunisia's membership was made inactive in 1986.

Headquarters: PO Box 20501, Safat 13066, Kuwait.

Secretary-General: Abbas Ali Naqi (Kuwait).

Organization of the Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC)

Origin and Aims. Founded in Baghdad in 1960 by Iran, Iraq, Kuwait, Saudi Arabia and Venezuela. The principal aims are: to unify the petroleum policies of member countries and determine the best means for safeguarding their interests, individually and collectively; to devise ways and means of ensuring the stabilization of prices in international oil markets with a view to eliminating harmful and unnecessary fluctuations; and to secure a steady income for the producing countries, an efficient, economic and regular supply of petroleum to consuming nations, and a fair return on their capital to those investing in the petroleum industry. It is estimated that OPEC members possess 75% of the world's known reserves of crude petroleum, of which about two-thirds are in the Middle East. OPEC countries account for about 43% of world oil production (55% in the mid-1970s).

Members. (Feb. 2016) Algeria, Angola, Ecuador, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Kuwait, Libya, Nigeria, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, United Arab Emirates and Venezuela. Membership applications may be made by any other country having substantial net exports of crude petroleum, which has fundamentally similar interests to those of member countries. Gabon became an associated member in 1973 and a full member in 1975, but in 1996 withdrew owing to difficulty in meeting its percentage contribution. Ecuador joined the Organization in 1973 but left in 1992; it then rejoined in Oct. 2007. Indonesia joined in 1962 but left in 2008 as it had ceased to be an oil exporter; it then rejoined in Jan. 2016 despite being a net oil importer.

Organization. The main organs are the Conference, the Board of Governors and the Secretariat. The Conference, which is the supreme authority meeting at least twice a year, consists of delegations from each member country, normally headed by the respective minister of oil, mines or energy. All decisions, other than those concerning procedural matters, must be adopted unanimously.

OPEC Fund for International Development

The OPEC Fund for International Development (OFID) was established in 1976 as the OPEC Special Fund, with the aim of providing financial aid on concessional terms to developing countries (other than OPEC member states) and international development agencies whose beneficiaries are developing countries. In 1980 the Fund was transformed into a permanent autonomous international agency and renamed the OPEC Fund for International Development. It is administered by a Ministerial Council and a Governing Board. Each member country is normally represented on the Council by its finance minister, or if not then by another designated person.

The initial endowment of the fund amounted to US$800m. By the end of Sept. 2015 OFID's total approved commitments (including public sector operations, private sector operations, trade finance operations, grants and contributions to other institutions) stood at US$18,871m. OFID had approved 3,504 operations by 30 Sept. 2015, including US$11,020m. for project financing, US$724m. for balance-of-payments support, US$333m. for programme funding and US$281m. for debt relief under the Highly Indebted Poor Countries Initiative. In addition, and through its private sector window, OFID had approved financing worth a total of US$2,482m. in 229 operations in support of private sector entities in Africa, Asia, Latin America, the Caribbean and Europe. Through its grants programme OFID had also committed a total of US$613m. in support of a wide range of initiatives, ranging from technical assistance, research and emergency aid to dedicated operations to combat HIV/AIDS and hardship in Palestine.

Global Environment Facility (GEF)

Origin. The Global Environment Facility is an independent financial organization that brings together 183 countries in partnership with international institutions, civil society bodies and the private sector to address global environmental issues and support national development initiatives. It was established in 1991 under the aegis of the World Bank, becoming a permanent, separate institution in 1994.

Activities. As of Feb. 2016 the GEF had provided US$14.5bn. in grants and co-financed nearly 4,000 projects in 183 countries totalling US$75.4bn. since 1991. It also serves as the financial mechanism for the Convention on Biological Diversity, the UN Framework Convention on Climate Change, the Stockholm Convention on Persistent Organic Pollutants, the UN Convention to Combat Desertification and the Minamata Convention on Mercury (an agreement to protect human health and the environment from the effects of mercury emissions).

Organization. There is a GEF Assembly comprising representatives of each member country that meets every three to four years. The GEF Council is the main governing body, developing, adopting and evaluating specific programmes. The secretariat is based in Washington, D.C., and there are also a scientific and technical advisory panel, an evaluation office and a number of agencies managing particular projects.

Headquarters: 1818 H St., NW, Mail Stop P4-400, Washington, D.C., 20433, USA.

Chief Executive Officer and Chair: Dr Naoko Ishii (Japan).

Greenpeace International

Origin. Greenpeace evolved out of a series of environmental and anti-nuclear protests in Canada in the late 1960s and early 1970s. In 1985 it became the focus of international attention when agents of the French security services blew up the organization's flagship, Rainbow Warrior, while it was in Auckland Harbour, New Zealand.

Mission. Greenpeace is an independent global environmental organization that aims to secure a planet 'that is ecologically healthy and able to nurture life in all its diversity'. It campaigns to: prevent pollution and abuse of the Earth's land, oceans, air and fresh water; end all nuclear threats; and promote peace, global disarmament and non-violence.

Organization. Greenpeace International has its headquarters in Amsterdam in the Netherlands, from where it co-ordinates worldwide campaigns and monitors and advises national and regional offices in 55 countries.

Environmental Organizations

Friends of the Earth International

Origin. Friends of the Earth was founded in 1971 by a network of environmental activists from France, Sweden, the UK and the USA.

Financial contributions from governments, political parties and commercial organizations are not accepted. Funding is provided by individual supporters and foundation grants. In 2013 Greenpeace had 3m. individual supporters.

World Wide Fund for Nature (WWF)

Origin. WWF was officially formed and registered as a charity on 11 Sept. 1961. The first National Appeal was launched in the United Kingdom on 23 Nov. 1961, shortly followed by the United States and Switzerland.

Mission. WWF has as its mission preserving genetic, species and ecosystem diversity; ensuring that the use of renewable natural resources is sustainable now and in the longer term, for the benefit of all life on Earth; promoting actions to reduce to a minimum pollution and the wasteful exploitation and consumption of resources and energy. WWF's ultimate goal is to stop, and eventually reverse, the accelerating degradation of our planet's natural environment, and to help build a future in which humans live in harmony with nature.

Organization. WWF is the world's largest and most experienced independent conservation organization with over 5m. supporters (including 1.1m. in the USA) and a global network of 33 National Organizations and three associate offices.

The National Organizations carry out conservation activities in their own countries and contribute technical expertise and funding to WWF's international conservation programme. The Programme Offices implement WWF's fieldwork, advise national and local governments, and raise public understanding of conservation issues.

Treaties

Antarctic Treaty

Antarctica is an island continent some 15.5m. sq. km in area which lies almost entirely within the Antarctic Circle. Its surface is composed of an ice sheet over rock, and it is uninhabited except for research and other workers in the course of duty. It is in general ownerless: for countries with territorial claims, see ARGENTINA; AUSTRALIA: Australian Antarctic Territory; CHILE; FRANCE: Southern and Antarctic Territories; NEW ZEALAND: Ross Dependency; NORWAY: Queen Maud Land; UNITED KINGDOM: British Antarctic Territory.

12 countries which had maintained research stations in Antarctica during International Geophysical Year, 1957–58 (Argentina, Australia, Belgium, Chile, France, Japan, New Zealand, Norway, South Africa, the USSR, the UK and the USA) signed the Antarctic Treaty (Washington Treaty) on 1 Dec. 1959. Austria, Belarus, Brazil, Bulgaria, Canada, China, Colombia, Cuba, Czech Republic, Denmark, Ecuador, Estonia, Finland, Germany, Greece, Guatemala, Hungary, Iceland, India, Italy, Kazakhstan, North Korea, South Korea, Malaysia, Monaco, Mongolia, the Netherlands, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Poland, Portugal, Romania, Slovakia, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, Turkey, Ukraine, Uruguay and Venezuela subsequently acceded to the Treaty. The Treaty reserves the Antarctic area south of 60° S. lat. for peaceful purposes, provides for international co-operation in scientific investigation and research, and preserves, for the duration of the Treaty, the status quo with regard to territorial sovereignty, rights and claims. The Treaty entered into force on 23 June 1961. The 53 nations party to the Treaty (29 consultative or voting members and 24 non-consultative parties) meet biennially.

An agreement reached in Madrid in April 1991 and signed by all 39 parties in Oct. imposes a ban on mineral exploitation in Antarctica for 50 years, at the end of which any one of the 29 voting parties may request a review conference. After this the ban may be lifted by agreement of three quarters of the nations then voting, which must include the present 29.

Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty (NPT)

The Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons opened for signatories on 1 July 1968. It came into force on 5 March 1970. A review meeting takes place every five years. The initial treaty was limited to a 25-year term but it was extended indefinitely in 1995.

The treaty aims to prevent the spread of nuclear weapons and weapons technology, to promote co-operation in the peaceful uses of nuclear energy and to further the goal of achieving nuclear disarmament and general and complete disarmament. The International Atomic Energy Agency (see page 25) is responsible for setting safeguards to ensure compliance.

Of the treaty's 190 members only five have nuclear weapon capabilities: China, France, Russia, UK and USA. Three states known or believed to have developed nuclear weapons have not ratified the treaty: India, Israel and Pakistan. North Korea withdrew from the treaty in 2003, the only state to have done so.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Excavations near Kandahar in southern Afghanistan have revealed Neolithic settlements dating to 5000 BC. Later settlements indicate trade links with cities in the Indus Valley and Mesopotamia. Aryan tribes that settled in Afghanistan's northern plains near Balkh (Bactria) from around 1500 BC gave way to successive Persian dynasties, including the Achaemenid Empire (550 BC–330 BC) ruled by Darius the Great from Persepolis after 515 BC.

Alexander the Great conquered Bactria in 328 BC but his rule was short-lived and the region fell first to the Seleucid, then to the Parthian empires. Buddhism was spread by the Yuechi, who invaded from the northeast and established the Kushan dynasty at Peshawar in around 200 BC. The famous Buddha statues at Bamiyan, destroyed in 2001 by the Taliban, dated from the 3rd and 5th centuries AD. Scythians, White Huns and Turkish Tu-Kuie invaded in the first half of the first millennium. The Muslim conquest of Afghanistan began with the arrival of Arab settlers in AD 642, though it was during the reign of Mahmud of Ghazni (998–1030) that the region became a thriving cultural centre. Mahmud was succeeded by smaller dynasties, all of which fell to Genghis Khan's Mongol invasion in 1219.

Following Genghis Khan's death in 1227, chiefs and princes vied for supremacy until, late in the 14th century, one of his descendants, Timur-i Lang, incorporated Afghanistan into his central Asian empire. Babur, a descendant of Timur and founder of India's Moghul dynasty at the beginning of the 16th century, made Kabul his capital, although power later transferred to Delhi and Agra. The early sixteenth century also saw the rise of the Safavid dynasty in Iran which ruled over western Afghanistan, while the Shaibanid Uzbeks controlled northern Afghanistan and territory stretching northward across central Asia.

The early 18th century was marked by Afghan tribes revolting against foreign occupation. Ahmad Shah Durrani, a Pashtun, became the founder of modern Afghanistan following the death of the Persian ruler, Nadir Shah, in 1747. The subsequent rule by Dost Muhammad, who became Amir in 1826, was overshadowed by the power struggle between Britain, dominant in India, and the expanding Russian empire. The British attempt to oust Dost Muhammad sparked the first Afghan War (1838–42), during which the British were forced to retreat by an armed rebellion in Kabul in 1841.

Dost Muhammad returned from exile and governed for the next 20 years. British attempts to delineate India's northwest frontier and prevent Russian advances led to another invasion of Afghanistan in 1878, when British-Indian troops seized the Khyber Pass. Abd Ar-Rahman Khan, who became the Amir of Afghanistan in 1880, abolished the traditional regional centres of power and consolidated his government in Kabul. Border treaties were signed with Russia and British India. Following the Anglo-Russian agreement of 1907 Afghanistan's independence was guaranteed, although foreign affairs remained under British control until the 1919 Treaty of Rawalpindi. King Amanullah introduced Western-style reforms in the 1920s but development was restricted by tribal wars and banditry.

Zâhir Shah took power in 1933 and ruled for 40 years, bringing stability and the expansion of education. In 1964 he established parliamentary democracy. In 1973 his cousin and brother-in-law, and a former prime minister, Mohammed Daoud, led a military coup and abolished the constitution to declare a republic. In April 1978 President Daoud was killed in a further coup which installed a pro-Soviet government. The new president, Noor Mohammad Taraki, was overthrown in Sept. 1979, whereupon the USSR invaded in Dec. to install Babrak Karmal in power.

In Dec. 1986 Sayid Mohammed Najibullah became president with civil war continuing between government and rebel Muslim forces. The USSR gave military support to the authorities while the USA backed the rebels. In the mid-1980s the UN began negotiating the withdrawal of Soviet troops and the establishment of a national unity government. The first Soviet troops withdrew in early 1988. After talks in Nov. 1991 with Afghan opposition movements ('mujahideen'), the USSR transferred its support from the Najibullah regime to an 'Islamic Interim Government'. As mujahideen insurgents closed in on Kabul on 16 April 1992 President Najibullah stepped down but fighting continued.

In 1994 a newly formed militant Islamic movement, the 'Taliban' ('students of religion'), took Kabul, apparently with Pakistani support. The Taliban, most of whose leaders were Pashtuns, were in turn defeated by the troops of President Rabbani. However, in Sept. 1996 Taliban forces recaptured Kabul and set up an interim government under Mohamed Rabbani. Afghanistan was declared an Islamic state under Sharia law. Government forces counter-attacked but a new Taliban offensive, launched in Dec. 1996, took most of the country. The opposition Northern Alliance controlled the northeast of the country. Under the Taliban, irregular forces were disarmed, roads cleared of bandits, and towns and villages rebuilt. Only three countries—Pakistan, Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates—recognized the Taliban as the legal government.

In March 2001 Afghanistan was widely condemned for destroying the ancient Buddha statues at Bamiyan. In May 2001 the Taliban refused to extradite Osama bin Laden, a Saudi militant who led the al-Qaeda jihadist network, to the USA to face charges connected to the bombing of American embassies in Kenya and Tanzania in 1998. Bin Laden had fought in the 1980s against the Soviet occupiers and had subsequently used the country as a base for his organization's operations. In Sept. 2001 Ahmed Shah Masood, leader of the Northern Alliance, was killed by two suicide bombers.

Following the al-Qaeda attacks on the USA on 11 Sept. 2001, Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates broke off relations with Afghanistan and the USA unsuccessfully put pressure on the Taliban to hand over bin Laden. Consequently the USA launched air strikes on 7 Oct. On 13 Nov. the Northern Alliance took the capital Kabul, effectively bringing an end to Taliban rule. With the surrender of Kandahar the Taliban lost control of their last stronghold. On 27 Nov. representatives of rival factions, but excluding the Taliban, joined UN-sponsored talks on Afghanistan's future. Hamid Karzai, a Pashtun tribal leader, was chosen to head an interim power-sharing council which took office in Dec. He was appointed president of the transitional government in June 2002. He survived an assassination attempt in Sept. 2002 and won re-election in 2004 and 2009 (the latter in a disputed contest). Following a meeting of international donors in London in 2006, Afghanistan was pledged US$10bn. in reconstruction aid over a five-year period.

Since Aug. 2003 the government has attempted to assert its authority with the help of the NATO-controlled International Security Assistance Force (ISAF), operating under a UN mandate. By 2007 the international force was battling a resurgent Taliban supported by around a quarter of the population in the south of the country. At the London Conference in Jan. 2010 it was agreed to increase ISAF personnel numbers from 96,000 to 135,000 in the course of 2010.

In May 2012 NATO endorsed plans to withdraw foreign combat troops by 2014. In Sept. 2012 the USA suspended the training of police recruits after a spate of attacks apparently carried out by members of the military and police forces with links to the Taliban. In Dec. 2014 NATO's US-led International Security Assistance Force (ISAF)—which numbered 140,000 troops at its peak in 2011—ended its mission. However, as at Dec. 2015 some 12,900 personnel were retained in the country to train, advise and assist the Afghan National Security Forces as part of Operation Resolute Support.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Afghanistan is bounded in the north by Turkmenistan, Uzbekistan and Tajikistan, east by China, east and south by Pakistan and west by Iran.

The area is 652,230 sq. km (251,830 sq. miles). The last census was in 1979. Estimate, 2010, 27.96m.; density, 42.9 per sq. km. In 2011, 22.9% of the population lived in urban areas.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 32.53m. Afghanistan's population has doubled since the early 1990s.

Successive wars in Afghanistan resulted in one of the world's largest refugee crises. Prior to the withdrawal of Soviet troops in 1989 there were more than 6m. Afghan refugees, mainly in Pakistan, Iran and to a lesser extent western Europe, Australia and North America. In the first half of the 1990s large numbers began to return, but after the Taliban came to power in 1996 repatriation slowed. As a consequence of the US-led war in Afghanistan beginning in Oct. 2001, numbers of refugees to Pakistan and Iran increased dramatically. In the meantime more than 5m. Afghans have returned to their country since a UN-sponsored programme began in early 2002, but as at mid-2015 there were still 2.6m. Afghan refugees living abroad—the second highest by nationality and 18% of the global total. According to humanitarian agencies in Jan. 2002 there were almost 1.2m. internally displaced persons in Afghanistan. Approximately half of the internally displaced persons in Afghanistan moved prior to the events of Sept. 2001, for reasons such as drought and food scarcity. There were still 947,900 internally displaced persons in mid-2015.

The country is divided into 34 regions (velayat). Area and estimated population in 2009:

Region	Area (sq. km)	Population (1,000)	Region	Area (sq. km)	Population (1,000)
Badakhshan	44,059	860	Konar	4,942	408

The capital, Kabul, had an estimated population of 2.94m. in 2009. Other towns (with population estimates, 2009): Herat (395,000), Kandahar (363,000), Mazar i Sharif (334,000), Jalalabad (188,000).

Main ethnic groups: Pashtuns, 38%; Tajiks, 25%; Hazaras, 19%; Uzbeks, 6%; others, 12%. The official languages are Pashto and Dari.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

Based on 2008 estimates: birth rate, 46.5 per 1,000 population; death rate, 19.6 per 1,000. Infant mortality (2010), 103 per 1,000 live births. Life expectancy at birth, 2013, was 62.2 years for women and 59.7 years for men. Fertility rate, 2008, 6.6 births per woman. In spite of the ongoing conflict in the country, Afghanistan has made significant progress in recent years in reducing maternal mortality. The number of deaths per 100,000 live births among mothers was reduced from 1,100 in 2000 to 400 in 2013.

CLIMATE

The climate is arid, with a big annual range of temperature and very little rain, apart from the period Jan. to April. Winters are very cold, with considerable snowfall, which may last the year round on mountain summits. Kabul, Jan. 27°F (−2.8°C), July 76°F (24.4°C). Annual rainfall 13" (338 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

UN sanctions were imposed in 1999 but were withdrawn following the collapse of the Taliban regime. Following UN-sponsored talks in Bonn, Germany in Nov. 2001, on 22 Dec. 2001 power was handed over to an Afghan Interim Authority, designed to oversee the restructuring of the country until a second stage of government, the Transitional Authority, could be put into power. This second stage resulted from a Loya Jirga (Grand Council), which convened between 10–16 June 2002. The Loya Jirga established the Transitional Islamic State of Afghanistan. A constitutional commission was established, with UN assistance, to help the Constitutional Loya Jirga prepare a new constitution. A draft constitution was produced for public scrutiny in Nov. 2003 and was approved by Afghanistan's Loya Jirga on 4 Jan. 2004. The new constitution creates a strong presidential system, providing for a President and two Vice Presidents, and a bicameral parliament. The constitution imposes a limit of two five-year terms for a president. The lower house is the 249-member House of the People (Wolesi Jirga), directly elected for a five-year term, and the upper house the 102-member House of Elders (Meshrano Jirga). The upper house is elected in three divisions. The provincial councils elect one third of its members for a four-year term. The district councils elect the second third of the members for a three-year term. The president appoints the remaining third for a five-year term. At least one woman is elected to the Wolesi Jirga from each of the country's 32 regions, and half of the president's appointments to the Meshrano Jirga must be women. The constitution reserves 25% of the seats in the Wolesi Jirga for women. The president appoints ministers, the attorney general and central bank governor with the approval of the Wolesi Jirga. Cabinet ministers must be university graduates. Presidential and parliamentary elections, the first in 25 years, were scheduled for June 2004 but were put back to Oct. 2004. The parliamentary elections were subsequently delayed again and were set to be held in April 2005, but were postponed a further time until Sept. 2005. In Dec. 2005 an elected parliament sat for the first time since 1973.

National Anthem

'Daa watan Afghanistan di' ('This land is Afghanistan'); words by Abdul Bari Jahani' tune by Babrak Wassa.

RECENT ELECTIONS

Elections for the 249-member House of the People took place on 18 Sept. 2010; all elected representatives were non-partisan. There were widespread voting irregularities and at least 14 people died in election-related violence. Nearly a quarter of the ballot was declared void owing to fraud. Turnout was approximately 40%.

Presidential elections, representing the first democratic transfer of power in Afghanistan's history, were held on 5 April 2014. The Taliban had pledged to disrupt the elections, and a massive security operation was launched by the government to prevent attacks on polling stations. Sporadic violence and a shortage of ballot papers was reported across the country after 6-6m. people turned out to vote. Abdullah Abdullah of the National Coalition took 44.9% of the vote, Mohammad Ashraf Ghani Ahmadzai (ind.) 31.5%, Zalmay Rassoul (ind.) 11.5%, Abdul Rasul Sayyaf (Islamic Dawa) 7.1%, Qutbuddin Hilal (ind.) 2.7% and Gul Agha Sherzai (ind.) 1.6%. Two other candidates both obtained less than 1% of the vote. As no candidate secured the necessary 50% or more of the vote to win outright, a run-off between Abdullah and Ghani took place on 7 June 2014. Ghani won with 56.4% of the vote against Abdullah with 43.6%, but Abdullah claimed that there was widespread fraud and refused to concede defeat. 8.1m. people voted in the second round.

Parliamentary elections are scheduled to take place on 15 Oct. 2016.

CURRENT LEADERS

Ashraf Ghani Ahmadzai

Position

President

Introduction

Ashraf Ghani became president in Sept. 2014, heading a national unity government. A former finance minister with experience at the World Bank, Ghani is a modernizer who pledged to build the economy, tackle corruption and work with parties from across the political spectrum.

Early Life

Born on 12 Feb. 1949 in Logar province, Ghani was educated in Kabul and graduated from the American University of Beirut in 1973. From 1973-77 he taught anthropology at Kabul University before studying for a PhD at Columbia University, New York, USA. He taught briefly at the University of California, Berkeley, then at John Hopkins University, Baltimore, from 1983-91. From 1991-2001 he worked for the World Bank, where he was involved in reviewing country strategies. During this time he helped pioneer a new approach that emphasized building coalitions for reform and working with local people.

In 2002, after the ousting of the Taliban government, he became special adviser to President Hamid Karzai and helped organize the Loya Jirga (Grand Council). The same year he was appointed adviser to Lakhdar Brahimi, the UN Secretary-General's special envoy to Afghanistan. In this role he was involved in drawing up the Bonn Agreement, which laid out a programme for transition to democratic government. From 2002-04 he served as finance minister in the Transitional Administration, implementing the launch of a new currency and introducing the concept of a 'double-compact' between aid donors and the Afghan government, and the government and the Afghan people.

Following the 2004 general election, Ghani left government to become chancellor of Kabul University. In 2006 he co-founded the Institute for State Effectiveness, which advises on methods for building accountable governments and civil societies. From 2010-13 he served as chairman of the Transition Coordination Commission, overseeing the transfer of security from foreign troops to Afghan forces. In 2014 he stood for the presidency, promising to build a strong economy and promote unity and security. He won in the second round of voting in June 2014 but the result was disputed amid allegations of electoral fraud. Months of negotiations were finally resolved by a power-sharing deal that saw Ghani's runner-up, Abdullah Abdullah, appointed chief executive officer, with ministerial posts divided between their followers.

Ashraf Ghani was sworn in on 29 Sept. 2014 at the head of a national unity government. His early months saw him struggle to appoint a full contingent of ministers, and holding his diverse government together posed a key challenge, along with tackling corruption, combating continuing armed attacks by the Taliban and managing relations with Pakistan.

In Dec. 2014 the US-led military coalition formally ended its combat mission against the Taliban after 13 years, although some 12,000 personnel were initially to be retained in the country to train and support the Afghan security forces. However, in March 2015 President Barack Obama announced that the US withdrawal would be postponed at Ghani's request, and in Oct. he proposed to keep 5,500 US troops in Afghanistan to help with counter-terrorism operations. This move reflected the worsening security outlook, which had been underlined the previous month as the Taliban briefly captured Kunduz, a provincial capital in the north of the country, before government control was re-established.

DEFENCE

In 2013 military expenditure totalled US$2,898m. (US$93 per capita), representing 13.8% of GDP.

Since the fall of the Taliban, Afghanistan has had an all-volunteer professional-army. The UN-mandated international force, ISAF, assisted the government in the maintenance of security throughout the country until its mandate expired at the end of 2014. It had been led by NATO since 2003. About 12,900 personnel have been retained to train, advise and assist the Afghan National Security Forces in the context of Operation Resolute Support.

Army

The decimation of the Taliban's armed forces left Afghanistan without an army. A multi-ethnic Afghan National Army was created in Dec. 2002. Personnel numbered approximately 179,000 in Aug. 2014 (up from 12,000 in 2004).

Air Force

Afghanistan's air forces were severely damaged with all planes destroyed by US military operations in 2001, but the Afghan Air Force (the Afghan National Army Air Corps until June 2010) is being rebuilt and is set to reach its planned final strength of 8,000 during 2016. In Aug. 2014 it had approximately 6,700 personnel.

INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

Afghanistan was the world's largest recipient of foreign aid in both 2010 and 2011 (US$6.4bn. and US$6.7bn. respectively).

ECONOMY

In 2012 agriculture accounted for 25% of GDP, industry 21% and services 54%.

Afghanistan featured among the ten most corrupt countries in the world in a 2015 survey of 168 countries carried out by the anti-corruption organization Transparency International.

Overview

Afghanistan is one of the world's poorest countries with formidable development, humanitarian and governance challenges. After the removal of the Taliban regime in 2001, work began on reconstructing an economy impoverished by more than 20 years of conflict, periodic earthquakes and drought. In 2014 the country was still among the bottom 10% of nations on the UN Human Development Index. Unemployment and poverty remain widespread. The presence of large and active militant groups, poor governance and endemic corruption also restrict short- and long-term prospects.

The authorities have taken some steps towards establishing economic stability. Real GDP growth averaged over 10% annually in the five years to 2010–11 and revenue collection has increased. Nonetheless, opium production remains an integral part of the economy, with the trade accounting for 4% of GDP in 2014.

2014 also saw the withdrawal of most remaining international troops. That, together with political uncertainty surrounding the transfer of political power and the exposure of weaknesses in the banking sector, impaired investor confidence, prompting a decline in GDP growth to 1.3% from 3.9% the previous year. However, the economy was predicted to rebound in 2015, with international donors reaffirming their support after the government pledged to restore confidence in the banking sector and lift revenue collection. The government has also stated its commitment to combatting corruption and countering the financing of terrorism.

Social indicators nevertheless reflect a deeply troubled state, with about 40% of children aged under five suffering from chronic malnutrition. Further comprehensive reform is necessary to sustain investor confidence, while concerns over domestic and regional security issues pose a consistent threat to long-term growth.

Currency

The afghani (AFN) was introduced in Oct. 2002 with one of the new notes worth 1,000 old afghani (AFA). The old afghani had been trading at around 46,000 to the US$. There was inflation of 7.4% in 2013 and 4.7% in 2014.

Budget

The fiscal year begins on 21 March. Revenues in 2009–10 were 132,698m. afghani and expenditures 215,880m. afghani. Grants accounted for 60.4% of revenues in 2009–10; capital expenditure accounted for 55.1% of expenditures.

Performance

Real GDP growth rose from 6.5% in 2011 to 14.0% in 2012 but fell to 3.9% in 2013 and 1.3% in 2014. Total GDP in 2014 was US$20.0bn.

Banking and Finance

Da Afghanistan Bank undertakes the functions of a central bank, holding the exclusive right of note issue. Founded in 1939, its current Governor is Khalilullah Sediq. The banking sector has undergone major reconstruction since the removal of the Taliban government in 2001, with a number of new private banks having opened in the meantime.

In 2010 the banking system came under scrutiny after Kabul Bank, a leading commercial bank used by the government to pay civil servants and members of the security forces, was unable to account for US$910m. amid allegations of fraud and mismanagement. It was subsequently bailed out by the central bank to avert a collapse.

Total external debt in 2010 was US$2,297m., which was equivalent to 21% of GNI.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy were the equivalent of 0.3 tonnes per capita in 2011.

Electricity

Installed capacity was 0.43m. kW in 2011–12. Production was 1,005m. kWh in 2011–12 with consumption per capita 128 kWh.

Oil and Gas

Proven natural gas reserves were 50bn. cu. metres in 2013. Production in 2007–08 was 3m. cu. metres.

Minerals

There are deposits of barite, coal, copper, emerald, lapis lazuli, salt and talc. Mining, particularly of copper, is considered to be the country's best prospect for economic growth. In spite of the instability, Afghanistan is still one of the world's leading producers of lapis lazuli.

Agriculture

The greater part of Afghanistan is mountainous but there are many fertile plains and valleys. In 2007 there were an estimated 8.53m. ha. of arable land and 0.13m. ha. of permanent cropland; 2.25m. ha. were irrigated in 2007. The agricultural population was approximately 16.0m. in 2007, of whom around 5.08m. were economically active.

Output, 2003, in 1,000 tonnes: wheat, 4,361; rice, 433; barley, 410; grapes, 365; maize, 310; potatoes, 240. Opium production in 2001 was just 185 tonnes (down from 4,565 tonnes in 1999), but in 2002 it went up to 3,400 tonnes. Estimated potential production then reached a record 7,400 tonnes in 2007. In 2015 it fell to 3,300 tonnes, its lowest level since 2001. The area under cultivation in 2015 was 183,000 ha., down from a record 224,000 ha. in 2014 and the first decrease in six years (although it had been just 7,606 ha. in 2001). Afghanistan accounts for around 90% of the world's opium. In Feb. 2001 the United Nations Drug Control Programme reported that opium production had been almost totally eradicated after the Taliban outlawed the cultivation of poppies. As a result in 2001 Myanmar became the largest producer of opium, but since then Afghanistan has again been the leading producer.

Livestock (2003): sheep, 8.8m.; goats, 7.3m.; cattle, 3.7m.; asses, 920,000; camels, 175,000; horses, 104,000; chickens, 6m.

Forestry

In 2010 forests covered 1.35m. ha., or 2% of the total land area. Timber production in 2011 was 3.42m. cu. metres.

Fisheries

In 2010 the total catch was estimated to be 1,000 tonnes, exclusively from inland waters.

INDUSTRY

Major industries include natural gas, fertilizers, cement, coal-mining, small vehicle assembly plants, building, carpet weaving, cotton textiles, clothing and footwear, leather tanning and fruit canning.

Labour

The labour force in 2013 was 7,983,000 (5,569,000 in 2003). 49.0% of the population aged 15–64 was economically active in 2013. In the same year 9.2% of the population was unemployed.

Afghanistan had 86,000 people living in slavery according to the Walk Free Foundation's 2013 Global Slavery Index.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

Total imports (2010), US$2,218m.; exports US$388.5m. Main imports: mineral fuels, lubricants and related materials; food and live animals; manufactured goods; machinery and transport equipment. Main exports: opium (illegal trade); food and live animals; manufactured goods; inedible crude materials (excluding fuels). The illegal trade in opium is the largest source of export earnings and accounts for half of Afghanistan's GDP. Main import sources in 2010 were Uzbekistan (21.1%), China (13.7%), Pakistan (11.6%) and Germany (8.2%). The leading export destination in 2010 was Pakistan (38.9%), followed by India (16.8%), Turkey (9.0%) and Iran (8.2%).

Imports and exports were largely unaffected by the sanctions imposed during the Taliban regime.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

There were 42,150 km of roads in 2006, of which 29.3% were paved. A large part of the road network is in a poor state of repair as a result of military action, but rebuilding is under way. In Jan. 2003 women regained the right to drive after a ten-year ban. 431,600 passenger cars (15 per 1,000 inhabitants in 2007) and 153,600 lorries and vans were in use in 2008.

Rail

Historically, Afghanistan has lacked its own railway system although two short stretches of railway extend inside the country from the Uzbek and Turkmen networks. In Feb. 2012 the first major Afghan-run railway opened to commercial traffic at a cost of US$170m., covering 75 km from Hairatan, a town on the border with Uzbekistan, to Mazar i Sharif. It is hoped it will be integrated into a wider network being developed as part of a Central Asia Regional Economic Co-operation programme.

Civil Aviation

There is an international airport at Kabul (Khwaja Rawash Airport). The national carrier is Ariana Afghan Airlines, which in 2010 operated direct flights from Kabul to Amritsar, Baku, Delhi, Dubai, Dushanbe, Frankfurt, Islamabad, İstanbul, Jeddah, Kuwait, Mashad, Moscow, Riyadh, Tehran and Urumqi, as well as domestic services. In 2014 it carried 253,040 passengers, up from 226,266 in 2013. The UN sanctions imposed on 14 Nov. 1999 included the cutting off of Afghanistan's air links to the outside world. In Jan. 2002 Ariana Afghan Airlines resumed services and Kabul airport was reopened. The airport was heavily bombed during the US campaign and although it is now functioning with some civilian flights it is still being used extensively by the military authorities. Afghanistan's first private airline, Kam Air, was launched in Nov. 2003.

Shipping

There are practically no navigable rivers. A port has been built at Qizil Qala on the Oxus and there are three river ports on the Amu Darya, linked by road to Kabul. The container port at Kheyradab on the Amu Darya river has rail connections to Uzbekistan.

Telecommunications

There were 23,424,000 mobile phone subscriptions in 2014 (748.8 per 1,000 inhabitants) and 102,000 landline telephone subscriptions (3.3 per 1,000 inhabitants). In 2014, 6.4% of the population were internet users. In March 2012 there were 257,000 Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

A Supreme Court was established in June 1978. It retained its authority under the Taliban regime.

Under the Taliban, a strict form of Sharia law was followed. This law, which was enforced by armed police, included prohibitions on alcohol, television broadcasts, internet use and photography, yet received its widest condemnation for its treatment of women. Public executions and amputations were widely used as punishment under the regime.

The Judicial Reform Commission is in the process of establishing a civil justice system in accordance with Islamic principles, international standards, the rule of law and Afghan legal traditions. The death penalty is still in force. Amnesty International reported that there was one confirmed judicial execution in 2015 (down from six in 2014). In 2015 the World Justice Project Rule of Law Index, which provides data on how the rule of law is experienced by the general public across eight categories, ranked Afghanistan 100th of 102 countries for criminal justice and 101st for civil justice.

The population in penal institutions in 2012 was 25,289 (76 per 100,000 of national population).

Education

Adult literacy was 28.1% in 2004.

In 2007 there were 4,718,077 pupils at primary schools (37% female) with 110,312 teaching staff and 1,035,782 at secondary schools (26% female) with 32,817 teaching staff. There were around 9,000 schools in 2008. Schools are often burned down and insurgents have attacked both teachers and pupils.

In 2009 there were 19 public universities and higher education institutions. There are also a number of private universities including the American University of Afghanistan. In 2008–09 there were 95,000 students (18% female) in tertiary education and 3,000 academic staff. Kabul University had some 8,000 students in 2006. Formerly one of Asia's finest educational institutes, Kabul University lost many of its staff during the Taliban regime, and following the US bombing attacks it was closed down, although it has since reopened.

In areas controlled by the Taliban education was forbidden for girls. Boys' schools taught only religious education and military training. Female teachers and pupils returned to education after five years of exclusion in 2002, and now nearly 40% of pupils and 30% of teachers are female.

Health

Afghanistan is one of the least successful countries in the battle against undernourishment. A survey carried out in 2004–05 found that 54% of children under five were chronically undernourished.

The bombing of Afghanistan beginning in Oct. 2001 severely disrupted the supply of aid to the country and left much of the population exposed to starvation, but progress since has resulted in more than 60% of the population now having access to basic health services compared to under 10% in 2001.

In 2005 there were 5,970 physicians, 900 dentistry personnel and 14,930 nursing and midwifery personnel in Afghanistan.

In 2008, 48% of the population were using improved drinking water sources.

RELIGION

The predominant religion is Islam. According to a study by the Pew Research Center entitled Mapping the Global Muslim Population, around 84–89% of the population in 2009 were Sunni Muslims and 10–15% Shias.

The Taliban provoked international censure in 2001 by forcing the minority population of Afghan Hindus and Sikhs to wear yellow identification badges.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

There are two UNESCO sites in Afghanistan: the Minaret and Archaeological Remains of Jam (inscribed in 2002), a 12th century minaret; the Cultural Landscape and Archaeological Remains of the Bamiyan Valley (2003), including the monumental Buddha statues destroyed by the Taliban in 2001.

Press

Afghanistan had approximately 540 newspapers in 2008 including 16 paid-for dailies. The main dailies were Hewad, Anis and the English language publications Daily Outlook Afghanistan and Kabul Times.

Tourism

Owing to the political situation the tourism industry has been negligible since 2001. It is estimated that around 3,000–4,000 tourists visit the country annually.

Calendar

In 2002 the Afghan Interim Authority replaced the lunar calendar with the traditional Afghan solar calendar. The solar calendar had previously been used in Afghanistan until 1999 when it was changed by the Taliban authorities who wanted the country to adopt the system used in Saudi Arabia. The change back to the solar calendar means the current year is 1395.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Albania was originally part of Illyria which stretched along the eastern coastal region of the Adriatic. By 168 BC the Romans, having conquered Illyria, administered it as a province (Illyricum). From AD 395 Illyria, as part of the eastern Byzantine empire, submitted to waves of Slavic invasions. During the middle ages the name Albania gained currency, possibly deriving from Albanoi, the name of an Illyrian tribe. Ottoman intrusion began in the 14th century and, despite years of resistance under the leadership of national hero Gjergj Kastrioti, Turkish suzerainty was imposed from 1478. During the 15th and 16th centuries, many Albanians fled to southern Italy to escape Ottoman rule and conversion to Islam. After the Russo-Turkish war of 1877–78 there were demands for independence from Turkey. With the defeat of Turkey in the Balkan war of 1912, Albanian nationalists proclaimed independence and set up a provisional government.

In the First World War Albania was a battlefield for opposing occupation forces. Albania was admitted to the League of Nations on 20 Dec. 1920. In Nov. 1921 its 1913 frontiers were confirmed with minor alterations. Although declared a republic in 1925, Albania became a monarchy from Sept. 1928 until April 1939 when Italy's dictator, Mussolini, invaded and set up a puppet state. During the Second World War Albania suffered first Italian and then German occupation. Resistance was led by royalist, nationalist republican and Communist movements, often at odds with each other. The Communists had the support of Josip Broz Tito's Yugoslav partisans, who were instrumental in forming the Albanian Communist Party on 8 Nov. 1941. Communists dominated the Anti-Fascist National Liberation Committee which became the Provisional Democratic Government on 22 Oct. 1944 after the German withdrawal, with Enver Hoxha, a French-educated school teacher and member of the Communist Party Central Committee, at its head.

Relations with Tito's Yugoslavia became increasingly strained as Hoxha strove to keep Albania from becoming a satellite of its neighbour, as it pursued its own brand of socialism independently of Moscow. In Albania, large estates were broken up and the land distributed, with collectivization imposed from 1955–59. However, the close ties forged with the USSR of Joseph Stalin were severed during the late 1950s and early 1960s when Stalin's successor as Soviet leader, Nikita Khrushchev, embarked on a campaign of de-Stalinization and achieved rapprochement with Yugoslavia. China replaced the Soviet Union as Albania's patron until the end of the Maoist phase in 1977. The regime then adopted a policy of 'revolutionary self-sufficiency'.

Following the collapse of the USSR, the People's Assembly legalized opposition parties. The Communists won the first multi-party elections in April 1991, but soon resigned from office following a general strike. They were replaced by a coalition government, which collapsed in Dec. 1991, and then by an interim technocratic administration. A new, non-Communist government was elected in March 1992.

In 1997 Albania was disrupted by financial crises caused by the collapse of fraudulent pyramid finance schemes. A period of violent anarchy led to the fall of the administration and to fresh elections which returned a Socialist led government. A UN peacekeeping force withdrew in Aug. 1997, but sporadic violence continued.

In April 1999 the Kosovo crisis which led to NATO air attacks on Yugoslavian military targets released a flood of refugees into Albania.

Having won a decisive victory in the 2001 elections, the ruling Socialist Party lost power to the opposition Democratic Party in July 2005.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Albania is bounded in the north by Montenegro and Serbia, east by Macedonia, south by Greece and west by the Adriatic. The area is 28,703 sq. km (11,082 sq. miles). The population at the census of Oct. 2011 was 2,821,977 giving a density of 98.3 per sq. km. Population estimate, Jan. 2015: 2,893,005.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 2.90m.

In 2011, 52.9% of the population lived in urban areas. The capital is Tirana (population in 2011, 418,495); other large towns (population in 2011) are Durrës (113,249), Vlorë (79,513), Elbasan (78,703), Shkodër (76,000; estimate), Fier (55,845) and Korçë (51,152).

The country is administratively divided into 12 prefectures, 36 districts, 308 communes and 65 municipalities.

Prefectures	2013		Prefectures	2013
	Area (sq. km)	population (estimate)		Area (sq. km)	population (estimate)
Berat	1,798	138,484	Korçë	3,711	216,429
Dibër	2,586	132,876	Kukës	2,374	83,276

Gjirokastrë	2,884	68,497	Vlorë	2,706	173,130

In most cases prefectures are named after their capitals. The one exception is Dibër, where the capital is Peshkopi.

The vast majority of the population are Albanians, with small Greek, Roma, Aromanian and Macedonian minorities.

The official language is Albanian.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2007: births, 33,163; deaths, 14,528. Rates in 2007 (per 1,000): births, 10.5; deaths, 4.6. Infant mortality, 2010, was 16 per 1,000 live births. Fertility rate (number of births per woman), 1.9 in 2008. Annual population growth rate, 2008–10, 0.4%. Life expectancy at birth, 2007, was 73.4 years for men and 79.8 years for women.

CLIMATE

Mediterranean-type, with rainfall mainly in winter, but thunderstorms are frequent and severe in the great heat of the plains in summer. Winters in the highlands can be severe, with much snow. Tirana, Jan. 44°F (6.8°C), July 75°F (23.9°C). Annual rainfall 54" (1,353 mm). Shkodër, Jan. 39°F (3.9°C), July 77°F (25°C). Annual rainfall 57" (1,425 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

A new constitution was adopted on 28 Nov. 1998. The supreme legislative body is the single-chamber People's Assembly of 140 deputies. As from April 2009 all members are elected through proportional representation, for four-year terms. Where no candidate wins an absolute majority, a run-off election is held. The President is elected by parliament for a five-year term.

CURRENT LEADERS

Bujar Nishani

Position

President

Introduction

Bujar Nishani was elected president in June 2012, although the then main opposition Socialist Party (PS) boycotted the vote. He had previously served as a justice and interior minister in the Democratic Party of Albania (PD)-led coalition government under prime minister Sali Berisha.

Early Life

Bujar Nishani was born in Durrës on 29 Sept. 1966. He attended the Skënderbej Military Academy in Tirana, taking a teaching post there in 1988. In 1991 he joined the newly established centre-right PD, headed by Sali Berisha, who led his party to victory in the country's first free parliamentary election in March 1992.

The following year Nishani served as director of foreign affairs in the ministry of defence. While the PD made progress in opening up the economy, reforming institutions and promoting foreign investment, the administration became embroiled in allegations of corruption while much of the country remained in poverty. The collapse of government pyramid investment schemes in 1997 led to violent protests, almost sparking civil war in the south. The government resigned and a snap election was won comfortably by a Socialist-led coalition.

Nishani took a law degree at Tirana University before turning to municipal politics. In 2001 he was elected secretary of the PD's Tirana branch and two years later he was elected to the capital's municipal council. At the 2005 parliamentary election, he won a seat in Tirana as the PD returned to power.

Appointed interior minister in March 2007, he sought to modernize the country's institutions and championed an electronic ID card scheme. As justice minister from Sept. 2009, after the PD had secured re-election in July that year, he attempted to tackle corruption in the justice system against a political backdrop of discontent fuelled by allegations of electoral fraud.

In April 2011 Nishani was reappointed minister of the interior, a post he kept until June 2012 when he was elected by the National Assembly to replace Bamir Topi as president. Nishani was the only candidate put forward by the ruling coalition led by Berisha, with the Socialists boycotting the vote after several failures to agree an opposition candidate.

Career in Office

On taking office, Nishani prioritized reforming the justice system, public administration and the functioning of parliament as prerequisites for attaining EU candidate member status for Albania, which was subsequently recommended by the European Commission in June 2014.

Following a majority victory at parliamentary elections in June 2013 by the leftist Alliance for a European Albania, headed by the Socialists, Nishani asked PS leader Edi Rama to form a coalition government that took office in Sept. that year.

Edi Rama

Position

Prime Minister

Introduction

A former mayor of Tirana, Edi Rama became prime minister in June 2013 at the head of a socialist coalition. A modernizer known internationally for his work in urban regeneration, he has promised to achieve EU membership.

Early Life

Edi Rama was born on 4 July 1964 in Tirana. He became politically active while a student and was a founding member of the Movement for Democracy, which campaigned for reforms. For much of the 1990s he followed a career as a painter in Paris, exhibiting internationally.

In 1998 he returned to Albania to become minister of culture, youth and sport in Fatos Nano's government. He was elected mayor of Tirana in 2000, serving for three consecutive terms until 2011. In this role he tackled the decline of the city centre, restoring parks and widening roads, but critics accused him of concentrating on cosmetic solutions rather than improving basic services. He also faced allegations of corruption and mismanagement of public funds.

In 2005 he became leader of the Socialist Party (PS) and in 2009 contested the general election at the head of a five-party coalition. After a turbulent campaign, featuring competing promises of EU integration, incumbent Prime Minister Sali Berisha's coalition was declared victorious. Rama challenged the result, leading his party in a series of parliamentary boycotts and demonstrations. In 2013 the PS formed a new coalition, the Alliance for a European Albania, with other left-wing parties, including the Socialist Movement for Integration that had defected from Berisha's government. Campaigning on pledges to introduce democratic reforms and speed up EU integration, Rama's coalition won 83 of 140 seats.

Career in Office

Rama took office on 15 Sept. 2013. His appointment of six women to the cabinet was widely viewed as a signal of his modernizing credentials. With the aim of achieving EU membership for Albania, he has sought to tackle corruption and organized crime, implement democratic reforms, reduce unemployment and stabilize the economy. However, allegations in June 2015 of voting irregularities in local government elections fuelled parliamentary tensions between his ruling coalition and the opposition.

In Nov. 2014, against the backdrop of continuing bilateral tensions over the status of Kosovo, Rama made the first visit by an Albanian prime minister to Serbia in nearly 70 years. The Serbian prime minister then made a similarly landmark visit to Albania in May 2015.

DEFENCE

Since 1 Jan. 2010 Albania has had an all-volunteer professional army. Strength of the Joint Forces Command was 8,150 in 2011. In 2013 defence expenditure totalled US$182m. (US$61 per capita), representing 1.4% of GDP.

Army

The Albanian Land Force—part of the Albanian Armed Forces—comprises a rapid reaction brigade, a commando regiment, an area support brigade, a logistics battalion and a communications battalion. Equipment in 2011 included three main battle tanks.

Navy

The Albanian Naval Force—part of the Albanian Armed Forces—had three patrol boats in 2011. The Albanian Coast Guard had 13 riverine patrol boats in 2011 plus 12 coastal patrol boats and nine other patrol boats. There are naval bases at Durrës and Vlorë.

Air Force

The Albanian Air Force—part of the Albanian Armed Forces—operated 16 helicopters in 2011 (including seven Agusta Bell 206s).

INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

Albania applied to join the EU in April 2009 and was granted candidate status in June 2014.

ECONOMY

In 2009 agriculture accounted for 20.4% of GDP (down from 29.1% in 2000), industry 19.4% (up from 19.0% in 2000) and services 60.2% (up from 51.9% in 2000).

Overview

Formerly a closed state with a centrally-planned economy, Albania's transition to an open market has still to show benefits. The country has one of the lowest standards of living in Europe. However, macroeconomic growth averaged 6% from 2004 to 2008 and 3% from 2009 to 2011. Remittances contributed 12–15% of GDP before the global financial crisis. Its decline to 8% in 2010 reflected the high number of Albanian workers in the troubled economies of Italy and Greece.

The agricultural sector accounts for half of all employment but contributes only a fifth of GDP, its potential hindered by a lack of modern equipment and unclear property rights. The economy as a whole suffers from poor infrastructure and energy shortages. Foreign direct investment is the lowest in the region and Albania imports far more than it exports. The presence of a large informal economy, estimated to be worth as much as 50% of GDP, has held back tax revenues. The government has embarked on fiscal reform to counter the underground economy.

The EU has granted funds to Albania to improve its infrastructure and transport systems in the hope of attracting increased investment. Albania has applied for EU membership and in April 2009 became a member of NATO.

Currency

The monetary unit is the lek (ALL), notionally of 100 qindars. In Sept. 1991 the lek (plural, lekë or leks) was pegged to the ecu at a rate of 30 leks = one ecu. In June 1992 it was devalued from 50 to 110 to US$1. There was inflation of 1.9% in 2013 and 1.6% in 2014, extending the economic stabilization that followed several years of high inflation (peaking at 226.0% in 1992).

Foreign exchange reserves were US$1,180m. in July 2005, total money supply was 184,249m. leks and gold reserves totalled 69,000 troy oz.

Budget

The fiscal year is the calendar year. In 2011 general government revenue was 330,450m. leks (324,721m. leks in 2010) and expenditure 305,621m. leks (300,878m. leks in 2010).

Principal sources of revenue in 2011 were: taxes on goods and services, 188,259m. leks; social security contributions, 56,627m. leks; taxes on income, profits and capital gains, 50,249m. leks. Main items of expenditure by economic type in 2011 were: social benefits, 132,639m. leks; compensation of employees, 67,446m. leks; interest, 41,121m. leks.

VAT is 20%.

Performance

Total GDP in 2014 was US$13.2bn. Since the economy contracted by 10.2% in 1997 following the collapse of pyramid finance schemes, Albania has enjoyed consistently strong growth and managed to avoid recession in 2009. Every year between 1998 and 2001 and again from 2003 to 2008 real GDP growth was in excess of 5%. However, economic growth then gradually slowed, only increasing by 1.6% in 2012, 1.4% in 2013 and 1.9% in 2014.

Banking and Finance

The central bank and bank of issue is the Bank of Albania, founded in 1925 with Italian aid as the Albanian State Bank and renamed in 1993. Its Governor is Gent Sejko. The Savings Bank of Albania, which serves around 75% of the Albanian market, was sold by the government to Raiffeisen Zentralbank Österreich AG in Dec. 2003. In 2002 it had total assets of US$1.4bn., approximately 60% of the total assets of the Albanian banking sector. In 2002 there were six other banks: American Bank of Albania; Arab-Albanian Islamic Bank; Fefad Bank; Italian-Albanian Bank; National Commercial Bank of Albania; and Tirana Bank SA.

Albania's external debt amounted to US$4,736m. in 2010, up from US$2,054m. in 2005 and US$1,070m. in 2000—this was equivalent to 40.5% of GNI (up from 24.1% in 2005).

A stock exchange opened in Tirana in 1996.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Albania's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2011 were the equivalent of 1.4 tonnes per capita (compared to the European average of 7.1 tonnes per capita).

Electricity

Albania is rich in hydro-electric potential. Although virtually all of the electricity is generated by hydro-electric power plants only 35% of potential hydro-electric sources are currently being used. Power cuts are common. Electricity capacity was an estimated 1.59m. kW in 2011. Production was 3.99bn. kWh in 2011 and consumption per capita 2,272 kWh. Albania imported 3,475m. kWh of electricity in 2011.

Oil and Gas

Offshore exploration began in 1991. Oil has been produced onshore since 1920. Oil reserves in 2009 were 199m. bbls. Crude oil production in 2009, 3.8m. bbls. Natural gas is extracted. Reserves in 2013 totalled 0.8bn. cu. metres; output in 2009 was 8m. cu. metres.

Minerals

Mineral wealth is considerable and includes lignite, chromium, copper and nickel. Output (in 1,000 tonnes): copper ore (2005), 73; chromite (2005), 66. Nickel reserves are 60m. tonnes of iron containing 1m. tonnes of nickel, but extraction had virtually ceased by 1996.

Agriculture

In 2007 the agricultural population was an estimated 1.37m., of whom around 620,000 were economically active. The country is mountainous, except for the Adriatic littoral and the Korçë Basin, which are fertile. Only 24% of the land area is suitable for cultivation; 15% of Albania is used for pasture. In 2007 there were 578,000 ha. of arable land and 120,000 ha. of permanent cropland. 106,530 ha. were irrigated in 2007.

In 2007 there were 369,598 agricultural holdings. Since 1995 owners have been permitted to buy and sell agricultural land. In 2007 there were 10,833 tractors in use and 1,643 harvester-threshers.

Production (in 1,000 tonnes), 2007: total grains, 494 (including wheat 250 and maize 216); watermelons, 190; tomatoes, 160; potatoes, 155; grapes, 147; onions, 73; cucumbers and gherkins, 50. Livestock, 2007: sheep, 1,853,000; goats, 876,000; cattle, 577,000; pigs, 147,000; horses, 46,000; chickens, 4,712,000. Livestock products, 2007 (in 1,000 tonnes): beef, 83; mutton, lamb and goat, 46; pork, 16; poultry, 13; milk, 1,016; eggs, 736m. units.

Forestry

Forests covered 776,000 ha. in 2010 (28% of the total land area), mainly oak, elm, pine and birch. Timber production in 2011 was 1.18m. cu. metres.

Fisheries

The total catch in 2010 amounted to 6,144 tonnes (3,103 tonnes from sea fishing and 3,041 tonnes from inland fishing), up from 3,320 tonnes in 2000.

INDUSTRY

Output is small, and the principal industries are agricultural product processing, textiles, oil products and cement. Closures of loss-making plants in the chemical and engineering industries built up in the Communist era led to a 60% decline in the two years after the collapse of the USSR and the subsequent political changes in Albania. Output in 2007 unless otherwise indicated (in 1,000 tonnes): cement (2008), 737; rolled steel (2008), 194; wheat and blended flour, 191; distillate fuel oil, 82; residual fuel oil, 32; sawnwood (estimate), 97,000 cu. metres; beer, 36.6m. litres.

Labour

The labour force in 2013 was 1,287,000 (1,322,000 in 2003). 62.9% of the population aged 15–64 was economically active in 2013. In the same year 16.0% of the population was unemployed.

The official minimum wage in 2010 was 16,120 leks. Minimum wages may not fall below one-third of maximum.

Albania had 11,000 people living in slavery according to the Walk Free Foundation's 2013 Global Slavery Index.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

In 2009 imports (c.i.f.) amounted to US$4,548.3m. and exports (f.o.b.) to US$1,087.9m.

Principal imports in 2009: manufactured goods, 25.3%; machinery and transport equipment, 22.6%; food and livestock, 12.1%; mineral fuels, lubricants and related materials (including petroleum and petroleum products), 11.8%. Leading exports in 2009: clothing and apparel, 26.8%; footwear, 19.4%; petroleum and petroleum products, 8.3%; manufactures of metal, 4.8%.

Main import sources in 2009 were: Italy, 26.1%; Greece, 15.5%; China, 7.2%; Germany, 6.5%. Main export markets in 2009 were: Italy, 62.8%; Greece, 7.4%; Slovakia, 5.5%; China, 4.8%.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

In 2002 there were 3,220 km of main roads, 4,300 km of secondary roads and 10,480 km of other roads. There were 237,932 passenger cars in 2007, as well as 29,506 buses and coaches and 59,645 lorries and vans. There were 384 fatalities in road accidents in 2007.

Rail

Total length in operation in 2012 was 399 km. Passenger-km travelled in 2012 came to 16m. and freight tonne-km to 25m.

Civil Aviation

The national carrier, Albanian Airlines, ceased operations in Nov. 2011. Subsequently Belle Air, a low-cost carrier founded in 2005, became the de facto national carrier, but it in turn ceased operations in Nov. 2013. It had international flights to a number of destinations in Europe as well as some charter flights. In 2006 scheduled airline traffic of Albania-based carriers flew 2m. km, carrying 213,000 passengers (all on international flights). The main airport is Mother Teresa International Airport at Rinas, 25 km from Tirana, which handled 1,394,688 passengers in 2009.

Shipping

In Jan. 2009 there were 46 ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 61,000 GT. The main port is Durrës, with secondary ports being Vlorë, Sarandë and Shëngjin.

Telecommunications

In 2010 there were 333,000 landline telephone subscriptions (equivalent to 103.9 per 1,000 inhabitants) and 2,692,000 mobile phone subscriptions (or 840.2 per 1,000 inhabitants). In 2009, 41.2% of the population were internet users. Fixed internet subscriptions totalled 105,000 in 2009 (32.9 per 1,000 inhabitants). In March 2012 Albania had 1.06m. Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

A new criminal code was introduced in June 1995. The administration of justice (made up of First Instance Courts, The Courts of Appeal and the Supreme Court) is presided over by the Council of Justice, chaired by the President of the Republic, which appoints judges to courts. A Ministry of Justice was re-established in 1990 and a Bar Council set up. In Nov. 1993 the number of capital offences was reduced from 13 to six and the death penalty was abolished for women. In 2000 the death penalty was abolished for peacetime offences; it was abolished for all crimes in 2007.

The prison population in Sept. 2009 was 4,482 (141 per 100,000 of national population). In 2015 the World Justice Project Rule of Law Index, which provides data on how the rule of law is experienced by the general public across eight categories, ranked Albania 54th of 102 countries for criminal justice and 59th for civil justice.

Education

Primary education is free and compulsory from six to 14 years. Secondary education is also free and lasts four years. Pupils who fail exams at 14 are required to remain in school until the age of 16.

Secondary education is divided into three categories: general; technical and professional; vocational. There were, in 2008–09, 75,000 children enrolled in nursery schools and 4,000 teachers; 12,000 primary school teachers with 236,000 pupils; and 355,000 pupils and 24,000 teachers at secondary schools. In 2008–09 there were nine public universities, two academies (Academy of Arts and Academy of Sports), the Inter-University Center of Albanological Studies, the Academy of Public Order and the Military University. In Sept. 2008 there were 21 private universities. Adult literacy in 2008 was 95.9% (97.3% among males and 94.7% among females).

In 2007 public expenditure on education came to 3.3% of GDP and represented 11.1% of total government expenditure.

Health

Medical services are free, though medicines are charged for. In 2008 there were 41 public hospitals providing 29.1 beds per 10,000 population. There were 2,039 GPs, 1,587 specialized physicians and 12,746 nurses in 2008.

The budget for expenditure on health in 2007 was 24,104m. leks (8.4% of the total budget).

Welfare

The retirement age is 65 (men) and 60 (women). To be eligible for a full state pension contributions over 35 years are required. There is a partial pension with between 15 and 35 years of contributions. Old-age benefits consist of a basic pension and an earnings-related increment. The basic pension is adjusted annually according to average paid contributions.

Unemployment benefit was 6,850 leks per month as of 2012.

RELIGION

At the 2011 census the declared religious adherence of the population included: Muslims (mainly Sunnis, but with a significant Bektashi Shia minority), 56.7%; Catholics, 10.0%; Orthodox, 6.7%. The remainder follow other religions or are atheists. The Roman Catholic Church has five dioceses in the country, including two archdioceses. The Autocephalous Orthodox Church of Albania is headed by Anastasios, Archbishop of Tirana, Durrës and All Albania (b. 1929).

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

In 1992 Butrint was added to the UNESCO World Heritage List (reinscribed in 1999 and 2007). Butrint is a settlement in the southwest of the country, near the port of Sarandë, which was inhabited from 800 BC and is now a major site of archaeological investigation. The site was extended for protection after looting in 1997. The historic town of Gjirokastër was added in 2005 (reinscribed in 2008) and is a rare example of a well-preserved Ottoman town built around the 13th century.

Press

In 2008 there were 28 paid-for dailies (combined circulation of 77,000) and 82 paid-for non-dailies. The leading newspaper in terms of circulation is Shekulli.

Tourism

In 2012 there were a record 3,156,000 international tourist arrivals, excluding same-day visitors (up from 2,469,000 in 2011); tourism expenditure in 2012 totalled US$1,623m.

Festivals

The main festivals are Tirana International Contemporary Art Biennial (Sept.–Oct.), Tirana Autumn (Nov.), a music and arts festival, and the Tirana International Film Festival (Nov.–Dec.).

ALGERIA

lives have been lost, although Algeria has emerged from the worst of the war, with guerrilla activity now restricted to the countryside. Unrest among Berbers, Algeria's main ethnic community, erupted into violence in May 2001, resulting in 60 deaths in the Berber region of Kabylie. In March 2002 President Bouteflika agreed to grant the Berber language official status alongside Arabic. The state of emergency declared in Feb. 1992 was not lifted until Feb. 2011, following a series of strikes and protests.

In Jan. 2013 Islamist militants seized a gas complex in the Sahara Desert populated by both Algerian and international workers. Algerian special forces stormed the complex after a four-day siege but the operation ended in heavy loss of life. France had used Algerian airspace earlier in the month to launch counter-insurgency operations against Islamist militants active in neighbouring northern Mali.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Algeria is bounded in the west by Morocco and Western Sahara, southwest by Mauritania and Mali, southeast by Niger, east by Libya and Tunisia, and north by the Mediterranean Sea. It has an area of 2,381,741 sq. km (919,595 sq. miles) and is the largest country in Africa. Population (census 2008) 34,080,030 (16,847,283 female); density, 14.3 per sq. km. In 2011, 67.1% of the population lived in urban areas.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 39.67m. 2.5m. Algerians live in France.

86% of the population speak Arabic, 14% Berber; French is widely spoken. A law of Dec. 1996 made Arabic the sole official language, but in March 2002 Tamazight, the Berber language, was given official status and also made a national language.

The 2008 census populations of the 48 wilayat (provincial councils) were as follows:

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Algeria came under French control in the 1850s. French settlers assumed political and economic power at the expense of the indigenous Muslim population. In Nov. 1954 the Front de Libération Nationale (FLN), representing the Muslim majority, declared open warfare against the French administration. Fierce fighting continued unabated until March 1962 when a ceasefire was agreed between the French government and the nationalists. Against the wishes of the French in Algeria, Gen. de Gaulle conceded Algerian independence on 3 July 1962.

The Political Bureau of the FLN took over the functions of government, a National Constituent Assembly was elected and the Republic was declared on 25 Sept. 1962. One of the founders of the FLN, Ahmed Ben Bella, became prime minister, and president the following year. On 15 June 1965 the government was overthrown by a junta of army officers, who established a Revolutionary Council under Col. Houari Boumedienne. After ten years of rule, Boumedienne proposed elections for a president and a National Assembly. A new constitution was accepted in a referendum in Nov. 1976 and Boumedienne was elected president unopposed. With all parties except the FLN banned from participating, a National Assembly was elected in Feb. 1977.

Following the death of the president in Dec. 1978 the Revolutionary Council again took over the government. The Islamic Salvation Front (FIS) was banned in March 1992. The head of state, Mohamed Boudiaf, was assassinated on 29 July 1992 and a campaign of terrorism by fundamentalists has continued to the present day. It is estimated that over 100,000

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2007 estimates: births, 783,000; deaths, 149,000; marriages, 325,000. Rates (2007 estimates): births, 23.0 per 1,000; deaths, 4.4 per 1,000. Infant mortality in 2010 was 31 per 1,000 live births. Expectation of life (2007), 73.6 years for females and 70.8 years for males. Annual population growth rate, 1998–2008, 1.5%. Fertility rate, 2008, 2.4 births per woman.

CLIMATE

Coastal areas have a warm temperate climate, with most rain in winter, which is mild, while summers are hot and dry. Inland, conditions become more arid beyond the Atlas Mountains. Algiers, Jan. 54°F (12.2°C), July 76°F (24.4°C). Annual rainfall 30" (762 mm). Biskra, Jan. 52°F (11.1°C), July 93°F (33.9°C). Annual rainfall 6" (158 mm). Oran, Jan. 54°F (12.2°C), July 76°F (24.4°C). Annual rainfall 15" (376 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

A referendum was held on 28 Nov. 1996. The electorate was 16,434,527; turnout was 79.6%. The electorate approved by 85.8% of votes cast a new constitution which defines the fundamental components of the Algerian people as Islam, Arab identity and Berber identity. It was signed into law on 7 Dec. 1996. Political parties are permitted, but not if based on a separatist feature such as race, religion, sex, language or region. There is no limit to the number of presidential terms after parliament voted in favour of abolishing the two-term limit in Nov. 2008, allowing the current president, Abdelaziz Bouteflika, to run for a third term. The President appoints the prime minister and cabinet ministers. Parliament is bicameral: a 462-member National People's Assembly elected by direct universal suffrage using proportional representation (389 prior to the elections of May 2012), and a 144-member Council of the Nation, one-third nominated by the President and two-thirds indirectly elected by the 48 local authorities. The Council of the Nation debates bills passed by the National Assembly which become law if a three-quarters majority is in favour.

In a referendum on 16 Sept. 1999 voters were asked 'Do you agree with the president's approach to restore peace and civilian concord?' Turnout was 85.1% and 98.6% of the votes cast were in favour.

CURRENT LEADERS

Abdelaziz Bouteflika

Position

President

Introduction

Abdelaziz Bouteflika became president in April 1999 following disputed elections, vowing to improve Algeria's weak economy and end civil discord. Improvements in the economy and state reform have since been slow. However, the significant reduction in Islamist rebel violence following an amnesty in 1999 was a key factor in Bouteflika's re-election in 2004, making him the first Algerian leader to be returned to power in a democratic vote since the country's independence. His charter for peace and national reconciliation was approved in a national referendum in Sept. 2005. He won a further term in the election of April 2009, having secured earlier parliamentary approval in Nov. 2008 of constitutional changes allowing him to run for a third consecutive term of office. In the wake of social unrest and anti-government protests in early 2011, Bouteflika lifted the long-standing state of emergency and set up a committee to consider further constitutional and democratic reform. In April 2014 he was re-elected for a fourth term.

Early Life

Bouteflika was born on 2 March 1937 in Morocco. In 1956 he joined the Armée de Libération Nationale—a wing of the Front de Libération Nationale (FLN; National Liberation Front). Stationed in southern Algeria in 1960, he was involved in secret talks with the French authorities, which eventually led to Algerian independence two years later.

Bouteflika joined the government of Ahmed Ben Bella as minister of youth, sport and tourism and was appointed foreign minister in 1963. He retained the position in the government of Houari Boumedienne. Having failed to secure military support to succeed Boumedienne, he was pushed out of the political mainstream. In 1981 he was charged with corruption and forced into exile for seven years. With the charges dropped, he re-entered Algeria in Jan. 1987.

In Oct. 1988 he protested against human rights violations by government troops against young demonstrators. He rejoined the FLN congress the following year and was elected to the central committee. In Dec. 1998 he announced his intention to contest the presidency. At the elections, he won almost three-quarters of the vote after his six opponents all stood down from the race the day before polling, accusing him of vote rigging.

Career in Office

Having become president and commanding army support, Bouteflika declared that his primary aim was to end Algeria's many years of civil unrest. In July 1999 parliament passed the National Harmony Law, which offered an amnesty to all rebels who had not been directly responsible for loss of life. A national referendum in Sept. 1999 approved the amnesty scheme, with nearly 99% in favour. Violence by some Islamist groups has since continued but at a greatly reduced rate. In foreign policy, he has striven to improve relations with neighbouring Morocco, while on the economic front he has encouraged the further development of the country's large oil and gas reserves.

Bouteflika's relations with his prime ministers have been turbulent. Ahmed Benbitour, prime minister from Dec. 1999 to Aug. 2000, resigned over divergent attitudes on economic recovery. His successor, Ali Benflis, was a personal friend and the leader of the largest party, the FLN. However, Benflis' reformist agenda was too radical for Bouteflika, who feared violent insurrection. Since Benflis' resignation in May 2003, the two have been at political loggerheads. Bouteflika appointed Ahmed Ouyahia to succeed Benflis.

Benflis refused to support the president's bid for re-election in 2004, instead announcing his own candidacy, supported by the FLN, in Oct. 2003. However, Bouteflika's bid was supported by a coalition of the Rassemblement National Démocratique (RND; National Rally for Democracy), the Islamic Mouvement de la Société pour la Paix (MSP; Movement of the Society for Peace) and also renegade members of the FLN. The elections on 8 April 2004 gave Bouteflika a resounding victory with 85% of the vote in a 58% turnout—against just 6% for Benflis. International observers declared the elections free and fair, despite opposition claims of electoral fraud. His dramatic win was ascribed to the much improved security situation and a steadily growing economy, even though unemployment remained around 30%.

Bouteflika pledged to investigate the disappearance of around 7,000 Algerians, allegedly killed or imprisoned by the security forces during the 1990s. Improving relations with the Berber community was also a priority (election disturbances in 2004 having been mainly limited to the Berber Kabylie region), and he promised reform of Algeria's family law, which he described as unfair to women. In Sept. 2005 his charter for peace and national reconciliation to end 13 years of civil war, envisaging a limited amnesty and compensation for some victims of violence, was approved in a national referendum. A six-month amnesty from March–Aug. 2006 resulted in the release of some 2,200 Islamist militants (except those accused of the most serious crimes) from prison. However, incidents of terrorism increased again, particularly in Aug. 2008 when almost 60 people were killed in a series of bombings in towns to the east of Algiers.

In May 2006 Bouteflika appointed Abdelaziz Belkhadem as prime minister in place of Ahmed Ouyahia, but reinstated the latter in June 2008. In Nov. Algeria's parliament overwhelmingly approved constitutional amendments (by 500 votes to 12, with eight abstentions) that abolished presidential term limits, paving the way for Bouteflika to retain the presidency in the election held on 9 April 2009. However, discontent over housing shortages, unemployment and low wages was reflected in strikes and demonstrations in 2009–10. Further violent disorder in early 2011, echoing widespread anti-government protests across much of the Arab world, led Bouteflika to promise democratic constitutional amendments. In the May 2012 parliamentary elections the ruling coalition headed by the FLN won a majority of seats in the National Assembly, and in Sept. Bouteflika named Abdelmalek Sellal as the new prime minister.

In Jan. 2013, in the wake of conflict in neighbouring Mali, about 30 militant Islamists attacked an isolated gas installation in southeast Algeria and took the foreign workers hostage. The Algerian government responded by ordering special forces to storm the plant, which they retook after four days. Most of the Islamists were killed, but at least 37 foreign workers also died.

In April 2013 Bouteflika suffered a stroke and received medical treatment in France before returning in July. His health remained an issue of speculation but he was nonetheless nominated in Nov. 2013 to run for re-election in April 2014. He was subsequently returned for a fourth consecutive term, beating his nearest rival Ali Benflis with 81.5% of the vote. In May 2014 the government announced constitutional changes, envisaging wider executive powers for the prime minister and greater parliamentary influence for opposition parties.

In May 2015 Bouteflika appointed new energy, finance and interior ministers in a major cabinet reshuffle in response to the sharp drop in state revenues arising from the fall in world oil prices.

Abdelmalek Sellal

Introduction

Abdelmalek Sellal became prime minister in Sept. 2012. He was appointed by President Abdelaziz Bouteflika following the resignation of Ahmed Ouyahia.

Early Life

Sellal was born in Aug. 1948 in Constantine, Algeria. He finished his secondary education at the National College of Administration and became an adviser to the prefect of Guelma province. He then took a post at the ministry of education and subsequently served as prefect of several Algerian provinces.

Sellal was Algeria's ambassador to Hungary when, in 1998, he was named minister of the interior. In 1999 he was moved to the ministry of youth and sports, then to the ministry of public works in 2001, the ministry of transport in 2002 and the ministry of water in 2004 where he stayed until 2012.

Sellal guided Bouteflika's presidential re-election campaigns in 2004 and 2009. Following the resignation of Prime Minister Ahmed Ouyahia in 2012 after four years in office, Bouteflika appointed Sellal to the premiership.

Career in Office

Seen as a technocrat, Sellal does not belong to any political party. On taking office in 2012 he maintained much of his predecessor's cabinet and pledged to continue the reform programme laid out by President Bouteflika. In March 2014 Sellal resigned from the premiership in order to run Bouteflika's campaign for re-election. He was replaced by the then energy and mines minister, Youcef Yousfi, who became acting prime minister. However, Sellal returned to the post after Bouteflika was successfully elected to a fourth term as president in April 2014. As a long-standing presidential stalwart, as expected Sellal kept his prime ministerial position in a major cabinet reshuffle carried out by Bouteflika in May 2015.

DEFENCE

Conscription is for 18 months (six months basic training and 12 months civilian tasks).

Military expenditure totalled US$9,957m. in 2013, equivalent to US$261 per capita and representing 4.7% of GDP.

Army

There are six military regions. The Army had a strength of 110,000 (approximately 75,000 conscripts) in 2011. The Directorate of National Security maintains National Security Forces of 16,000. The Republican Guard numbers 1,200 personnel and the Gendarmerie 20,000. There were in addition legitimate defence groups (self-defence militia and communal guards) numbering around 150,000.

Navy

Naval personnel in 2011 totalled about 6,000. The Navy's 45 vessels included four submarines and three frigates. The main naval bases are at Algiers, Annaba and Mers el Kebir.

Air Force

The Air Force in 2011 had some 14,000 personnel; equipment included 125 combat-capable aircraft and 33 attack helicopters.

INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

The land border between Algeria and Morocco has been closed since 1994 following a hotel bombing in Marrakesh in which the Moroccan authorities suspected Algerian involvement.

ECONOMY

In 2009 petroleum and natural gas (excluding refined petroleum) contributed 31.0% of GDP; transport, communications, trade, restaurants, finance, real estate and services, 25.1%; public administration and defence, 10.9%; public utilities and construction, 10.9%.

Overview

The economy is heavily dependent on public spending and the sale of oil and gas. In 1994 an IMF-sponsored programme for economic reconstruction reduced inflation and set in place a free-market economy. However, it was a further decade before privatization made significant strides.

The economy has achieved growth every year since 1995, with rising oil prices prompting robust growth from 2003. Algeria was largely shielded from the global financial crisis thanks to its limited exposure to international financial markets and a very low external debt. However, with hydrocarbons (oil and gas) accounting for 98% of exports, there is a need for economic diversification. The services and construction sectors are gradually expanding and non-hydrocarbon growth averaged 6% per year over a decade from the early 2000s.

The creation of new private sector jobs is essential as unemployment remains high despite growth and government initiatives bringing it down to 10% in 2010 from 27% in 2000. Unemployment is especially acute among women and the young. While Algeria faced relatively little disruption during the Arab Spring, regional fragility threatens longer-term growth prospects.

Currency

The unit of currency is the Algerian dinar (DZD) of 100 centimes. Foreign exchange reserves were US$146,130m. in Sept. 2009, with gold reserves 5.58m. troy oz. Total money supply was 4,071.5bn. dinars in June 2009. Inflation rates (based on IMF statistics):

2005	2006	2007	2008	2009	2010	2011	2012	2013	2014
1.4%	2.3%	3.7%	4.9%	5.7%	3.9%	4.5%	8.9%	3.3%	2.9%

The dinar was devalued by 40% in April 1994.

Budget

The fiscal year starts on 1 Jan. In 2009 budgetary central government revenue totalled 3,740,500m. dinars and expenditure 2,556,900m. dinars. Principal sources of revenue in 2009 were: taxes on income, profits and capital gains, 2,231,700m. dinars; taxes on goods and services, 1,048,900m. dinars. Main items of expenditure by economic type in 2009: compensation of employees, 860,500m. dinars; social benefits, 555,600m. dinars.

VAT is 17%.

Performance

Real GDP growth rates (based on IMF statistics):

2005	2006	2007	2008	2009	2010	2011	2012	2013	2014
5.9%	1.7%	3.4%	2.4%	1.6%	3.6%	2.8%	2.6%	2.8%	3.8%

Total GDP was US$213.5bn. in 2014.

Banking and Finance

The central bank and bank of issue is the Banque d'Algérie. The Governor is Mohammed Laksaci. In 2002 it had total reserves of US$23.5bn. Private banking recommenced in Sept. 1995. In 2002 there were five state-owned commercial banks, four development banks, nine private banks and two foreign banks.

Foreign debt fell from US$25,388m. in 2000 to US$16,871m. in 2005 and further to US$5,276m. in 2010 (representing just 3.4% of GNI).

There is a stock exchange in Algiers.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Algeria's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2011 were the equivalent of 3.3 tonnes per capita.

Electricity

Installed capacity was 11.5m. kW in 2011. Production in 2011 was 51.22bn. kWh, with consumption per capita 1,353 kWh.

Oil and Gas

A law of Nov. 1991 permits foreign companies to acquire up to 49% of known oil and gas reserves. Oil and gas production accounted for 48.0% of GDP in 2007. Oil production in 2013 was 68.9m. tonnes; oil reserves (2013) totalled 12.2bn. bbls. Production of natural gas in 2014 was 83.3bn. cu. metres; proven reserves in 2014 were 4.5trn. cu. metres.

Minerals

Output in 2004 unless otherwise indicated (in 1,000 tonnes): iron ore, 1,554; gypsum, 1,058; phosphate rock, 1,017; salt, 183; lead (2002), 1.1. There are also deposits of mercury, silver, gold, copper, antimony, kaolin, marble, onyx, salt and coal.

Agriculture

Much of the land is unsuitable for agriculture. The northern mountains provide grazing. There were 7.47m. ha. of arable land in 2007 and 0.92m. ha. of permanent crops. 0.91m. ha. were irrigated in 2007. In 1987 the government sold back to the private sector land which had been nationalized on the declaration of independence in 1962; a further 0.5m. ha., expropriated in 1973, were returned to some 30,000 small landowners in 1990. In 2007 the agricultural population was an estimated 7.41m. There were 135 tractors and 11 harvester-threshers per 10,000 ha. in 2006.

The chief crops in 2003 were (in 1,000 tonnes): wheat, 2,970; potatoes, 1,300; barley, 1,220; tomatoes, 820; melons and watermelons, 465; onions, 450; dates, 420; oranges, 360; olives, 300; grapes, 230; chillies and green peppers, 165; carrots, 158.

Livestock, 2003: sheep, 17.3m.; goats, 3.2m.; cattle, 1.5m.; camels, 245,000; asses, 170,000; horses, 44,000; mules, 43,000; chickens, 115m. Livestock products, 2003 (in 1,000 tonnes): poultry meat, 244; lamb and mutton, 165; beef and veal, 121; eggs, 110; cow's milk, 1,160; sheep's milk, 200; goat's milk, 155.

Forestry

Forests covered 1.49m. ha. in 2010, or 1% of the total land area. The greater part of the state forests are brushwood, but there are large areas with cork-oak trees, Aleppo pine, evergreen oak and cedar. The dwarf-palm is grown on the plains, alfalfa on the tableland. Timber is cut for firewood and industrial purposes, and bark for tanning. Timber production in 2011 was 8.39m. cu. metres.

Fisheries

The total catch in 2010 amounted to 93,607 tonnes, exclusively from marine waters.

INDUSTRY

Output (2007 unless otherwise specified, in 1,000 tonnes): cement, 15,886; distillate fuel oil, 6,388; residual fuel oil, 5,518; petrol, 2,100; clay bricks, 1,384; wheat and blended flour (2005), 1,377; crude steel, 1,278; pig iron, 1,193; jet fuel, 1,034; refined sugar (2004), 135; iron or steel tubes and pipes (2004), 122; woven cotton fabrics (2004), 14.8m. metres; woven woollen fabrics (2004), 1.2m. metres; beer (2004), 12.4m. litres. Production in units (2004): refrigerators and freezers, 215,000; TV sets, 205,800; tractors, 3,092; lorries, 2,698.

Labour

The labour force in 2013 was 12,088,000 (9,648,000 in 2003). 46.5% of the population aged 15-64 was economically active in 2013. In the same year 9.8% of the population was unemployed.

Algeria had 71,000 people living in slavery according to the Walk Free Foundation's 2013 Global Slavery Index.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

Goods imports were US$56,618.1m. in 2014 (US$54,910.0m. in 2013) and goods exports US$63,227.8m. (US$65,998.1m. in 2013).

Principal imports in 2014 were machinery and transport equipment (38.0%), manufactured goods, and food, animals and beverages; main exports in 2014 were mineral fuels and lubricants (97.4%), chemicals, and food, animals and beverages.

The leading import supplier in 2010 was France (14.9%), followed by China and Italy; the leading export destination in 2010 was the USA (24.2%), followed by Italy and Spain.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

There were, in 2008, 111,261 km of roads including 29,146 km of highways and main roads. There were 2,042,800 passenger cars (58 cars per 1,000 inhabitants in 2005) and 1,166,200 lorries and vans in use in 2006.

Rail

In 2011 there were 3,720 km of 1,432 mm route (254 km electrified) and 1,090 km of 1,055 mm gauge. The railways carried 6.9m. tonnes of freight and 24.7m. passengers in 2008.

A metro system opened in Algiers in Nov. 2011, 28 years after work on the project first began.

Civil Aviation

The main airport is Algiers International Airport (also known as Houari Boumedienne Airport), which opened a new terminal in July 2006 to allow for more international air traffic; some international services also use airports at Annaba, Constantine and Oran. The national carrier is the state-owned Air Algérie, which in 2013 carried 4,703,000 passengers (3,182,000 on international flights). In 2010 it operated direct flights to Abidjan, Amman, Bamako, Barcelona, Beijing, Beirut, Bordeaux, Brussels, Cairo, Casablanca, Dakar, Damascus, Dubai, Frankfurt, Geneva, İstanbul, Jeddah, Lille, London, Lyon, Madrid, Marseille, Metz/Nancy, Milan, Montreal, Moscow, Niamey, Nice, Nouakchott, Ouagadougou, Paris, Rome, Toulouse, Tripoli and Tunis, as well as domestic services. There were direct international flights in 2010 with other airlines to Alicante, Barcelona, Basel/Mulhouse, Cairo, Casablanca, Damascus, Doha, Frankfurt, İstanbul, Jeddah, Lille, London, Lyon, Madrid, Marseille, Palma de Mallorca, Paris, Rome, Toulouse, Tripoli and Tunis. In 2012 Houari Boumedienne Airport handled 5,404,971 passengers (3,824,009 on international flights) and 25,359 tonnes of freight.

Shipping

In Jan. 2009 there were 39 ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 723,000 GT. Skikda, the leading port, handled 23,203,000 tonnes of cargo in 2008.

Telecommunications

In 2014 mobile phone subscribers numbered 37,113,130 (929.5 per 1,000 persons). In the same year there were 3,098,787 main (fixed) telephone lines. 18.1% of the population were internet users in 2014. In June 2012 there were 3.6m. Facebook users.

Government plans to privatize Algérie Télécom, the major state-owned telecommunications company, were rejected in Feb. 2009. Mobilis, a subsidiary of Algérie Télécom, is one of three mobile phone networks operating in the country. It has the second largest market share, behind Djezzy and ahead of Nedjma.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The judiciary is constitutionally independent. Judges are appointed by the Supreme Council of Magistrature chaired by the President of the Republic. Criminal justice is organized as in France. The Supreme Court is at the same time Council of State and High Court of Appeal. The death penalty is in force for terrorism.

The population in penal institutions in May 2013 was 60,000 (162 per 100,000 of national population).

Education

Adult literacy in 2006 was 72.6% (81.3% among males and 63.9% among females). In 2007 there were 171,000 children in pre-primary education. There were 4,079,000 pupils in primary schools in 2007, and 4,585,000 pupils in secondary schools in 2009.

The leading institute of higher education is the University of Algiers, founded in 1909 although Algerians were not admitted until 1946. In 2007 there were 901,562 students in tertiary education and 31,683 academic staff.

In 2008 expenditure on education came to 4.3% of GDP and represented 20.3% of total government expenditure.

Health

In 2004 there were 37,720 physicians, 8,842 dentists and 6,082 pharmacists. There were 17 hospital beds per 10,000 population in 2004. Health spending accounted for 4.4% of GDP in 2007.

Welfare

Welfare payments to 7.4m. beneficiaries on low incomes were introduced in 1992.

RELIGION

The 1996 constitution made Islam the state religion, established a consultative High Islamic Council, and forbids practices 'contrary to Islamic morality'. In 2010 the population was 97.9% Muslim according to estimates by the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life, with 1.8% religiously unaffiliated and 0.2% Christian. The vast majority of citizens are Sunni Muslims. The Armed Islamic Group (GIA) vowed in 1994 to kill 'Jews, Christians and polytheists' in Algeria. Hundreds of foreign nationals, including priests and nuns, were killed during the ten-year long civil war. Signalling an increasing tolerance amongst the Muslim community, the Missionaries of Africa's house at Ghardaia Oasis was reopened in 2000.

World Heritage Sites

There are seven UNESCO sites in Algeria: Al Qal'a of Beni Hammad (inscribed in 1980), the 11th century ruined capital of the Hammadid emirs; Tassili n'Ajjer (1982), a group of over 15,000 prehistoric cave drawings; the M'zab Valley (1982), a tenth century community settlement of the Ibadites; Djémila (1982), or Cuicul, a mountainous Roman town; Tipasa (1982), an ancient Carthaginian port; Timgad (1982), a military colony founded by the Roman emperor Trajan in AD 100; the Kasbah of Algiers (1992), the medina of Algiers.

Press

Algeria had 65 paid-for daily newspapers in 2008 (including five sports dailies), with a combined average daily circulation of 2.16m. There were also 226 non-dailies in 2008.

Tourism

In 2010 there were a record 2,070,000 foreign visitors, up from 1,912,000 in 2009 and 1,772,000 in 2008.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

The Andosini, a tribe subdued by Hannibal in 218 BC, are the first recorded inhabitants of the Pyrenean state of Andorra. In the 9th century the Holy Roman Emperor, Charles II, reputedly made the bishop of Seo de Urgel overlord of Andorra. The Paréage of 1278 placed Andorra under the joint suzerainty of the bishop of Seo de Urgel and the Comte de Foix. The rights vested in the house of Foix passed by marriage to that of Bearn and, on the accession of Henri IV, to the French crown.

In the 19th century the Consell General (parliament) was strengthened, but the constitution remained traditional and unwritten until 8 Sept. 1993, when political parties and labour unions were legalized and Andorra joined the UN.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

The co-principality of Andorra is situated in the eastern Pyrenees on the French–Spanish border. The country is mountainous and has an average altitude of 1,996 metres. Area, 464 sq. km. In lieu of a census, a register of population is kept. The estimated population at 31 Dec. 2013 was 76,098; density, 164 per sq. km.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 70,000.

In 2010, 88% of the population lived in urban areas.

The chief towns are Andorra la Vella, the capital (population, 22,546 in 2013) and Escaldes-Engordany (13,859); other towns are Encamp, Sant Julià de Lòria and La Massana. In 2010, 38.8% of the residential population were Andorran, 31.4% Spanish, 15.4% Portuguese and 6.0% French.

Catalan is the official language, but Spanish and French are widely spoken.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

Births in 2006 numbered 843 (10.4 per 1,000 inhabitants) and deaths 260 (3.2). Life expectancy (2006): males, 78 years; females, 85 years. Annual population growth rate, 2000–05, 3.5%. Fertility rate, 2008, 1.3 births per woman (one of the lowest rates in the world). Infant mortality in 2010 was three per 1,000 live births.

CLIMATE

Escaldes-Engordany, Jan. 35.8°F (2.1°C), July 65.8°F (18.8°C). Annual rainfall 34.9" (886 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

The joint heads of state are the co-princes—the President of the French Republic and the Bishop of Urgel.

A new democratic constitution was approved by 74.2% of votes cast at a referendum on 14 March 1993. The electorate was 9,123; turnout was 75.7%. The new constitution, which came into force on 4 May 1993, makes the co-princes a single constitutional monarch and provides for a parliament, the unicameral General Council of the Valleys, with 28 members, two from each of the seven parishes and 14 elected by proportional representation from the single national constituency, for four years. In 1982 an Executive Council was appointed and legislative and executive powers were separated. The General Council elects the President of the Executive Council, who is the head of the government.

There is a Constitutional Court of four members who hold office for eight-year terms, renewable once.

National Anthem

'El Gran Carlemany, mon pare' ('Great Charlemagne, my father'); words by D. J. Benlloch i Vivò, tune by Enric Marfany Bons.

RECENT ELECTIONS

Elections to the General Council were held on 1 March 2015. The Democrats for Andorra (DA) won 15 seats (37.0% of the vote); the Liberals of Andorra 8 (27.7%); the Alliance of the Social Democratic Party of Andorra, the Greens and Citizens' Initiative 3 (23.5%); and Social Democracy and Progress 2 (11.7%). Turnout was 65.6%.

CURRENT GOVERNMENT

In March 2016 the government comprised:

President, Executive Council: Antoni Martí; b. 1963 (Democrats for Andorra; sworn in 12 May 2011).

Minister for Finance: Jordi Cinca. Foreign Affairs: Gilbert Saboya. Public Administration, Transport and Telecommunications: Jordi Alcobé. Justice and Interior: Xavier Esport. Health, Social Affairs and Employment: Maria Rosa Ferrer. Tourism and Commerce: Francesc Camp. Land Management: Jordi Torres. Environment, Agriculture and Sustainability: Sílvia Calvó. Education and Higher Education: Eric Jover. Culture, Youth and Sports: Olga Gelabert Fàbrega.

CURRENT LEADERS

Antoni Martí Petit

Position

President of the Executive Council

Introduction

Antoni Martí Petit became the president of the executive council (de facto prime minister) after his party, the Democrats for Andorra, gained an absolute majority in parliamentary elections held in April 2011. He and his party won a further term at the general election of March 2015. An architect and the former mayor of Escaldes-Engordany, Andorra's second city, Martí has pledged to open up the state to foreign investment.

Early Life

Born in Escaldes-Engordany in 1963, Martí studied architecture at the University of Toulouse. He was elected to parliament in 1994. In 2003 he became mayor of Escaldes-Engordany, winning re-election to the post four years later. Towards the end of his second term he was elected to lead the recently-formed, centre-right Democrats for Andorra.

Early parliamentary elections were called for April 2011 after the dissolution of Andorra's General Council following deadlock over budget legislation. Martí's party defeated the incumbent Social Democrats.

Career in Office

Martí was elected head of government by parliament on 11 May and sworn in the following day. Although he had campaigned against the introduction of personal income tax, in June 2013 he bowed to pressure from the European Union and announced that Andorra would bring in the tax. He had also promised to end the protectionism that has previously discouraged inward investment. His party won another outright majority at the polls in March 2015 despite losing five seats, securing Martí a second term in office.

INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

The 1993 constitution empowers Andorra to conduct its own foreign affairs, with consultation on matters affecting France or Spain.

ECONOMY

Overview

The mainstay of the economy is tourism, which accounts for 80% of GDP. In 2012 there were 10m. visitors, attracted by Andorra's duty-free status and its thriving resorts. The country is also a leading offshore financial centre.

With only 5% of territory classified as arable land, most food is imported. While not a member of the European Union, Andorra is a member of the EU Customs Union and uses the euro single currency. It is treated as an EU member for trade in manufactured goods but not for agricultural products.

The country has long come under pressure from its European neighbours to tackle tax evasion. Efforts to address this issue saw the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development remove Andorra from its List of Uncooperative Tax Havens in May 2009. In June 2014 Andorra committed to automatic exchange of information in tax matters.

Currency

Since 1 Jan. 2002 Andorra has been using the euro (EUR). Inflation was 1.6% in 2010 (0.0% in 2009 and 2.0% in 2008).

Budget

In 2009 revenue was €357,800,000 and expenditure €357,600,000. VAT at 4.5% was introduced on 1 Jan. 2013.

Performance

The economy shrank by 4.3% in 2008 and 2.9% in 2009. Total GDP was US$3.2bn. in 2013.

Banking and Finance

The banking sector, with its tax haven status, contributes substantially to the economy. Leading banks include: Andbank; MoraBanc; Banca Privada d'Andorra, SA; Crèdit Andorrà Group; and BancSabadell d'Andorra, SA.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Electricity

Installed capacity was an estimated 32,000 kW in 2011. Production in 2011 was 91m. kWh. Over 80% of electricity consumed has to be imported.

Agriculture

In 2011 there were some 2,400 ha. of arable land (5% of total). Tobacco and potatoes are principal crops. The principal livestock activity is sheep raising.

Forestry

Forests covered 16,000 ha. in 2010, or 36% of the total land area.

INDUSTRY

Labour

Only 1% of the workforce is employed in agriculture, the rest in tourism, commerce, services and light industry. Manufacturing consists mainly of cigarettes, cigars and furniture.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Andorra is a member of the EU Customs Union for industrial goods, but is a third country for agricultural produce. There is a free economic zone.

Imports and Exports

In 2010 imports were valued at €1,143m. and exports at €41m.

The main imports in 2010 were: clothing and footwear (€169m.); food (€167m.); fuel (€117m.). Main exports are motor vehicles, electronic products, and clothing and footwear. Leading import suppliers in 2010 were: Spain, 63.8%; France, 18.7%; Germany, 4.7%. Spain is by far the biggest export market, followed by France and Germany.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

There were 76,616 motor vehicles in 2012 including 52,038 private cars and 13,154 motorcycles and mopeds. A total of 4,111,528 vehicles entered the country in 2012 (4,178,116 in 2011).

Civil Aviation

The nearest airport is Seo de Urgel, over the border in Spain 12 km to the south of Andorra.

Telecommunications

In 2010 there were 38,171 landline telephone subscriptions, equivalent to 449.8 per 1,000 inhabitants. There were 65,500 mobile phone subscriptions in 2010 (771.8 per 1,000 inhabitants). Andorra had 785.3 internet users per 1,000 inhabitants in 2009. Fixed internet subscriptions totalled 32,000 in 2009 (382.6 per 1,000 inhabitants).

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

Justice is administered by the High Council of Justice, comprising five members appointed for single six-year terms. The independence of judges is constitutionally guaranteed. Judicial power is exercised in civil matters in the first instance by Magistrates' Courts and a Judge's Court. Criminal justice is administered by the Corts, consisting of the judge of appeal, a general attorney and an attorney nominated for five years alternately by each of the co-princes. There is also a raonador (ombudsman) elected by the General Council of the Valleys.

The International Centre for Prison Studies estimated in 2014 that 59.6% of prisoners had yet to receive a trial.

Education

Free education in French- or Spanish-language schools is compulsory: six years primary starting at six years, followed by four years secondary. A Roman Catholic school provides education in Catalan. In 2007 there were 4,427 pupils in primary schools and 3,819 in secondary schools.

Health

In 2010 there was one public hospital; in 2009 there were 41 general practitioners, 220 medical specialists, 51 dentists and stomatologists, 309 nurses and 78 pharmacists.

RELIGION

The Roman Catholic is the established church, but the 1993 constitution guarantees religious liberty. In 2011 around 90% of the population were Catholics.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

There is one UNESCO site in Andorra: Madriu-Perafita-Claror Valley (entered on the list in 2004 and 2006).

Press

In 2008 there were three daily newspapers with a combined circulation of about 32,000. Diari d'Andorra and El Periòdic d'Andorra are paid-for, while Bondia is free. L'Esportiu, a daily Catalan-language sports paper, is included in Diari d'Andorra. In the 2013 World Press Freedom Index compiled by Reporters Without Borders, Andorra was ranked fifth out of 179 countries.

Tourism

Tourism is the main industry, accounting for 80% of GDP. In 2010 there were 1,808,000 international tourist arrivals (excluding same-day visitors).

Festivals

In March the Big Snow festival in the ski resort of Arinsal combines music and winter sports. A jazz festival, the International Colours of Music Festival, is held in Escaldes-Engordany every July.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Khoisan hunter-gatherers were in southern Angola at least 23,000 years ago. From AD 1000 Bantu-speaking groups moved south from the borders of present-day Cameroon and Nigeria. Substantial numbers of settlers arrived in present-day Angola during the 13th century, displacing Khoisan groups. Several powerful Bantu kingdoms developed, including the Bakongo, across northern Angola, parts of present-day Democratic Republic of the Congo, Republic of the Congo and Gabon, and the Ndongo kingdom further south. The name Angola is derived from Ngola a Kiluanje, the traditional title of the ruler of the Ndongo.

Portuguese vessels commanded by Diogo Cão reached Angola in 1482. Relations between Portugal and the Bakongo were initially cordial and a few Portuguese missionaries, craftsmen and merchants settled on Angola's coast. However, tensions rose in the 16th century as Portugal's colonial ambitions grew. Slaves were transported to São Tomé e Príncipe and later, Brazil, the Caribbean and North America.

Centred on Luanda, and, from 1617, Benguela, the slave trade used local clans as intermediaries. In 1665 Portuguese forces and their African allies defeated the Bakongo king, Antonio I, at the Battle of Mbwila, after which it splintered into small chieftaincies. The Ndongo kingdom went the same way in 1671. Nonetheless, several central and eastern Angolan kingdoms remained into the 18th century but were eventually undermined by the slave trade and Portuguese exploration of the interior. Portuguese control of Angola and its other African colonies was weakened after 1807, when Napoleon's armies forced the Portuguese court into exile in Brazil.

Political instability in Portugal between 1820 and 1834 spread to Angola, with uprisings and an army mutiny that toppled the colony's governor. But slave traders prospered from new markets in Brazil, Cuba and southern America, even after the progressive Portuguese prime minister, the Marquês de Sá da Bandeira, outlawed the trade in 1836. It is estimated that by 1850 four million Angolans had been enslaved and shipped overseas.

From the 1830s the Portuguese expanded to the south and east from Luanda. British forces held back Portuguese control of Cabinda and the mouth of the River Congo but both Cabinda and Massabi were annexed in 1883. Portugal's claims to Angola were outlined at the 1884 Berlin Conference and treaties with rival colonial powers were agreed by 1900.

By this time, a massive forced labour system had replaced slavery as the basis for the plantation economy and, later, the mining sector. Forced labour and British financing helped construct major rail routes, including one linking the port of Lobito with the copper zones of the Belgian Congo and what is now Zambia.

Economic growth did not translate into social development for native Angolans. The Portuguese encouraged white immigration, especially after 1950, which intensified racial antagonisms. As decolonization progressed elsewhere in Africa, Portugal rejected calls for independence. Nonetheless, three main militant movements had emerged by 1961: the Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola (MPLA) led by Agostinho Neto; the National Front for the Liberation of Angola (FNLA), led by Holden Roberto; and the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola (UNITA), led by Jonas Savimbi.

A 1974 coup d'état in Portugal established a leftist military government in Lisbon that agreed, in the Alvor Accords of 1975, to hand power in Angola over to a coalition of the three movements. The ideological differences between the three led to armed conflict, with FNLA and UNITA forces attempting to wrest control of Luanda from the MPLA. South African involvement and civil war continued until the New York Agreement of 1988 saw South Africa withdraw from Angola and Namibia. Cuba also agreed to the phased withdrawal of its troops.

A peace agreement was signed by all sides on 31 May 1991, allowing for a national army to be formed and multi-party elections to be held. In Sept. 1992 the MPLA won elections and José Eduardo dos Santos was re-elected president. UNITA's Jonas Savimbi rejected the result and resumed the war, seizing 70% of the country.

On 20 Nov. 1994 a peace agreement was signed in Lusaka, allowing for UNITA to share in government. In Jan. 1998 Savimbi met with President dos Santos but talks foundered and fighting resumed. Meanwhile, Angolan troops fought in the Democratic Republic of the Congo alongside the forces of President Kabila in his efforts to quash a Rwandan-backed rebellion in the east of his country. They remained after the assassination of Kabila in Jan. 2001 but renewed hopes of peace resulted in withdrawal in Jan. 2002. In Feb. 2002 Savimbi was killed in fighting with Angolan government troops. On 4 April 2002 the Angolan army and UNITA agreed a ceasefire. More than half a million Angolans had died in the unrest.

Following the ceasefire oil production increased and investment flowed, notably from China, despite some remaining pockets of unrest. In Sept. 2008 the MPLA, still under dos Santos, won a landslide in the first multiparty elections for 16 years. The expected presidential election was repeatedly delayed until direct presidential elections were abolished by a new constitution in Jan. 2010.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Angola is bounded in the north by the Republic of the Congo, north and northeast by the Democratic Republic of the Congo, east by Zambia, south by Namibia and west by the Atlantic Ocean. The area is 1,246,700 sq. km (481,350 sq. miles) including the province of Cabinda, an exclave of territory separated by 30 sq. km of the Democratic Republic of the Congo's territory. Angola's first census in more than 40 years was held in May 2014; the provisional population was 24,383,301, giving a density of 19.6 per sq. km. In 2010, 58.5% of the population were living in urban areas. More than 300,000 Angolan refugees have returned to the country since the civil war ended in 2002. The number of Portuguese in Angola rose from 45,000 in 2007–08 to 92,000 a year later.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 25.02m.

Area, population and chief towns of the provinces:

Province	Area (in sq. km)	Population estimate, 2012 (in 1,000)	Chief town
Bengo	31,371	351.5	Caxito
Benguela	31,788	1,985.4	Benguela
Bié	70,314	1,143.7	Kuito
Cabinda	7,270	441.1	Cabinda
Cunene	88,342	648.4	Ondjiva
Huambo	34,274	1,624.0	Huambo
Huíla	75,002	2,098.0	Lubango
Kuando-Kubango	199,049	394.4	Menongue
Kwanza Norte	24,110	376.9	Ndalatando
Kwanza Sul	55,660	1,353.8	Sumbe
Luanda	2,418	5,851.2	Luanda

Uíge	58,698	1,101.2	Uíge
Zaire	40,130	394.8	Mbanza Congo

The most important towns are Luanda, the capital (2012 population estimate, 5.85m.), Huambo, Lobito, Benguela, Kuito, Lubango, Malanje and Namibe.

The main ethnic groups are Umbundo (Ovimbundo), Kimbundo, Bakongo, Chokwe, Ganguela, Luvale and Kwanyama.

Portuguese is the official language. Bantu and other African languages are also spoken.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

Life expectancy at birth, 2013, 50.4 years for males and 53.4 years for females. 2008 births (estimates), 775,000; deaths, 306,000. Estimated birth rate in 2008 was 43 per 1,000 population; estimated death rate, 17. Annual population growth rate, 2000–08, 2.9%. Fertility rate, 2008, 5.8 births per woman; infant mortality, 2010, 98 per 1,000 live births.

CLIMATE

The climate is tropical, with low rainfall in the west but increasing inland. Temperatures are constant over the year and most rain falls in March and April. Luanda, Jan. 78°F (25.6°C), July 69°F (20.6°C). Annual rainfall 13" (323 mm). Lobito, Jan. 77°F (25°C), July 68°F (20°C). Annual rainfall 14" (353 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

Under the Constitution adopted at independence, the sole legal party was the MPLA. In Dec. 1990, however, the MPLA announced that the Constitution would be revised to permit opposition parties. The supreme organ of state is the 220-member National Assembly. For the 2008 elections 30% of seats were guaranteed for women. There is an executive President, elected for renewable terms of five years, who appoints a Council of Ministers.

In Dec. 2002 Angola's ruling party and the UNITA party of former rebels agreed on a new constitution. The president would keep key powers, including the power to name and to remove the prime minister. The president will also appoint provincial governors, rather than letting voters elect them, but the governor must be from the party that received a majority of votes in that province. A draft constitution was submitted to the constitutional commission of the Angolan parliament for consideration in Jan. 2004.

A new constitution was adopted on 21 Jan. 2010 and came into effect on 5 Feb. although the opposition party UNITA boycotted the vote. Direct presidential elections were abolished. Instead the party with the majority in parliament will choose the president. A two five-year term limit was introduced although it did not take effect until after the parliamentary elections in Aug. 2012, allowing President dos Santos to remain in power until 2022. The president was also made responsible for judicial appointments while the office of prime minister was replaced by that of a vice-president to be appointed by the president.

CURRENT LEADERS

José Eduardo dos Santos

Position

President

Introduction

José Eduardo dos Santos, has been president of Angola since the death of the country's first post-colonial president Agostinho Neto in 1979. He is also head of the ruling Movimento Popular de Libertação de Angola (MPLA; Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola), and was prime minister from 1999–2002.

Early Life

Dos Santos was born on 28 Aug. 1942 in Luanda and in 1961 he joined Neto's MPLA rebel movement. As his party standing increased, he founded the MPLA youth movement before being sent to Moscow to study telecommunications and petroleum engineering. He returned to fight for Angolan independence, which finally came in 1975. Under Neto's presidency, dos Santos served first as prime minister (1975–78) and then planning minister (1978–79). After Neto's death in Sept. 1979, dos Santos assumed the leadership.

Career in Office

During the first ten years dos Santos upheld the MPLA's traditional Marxist doctrine and the government's single party rule while continuing the war against the UNITA rebels begun under his predecessor. The government received Cuban military help in the conflict and the Soviet Union supplied funds. The USA and South Africa meanwhile backed UNITA's leader Jonas Savimbi.

A rapprochement began in 1988 when both Cuba and South Africa withdrew their forces. In 1990, following the collapse of communism, dos Santos moved away from Marxism to adopt 'democratic socialism'. This allowed for the introduction of a free market economy and multi-party elections. The following year, a peace agreement signed in Lisbon culminated in Angola's first nationwide elections in 1992. In a turnout of 91% of registered voters, the MPLA won 54% compared to UNITA's 34%. In the presidential poll dos Santos secured 49.6%, while Savimbi polled 40.1%. Before a second round run-off, Savimbi rejected the election, claiming the first round results had been fraudulent. The civil war resumed and elections scheduled for 1997 were postponed indefinitely. In 1999 dos Santos assumed the role of prime minister and took over control of the armed forces. In Feb. 2002 Savimbi was killed by government soldiers and two months later a ceasefire was signed with the rebels. Since the end of hostilities, his government has committed substantial resources, financed by oil exports and diamonds, to reconstruction. Nevertheless, much of the population still lives in extreme poverty. Also, it was not until Aug. 2006 that a ceasefire agreement was achieved with separatists fighting for independence of the northern enclave of Cabinda, where much of Angola's oil wealth lies. The final stage of a United Nations refugee repatriation scheme, involving some 60,000 Angolans, began in Oct. 2006.

In Jan. 2007 dos Santos oversaw Angola's accession to the Organization of the Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC), and in Feb. he declared that parliamentary elections would be held in 2008 and presidential polls in 2009. The parliamentary polls took place in Sept. and resulted in a landslide victory for the ruling MPLA. Despite some criticisms of the poll by an observer mission from the European Union and the rejection of opposition demands for a rerun of voting in the capital Luanda, UNITA leader Isaias Samakuva accepted his party's defeat. In mid-2009 presidential elections scheduled for Sept. were postponed, reportedly to allow more time for the drafting of a new constitution that came into effect in Feb. 2010. Under the constitution the party with a parliamentary majority chooses the president, who is subject to a two-term limit, is responsible for judicial appointments and appoints a vice-president (replacing the post of prime minister). Parliamentary elections in Aug. 2012 resulted in another comfortable victory for the MPLA and so secured another presidential term for dos Santos.

In Feb. 2013 the Constitutional Court rejected an opposition claim that the president had exceeded his powers by creating a US$5bn. sovereign wealth fund, launched in Oct. 2012 to manage the country's oil wealth, without parliamentary approval. In May that year dos Santos replaced the finance and construction ministers in a government reshuffle and in a further change in April 2014 he named a new defence minister. In May 2014 a national census was conducted for the first time since 1970.

In late 2014 human rights groups accused the government of using excessive force to deter political dissent and in May 2015 a prominent regime critic was given a suspended jail term sentence for linking senior army personnel to corruption and violence in the diamond mining industry.

Meanwhile, as Africa's second largest oil producer, Angola suffered from the collapse in world prices from mid-2014, which has impacted severely on economic growth and fuelled government unpopularity.

DEFENCE

Conscription is for two years. Defence expenditure totalled US$6,049m. in 2013 (US$326 per capita), representing 4.8% of GDP.

Army

In 2011 the Army had 42 regiments. Total strength was 100,000. In addition the paramilitary Rapid Reaction Police numbered 10,000.

Navy

Naval personnel in 2011 totalled about 1,000 with 14 operational vessels. There is a naval base at Luanda.

Air Force

The National Air Force (FAN), initially formed in 1976 as the Angolan People's Air Force (FAPA) and renamed in 2007, had 6,000 personnel in 2011. There were 92 combat-capable aircraft in 2011 and 44 attack helicopters.

ECONOMY

In 2011 agriculture accounted for 9% of GDP, industry 62% and services 29%.

Angola featured among the ten most corrupt countries in the world in a 2015 survey of 168 countries carried out by the anti-corruption organization Transparency International.

Overview

Despite four decades of civil war, Angola has emerged as Africa's second largest oil exporter. Oil income accounts for three-quarters of budgetary revenue. The economy grew by 15% per year on average between 2004 and 2007 as oil production increased and the country's infrastructure was rebuilt. Although Angola has a wealth of other natural resources, including diamonds, coffee, fish and timber, the economy remains vulnerable to oil price shocks. Poverty is widespread.

As a result of declining oil prices in 2008–09 Angola experienced a sharp contraction in its revenues and international reserves, prompting macroeconomic instability. Further plunging oil prices in 2014—coupled with a fall in oil production—again highlighted the economy's over-reliance on the sector, with GDP growth falling from 6.8% in 2013 to 4.8%, and public expenditure declining by 3.2%. Structural reforms are key to economic diversification and increasing non-oil receipts along with promoting equitable growth.

Currency

The unit of currency is the kwanza (AOA), introduced in Dec. 1999, replacing the readjusted kwanza at a rate of 1 kwanza = 1m. readjusted kwanzas. Foreign exchange reserves were US$2,017m. in July 2005 and money supply was 103,304m. kwanzas. Inflation, which reached 4,146% in 1996, was 8.8% in 2013 and 7.3% in 2014.

Budget

Revenues in 2009 were 1,848bn. kwanzas and expenditures 2,363bn. kwanzas. Petroleum tax revenue accounted for 63.1% of revenues in 2009; current expenditure accounted for 68.6% of expenditures.

Performance

Total GDP was US$138.4bn. in 2013. The civil war meant GDP growth in 1993 was negative, at -24.0%, but a recovery followed and in 2007 and 2008 it was 22.6% and 13.8% respectively, mainly thanks to booming diamond exports and post-war rebuilding. Angola's growth in both 2007 and 2008 was among the highest in the world. It slowed during the global economic crisis, but more recently was 5.2% in 2012, 6.8% in 2013 and 4.8% in 2014.

Banking and Finance

The Banco Nacional de Angola is the central bank and bank of issue (Governor, José Pedro de Morais). All banks were state-owned until the sector was reopened to commercial competition in 1991. The largest banks in Dec. 2010 were: Banco Africano de Investimentos (BAI), with assets of US$8,373m.; Banco Espirito Santo Angola (BESA), with assets of US$7,892m.; Banco de Fomento Angola, with assets of US$6,435m.

Total external debt in 2010 was US$18,562m., equivalent to 24.6% of GNI.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

In 2011 Angola's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy were the equivalent of 1.7 tonnes per capita.

Electricity

Installed capacity was an estimated 1.2m. kW in 2011. Production in 2011 was 5.65bn. kWh, with consumption per capita 280 kWh.

Oil and Gas

Oil is produced mainly offshore and in the Cabinda exclave. Oil production and supporting activities contribute more than half of Angolan GDP and provide the government with 80% of revenues. Angola's oil production ranks among the fastest-growing in the world. A new US$8bn. oil refinery is under construction near Lobito and is expected to become operational in 2017. Only Nigeria among sub-Saharan African countries produces more oil. It is believed that there are huge oil resources yet to be discovered. Proven oil reserves in 2013 were 12.7bn. bbls. Total production (2013) 87.4m. tonnes. Proven natural gas reserves (2013) 366bn. cu. metres; production, 2009, 672m. cu. metres.

Minerals

Mineral production in Angola is dominated by diamonds and 90% of all workers in the mining sector work in the diamond industry. Production in 2009 was an estimated 13.8m. carats. Angola has billions of dollars worth of unexploited diamond fields. In 2000 the government regained control of the nation's richest diamond provinces from UNITA rebels. Other minerals produced (2009 estimates) include granite, 50,000 cu. metres; salt, 35,000 tonnes. Iron ore, phosphate, manganese and copper deposits exist.

Agriculture

In 2007 there were an estimated 3.3m. ha. of arable land and 0.3m. ha. of permanent crops. 75,000 ha. were irrigated in 2002. The agricultural population in 2007 was approximately 12.29m., of whom an estimated 5.41m. were economically active. Although more than 70% of the economically active population are engaged in agriculture it only accounts for 8% of GDP. There were 31 tractors per 10,000 ha. of arable land in 2006. Principal crops (with 2003 production, in 1,000 tonnes): cassava (5,699); maize (545); sweet potatoes (439); sugarcane (360); bananas (300); millet (97); citrus fruits (78); dry beans (66).

Livestock (2003): 4.1m. cattle, 340,000 sheep, 2.05m. goats, 780,000 pigs.

Forestry

In 2010, 58.48m. ha., or 47% of the total land area, was covered by forests. Timber production in 2011 was 5.20m. cu. metres.

Fisheries

Total catch in 2011 came to an estimated 273,000 tonnes, mainly from sea fishing.

INDUSTRY

The principal industries are petroleum, diamonds, uranium, food processing, fisheries and textiles. Output, 2010 unless otherwise indicated (in 1,000 tonnes): cement (2010 estimate), 1,500; residual fuel oil, 620; distillate fuel oil, 530; jet fuel, 303; petrol, 65; sugar (2008), 10.

Labour

In 2010 the estimated economically active population numbered 8,533,000 (53% males), up from 6,238,000 in 2000.

Angola had 17,000 people living in slavery according to the Walk Free Foundation's 2013 Global Slavery Index.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

In 2007 imports (c.i.f.) totalled US$15,048m. (US$9,586m. in 2006); exports (f.o.b.), US$38,997m. (US$31,862m. in 2006).

Main exports, 2007 (in US$1m.): crude oil, 36,417; diamonds, 1,552; manufactures, 359. Oil accounts for 97% of exports. Chief import suppliers are Portugal, China, the USA and Brazil. Principal export markets are China, the USA, India and Taiwan.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

There were 51,429 km of roads in 2001 (7,944 km highways; 10.4% of all roads surfaced) and 671,100 vehicles in use in 2007. Many roads remain mined as a result of the civil war; a programme of de-mining and rehabilitation is under way.

Rail

Prior to the civil war there was in excess of 2,900 km of railway (predominantly 1,067 mm gauge track), but much of the network was damaged during the war. However, restoration and redevelopment of the network is now under way, notably the Benguela Railway, linking the port city of Lobito with Huambo in Angola's rich farmlands and neighbouring Democratic Republic of the Congo and Zambia.

Civil Aviation

There is an international airport at Luanda (Fourth of February). The national carrier is Linhas Aéreas de Angola (TAAG), which in 2013 carried 1,322,000 passengers (669,000 on domestic flights and 653,000 on international flights). It operated direct flights in 2010 to Bangui, Brazzaville, Cape Town, Douala, Harare, Johannesburg, Lisbon, Lusaka, Praia, Rio de Janeiro, São Paulo, São Tomé and Windhoek, as well as domestic services. There were direct flights in 2010 with other airlines to Abidjan, Addis Ababa, Bamako, Beijing, Brussels, Douala, Dubai, Frankfurt, Johannesburg, Lisbon, London, Maputo, Moscow, Paris, Pointe-Noire, Port Harcourt, Port-Gentil and Windhoek.

Shipping

There are ports at Luanda, Lobito and Namibe, and oil terminals at Malongo, Lobito and Soyo. In Jan. 2009 there were 28 ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 21,000 GT.

Telecommunications

In 2010 there were 303,200 main (fixed) telephone lines but mobile phone subscribers numbered 8.91m. There were 32.8 internet users per 1,000 inhabitants in 2009. Fixed internet subscriptions totalled 320,000 in 2009 (17.2 per 1,000 inhabitants). In June 2012 there were 433,000 Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The Supreme Court and Court of Appeal are in Luanda. The death penalty was abolished in 1992. In 2002–03 the US government's Agency for International Development assisted in the modernization of the judicial system. Measures including the introduction of a court case numbering system were intended to reduce legal costs and attract foreign investment.

The population in penal institutions in June 2013 was 21,634 (105 per 100,000 of national population).

Education

The education system provides three levels of general education totalling eight years, followed by schools for technical training, teacher training or pre-university studies. In 2011 there were 5,026,803 pupils and 118,158 teachers at primary schools, 884,982 pupils and 32,279 teachers at secondary schools, and 142,798 students with 7,863 academic staff in tertiary education. Angola has a number of public and private universities. The oldest and largest university is the Agostinho Neto University (formerly the University of Luanda and later the University of Angola). The oldest private university is the Catholic University of Angola, which was founded in 1997. The adult literacy rate was an estimated 70.0% in 2009 (82.9% among males and 57.6% among females).

In 2010 government expenditure on education came to 3.5% of GDP.

Health

In 2004 there were 1,165 physicians, 18,485 nursing and midwifery personnel, 222 dentistry personnel and 919 pharmaceutical personnel. In 2005 there were eight hospital beds per 10,000 population.

In 2008, 50% of the population were using improved drinking water sources and 57% were using improved sanitation facilities. 41% of the population were undernourished in the period 2005–07, down from 61% in 1995–97.

RELIGION

A study by the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life estimated that there were 17.3m. Christians in 2010 and 790,000 followers of folk religions. A further 980,000 people had no religious affiliation. Catholics account for around 65% of Christians and Protestants 35%. In Feb. 2016 there was one cardinal.

CULTURE

Press

The government-owned Jornal de Angola (circulation of 42,000) was the only daily newspaper in 2008. The Diário da República is the official gazette. There are 12 private weekly publications and four smaller regional weeklies.

Tourism

In 2012 there were a record 528,000 non-resident tourists (up from 91,000 in 2002 and 195,000 in 2007), bringing revenue of US$711m.

Festivals

The Luanda International Jazz Festival was first held in 2009.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

The islands of Antigua and Barbuda were populated by Arawak-speaking people from at least 1000 BC. By 1493, when Columbus passed Antigua, it was occupied by Carib Indians. English settlers arrived in 1632. Sugar plantations, using slave labour, were established in the 1650s. As British colonies, Antigua and Barbuda formed part of the Leeward Islands Federation from 1871 until 1956 when they became a separate Crown Colony. This was merged into the West Indies Federation from Jan. 1958 until May 1962 and became an Associated State of the UK on 27 Feb. 1967. Antigua and Barbuda gained independence on 1 Nov. 1981.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Antigua and Barbuda comprises three islands of the Lesser Antilles situated in the eastern Caribbean with a total land area of 442 sq. km (171 sq. miles); it consists of Antigua (280 sq. km), Barbuda, 40 km to the north (161 sq. km) and uninhabited Redonda, 40 km to the southwest (one sq. km). The population at the census of May 2011 was 85,567 (1,634 on Barbuda); density, 194 per sq. km. In 2011, 30.4% of the population lived in urban areas.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 92,000.

CURRENT LEADERS

Gaston Browne

Position

Prime Minister

Introduction

Gaston Browne took office as prime minister on 13 June 2014 after leading the Antigua and Barbuda Labour Party (ABLP) to a landslide victory at the general election. He is expected to focus on reviving the economy, reducing crime and lowering unemployment.

Early Life

Gaston Browne was born in the township of Potter Village on 9 Feb. 1967 and moved to the UK to attend City Banking College, London before completing a post-graduate degree at the University of Manchester.

Back in Antigua, Browne worked for various public and private organizations. He served as a senior manager with the Swiss American Banking Group (which later became the Global Bank of Commerce), managing assets in excess of US$400m. In 1999 he was elected to parliament representing the constituency of St. John's City West for the ABLP. He went on to defend his seat at the elections of 2004, 2009 and 2014. He was appointed minister of planning in the administration of Lester Bird (1994-2004), subsequently adding trade to his portfolio. In 2003 he was caught up in a scandal involving improper payments from a US financier while negotiating a land swap, but was never charged with any offence.

On 26 Nov. 2012, Browne won the party leadership from the incumbent, Lester Bird. It was the first time that the leadership had been held by someone not from the Bird family, although on the same day Browne announced the date of his wedding to Maria Bird, Lester's niece. On 12 June 2014 the ABLP defeated the ruling United Progressive Party, winning 14 of 17 parliamentary seats, and Browne became premier.

Career in Office

Browne's main task on taking office was to plan the revival of the economy. He aims to attract more foreign direct investment, including from emerging economies and from China, and to expand the trade and tourism sectors. He has also spoken out against the terms of an IMF loan arranged by the previous government, and announced that his government was in talks with Venezuela for alternative finance.

DEFENCE

The Antigua and Barbuda Defence Force (ABDF) numbers 170 and has four units: the Antigua and Barbuda Regiment, the Service and Support Unit, the Coast Guard and the Antigua and Barbuda Cadet Corps. There are 75 reserves.

In 2013 defence expenditure totalled US$26m. (US$286 per capita), representing 2.1% of GDP.

Army

The strength of the Army section of the Defence Force was 125 in 2011.

Navy

There was a naval force of 45 operating two patrol craft in 2011.

ECONOMY

In 2009 agriculture accounted for 1.7% of GDP, industry 22.0% and services 76.3%.

Overview

Antigua and Barbuda is a member of the Organisation of Eastern Caribbean States (OECS). Its main industries are tourism (accounting for nearly 60% of GDP and 40% of investment), construction and light manufacturing. A construction boom connected to the Cricket World Cup resulted in strong economic growth from 2003–07. However, the global economic crisis saw the country's largest financial institution collapse, while a sharp fall in tourism and FDI inflows resulted in the economy contracting by over 20% between 2008 and 2012.

Government initiatives have prompted a modest recovery in tourism and construction, while fiscal consolidation has reduced the high level of public debt.

Currency

The unit of currency is the East Caribbean dollar (XCD), issued by the Eastern Caribbean Central Bank. Foreign exchange reserves in July 2005 were US$122m. and total money supply was EC$573m. There was inflation of 1.1% in both 2013 and 2014.

Budget

In 2009 revenues totalled EC$599.8m. and expenditures EC$1,037.8m. Tax revenue accounted for 95.7% of revenues in 2009; current expenditure accounted for 76.3% of expenditures.

Performance

Following three years of recession from 2009–11 the economy recovered, growing by 3.6% in 2012, 1.5% in 2013 and 4.2% in 2014. Total GDP was US$1.2bn. in 2014.

Banking and Finance

The East Caribbean Central Bank based in St Kitts functions as a central bank. The Governor is Timothy Antoine. Investment banking and financial services play an important role in the economy. Leading banks include Antigua Commercial Bank, Caribbean Union Bank Ltd, Eastern Caribbean Amalgamated Bank Ltd and Global Bank of Commerce Ltd. In 1981 Antigua established an offshore banking sector. The offshore sector is regulated by the Financial Services Regulatory Commission, a statutory body.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

In 2011 Antigua and Barbuda's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy were the equivalent of 6.7 tonnes per capita.

Electricity

Capacity in 2011 was 84,000 kW. Production was estimated at 325m. kWh in 2011 and consumption per capita was about 3,687 kWh.

Agriculture

In 2007 there were around 8,000 ha. of arable land and 1,000 ha. of permanent crops. Production (2003) of fruits and vegetables, 13,000 tonnes (notably melons and mangoes).

Livestock (2003): goats, 36,000; sheep, 19,000; cattle, 14,000; pigs, 6,000.

Forestry

Forests covered 10,000 ha., or 22% of the total land area, in 2010.

Fisheries

Total catch in 2010 came to 2,293 tonnes, exclusively from sea fishing.

INDUSTRY

Manufactures include beer, cement, stoves, refrigerators, fans, garments and rum (molasses imported from Guyana).

Labour

In 2008, 38,500 people were in employment. The main areas of activity were: hotels and restaurants, 5,800; wholesale and retail trade, repair of motor vehicles, motorcycles and personal and household goods, 5,500; public administration and defence, and compulsory social security, 5,000. The hourly minimum wage was raised to EC$7.50 (US$2.78) in Jan. 2008.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

Imports in 2010 (c.i.f.) totalled US$361.3m. and exports (f.o.b.) US$34.8m. The main trading partners were the USA, China and the UK for imports; and the USA, the UK and Panama for exports.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

In 2002 there were 1,165 km of roads of which 33.0% were paved. 23,700 passenger cars and 5,200 commercial vehicles were in use in 2002. More than EC$64m. was spent to rebuild major roads and highways in the three years following damage caused by hurricanes Luis and Marilyn in 1995.

Civil Aviation

V. C. Bird International Airport is near St John's. There were flights in 2010 to Anguilla, Atlanta, Barbados, Charlotte, Curaçao, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Frankfurt, Georgetown, Grenada, Hartford, Kingston, London, Miami, Milan, Montserrat, New York, Pointe-à-Pitre, Puerto Rico, St Croix, St Kitts and Nevis, St Lucia, St Maarten, St Vincent, Toronto, Trinidad and Tobago, and the British and US Virgin Islands. A domestic flight links the airports on Antigua and Barbuda.

Shipping

The main port is St John's Harbour. In Jan. 2009 there were 1,166 ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 9,620,000 GT.

Telecommunications

There were 41,700 fixed telephone lines in 2010, or 470.5 per 1,000 inhabitants. Mobile phone subscribers numbered 163,900 in 2010. There were 742.0 internet users per 1,000 inhabitants in 2009. Fixed internet subscriptions totalled 15,600 in 2009 (177.7 per 1,000 inhabitants).

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

Law is based on UK common law as exercised by the Eastern Caribbean Supreme Court (ECSC) on St Lucia. There are Magistrates' Courts and a Court of Summary Jurisdiction. Appeals lie to the Court of Appeal of ECSC, or ultimately to the UK Privy Council. Antigua and Barbuda was one of ten countries to sign an agreement in Feb. 2001 establishing a Caribbean Court of Justice to replace the British Privy Council as the highest civil and criminal court. In the meantime the number of signatories has risen to 12. The court was inaugurated at Port of Spain, Trinidad on 16 April 2005 although Antigua and Barbuda has yet to accept it as its court of last resort.

The population in penal institutions in July 2013 was 371 (equivalent to 403 per 100,000 of national population).

Education

Adult literacy was an estimated 98.9% in 2009. In 2007 there were 11,569 pupils at primary schools and 7,838 pupils at secondary schools. The University of Health Sciences Antigua is a private medical school, the University of the West Indies School of Continuing Studies offers adult training and the Antigua State College offers technical and teacher training. Antigua is a partner in the regional University of the West Indies.

In 2009 public expenditure on education came to 2.8% of GDP.

Health

There is one general hospital, a private clinic, seven health centres and 17 associated clinics. A new medical centre at Mount St John's opened in Feb. 2009. In the period 2000–06 there were two physicians per 10,000 inhabitants. In 2005 there were 16 dentists, 175 nurses, and 15 pharmacists and pharmacy assistants.

Welfare

The state operates a Medical Benefits Scheme providing free medical attention, and a Social Security Scheme, providing age and disability pensions and sickness benefits.

RELIGION

In 2010 an estimated 93.0% of the population were Christians (mainly Protestants) and 3.6% folk religionists according to the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life.

CULTURE

Press

The main newspapers are The Antigua Sun and The Daily Observer, with a combined circulation of 9,000 in 2008.

Tourism

Tourism is the main industry, contributing about 70% of GDP and 80% of foreign exchange earnings and related activities. In 2010 there were 229,943 tourist arrivals by air and 557,635 cruise passengers arrivals.

Festivals

Of particular interest are the International Sailing Week (April–May), the Annual Tennis Championship (May) and the Mid-Summer Carnival (July–Aug.).

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Before European colonization two main indigenous American groups and numerous nomadic tribes inhabited the region that is now Argentina, constituting a population of some 300,000. Both groups—the Diaguita people in the northwest, and the Guarani people in the south and east—created the basis for a permanent agricultural civilization. The Diaguita also prevented the powerful Inca from expanding their empire from Bolivia into Argentina.

Europeans first came to Argentina in the early 16th century. The explorer Sebastian Cabot established the first Spanish settlement in 1526. He reported Argentina's natural silver resources, possibly inspiring the name Argentina ('of silver'). Ten years later Pedro de Mendoza founded Buenos Aires; however, it was not until 1580 that the region's indigenous peoples, weakened by European diseases as much as European military campaigns, were finally defeated and Spanish rule established.

Largely neglected as Spain looked instead to the riches of Peru, most settlers in Argentina came from the neighbouring colonies of Chile, Peru and Paraguay. Missions established by the Roman Catholic Church played an important part in the colonizing process.

In 1776 Buenos Aires, known throughout the 18th century as a smuggler's haunt, was made a free port at the centre of a viceroyalty comprising Argentina, Uruguay, Paraguay and Bolivia. As trade with Europe increased, Buenos Aires adopted European enlightenment and was seen as more cosmopolitan than its rivals.

When Spain came under Napoleonic control the British attacked Buenos Aires, first in 1806 and then again in 1807. On both occasions the city was able to repel the invasions without help from Spanish forces. This was a spur to the independence movement.

Independence

Having separated from Paraguay in 1814, Argentina gained its independence from Spain in 1816. Unable to control its outlying regions, it lost Bolivia in 1825 and Uruguay in 1828. In the early years of independence, the country was embroiled in internal struggles between the Unitarists and the Federalists. Unitarists wanted a strong central government, particularly as Britain agreed to recognize Argentinian independence only if it could devise a government representing the whole country. Federalists, on the other hand, advocated regional control, as each province had formed its own political regime, based on local interests and reinforced by military leaders dominant since the war.

In 1827 Argentinians joined forces with Uruguay to repel a Brazilian invasion, thereby securing independence for Uruguay and encouraging Argentinian unification. From 1835–52, the Federalists held power under Gen. Juan Manuel de Rosas, an important landowner and commander of a rural militia. Governor of Buenos Aires from 1829, Rosas proved a formidable leader who used a secret police force, the Mazorca, to defeat his opponents. He also consolidated church support, compelling priests to display his portrait at the altar.

Britain seized the Falkland Islands (Islas Malvinas) in 1833, while Bolivia, Paraguay and Uruguay continued to isolate the federation. In 1838, following a trade dispute with Uruguay, Argentinian political exiles gained French support in an attempt to overthrow Rosas. But he remained in power until 1853 when he was ousted by Gen. Justo José de Urquiza. The Unitarists inaugurated a new constitution to achieve a more stable government, although Urquiza's overthrow by Santiago Derqui led to another civil war. An agreement between Urquiza and Gen. Bartolomé Mitre, governor of Buenos Aires, saw a return to stability and established the city as the seat of government.

In a period of strong economic growth, schools were built, public works started and liberal reforms instituted. From 1865–70 Argentina was involved in the War of the Triple Alliance, joining with Uruguay and Brazil in a campaign against Paraguay. This ultimately strengthened the newly centralized Argentina. From 1880–86 Argentina thrived under the leadership of Gen. Julio Roca. A Federalist, Roca nevertheless retained Buenos Aires as the capital. During his second term of office, Roca made peace with Chile after years of dispute over territory.

As a magnet for European immigration, the political system came under pressure to broaden its representation. Italian and Spanish immigrants established the new Socialist, Anarchist and Unión Cívica Radical parties. This latter became the main political force and under the leadership of Hipólito Irigoyen won their first presidential election in 1916, following Roque Sáenz Peña's electoral reforms of 1910–14. The conservatives regained power in 1930, supported by the military, and the activities of radicals were restricted until Gen. Augustín Pedro Justin, heading a coalition of conservatives, radicals and independent socialists, was elected in 1931. Political and economic reforms resulted in trade agreements with Britain which strengthened the economy.

Perón

Although Argentina remained neutral at the outbreak of the Second World War, another coup in 1943 brought Gen. Juan Domingo Perón to power. He chose to side with the allies and declared war on the axis powers.

Perón led a regime that was autocratic but populist and nationalistic, winning presidential elections in 1946 and 1951 with the support of the urban working class. His success was reinforced by his second wife Eva Duarte de Perón, 'Evita'. Acting as de facto minister of health and labour, she awarded wage increases that led to inflation. Her death in 1952 combined with Perón's increasing authoritarianism and his excommunication from the church, led to a fall in his popularity. In 1955 a coup by the armed forces sent him into exile.

In 1957 Argentina reverted to the constitution of 1853, and a year later Arturo Frondizi was elected president. With US financial aid, Frondizi attempted to stabilize the economy but faced heavy criticism from left-wing parties and from the Peronists. Frondizi also fell out of favour with the military, whose intervention continued to overshadow Argentinian politics. When the Peronists achieved the highest number of votes in elections in 1962 the military took control, banning the Peronists, along with the Communist party, before elections in 1963. Arturo Illia, a moderate liberal, was elected and many political prisoners were released. An attempted return by Perón in 1964 drove the military to install Gen. Carlos Onganía as president. Responding to popular resistance, the military eventually allowed the re-election of Perón in 1973.

After Perón's death in 1974 his third wife, María Estela Martínez de Perón, 'Isabelita', succeeded, becoming the Americas' first woman chief of state. She was deposed by military coup two years later and the army's commander-in-chief, Gen. Jorge Videla, became president. Once in power, Videla dissolved Congress, banned trade unions and imposed military control. Censorship and military curfews were imposed and the secret police was active. The savagely repressive regime implemented what became known as the 'Dirty War' when up to 15,000 of Videla's opponents disappeared, almost certainly tortured and executed.

Falklands War

Videla was succeeded by Gen. Leopoldo Galtieri, the army commander-in-chief. In April 1982, in an effort to distract attention from internal tension, Galtieri invaded the Falkland Islands. The subsequent defeat helped to precipitate Galtieri's fall in July 1982. Decades of state intervention, regulation, inward looking policies and special interest subsidies had caused economic chaos. Presidential elections held in Oct. 1983 restored civilian rule under Raúl Alfonsín, leader of the middle-class

Unión Cívica Radical. Despite attempting to redress the finances of the bloated public sector, growing unemployment and four-figure inflation led to a Peronist victory in the 1989 elections and Carlos Menem became Argentina's new president.

After an attempted military coup in Dec. 1990, Menem met allegations of corruption in the country's privatization programme by reshuffling his government. Economy Minister Domingo Cavallo's plan to stabilize the economy allowed Menem to alter the constitution in 1994 to permit his re-election for a second term.

By 1999, with economic recession and high unemployment, Menem's popularity had plummeted. In the election that year, Fernando de la Rúa of the centrist Alliance became the first president in a decade from outside of the Peronist party. Menem was later accused of illegal arms deals but was released by a federal court and announced his intention to return to politics.

A state of emergency was introduced in Dec. 2001 as Argentina verged on bankruptcy. De la Rúa resigned on 20 Dec. 2001 after days of rioting and looting. Three interim presidents held power over a period of just 11 days before another Peronist, Eduardo Duhalde, was elected president by Congress. With the economy still in crisis, Duhalde held office until the election of Néstor Kirchner in May 2003. He was succeeded by his wife, Cristina Fernández de Kirchner, four years later. She enjoyed a relatively powerful presidency benefiting from a strong legislative majority, during which Argentina became the first Latin American country to legalize same-sex marriage. Mauricio Macri was elected president in Oct. 2015, taking over from Fernández, who had completed her constitutionally limited mandate of two successive terms.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

The second largest country in South America, the Argentine Republic is bounded in the north by Bolivia, in the northeast by Paraguay, in the east by Brazil, Uruguay and the Atlantic Ocean, and the west by Chile. The republic consists of 23 provinces and one federal district. Area (in sq. km) and census population (in 1,000) in 2010:

Argentina also claims territory in Antarctica.

The area is 2,780,400 sq. km (excluding the claimed Antarctic territory) and the population at the 2010 census 40,117,096, giving a density of 14 per sq. km.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 43.42m.

In 2011, 92.6% of the population were urban.

In April 1990 the National Congress declared that the Falklands and other British-held islands in the South Atlantic were part of the new province of Tierra del Fuego formed from the former National Territory of the same name. The 1994 constitution reaffirms Argentine sovereignty over the Falkland Islands.

The population of the main metropolitan areas at the 2010 census was: Buenos Aires, 13,588,171; Córdoba, 1,453,865; Rosario, 1,236,089; Mendoza, 937,154; Tucumán, 794,327; La Plata, 787,294.

97% speak the national language, Spanish, while 2% speak Italian and 1% other languages. The 2010 census population included 1,805,957 persons born outside Argentina (550,713 born in Paraguay, 345,272 in Bolivia, 191,147 in Chile, 157,514 in Peru and 147,499 in Italy).

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2010 births, 756,176; deaths, 318,602. Rates, 2010 (per 1,000 population): birth, 18.7; death, 7.9. Infant mortality, 2010, 12 per 1,000 live births. Life expectancy at birth, 2013, 72.6 years for males and 79.9 years for females. Annual population growth rate, 2005–10, 0.9%; fertility rate, 2013, 2.2 births per woman. Argentina legalized same-sex marriage in July 2010.

CLIMATE

The climate is warm temperate over the pampas, where rainfall occurs in all seasons, but diminishes towards the west. In the north and west, the climate is more arid, with high summer temperatures, while in the extreme south conditions are also dry, but much cooler. Buenos Aires, Jan. 74°F (23.3°C), July 50°F (10°C). Annual rainfall 37" (950 mm). Bahía Blanca, Jan. 74°F (23.3°C), July 48°F (8.9°C). Annual rainfall 21" (523 mm). Mendoza, Jan. 75°F (23.9°C), July 47°F (8.3°C). Annual rainfall 8" (190 mm). Rosario, Jan. 76°F (24.4°C), July 51°F (10.6°C). Annual rainfall 35" (869 mm). San Juan, Jan. 78°F (25.6°C), July 50°F (10°C). Annual rainfall 4" (89 mm). San Miguel de Tucumán, Jan. 79°F (26.1°C), July 56°F (13.3°C). Annual rainfall 38" (970 mm). Ushuaia, Jan. 50°F (10°C), July 34°F (1.1°C). Annual rainfall 19" (475 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

On 10 April 1994 elections were held for a 230-member constituent assembly to reform the 1853 constitution. The Justicialist National Movement (Peronist) gained 39% of votes cast and the Radical Union 20%. On 22 Aug. 1994 this assembly unanimously adopted a new constitution. This reduces the presidential term of office from six to four years, but permits the President to stand for two terms. The President is no longer elected by an electoral college, but directly by universal suffrage. A presidential candidate is elected with more than 45% of votes cast, or 40% if at least 10% ahead of an opponent; otherwise there is a second round. The Constitution reduces the President's powers by instituting a Chief of Cabinet. The bicameral National Congress consists of a Senate and a Chamber of Deputies. The Senate comprises 72 members (one-third of the members elected every two years to six-year terms). The Chamber of Deputies comprises 257 members (one-half of the members elected every two years to four-year terms) directly elected by universal suffrage. Voting is compulsory for citizens aged 18 to 70 and—with effect from the mid-term elections of Oct. 2013—optional for those aged 16 and 17.

Position

President

Introduction

Mauricio Macri became president in Dec. 2015, at the head of a centre-right coalition. He has promised to boost growth by implementing liberal economic policies.

Early Life

Born in Tandil in Buenos Aires province on 8 Feb. 1959, Macri studied civil engineering at the Pontifical Catholic University of Argentina. He then undertook graduate studies in finance and economics at the Universidad del CEMA, at Columbia Business School and at the Wharton School of the University of Pennsylvania in the USA. From the mid-1980s he worked in various companies within his family's Socma Group, rising to become president of car manufacturer Sevel Argentina in 1994.

In 1991 he was kidnapped by a group of Argentinian police officers and released after 12 days, reportedly after payment of a multi-million dollar ransom—an incident that influenced him to enter politics. From 1995–2003 he served as president of the popular Boca Juniors football club. His tenure saw the club achieve success and gained him an increased public profile. In 2003 he founded the centre-right Commitment to Change party, and unsuccessfully contested the Buenos Aires mayoral elections. In 2005 the party was relaunched as Republican Proposal and Macri was elected to parliament. He was elected mayor of Buenos Aires at the second attempt in 2007, and re-elected in 2011. In office he won praise for investing in public transport and city infrastructure, although his attempt to set up a metropolitan police force was more controversial.

In 2015 he formed the Let's Change coalition comprising his own Republican Proposal, the Radical Civic Union and several smaller parties. He then headed its presidential election campaign, pledging to re-invigorate the economy with free-market policies, strengthen institutions and build better relationships with the USA and Europe. Having performed well enough in the first round to force a run-off, Macri won a surprise second round victory in Nov. with 51.4% of the vote.

Career in Office

Macri took office on 10 Dec. 2015 and moved swiftly to implement key policies. As well as cutting export taxes on agricultural products and removing currency controls, he also began negotiating with overseas bondholders in an attempt to settle debts. On social issues, such as abortion, he has signalled a conservative stance. His many challenges include the sluggish economy, widespread inequality and corruption.

DEFENCE

Conscription was abolished in 1994. In 2013 defence expenditure totalled US$5,104m. (US$120 per capita), representing 1.0% of GDP (compared to over 8% in 1981).

Army

In 2007 the Army was 41,400 strong. There are no reserves formally established or trained.

There is a paramilitary gendarmerie of 18,000 run by the Ministry of Interior.

Navy

In 2007 the Argentinian Navy included three diesel submarines, five destroyers and nine frigates. Total personnel was 20,000 including 2,000 in Naval Aviation and 2,500 marines. Main bases are at Puerto Belgrano, Mar del Plata and Ushuaia.

The Naval Aviation Service had 28 combat-capable aircraft in 2007, including Super-Etendard strike aircraft, and 19 helicopters, including Agusta/Sikorsky ASH-3H Sea Kings.

Air Force

The Air Force is organized into Air Operations, Air Regions, Logistics and Personnel Commands. There were (2007) 14,600 personnel and 119 combat-capable aircraft including A-4 Skyhawk, Mirage 5 and Mirage III jet fighters.

ECONOMY

Agriculture contributed 7.5% of GDP in 2009, industry 31.8% and services 60.7%.

In Jan. 2006 the government repaid the country's entire US$9.57bn. debt to the IMF ahead of schedule.

Overview

With the third largest economy in Latin America, Argentina is rich in natural resources, boasts a vibrant agricultural sector and has a well-educated workforce. However, it has long been locked into a debilitating cycle of boom and bust.

In the 1980s the economy contracted at an average annual rate of 0.7% following a period of macroeconomic mismanagement. Structural reforms, market liberalization and a convertibility plan (establishing a currency peg to the US dollar) in 1991 helped stabilize the economy for most of the 1990s. The fixed exchange rate regime survived the Mexican and Asian financial crises but the balance of payments was unable to withstand the pressure caused by subsequent shocks. By the fourth quarter of 1998 the economy was in recession.

In Dec. 2001 Argentina recorded the largest sovereign debt default in history and in Jan. 2002 abandoned convertibility. From 1999–2002 the economy contracted by 18.4%, leaving over half the population in poverty. Strong recovery between 2003 and 2007 was underpinned by a firm fiscal policy, debt restructuring and favourable international market conditions. Unemployment fell and the urban poverty rate dropped from 48% in 2003 to 10% in 2010.

Argentina weathered the 2008–09 global financial crisis, with strong growth in 2010 supported by high agricultural yields and exports, notably of soybean and beef products. In June 2010 Argentina concluded an US$18.3bn. debt swap process, in which bad debts stemming from the 2001 default were exchanged for new bonds. This, combined with the 2005 restructuring, enabled the government to settle 92% of the US$100bn. default debt. However, those who rejected the debt swap offers have since won a series of judgments in US courts ordering Argentina to pay.

The economy slowed in 2012, with investor confidence undermined in April that year by the nationalization of oil firm YPF, restrictions on imports and currency tightening in an attempt to bolster reserves. In early 2014 the government devalued the peso by 20% and tightened fiscal policy, but in July 2014 the country defaulted for the eighth time in its history after a legal stand-off with its 'hold-out' bondholders. In an effort to preserve international reserves, which fell to an eight-year low in Aug. 2014, the government further increased limits on imports, making it costly for local manufacturers to obtain raw materials.

Inflation remains high, with the official figure of 9.9% in 2014 being much lower than some independent estimates putting it in the region of 25–35%.

Currency

The monetary unit is the peso (ARS). In Dec. 2015 foreign exchange controls were lifted and the peso was allowed to float freely. Inflation rates (based on IMF statistics)¹:

Gold reserves were 1.76m. troy oz in Sept. 2009; foreign exchange reserves were US$43,111m. Total money supply was 107,615m. pesos in Aug. 2009.

Budget

Revenues in 2009 (provisional) totalled 242,949m. pesos and expenditures 249,914m. pesos.

VAT is 21% (reduced rate, 10.5%).

Total GDP was US$537.7bn. in 2014.

Banking and Finance

The total assets of the Argentine Central Bank (BCRA) in Dec. 2007 were 228.92bn. pesos. The President of the Central Bank is Federico Sturzenegger. In early 2002 banks and financial markets were temporarily closed as an emergency measure in response to the economic crisis that made the country virtually bankrupt. In 2002 there were 16 government banks, 24 private commercial banks, four co-operative banks, one other national bank (Banco Hipotecario Nacional) and 17 foreign banks.

In 2010 total external debt was US$127,849m., representing 36.1% of GNI.

There is a main stock exchange at Buenos Aires, which was the best performing exchange in the world in 2014 with an annual gain of 58.9%. There are also exchanges in Córdoba, Rosario, Mendoza and La Plata.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Argentina’s carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2011 were the equivalent of 4.7 tonnes per capita. An Environmental Performance Index compiled in 2016 ranked Argentina 43rd of 180 countries, with 79.8%. The index examined various factors in nine areas—agriculture, air quality, biodiversity and habitat, climate and energy, fisheries, forests, health impacts, water and sanitation, and water resources.

Electricity

Installed capacity in 2011 was 33.8m. kW. Electric power production (2011) was 129,892m. kWh (including 31,901m. kWh hydro-electric and 6,371m. kWh nuclear); consumption per capita in 2011 was 3,427 kWh. In 2015 there were three nuclear reactors operational.

Oil and Gas

Oil production (2013) was 30.5m. tonnes. Reserves were 2.4bn. bbls in 2013. The oil industry was privatized in 1993. Natural gas extraction in 2013 was 35.5bn. cu. metres. Reserves were 300bn. cu. metres in 2013. The main area in production is the Neuquen basin in western Argentina, with over 40% of the total oil reserves and nearly half the gas reserves. Argentina has vast mostly untapped shale gas reserves that could help revive the economy in the future. Natural gas accounts for approximately 45% of all the energy consumed in Argentina.

Minerals

Minerals (with production in 2005) include clays (6.4m. tonnes), salt (1.8m. tonnes), borates (632,792 tonnes), aluminium (270,714 tonnes), bentonite (247,101 tonnes), copper (187,317 tonnes), coal (110,000 tonnes in 2007), zinc (30,227 tonnes of metal), lead (10,683 tonnes of metal), silver (264 tonnes), gold (27,904 kg), granite, marble and tungsten. Production from the US$1.1bn. Alumbrrera copper and gold mine, the country’s biggest mining project, in Catamarca province in the northwest, started in 1997. In 1993 the mining laws were reformed and state regulation was swept away, creating a more stable tax regime for investors. In 1997 Argentina and Chile signed a treaty laying the legal and tax framework for mining operations straddling the 5,000 km border, allowing mining products to be transported out through both countries.

Agriculture

In 2007 there were around 32.5m. ha. of arable land and 1.0m. ha. of permanent crops. 1.56m. ha. were irrigated in 2006. The agricultural population was an estimated 3.18m. in 2008, of whom 1.42m. were economically active. In 2009 there were 4.40m. ha. of organic agricultural land (the second largest area after Australia), representing 3.3% of the total area under agriculture.

Livestock (2009 estimates): cattle, 50,750,000; sheep, 12,450,000; goats, 4,250,000; horses, 3,680,000; pigs, 2,270,000. In 2008–09 greasy wool production was 54,000 tonnes; milk (in 2007), 9,527m. litres; eggs (in 2007), 696m. dozen.

Crop production (in 1,000 tonnes) in 2006–07: soybeans, 47,500; sugarcane (2008 estimate), 29,950; maize, 21,800; wheat, 14,500; sunflower seeds, 3,500; potatoes (2008 estimate), 1,950. Cotton, vine, citrus fruit, olives and yerba maté (Paraguayan tea) are also cultivated. Argentina is the world’s leading producer of sunflower seeds, and is now the fifth largest wine producer (15,046,000 hectolitres in 2007) after Italy, France, Spain and the USA; it ranked seventh in the world in 2007 for wine exports and eighth for wine consumption.

Forestry

The forest area was 29.40m. ha., or 11% of the total land area, in 2010. Timber production in 2011 was 14.62m. cu. metres.

Fisheries

Fish landings in 2010 amounted to 811,749 tonnes (down from 921,797 tonnes in 2000), almost exclusively from sea fishing.

INDUSTRY

Production, 2007 unless otherwise indicated (in 1,000 tonnes): distillate fuel oil, 10,970; cement, 9,602; crude steel, 5,388; petrol, 4,846; pig iron, 4,389; residual fuel oil, 4,267; sugar (2006), 2,312; paper (2006), 1,721; jet fuel, 1,283; polyethylene, 575; synthetic rubber, 54. Motor vehicles produced in 2007 totalled 350,735; car tyres, 12,079,000; motorcycles, 225,397.

Labour

In 2012 the labour force in urban areas totalled 16.90m., of which 15.66m. were employed and 1.24m. were unemployed. The urban unemployment rate was 7.3% in 2012.

Argentina had 35,000 people living in slavery according to the Walk Free Foundation’s 2013 Global Slavery Index.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

Goods imports were US$65,323.4m. in 2014 (US$73,655.5m. in 2013) and goods exports US$68,335.1m. (US$76,633.9m. in 2013).

Principal imports in 2014 were machinery and transport equipment (41.7%), chemicals, and mineral fuels and lubricants; main exports in 2014 were food, animals and beverages (42.2%), machinery and transport equipment, and crude materials and animal and vegetable oils.

The leading import supplier in 2010 was Brazil (31.3%), followed by China and the USA; the leading export destination in 2010 was Brazil (21.2%), followed by China and Chile.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

In 2003 there were 231,374 km of roads, of which 30.0% were paved. The four main roads constituting Argentina's portion of the Pan-American Highway were opened in 1942. Vehicles in use in 2007 totalled 12,399,900. In 2005, 3,443 people were killed in road accidents.

Rail

Much of the 34,000 km state-owned network (on 1,000 mm, 1,435 mm and 1,676 mm gauges) was privatized in 1993–94. 30-year concessions were awarded to five freight operators; long-distance passenger services are run by contractors to the requirements of local authorities. Metro, light rail and suburban railway services are also operated by concessionaires.

The rail company carrying the most passengers is Trenes de Buenos Aires (190m. in 2008); Ferrosur Roca carries the most freight (5.1m. tonnes in 2005–06).

The metro and light rail network in Buenos Aires extended to 75 km in 2005. A light railway opened in Mendoza in 2012, with a total length of 12.5 km.

Civil Aviation

The main airport is Ministro Pistarini International Airport—also known as Ezeiza International Airport—which serves Buenos Aires and handled 7,910,048 passengers in 2009 (7,461,727 passengers on international flights). The second busiest airport is Aeroparque Jorge Newbery, also serving Buenos Aires, which handled 6,449,344 passengers in 2009. It is much more important as a domestic airport, with only 524,934 passengers on international flights in 2009. The national carrier, Aerolíneas Argentinas, was privatized in 1990 but renationalized in Sept. 2008. In 2010 it operated direct flights to Asunción, Auckland, Barcelona, Bogotá, Caracas, Florianópolis, Lima, Madrid, Miami, Montevideo, Porto Alegre, Punta del Este, Rio de Janeiro, Rome, Salvador, Santa Cruz, Santiago, São Paulo and Sydney, as well as domestic services. There were direct international flights with other airlines in 2010 to Asunción, Atlanta, Barcelona, Belo Horizonte, Bogotá, Cape Town, Cayo Coco, Cochabamba, Curitiba, Dallas, Florianópolis, Frankfurt, Guayaquil, Havana, Houston, Johannesburg, Kuala Lumpur, La Paz, Lima, London, Los Angeles, Madrid, Mexico City, Miami, Montevideo, New York, Panama City, Paris, Porto Alegre, Punta Cana, Punta del Este, Quito, Recife, Rio de Janeiro, Salvador, San José (Costa Rica), Santa Cruz, Santiago, São Paulo, Sydney, Toronto and Washington, D.C.

In 2006 scheduled airline traffic of Argentinian-based carriers flew 101m. km, carrying 6,636,000 passengers (1,818,000 on international flights).

Shipping

In Jan. 2009 there were 59 ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 500,000 GT. The leading ports are Buenos Aires (which handled 12,745,000 tonnes of cargo in 2008) and Bahía Blanca (12,676,000 tonnes of cargo in 2008).

Telecommunications

The telephone service Entel was privatized in 1990. The sell-off split Argentina into two monopolies, operated by Telefónica Internacional de España, and a holding controlled by France Télécom and Telecom Italia. In 2000 the industry was opened to unrestricted competition. In 2014 mobile phone subscribers numbered 66.4m. (1,588.0 per 1,000 persons). In the same year there were 9.6m. main (fixed) telephone lines. In 2014, 64.7% of the population were internet users. In June 2012 there were 19.0m. Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

Justice is administered by federal and provincial courts. The former deal only with cases of a national character, or those in which different provinces or inhabitants of different provinces are parties. The chief federal court is the Supreme Court, with five judges whose appointment is approved by the Senate. Other federal courts are the appeal courts, at Buenos Aires, Bahía Blanca, La Plata, Córdoba, Mendoza, Tucumán and Resistencia. Each province has its own judicial system, with a Supreme Court (generally so designated) and several minor chambers. The death penalty was reintroduced in 1976—for the killing of government, military police and judicial officials, and for participation in terrorist activities—but was abolished in 2008. In 2012 there were 2,888 homicides (rate of 7.0 per 100,000 population). The population in penal institutions in Dec. 2011 was 60,789 (147 per 100,000 of national population). Argentina was ranked 59th of 102 countries for criminal justice and 42nd for civil justice in the 2015 World Justice Project Rule of Law Index, which provides data on how the rule of law is experienced by the general public across eight categories.

The police force is centralized under the Federal Security Council.

Education

Adult literacy was 98% in 2008.

In 2005, 1,324,529 children attended pre-school institutions, 6,510,382 pupils were in basic general education, 1,545,992 in 'multimodal' secondary schooling and 509,134 in higher non-universities.

In 2006, in the public sector, there were 39 universities (including one technical university and one art institute) and university institutes of aeronautics, military studies, naval and maritime studies, and police studies. In the private sector, there were 40 universities (including seven Roman Catholic universities) and ten university institutes. In 2006 there were 1,304,003 students attending public universities and 279,373 at private universities.

In 2006 public expenditure on education came to 4.6% of GDP and 14.0% of total government spending.

Health

Free medical attention is obtainable from public hospitals. In the period 2006–12 Argentina had 47 hospital beds per 10,000 population. There were 38.6 physicians for every 10,000 inhabitants in the period 2007–13. Spending on health amounted to 7.3% of GDP in 2013.

Welfare

Until the end of 1996 trade unions had a monopoly in the handling of the compulsory social security contributions of employees, but private insurance agencies are now permitted to function alongside them.

Social security system expenditure (in 1m. pesos):

Social security benefits including pensions	204,357	270,076
Family allowances	24,386	32,644
Pension transfers	954	1,771
Unemployment insurance	575	569
Other	6,238	7,870
Total	236,509	312,929

¹Budgeted figures.

RELIGION

The Roman Catholic religion is supported by the State; according to estimates by the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life there were 31.02m. Catholics in 2010. There were four cardinals in Feb. 2016. Jorge Mario Bergoglio was a cardinal from 2001 until March 2013, when he was selected to succeed Benedict XVI as Pope. The Pew Research Center estimates that in 2010 there were also 2.96m. Protestants, 440,000 other Christians (including Latter-day Saints/Mormons), 400,000 Muslims, 330,000 folk religionists and 200,000 Jews.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

Argentina's heritage sites as classified by UNESCO (with year entered on list) are: Los Glaciares national park (1981), the Iguazu National Park (1984), and the Ischigualasto and Talampaya National Parks (2000). The Cueva de las Manos (Cave of Hands, 1999), in Patagonia, contains cave art that is between 1,000 and 10,000 years old. The Peninsula Valdés (1999) in Patagonia protects several endangered species of marine mammal. The Jesuit Block and Estancias of Córdoba (2000) are the principal buildings of the Jesuit community from the 17th and 18th century. The Quebrada de Humahuaca (2003) is a valley on the Camino Inca trade route. Shared with Brazil, the Jesuit Missions of the Guaranis (1984) encompasses the ruins of five Jesuit missions. Shared with Bolivia, Chile, Colombia, Ecuador and Peru, Qhapaq Ñan, Andean Road System (2014) is an extensive Inca communication, trade and defence network of roads covering 30,000 km.

Press

In 2014 there were 47 daily newspapers with a combined average daily circulation of 1.4m. The main newspapers are Clarín, La Nación and Diario Popular.

Tourism

In 2009, 4,329,000 tourists visited Argentina (excluding same-day visitors), down from a record 4,700,000 in 2008 and 4,562,000 in 2007. Of the 4,329,000 tourists in 2009, 3,413,000 were from elsewhere in the Americas and 722,000 were from Europe.

Festivals

Carnival is celebrated in Feb.–March. The Grape Harvest Festival (Fiesta Nacional de la Vendimia) takes place in Mendoza at the end of Feb. Mar del Plata holds an annual National Sea Festival (Dec.–Jan.) and International Film Festival (Nov.). Cosquín Rock (Feb.) and, in Buenos Aires, Pepsi music festival (Sept.–Oct.), Personal Fest (Oct.–Dec.) and Bue Festival (Nov.), are the leading pop and rock festivals. Buenos Aires Tango Festival takes place in Feb.–March.

ARMENIA

Byzantine forces recaptured Armenia in 1040 but were overwhelmed by Seljuk Turks at the battle of Manzikert in 1071. The expansion of the Mongol empire forced Armenians, led by Prince Reuben, westward to the former Byzantine province of Cilicia. A new state was founded, centred on Sis, and prospered on trade between the Mediterranean, the Middle East and Central Asia, until conquered by Mamluk Turks in 1337.

There were further Mongol attacks until, following the death of the great Turkic warrior Tamerlane in 1405, the western part of the Armenian plateau came under Ottoman Turkish control, while its eastern reaches were dominated by Persia. Led by the merchants, many Armenians migrated, establishing communities in Constantinople and Tiflis.

Russian expansion into the Caucasus in the early 19th century resulted in eastern Armenia becoming a Russian province in 1828. Following Russia's victory in the Russo-Turkish War in 1878, the province incorporated Kars, Ardahan and Batumi. Western Armenia remained under the waning Ottoman Empire. The brutal reign of Sultan Abdul-Hamid II led to an uprising in 1894, with between 100,000 and 300,000 dying in reprisal massacres over the following two years.

The ultranationalist Committee of Union and Progress, which led the Ottoman government from 1913, has been blamed for the systematic killing in 1915 of between 600,000 and 1.5m. Armenians. Turkey and Azerbaijan deny this amounted to genocide, arguing that the number of deaths was inflated and resulted from inter-ethnic violence during the First World War.

On 28 May 1918 the Democratic Republic of Armenia became an independent state. Violent clashes with the newly established republics of Georgia and Azerbaijan followed. Hopes that its former provinces in eastern Anatolia would be returned to Armenia as outlined in the 1920 Treaty of Sèvres were dashed when opposing Turkish and Red Army forces invaded the country. The Treaty of Kars, which ended Bolshevik-Turkish hostilities in Oct. 1921, ceded Mount Ararat and the ancient city of Ani to Turkey. The Armenian Soviet Socialist Republic became one of the 15 constituent republics of the USSR in Dec. 1922.

The collapse of the Soviet Union prompted a declaration of independence in Sept. 1991. The new president, Levon Ter-Petrosyan, led the country into the Commonwealth of Independent States. Hostilities with Azerbaijan over sovereignty of Nagorno-Karabakh erupted in 1988, intensifying into full-scale war in 1992. A ceasefire was agreed in 1994, with 30,000 having lost their lives and up to 1m. Armenians and Azeris displaced. A new constitution in July 1995 led to elections. Ter-Petrosyan was re-elected in 1996, though OSCE observers noted 'serious irregularities' in electoral procedures.

Ter-Petrosyan was succeeded by Robert Kocharyan in 1998. On 27 Oct. 1999 gunmen invaded parliament and killed the premier, Vazgen Sargsyan, and seven other officials. Aram Sargsyan was named his brother's successor. Kocharyan won a second presidential term in 2003, amid renewed complaints of voting irregularities. Thousands marched against the president in Yerevan in April 2004. Serzh Sargsyan, whose right-wing Republican Party took a third of seats in the 2007 parliamentary election, became president in Feb. 2008. When tens of thousands of opposition supporters took to the streets, a state of emergency was declared.

The historic visit of the Turkish president, Abdullah Gül, in Sept. 2008 seemed to herald a rapprochement between the two nations, although Sargsyan's calls to establish diplomatic relations and open borders have gone unheeded.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Some of the world's earliest settlements, dating from around 6200 BC, were built on the Armenian plateau, part of the 'fertile crescent' encompassing Anatolia, Mesopotamia and the Levant. Independent culture and language developed and trade flourished with neighbouring civilizations. By 900 BC the kingdom of Urartu had taken root, centred on Lake Van, until falling to the Assyrian and Scythian empires in the sixth century BC.

In 190 BC a Hellenistic Armenian state emerged from the remnants of Alexander the Great's short-lived empire. Led by King Artaxias, Greater Armenia reached its peak around 70 BC, stretching from central Anatolia to the Levant, Syria and northwestern Persia. The imperialistic ambitions of King Tigranes ended in defeat against Rome, with Armenia becoming a tributary kingdom. Christianity was adopted as the state religion in AD 301. The Sassanid Persians overran Armenia in AD 328, although the persecution of Christians kindled nationalism, particularly after the partition of the kingdom in AD 387 between Persia and Rome.

Despite successive domination by Persian, Byzantine and Arab forces between the fifth and ninth centuries, Armenian identity was maintained by nobles ('nakharars') with highly militarized fiefdoms. In 884 sovereignty was restored under the Bagruntid dynasty, which oversaw prosperity and urban development for over 150 years.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Armenia covers an area of 29,743 sq. km (11,484 sq. miles). It is bounded in the north by Georgia, in the east by Azerbaijan and in the south and west by Iran and Turkey.

The 2011 census population was 3,018,854; population density, 101 per sq. km. Jan. 2014 estimate: 3,017,100. Armenians account for 97.9%, Kurds 1.3% and Russians 0.5%—in 1989, prior to the Nagorno-Karabakh conflict, 2.6% of the population were Azeris. Approximately 64% lived in urban areas in 2009.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 3-02m.

There are an estimated 8m. Armenians worldwide, mainly living in Russia, the USA and Georgia as well as in Armenia itself.

The capital is Yerevan (estimated population of 1,068,300 in 2014). Other large towns are Gyumri (formerly Leninakan) (119,900, 2014 estimate) and Vanadzor (formerly Kirovakan) (84,300, 2014 estimate).

The official language is Armenian.

RECENT ELECTIONS

In presidential elections held on 18 Feb. 2013 incumbent Serzh Sargsyan received 58.6% of votes cast, ahead of Raffi Hovannisian with 36.8% and five other candidates. Turnout was 60.1%. OSCE observes noted improvements over previous elections but concluded that the election was not genuinely competitive. There was subsequently a series of protests by the opposition against alleged electoral fraud.

Parliamentary elections were held on 6 May 2012. The Republican Party of Armenia won 69 seats (64 in 2007); Prosperous Armenia, 36 (25 in 2007); Armenian National Congress, 7 (none in 2007); Armenian Revolutionary Federation, 6 (16 in 2007); Rule of Law, 6; Heritage Party, 5. Two seats went to independents. Turnout was 62.3%.

CURRENT LEADERS

Serzh Sargsyan

Position

President

Introduction

Serzh Sargsyan was sworn into office on 9 April 2008, nearly two months after he was declared the winner of the disputed presidential election. Although said to be fair by international observers, the election sparked violent clashes between protesters and police. A 20-day state of emergency was declared by the government before Sargsyan took office. He nevertheless won re-election in Feb. 2013.

Early Life

Sargsyan was born on 30 June 1954 in Stepanakert, in the Nagorno-Karabakh region. He enrolled at Yerevan State University in 1971 but served in the Soviet armed forces from 1972–74. He then worked as a metal turner from 1975–79 before graduating from the philological department of Yerevan State University in 1979. In the same year he became the divisional head of the Young Communist Union for Stepanakert.

Rising through the ranks of the Communist Party, Sargsyan was the leader of the Nagorno-Karabakh Republic self-defence forces committee during the Nagorno-Karabakh conflict of 1989–93. From 1993–95 he served as minister of defence and was later promoted to minister of national security. In 1996 he took over the ministry of interior portfolio when it merged with the national security ministry. When the offices separated in 1999, Sargsyan retained responsibility for national security. In the same year he joined the president's office as chief of staff and was selected as secretary of Armenia's national security council. In 2000 he returned to the defence ministry, where he served until 2007.

Sargsyan joined the conservative Republican Party of Armenia (HHK) in 2006 and became party chairman in Nov. 2007. In April 2007 President Robert Kocharyan appointed Sargsyan prime minister and in Feb. 2008 he went on to win the presidential election by a landslide.

Career in Office

Responding to the violent protests that followed his election victory, Sargsyan called for unity and co-operation among all political factions. He appointed the non-partisan Tigran Sargsyan (no relation), former chairman of the central bank, as prime minister.

In addition to promoting economic growth, Sargsyan also sought to improve international relations, especially with Armenia's neighbours. Turkey's rejection of charges of genocide in Armenia during the First World War has posed a stumbling block to bilateral reconciliation. In Oct. 2009 the two governments agreed on a framework to normalize relations, subject to parliamentary ratification by both sides. However, in April 2010 the Armenian parliament suspended the ratification process after the government accused Turkey of imposing preconditions, including a resolution of Armenia's territorial dispute with Azerbaijan. Azerbaijan has meanwhile refused to concede its claim on Nagorno-Karabakh despite several Russian-brokered meetings between Sargsyan and the Azeri president, and tensions again escalated from mid-2014 with an upsurge in clashes between Armenian and Azeri troops.

In parliamentary elections in May 2012 the governing pro-Sargsyan Republican Party retained its majority in the National Assembly, while in Feb. 2013 Sargsyan was re-elected president, winning almost 59% of the vote. However, the Council of Europe expressed concern over an opposition boycott of the poll. In a referendum in Dec. 2015 around 66% of voters were in favour of constitutional amendments championed by Sargsyan that envisage Armenia's transition to a parliamentary system of government. This would enhance the powers of the prime minister and cabinet appointed from the majority parliamentary party and demote the president to a largely ceremonial role. Opponents accused Sargsyan of aiming to perpetuate his political influence after his second and final presidential term ends in 2018.

In Oct. 2014 Sargsyan shunned closer ties with the European Union as he signed a treaty with the leaders of Russia, Kazakhstan and Belarus incorporating Armenia into the Eurasian Economic Union, a free trade zone superseding the former Eurasian Economic Community from 1 Jan. 2015.

DEFENCE

There is conscription for 24 months. Total active forces numbered 48,834 in 2011, including 25,880 conscripts. Defence expenditure in 2013 totalled US$447m. (US$150 per capita), representing 4.3% of GDP. There is a Russian military base in Armenia with 3,303 personnel in 2011.

Army

Troop levels were 45,846 in 2011, plus air and defence aviation forces of 1,927, air/air defence joint command forces of 1,061 and paramilitary forces of 6,694. There are approximately 210,000 Armenians who have received some kind of military service experience within the last 15 years.

INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

There is a dispute over the mainly Armenian-populated enclave of Nagorno-Karabakh, which lies within Azerbaijan's borders—Armenia and Azerbaijan are technically still at war with sporadic fighting continuing, most recently in April 2016.

ECONOMY

In 2009 agriculture contributed 18.9% of GDP, industry 35.8% and services 45.3%.

Overview

After independence in 1991 most agricultural land was privatized. By the end of 2000, with support from the IMF and the World Bank, over 80% of medium and large enterprises and 90% of small enterprises had been privatized. Following reforms in 2001 to strengthen the business environment and promote exports and investment, there were several years of double-digit growth.

Since the global financial crisis, growth has been driven by construction, mining and services, while the share of agriculture has declined. Remittances are also important. The poverty rate has increased to 35%, largely as a result of high long-term unemployment. In 2011 GDP grew by 4.7%, below the average of 13.1% from 2002 to 2007 but a huge improvement on 2009 when the economy shrank by 14.2%. The fiscal deficit fell by nearly 75% between 2010 and 2012.

Currency

In Nov. 1993 a new currency unit, the dram (AMD) of 100 lamma, was introduced to replace the rouble. Inflation, which had been 5,273% in 1994, was 5.8% in 2013 and 3.0% in 2014. Foreign exchange reserves were US$658m. in July 2005 and total money supply was 164,589m. drams.

Budget

Budgetary central government revenue totalled 880,851m. drams in 2011 and expenditure 812,315m. drams. Tax revenues in 2011 were 653,960m. drams. Main items of expenditure by economic type in 2011 were social benefits (256,414m. drams) and use of goods and services (171,452m. drams).

VAT is 20%.

Performance

There was real GDP growth of 7.1% in 2012, 3.5% in 2013 and 3.4% in 2014. Total GDP in 2014 was US$11.6bn.

Banking and Finance

The Chairman of the Central Bank (founded in 1993) is Arthur Javadyan. In 2008 there were 22 commercial banks. There are commodity and stock exchanges in Yerevan and Gyumri.

In 2010 total foreign debt was US$6,103m., representing 64.8% of GNI.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Armenia's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2011 were the equivalent of 3.9 tonnes per capita.

Electricity

Output of electricity in 2011 was 7.4bn. kWh. Capacity was 3.5m. kW in 2011. Consumption per capita was 2,059 kWh in 2011. A nuclear plant closed in 1989 was reopened in 1995 because of the blockade of the electricity supply by Azerbaijan.

Minerals

There are deposits of copper, zinc, aluminium, molybdenum, marble, gold and granite.

Agriculture

The chief agricultural area is the valley of the Arax and the area round Yerevan. Here there are cotton plantations, orchards and vineyards. Almonds, olives and figs are also grown. In the mountainous areas the chief pursuit is livestock raising. In 2007 there were an estimated 406,000 ha. of arable land and 54,000 ha. of permanent crops. Major agricultural production (in tonnes in 2003): potatoes, 508,000; tomatoes, 226,000; wheat, 217,000; cabbage, 98,000; grapes, 82,000; barley, 68,000. Livestock (2003): sheep, 553,000; cattle, 514,000; pigs, 111,000; goats, 50,000; chickens, 3m.

Forestry

In 2010 forests covered 0.26m. ha., or 9% of the total land area. Timber production in 2011 was 2.08m. cu. metres.

Fisheries

The total catch in 2012 came to 861 tonnes, exclusively from inland waters.

INDUSTRY

Among the chief industries are chemicals, producing mainly synthetic rubber and fertilizers, the extraction and processing of building materials, ginning- and textile-mills, carpet weaving, and food processing (including wine-making).

Labour

The labour force in 2013 was 1,536,000 (1,452,000 in 2003). 67.3% of the population aged 15–64 was economically active in 2013. In the same year 16.2% of the population was unemployed.

Armenia had 11,000 people living in slavery according to the Walk Free Foundation's 2013 Global Slavery Index.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

Imports and exports for calendar years in US$1m.:

	2005	2006	2007	2008	2009
Imports c.i.f.	1,691.5	2,194.4	3,052.6	4,101.2	3,174.6
Exports f.o.b.	937.0	1,004.0	1,121.2	1,055.0	684.0

The main import suppliers in 2009 were Russia (24.8%), China (9.0%), Ukraine (6.4%) and Turkey (5.6%). Principal export markets were Germany (16.8%), Russia (15.6%), USA (9.7%) and Bulgaria (8.8%). Machinery and transport equipment account for 24% of Armenia's imports, manufactured goods 21%, and mineral fuels and lubricants 15%. Manufactured goods (in particular non-ferrous metals and iron and steel) account for 45% of Armenia's exports, crude materials (excluding fuels) 20%, and beverages and tobacco 13%.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

There were 7,515 km of road network in 2007, of which 89.8% were paved. In 2007 there were 289,800 passenger cars and 25,679 buses and coaches. There were 371 fatalities as a result of road accidents in 2007.

Rail

Total length in 2010 was 826 km of 1,520 mm gauge. Passenger-km travelled in 2010 came to 50m. and freight tonne-km to 346m.

There is a metro and a tramway in Yerevan.

Civil Aviation

There is an international airport at Yerevan (Zvartnots), which handled 1,443,557 passengers and 8,323 tonnes of freight in 2009. In April 2013 the Armenian flag carrier, Armavia, ceased operations. In 2010 there were direct flights from Yerevan to over 40 international destinations.

Telecommunications

There were 589,900 fixed telephone lines in 2010 (190.8 per 1,000 inhabitants). Mobile phone subscribers numbered 3.87m. in 2010. There were 153.0 internet users per 1,000 inhabitants in 2009. Fixed internet subscriptions totalled 96,000 in 2010 (31.1 per 1,000 inhabitants). In March 2012 there were 283,000 Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The court system is regulated by the Judicial Code, which was adopted in 2007 and substantially amended in 2009. The Code provides for a three-tiered courts system, with courts of first instance, courts of appeal and a Court of Cassation (the highest court except for matters of constitutional justice). The population in penal institutions in Jan. 2013 was 4,756 (164 per 100,000 of national population). The death penalty was abolished in 2003.

Education

Armenia's literacy rate was over 99% in 2008. In 2007, 48,015 children attended pre-school institutions. There were 127,546 pupils in primary schools with 6,606 teaching staff; and 336,877 pupils in secondary schools with 43,372 teaching staff. At the tertiary level there were 107,398 students in 2007 and 12,521 academic staff. The National Academy of Sciences of the Republic of Armenia (NAS RA), located in Yerevan, comprises more than 50 institutions and organizations with a staff of over 3,700.

Public expenditure on education in 2006 came to 2.6% of GNI.

Health

In 2006 there were 12,388 physicians, 18,574 paramedics and 140 hospitals with 14,276 beds.

Welfare

In 2008 there were 523,839 pensioners. The average monthly pension was 21,370 drams in 2008.

RELIGION

Armenia adopted Christianity in AD 301, thus becoming the first Christian nation in the world. The Armenian Apostolic Church is headed by its Catholicos (Karekin II, b. 1951) whose seat is at Echmiatsin, and who is head of all the Armenian (Gregorian) communities throughout the world. In 2013 it numbered 9m. adherents, two-thirds of whom lived outside of Armenia. There is a second see located at Antelias in Lebanon—the Catholicos of Cilicia is Aram I (b. 1947). An estimated 87% of the population belonged to the Armenian Apostolic Church in 2010 according to the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life. The largest religious minority is Armenian Catholicism.

World Heritage Sites

There are three UNESCO sites in Armenia: the Monasteries of Haghpat and Sanahin (inscribed in 1996 and 2000); the Monastery of Geghard and the Upper Azat Valley (2000); the Cathedral and Churches of Echmiatsin and the Archaeological Site of Zvartnots (2000).

Press

In 2008 there were 11 paid-for daily newspapers and 49 paid-for non-dailies with a combined circulation of 116,000.

Tourism

In 2010 there were 684,000 international tourist arrivals (excluding same-day visitors), up from 575,000 in 2009.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

The Australian landmass, reaching northwards to Papua New Guinea and including Tasmania in the south, was inhabited in prehistoric times until adverse climatic conditions led to an exodus between 15,000 and 25,000 years ago. Stone tools date to 2000–1000 BC. The Aboriginal society was based on extended family groups. At maximum there were 1m. Aborigines, using 200 different languages. By the early 18th century contact was made with traders from the area of modern Indonesia and Papua New Guinea.

Australia was sighted in 1522 by compatriot explorers of the Portuguese Ferdinand Magellan and in 1642 the Dutch explorer Abel Tasman mapped what is now Tasmania and part of New Zealand's east coast. By the middle of the century the Dutch had charted the western part of Australia, calling it New Holland.

But while the Dutch, Portuguese and Spanish made the early running in charting the continent, it was the discovery of the east coast by Capt. James Cook in 1770 that prompted colonization. Over several voyages he charted the Torres Strait and 8,000 kilometres of coastline. Having lost their penal settlements in the American War of Independence, the British decided to send convicts to Australia. Botany Bay was selected as the first settlement.

By 1800 convicts had established legal rights as crown subjects. Many freed men were able to make a successful living. However, there were several uprisings against penal rule culminating in the Rum Rebellion of 1808, in which John Macarthur led a troop of New South Wales officers against Gov. William Bligh. The response of the British government was to appoint Lachlan Macquarie, who promoted reform.

His tenure began a period of development in which Australia ceased to be primarily a penal settlement. The crossing of the Blue Mountains in 1813 was the first of many expeditions which led to discovery of vast areas of grazing land, although sealing and whaling were more important than agriculture until the 1830s. Macquarie's benevolent despotism rewarded freed men and several of the more talented were appointed to official posts. He did much to develop Sydney, instigating public works and establishing a bank and currency. His policies caused concern in London and in 1822 he was forced to resign.

The Aboriginal question remained unresolved. The early assumption that the Aboriginal people were nomadic meant that Britain had claimed much of the Australian land without an agreement of purchase from the natives. There was some peaceful interaction with the Aborigines but resentment grew as British encroachment damaged Aboriginal culture. Diseases brought in by the colonists decimated the Aboriginal population. By the late 18th century there was widespread and persistent conflict. The most notable Aboriginal resistance leader was Pemulwuy (killed in 1802) who fought battles at Hawkesbury and Parramatta. Between 1820–50 the indigenous population fell from 600,000 to 300,000.

Trade and Prosperity

The wool trade took off in the middle of the 19th century. With the introduction of the Merino sheep between 1830–50, Australia's share of the British wool market rose from 10% to 50%, accounting for 90% of all Australia's exports. The pastoral economy boomed and from the 1830s the population was swollen by 'free immigrants' from Britain. A settler population of 30,000 in 1820 grew to over 1.1m. in 1860. The economy was further boosted by the discovery of copper and gold in several locations and by 1850 Victoria accounted for one third of the world's gold supply. The gold rushes attracted prospectors from Britain, the USA, Western and Central Europe and China.

Sydney, Melbourne, Adelaide and Perth all grew during these boom decades, developing their own institutions and gradually attaining a degree of self-rule. New South Wales, Tasmania and Victoria were granted full parliamentary control of their own affairs in 1855, with South Australia and the newly formed Queensland following in the next five years. However, the UK government retained control of foreign policy and kept a power of veto.

By the 1860s there was a culture of bushranging as epitomized by Ned Kelly. Bad relations between settlers, immigrant workers and the Aboriginal population persisted. The population passed 3m. in 1888. In the 1890s recession the economy shrank by 30%. Unemployment among skilled workers stood at 30% in 1893 and was higher among unskilled workers, for whom records were not kept. Problems were exacerbated by a severe drought in the east of the country.

Social and Constitutional Reform

Trade unionism grew from the 1870s, gaining strength in the 1890s. Between 1899, when a first Labor government took power in Queensland, and the outbreak of the First World War, Labor was in government in every state. Union membership included a third of all workers. The 1890s witnessed the emergence of the federalist movement, with Sydney hosting conventions in 1891 and 1897–98. On 1 Jan. 1901 the six separately constituted colonies of New South Wales, Victoria, Queensland, South Australia, Western Australia and Tasmania were federated under the Commonwealth of Australia, the designation of 'colonies' being at the same time changed into that of 'states'—except in the case of Northern Territory, which was transferred from South Australia to the Commonwealth as a 'territory' on 1 Jan. 1911. A bicameral parliament was established while the states retained certain powers. Foreign policy continued to be guided by London and in 1907 Australia gained dominion status. By the following year there was female suffrage for the national and all state legislatures.

The Labor Party formed its first national government in 1904 and their old allies in the protectionist parties forged an alliance with free trade parties, forming the Liberal Party to challenge Labor's growth. A period in which the government switched between Labor and the Liberals saw pension and welfare reforms.

The growing fear of an Asian (and especially Japanese) threat—Britain was reluctant to keep a strong military presence in the Pacific—led to the development of the army and navy.

In 1911 a site in New South Wales was designated the Australian capital, to be known as Canberra. Construction began in 1923 and the Federal Parliament was opened in Canberra in 1927. With the outbreak of the First World War Australia rallied to the British cause but at significant cost. Around 330,000 Australian troops served in the war—60,000 died and over 150,000 were wounded. Such losses caused unrest and conscription was rejected by referendum in 1916. In addition Australia lost its markets in France, Belgium and Germany, which together accounted for 30% of its exports. The economy contracted by 10% in 1914 and unemployment soared.

The Labor Party, in power at the start of the war, gave way to a national government. The effect of the war years kept Labor out of power until 1929. The early 1920s was a period of recovery, assisted by an influx of 200,000 immigrants from Britain. Sydney and Melbourne expanded to a point where they accounted for a third of the Australian population. However, the economy (with the notable exception of the wool industry) relied on government subsidy, leaving it exposed in the depression which followed the 1929 Wall Street Crash. Under Labor public spending was cut, a 10% reduction in wages imposed and the currency devalued by 25%. Unemployment approached 30%. The government collapsed but the depression had the long-term effect of radicalizing the trade unions.

Jo Lyons and the recently formed United Australia Party took over the government. Lyons was succeeded by Robert Menzies in 1939. The late 1930s saw deteriorating relations with Japan but broad support for the policy of appeasement of Nazi Germany. However, when war became inevitable, Australia again rallied to the imperial cause. 100,000 Australian troops were killed or wounded. Fear of Japan escalated after Pearl Harbor and Darwin was attacked in 1942. These events marked a watershed in foreign relations with the Labor prime minister, John Curtin, commenting that 'Australia looks to America, free from any pang about our traditional links of friendship to Britain.'

Post-War Recovery

The war encouraged the rapid expansion of Australian industry and the 1950s and 1960s were something of a golden age. Robert Menzies led successive Liberal governments from 1949–66. The population nearly doubled as immigration from Britain and continental Europe was encouraged. Unemployment was consistently low and the economy tripled in size during the two decades. Aware of its 'junior partner' status in the relationship with America, Australia undertook nuclear development with Britain. In 1951 it entered the ANZUS group with New Zealand and the USA and three years later joined the South-East Asian Treaty Organization. Australia's new found confidence was reflected in the success of the 1956 Melbourne Olympics.

The growing number of non-English speaking immigrants accentuated racial problems, with a succession of governments holding to a monocultural policy. The future of the Aboriginal population was one of assimilation. The movement for Aboriginal rights grew after the war, with a strike by Aboriginal workers at Pilbara in 1946 marking a new phase in the conflict. It climaxed in 1966 when an Aboriginal demand for equal pay in Northern Australia turned into demands for land. There was a swathe of moderate reforms favouring the Aboriginal population between 1959–67 but at the same time the assimilation policy allowed for the forced removal of large numbers of children from their families. The last of the Aboriginal reserves was taken over in the 1960s. The policy of forced removal of children did not prompt a formal apology from the Australian government until 2008.

When Menzies retired in 1966 he was followed by a succession of leaders who weakened the standing of the Liberals. Australia's participation in the Vietnam War also drew criticism. Gough Whitlam led the Labor Party to power in 1972 and oversaw a radical administration. He withdrew Australian forces from Vietnam, set about modernizing the education and health programmes and funded extensive urban renewal. Government expenditure doubled over his three years in office and Australia was ill-prepared when the global oil crisis struck in 1974.

Whitlam's Liberal opponents, many of whom regarded him as a dangerous maverick, led a parliamentary revolt. A failure to win approval for the national budget led to a constitutional crisis in which the Governor-General John Kerr (himself recommended for the post by Whitlam) dismissed the prime minister and invited Malcolm Fraser to form an administration. Fraser believed that Australian society had become overly dependent on the state. He authorized cuts in public spending but was unable to counter rising unemployment and inflation and was voted out of government in 1983.

Free Market Politics

Bob Hawke took power at the head of a Labor government, assisted by his finance minister (and successor as prime minister), Paul Keating. Their terms of office, spanning 1983–96, saw a shift in Labor's stance on state control and economic planning to allow for an ambitious programme of privatization and financial deregulation. Trade with Asia took on increasing importance and Hawke stood fully behind US foreign policy. In March 1986 the Australia Act abolished the remaining legislative, executive and judicial controls of the British Parliament. By the end of the decade unemployment stood at a respectable 6% but the Australian dollar had suffered a 40% loss of value in 1986 and foreign debt stood at around 30% of GNP. Keating described the recession of the late 1980s as 'necessary'.

Keating took over the premiership in 1991 and mounted a programme of economic reform. He was replaced in 1996 by the Liberal, John Howard, who pressed on with economic reforms and won re-election two years later. The Aboriginal question continued to test every government. There were some symbolic gestures such as the return of Ayers Rock (with its Aboriginal name Uluru restored) in 1988. The High Court's Mabo ruling of 1992, which overturned a previous ruling that the Aboriginal title to land had not survived British settlement, raised expectations. Keating officially acknowledged injustices to the Aboriginal population when the 'Native Title' legislation was passed in Dec. 1993. Howard's tenure, however, saw disputes over indigenous land rights following a 1996 court ruling against Aboriginal access to cultural sites owned by non-Aboriginals.

A referendum to decide if Australia should become a republic was held on 6 Nov. 1999. 54.9% were in favour of the monarchy with Queen Elizabeth II as head of state, against 45.1% for a republic with a president chosen by parliament. In foreign policy Howard agreed to military involvement in UN peacekeeping in Timor-Leste and NATO action against Serbia. His government's approach to immigration came under the spotlight in July 2001, when a refugee-laden Norwegian cargo ship was caught in a diplomatic gridlock between Australia, the UN and Norway. Its passengers were eventually diverted to Papua New Guinea, with Howard assuming a firm and populist stance against asylum seekers. He won a further term of office at the elections of Nov. 2001. The Liberals also won the elections of Oct. 2004. Howard pursued an interventionist foreign policy in the Pacific region—with notable success in the peacekeeping mission to the Solomon Islands—and committed Australia to the US-led war in Iraq in 2003. Labor returned to power with victory in the elections of Nov. 2007, led by Kevin Rudd. After a steep decline in popularity in early 2010, he was succeeded by Australia's first female prime minister, Julia Gillard, in June that year. Following the election in Aug. 2010 she remained prime minister in Australia's first hung parliament since 1940. The Liberal–National coalition under Tony Abbott won the elections of Sept. 2013.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Australia, excluding external territories, covers a land area of 7,692,024 sq. km, extending from Cape York (10° 41' S) in the north some 3,680 km to South East Cape, Tasmania (43° 39' S), and from Cape Byron, New South Wales (153° 39' E) in the east some 4,000 km west to Steep Point, Western Australia (113° 9' E). External territories under the administration of Australia comprise the Ashmore and Cartier Islands, Australian Antarctic Territory, Christmas Island, the Cocos (Keeling) Islands, the Coral Sea Islands, the Heard and McDonald Islands and Norfolk Island. For these see below.

Growth in census population has been:

1901	3,774,310	1966	11,599,498	1991	16,852,258
1911	4,455,005	1971	12,755,638	1996	17,752,829
1921	5,435,734	1976	13,915,500	2001	18,769,249
1947	7,579,358	1981	15,053,600	2006	19,855,288
1961	10,508,186	1986	15,763,000	2011	21,507,717

Of the 2011 census population, 10,873,704 were females.

Estimated population as at 30 June 2012 was 22,710,352.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 23.97m.

At the census of 9 Aug. 2011 density was 2.8 per sq. km. In 2010, 89.1% of the population lived in urban areas.

Areas and populations of the States and Territories at the 2011 census:

States and Territories	Area (sq. km)	Population	Per sq. km
Australian Capital Territory (ACT) including Jervis Bay Territory	2,431	357,600	147.1

The median age of the 2011 census population was 37 years.

Australians born overseas (census 2011), 5,294,200 (24.6%—the highest proportion anywhere in the industrialized world), of whom 1,101,100 (20.8%) were from the United Kingdom.

Aboriginals have been included in population statistics only since 1967. At the 2011 census 548,370 people identified themselves as being of indigenous origin (2.5% of the total population). A 1992 High Court ruling that the Meriam people of the Murray Islands had land rights before the European settlement reversed the previous assumption that Australia was terra nullius before that settlement. The Native Title Act setting up a system for deciding claims by Aborigines came into effect on 1 Jan. 1994.

The Migration Act of Dec. 1989 sought to curb illegal entry and ensure that annual immigrant intakes were met but not exceeded.

Provisions for temporary visitors to become permanent were restricted. In 2011–12, 84,183 people who were born overseas became Australian citizens.

The national language is English.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

Life expectancy at birth, 2010–12, 79.9 years for males and 84.3 years for females.

Statistics for years ended 30 June:

	Births	Deaths	Marriages	Divorces
2009	301,253	140,760	120,118	49,448
2010	303,318	143,473	121,176	50,240
2011	301,617	146,932	121,752	48,935
2012	309,582	147,098	123,244	49,917
2013	308,065	147,678	118,962	47,638

In 2012 the median age for marrying was 31.4 years for males and 29.4 for females. Infant mortality, 2012, was 3.3 per 1,000 live births. Population growth rate in 2014, 1.4%; fertility rate, 2013, 1.9 births per woman.

Suicide rates (per 100,000 population, 2009): 10.4 (men, 16.0; women, 4.9).

A UNICEF report published in 2010 showed that 10.9% of children in Australia live in relative poverty (living in a household in which disposable income—when adjusted for family size and composition—is less than 50% of the national median income), compared to just 4.7% in Iceland.

In the Human Development Index, or HDI (measuring progress in countries in longevity, knowledge and standard of living), Australia was ranked second (behind Norway) in the 2014 rankings published in the annual Human Development Report.

CLIMATE

Over most of the continent, four seasons may be recognized. Spring is from Sept. to Nov., summer from Dec. to Feb., autumn from March to May and winter from June to Aug., but because of its great size there are climates that range from tropical monsoon to cool temperate, with large areas of desert as well. In northern Australia there are only two seasons, the wet one lasting from Nov. to March, but rainfall amounts diminish markedly from the coast to the interior. Central and southern Queensland are subtropical, north and central New South Wales are warm temperate, as are parts of Victoria, Western Australia and Tasmania, where most rain falls in winter. Canberra, Jan. 68°F (20°C), July 42°F (5.6°C). Annual rainfall 25" (635 mm). Adelaide, Jan. 73°F (22.8°C), July 52°F (11.1°C). Annual rainfall 21" (528 mm). Brisbane, Jan. 77°F (25°C), July 58°F (14.4°C). Annual rainfall 45" (1,153 mm). Darwin, Jan. 83°F (28.3°C), July 77°F (25°C). Annual rainfall 59" (1,536 mm). Hobart, Jan. 62°F (16.7°C), July 46°F (7.8°C). Annual rainfall 23" (584 mm). Melbourne, Jan. 67°F (19.4°C), July 49°F (9.4°C). Annual rainfall 26" (659 mm). Perth, Jan. 74°F (23.3°C), July 55°F (12.8°C). Annual rainfall 35" (873 mm). Sydney, Jan. 71°F (21.7°C), July 53°F (11.7°C). Annual rainfall 47" (1,215 mm).

Federal Government

Under the Constitution legislative power is vested in a Federal Parliament, consisting of the Queen, represented by a Governor-General, a Senate and a House of Representatives. Under the terms of the constitution there must be a session of parliament at least once a year.

The Senate (Upper House) comprises 76 Senators (12 for each State voting as one electorate and, as from Aug. 1974, two Senators respectively for the Australian Capital Territory and the Northern Territory). Senators representing the States are chosen for six years. The terms of Senators representing the Territories expire at the close of the day next preceding the polling day for the general elections of the House of Representatives. In general, the Senate is renewed to the extent of one-half every three years, but in case of disagreement with the House of Representatives, it, together with the House of Representatives, may be dissolved, and an entirely new Senate elected. Elections to the Senate are on the single transferable vote system; voters list candidates in order of preference. A candidate must reach a quota to be elected, otherwise the lowest-placed candidate drops out and his or her votes are transferred to other candidates.

The House of Representatives (Lower House) consists, as nearly as practicable, of twice as many Members as there are Senators, the numbers chosen in the several States being in proportion to population as shown by the latest statistics, but not less than five for any original State. The 150 membership is made up as follows: New South Wales, 48; Victoria, 37; Queensland, 30; South Australia, 11; Western Australia, 15; Tasmania, 5; ACT, 2; Northern Territory, 2. Elections to the House of Representatives are on the alternative vote system; voters list candidates in order of preference, and if no one candidate wins an overall majority, the lowest-placed drops out and his or her votes are transferred. The first Member for the Australian Capital Territory was given full voting rights as from the Parliament elected in Nov. 1966. The first Member for the Northern Territory was given full voting rights in 1968. The House of Representatives continues for three years from the date of its first meeting, unless sooner dissolved.

Every Senator or Member of the House of Representatives must be a subject of the Queen, be of full age, possess electoral qualifications and have resided for three years within Australia. The franchise for both Houses is the same and is based on universal (males and females aged 18 years) suffrage. Compulsory voting was introduced in 1925. If a Member of a State Parliament wishes to be a candidate in a federal election, he must first resign his State seat.

Executive power is vested in the Governor-General, advised by an Executive Council. The Governor-General presides over the Council, and its members hold office at his pleasure. All Ministers of State, who are members of the party or parties commanding a majority in the lower House, are members of the Executive Council under summons. A record of proceedings of meetings is kept by the Secretary to the Council. At Executive Council meetings the decisions of the Cabinet are (where necessary) given legal form, appointments made, resignations accepted, proclamations, regulations and the like made.

The policy of a ministry is, in practice, determined by the Ministers of State meeting without the Governor-General under the chairmanship of the Prime Minister. This group is known as the Cabinet. In Labor governments all Ministers have been members of Cabinet; in Liberal and National Country Party governments, only the senior ministers. Cabinet meetings are private and deliberative, and records of meetings are not made public. The Cabinet does not form part of the legal mechanisms of government; the decisions it takes have, in themselves, no legal effect. The Cabinet substantially controls, in ordinary circumstances, not only the general legislative programme of Parliament but the whole course of Parliamentary proceedings. In effect, though not in form, the Cabinet, by reason of the fact that all Ministers are members of the Executive Council, is also the dominant element in the executive government of the country.

The legislative powers of the Federal Parliament embrace: trade and commerce, shipping, etc.; taxation, finance, banking, currency, bills of exchange, bankruptcy, insurance, defence, external affairs, naturalization and aliens, quarantine, immigration and emigration; the people of any race for whom it is deemed necessary to make special laws; postal, telegraph and like services; census and statistics; weights and measures; astronomical and meteorological observations; copyrights; railways; conciliation and arbitration in disputes extending beyond the limits of any one State; social services; marriage, divorce, etc.; service and execution of the civil and criminal process; recognition of the laws, Acts and records, and judicial proceedings of the States. The Senate may not originate or amend money bills. Disagreement with the House of Representatives may result in dissolution and, in the last resort, a joint sitting of the two Houses. The Federal Parliament has limited and enumerated powers, the several State parliaments retaining the residuary power of government over their respective territories.

The Constitution also provides for the admission or creation of new States. Proposed laws for the alteration of the Constitution must be submitted to the electors, and they can be enacted only if approved by a majority of the States and by a majority of all the electors voting.

The Australia Acts 1986 removed residual powers of the British government to intervene in the government of Australia or the individual states.

In Feb. 1998 an Australian Constitutional Convention voted for Australia to become a republic. In a national referendum, held on 6 Nov. 1999, 54.9% voted against Australia becoming a republic.

State Government

In each of the six States (New South Wales, Victoria, Queensland, South Australia, Western Australia, Tasmania) there is a State government whose constitution, powers and laws continue, subject to changes embodied in the Australian Constitution and subsequent alterations and agreements, as they were before federation. The system of government is basically the same as that described above for the Commonwealth—i.e. the Sovereign, her representative (in this case a Governor), an upper and lower house of Parliament (except in Queensland, where the upper house was abolished in 1922), a cabinet led by the Premier and an Executive Council. Among the more important functions of the State governments are those relating to education, health, hospitals and charities, law, order and public safety, business undertakings such as railways and tramways, and public utilities such as water supply and sewerage. In the domains of education, hospitals, justice, the police, penal establishments, and railway and tramway operation, State government activity predominates. Care of the public health and recreative activities are shared with local government authorities and the Federal government; social services other than those referred to above are now primarily the concern of the Federal government.

Administration of Territories

Since 1911 responsibility for administration and development of the Australian Capital Territory (ACT) has been vested in Federal Ministers and Departments. The ACT became self-governing on 11 May 1989. The ACT House of Assembly has been accorded the forms of a legislature, but continues to perform an advisory function for the Minister for the Capital Territory.

On 1 July 1978 the Northern Territory of Australia became a self-governing Territory with expenditure responsibilities and revenue-raising powers broadly approximating those of a State.

National Anthem

'Advance Australia Fair' (adopted 19 April 1984; words and tune by P. D. McCormick). The 'Royal Anthem' (i.e. 'God Save the Queen') is used in the presence of the Royal Family.

CURRENT LEADERS

Malcolm Turnbull

Position

Prime Minister

Introduction

Malcolm Turnbull was sworn in as prime minister in Sept. 2015 after a successful Liberal Party leadership challenge against Tony Abbott. A lawyer-turned-millionaire businessman and staunch republican, Turnbull had previously served as environment minister in John Howard's centre-right Liberal government, as leader of the party from 2008–09 and as communications minister under Abbott.

Early Life

Malcolm Bligh Turnbull was born in Sydney on 24 Oct. 1954. After graduating with an arts/law degree from Sydney University, he studied law at the University of Oxford in the UK from 1978–80. Returning to Australia in late 1980, he was admitted to the Bar and in 1983 joined Consolidated Press Holdings Limited.

In 1981 he unsuccessfully applied to be the Liberal Party's candidate for the seat of Wentworth, in east Sydney. He became well known during the 1986 Spycatcher court trial, when he successfully blocked the UK government's attempts to stop publication of the memoirs of a former British security services agent. A year later Turnbull joined forces with Neville Wran and Nicholas Whitlam (the son of former prime minister Gough Whitlam) to establish a merchant bank in Sydney.

Turnbull was a key developer and investor in technology company OzEmail and was instrumental in its profitable sale to MCI WorldCom in 1999. During the late 1990s he also became chair and managing director of the Australian division of Goldman Sachs.

He served as chairman of the Australian Republican Movement from 1993, but stepped down in 2000 following the failure of a referendum campaign to sever ties with the British Crown. Four years later he won the Wentworth seat for the Liberals at the general election. In early 2006 he was appointed parliamentary secretary with special responsibility for water provision. Later that year he headed a new office of water resources, set up to combat the effects of a prolonged drought, and in Jan. 2007 he was named environment minister. During his tenure in that post, his approval for a new pulp mill in northern Tasmania was criticized by environmentalists.

Turnbull retained his Wentworth seat in the general election of Nov. 2007, although the Liberal Party lost to a resurgent Labor Party under Kevin Rudd. Turnbull announced that he would contest the Liberal leadership in the wake of John Howard's defeat but he narrowly lost to Brendan Nelson. However, when Nelson's tenure ran into problems, Turnbull won the party leadership in an election held in Sept. 2008.

His elevation to opposition leader coincided with a period of turmoil in global financial markets. He called for government cash to be poured into Australia's financial institutions, echoing the strategy followed by the US Treasury. His term as leader of the opposition ended on 1 Dec. 2009 when he lost an election contest to Tony Abbott. Turnbull nonetheless became Abbott's minister of communications, in which post he launched a revised national broadband network plan. He resigned his post on 14 Sept. 2015 to mount a leadership challenge against Abbott, defeating the incumbent by 54 votes to 44. He was sworn in as premier a day later.

Career in Office

Turnbull has called for an 'economic leadership'. His plans to address the country's woes included the announcement of a four-year $A1.1bn. programme to fund innovation, which he has termed an 'ideas boom'. He has committed to return Australia to a budget surplus and pledged to keep to carbon emission reduction targets. In Dec. 2015 he attended the UN Climate Change conference in Paris and lifted an Abbott-era ban on government financing of wind farms.

Among his first moves in office were to increase the number of women in his cabinet and to announce a package of measures providing security for women and children at risk of domestic violence. In keeping with his republicanism, in Nov. 2015 he scrapped the Australian system of knightships and damehoods. He was also set to oversee a constitutional change recognizing indigenous Australians.

DEFENCE

The Minister for Defence has responsibility under legislation for the control and administration of the Australian Defence Force (ADF). The Chief of the Defence Force is vested with command of the ADF. He is the principal military adviser to the Minister. The Chief of Navy, the Chief of Army and the Chief of Air Force command the Royal Australian Navy, Australian Army and Royal Australian Air Force respectively. They have delegated authority from the Chief of Defence Force Staff and the Secretary to administer matters relating to their particular Service. Conscription was abolished in 1972.

2013 defence expenditure was US$25,967m., amounting to US$1,166 per capita and representing 1.6% of GDP.

Having contributed to the 2003 US-led invasion of Iraq, the last Australian troops left the country in July 2009. Australian troops served with the International Security Assistance Force (ISAF) in Afghanistan in Feb. 2014, although the mission's mandate expired at the end of the year. As at Dec. 2015 Australia contributed 230 troops to the 12,900 personnel charged with training, advising and assisting the Afghan National Security Forces under the aegis of Operation Resolute Support.

Army

The strength of the Army was 28,246 in 2011. The effective strength of the Army Reserve was 15,840.

Women have been eligible for combat duties since 1993.

Navy

The all-volunteer Navy had 14,250 personnel in 2011, with a reserve of 2,000. Equipment in 2011 included six diesel-powered submarines and 12 frigates.

The main naval bases are at Sydney and Perth with further bases at Cairns and Darwin.

Air Force

The Royal Australian Air Force (RAAF) operated 142 combat-capable aircraft including F/A-18F Super Hornets in 2011. Personnel in 2011 numbered 14,056. There is also an Australian Air Force Reserve, 2,600-strong.

ECONOMY

In 2013 agriculture contributed 2% of GDP, industry 27% and services 71%.

According to the anti-corruption organization Transparency International, Australia ranked equal 13th in the world in a 2015 survey of the countries with the least corruption in business and government. It received 79 out of 100 in the annual index.

Australia gave US$4.4bn. in international aid in 2014, equivalent to 0.31% of GNI (compared to the UN target of 0.7%).

Overview

Australia has abundant natural resources, including coal, iron, copper, gold, natural gas and uranium, and the export sector is driven by mining, as well as by agriculture. There are, however, concerns about the long-term dependency on commodity resources owing to external fluctuations in prices. The country boasts maximum international credit rating status and has promoted itself to global and regional businesses (especially in the financial sector) as an ideal location for administrative and support operations. According to the World Bank, the country ranked 13th out of 189 economies for the ease of doing business in 2015.

Prior to the global financial crisis the economy had experienced 17 years of robust expansion. Reforms in the 1980s and early 1990s had liberalized the previously heavily-protected and regulated economy, while increased competition and technological advances helped drive productivity growth (which averaged 1.7% annually over the period 1991–2000—six times greater than that for the previous decade). Reform and good fiscal management facilitated growth even in the face of the Asian financial crisis of 1997–98 and the US downturn of 2001–02.

The buoyant domestic economy withstood the impact of a severe drought in 2003 and a global slowdown, while a commodities boom helped cushion a fall in the housing market from its 2004 peak. The terms of trade then improved by 30% from 2005–08 to register their highest level for over 50 years. Near full employment in 2007 saw joblessness at its lowest since the mid-1970s, while the National Reform Agenda agreed in 2006 aimed to lift long-term productivity and workforce participation. Per capita GDP has now become one of the highest in the world, with services accounting for a high proportion of output. In the global financial crisis of 2008–09 Australia did not suffer as much as other advanced nations. The government initially implemented a US$50bn. stimulus package and cut interest rates. Also, continued robust export demand from China and India helped the economy escape recession in 2009, with the second best performance among OECD countries (after Poland) that year. With a low risk of serious contraction, the Reserve Bank of Australia (RBS) then adopted a tighter monetary policy and temporarily raised interest rates. In 2010 the fiscal stimulus was reduced and the mining sector experienced another boom, with strong demand from emerging economies in Asia. Between 2007 and 2010 real disposable income increased cumulatively by an average of 6%. However, in Jan. 2016 the RBS acknowledged that the exchange rate had experienced long-term overvaluation since 2014, exacerbating falling prices in key commodities such as iron ore and oil.

In Jan. 2011 severe flooding in Queensland, which contributes about 19% of national output and produces 80% of the country's coking coal, was followed by a cyclone that together led to reduced production and an increase in the budget deficit. The cost of clean-up and rebuilding was estimated at $A30bn., prompting the government to announce a levy on middle- and high-income earners, budget cuts and delays to infrastructure projects. Unemployment peaked at 6.2% in Nov. 2014—the highest level since 2003—before steadily falling to 5.8% by Dec. 2015. Annual GDP growth had meanwhile averaged 2.6% in the five years to 2015.

The economy remains susceptible to the effects of the European debt crisis and the economic slowdown in its largest trading partner, China. Over the long term, an increase in the number of older people and rising healthcare costs are expected to see public expenditure increase by over 3% of GDP by 2030.

Currency

On 14 Feb. 1966 Australia adopted a system of decimal currency. The currency unit, the Australian dollar (AUD), is divided into 100 cents.

Foreign exchange reserves were US$34,857m. in Sept. 2009 and gold reserves 2.57m. troy oz. Total money supply was $A376.5bn. in July 2009.

Inflation rates (based on OECD statistics):

Budget

The fiscal year is 1 July–30 June. In Aug. 1998 the Commonwealth government introduced a tax reform package including, from 2000, the introduction of a Goods and Services Tax (GST) at a 10% rate, with all the revenues going to the states in return for the abolition of a range of other indirect taxes; the abolition of Financial Assistance Grants to states; the abolition of wholesale sales tax (which is levied by the Commonwealth government); cuts in personal income tax; and increases in social security benefits, especially for families. In the 2013–14 Mid-Year Economic and Fiscal Outlook an underlying cash deficit of $A47.0bn. (3.0% of GDP) was anticipated in 2013–14, a deficit increase of $A29.0bn. since the 2013–14 budget.

The Australian Government levies income taxes. State expenditure is backed by federal grants. Australian Government expenses and revenue outcomes (in $A1m.):

In fiscal year 2015 (July 2014–June 2015) the GDP growth rate was 2.2%. During much of the 1990s the real GDP growth rate, along with lower inflation, made the Australian economic performance one of the best in the OECD area. In 2014 total GDP was US$1,454.7bn.

Banking and Finance

From 1 July 1998 a new financial regulatory framework based on three agencies was introduced by the Australian government, following recommendations by the Financial System Inquiry. The framework included changes in the role of the Reserve Bank of Australia and creation of the Australian Prudential Regulation Authority (APRA) with responsibility for the supervision of deposit-taking institutions (comprising banks, building societies and credit unions), friendly societies, life and general insurance companies and superannuation funds. It further involved replacement of the Australian Securities Commission with the Australian Securities and Investments Commission (ASIC) with responsibility for the regulation of financial services and Australia's 1.2m. companies.

The banking system comprises:

(a) The Reserve Bank of Australia is the central bank. It has two broad responsibilities—monetary policy and the maintenance of financial stability, including stability of the payments system. It also issues Australia's currency notes and provides selected banking and registry services to Commonwealth Government customers and some overseas official institutions. Within the Reserve Bank there are two Boards: the Reserve Bank Board and the Payments System Board; the Governor (present incumbent, Glenn Stevens) is the Chairman of each.

At 30 June 2011 total assets of the Reserve Bank of Australia were $A81,078m., including gold and foreign exchange, $A42,926m.; and Australian dollar securities, $A36,286m. At 30 June 2011 capital and reserves were $A6,223m. and main liabilities were Australian notes on issue, $A49,968m.; and deposits, $A19,782m.

A wholly owned subsidiary of the Reserve Bank (Note Printing Australia Limited) manufactures currency notes and other security documents for Australia and for export.

(b) Four major banks: (i) The Commonwealth Bank of Australia; (ii) the Australia and New Zealand Banking Group Ltd; (iii) Westpac Banking Corporation; (iv) National Australia Bank.

(c) The Commonwealth Bank of Australia has a subsidiary—Commonwealth Development Bank. There are nine other Australian-owned banks—Adelaide Bank Ltd, AMP Bank Ltd, Bank of Queensland Ltd, Bendigo Bank Ltd, Elders Rural Bank (50% owned by Bendigo Bank Ltd), Macquarie Bank Ltd, Members Equity Pty Ltd, St George Bank Ltd and Suncorp-Metway Ltd.

(d) There are ten banks incorporated in Australia which are owned by foreign banks and 30 branches of foreign banks (these figures include five foreign banks which have both a subsidiary and a branch presence in Australia).

(e) According to the Australian Prudential Regulation Authority (APRA), as at 30 June 2011 there were 56 authorized banks with Australian banking assets of $A2,733.2bn., with 5,588 branches, 30,154 reported ATMs and 734,380 reported EFTPOS (electronic funds transfer at point of sale) terminals. As at 30 June 2011 there were ten building societies with assets of $A26.4bn. and 103 credit unions with assets of $A55.1bn.

Total foreign direct investment in 2014 was US$51.9bn.

Australia's gross external debt amounted to US$1,331,026m. in June 2012.

There is an Australian Stock Exchange (ASX) in Sydney.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Australia's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy were the equivalent of 19.6 tonnes per capita in 2011. An Environmental Performance Index compiled in 2016 ranked Australia 13th of 180 countries, with 87.2%. The index examined various factors in nine areas—agriculture, air quality, biodiversity and habitat, climate and energy, fisheries, forests, health impacts, water and sanitation, and water resources.

Electricity

Electricity supply is the responsibility of the State governments. In 2010–11 total production (and consumption) was 252,623m. kWh. Coal was the main fuel source for electricity generation in 2013–14, accounting for 61% of the total, with gas accounting for 22% and hydro 7%. Residential customers accounted for 27.3% of consumption in 2013–14.

Oil and Gas

In 2010–11, 98% of gas production came from the Carnarvon (WA), Cooper/Eromanga (central Australia) and Gippsland (Vic.) Basins, with Western Australia accounting for more than two-thirds of national output. The Carnarvon Basin, including the North West Shelf (WA), is the largest producer of crude oil. In 2010 the Northern Carnarvon Basin (WA) produced 86.2m. bbls of oil and 33.9bn. cu. metres of natural gas. Crude oil and condensate production was 20,131m. litres in 2013–14, a reduction of 5.4% over the previous year. Oil reserves at the end of 2013 totalled 4.0bn. bbls and natural gas reserves 3.7trn. cu. metres. Natural gas production (2013) was 42.9bn. cu. metres.

Minerals

Australia is the world's largest producer of bauxite and alumina. It is the world's largest producer of diamonds, ranking first for industrial-grade diamonds and second for gem-grade diamonds, after Botswana. It is also the third largest gold and uranium producer. Black coal is Australia's major source of energy. Reserves are large (Dec. 2009: 44bn. economically recoverable tonnes) and easily worked. The main fields are in New South Wales and Queensland. Brown coal (lignite) reserves are mined principally in Victoria and South Australia. In 2008–09 raw coal production was 441m. tonnes; lignite production, 68m. tonnes; and iron ore and concentrates, 325m. tonnes.

Production of other major minerals in 2008–09 (in tonnes): bauxite, 65.5m.; alumina, 19.6m.; salt, 11.3m.; manganese ore, 4.3m.; zinc, 1.3m.; nickel, 180,000; uranium, 10,284; silver, 1,903; gold, 213. Diamond production, 2013: 11.7m. carats.

Agriculture

In 2009–10 there were an estimated 134,184 establishments mainly engaged in agriculture; the estimated total area of land under agricultural use in the year ending 30 June 2010 was 398.6m. ha. (about 52% of total land area). Gross value of agricultural production in the same year, $A39.6bn., including (in $A1bn.) cattle and calves slaughtering, 7.3; sheep and lamb slaughtering, 2.6; wheat, 4.8; milk, 3.4; wool, 1.9. In year ending 30 June 2010 there were 26.0m. ha. of crops. An estimated 1.84m. ha. of crops and pastures were irrigated in 2009–10. Important crops (year ending 30 June 2010): wheat (21.8m. tonnes from 13.9m. ha.); barley (7.9m. tonnes from 4.4m. ha.); grain sorghum (1.5m. tonnes from 0.5m. ha.); oats (1.2m. tonnes from 0.85m. ha.); canola (1.9m. tonnes from 1.7m. ha.); sugarcane (31.2m. tonnes from 0.39m. ha.). In 2009–10 an estimated 1.53m. tonnes of grapes were harvested from 151,789 ha. of vines.

Beef cattle farming represents the largest sector, accounting for 25% of farming establishments. Livestock totals at June 2010: beef cattle and calves, 24.0m.; dairy cattle, 2.5m.; pigs, 2.3m.; sheep and lambs, 68.1m. Livestock products (in 1,000 tonnes) in 2009–10: beef and veal, 2,109; lamb and mutton, 574; pigmeat, 331; poultry meat, 834; wool, 353. Milk in the same year, 9,023m. litres.

Estimated fruit and vegetable production in year ending 30 June 2010 (in 1,000 tonnes): potatoes, 1,278; tomatoes, 472; oranges, 391; bananas, 302; carrots, 267; apples, 264; onions, 260.

Wine production (2009–10): 11,321,020 hectolitres. Exports of wine in 2009–10 rose by 4.8% compared to 2008–09 and were worth $A2.17bn. Australia was the seventh largest wine producer in the world in 2009–10 and the fourth largest wine exporter.

In 2009 organic crops were grown in an area covering 12.0m. ha. (the largest area of any country in the world), representing 2.9% of all farmland.

Australia is the world's leading wool producer; only China has more sheep.

Forestry

The Federal government is responsible for forestry at the national level. Each State is responsible for the management of publicly owned forests. Total forest cover was 149.30m. ha. in 2010 (19% of Australia's land area). The major part of wood supplies derives from coniferous (softwood) plantations, of which there were 1,024,000 ha. in 2010. Australia also had 973,000 ha. of broadleaved (hardwood) plantation in 2010. Timber production in 2011 was 31.43m. cu. metres.

Fisheries

The Australian Fishing Zone covers an area 16% larger than the Australian land mass and is the third largest fishing zone in the world, but fish production is insignificant by world standards owing to low productivity of the oceans. The major commercially exploited species are prawns, rock lobster, abalone, tuna, other fin fish, scallops, oysters and pearls. Total fisheries production in 2009–10 came to 241,123 tonnes with a gross value of $A2.18bn. In the same year aquaculture production was 73,542 tonnes with a gross value of $A870.4m., which represented 40% of the total value of fisheries production.

INDUSTRY

The leading companies by market capitalization as at March 2015 were: BHP Billiton Ltd (Australian/British), a resources company (US$122.3bn.); the Commonwealth Bank of Australia (US$115.7bn.); and Westpac Banking (US$93.9bn.).

In 2013–14 manufacturing contributed 6.5% to Australia's GDP. As at 30 June 2011, 937,980 people worked in manufacturing, 8.6% of Australia's total employed.

Manufacturing by sector in 2013–14:

	Wages and salaries in $A1m.	Sales and service income in $A1m.
Food, beverages and tobacco	12,566	99,976
Textiles, clothing, footwear and leather products	1,467	7,587
Wood, pulp and paper products	3,474	20,054
Printing (including the reproduction of recorded media)	2,051	8,265
Petroleum, coal, basic chemical and associated products	4,608	65,256
Polymer and rubber products	2,608	14,022
Non-metallic mineral products	2,898	18,063
Primary and fabricated metal products	11,615	80,972
Transport equipment	5,658	30,756
Machinery and equipment	7,064	33,069
Furniture and other manufacturing	1,373	7,651

Manufactured products in 2012–13 included: clay bricks, 1,312m.; portland cement, 9.5m. tonnes; ready-mixed concrete, 25m. cu. metres; newsprint (2009–10), 427,000 tonnes; raw steel (2009–10), 6.9m. tonnes; pig iron (2009–10), 5.9m. tonnes; automotive gasoline, 15,603m. litres; automotive diesel oil, 12,876m. litres; aviation turbine fuel, 5,535m. litres; beer (2009–10), 1,695m. litres.

Labour

In 2010–11 the total labour force (persons aged 15 and over) numbered 11,993,800 (5,458,500 females). There were 11,386,900 employed persons in 2010–11 (45% females) with 3,372,300 in part-time employment (70% females). The majority of wage and salary earners have had their minimum wages and conditions of work prescribed in awards by the Industrial Relations Commission. In Oct. 1991 the Commission decided to allow direct employer-employee wage bargaining, provided agreements reached are endorsed by the Commission. In some States, some conditions of work (e.g. weekly hours of work, leave) are set down in State legislation. Average weekly wage, May 2011, $A1,304.70 (men, $A1,397.70; women, $A1,159.20). Average weekly hours worked by full-time employed males, 2010–11: 41.2 hours; females, 37.2. Four weeks annual leave is standard. In 2010–11 part-time work accounted for 30% of all employment in Australia. Foreign-born workers made up 28.8% of the labour force as at Aug. 2014, the highest share of any major industrialized nation.

Employees in all States are covered by workers' compensation legislation and by certain industrial award provisions relating to work injuries.

In 2010 there were 227 industrial disputes recorded, which accounted for 126,600 working days lost (196,500 in 2008). In these disputes 54,800 workers were involved.

As at Dec. 2010 health care and social assistance (11.2% of employed persons) and retail trade (10.8%) were the largest employers, ahead of the construction industry (9.1%) and manufacturing (8.9%).

The following table shows the annual average percentage distribution of employed persons as at Nov. 2013:

Professionals	22.1
Clerical and administrative workers	14.6
Technicians and trades workers	14.6
Managers	12.8
Community and personal service workers	9.9
Labourers	9.8
Sales workers	9.4
Machinery operators and drivers	6.8

In 2010–11, 606,900 persons were unemployed, of whom 19% had been unemployed for more than one year. The unemployment rate in Dec. 2015 was 5.8% (down from 6.1% in 2014 as a whole).

Australia had 3,000 people living in slavery according to the Walk Free Foundation's 2013 Global Slavery Index.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

In 1990 Australia and New Zealand completed a Closer Economic Relations agreement (initiated in 1983) which establishes free trade in goods. Net foreign debt was $A865.5bn. as at 30 June 2014 (an increase of 8.6% on the previous year). In 1998 the effect of the Asian meltdown on exports resulted increasingly in shipments of commodities and exports of manufactures and some services being redirected to other destinations, notably the USA and Europe. Merchandise imports increased by 12.0% in 2011–12 against the previous year while exports rose by 7.4%.

Imports and Exports

The Australian customs tariff provides for preferences to goods produced in and shipped from certain countries as a result of reciprocal trade agreements. These include the UK, New Zealand, Canada and Ireland.

In 2010–11 merchandise imports totalled $A214,080m. ($A203,590m. in 2009–10); merchandise exports in 2010–11 totalled $A245,724m. ($A200,720m. in 2009–10).

Leading commodity imports, 2010 (in $A1m.): crude petroleum oils, 16,218; passenger motor vehicles, 15,917; refined petroleum, 9,970; medicaments (including veterinary), 7,896; telecommunications equipment and parts, 7,534; computers, 6,526. Most valuable commodity exports, 2010 (in $A1m.): iron ore and concentrates, 49,376; coal, 42,967; gold, 15,005; crude petroleum, 10,502; natural gas, 9,425; aluminium ores and concentrates (including alumina), 5,293.

Australia is the world's largest exporter of iron ore, black coal, bauxite, lead, diamonds, alumina, barley and wool.

Trade by bloc or country in 2010 (in $A1m.):

	Imports	Exports
APEC	181,600	208,900
ASEAN	50,600	29,900
EU	51,100	27,000
China	41,000	64,400
Japan	20,400	45,700
Korea, South	7,700	22,400
New Zealand	9,900	11,400
Singapore	14,100	7,500
Thailand	13,000	6,900
UK	10,300	12,400
USA	35,300	14,500

In the meantime China's share of Australia's foreign trade in goods and services combined has continued to rise and is now above 20%.

COMMUNICATIONSRoads

At 30 June 2012 there were an estimated 900,083 km of roads (around 42.7% of which were sealed), including 51,847 km of highways.

As at 31 Jan. 2011 registration totals were: 12,525,000 passenger vehicles, 2,531,000 light commercial vehicles, 547,000 trucks, 88,000 buses and 679,000 motorcycles.

In 2014, 1,056 persons were killed in road accidents (less than half the 1989 total of 2,407).

Rail

Privatization of government railways began in Victoria in 1994 with West Coast Railway and Hoys Transport being granted seven-year franchises. Specialised Container Transport (SCT) won the first private rail freight franchise in 1995 followed by TNT

(now Toll Holdings). Australian National Railway Commission was sold by the Commonwealth Government in Nov. 1997 and in Feb. 1999 V/Line Freight Corporation, owned by the Victorian Government, was sold to Freight Australia. Rail passenger services in Victoria were franchised in mid-1999. The Australian Railroad Group acquired Western Australia's government rail freight operation, Westrail, in Nov. 2000. In Jan. 2002 Toll Holdings and Lang acquired the rolling stock of the National Rail Corporation (NRC) and New South Wales freight carrier, FreightCorp. These two sales left Queensland Rail (QR) as the only government-owned rail freight operator in Australia. In July 2010 it was split into two separate companies with Queensland Rail as the State government-owned corporation responsible for passenger services and QR National, which was privatized in Nov. 2010, for freight.

In 2012 Australia had 33,299 route-km of open track of which 17,034 km were standard gauge (1,435 mm), 12,595 km were narrow gauge (1,067 mm), 3,281 km were narrow gauge (610 mm) and 389 km dual gauge; a total of 3,300 route-km were electrified. In 2009–10 a total of 815.3m. tonnes of freight were carried; passengers carried totalled 755m. urban (train and tram); 15m. non-urban.

Under various Commonwealth–State standardization agreements, all the State capitals are now linked by standard gauge track. The 'AustralAsia Rail Project', which involved the construction of 1,420 km standard gauge railway between Alice Springs and Darwin, has been completed and passenger services from Adelaide through Alice Springs and on to Darwin commenced in Feb. 2004.

There are also private industrial and tourist railways, and tramways in Adelaide, Melbourne and Sydney. In the latter two cities there are also metro systems.

Civil Aviation

Qantas Airways is Australia's principal international airline. In 1992 Qantas merged with Australian Airlines, and in 1993, 25% of the company was purchased by British Airways. After it was floated on the stock exchange in the mid-1990s it was 55% Australian-owned and 45% foreign-owned. Under current law 51% must be Australian-owned. The second largest airline is Virgin Australia, which was established in 2000 as a low-cost carrier and initially called Virgin Blue. The largest low-cost carrier is now Jetstar Airways, a subsidiary of Qantas. A total of 54 international airlines operated scheduled air services to and from Australia in 2014. There are 11 international airports, the main ones being Adelaide, Brisbane, Cairns, Darwin, Melbourne, Perth and Sydney. In 2014–15 passenger movements totalled a record 147,353,391 (an increase of 0.6% on the previous financial year); domestic and regional passenger numbers totalled 113,486,916 and international 33,866,475; international freight increased by 6.3% to a record 936,733 tonnes; international mail decreased by 0.3% to 40,395 tonnes.

Sydney (Kingsford Smith) handled the most traffic (26.5%) in Australia in 2014–15 (39,021,357 passengers, of which 25,513,156 on domestic and regional flights), followed by Melbourne International (21.7%) and Brisbane (14.9%).

Internal airlines (domestic and regional) carried 54.0m. passengers in 2010. Domestic airlines were deregulated in Oct. 1990.

In 2014–15 there were 192 certified and 135 registered aerodromes in Australia and its external territories. At 30 June 2015 there were 15,287 registered aircraft on the Australian Civil Aircraft Register including 2,125 helicopters and 386 balloons.

Shipping

The chief ports are Brisbane, Dampier, Fremantle, Gladstone, Hay Point, Melbourne, Newcastle, Port Hedland, Port Kembla, Port Walcott, Sydney and Weipa. Port Hedland overtook Dampier as Australia's busiest port in 2008–09, handling 159,391,000 tonnes of cargo (158,382,000 tonnes loaded and 1,009,000 tonnes discharged) compared to 140,824,000 tonnes for Dampier (140,122,000 tonnes loaded and 702,000 tonnes discharged). Iron ore exports to China are the principal factor behind the rapid growth of Dampier and Port Hedland (both of which are in Western Australia) during the 2000s.

In Jan. 2009 there were 98 ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 1,258,000 GT. Of the 98 vessels registered, 45 were passenger ships, 26 general cargo ships, 15 bulk carriers, seven oil tankers, four liquid gas tankers and there was one container ship.

Telecommunications

In 1989 the domestic market became a regulated monopoly with Telstra as the government-owned company providing all services and, in 1991, a duopoly (with Optus) in fixed network services. In 1993 Vodafone joined Telstra and Optus in the provision of mobile phone services. A new regulatory regime was created by the introduction of the Telecommunications Act 1997 and both markets were opened to wholesale and retail competition. There is no limit to the number of carriers that can hold licences under the new arrangements and at 30 June 2010 there were 177 licensed carriers. The Australian Communications and Media Authority (ACMA) and the Australian Competition and Consumer Commission (ACCC) are the primary regulators with responsibility for the industry's development. The privatization of Telstra was completed in Nov. 2006.

In 2013 there were 10,350,000 main (fixed) telephone lines, down from 10,709,000 in 2009. Mobile phone subscribers numbered 24,940,000 in 2013 (1,068.4 per 1,000 persons). In 2013, 83.5% of the population aged 15 or over were internet users. The fixed broadband penetration rate in Dec. 2010 was 24.1 subscribers per 100 inhabitants. In Dec. 2011 there were 10.7m. Facebook users (48% of the population).

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The judicial power of the Commonwealth of Australia is vested in the High Court of Australia (the Federal Supreme Court), in the Federal courts created by the Federal Parliament (the Federal Court of Australia and the Family Court of Australia) and in the State courts invested by Parliament with Federal jurisdiction.

High Court

The High Court consists of a Chief Justice and six other Justices, appointed by the Governor-General in Council. The Constitution confers on the High Court original jurisdiction, inter alia, in all matters arising under treaties or affecting consuls or other foreign representatives, matters between the States of the Commonwealth, matters to which the Commonwealth is a party and matters between residents of different States. Federal Parliament may make laws conferring original jurisdiction on the High Court, inter alia, in matters arising under the Constitution or under any laws made by the Parliament. It has in fact conferred jurisdiction on the High Court in matters arising under the Constitution and in matters arising under certain laws made by Parliament.

The High Court may hear and determine appeals from its own Justices exercising original jurisdiction, from any other Federal Court, from a Court exercising Federal jurisdiction and from the Supreme Courts of the States. It also has jurisdiction to hear and determine appeals from the Supreme Courts of the Territories. The right of appeal from the High Court to the Privy Council in London was abolished in 1986.

Other Federal Courts

Since 1924, four other Federal courts have been created to exercise special Federal jurisdiction, i.e. the Federal Court of Australia, the Family Court of Australia, the Australian Industrial Court and the Federal Court of Bankruptcy. The Federal Court of Australia was created by the Federal Court of Australia Act 1976 and began to exercise jurisdiction on 1 Feb. 1977. It exercises such original jurisdiction as is invested in it by laws made by the Federal Parliament including jurisdiction formerly exercised by the Australian Industrial Court and the Federal Court of Bankruptcy, and in some matters previously invested in either the High Court or State and Territory Supreme Courts. The Federal Court also acts as a court of appeal from State and Territory courts in relation to Federal matters. Appeal from the Federal Court to the High Court will be by way of special leave only. The State Supreme Courts have also been invested with Federal jurisdiction in bankruptcy.

State Courts

The general Federal jurisdiction of the State courts extends, subject to certain restrictions and exceptions, to all matters in which the High Court has jurisdiction or in which jurisdiction may be conferred upon it.

Industrial Tribunals

The chief federal industrial tribunal is the Australian Conciliation and Arbitration Commission, constituted by presidential members (with the status of judges) and commissioners. The Commission's functions include settling industrial disputes, making awards, determining the standard hours of work and wage fixation. Questions of law, the judicial interpretation of awards and imposition of penalties in relation to industrial matters are dealt with by the Industrial Division of the Federal Court.

At 30 June 2014 the prison population was 33,791 (185.6 per 100,000 of national population). In 2015 the World Justice Project Rule of Law Index, which provides data on how the rule of law is experienced by the general public across eight categories, ranked Australia 10th of 102 countries for criminal justice and 15th for civil justice.

Each State has its own individual police service which operates almost exclusively within its State boundaries. State police investigations include murder, robbery, street-level drug dealing, kidnaping, domestic violence and motor vehicle offences.

The role of the Australian Federal Police (AFP) is to enforce Commonwealth criminal law and protect Commonwealth and national interests from crime in Australia and overseas. Responsibilities include combating organized crime, transnational crime, money laundering, illicit drug trafficking, e-crime, the investigation of fraud against the Australian Government and handling special references from Government. The AFP also provides a protection service to dignitaries and crucial witnesses as well as community policing services to the people of the Australian Capital Territory, Jervis Bay and Australia's External Territories.

Total Australian Federal Police personnel as at 30 June 2010 was 6,715, of which 3,056 were sworn employees (police officers) and 2,453 unsworn employees. In 2013–14 there were approximately 55,000 sworn police officers in total in Australia.

Education

The governments of the Australian States and Territories have the major responsibility for education, including the administration and substantial funding of primary, secondary, and technical and further education. In most States, a single education department is responsible for these three levels but in Queensland, Western Australia and the Northern Territory, separate departments deal with school-based and technical and further education issues.

School attendance is compulsory between the ages of six (five in Tasmania) and 17 years (with the exception of the Northern Territory where the leaving age is 15 years), at either a government school or a recognized non-government educational institution. Between the ages of 16 and 17 in some states students have the option of undertaking vocational training, apprenticeships or other government approved learning programmes. Many children attend pre-schools for a year before entering school (usually in sessions of two–three hours, for two–five days per week). Government schools are usually co-educational and comprehensive. Non-government schools have been traditionally single-sex, particularly in secondary schools, but there is a trend towards co-education. Tuition is free at government schools, but fees are normally charged at non-government schools.

In Aug. 2010 there were 6,743 government (and 2,725 non-government) primary and secondary schools with 2,291,798 (1,205,769) full-time equivalent pupils and 163,697 (87,724) full-time equivalent teachers.

Vocational education and training (VET) is essentially a partnership between the Commonwealth, the States and Territories and industry. The Commonwealth is involved in VET through an agreed set of national arrangements for sharing responsibility with the States and Territories. In 2010 publicly-funded VET programmes were offered by some 170 Technical and Further Education (TAFE) institutes and other government institutions. A further 481 community education providers and over 2,000 other providers (mainly private providers) delivering VET were at least partly publicly funded. In 2010 there were 1.8m. people enrolled in publicly funded VET courses.

In 2011 there were a total of 128 higher education providers approved to receive Commonwealth Government funding through the Higher Education Support Act 2003, of which 38 were publicly-funded universities and 90 were other education institutions with students on accredited higher education courses. Most of these institutions operate under State and Territory legislation although several operate under Commonwealth legislation. There are also three completely privately-funded universities (Bond University in Queensland, the University of Notre Dame Australia in Western Australia and Torrens University Australia in South Australia) and numerous private higher education providers in a range of specialist fields. Institutions established by appropriate legislation are autonomous and have the authority to accredit their own programmes and are primarily responsible for their own quality assurance. There were 1.19m. students in higher education in 2010; fields of study with the largest number of students in 2010 were management and commerce (28.5%); society and culture (21.6%); health (13.8%); and education (9.2%).

The higher education sector contributes a significant proportion of the research and research training undertaken in Australia. The Australian Research Council provides advice on research issues and administers the allocation of some research grants to higher education sector researchers and institutions.

The Commonwealth Government offers a number of programmes which provide financial assistance to students. The Youth Allowance is available for eligible full-time students aged 16 to 24, depending on the circumstances of study. Austudy is available to eligible full-time students aged over 25. Abstudy provides financial assistance for eligible Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islanders who undertake full-time or part-time study. AIC—the Assistance for Isolated Children scheme—provides special support to families whose children are isolated from schooling or who have physical disabilities.

Most students contribute to the cost of their higher education through the Higher Education Contribution Scheme (HECS). They can choose to make an upfront contribution (with a 25% discount) or to defer all or part of their payment until their income reaches a certain level when they must begin repaying their contribution through the taxation system. Overseas students generally pay full tuition fees. Universities are also able to offer full-fee places in postgraduate courses and to a limited number of domestic undergraduate students.

International education is increasingly important, with 335,273 enrolments by overseas students at Australian educational institutions in 2010, an increase of 4.5% on the previous year; 28.1% of higher education students were foreign, the highest proportion of any country.

Total operating expenses of Australian Government on education in 2013–14 were $A81,375m. Private expenditure on education in 2013–14 amounted to $A42,388m. The figures include government grants to the private sector which are also included in the operating expenses of Australian governments.

The adult literacy rate is at least 99%.

Health

In 2011–12 there were 753 public hospitals (including 17 psychiatric hospitals) and 592 private hospitals; there were 87,549 hospital beds (3.9 per 1,000 population). Australia had 334,100 registered nurses and midwives in 2012 and 43,400 general practitioners in 2011; there were 23,382 physiotherapists as at 31 Dec. 2012. The Royal Flying Doctor Service serves remote areas. Total government expenditure on health goods and services (public and private sectors) in 2011–12 was $A140.2bn. ($A130.3bn. in the previous year), representing 9.5% of GDP. In 2011–12, 57.1% of Australians aged 18 years and over had private health insurance.

At 31 Dec. 2010 there were 30,486 HIV cases, with 1,043 new diagnoses during the year.

In 2011–12, 63% of the adult population (men, 70%; women, 56%) aged 18 years and over were considered overweight or obese, compared to 61% in 2007–08.

Welfare

All Commonwealth government social security pensions, benefits and allowances are financed from the Commonwealth government's general revenue. In addition, assistance is provided for welfare services.

Age Pensions—age pensions are payable to men 65 years of age or more who have lived in Australia for a specified period and, unless permanently blind, also satisfy an income and assets test. Since 1 July 2013 the qualifying age for women has also been 65 years. From 1 July 2017 the minimum age for both men and women's eligibility will be raised from 65 to 65 years and six months. By 2023 the Age Pension qualifying age will gradually have increased to 67 years. In the year ending 30 June 2010, 2,158,303 age pensioners received a total of $A29,384.5m.

Disability Support Pension (DSP)—payable to persons aged 16 years or over with a physical, intellectual or psychiatric impairment of at least 20%, assessed as being unable to work for at least 15 hours a week. DSP for those of 21 years or over is paid at the same rate as Age Pensions and is subject to the same means test except for those who are permanently blind. In the year ending 30 June 2010, 792,581 disability support pensioners received a total of $A11,859.7m.

Carer Payment—payable to a person unable to support themselves owing to providing constant care and attention at home for a severely disabled person aged 16 or over, or a person who is frail aged, either permanently or for an extended period. Since 1 July 1998 Carer Payment has been extended to carers of children under 16 years of age with profound disabilities. Subject to income and assets tests, the rate of Carer Payment is the same as for other pensions. In the year ending 30 June 2010, 168,913 carers received a total of $A2,269.4m.

Carer Allowance—supplementary payment to a person providing constant care and attention at home for an adult or child with a disability or severe medical condition. The allowance is not income or assets tested. In the year ending 30 June 2010, 495,733 carers received a total of $A1,477.7m.

Sickness Allowance—paid to those over school-leaving age but below Age Pension age who are unable to work or continue full-time study temporarily owing to illness or injury. Eligibility rests on the person having a job or study course to which they can return. In the year ending 30 June 2010 a total of $A83.7m. was paid to 6,703 beneficiaries.

Family Tax Benefit (FTB)—replaced Family Allowance and Family Tax Payment on 1 July 2000. Family Tax Benefit Part A is paid to assist families with children under 21 years of age or dependent full-time students aged 21–24 years; Family Tax Benefit Part B provides additional assistance to families with only one income earner and children under 16 years of age or dependent full-time students aged 16–18 years. Both benefits are subject to an income and assets test. In the year ending 30 June 2010 FTB Part A and Part B payments were made to a total of 3.1m. families.

Parenting Payment (Single) and (Partnered)—is paid to assist those who care for children under 16, with income and assets under certain amounts, and have been an Australian resident for at least two years or a refugee or have become a lone parent while an Australian resident. Parenting Payment (Single) is paid to lone parents under pension rates and conditions; Parenting Payment (Partnered) is paid to one of the parents in the couple. [Since 1 July 2000 the basic component of Parenting Payment (Partnered) was incorporated into Family Tax Benefit with 375,233 beneficiaries transferring to Family Tax Benefit Part B.] In the year ending 30 June 2010, 333,512 Parenting Payment (Single) beneficiaries and 124,910 Parenting Payment (Partnered) beneficiaries received a total of $A5,467.1m.

Baby Bonus—recognizing the costs associated with a new baby, all families with a child born (including still born) or adopted are eligible for the payment; an income test applies. In the year ended 30 June 2010 a total of $A1,398.4m. was paid.

Newstart Allowance (NSA)—payable to those who are unemployed and are over 21 years of age but less than Age Pension age. Eligibility is subject to income and assets tests and recipients must satisfy the 'activity test' whereby they are actively seeking and willing to undertake suitable paid work, including casual and part-time work. To be eligible for benefit a person must have resided in Australia for at least 12 months preceding his or her claim or intend to remain in Australia permanently; unemployment must not be as a result of industrial action by that person or by members of a union to which that person is a member. In the year ended 30 June 2010 a total of $A6,136.8m. was paid to 553,893 NSA beneficiaries.

Youth Allowance—replaced five former schemes for young people, including the Youth Training Allowance. In the year ending 30 June 2010 a total of $A2,789.4m. was paid to YA beneficiaries.

Austudy—means tested payment for students or apprentices aged 25 years and over. In the year ending 30 June 2010 a total of $A343.4m. was paid.

Service Pensions—are paid by the Department of Veterans' Affairs. Male veterans who have reached the age of 60 years or are permanently unemployable, and who served in a theatre of war, are eligible subject to an income and assets test. The minimum age for female veterans' eligibility was lifted in six-monthly increments every two years until 1 Jan. 2014 when it also became 60 years. Partners of service pensioners are also eligible, provided that they do not receive a pension from the Department of Social Security. Disability pension is a compensatory payment in respect of incapacity attributable to war service. It is paid at a rate commensurate with the degree of incapacity and is free of any income test. In the year ended 30 June 2010, $A2,979.4m. for service pensions and $A3,292.9m. for disability and war widows' dependants' pensions were paid out; at 30 June 2010 there were 179,242 service pensioners and 222,876 disability and war widow(er)s' pensioners.

In addition to cash benefits, welfare services are provided, either directly or through State and local government authorities and voluntary agencies, for people with special needs.

Medicare—covers: automatic entitlement under a single public health fund to medical and optometrical benefits of 75% of the Medical Benefits Schedule fee, with a maximum patient payment for any service where the Schedule fee is charged; access without direct charge to public hospital accommodation and to inpatient and outpatient treatment by doctors appointed by the hospital; the restoration of funds for community health to approximately the same real level as 1975; a reduction in charges for private treatment in shared wards of public hospitals, and increases in the daily bed subsidy payable to private hospitals.

The Medicare programme is financed in part by a 1.5% levy on taxable incomes, with low income cut-off points, which were $A18,839 p.a. for a single person in 2009–10 and $A31,789 for a family; there is an extra income threshold for each child (lower threshold in 2010–11 of $A2,919). A levy surcharge of 1% was introduced from 1 July 1997 for single individuals with taxable incomes in excess of $A50,000 p.a. and couples and families with combined taxable incomes in excess of $A100,000 who do not have private hospital cover through private health insurance.

Medicare benefits are available to all persons ordinarily resident in Australia. Visitors from the UK, New Zealand, Italy, Sweden, the Netherlands and Malta have immediate access to necessary medical treatment, as do all visitors staying more than six months.

RELIGION

Under the Constitution the Commonwealth cannot make any law to establish any religion, to impose any religious observance or to prohibit the free exercise of any religion. The following percentages refer to those religions with the largest number of adherents at the census of 2011. Answering the census question on religious adherence was not obligatory, however.

Christian, 61.1% of population (including: Catholic, 25.3%; Anglican, 17.1%; Uniting Church, 5.0%; Presbyterian and Reformed, 2.8%; Eastern Orthodox, 2.6%; Baptist, 1.6%; Lutheran, 1.2%; Pentecostal, 1.1%). Religions other than Christian, 7.2% (including: Buddhism, 2.5%; Islam, 2.2%; Hinduism, 1.3%; Judaism, 0.5%). Other religions, 0.8%; no religion, 22.3%; not stated and others, 8.6%.

The Anglican Church of Australia first ordained women as priests in 1992. Women have been ordained as bishops since May 2008. In Feb. 2016 the Roman Catholic church had two cardinals.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

There are 19 sites under Australian jurisdiction that appear on the UNESCO World Heritage List. They are (with year entered on list): Great Barrier Reef (1981), Kakadu National Park (1981, 1987 and 1992), Willandra Lakes Region (1981), Tasmanian Wilderness (1982 and 1989), Lord Howe Island Group (1982), Gondwana Rainforests of Australia (1986 and 1994), Uluru-Kata Tjuta National Park (1987 and 1994), Wet Tropics of Queensland (1988), Shark Bay (1991), Fraser Island (1992), Australian Fossil Mammal Sites (Riversleigh/Naracoorte) (1994), Heard and McDonald Islands (1997), Macquarie Island (1997), the Greater Blue Mountains Area (2000), Purnululu National Park (2003), Royal Exhibition Building and Carlton Gardens in Melbourne (2004), Sydney Opera House (2007), Australian Convict Sites in New South Wales, Tasmania, Western Australia and Norfolk Island (2010), and Ningaloo Coast (2011).

Press

There were 49 English daily metropolitan newspapers in 2013 (two national, ten metropolitan and 37 regional). There are also ten metropolitan Sunday newspapers. The papers with the largest circulations in June 2013 were the Sunday Telegraph (New South Wales), with an average of 541,749 per issue; the Sunday Herald Sun (Victoria), with an average of 485,943 per issue; and the Saturday edition of the Herald Sun (Victoria), with an average of 416,662 per issue. In 2013 there were two free dailies, mX (with three editions, published in Brisbane, Melbourne and Sydney) and Manly Daily.

Tourism

In 2011 the total number of overseas visitors for the year stood at 5.9m. (a 0.2% decrease on the previous year). The top source countries for visitors in 2011 were New Zealand (1,172,700); UK (608,300); China (542,000); USA (456,200); Japan (332,700); and Singapore (318,500). Tourism is Australia's largest single earner of foreign exchange.

Festivals

Among the largest events are the Sydney Festival (running for three weeks each Jan., with over 500 performers from across the arts), the National Multicultural Festival in Canberra (Feb.), the Perth International Arts Festival (Feb.), the Brisbane Festival (July) and the Melbourne International Arts Festival (Oct.). Adelaide and Darwin have their own large events too. Each June the Dreaming Festival in Woodford celebrates Indigenous culture. Among the biggest rock and pop festivals are the Big Day Out (Jan.–Feb.) and Future Music Festival (Feb.–March) concerts held across different locations in Sydney, Melbourne, Brisbane, Adelaide and Perth. However, the Big Day Out's future is in jeopardy owing to falling ticket sales. Other music festivals include Tamworth Country Music Festival (Jan.), Canberra's National Folk Festival (Easter) and Bluesfest at Byron Bay (also Easter). The Melbourne International Film Festival (July–Aug.) is the largest film festival in the southern hemisphere with over 190,000 annual admissions.

AUSTRALIAN TERRITORIES AND STATES

Australian Capital Territory

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

The area that is now the Australian Capital Territory (ACT) was explored in 1820 by Charles Throsby who named it Limestone Plains. Settlement commenced in 1824. In 1901 the Commonwealth constitution stipulated that a land tract of at least 260 sq. km in area and not less than 160 km from Sydney be reserved as a capital district. The Canberra site was adopted by the Seat of Government Act 1908. The present site was surrendered by New South Wales and accepted by the Commonwealth in 1909. By subsequent proclamation the Territory became vested in the Commonwealth from 1 Jan. 1911. The Jervis Bay Territory was acquired by the Commonwealth of Australia from New South Wales in 1915 in order that the national seat of government at Canberra would have access to the sea. In 1911 an international competition for the city plan had been won by W. Burley Griffin of Chicago but construction was delayed by the First World War. It was not until 1927 that Canberra became the seat of government. Located on the Molonglo River surrounding an artificial lake, it was built as a compromise capital to stop squabbling between Melbourne and Sydney following the 1901 Federation of Australian States.

In Dec. 1988 self-government was proclaimed and in May 1989 the first ACT assembly was elected.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

The total area is 2,431 sq. km (including Jervis Bay Territory). Around 60% is hilly or mountainous. Timbered mountains are located in the south and west, and plains and hill country in the north. The ACT lies within the upper Murrumbidgee River catchment, in the Murray-Darling Basin. The Murrumbidgee flows throughout the Territory from the south, and its tributary, the Molonglo, from the east. The Molonglo was dammed in 1964 to form Lake Burley Griffin. Population at the 2011 census excluding Jervis Bay Territory was 357,222 (2006: 324,034).

The Jervis Bay Territory (73 sq. km) is independent and administered by central government although the laws of the ACT apply. Population at the 2011 census was 378 (2006: 368).

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2007: births, 4,753; deaths, 1,597; marriages, 1,610; divorces, 1,333. Infant mortality rate (per 1,000 live births), 3-8. Expectation of life, 2007: males, 80-3 years; females, 84-0 years.

CLIMATE

ACT has a continental climate, characterized by a marked variation in temperature between seasons, with warm to hot summers and cold winters.

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

The ACT became self-governing on 11 May 1989. It is represented by two members in the Commonwealth House of Representatives and two senators.

The parliament of the ACT, the Legislative Assembly, consists of 17 members elected for a three-year term. Its responsibilities are at State and Local government level. The Legislative Assembly elects a Chief Minister and a four-member cabinet.

RECENT ELECTIONS

At the elections of 20 Oct. 2012 the Labor Party and the Liberal party both won eight seats with 38-9% of the vote. The Green Party took three seats (10-7%).

CURRENT GOVERNMENT

In Feb. 2016 the Labor-Green government comprised the following:

Chief Minister, Treasurer, Minister for Economic Development, Urban Renewal, and Tourism and Events: Andrew Barr.

Deputy Chief Minister, Attorney General, Minister for Environment and Climate Change, Health, and Police and Emergency Services: Simon Corbell. Planning and Land Management, Racing and Gaming, and Workplace Safety and Industrial Relations: Mick Gentleman. Corrections, Education, Justice and Consumer Affairs, and Road Safety: Shane Rattenbury. Housing, Community Services and Social Inclusion, Multicultural and Youth Affairs, Sport and Recreation, and Women: Yvette Berry. Higher Education, Training and Research, and Transport and Municipal Services: Meegan Fitzharris. Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Affairs, Children and Young People, Disability, Small Business and the Arts, and Veterans and Seniors: Chris Bourke.

ECONOMY

Budget

The ACT fully participates in the federal-state model underpinning the Australian Federal System. As a city-State, the ACT Government reflects State and local (municipal) government responsibilities, which is unique within the federal system. However, the ACT is treated equitably with the other Australian jurisdictions regarding the distribution of federal funding.

In 2006 the Territory recorded total income of $A3,436m. (including the Territory's share of operating surplus from Joint Ventures accounted for using the Equity Method) and incurred expenditure of $A3,065m. achieving a surplus of $A372m. on accrual basis.

Banking and Finance

According to the Australian Prudential Regulation Authority, as at 30 June 2006 there were ten authorized banks with 66 branches; one building society with four branches and seven credit unions with 31 branches.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Electricity

See NEW SOUTH WALES.

Agriculture

Sheep and/or beef cattle farming is the main agricultural activity. In 2005–06 there were 99 farming establishments with an estimated total area of 44,910 ha. Gross value of agricultural production in 2009–10: $A10.7m.

Forestry

There are about 10,000 ha. of plantation forest in the ACT (approximately 3.96% of the land area). Most of the area is managed for the production of softwood timber. The established pine forests, such as Kowen, Stromlo, Uriarra and Pierces Creek, are in the northern part of the Territory. After harvesting, 500–1,000 ha. of land are planted with new pine forest each year. No native forests or woodlands have been cleared for plantation since the mid-1970s.

INDUSTRY

Manufacturing industries in the year ended 30 June 2007 employed 4,967 persons and generated sales and service income of $A1,162m.

Labour

In June 2007 there were 187,900 employed persons and 6,000 unemployed persons, giving an unemployment rate of 3.1%.

In the year ending Feb. 2006, 25.7% of the ACT labour force was employed in public administration and defence; 14.9% in property and business services; 11.6% in retail trade. The average weekly wage in Nov. 2010 was $A1,468.20 (males $A1,550.80, females $A1,370.50).

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

In 2009–10 foreign merchandise imports were valued at $A5m.; exports at $A4m. Major sources of imports for 2009–10 (figures in $A1,000): Austria, 1,737; USA, 810; France, 660. Major export destinations (figures in $A1,000): Germany, 2,380; Saudi Arabia, 729; Hong Kong, 600. Principal commodity imports in 2009–10 were (with values in $A1,000): artwork and antiques, 1,558; telecommunications equipment and parts, 771; electrical machinery and parts, 518. Principal commodity exports (with values in $A1,000): gold coins and legal tender coins, 1,129; heating and cooling equipment, 729; optical instruments, 71.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

In 2007 there were an estimated 3,023 km of roads. At 31 March 2006 there were 224,076 vehicles registered in the ACT. In 2007 there were 14 road accident fatalities.

Civil Aviation

In 2009–10 Canberra International Airport handled 3,258,396 passengers.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

In the year ending 30 June 2011 there were 26,087 criminal incidents recorded by police. During the same year there were 740 full-time sworn police officers in the ACT and 206 unsworn police staff.

Education

In Feb. 2006 there were 221 schools comprising 82 pre-schools, 139 primary and secondary schools (including colleges) and five special schools. Of these 177 were government schools. There were a total of 60,142 full-time students. There were four higher education institutions in 2006: the Signadou Campus of the Australian Catholic University (ACU) had 596 students enrolled; the Australian National University, 14,476 students; the University of Canberra, 11,632; and the Australian Defence Force Academy, 2,136.

Health

The ACT is serviced by three public and 12 private hospitals (nine of the private hospitals are free-standing day hospital facilities only). At 30 June 2006 there were 2,056 medical practitioners, 4,469 registered nurses and 264 dentists.

Welfare

In 2005–06 there were 18,468 age pensioners (5.7% of ACT population); 7,281 persons received disability support pension (2.2%).

RELIGION

At the 2006 census 60.2% of the population were Christian. Of these, 46.5% were Roman Catholic and 27.8% Anglican. Non-Christian religions accounted for 6.2%, the largest groups being Buddhists, Muslims and Hindus.

CULTURE

Tourism

In the year ending March 2009, 156,885 international visitors came to the ACT. Of these, the largest proportion (19%) was from the UK. At Dec. 2008 there were 56 hotels, guest houses and serviced apartments employing 2,467 persons.

Northern Territory

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

The Northern Territory, after forming part of New South Wales, was annexed on 6 July 1863 to South Australia. After the agreement of 7 Dec. 1907 for the transfer of the Northern Territory to the Commonwealth, it passed to the control of the Commonwealth government on 1 Jan. 1911. On 1 Feb. 1927 the Northern Territory was divided into two territories but in 1931 it was again administered as a single territory. The Legislative Council for the Northern Territory, constituted in 1947, was reconstituted in 1959. In that year, citizenship rights were granted to Aboriginal people of 'full descent'. On 1 July 1978 self-government was granted.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

The Northern Territory's total area is 1,349,129 sq. km and includes adjacent islands. It has 5,100 km of mainland coastline and 2,100 km of coast around the islands. The greater part of the interior consists of a tableland with excellent pasturage. The southern part is generally sandy and has a small rainfall.

The 2011 census population was 211,945 (2006: 192,898). The capital, seat of government and principal port is Darwin, on the north coast; 2006 census population, 105,991. Other main areas of population (2006 totals of local government areas) are Alice Springs (23,893); Palmerston (23,719); and Katherine (8,194). There are also a number of large self-contained Aboriginal communities. People identifying themselves as indigenous numbered 53,662 at the 2006 census.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2007 totals: births, 3,894; deaths, 1,001; marriages, 779; divorces, 417. Infant mortality rate per 1,000 live births, 8.5. Life expectancy, 2007: 72.4 years for males and 78.4 for females. The annual rates per 1,000 population in 2007 were: births, 18.1; deaths, 4.7; marriages, 3.6; divorces, 1.9.

CLIMATE

See AUSTRALIA: Climate.

The highest temperature ever recorded in the NT was 118.9°F (48.3°C) at Finke in 1960, while the lowest recorded temperature was 18.5°F (-7.5°C) at Alice Springs in 1976.

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

The Northern Territory (Self-Government) Act 1978 established the Northern Territory as a body politic as from 1 July 1978, with Ministers having control over and responsibility for Territory finances and the administration of the functions of government as specified by the Federal government. Regulations have been made conferring executive authority for the bulk of administrative functions.

The Northern Territory has federal representation, electing one member to the House of Representatives and two members to the Senate.

The Legislative Assembly has 25 members, directly elected for a period of four years. The Administrator (John Hardy) appoints Ministers on the advice of the Leader of the majority party.

RECENT ELECTIONS

In parliamentary elections held on 25 Aug. 2012 the opposition Country Liberal Party won 16 seats against eight for the Australian Labor Party. One independent was elected. Turnout was 76.9%.

CURRENT GOVERNMENT

Administrator: John Hardy, OAM.

ECONOMY

Budget

In 2013–14 general government revenue totalled $A4,925m. of which $A3,626m. current grants and $A242m. sales of goods and services. Expenditure in 2013–14 totalled $A5,126m. including $A1,937m. employee benefits expense and $A804m. current grants.

Banking and Finance

According to the Australian Prudential Regulation Authority, as at 30 June 2006 there were seven authorized banks with 39 branches; and six credit unions with 24 branches.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Electricity

The Power and Water Corporation supplies power to 72 indigenous and remote communities as well as the major centres. In the year ended 30 June 2009 total electricity generated was 1,525 GWh; total consumption was 1,748m. kWh. Total installed capacity at 30 June 2009 was 473 MW.

Oil and Gas

The Timor Sea is a petroleum producing province with five fields and more than 22m. cu. ft of known gas reserves. Gas is currently supplied from the Palm Valley and Mereenie fields in the onshore Amadeus Basin to the Channel Island Power Station in Darwin via one of Australia's longest onshore gas pipelines. The estimated total value of oil and gas production in 2009–10 was $A2,401.4m., a decrease of $A64.4m. on 2008–09. The Northern Territory produced 1,789 megalitres of crude oil and 509m. cu. metres of natural gas in 2006–07.

Minerals

Mining is the major contributor to the Territory's economy. Compared to 2005–06 the overall value of production in the mining industry rose by 51.2% in 2006–07. Value of major mineral commodities production in 2006–07 (in $A1m.): manganese, 982; zinc/lead concentrate, 566; alumina, 483; gold, 421; uranium oxide, 273; bauxite, 167; crushed rock, 13.

Agriculture

In the year ending June 2007 there were 640 agricultural establishments with a total area under holding of 61.2m. ha. Gross value of agricultural production in the year ending June 2007 rose by 21.8% to $A373m. Beef cattle production constitutes the largest farming industry. Total value of livestock slaughter and products in the year ending June 2007 was $A243m., an increase of 8.4% on the previous year. In the same year fruit production totalled (in tonnes): mangoes, 13,937; bananas, 1,701; table grapes, 1,327. Estimated value of the Northern Territory crocodile industry in 2010–11 was $A10.1m. with 64,835 kg of meat produced.

Forestry

In 2006 there were 27m. ha. of native forest, accounting for 20.2% of the Territory's total land area. As at June 2006 the total native forest cover consisted of 406,000 ha. closed forest, 7,139,000 ha. open forest and 25,290,000 ha. woodland. Total area of plantation forest was 26,000 ha., consisting mainly of softwoods. Hardwood plantations of fast-growing Acacia Mangium have been established on the Tiwi Islands for the production of woodchip for paper pulp. In addition, a number of operations for the production of sandalwood oil and neem products have been established near Batchelor.

Fisheries

Estimated total fisheries production in 2005–06 came to 8,257 tonnes with a gross value of $A98.0m. In the same year, aquaculture had a gross value of $A26.0m.

INDUSTRY

In the year ended 30 June 2007 the sales and service income generated by manufacturing industry was $A2,765m.; 4,634 persons were employed and salaries totalled $A283m. In Nov. 2006, 15,300 persons were employed in the wholesale and retail trade.

Labour

The labour force totalled 104,700 in Jan. 2007, of whom 102,100 were employed. The unemployment rate was 2.5%, down from 6.4% in Jan. 2006. The average weekly wage in Nov. 2006 was $A847.90 (males $A975.50, females $A724.80).

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

In 2009–10 foreign merchandise imports were valued at $A3,051m.; exports at $A4,980m. Major sources of imports for 2009–10 (figures in $A1m.): Singapore, 550; Kuwait, 331; Japan, 169; USA, 131; Thailand, 93. Major export destinations (figures in $A1m.): Japan, 1,952; China, 1,225; USA, 446; Indonesia, 339; Oman, 187. Principal commodity imports in 2009–10 were (with values in $A1m.): natural gas, 1,219; refined petroleum, 529; non-electric engines and motors, 138. Principal exports (with values in $A1m.): natural gas, 1,771; manganese ores and concentrates, 902; zinc ores and concentrates, 235.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

In 2007 there were an estimated 22,187 km of roads. The number of registered motor vehicles (excluding tractors and trailers) at 31 March 2006 was 114,015, including 73,302 passenger vehicles, 28,872 light commercial vehicles, 4,725 trucks, 2,989 buses and 3,950 motorcycles. There were 75 road accident fatalities in 2008. The death rate on the Northern Territory's roads in 2008 was, at 34.1 per 100,000 people, nearly five times higher than the rate for Australia as a whole.

Rail

In 1980 Alice Springs was linked to the Trans-continental network by a standard (1,435 mm) gauge railway to Tarcoola in South Australia (830 km). A 1,410 km standard gauge line operates between Darwin and Alice Springs. This $A1.3bn. AustralAsia Railway project links Darwin and Adelaide. The first train to complete the journey of 1,860 miles arrived in Darwin on 3 Feb. 2004.

Civil Aviation

Darwin and most regional centres in the Territory are serviced by daily flights to all State capitals and major cities. In 2010 there were direct international services connecting Darwin to Indonesia (Bali), Singapore, Timor-Leste and Vietnam. In 2009–10 Darwin airport handled 1,569,007 passengers (1,191,208 on domestic airlines); and Alice Springs 681,295 passengers (681,255 domestic).

Shipping

In 2008–09, 1,578 commercial vessels called at Northern Territory ports. General cargo imported in 2008–09 was 333,249 mass tonnes and general cargo exported was 247,324 mass tonnes.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

Voluntary euthanasia for the terminally ill was legalized in 1995 but the law was overturned by the Federal Senate on 24 March 1997. The first person to have recourse to legalized euthanasia died on 22 Sept. 1996.

Police personnel (sworn and unsworn) at 30 June 2007, 1,703 including 78 Aboriginal community police officers. In 2006–07 the Territory had two prisons with a daily average of 833 prisoners held.

Education

Education is compulsory from the age of six to 15 years. There were (Aug. 2006) 28,506 full-time students enrolled in 151 government schools and 9,074 enrolled in 35 non-government schools. Teaching staff in government and non-government schools totalled 3,205. The proportion of Indigenous students in the Territory is high, comprising 38.9% of all primary and secondary students at Aug. 2006. Bilingual programmes operate in some Aboriginal communities where traditional Aboriginal culture prevails.

The Northern Territory University (NTU), founded in 1989 by amalgamating the existing University College of the Northern Territory and the Darwin Institute of Technology, joined with the Alice Springs' Centralian College in 2004 to form the Charles Darwin University. In 2011, 8,744 students were enrolled in higher education courses of whom 4.7% were identified as Indigenous. The Batchelor Institute of Indigenous Tertiary Education, which provides higher and vocational education and training for Aboriginal and Torres Straits Islanders, had 355 students enrolled in higher education courses in 2011 and 2,550 in Vocational Education and Training (VET) courses. In 2010–11 there were 24,054 enrolments in the Northern Territory's Vocational Education and Training activities.

Health

In 2006–07 there were five public hospitals with a total of 600 beds and one private hospital. Community health services are provided from urban and rural Health Centres including mobile units. Remote communities are served by resident nursing staff, aboriginal health workers and in larger communities, resident GPs. Emergency services are supported by the Aerial Medical Services throughout the Territory.

Welfare

Total social security and welfare expenditure for 2006–07 was $A175,331m. In the same year payments for welfare services for the aged totalled $A17,276m. and disability welfare services expenditure was $A50,811m.

RELIGION

Religious affiliation at the 2006 census: Roman Catholic, 21.1%; Anglican, 12.3%; Uniting Church, 7.0%; Lutheran, 3.9%; Baptist, 2.4%; other Christian, 8.0%; non-Christians, 5.1%; no religion, 23.1%; not stated, 17.1%.

CULTURE

Tourism

In 2009 a total of 1.4m. people visited the Northern Territory, a decrease of 1.9% from the previous year. In the same year tourist expenditure was $A1.8bn. Tourism is the second largest revenue earner after the mining industry.

New South Wales

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

The name New South Wales was applied to the entire east coast of Australia when Capt. James Cook claimed the land for the British Crown on 23 Aug. 1770. The separate colonies of Tasmania, South Australia, Victoria and Queensland were proclaimed in the 19th century. In 1911 and 1915 the Australian Capital Territory around Canberra and Jervis Bay was ceded to the Commonwealth. New South Wales was thus gradually reduced to its present area. The first settlement was made at Port Jackson in 1788 as a penal settlement. A partially elective council was established in 1843 and responsible government in 1856.

Gold discoveries from 1851 brought an influx of immigrants, and responsible government was at first unstable, with seven ministries holding office in the five years after 1856. Bitter conflict arose from land laws enacted in 1861. Lack of transport hampered agricultural expansion.

New South Wales federated with the other Australian states to form the Commonwealth of Australia in 1901.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

New South Wales (NSW) is situated between the 29th and 38th parallels of S. lat. and 141st and 154th meridians of E. long., and comprises 800,642 sq. km, inclusive of Lord Howe Island, 17 sq. km, but exclusive of the Australian Capital Territory (2,352 sq. km) and 67 sq. km at Jervis Bay.

The population at the 2011 census was 6,917,658 (6,549,177 at 2006 census, of which 3,320,726 were female). In 2011 there were nine people per sq. km. Although NSW comprises only 10.4% of the total area of Australia, 33.0% of the Australian population live there. During the year ended June 2010, 42,300 permanent settlers arrived in New South Wales (47,000 in the year to June 2009).

The state is divided into 12 Statistical Divisions. The population of these (in 1,000) in 2008 was: Sydney, 4,399.7; Hunter, 632.9; Illawarra, 423.5; Mid-North Coast, 304.3; Richmond-Tweed, 237.4; South Eastern, 212.2; Northern, 181.7; Central West, 180.1; Murrumbidgee, 155.9; Murray, 117.1; North Western, 116.7; Far West, 22.7. The estimated population of the Statistical Subdivision Newcastle (within Hunter) was 540,800 in June 2009 and of the Statistical Subdivision Wollongong (within Illawarra) 284,200 in June 2008.

Lord Howe Island, 31° 33' 4" S., 159° 4' 26" E., which is part of New South Wales, is situated about 702 km northeast of Sydney; area, 1,654 ha., of which only about 120 ha. are arable; resident population (2011 census), 360 (185 females). The Island, which was discovered in 1788, is of volcanic origin. Mount Gower, the highest point, reaches a height of 866 metres.

The Lord Howe Island Board manages the affairs of the Island and supervises the Kentia palm-seed industry.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

Statistics for calendar years:

	Live births	Deaths	Marriages	Divorces
2004	85,894	46,440	37,431	15,007
2005	86,589	44,894	35,927	15,172

Within the State there are three levels of government: the Commonwealth government, with authority derived from a written constitution; the State government with residual powers; the local government authorities with powers based upon a State Act of Parliament, operating within incorporated areas extending over almost 90% of the State.

The Constitution of New South Wales is drawn from several diverse sources; certain Imperial statutes such as the Commonwealth of Australia Constitution Act (1900); the Australian States Constitution Act (1907); an element of inherited English law; amendments to the Commonwealth of Australia Constitution Act; the (State) Constitution Act; the Australia Acts of 1986; the Constitution (Amendment) Act 1987 and certain other State Statutes; numerous legal decisions; and a large amount of English and local convention.

The Parliament of New South Wales may legislate for the peace, welfare and good governance of the State in all matters not specifically reserved to the Commonwealth government. The State Legislature consists of the Sovereign, represented by the Governor, and two Houses of Parliament, the Legislative Council (upper house) and the Legislative Assembly (lower house). Australian citizens aged 18 and over, and other British subjects who were enrolled prior to 26 Jan. 1984, men and women aged 18 years and over, are entitled to the franchise. Enrolment and voting is compulsory. The optional preferential method of voting is used for both houses. The Legislative Council has 42 members elected for a term of office equivalent to two terms of the Legislative Assembly, with 21 members retiring at the same time as the Legislative Assembly elections. The whole State constitutes a single electoral district. The Legislative Assembly has 93 members elected in single-seat electoral districts for a maximum period of four years.

RECENT ELECTIONS

In elections held on 28 March 2015 the ruling Liberal-National Coalition won 54 of 93 seats (the Liberals 37 and the Nationals 17), the Australian Labor Party 34, the Greens 3 and ind. 2.

CURRENT GOVERNMENT

In Feb. 2016 the Legislative Council consisted of the following parties: Liberal Party of Australia, 13; Australian Labor Party, 12; National Party, 7; Greens, 5; Christian Democratic Party (Fred Nile Group), 2; Shooters and Fishers Party, 2; Animal Justice Party, 1.

The Legislative Assembly, which was elected in March 2015, consisted of the following parties in Feb. 2016: Liberal Party of Australia, 37 seats; Australian Labor Party, 34; National Party, 17; Greens, 3; ind., 2.

Governor: David Hurley, AC, DSC.

The New South Wales Liberal-National ministry was as follows in Feb. 2016:

In 2006-07 State government revenue from taxes amounted to $A16,719m.; grants and subsidies totalled $A17,625m.

Performance

In 2012-13 the gross state product of New South Wales represented 31.3% of Australia's total GDP.

Banking and Finance

According to the Australian Prudential Regulation Authority, as at 30 June 2006 there were 27 authorized banks with 1,525 branches; seven building societies with 153 branches; and 87 credit unions with 397 branches.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Electricity

In 2008-09, 79,750 GWh were produced, of which 7.2% was from renewable sources. Black coal is the main fuel source for electricity generation in the state, producing 88.8% of the total output in 2008-09. Total installed capacity in 2010 was around 18,000 MW.

Oil and Gas

No natural gas is produced in NSW. Almost all gas is imported from the Moomba field in South Australia plus, since 2001, a small amount from Bass Strait.

Minerals

New South Wales contains extensive mineral deposits. In 2008-09 there were 60 coal mines directly employing 16,914 people. The value of metallic minerals produced in 2008-09 was $A2.59bn.; construction materials, $A346m. Output of principal products, 2008-09 (in tonnes): coal, 182.0m.; copper, 158,000; zinc, 122,000; lead, 73,000; zircon, 56,000; silver, 71; gold, 28.

Agriculture

NSW accounts for around 21% of the value of Australia's total agricultural production with a gross value of $A8,359.2m. in 2009-10. In the year ending 30 June 2010 there were 43,115 farming establishments with a total area under holding of 59m. ha. of which 6.9m. ha. were under crops.

Principal crops in 2009-10 with production in 1,000 tonnes: wheat for grain, 5,350; barley, 1,236; sorghum, 581; canola, 281. Value of crops, 2009-10, came to $A4.2bn. with wheat totalling $A1.2bn. and cotton $A453m.

The total area under vines in 2010 was 42,621 ha; winegrape production totalled 442,608 tonnes.

Orange production in 2009-10 was 192,500 tonnes (49% of the Australian total); apple production in 2007-08 was 44,900 tonnes.

2009-10 gross value of livestock products was $A1.3bn., including wool produced, $A641m.; and milk, $A522m. In the year ended 31 Aug. 2010 production (in tonnes) of beef and veal, 471,947; mutton and lamb, 133,637; pork, 63,691.

Forestry

The area of native and planted forests managed by State Forests of NSW in 2008-09 totalled 2.41m. ha.; there were 204,828 ha. of softwood and 46,483 ha. of hardwood plantation. In 2008-09, 2.66m. cu. metres of sawlogs and veneer logs were harvested.

Fisheries

Estimated total fisheries production in 2005-06 came to 27,916 tonnes with a gross value of $A143.3m. In the same year aquaculture production was an estimated 5,212 tonnes with a gross value of $A45.03m.

INDUSTRY

A wide range of manufacturing is undertaken in the Sydney area, and there are large iron and steel works near the coalfields at Newcastle and Port Kembla. Around one-third of Australian manufacturing takes place in NSW.

Manufacturing establishments' operations in the year ended 30 June 2007:

Industry	No. of persons employed (1,000)	Wages and salaries ($A1m.)	Sales and service income ($A1m.)
Food, beverages and tobacco	69.6	3,238	25,074

Total manufacturing	291.3	14,712¹	111,442¹

¹Although the totals include figures for both petroleum and coal product manufacturing and furniture and other manufacturing the individual figures are not available for those categories.

Labour

In 2007 the labour force totalled 3,493,200 persons, of whom 3,319,300 were employed: 476,100 in retail trade; 429,800 in property and business services; 347,300 in health and community services; 325,300 in manufacturing; 287,200 in construction; and 222,100 in education. There were 173,900 unemployed (a rate of 5.0%) in June 2007. The average weekly wage in Nov. 2005 was $A1,089.00 (males $A1,157.40, females $A973.90).

Industrial tribunals are authorized to fix minimum rates of wages and other conditions of employment. Their awards may be enforced by law, as may be industrial agreements between employers and organizations of employees, when registered.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

In 2009-10 foreign merchandise imports were valued at $A76,004m.; exports at $A31,173m. Major sources of imports for 2009-10 (figures in $A1m.): China, 18,370; USA, 8,948; Japan, 5,856; Germany, 4,134; Malaysia, 2,953. Major export destinations (figures in $A1m.): Japan, 8,306; China, 3,225; South Korea, 3,112; USA, 2,275; New Zealand, 2,191. Principal commodity imports in 2009-10 were (with values in $A1m.): medicaments (including veterinary), 6,322; telecommunications equipment and parts, 5,421; passenger motor vehicles, 4,882; computers, 4,806; crude petroleum, 3,954. Principal commodity exports (with values in $A1m.): coal, 8,460; copper ores and concentrates, 1,797; aluminium, 1,624; medicaments (including veterinary), 1,325; refined petroleum, 1,114.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

At 30 June 2006 there were 183,120 km of public roads in total. The Roads and Traffic Authority of New South Wales is responsible for the administration and upkeep of major roads. In 2006 there were 20,699 km of roads under its control, comprising 4,250 km of national highways, 13,503 km of state roads and 2,946 km of regional and local roads.

The number of registered motor vehicles (excluding tractors and trailers) at 31 March 2006 was 4,268,631, including 3,395,905 passenger vehicles, 587,713 light commercial vehicles, 133,662 trucks, 20,733 buses and 122,211 motorcycles. There were 510 road accident fatalities in 2006.

Rail

Rail Corporation New South Wales (RailCorp) was formed in 2004 following a merger of the State Rail Authority and Rail Infrastructure Corporation. RailCorp owns, operates and maintains the rail tracks and related infrastructure, and provides metropolitan (CityRail) and long distance (CountryLink) passenger services and access to rail freight operators. In the year ended 30 June 2009, 304.8m. passengers were carried on CityRail and 1.7m. on Countrylink. Also open for traffic are 325 km of Victorian government railways which extend over the border, 68 km of private railways (mainly in mining districts) and 53 km of Commonwealth government-owned track.

A tramway opened in Sydney in 1996. There is also a small overhead railway in the city centre.

Civil Aviation

Sydney Airport (Kingsford Smith) is the major airport in New South Wales and Australia's principal international air terminal. In 2002 it was sold to Macquarie Airports. As well as domestic flights, in 2010 there were direct international services connecting Sydney with nearly 50 destinations. In 2009–10 it handled a total of 34,462,117 passengers (21,394,601 on domestic airlines). It is also the leading airport for freight, handling 377,896 tonnes of international freight in 2009–10.

Shipping

The main ports are at Sydney, Newcastle and Port Kembla. In 2008–09, 4,664 commercial vessels called at New South Wales ports. General cargo imported in 2008–09 was 8,418,728 mass tonnes and general cargo exported was 7,177,701 mass tonnes.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

Legal processes may be conducted in Local Courts presided over by magistrates or in higher courts (District Court or Supreme Court) presided over by judges. There is also an appellate jurisdiction. Persons charged with more serious crimes must be tried before a higher court.

The Children's Court deals with certain matters, including care and protection cases and criminal cases, involving children under 18. There are also a number of tribunals exercising special jurisdiction, e.g. the Industrial Commission and the Compensation Court.

As at 30 June 2006 there was a daily average of 9,911 persons held in prison. Police personnel (sworn) at 30 June 2006, 14,634.

Education

The State government maintains a system of free primary and secondary education, and attendance at school is compulsory from the age of six years of age. Since Jan. 2010 it has been compulsory for young people aged 15–17 to remain in school or, by arrangement, take part in an approved education and training pathway such as an apprenticeship or traineeship. Non-government schools are subject to government inspection.

In Aug. 2006 there were 2,187 government schools with 740,415 pupils (434,366 primary, 306,049 secondary) and 51,385 teachers, and 912 non-government schools with 369,902 pupils (185,963 primary, 183,939 secondary) and 26,775 teachers. There were 297,200 students in higher education in 2005, with the largest numbers enrolled in management and commerce (29.1% of total enrolments) and society and culture (23.7%). Student enrolments in 2006: University of Sydney (founded 1850), 45,039; University of New England at Armidale (incorporated 1954), 17,854; University of New South Wales (founded 1949), 37,836; University of Newcastle (granted autonomy 1965), 22,997; University of Wollongong (founded 1951), 22,754; Macquarie University in Sydney (founded 1964), 31,660; University of Technology, Sydney, 32,708; University of Western Sydney, 35,061; Charles Sturt University, 34,261; Southern Cross University (founded 1994), 14,092. Colleges of advanced education were merged with universities in 1990. Post-school technical and further education is provided at State TAFE colleges. Enrolments in 2010 totalled 583,200.

Health

In 2006–07 there were 228 public and 173 private hospitals. In 2005–06 there were 27,918 medical practitioners, 4,358 dentists and 82,740 registered nurses.

Welfare

The number of age and disability pensions at 30 June 2007 was: age, 633,312; disability support, 226,955. There were 146,720 newstart allowance, 110,014 youth allowance and 130,038 single parent payments current at 30 June 2007.

Direct State government social welfare services are limited, for the most part, to the assistance of persons not eligible for Commonwealth government pensions or benefits, and the provision of certain forms of assistance not available from the Commonwealth government. The State also subsidizes many approved services for needy persons.

RELIGION

At the 2006 census 28.2% of the population were Roman Catholic and 21.8% Anglican. These two religions combined had nearly 3.3m. followers.

CULTURE

Tourism

In 2009, 2.7m. overseas visitors arrived for short-term visits, a 2.1% decrease on the previous year. The UK represented the major source of international visitors with 13.9%; followed by New Zealand, 13.2%; USA, 11.2%.

Queensland

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Queensland was discovered by Capt. Cook in 1770. From 1778 it was part of New South Wales and was made a separate colony, with the name of Queensland, by letters patent of 8 June 1859, when responsible government was conferred. Although by 1868 gold had been discovered, wool was the colony's principal product. The first railway line was opened in 1865. Queensland federated with the other Australian states to form the Commonwealth of Australia in 1901. In 1982 Brisbane hosted the Commonwealth Games. Severe flooding in Dec. 2010 and Jan. 2011 killed at least 30 people and affected over 200,000, with damage estimated to have cost $A30bn.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Queensland comprises the whole northeastern portion of the Australian continent, including the adjacent islands in the Pacific Ocean and in the Gulf of Carpentaria. Area, 1,730,648 sq. km.

At the 2011 census the population was 4,332,739 (3,904,532 at 2006 census). At the 2006 census there were 127,578 Aboriginals and Torres Strait Islanders. Statistics on birthplaces from the 2006 census are as follows: Australia, 75.2%; England, 4.1%; New Zealand, 3.8%; South Africa, 0.6%; Scotland, 0.6%.

Brisbane, the capital, had at the time of the 2006 census a resident population of 1,763,131 (Statistical Division). The resident populations of the other major centres (Statistical Districts) at 30 June 2005 were: Gold Coast-Tweed (Queensland component), 432,000; Sunshine Coast, 213,000; Townsville, 149,000; Cairns, 128,000; Mackay, 82,000; Rockhampton, 69,000; Bundaberg, 61,000; Gladstone, 43,000.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

Statistics (including Aboriginals) for calendar years:

	Births	Deaths	Marriages	Divorces
2004	49,593	24,657	24,312	13,279
2005	51,700	23,584	24,303	12,383
2006	52,665	24,473	25,043	12,175
2007	61,249	25,801	25,808	11,058

The annual rates per 1,000 population in 2007 were: births, 14.6; deaths, 6.2; marriages, 6.2; divorces, 2.6. The infant mortality rate in 2007 was 5.0 per 1,000 live births. Life expectancy, 2007: 78.9 years for males, 83.6 for females.

CLIMATE

A typical subtropical to tropical climate. High daytime temperatures during Oct. to March give a short spring and long summer. Centigrade temperatures in the hottest inland areas often exceed the high 30s before the official commencement of summer on 1 Dec. Daytime temperatures in winter are quite mild, in the low- to mid-20s. Average rainfall varies from about 150 mm in the desert in the extreme southwestern corner of the State to about 4,000 mm in parts of the sugar lands of the wet northeastern coast, the latter being the wettest part of Australia.

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

Queensland, formerly a portion of New South Wales, was formed into a separate colony in 1859, and responsible government was conferred. The power of making laws and imposing taxes is vested in a parliament of one house—the Legislative Assembly—which comprises 89 members, returned from four electoral zones for three years, elected from single-member constituencies by compulsory ballot.

Queensland elects 26 members to the Commonwealth House of Representatives.

The Elections Act, 1983, provides franchise for all males and females, 18 years of age and over, qualified by six months' residence in Australia and three months in the electoral district.

RECENT ELECTIONS

In Legislative Assembly elections on 31 Jan. 2015 the opposition Labor Party (ALP) won 44 seats, the Liberal National Party (LNP) 42, Katter's Australian Party 2 and ind. 1.

CURRENT GOVERNMENT

Governor of Queensland: Paul de Jersey, AC (took office on 29 July 2014).

In Feb. 2016 the ALP administration was as follows:

Premier, and Minister for the Arts: Anastacia Palaszczuk (took office on 14 Feb. 2015).

Deputy Premier, and Minister for Infrastructure, Local Government and Planning, and Trade and Investment: Jackie Trad. Treasurer, and Minister for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Partnerships, and Sport: Curtis Pitt. Health, and Ambulance Services: Cameron Dick. Education, and Tourism and Major Events: Kate Jones. State Development, and Natural Resources and Mines: Anthony Lynham. Attorney General, and Minister for Justice, and Training and Skills: Yvette D'Ath. Police, Fire and Emergency Services, and Corrective Services: Bill Byrne. Transport and the Commonwealth Games: Stirling Hinchliffe. Main Roads, Road Safety and Ports, and Energy, Biofuels and Water Supply: Mark Bailey. Environment and Heritage Protection, and National Parks and the Great Barrier Reef: Steven Miles. Innovation, Science and the Digital Economy, and Small Business: Leeanne Enoch. Communities, Women and Youth, Child Safety, and Prevention of Domestic and Family Violence: Shannon Fentiman. Disability Services, and Seniors: Coralee O'Rourke. Employment and Industrial Relations, Racing, and Multicultural Affairs: Grace Grace. Housing and Public Works: Mick de Brenni. Agriculture and Fisheries: Leanne Donaldson.

ECONOMY

Budget

In 2006–07 general government expenses by the state were expected to total $A28,825m.; revenue and grants received were expected to be $A29,070m.

Performance

Queensland's 2012–13 gross state product represented 19.1% of Australia's total GDP.

Banking and Finance

According to the Australian Prudential Regulation Authority, as at 30 June 2006 there were 16 authorized banks with 1,151 branches; six building societies with 151 branches; and 24 credit unions with 148 branches.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Electricity

In 2008, 81% of electricity came from coal-fired power stations, 15% from gas and 4% from renewable energy. As at 31 Dec. 2008 total installed capacity was 12,487 MW.

Minerals

There are large reserves of coal, bauxite, gold, copper, silver, lead, zinc, nickel, phosphate rock and limestone. The state is the largest producer of black coal in Australia. Most of the coal produced comes from the Bowen Basin coalfields in central Queensland. Copper, lead, silver and zinc are mined in the northwest and the State's largest goldmines are in the north. The total value of metallic minerals in 2008–09 was $A6.24bn. In 2008–09 there were 55 coal mines in operation producing 190.55m. tonnes of saleable coal (an increase of 5.6% on the previous year); and at 30 June 2009, 37,000 persons were employed in mining.

Agriculture

Queensland is Australia's leading beef-producing state and its chief producer of fruit and vegetables. In the year ending 30 June 2005 there were 26,955 agricultural establishments farming 143.8m. ha. of which 2.7m. ha. were under crops. Livestock numbered (at 30 June 2005) 11,380,000 beef cattle; 4,949,000 sheep and lambs; and 666,000 pigs. Total value of wool production, 2007–08: $A103m. The gross value of agricultural production in 2004–05 was $A8.3bn. which comprised crops, $A3.7bn.; livestock disposals, $A4.2bn.; and livestock products, $A411m.

Forestry

Of a total of 56m. ha. of forests and woodlands in 2007, 9% was in national parks, World Heritage areas and other conservation reserves, while 5% was native forests in multiple use such as timber production. Queensland plantation forests comprise around 0.4% (225,000 ha.) of the state's total forest cover and supply around 10% of Australia's wood and paper products. The forestry industry is an important part of the state's economy, employing more than 19,000 people with an annual turnover of $A2.7bn.

Fisheries

Estimated total fisheries production in 2005–06 came to 34,417 tonnes with a gross value of $A322.6m. In the same year aquaculture production was an estimated 5,290 tonnes with a gross value of $A66.12m.

INDUSTRY

In the year ended 30 June 2005 manufacturing industry sales and service income was $A59,239m. with a total of 191,400 people employed. The largest manufacturing sector was food, beverages and tobacco (2004–05 sales and service income: $A14,995m.).

Labour

At Nov. 2006 the labour force numbered 2,163,900, of whom 2,082,900 (947,100 females) were employed. In June 2007 unemployment stood at 3.4%, down from 4.5% in June 2006. The average weekly wage in Nov. 2005 was $A959.60 (males $A1,014.00, females $A866.70).

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

In 2009–10 foreign merchandise imports were valued at $A31,046m.; exports at $A43,277m. Major sources of imports for 2009–10 (figures in $A1m.): China, 3,629; Japan, 3,625; USA, 3,356; Papua New Guinea, 2,081; Malaysia, 1,899. Major export destinations (figures in $A1m.): Japan, 9,763; China, 6,922; India, 5,254; South Korea, 4,724; Taiwan, 2,461. Principal commodity imports in 2009–10 were (with values in $A1m.): crude petroleum, 4,247; passenger motor vehicles, 3,204; refined petroleum, 2,425; goods vehicles, 1,757; gold, 1,459. Principal commodity exports (with values in $A1m.): coal, 20,527; beef, 2,492; copper, 1,444; aluminium, 1,001; lead ores and concentrates, 878.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

In 2007 there were an estimated 180,818 km of roads open to the public. The number of registered motor vehicles (excluding tractors and trailers) at 31 March 2006 was 2,897,867, including 2,138,364 passenger vehicles, 520,070 light commercial vehicles, 103,967 trucks, 16,516 buses and 110,501 motorcycles. There were 360 road accident fatalities in 2007.

Rail

In July 2010 Queensland Rail was divided into two separate companies with Queensland Rail as the State government-owned corporation responsible for passenger services and QR National, which was privatized in Nov. 2010, for freight. Total length of line as at 30 June 2009 was 8,038 km. In 2008–09, 66.0m. passengers and 247.7m. tonnes of freight were carried.

Civil Aviation

Queensland is well served with a network of air services, with overseas and interstate connections. Subsidiary companies provide planes for taxi and charter work, and the Flying Doctor Service operates throughout western Queensland. In 2009–10 Brisbane handled 18,897,115 passengers (13,670,871 on domestic airlines); Cairns, 3,549,828 passengers (2,795,344 on domestic airlines). As well as domestic flights, there were direct international services in 2010 from Brisbane to Brunei, Fiji, Hong Kong, India, Indonesia, Japan, Malaysia, Nauru, New Caledonia, New Zealand, Papua New Guinea, Philippines, Samoa, Singapore, Solomon Islands, South Korea, Taiwan, Thailand, UAE, USA and Vanuatu, and from Cairns to Hong Kong, Guam, Japan, New Zealand, Papua New Guinea and Singapore. The number of aircraft registered at 31 Dec. 2005 was 2,715.

Shipping

Queensland has 14 modern trading ports, two community ports and a number of non-trading ports. In 2008–09 general cargo imported through Queensland ports was 5,152,027 mass tonnes and general cargo exported was 5,296,748 mass tonnes. There were 6,553 commercial ship calls during 2008–09.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

Justice is administered by Higher Courts (Supreme and District), Magistrates' Courts and Children's Courts. The Supreme Court comprises the Chief Justice and 21 judges; the District Courts, 34 district court judges. Stipendiary magistrates preside over the Magistrates' and Children's Courts, except in the smaller centres, where justices of the peace officiate. A parole board may recommend prisoners for release.

Total police personnel (sworn and unsworn) at 30 June 2007 was 13,548. As at 30 June 2005 the average daily number of prisoners stood at 5,354.

Education

Education is compulsory between the ages of six and 16 years and is provided free in government schools. From 2008 students aged 15–17 must remain in school or, by arrangement, take part in an approved education and training pathway such as an apprenticeship or traineeship.

Primary and secondary education comprises 12 years of full-time formal schooling, and is provided by both the government and non-government sectors. In Aug. 2008 the State administered 1,250 schools with 308,771 primary students and 171,079 secondary students. In 2008 there were 40,189 teachers in government schools. There were 463 private schools in Aug. 2008 with 123,795 primary students and 102,817 secondary students. Educational programmes at private schools were provided by 17,320 teachers in 2008. In 2010 there were 303,000 subject enrolments in Vocational Education and Training activities. The one private and eight publicly-funded universities had approximately 190,000 full-time students in 2007.

Health

In 2006–07 there were 173 public acute hospitals and four public psychiatric hospitals. There were 51 private free-standing day hospital facilities and 57 private acute and psychiatric hospitals in 2006–07. In 2009 the percentage of Queensland adults considered overweight or obese rose to 55.3% of the State's population.

Welfare

Welfare institutions providing shelter and social care for the aged, the handicapped and children are maintained or assisted by the State. A child health service is provided throughout the State.

Age, invalid, widows', disability and war service pensions, family allowances, and unemployment and sickness benefits are paid by the Federal government. The number of age and disability pensions at 30 June 2007 was: age, 344,648; disability support, 135,863. There were 75,144 newstart allowance, 58,024 youth allowance and 85,710 single parent payments current at 30 June 2007.

South Australia

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

South Australia was surveyed by Tasman in 1644 and charted by Flinders in 1802. It was made into a British province by letters of patent of Feb. 1836, and a partially elective legislative council was established in 1851. From 6 July 1863 the Northern Territory was placed under the jurisdiction of South Australia until the establishment of the Commonwealth of Australia in 1911.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

The total area of South Australia is 983,482 sq. km. The settled part is divided into counties and hundreds. There are 49 counties proclaimed, and 536 hundreds, covering 23m. ha., of which 19m. ha. are occupied. Outside this area there are extensive pastoral districts, covering 76m. ha., 49m. of which are under pastoral leases.

The 2011 census population was 1,596,572. The 2006 census totalled 1,514,337 (25,557 Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islanders).

At the 2006 census the Adelaide Statistical Division had a population of 1,105,839 persons (73.0% of South Australia's total population) in 25 councils and four municipalities and other districts. Urban centres outside this area (with estimated populations at 30 June 2007) are Mount Gambier (24,640), Whyalla (22,612), Port Pirie (17,869), Port Lincoln (14,298) and Port Augusta (14,215).

SOCIAL STATISTICS

Statistics for calendar years:

	Live Births	Deaths	Marriages	Divorces
2004	17,140	11,629	7,883	4,147
2005	17,800	11,984	7,630	3,669
2006	18,260	11,921	7,841	3,913
2007	19,662	12,345	8,095	3,534

The rates per 1,000 population in 2007 were: births, 12.4; deaths, 7.8; marriages, 5.1; divorces, 2.2. The infant mortality rate in 2007 was 4.5 per 1,000 live births. Life expectancy for 2007 was 78.8 years for men and 83.9 years for women.

CLIMATE

Most of the state has an arid or semi-arid climate, with as little as 150 mm of rainfall per annum in desert areas. Oodnadatta, a town north of Adelaide on the outskirts of the Simpson Desert, recorded Australia's highest reliably-measured temperature at 50.7°C (123.3°F) on 2 Jan. 1960.

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

The present Constitution dates from 24 Oct. 1856. It vests the legislative power in an elected Parliament, consisting of a Legislative Council and a House of Assembly. The former is composed of 22 members. Eleven members are elected at alternate elections for a term of at least six years and are elected on the basis of preferential proportional representation with the State as one multi-member electorate. The House of Assembly consists of 47 members elected by a preferential system of voting for the term of a Parliament (four years). Election of members of both Houses takes place by secret ballot. Voting is compulsory for those on the Electoral Roll. The qualifications of an elector are to be an Australian citizen, or a British subject who was, at some time within the period of three months commencing on 26 Oct. 1983, enrolled under the Repealed Act as an Assembly elector or enrolled on an electoral roll maintained under the Commonwealth or a Commonwealth Territory, must be at least 18 years of age and have lived in the subdivision for which the person is enrolled for at least one month. By the Constitution Act Amendment Act, 1894, the franchise was extended to women, who voted for the first time at the general election of 25 April 1896. Certain persons are ineligible for election to either House.

The executive power is vested in a Governor appointed by the Crown and an Executive Council, consisting of the Governor and the Ministers of the Crown. The Governor has the power to dissolve the House of Assembly but not the Legislative Council, unless that Chamber has twice consecutively with an election intervening defeated the same or substantially the same Bill passed in the House of Assembly by an absolute majority.

RECENT ELECTIONS

The House of Assembly, elected on 15 March 2014, consisted of the following members: Australian Labor Party (ALP), 23; Liberal Party (LP), 22; Independent (ind.), 2.

Labour

In Aug. 2007 the labour force stood at 799,700. There were 38,100 unemployed in June 2007, a rate of 4.8%. The average weekly wage in Nov. 2005 was $A950.60 (males $A982.40, females $A891.00).

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

In 2009-10 foreign merchandise imports were valued at $A6,446m.; exports at $A8,135m. Major sources of imports for 2009-10 were (figures in $A1m.): Singapore, 977; China, 964; Japan, 756; Thailand, 512; USA, 504. Major export destinations (figures in $A1m.): China, 1,251; USA, 956; Japan, 680; India, 599; UK, 531. Principal commodity imports in 2009-10 were (with values in $A1m.): refined petroleum, 972; passenger motor vehicles, 609; goods vehicles, 303; vehicle parts and accessories, 228. Principal commodity exports (with values in $A1m.): alcoholic beverages, 1,344; iron ore and concentrates, 624; copper ores and concentrates, 619; copper, 560.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

In 2007 there were an estimated 92,027 km of roads. The number of registered motor vehicles (excluding tractors and trailers) at 31 March 2006 was 1,137,957, including 915,059 passenger vehicles, 145,643 light commercial vehicles, 34,994 trucks, 4,413 buses and 33,772 motorcycles. In 2007 there were 124 road accident fatalities.

Rail

In Aug. 1997 the passenger operations of Australian National Railways were sold to Great Southern Railway and the freight operations to Australian Southern Railroad. In 2012 there were 3,899 route-km of open railway. TransAdelaide operates 120 km of railway in the metropolitan area of Adelaide. In 2009-10, 20m. tonnes of freight were carried.

There is a tramway in Adelaide that runs from the city centre to the coast. A joint South Australia and Northern Territory project, The AustralAsia Rail Project between Alice Springs and Darwin, carried its first passenger train in Feb. 2004.

Civil Aviation

The main airport is Adelaide International Airport, which handled 7,015,509 passengers (5,993,091 on domestic airlines) in 2009–10. In 2010 there were direct international services to China (Hong Kong), Fiji, Indonesia (Bali), Malaysia, New Zealand and Singapore.

Shipping

There are ten state and five private deep-sea ports. In 2008–09, 1,501 commercial vessels arrived in South Australia. General cargo imported in 2008–09 was 1,090,330 mass tonnes and general cargo exported was 2,233,279 mass tonnes.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

There is a Supreme Court, which incorporates admiralty, civil, criminal, land and valuation, and testamentary jurisdiction; district criminal courts, which have jurisdiction in many indictable offences; and magistrates courts, which include the Youth Court. Circuit courts are held at several places. At 30 June 2009 the police force numbered 5,762. The prison population at 30 June 2013 was 2,266.

Education

Education is compulsory for children between the ages of six and 16 years although most children are enrolled at age five or soon after. Since Jan. 2009 it has been compulsory for young people to remain in full-time education or training until they reach the age of 17. Primary and secondary education at government schools is secular and free. In March 2006 there were 805 schools operating, of which 602 were government and 203 non-government schools. In that year there were 107,611 children in government and 49,767 in non-government primary schools, and 63,576 children in government and 35,424 in non-government secondary schools. In 2010 there were 123,900 enrolments in Vocational Education and Training activities. There were 32,266 students enrolled at the University of South Australia in 2005; University of Adelaide, 19,224; and Flinders University of South Australia, 15,110.

Health

In 2006–07 there were 79 public hospitals and 54 private hospitals. Beds available in public and private hospitals totalled 7,188.

Welfare

The number of age and disability pensions at 30 June 2007 was: age, 178,184; disability support, 68,159. There were 37,133 newstart allowance, 28,176 youth allowance and 31,923 single parent payments current at 30 June 2007.

Religious affiliation at the 2006 census: Catholic, 305,205; Anglican, 207,715; Uniting Church, 151,553; Lutheran, 71,251; Orthodox, 44,912; Baptist, 26,146; Presbyterian and Reformed, 21,030; other Christians, 78,252; non-Christians, 59,557; no religion, 367,161; not stated, 181,555.

CULTURE

Tourism

In the year ended 30 June 2007 international visitors totalled 375,500 (around 48% from Europe), an increase of 8.5% on the previous year. At 30 June 2007 there were 253 hotels, motels, guest houses and serviced apartments with 11,547 rooms.

Tasmania

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Abel Janszoon Tasman discovered Van Diemen's Land (Tasmania) on 24 Nov. 1642. The island became a British settlement in 1803 as a dependency of New South Wales. In 1825 its connection with New South Wales was terminated and in 1851 a partially elected Legislative Council was established. In 1856 a fully responsible government was inaugurated. On 1 Jan. 1901 Tasmania was federated with the other Australian states into the Commonwealth of Australia.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Tasmania is a group of islands separated from the mainland by Bass Strait with an area (including islands) of 68,401 sq. km, of which 63,447 sq. km form the area of the main island. The population at the 2011 census was 495,354 (476,481 at 2006 census, including 396,655 born in Australia, 18,918 in England and 4,158 in New Zealand).

The largest cities and towns (with populations at the 2006 census) are: Hobart (200,525), Launceston (103,325), Devonport (23,392) and Burnie (19,701).

SOCIAL STATISTICS

Statistics for calendar years:

	Births	Deaths	Marriages	Divorces
2004	5,809	3,892	2,648	1,404
2005	6,308	3,867	2,644	1,346
2006	6,475	3,934	2,664	1,233
2007	6,662	4,132	2,791	1,127

The annual rates per 1,000 of the mean resident population in 2007 were: births, 13.5; deaths, 8.4; marriages, 5.7; divorces, 2.3. Infant mortality rate, 2007, 4.2 per 1,000 live births. Expectation of life, 2007: males, 77.7 years; females, 82.4 years.

CLIMATE

Mostly a temperate maritime climate. The prevailing westerly airstream leads to a west coast and highlands that are cool, wet and cloudy, and an east coast and lowlands that are milder, drier and sunnier.

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

Parliament consists of the Governor, the Legislative Council and the House of Assembly. The Council has 15 members, elected by adults with six months' residence. Members sit for six years, with either two or three retiring annually. There is no power to dissolve the Council. The House of Assembly has 25 members; the maximum term for the House of Assembly is four years. Women received the right to vote in 1903. Proportional representation was adopted in 1907, the method now being the single transferable vote in five member constituencies.

A Minister must have a seat in one of the two Houses.

RECENT ELECTIONS

At the elections of 15 March 2014 the ruling Liberal Party won 15 seats in the House of Assembly, the Australian Labor Party 7 and the Tasmanian Greens 3.

CURRENT GOVERNMENT

Governor: Kate Warner.

In Feb. 2016 the Liberal government comprised:

Premier, and Minister for Tourism, Hospitality and Events, Sport and Recreation, and Aboriginal Affairs: Will Hodgman (took office on 31 March 2014).

Deputy Premier, and Minister for Education and Training, Primary Industries and Water, and Racing: Jeremy Rockliff.

Minister for Health, and Information Technology and Innovation: Michael Ferguson. Attorney General, and Minister for Justice, Corrections, and the Arts: Vanessa Goodwin. State Growth, Energy, and Environment, Parks and Heritage: Matthew Groom. Treasurer, and Minister for Planning and Local Government: Peter Gutwein. Resources: Paul Harriss. Police and Emergency Management, and Infrastructure: Rene Hidding. Human Services, and Women: Jacquie Petrusma.

Speaker of the House of Assembly: Elise Archer.

As at 30 June 2008 installed capacity was 2,510 MW; total electricity generated in 2007–08 was 8,269 GWh.

Minerals

Output of principal metallic minerals in 2004–05 was (in 1,000 tonnes): iron ore and concentrate, 2,174; zinc, 95; lead, 33; copper, 29; tin, 1.7.

Agriculture

There were 3,877 agricultural establishments at 30 June 2005 occupying a total area of 1.8m. ha. Principal crops in 2004–05 with estimated production in 1,000 tonnes: potatoes, 321; apples, 46; barley, 28; wheat, 30; oats, 9. Gross value of recorded production in 2004–05 was: crops, $A385m.; livestock products, $A259m.; total gross value of agricultural production, $A903m. Livestock, 2005–06: meat cattle, 501,000; sheep and lambs, 2,963,000; pigs, 17,000. Wool produced during 2007–08 was 9,900 tonnes and had a value of $A71.2m.

Forestry

Indigenous forests, which cover a considerable part of the State, support sawmilling and woodchipping industries. Production of sawn timber in 2005–06 was 364,300 cu. metres. Newsprint and paper are produced from native hardwoods.

Fisheries

Estimated total fisheries production in 2005–06 came to 39,298 tonnes with a gross value of $A435.0m. In the same year aquaculture production was an estimated 22,756 tonnes with a gross value of $A247.2m.

INDUSTRY

The most important manufactures for export are refined metals, woodchips, newsprint and other paper manufactures, pigments, woollen goods, fruit pulp, confectionery, butter, cheese, preserved and dried vegetables, sawn timber and processed fish products. The electrolytic-zinc works at Risdon produce zinc, sulphuric acid, superphosphate, sulphate of ammonia, cadmium and other by-products. At George Town, large-scale plants produce refined aluminium and manganese alloys. In the year ending 30 June 2006 employment in manufacturing establishments was 21,400; wages and salaries totalled $A941m.

Labour

In 2006–07 the labour force stood at 238,000. In the same year there were 13,500 unemployed, a rate of 5.7%. The average weekly wage in Nov. 2005 was $A911.40 (males $A955.90, females $A827.60).

Victoria

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

The first permanent settlement was formed at Portland Bay in 1834. A government was established in 1839. Victoria, formerly a portion of New South Wales, was proclaimed a separate colony in 1851 at much the same time as gold was discovered. A new constitution giving responsible government to the colony was proclaimed on 23 Nov. 1855. This event had far-reaching effects, as the population increased from 76,162 in 1850 to 589,160 in 1864. By this time the impetus for the search for gold had waned and new arrivals made a living from pastoral and agricultural holdings and from the development of manufacturing industries. Victoria federated with the other Australian states to form the Commonwealth of Australia in 1901.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

The State has an area of 227,416 sq. km. The 2011 census population was 5,354,042 (4,932,422 at 2006 census). Victoria has the greatest proportion of people from non-English-speaking countries of any State or Territory, with (2006 census) 1.7% from Italy, 1.2% from Vietnam and 1.1% from China.

2006 census population, within 11 'Statistical Divisions': Melbourne, 3,592,590; Barwon, 259,015; Goulburn, 195,239; Loddon, 168,840; Gippsland, 159,485; Central Highlands, 142,210; Western District, 98,854; Ovens-Murray, 92,587; Mallee, 88,598; East Gippsland, 80,114; Wimmera, 48,441.

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

Victoria, formerly a portion of New South Wales, was, in 1851, proclaimed a separate colony, with a partially elective Legislative Council. In 1856 responsible government was conferred, the legislative power being vested in a parliament consisting of a Legislative Council (Upper House) and a Legislative Assembly (Lower House). At present the Council consists of 44 members who are elected for two terms of the Assembly, with half of the seats up for renewal at each election. The Assembly consists of 88 members, elected for four years from the date of its first meeting unless sooner dissolved by the Governor. Members and electors of both Houses must be aged 18 years and Australian citizens or those British subjects previously enrolled as electors, according to the Constitution Act 1975. Single voting (one elector one vote) and compulsory preferential voting apply to Council and Assembly elections. Enrolment for Council and Assembly electors is compulsory. The Council may not initiate or amend money bills, but may suggest amendments in such bills other than amendments which would increase any charge. A bill shall not become law unless passed by both Houses.

In the exercise of the executive power the Governor is advised by a Cabinet of responsible Ministers. Section 50 of the Constitution Act 1975 provides that the number of Ministers shall not at any one time exceed 22, of whom not more than six may sit in the Legislative Council and not more than 17 may sit in the Legislative Assembly.

RECENT ELECTIONS

In elections to the Legislative Assembly on 29 Nov. 2014 the Australian Labor Party (ALP) won 47 seats with 38.1% of votes cast; the Liberal Party (LP) 30 (36.5%); the National Party (NP) 8 (5.5%); the Greens 2 (11.5%); ind. 1 (3.3%). Turnout was approximately 93.0%.

In the simultaneous elections to the Legislative Council the ALP won 14 seats, the LP 14, the Greens 5, the NP 2 and the Shooters and Fishers 2. The Sex Party, the Democratic Labour Party and Vote 1 Local Jobs won a single seat each.

CURRENT GOVERNMENT

Governor: Linda Dessau, AM.

The Labor ministry was as follows in Feb. 2016:

Premier: Daniel Andrews.

Deputy Premier, and Minister for Education: James Merlino.

Attorney-General, and Minister for Racing: Martin Pakula.

ECONOMY

Budget

In 2007–08 general government expenses by the state were estimated to total $A33,315.4m.; revenue and grants received were expected to increase by 2.9% to $A33,701.2m. ($A32,749.1m. in 2006–07).

Performance

In 2012–13 Victoria's gross state product represented 22.2% of Australia's total GDP.

Banking and Finance

The major trading banks in Victoria are the Commonwealth Bank of Australia, the Australia and New Zealand Banking Group, the Westpac Banking Corporation, the National Australia Bank, the St George Bank, the Bank of Queensland, Suncorp-Metway Bank, HSBC Bank Australia, Elders Rural Bank and the Bendigo Bank. According to the Australian Prudential Regulation Authority, as at 30 June 2006 there were 21 authorized banks with 1,282 branches; two building societies with five branches; and 45 credit unions with 139 branches.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Electricity

In 1993 the State government began a major restructure of the government-owned electricity industry along competitive lines. The distribution sector was privatized in 1995, and four generator companies in 1997.

Total installed capacity in 2009 was 9,577 MW, of which brown coal 6,555 MW (69%), natural gas 1,943 MW (20%) and renewable sources 1,079 MW (11%). Over 90% of electricity generated is supplied by brown coal-fired generating stations in the Latrobe Valley.

Oil and Gas

Crude oil in commercially recoverable quantities was first discovered in 1967 in two large fields offshore, in East Gippsland in Bass Strait, between 65 and 80 km from land. These fields, with 20 other fields since discovered, have been assessed as containing initial recoverable oil reserves of 4,063m. bbls. Production of crude oil peaked at 450,000 bbls per day in 1985 but declined to 83,000 bbls per day in the fiscal year 2005–06, representing 19.5% of Australia's total production. Estimated remaining oil reserves as at May 2009 was 400.0m. bbls.

Natural gas was discovered offshore in East Gippsland in 1965. The initial recoverable gas reserves were 272.0m. cu. metres. Estimated remaining gas reserves (30 June 2005), 88.68m. cu. metres. Production of natural gas (2008–09), 9,374m. cu. metres.

Liquefied petroleum gas is produced after extraction of the propane and butane fractions from the untreated oil and gas.

Brown Coal

Major deposits of brown coal are located in the Latrobe Valley in the Central Gippsland region and comprise approximately 89% of the total resources in Victoria. In 2005 the resource was estimated to be 41,500 megatonnes, of which about 37,400 megatonnes were economically recoverable.

The primary use of these reserves is to fuel electricity generating stations. Production of brown coal in 2005–06 was 71.2m. tonnes.

Minerals

Production: limestone (2006–07), 1,565,433 tonnes; kaolin (2007–08), 151,669 tonnes. In 2007–08, 5,632 kg of gold were produced.

Agriculture

In the year ending 30 June 2007 there were 37,410 agricultural establishments (excluding those with an estimated value of agricultural operations less than $A5,000) with a total area of 13.3m. ha. of which around 3.4m. ha. were under crops. Gross value of agricultural production, 2006–07, $A8.7bn. Principal crops in 2006–07 with estimated production in 1,000 tonnes: wheat, 879; barley, 605; oats, 134; canola, 42.

Gross value of livestock production in 2006–07 totalled $A2.6bn., including wool production $A498m.

Grape growing, particularly for winemaking, is an important activity. In 2006–07, 308,501 tonnes of winegrapes were produced from 38,650 ha. of vineyards (including 1,904 ha. not yet bearing).

Forestry

Commercial timber production is an increasingly important source of income. As at Dec. 2006 there were 396,000 ha. of plantation. Of Victoria's 7.9m. ha. of native forest (Dec. 2005), 6.6m. ha. (83.4%) were publicly owned (3.1m. ha. in conservation reserves).

Fisheries

Estimated total fisheries production in 2005–06 came to 18,903 tonnes with a gross value of $A127.2m. In the same year aquaculture production was an estimated 3,034 tonnes with a gross value of $A21.6m.

INDUSTRY

Total sales and service income in manufacturing industry in the year ended 30 June 2005 was $A100,248m. In the same year there were 323,400 persons employed in the manufacturing sector with wages and salaries totalling $A15,359m.

Labour

At Aug. 2007 there were 2,706,600 persons in the labour force of whom 2,583,700 were employed: wholesale and retail trade, 503,600; finance, insurance, property and business services, 431,400; manufacturing, 330,600; health and community services, 264,000; construction, 211,900; education, 193,900; culture, recreation, personal and other services, 180,300; accommodation, cafes and restaurants, 118,100; transport and storage, 105,900; government administration and defence, 82,400; agriculture, forestry and fishing, 78,400; communication services, 50,100; electricity, gas and water supply, 20,400; mining, 12,600. There were 122,900 unemployed persons in Aug. 2007, a rate of 4.5%. The average weekly wage in Nov. 2005 was $A1,010.10 (males $A1,055.70, females $A915.00).

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

In 2009–10 foreign merchandise imports were valued at $A53,121m.; exports at $A18,427m. Major sources of imports for 2009–10 were (figures in $A1m.): China, 10,477; USA, 6,024; Japan, 5,108; Germany, 3,655; Thailand, 2,727. Major export destinations (figures in $A1m.): China, 2,380; New Zealand, 1,989; Japan, 1,561; USA, 1,514; Saudi Arabia, 1,069. Principal commodity imports in 2009–10 were (with values in $A1m.): passenger motor vehicles, 4,582; crude petroleum, 3,291; refined petroleum, 1,916; goods vehicles, 1,502; vehicle parts and accessories, 1,362. Principal commodity exports (with values in $A1m.): passenger motor vehicles, 1,560; aluminium, 1,106; medicaments (including veterinary), 1,072; wool and other animal hair, 884; milk and cream, 876.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

In 2007 there were an estimated 151,000 km of roads open to general traffic. The number of registered motor vehicles (excluding tractors and trailers) at 31 March 2006 was 3,740,726, including 2,997,856 passenger vehicles, 483,097 light commercial vehicles, 119,533 trucks, 16,508 buses and 114,438 motorcycles. There were 333 road accident fatalities in 2006.

Rail

The Victorian rail network is owned by the Victorian RailTrack Corporation (VicTrack), a Victorian Government corporation. Three interlinked rail networks operate in Victoria, comprising: 1,213 km of standard gauge interstate and intrastate non-urban track leased to the Australian Rail Track Corporation; 400 km of urban broad gauge track franchised to Metro Trains Melbourne, the metropolitan network access manager and passenger service operator; and 3,278 km of intrastate, non-urban rail network franchised to V/Line Passenger, the network access provider and regional passenger operator.

The regional intrastate rail network is leased to and managed by V/Line Passenger. Approximately 3m. tonnes of freight is transported on the intrastate rail network annually. There were more than 12m. passenger trips taken on regional train services in 2008–09.

Two new operators commenced operation from 30 Nov. 2009 following a competitive worldwide tender. The new train franchise agreement was awarded to Metro Trains Melbourne (Metro) and the new tram franchise to Keolis Downer EDI (KDR). The contracts operate for eight years with a possible extension of seven years based on good performance.

Melbourne's 249 km tramway and light rail network is operated by KDR (branded as Yarra Trams) across 28 main routes and had approximately 178.1m. passenger boardings in 2008–09. Melbourne's metropolitan passenger rail network, operated by Metro, comprises 15 lines and approximately 2,000 daily metropolitan rail services and had approximately 213.9m. passenger boardings in 2008–09.

Civil Aviation

Melbourne (Tullamarine) Airport, Australia's second busiest airport after Sydney, handled 25,917,963 passengers in 2009–10 (19,828,176 on domestic airlines). Total international freight handled in 2009–10 was 199,033 tonnes (also the second highest total after Sydney). In 2010 there were direct international services to Abu Dhabi, Auckland, Bali, Bangkok, Beijing, Chicago, Christchurch, Doha, Dubai, Guangzhou, Hanoi, Ho Chi Minh City, Hong Kong, Honolulu, Jakarta, Johannesburg, Kuala Lumpur, London, Los Angeles, Macau, Manila, Mauritius, Nadi, Phuket, Queenstown, Seoul, Shanghai, Singapore and Wellington.

Shipping

The four major commercial ports are at Melbourne, Geelong, Portland and Hastings. In 2008–09, 4,189 commercial vessels called at Victorian ports. General cargo imported in 2008–09 was 12,452,210 mass tonnes and general cargo exported was 12,885,409 mass tonnes.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

There is a Supreme Court with a Chief Justice and 21 puisne judges. There are a county court, magistrates' courts, a court of licensing and a bankruptcy court.

In 1996–97 the State's prisons were upgraded with three new facilities developed, owned and operated by the private sector. In 2006–07 approximately 36% of Victoria's prison population was accommodated in the two private prisons still operating (one of the prisons having been returned to public ownership and operation in Nov. 2000). There are 12 public prisons remaining. At 30 June 2007 the number of prisoners held stood at 4,183. Police personnel at 30 June 2007, 14,078.

Education

In Feb. 2006 there were 1,606 government schools with 307,577 pupils in primary schools and 222,827 in secondary schools. In the same year there were 694 non-government schools with 140,683 pupils at primary schools; and 153,039 pupils at secondary schools.

All higher education institutions, excluding continuing education and technical and further education (TAFE), now fall under the Unified National System, and can no longer be split into universities and colleges of advanced education. In addition, a number of institutional amalgamations and name changes occurred in the 12 months prior to the commencement of the 1992 academic year. In 2010 there were 520,000 enrolments in Vocational Education and Training activities.

There are ten publicly funded higher education institutions including eight State universities, Marcus Oldham College and the Australian Catholic University (partly privately funded), and the Melbourne University Private, established in 1998. In 2005 there were 292,761 students in higher education.

Health

In 2006–07 there were 144 public hospitals with 12,434 beds, and 144 private hospitals with 6,675 beds. Total government outlay on health in 2006–07 was $A6,716m.

Welfare

Victoria was the first State of Australia to make a statutory provision for the payment of Age Pensions. The Act came into operation on 18 Jan. 1901, and continued until 1 July 1909, when the Australian Invalid and Old Age Pension Act came into force. The Social Services Consolidation Act, which came into operation on 1 July 1947, repealed the various legislative enactments relating to age and invalid pensions, maternity allowances, child endowment, unemployment and sickness benefits and, while following in general the Acts repealed, considerably liberalized many of their provisions.

The number of age and disability pensions at 30 June 2007 was: age, 493,728; disability support, 169,694. There were 105,264 newstart allowance, 93,007 youth allowance and 90,551 single parent payments current at 30 June 2007.

RELIGION

There is no State Church, and no State assistance has been given to religion since 1875. At the 2006 census the following were the enumerated numbers of the principal religions: Catholic, 1,355,904; Anglican, 671,774; Uniting Church, 274,056; Orthodox, 224,038; Presbyterian and Reformed, 143,146; other Christian, 316,887; Buddhist, 132,633; Muslim, 109,369; Hindu, 42,310; Jewish, 41,108; no religion, 1,007,415; not stated, 550,309.

CULTURE

Tourism

For the year ending June 2007 the number of short-term overseas visitors to Australia who specified Victoria as their main destination was 1.4m. (28.4% of total overseas visitors to Australia), with 1.02m. nominating 'holiday' or 'visiting friends/relatives' as purpose of their trip. The UK represented the major source of international visitors with 16.1%; followed by New Zealand (16.0%), China (9.9%), USA (8.6%), Singapore (4.5%) and Japan (4.2%).

Western Australia

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

In 1791 the British navigator George Vancouver took possession of the country around King George Sound. In 1826 the government of New South Wales sent 20 convicts and a detachment of soldiers to form a settlement then called Frederickstown. The following year, Capt. James Stirling surveyed the coast from King George Sound to the Swan River, and in May 1829 Capt. Charles Fremantle took possession of the territory. In June 1829 Capt. Stirling founded the Swan River Settlement (now the Commonwealth State of Western Australia) and the towns of Perth and Fremantle. He was appointed Lieut.-Governor.

Grants of land were made to the early settlers until, in 1850, with the colony languishing, they petitioned for the colony to be made a penal settlement. Between 1850 and 1868 (in which year transportation ceased), 9,668 convicts were sent out. In 1870 partially representative government was instituted. Western Australia federated with the other Australian states to form the Commonwealth of Australia in 1901.

In the 1914–18 war Western Australia provided more volunteers for overseas military service in proportion to population than any other State. The worldwide depression of 1929 brought unemployment (30% of trade union membership), and in 1933 over two-thirds voted to leave the Federation. While there were modest improvements in the standard of living through the 1930s, it was the 1939–45 war which brought full employment. Japanese aircraft attacked the Western Australia coast in 1942. Talk of a 'Brisbane line', which would abandon the West to invasion, only served to reinforce Western Australia's sense of isolation from the rest of the nation. The post-war years saw increasing demand for wheat and wool but the 1954–55 decline in farm incomes led to diversification. Work began in the early 1950s on steel production and oil processing. Oil was discovered in 1953 but it was not until 1966 that it was commercially exploited. The discovery of deposits of iron ore in the Pilbara, bauxite in the Darling scarp, nickel in Kambalda and ilmenite from sand led to the State becoming a major mineral producer by 1965.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Western Australia has an area of 2,529,875 sq. km and 12,500 km of coastline.

The population at the 2011 census was 2,239,170 (1,959,088 at 2006 census). In 2006, 65.3% of its population were born in Australia. Perth, the capital, had a 2006 census population of 1,445,078.

Principal local government areas outside the metropolitan area, with estimated resident population at 30 June 2007: Mandurah, 60,560; Albany, 33,545; Bunbury, 31,638; Kalgoorlie-Boulder, 30,903; Busselton, 27,500; Geraldton, 20,333; Roebourne, 18,240; Port Hedland, 13,060.

2007	29,164	12,283	12,290	4,932

¹Figures are on state of usual residence basis.

The annual rates per 1,000 of the mean resident population in 2007 were: births, 13.8; deaths, 5.8; marriages, 5.8; divorces, 2.3. Infant mortality rate, 2007, 2.4 per 1,000 live births. Expectation of life, 2007: males, 79.2 years; females, 84.0 years.

CLIMATE

Western Australia is a region of several climate zones, ranging from the tropical north to the semi-arid interior and Mediterranean-style climate of the southwest. Most of the State is a plateau between 300 and 600 metres above sea level. Except in the far southwest coast, maximum temperatures in excess of 40°C have been recorded throughout the State. The normal average number of sunshine hours per day is 8.0.

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

The Legislative Council consists of 36 members elected for a term of four years. There are six electoral regions for Legislative Council elections. Each electoral region returns six members. Each member represents the entire region.

There are 59 members of the Legislative Assembly, each member representing one of the 59 electoral districts of the State. Members are elected for a period of up to four years. A system of proportional representation is used to elect members.

RECENT ELECTIONS

In elections to the Legislative Assembly on 9 March 2013 the Liberal Party (LP) won 31 seats with 47.1% of votes cast; the Labor Party (ALP) won 21 with 33.1%; and the National Party (NP), 7 with 6.1%. Turnout was 89.2%.

CURRENT GOVERNMENT

Governor: Kerry Sanderson, AO.

Lieut.-Governor: Wayne Martin, AC.

In Feb. 2016 the Cabinet comprised:

Premier, and Minister for State Development, and Science: Colin Barnett (Liberal Party).

ECONOMY

Budget

Revenue and expenditure (in $A1m.) in years ending 30 June:

	2005-06	2006-07	2007-08 ¹
Revenue	16,123	16,510	17,593
Expenditure	14,141	15,234	16,141
	¹ Projected.

A general government net operating surplus of $A1,853m. was projected for 2006-07, a decrease of $A812m. on the 2005-06 outcome.

Performance

Western Australia's 2012-13 gross state product represented 16.0% of Australia's total GDP, up from 10.8% in 2002-03 and 9.8% in 1992-93.

Banking and Finance

According to the Australian Prudential Regulation Authority, as at 30 June 2006 there were 15 authorized banks with 519 branches; one building society with 19 branches; and 16 credit unions with 41 branches.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Electricity

In 2008-09 electricity consumption was 31,343 GWh of which 979 GWh (3.1%) was from renewable sources.

Oil and Gas

Petroleum continued to be the State's largest resource sector with sales increasing by 33% to $A22.3bn. in 2008. Owing to low oil prices in 2008-09 the value of crude oil sales decreased by 12% to $A7.7bn.; output was 81.4m. bbls. The State accounts for 66% of Australia's oil and condensate production.

Western Australia has significant natural gas resources and, with a $A2.4bn. expansion of the North West Shelf liquefied natural gas (LNG) project, exports are forecast to rise by around $A1bn. Total natural gas production, 2005-06: 25,887 gigalitres.

Source: Western Australian Department of Mineral and Petroleum Resources.

Minerals

Mining is a significant contributor to the Western Australia economy. The State is the world's third largest producer of iron ore and accounts for almost 88% of Australia's iron ore production.

Principal minerals produced in 2005-06 were: gold, 165 tonnes; iron ore and concentrate, 253.4m. tonnes; diamonds, 25.3m. carats. Most of the State's coal production (an estimated 6.2m. tonnes in 2004-05) is used by Western Power's electricity generation.

Agriculture

In the year ending 30 June 2005 there were 11,745 establishments mainly engaged in agriculture with a total area of 104.6m. ha. of which 8.33m. ha. were under crops. Gross value of agricultural production in 2004-05 totalled $A5.1bn., a reduction of 18% on the previous year.

Principal crops in 2004-05 with estimated production in 1,000 tonnes: wheat, 8,619; barley, 2,489; lupins for grain, 792; oats, 460; canola, 488.

Value of livestock products in 2004-05 totalled $A625m. Total value of wool produced in 2004-05 was $A490m.

Forestry

The area of State forests and timber reserves at 30 June 2010 was 1,427,954 ha. In 2009-10 sawlog production totalled 769,780 cu. metres, of which plantation softwood sawlogs and veneer logs 570,556 cu. metres and Jarrah and Karri hardwoods 183,816 cu. metres.

Fisheries

Estimated total fisheries production in 2007-08 came to 29,301 tonnes with a gross value of $A448.4m., of which $A216.9m. from rock lobster. In the same year aquaculture production was an estimated 1,013 tonnes with a gross value of $A122.8m. Pearling is the most valuable form of aquaculture in the State with the Pearl Oyster Fishery producing an estimated $A113m. worth of pearls from wild captured and hatchery produced oysters in 2007-08.

INDUSTRY

Heavy industry is concentrated in the southwest, and is largely tied to export-orientated mineral processing, especially alumina and nickel.

The following table shows manufacturing industry statistics for the year ended 30 June 2005:

Industry sub-division	Persons employed (in 1,000)	Wages and salaries $A1m.	Sales and service income $A1m.
Food, beverages and tobacco	16.5	631	5,538
Textiles, clothing and leather products	3.8	107	539
Wood and paper products	4.6	170	966
Printing and publishing and recorded media	8.0	347	1,445
Petroleum, coal, chemical products	8.3	464	7,484
Non-metallic mineral products	6.0	276	1,799
Metal products	24.0	1,117	14,503
Machinery and equipment	18.3	749	4,171
Other manufacturing	8.8	225	1,263

Labour

The labour force comprised 1,054,800 employed and 44,500 unemployed persons in 2005 (an unemployment rate of 4.1%). The average weekly wage in Nov. 2005 was $A1,054.80 (males $A1,148.60, females $A863.40).

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

In 2009-10 foreign merchandise imports were valued at $A27,939m.; exports at $A83,357m. Major sources of imports for 2009-10 were (figures in $A1m.): Thailand, 4,528; USA, 2,822; China, 2,820; Singapore, 2,543; Japan, 2,244. Major export destinations (figures in $A1m.): China, 30,801; Japan, 14,245; India, 8,584; South Korea, 6,694; UK, 4,494. Principal commodity imports in 2009-10 were (with values in $A1m.): gold, 6,200; crude petroleum, 3,229; refined petroleum, 1,966; pumps (excluding liquid pumps) and parts, 1,747; passenger motor vehicles, 1,528. Principal commodity exports (with values in $A1m.): iron ore and concentrates, 34,125; gold, 13,659; crude petroleum, 8,810; natural gas, 6,016; wheat, 1,677.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

In 2007 there were an estimated 152,262 km of roads open to general traffic. The number of registered motor vehicles (excluding tractors and trailers) at 31 March 2006 was 1,600,566, including 1,205,266 passenger vehicles, 254,164 light commercial vehicles, 63,316 trucks, 11,051 buses and 59,675 motorcycles. In 2008 there were 209 road accident fatalities.

Rail

Transperth is responsible for metropolitan rail services and Transwa for rail passenger services to regional areas. In 2005–06, 34.1m. passenger journeys were made on urban services. In 2009–10, 442m. tonnes of freight were carried.

Civil Aviation

An extensive system of regular air services operates for passengers, freight and mail. In 2009–10 Perth International Airport handled 9,992,583 passengers (6,606,335 on domestic airlines). In 2010 there were direct international services to Brunei, China (Hong Kong), Indonesia, Japan, Malaysia, Mauritius, New Zealand, Singapore, South Africa, Thailand and the UAE.

Shipping

In 2008–09, 5,869 commercial vessels called at Western Australian ports (1,789 at Dampier and 1,774 at Fremantle). General cargo imported in 2008–09 was 10,334,358 mass tonnes and general cargo exported was 10,968,803 mass tonnes.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

Justice is administered by a Supreme Court, consisting of a Chief Justice, 16 other judges and two masters; a District Court comprising a chief judge and 20 other judges; a Magistrates Court, a Chief Stipendiary Magistrate, 37 Stipendiary Magistrates and Justices of the Peace. All courts exercise both civil and criminal jurisdiction except Justices of the Peace who deal with summary criminal matters only. Juvenile offenders are dealt with by the Children's Court. The Family Court also forms part of the justice system.

At 30 June 2005 there was a daily average of 3,482 prisoners held. At 30 June 2006 police personnel stood at 6,875.

Education

School attendance is compulsory from the age of six until the end of the year in which the child attains 16 years. Since Jan. 2008 young people aged 15–17 have been obliged to remain in school or, by arrangement, take part in an approved education and training pathway such as an apprenticeship or traineeship.

In Aug. 2006 there were 777 government primary and secondary schools (with 16,737 full-time equivalent teaching staff) providing free education to 131,294 primary and 83,064 secondary students; in the same year there were 303 non-government schools for 51,577 primary and 53,828 secondary students.

Higher education is available through four state universities and one private (Notre Dame). In 2010 there were 166,000 enrolments in Vocational Education and Training activities. In 2006 there were approximately 98,745 students in tertiary education at the University of Western Australia, Murdoch University, the University of Notre Dame Australia, Curtin University of Technology and the Edith Cowan University.

Health

In 2006–07 there were 94 acute public hospitals and one public psychiatric hospital; and 23 acute and psychiatric private hospitals and 20 private free-standing day hospitals.

Welfare

The Department for Community Development is responsible for the provision of welfare and community services throughout the State. The number of age and disability pensions at 30 June 2007 was: age, 166,239; disability support, 58,467. There were 27,650 newstart allowance, 26,001 youth allowance and 37,900 single parent payments current at 30 June 2007.

RELIGION

At the census of 2006 the principal denominations were: Catholic, 464,005; Anglican, 400,480; Uniting Church, 74,333; Presbyterian and Reformed, 43,807; Baptist, 32,730; other Christian, 147,171. There were 97,916 persons practising non-Christian religions and 448,435 persons had no religion.

CULTURE

Tourism

In the year ending March 2007 there were 634,000 overseas visitors. Of these, 26.9% were from the UK, 9.1% from Singapore, 7.5% from New Zealand and 7.1% from Japan.

AUSTRALIAN EXTERNAL TERRITORIES

Ashmore and Cartier Islands

By Imperial Order in Council of 23 July 1931, Ashmore Islands (known as Middle, East and West Islands) and Cartier Island, situated in the Indian Ocean, some 320 km off the northwest coast of Australia (area, 5 sq. km), were placed under the authority of the Commonwealth. Under the Ashmore and Cartier Islands Acceptance Act, 1933, the islands were accepted by the Commonwealth as the Territory of Ashmore and Cartier Islands. It was the intention that the Territory should be administered by the State of Western Australia but owing to administrative difficulties the Territory was deemed to form part of the Northern Territory of Australia (by amendment to the Act in 1938). On 16 Aug. 1983 Ashmore Reef was declared a National Nature Reserve.

The islands are uninhabited but Indonesian fishing boats fish within the Territory and land to collect water in accordance with an agreement between the governments of Australia and Indonesia. It is believed that the islands and their waters may house considerable oil reserves.

Australian Antarctic Territory

An Imperial Order in Council of 7 Feb. 1933 placed under Australian authority all the islands and territories other than Adélie Land situated south of 60° S. lat. and lying between 160° E. long. and 45° E. long. The Order came into force with a Proclamation issued by the Governor-General on 24 Aug. 1936 after the passage of the Australian Antarctic Territory Acceptance Act 1933. The boundaries of Adélie Land were definitively fixed by a French Decree of 1 April 1938 as the islands and territories south of 60° S. lat. lying between 136° E. long. and 142° E. long. The Australian Antarctic Territory Act 1954 declared that the laws in force in the Australian Capital Territory are, so far as they are applicable and are not inconsistent with any ordinance made under the Act, in force in the Australian Antarctic Territory.

The area of the territory is estimated at 6,119,818 sq. km (2,362,875 sq. miles).

There is a research station on MacRobertson Land at lat. 67° 37' S. and long. 62° 52' E. (Mawson), one on the coast of Princess Elizabeth Land at lat. 68° 34' S. and long. 77° 58' E. (Davis), and one at lat. 66° 17' S. and long. 110° 32' E. (Casey). The Antarctic Division also operates a station on Macquarie Island.

Christmas Island

GENERAL DETAILS

Christmas Island is an isolated peak in the Indian Ocean, lat. 10° 25' 22" S., long. 105° 39' 59" E. It lies 360 km S. 8° E. of Java Head, and 970 km N. 79° E. from Cocos (Keeling) Islands, 1,310 km from Singapore and 2,650 km from Perth. Area: 136.7 sq. km. The climate is tropical with temperatures varying little over the year at 27°C. The wet season lasts from Nov. to April with an average rainfall of 1,930 mm. The island was formally annexed by the UK on 6 June 1888, placed under the administration of the Governor of the Straits Settlements in 1889, and incorporated with the Settlement of Singapore in 1900. Sovereignty was transferred to the Australian government on 1 Oct. 1958. The population at the 2011 census was 2,072. In 2010 there were also some 2,700 asylum seekers in a centre for boat people.

The legislative, judicial and administrative systems are regulated by the Christmas Island Act, 1958. The first Island Assembly was elected in Sept. 1985, and is now replaced by the elected members of the Shire of Christmas Island. The Territory underwent major changes to its legal system when the Federal Parliament passed the Territories Law Reform Bill of 1992; Commonwealth and State laws applying in the state of Western Australia now apply in the Territory as a result, although some Western Australia laws have been disallowed to take into account the unique status of the Territory.

Extraction and export of rock phosphate dust is the main industry. The government is also encouraging the private sector development of tourism.

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

The Shire of Christmas Island has nine members elected for terms of four years. Every two years half of the positions are elected. The last local government elections were held in Oct. 2015.

CURRENT GOVERNMENT

Administrator: Barry Haase (since 5 Oct. 2014).

ECONOMY

Currency

The Australian dollar is legal tender.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

The Shire of Christmas Island has responsibility for approximately 140 km of roads with the remaining 100 km of haul roads and tracks maintained by Christmas Island Phosphates and Park Australia North. As at Oct. 2006 there were 1,527 registered vehicles on the island.

Civil Aviation

Virgin Australia operates four scheduled flights weekly to and from Perth.

Shipping

There are up to eight phosphate ships a month, approximately 11 general cargo and seven fuel tankers visiting the island per year.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Education

As at Oct. 2006 there were 335 students at the Christmas Island District High School, which caters for education under the Western Australian curriculum from kindergarten through to Year 12.

Health

There is a nine-bed hospital staffed (as at Oct. 2006) by two doctors, one dentist, a director of nursing and 32 other on-island staff. A range of visiting medical specialists provides services to the island.

RELIGION

About 50% of the population are Buddhists or Taoists, 16% Muslims and 30% Christians.

Cocos (Keeling) Islands

GENERAL DETAILS

The Cocos (Keeling) Islands are two separate atolls comprising some 27 small coral islands with a total area of about 14.2 sq. km, and are situated in the Indian Ocean at 12° 05' S. lat. and 96° 53' E. long. They lie 2,950 km northwest of Perth. The islands are low-lying, flat and thickly covered by coconut palms, and surround a lagoon in which ships drawing up to seven metres may be anchored. There is an equable and pleasant climate, affected for much of the year by the southeast trade winds. Temperatures range over the year from 68°F (20°C) to 88°F (31°C) and rainfall averages 80" (2,000 mm) a year. Most of this rain falls between Nov. and May. Feb. and March are usually the wettest months.

The main islands are: West Island (the largest, about 14 km long), home to most of the European community; Home Island, occupied by the Cocos Malay community; Direction, South and Horsburgh Islands, and North Keeling Island, 24 km to the north of the group. The population of the Territory (2011 Census) was 550, distributed between Home Island (75%) and West Island (25%).

The islands were discovered in 1609 by Capt. William Keeling but remained uninhabited until 1826. In 1857 the islands were annexed to the Crown; the governments of Ceylon and Singapore held jurisdiction over the islands at different periods until they were placed under the authority of the Australian government as the Territory of Cocos (Keeling) Islands on 23 Nov. 1955. An Administrator, appointed by the Governor-General, is the government's representative in the Territory and is responsible to the Assistant Minister for Infrastructure and Regional Development.

In 1978 and 1993 the Australian government purchased the various interests of the Clunies-Ross family, who had been granted the land in its entirety by Queen Victoria. A Cocos Malay co-operative was established to engage in local businesses.

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

The Shire of Cocos (Keeling) Islands has seven members elected for terms of four years. Every two years half of the elected members' terms expire. The last local government elections were held in Oct. 2015.

CURRENT GOVERNMENT

Administrator: Barry Haase (since 5 Oct. 2014).

ECONOMY

Currency

The Australian dollar is legal tender.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

The Shire of Cocos (Keeling) Islands has responsibility for approximately 10 km of sealed roads and approximately 12 km of unsealed roads. As at Oct. 2006 there were 170 registered motor vehicles.

Civil Aviation

Virgin Australia operates three scheduled flights weekly to and from Perth via Christmas Island.

Shipping

There is approximately one general cargo ship every month and a tanker twice per year.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Education

As at Oct. 2006 there were two school campuses catering for 128 students. The campus on Home Island caters for students up to secondary level and the campus on West Island for students from kindergarten to Year Ten.

Health

There is a health centre on both West and Home Islands. As at Oct. 2006 there were one doctor, one nurse manager and nine staff across the two locations. The Christmas Island dentist visits the islands at regular intervals and a range of visiting medical specialists provides services to the island.

RELIGION

About 85% of the population are Muslim and 15% Christian.

Coral Sea Islands

The Coral Sea Islands, which became a Territory of the Commonwealth of Australia under the Coral Sea Islands Act 1969, comprises scattered reefs and islands over a sea area of about 1m. sq. km. The Territory is uninhabited apart from a meteorological station on Willis Island.

Heard and McDonald Islands

These islands, about 2,500 miles southwest of Fremantle, were transferred from British to Australian control from 26 Dec. 1947. Heard Island is about 43 km long and 21 km wide; Shag Island is about 8 km north of Heard. The total area is 412 sq. km (159 sq. miles). The McDonald Islands are 42 km to the west of Heard. Heard is an active stratovolcano that has erupted 14 times since 1881, most recently in 2014. A volcano on McDonald Island had been dormant for 75,000 years before it erupted in 1992. The most recent eruption was in 2005. In 1985–88 a major research programme was set up by the Australian National Antarctic Research Expeditions to investigate the wildlife as part of international studies of the Southern Ocean ecosystem. Subsequent expeditions followed from June 1990 through to 1992.

Norfolk Island

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

The island was formerly part of the colony of New South Wales and then of Van Diemen's Land (now known as Tasmania). A penal colony between 1788–1814 and 1825–55, it was separated from the state of Tasmania in 1856 and placed under the jurisdiction of the Australian State of New South Wales. Following the Norfolk Island Act 1913 (Cth), the Island was accepted as an Australian external territory. It had partial self-government from 1979 until legislation in 2015 instituted the transition to an elected Regional Council (from July 2016) and an extension of federal government responsibilities.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Situated 29° 02' S. lat. 167° 57' E. long.; area 3,455 ha.; permanent population (2011 census), 1,795. The capital is Kingston.

Descendants of the Bounty mutineer families constitute the 'original' settlers and are known locally as 'Islanders', while later settlers, mostly from Australia and New Zealand, are identified as 'mainlanders'. According to the Aug. 2011 census, 79% of the Island's permanent population are Australian citizens with 13% being New Zealand citizens. Descendants of the Pitcairn Islanders make up about 45.0% of the permanent resident population. Over the years the Islanders have preserved their own lifestyle and customs, and their language remains a mixture of West Country English, Gaelic and Tahitian.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

Births in 2004–05 totalled 25 and deaths 15.

CLIMATE

Sub-tropical. Summer temperatures (Dec.–March) average about 75°F (25°C), and 65°F (18°C) in winter (June–Sept.). Annual rainfall is approximately 50" (1,200 mm), most of which falls in winter.

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

An Administrator, appointed by the Governor-General and responsible to the Assistant Minister for Infrastructure and Regional Development, is the senior government representative in the Territory.

The Norfolk Island Act 1979 gave Norfolk Island responsible legislative and executive government to enable it to run its own affairs through a Legislative Assembly of nine members and an Executive Council. However, in May 2015 the Australian government voted to abolish both bodies, which ceased to operate on 18 June. On 1 July 2015 the Norfolk Island Advisory Council was established on an interim basis until a new elected representative body, the Norfolk Island Regional Council, is inaugurated (scheduled for July 2016). The Australian government has assumed responsibility for funding and delivering essential services including welfare and health benefits, while Norfolk Islanders will pay Australian taxes from July 2016.

RECENT ELECTIONS

At the last elections, on 13 March 2013, non-partisans won eight out of nine seats and the Norfolk Liberals one.

CURRENT GOVERNMENT

Administrator: Gary Hardgrave (since 1 July 2014).

ECONOMY

The office of the Administrator has traditionally been financed from Commonwealth expenditure which in 2004–05 was $A1,195,000; local revenue for 2004–05 totalled $A24,551,220; expenditure, $A23,553,196. However, since the political reforms of 2015 the federal government has directly funded and administered essential services.

Currency

Australian notes and coins are the legal currency.

Banking and Finance

There are two banks, Westpac and the Commonwealth Bank of Australia.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

There are 100 km of roads (53 km paved), some 2,800 passenger cars and 200 commercial vehicles.

Civil Aviation

In 2010 there were scheduled flights to Brisbane, Melbourne, Newcastle and Sydney (operated by Our Airline), and Auckland (Air New Zealand).

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The Island's Supreme Court sits as required and a Court of Petty Sessions exercises both civil and criminal jurisdiction. Appeals from decisions of the Norfolk Island Supreme Court are heard by the Federal Court of Australia and by the High Court of Australia.

Education

A school is run by the New South Wales Department of Education for children aged 5 to 12. It had 310 pupils in Aug. 2006. The Island also has a pre-school facility.

Health

In 2006 the Norfolk Island Hospital Enterprise had three doctors, one dentist, one physiotherapist, one radiographer, a pharmacist, a medical scientist, a generalist counsellor and registered nursing staff. The hospital had 24 beds. Visiting specialists attend the Island on a regular basis.

RELIGION

40% of the population are Anglicans.

CULTURE

Press

There is one weekly with a circulation of 1,200.

Tourism

In 2011–12, 25,133 tourists visited Norfolk Island.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

The oldest historical site in Austria is at the Gudenus caves in the Kremstal valley, where hunters' stone implements and bones dating from the Paleolithic Age have been found. The Early Iron Age Hallstatt culture prevailed from around 750–400 BC, covering the area north of the Alps, large parts of Slovakia, the north Balkans and Hungary. This area became renowned for its ceramics, ornamental Hallstatt burial grounds and the development of salt mining.

In the fifth century BC Celtic tribes stormed the eastern Alps, their culture named after the site in Switzerland (La-Tène) where tools, weapons and other artefacts were found. La-Tène culture showed Greek and Etruscan influences. Around the middle of the second century BC some of these tribes united to found Noricum, the first recognizable state on Austrian territory. In 113 BC a treaty of friendship was signed between Rome and Noricum. Around 15 BC Noricum was incorporated into the Roman Empire. Present day Austria (with parts of Germany, Switzerland, Slovenia and Hungary) was eventually divided into the three Roman provinces of Raetia, Noricum and Pannonia.

Germanic tribes, in particular the Marcomanni and Quadi, later known as Bavarians, invaded in AD 166–80. Emperor Marcus Aurelius campaigned against them from Vindobona (Vienna), where he died in battle in AD 180. His successors fought unsuccessfully against the Alemanni and other invading tribes. Brigantium (Bregenz) became a border town of the Roman Empire after a peace agreement was signed with the Alemanni.

Charlemagne conquered the Bavarian duke Tassilo III and the Avars at the end of the 8th century and established a territory in the Danube Valley known as the Ostmark in 803. The church of Salzburg (Roman Juvavum) was founded at the end of the 8th century and consequently became the Bavarian-Frankish spiritual centre and archbishopric. Christianity spread throughout the region, led by the Slav apostles Cyril and Methodius.

The Magyar invasions culminated in the battle for Vienna in 881 and the loss of Lower Austrian territories. The Babenbergs took over the margravate of Bavaria in 976 under Leopold I. The name 'Ostarichi', originating from Old High German, first appeared in a document of Emperor Otto III in 996. In 1156 the margravate of Austria became a separate duchy.

From 1160–1200 Vienna, the most important trading town on the Danube, became the residence of the art-loving Babenberger dukes, receiving its town charter in 1198. In 1246 the last Babenberger, Friedrich II, fell in the battle of Leitha against King Bela IV of Hungary. Count Rudolf IV of Habsburg was elected German King Rudolf I in 1273 and set about conquering the former Babenberger lands, naming his son Duke Albert I the sole ruler in 1283. From the rule of Albert's son and successor Frederick I onwards, the territory of the Habsburgs was known as the dominium Austriae.

Holy Roman Empire

In 1452 Frederick III became Holy Roman Emperor. In one of the first of a series of dynastic marriages to expand the Habsburg realm, his son Maximilian I was married to Mary, the heiress of Burgundy. The marriage of their son, Philip the Handsome, to Juana, the heiress of the Spanish crowns, forged a massive and disparate Habsburg inheritance, encompassing Spain and its empire, Hungary, Bohemia, the Burgundian Netherlands and territory in Italy. Austria was harried by the Ottoman Turks, whose armies had advanced across southeast Europe as far as Hungary under Sultan Süleyman the Magnificent. A truce was agreed after the Ottoman defeat at Vienna in 1529.

The Reformation brought Protestantism to Austria but was resisted by Rudolf II. Brought up a strict Catholic, he embraced the Counter-Reformation in 1576. Tensions between Protestants and Catholics came to a head with the Defenestration of Prague in 1618, which led to the Thirty Years War. Peace was restored by the Treaty of Westphalia in 1648.

Philip, a grandson of Louis XIV of France, was designated heir to the last of the Spanish Habsburgs, Charles II. During the subsequent War of the Spanish Succession, Holland and England joined the coalition forces. Peace negotiations at Rastatt awarded Austria Spanish territory in Italy and the Netherlands. Austrian boundaries reached their furthest limit in 1720.

In 1740 Emperor Charles VI died without a male heir. By pragmatic sanction, his daughter Maria Theresa was allowed to succeed him as the first female Habsburg ruler, though she was denied the Imperial crown. Challenged by Prussia, the War of the Austrian Succession divided the two alliances of Bavaria, France, Spain and Prussia against Austria, Holland and Great Britain. Maria Theresa introduced a number of reforms aimed at strengthening the Habsburg monarchy. The army was doubled in size, a public education system was introduced and administrative and financial structures were overhauled, centralizing government and laying the foundations of a modern state. During the Seven Years' War (1756–63) Maria Theresa aimed to reconquer Silesia, lost in the War of the Austrian Succession. However, the Austrians, bereft of allies, were defeated at Burkensdorf in July 1762. Silesia was settled on Prussia by the Peace of Hubertusburg.

Enlightened Despotism

In 1772 Austria, Prussia and Russia carried out the first partition of Poland, with Austria gaining Galicia. Maria Theresa's youngest daughter of 16 children, Marie-Antoinette, married Louis XVI, thus achieving a closer political alliance with France. Maria Theresa was succeeded by Joseph, her eldest son. Also a reformist, and heavily influenced by the Enlightenment, Joseph II proclaimed the Edict of Toleration in 1781, giving more rights to faiths other than Catholicism. He also abolished serfdom and homogenized land tax laws. Not all of these changes were popular, such as the introduction of German as the official language in the Hungarian government. His heavy-handed reforms provoked resistance, leading to a revolt in the Austrian Netherlands opposing absolutist rule. In the face of widespread opposition to his reforms, Joseph revoked a number of them in 1790.

From 1792–1815 the Habsburgs were involved in almost continuous warfare. Austria and Prussia voiced their disapproval of the ideals of the French Revolution in the Declaration of Pillnitz. Ill-received by the French government, this led to a declaration of war followed by 23 years of hostilities and five separate wars. During the first, second and third coalition wars Vienna was occupied twice by French troops. Napoleon defeated Austria in the Battle of Austerlitz in 1805, forcing Francis to surrender his title of Holy Roman Emperor and to hand over one of his daughters, Archduchess Marie Louise, in marriage. After Napoleon was defeated and exiled to Elba in 1814, the Congress of Vienna met to re-establish Europe's internal borders. Leading Austria's foreign policy, Prince von Metternich created the German confederation of 35 states and four free cities to succeed the Holy Roman Empire.

With the growth of the cities in the first half of the 19th century came an expansion of the markets for agricultural goods. The first Austrian railway, the Kaiser-Ferdinand Nordbahn, was built between Linz and Budweis and steam navigation started on the Danube. An uprising in Vienna in 1848 forced the Habsburgs to flee the city and Metternich to resign. Ferdinand I abdicated in Dec. and was succeeded by his 18-year-old nephew, Francis Joseph I. The pan-European wave of revolution spread to Hungary, where the fight for emancipation was led by Lajos Kossuth. The Habsburgs refused to accept Hungary's independence and enlisted Russian aid to quell the uprising. Italian and Slavic revolts followed. In 1859, during the Austro-Italian war, the Habsburgs were defeated and Italy was unified.

The German unification campaign was headed by Otto von Bismarck, who expanded Prussian influence by isolating Austria from her allies. This led to the Austro-Prussian war of 1866. Austria's defeat at the battle of Königgrätz stripped it of all presiding powers over Germany. The loss of Venetia in 1867 added a further blow to the shrinking Habsburg empire. Forced to compromise with Hungary, Emperor Francis Joseph I negotiated the 'Ausgleich' in 1867, giving Hungary its own constitution and quasi-independent status. Francis Joseph was henceforth recognized as the Apostolic king of Hungary and emperor of Austria within the Austro-Hungarian monarchy, also referred to as the Dual Monarchy. Foreign policy, the army and finances were administered jointly.

German Alliance

In 1879 Austria entered the Dual Alliance with the German Reich and the two states pledged mutual support in the eventuality of Russian aggression. Italy joined in 1882, making a Triple Alliance. Tensions between Austria and Russia heightened over territory in the Balkans, with an uprising in Macedonia in 1903. King Alexander of Serbia was assassinated while the Serbs were fighting for the unification of the Southern Slavs. The Habsburg empire responded with a livestock embargo, known as the Pig War. Austria-Hungary then annexed the two provinces of Bosnia and Herzegovina in 1908, prompting a Serb revolt and protests by the pan-Slav movement. Austria tried to gain control over Serbia during the Balkan wars of 1912–13. In June 1914 the heir to the Habsburg throne, Archduke Franz Ferdinand, and his wife were assassinated in Sarajevo by a Bosnian nationalist. The refusal of Serbia to accept the blame led to an Austrian declaration of war on Serbia in July. German backing for Austria encompassed a settling of its own scores with France and Russia. Austria was obliged to support Germany against France and Russia. Germany declared war on Russia and France in early Aug., beginning the First World War. The Austro-Hungarian army suffered major setbacks and the monarchy began to crumble after Francis Joseph I's death in 1916. His great-nephew, Charles I of Austria, succeeded him, trying but failing to achieve a secret truce with the Allies. A series of strikes, mutiny in the army and navy, and food shortages were among the factors that defeated Austro-Hungarian forces in the spring and summer of 1918. About 1.2m. soldiers from Austria-Hungary died during the war.

Emperor Charles I issued a manifesto on 17 Oct. 1918 guaranteeing the independence of the non-German speaking states. Each province established a national council which then developed into a government. The Poles declared themselves an independent unified state in Warsaw on 7 Oct. 1918; the Czechs founded an independent republic in Prague and the Southern Slavs merged with Serbia. An armistice was agreed on 3 Nov. and the Hungarian government announced its complete separation from Austria. Within days Austria and Hungary declared republics. The Habsburg monarchy was formally dissolved on 11 Nov. with the abdication of Charles I. The Treaty of Saint Germain in 1919 stipulated that the German–Austrian lands were not permitted to unite (Anschluss) with Germany without the consent of the League of Nations. Austria was declared a federal state on 1 Oct. 1920.

Nazism

The economic crises of the 1920s led to the rise of a nationalist movement much influenced by Germany's adoption of National Socialism. When Engelbert Dollfuss of the conservative Christian Socialists became chancellor in 1932 he faced Nazi and Marxist opposition. He dissolved parliament and governed by emergency decree, founding the conservative Fatherland Front in 1933. The anti-Marxist Heimwehr (home defence forces) supported him. When the Social Democrats fought back they were defeated by Dollfuss with the backing of the Heimwehr. All political parties except the Fatherland Front were subsequently banned. On 25 July 1934 a Nazi gang murdered Dollfuss but was forced to surrender and the coup leaders were executed. Dollfuss' successor, Kurt Schuschnigg, signed the Austrian–German agreement whereby Germany recognized Austria's sovereignty in return for Austria calling itself a German state. German Nazis pressurized Schuschnigg to allow them more influence, Hitler demanding that leading Nazis take on top positions in the Austrian cabinet. Schuschnigg planned a plebiscite to decide upon Anschluss but on 12 March 1938 German forces marched into Austria, establishing a Nazi government led by Arthur Seyss-Inquart. Renamed 'Ostmark', Austria was put under the central authority of the German Third Reich. After anti-Nazis were rounded up a plebiscite held on 10 April 1938 showed over 99% support for Hitler.

The Allied Moscow conference of 1943 agreed Austrian independence along the demarcation lines of 1937. The borders were finally set at the Yalta conference of Feb. 1945. On 13 April 1945 Vienna was liberated by Soviet troops. Two weeks later, Dr Karl Renner proclaimed a provisional government and Austria a republic, recognized officially by western powers at the Potsdam conference. The first elections were held in Nov., with former Nazis excluded from voting. Leopold Figl of the Austrian People's Party (Christian Socialists) became the first chancellor of the Second Republic, with Karl Renner as its first president. The Paris treaty of Sept. 1946 granted autonomy for South Tyrol within Italy, the Allies refusing to return it to Austria. Financial support from the United Nations and the Marshall Plan enabled Austria to begin rebuilding its economy.

The Soviet Union, Britain, France and the USA occupied Austria until 1955, when the country reaffirmed its neutrality. Full sovereignty was restored by the State Treaty in Vienna. Anschluss between Austria and Germany or restoration of the Habsburgs were expressly prohibited. The rights of ethnic minorities were guaranteed and former German assets confiscated by the Western allies were returned. The Soviet Union, however, demanded reparations including US$150m. for former German businesses. Austria became a member of the United Nations in 1955 and subsequently joined EFTA in 1959 and the OECD in 1960.

The first all-socialist cabinet was formed in 1970 under Chancellor Bruno Kreisky, who established economic stability and prosperity throughout the 1970s. The late 1970s saw the emergence of the Green party, with the planned construction of a nuclear power station becoming a central political issue. Kreisky's achievements were followed by political scandals which led to his resignation in 1983.

Kurt Waldheim (elected as secretary general of the UN in 1971) became Austrian president in 1986 despite allegations of a Nazi past. Although this was never proved, the affair caused him to be placed on the USA's list of undesirable aliens. In 1995 Austria became a member of the EU. In Jan. 2000 the Freedom Party, headed by the far-right leader Jörg Haider, joined the government. Although Haider, described as a 'dangerous extremist' by EU leaders, did not take a post in the government, he continued to exercise political influence and remained popular with the Austrian electorate. Sanctions against Austria were imposed by the European Union in Feb. 2000 but were lifted in Sept. 2000. In the parliamentary elections of Oct. 2002 the Freedom Party, with a new leader, saw its support fall by half. Nevertheless the Freedom Party was again invited to join a coalition government.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Austria is bounded in the north by Germany and the Czech Republic, east by Slovakia and Hungary, south by Slovenia and Italy, and west by Switzerland and Liechtenstein. It has an area of 83,879 sq. km (32,386 sq. miles), including 1,444 sq. km (558 sq. miles) of inland waters. Population (2011) 8,401,940; density, 101.9 per sq. km. Austria has now adopted a register-based method of calculating the population rather than a traditional census, and had a full register-based census in 2011 for the first time. Previous population censuses: (1923) 6.53m., (1934) 6.76m., (1951) 6.93m., (1971) 7.49m., (1981) 7.56m., (1991) 7.96m., (2001) 8.03m. In 2011, 67.8% of the population lived in urban areas. In Jan. 2015 the population was estimated at 8,584,926.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 8.55m.

In 2011, 88.8% of residents were of Austrian nationality. The countries of origin of the principal minorities in Jan. 2012 were: Germany (153,000); Serbia and Montenegro combined, including Kosovo (136,000); Turkey (114,000); Croatia (57,000); Romania (48,000).

SOCIAL STATISTICS

Statistics, 2014: live births, 81,722 (rate of 9.6 per 1,000 population); deaths, 78,252 (rate of 9.2 per 1,000 population); infant deaths, 249; marriages, 37,458; divorces, 16,647. In 2011 there were 1,286 suicides (rate of 15.3 per 100,000 population), of which 973 males and 313 females. Average annual population growth rate, 2007–11, 0.4%. Life expectancy at birth, 2011, 83.4 years for women and 78.1 years for men. In 2013 the most popular age range for marrying was 30–34 for males and 25–29 for females. Infant mortality, 2010, was four per 1,000 live births; fertility rate, 2013, 1.4 children per woman. In 2011, 130,208 people immigrated into Austria and 94,604 emigrants left Austria. Net immigration in 2011, at 35,604, was the highest since 2005. Asylum applications totalled 17,503 in 2013, up from 12,841 in 2008.

CLIMATE

The climate is temperate and from west to east in transition from marine to more continental. Depending on the elevation, the climate is also predominated by alpine influence. Winters are cold with snowfall. In the eastern parts summers are warm and dry.

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

The constitution of 1 Oct. 1920 was revised in 1929 and restored on 1 May 1945. Austria is a democratic federal republic comprising nine states (Länder), with a federal President (Bundespräsident) directly elected for not more than two successive six-year terms, and a bicameral National Assembly which comprises a National Council and a Federal Council.

The National Council (Nationalrat) comprises 183 members directly elected for a five-year term by proportional representation in a three-tier system by which seats are allocated at the level of 43 regional and nine state constituencies, and one federal constituency. Any party gaining 4% of votes cast nationally is represented in the National Council. In 2007 Austria's voting age was reduced to 16—the lowest for national elections in the EU.

The Federal Council (Bundesrat) has 61 members appointed by the nine states for the duration of the individual State Assemblies' terms; the number of deputies for each state is proportional to that state's population. In March 2016 the ÖVP held 22 of the 61 seats, the SPÖ 20, the FPÖ 13, the Greens 4, Team Stronach 1 with one unattached member.

The head of government is a Federal Chancellor, who is appointed by the President (usually the head of the party winning the most seats in National Council elections). The Vice Chancellor, the Federal Ministers and the State Secretaries are appointed by the President at the Chancellor's recommendation.

National Anthem

'Land der Berge, Land am Strome' ('Land of mountains, land on the river'); words by Paula Preradovic; tune attributed to Mozart.

CURRENT LEADERS

Dr Heinz Fischer

Position

President

Introduction

Following his electoral victory on 25 April 2004 at the age of 65, Dr Heinz Fischer took office as Austria's first socialist federal president for 18 years on 8 July 2004. He is committed to maintaining the country's neutral foreign policy and the welfare state. Critics have labelled him a Berufspolitiker ('professional politician') who has tended to avoid controversy and conflict.

Early Life

Heinz Fischer was born into a political family in Graz on 9 Oct. 1938. His father was state secretary in the ministry of trade from 1954–56. Fischer attended the Humanistisches Gymnasium in Vienna and went on to study law and political science at the University of Vienna, attaining a PhD in 1961. He entered politics two years later, becoming secretary to the Social Democratic Party (SPÖ) in the Austrian parliament, a position he held until 1975. Despite being elected as a member of parliament in 1971, Fischer continued his academic career. He was appointed associate professor of political science at the University of Innsbruck in 1978 and was made a full professor in 1994.

Fischer served as federal minister of science and research from 1983–86, under a coalition government headed by Fred Sinowatz of the SPÖ. In 1986 the SPÖ joined the Austrian People's Party (ÖVP) in a 'grand coalition' that retained control of the government through the 1990s. Fischer was elected president of the National Council in Nov. 1990, holding the office for 12 years until Dec. 2002. He also served as a member of the national security council and the foreign affairs council.

He was elected federal president on 25 April 2004 as the SPÖ candidate, polling 52.4% of the vote to defeat Benita Ferrero-Waldner, foreign minister in the ruling ÖVP-led conservative coalition.

Career in Office

On 8 July 2004 Fischer was sworn in for a six-year term. Although a largely ceremonial post, the president is commander-in-chief of the military and has the constitutional power to reject nominations for cabinet ministers and to remove them from office. In his opening address, Fischer recalled how many Austrians had grown up 'sensitive to war and peace' and aware that 'peace and the politics to promote peace... must have a central role in our political efforts'. The consolidation of the basic values of democracy is another of his priorities: '...Consensus is very important to me. But consensus means to build bridges. Bridges between solid shores.'

Following the collapse of the governing coalition in July 2008, early parliamentary elections were held in Sept. Fischer subsequently asked SPÖ leader Werner Faymann, as head of the largest party, to form a new government. Faymann renewed the coalition with the ÖVP, excluding the resurgent far-right parties that had made gains in the elections, and his government took office in Dec. Fischer stressed that a stable and competent administration was in the national interest to deal with serious challenges confronting Austria, including the global financial crisis. In April 2010 Fischer was re-elected for a further six-year presidential term, taking almost 80% of the vote.

He has written numerous books and publications on law and political science. He is also co-editor of the Austrian Zeitschrift für Politikwissenschaft (Journal of Political Science) and Journal für Rechtspolitik (Journal of Law Policy).

Fischer was not eligible to stand for re-election in April 2016 having served two terms. He was set to leave office after 12 years as president on 8 July 2016.

Werner Faymann

Position

Chancellor

Introduction

A career politician, Werner Faymann became leader of the Social Democratic Party (SPÖ) in June 2008. He led the party to narrow victories at the 2008 and 2013 general elections, serving as chancellor at the head of coalition governments on both occasions.

Early Life

Werner Faymann was born on 4 May 1960 in Vienna. He attended a grammar school in Vienna and studied law at the University of Vienna before joining the youth branch of the Vienna SPÖ. There he led campaigns and protests, becoming the group's chairman in 1985. From 1985–88 he also worked as a consultant at the Zentralsparkasse (now Bank of Austria). In 1985 he was elected to the Vienna state parliament and from 1988–94 led the board for tenants' rights. He was appointed councillor for housing and urban development in Vienna in 1995, serving until 2007 when Chancellor Gusenbauer appointed him federal minister for transport, technology and development.

In June 2008, with the 'grand coalition' between the SPÖ and the Austrian People's Party (ÖVP) under strain, the SPÖ separated the role of chancellor from that of party leader. Faymann was chosen to head the party. Faymann and Gusenbauer then published an open letter that reversed earlier SPÖ policy by promising to put all amendments to EU treaties affecting the national interest to a referendum. The ÖVP consequently abandoned the coalition, triggering a general election.

Faymann fought the election on a platform of social investment and populist scepticism about the EU. On 28 Sept. 2008 the SPÖ won the most seats, although with a reduced share of the vote (just under 30%). Refusing to consider a coalition with the right-wing Alliance for the Future of Austria or the anti-immigration Freedom Party, he entered into an agreement in Nov. with the ÖVP under its new leader Josef Pröll. On 2 Dec. 2008 Faymann was sworn in as chancellor.

Career in Office

Faymann initially faced challenges from the global economic crisis and in early 2009 introduced tax cuts to boost the economy. He has advocated EU aid to support struggling European economies, in part to safeguard large loans that Austria has made to Eastern European countries. In June 2013 his government withdrew its military participation in the United Nations monitoring force in the Israeli-occupied Golan Heights. Following the Sept. 2013 parliamentary elections, the SPÖ and ÖVP won sufficient support to form another coalition under Faymann's premiership, but both parties lost ground in the poll to right-wing and eurosceptic parties. In Aug. 2014 Michael Spindelegger resigned as vice chancellor and finance minister, citing disagreements within his ÖVP party over tax reform. He was replaced the following month by Reinhold Mitterlehner as vice chancellor and Hans Jörg Schelling as finance minister.

In June 2014 the government signed a controversial deal with Russia to complete the Austrian section of a gas pipeline for transporting Russian gas to Europe, despite the opposition of some EU member states and the European Commission in the wake of Russian intervention in Ukraine. However, the project was abandoned in Dec. 2014 as the EU imposed economic sanctions against Russia.

In Feb. 2015 the government approved a controversial legislative reform banning foreign funding for mosques and imams, partly aimed at tackling Islamist radicalism. Later in the year Faymann called for a unified response to Europe's deepening migrant crisis, prompted particularly by the civil war in Syria, and for an EU-wide quota to manage the huge flow of refugees and to prevent further transit deaths.

DEFENCE

The Federal President is C.-in-C. of the armed forces. Conscription is for a six-month period, with liability for at least another 30 days' reservist refresher training spread over eight to ten years. Conscientious objectors can instead choose to undertake nine months' civilian service. In Jan. 2013 a referendum was held on whether to continue with conscription; 59.8% of votes cast were in favour of maintaining compulsory military service. Since 2005 the total 'on mobilization strength' of the forces has been reduced from 110,000 to 55,000 troops. In 2010 approximately 1,200 personnel were deployed in peace support operations in places such as Afghanistan, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Cyprus, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, the Golan Heights and Kosovo.

Defence expenditure in 2013 totalled US$3,232m. (US$393 per capita), representing 0.8% of GDP.

Army

The Army is structured in four brigades and nine provincial military commands. Two brigades are mechanized and two are infantry brigades. The mechanized brigades are equipped with Leopard 2/A4 main battle tanks. One of the infantry brigades is earmarked for airborne operations and the other is specialized in mountain operations. M-109 armoured self-propelled guns equip the artillery battalions. In addition to these standing units, some ten infantry battalions under the direction of the provincial military commands are available on mobilization. Active personnel, 2010, 50,000 including 25,000 conscripts. Women started to serve in the armed forces in 1998.

Air Force

The Air Force Command comprises two brigades (one air support and one air defence), approximately 150 aircraft and a number of fixed and mobile radar stations. Some 15 Eurofighter interceptors equip a surveillance wing responsible for the defence of the Austrian air space and a fighter-bomber wing operates SAAB 105s. Helicopters including the S-70 Black Hawk equip six squadrons for transport/support, communication, observation, and search and rescue duties. Fixed-wing aircraft including PC-6s, PC-7s, and C-130 Hercules are operated as trainers and for transport.

ECONOMY

In 2012 agriculture accounted for 2% of GDP, industry 28% and services 70%.

According to the anti-corruption organization Transparency International, Austria ranked equal 16th in the world in a 2015 survey of the countries with the least corruption in business and government. It received 76 out of 100 in the annual index.

Overview

Austria has a well-developed market economy with a skilled labour force. Banking and insurance dominate economic activity, although the industrial sector is also important.

Austria has had one of the strongest productivity growth rates in the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) since the late 1990s, while maintaining an employment rate above the OECD average. The economy has benefited from increasing integration with central and eastern European countries, expanding its market share as foreign direct investment into the region has grown. Economic and monetary union within the European Union has also added momentum and encouraged market liberalization, with many companies coming under foreign (particularly German) ownership. Social partnership in the labour market has ensured wage moderation and low unemployment. Tourism is also important, reflecting Austria's Alpine appeal.

GDP growth averaged 2.8% annually over the four years before the global financial crisis in 2008 led to recession and a 3.6% contraction in 2009. Despite quickly recovering, the economy has nevertheless continued to feel the effects of the regional slowdown, with growth falling to 0.5% in 2014 from 3.0% in 2011, reflecting weak external and domestic demand.

Government debt stood at 84.2% of GDP in 2014, and the IMF expects it to remain above 70% in the medium term. Although Austria's nominal wage and employment rates have fared better than in many European counterparts, the benefits have been offset by resurgent inflation leading to only modest growth in private consumption. Weak expenditure is also related to a sluggish expansion of household disposable income, which grew at an average annual rate of 1% between 2000 and 2014.

Austria's ageing population meanwhile threatens to upset the fiscal sustainability of pension spending. In 2012 the government agreed an austerity package of US$36.6bn. to balance the budget by 2016, while in 2014 the budget deficit stood at 2.7% of GDP—down from a peak of 5.3% in 2009.

Currency

On 1 Jan. 1999 the euro (EUR) became the legal currency in Austria at the irrevocable conversion rate of 13.7603 schillings to one euro. The euro, which consists of 100 cents, has been in circulation since 1 Jan. 2002. On the introduction of the euro there was a 'dual circulation' period before the schilling ceased to be legal tender on 28 Feb. 2002.

Inflation rates (based on OECD statistics):

2005	2006	2007	2008	2009	2010	2011	2012	2013	2014
2.1%	1.7%	2.2%	3.2%	0.4%	1.7%	3.6%	2.6%	2.1%	1.5%

Foreign exchange reserves were US$5,269m. in Sept. 2009 and gold reserves 9.00m. troy oz. Total money supply was €96,422m. in Aug. 2009.

Budget

Central government revenue and expenditure in €1m.:

	2009	2010	2011
Revenue	101,033	104,711	109,137
Expenditure	109,759	114,090	115,914

Austria's budget deficit in 2014 was 2.7% of GDP (2013, 1.3%; 2012, 2.2%). The required target set by the EU is a deficit of no more than 3%.

VAT is 20% (reduced rates, 12% and 10%).

Performance

Real GDP growth rates (based on OECD statistics):

2005	2006	2007	2008	2009	2010	2011	2012	2013	2014
2.4%	3.7%	3.5%	1.2%	-3.6%	1.8%	3.0%	0.7%	0.3%	0.5%

Total GDP was US$436.9bn. in 2014.

Banking and Finance

The Oesterreichische Nationalbank, central bank of Austria, opened on 1 Jan. 1923 but was taken over by the German Reichsbank on 17 March 1938. It was re-established on 3 July 1945. Its Governor is Ewald Nowotny. At 31 Dec. 2011 it had assets of €99,348m.

In 2011 banking and insurance accounted for 4.6% of gross domestic product at current prices. In 2010 an average of 124,789 individuals were engaged in banking and insurance (78,309 in banking and credit institutions, 28,101 in insurance companies and pension funds and 18,379 in other financial and insurance services).

In 2011 there were 824 bank and credit institution head offices and 4,441 branch offices. The leading banks with total assets in Dec. 2010 (in €1m.) were: Erste Group, 205,938; Bank Austria, 193,049; Raiffeisen Zentralbank Österreich, 136,497.

Gross external debt amounted to US$779,544m. in June 2012.

There is a stock exchange in Vienna (VEX). It is one of the oldest in Europe.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

In 2011, 30.9% of energy consumption came from renewables (wind power, solar power, hydro-electric power, tidal power, geothermal energy and biomass), compared to the European Union average of 13.0%. A target of 34% has been set by the EU for 2020.

Environment

Austria's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy were the equivalent of 8.4 tonnes per capita in 2011. An Environmental Performance Index compiled in 2016 ranked Austria 18th of 180 countries, with 86.6%. The index examined various factors in nine areas—agriculture, air quality, biodiversity and habitat, climate and energy, fisheries, forests, health impacts, water and sanitation, and water resources.

Austria is one of the world leaders in recycling. In 2012 an estimated 62% of municipal waste was composted or recycled.

Electricity

The Austrian electricity market was fully liberalized on 1 Oct. 2001. Installed capacity was 22.8m. kW in 2011. Production in 2011 was 65.70bn. kWh. Consumption per capita, 2011: 8,763 kWh. Renewable sources accounted for 68.0% of electricity consumption in 2013—the highest share in the EU.

Oil and Gas

The commercial production of petroleum began in the early 1930s. Production of crude oil, 2009: 6.4m. bbls. Crude oil reserves, 2011, were 50m. bbls.

The Austrian gas market was fully liberalized on 1 Oct. 2002. Production of natural gas, 2009: 1,842m. cu. metres. Natural gas reserves in 2013 amounted to 11bn. cu. metres.

Minerals

The most important minerals are sand and gravel (2011 production, 25,063,350 tonnes), limestone (2011 production, 21,570,972 tonnes), dolomite (2011 production, 3,710,729 tonnes) and granite and granulate (2011 production, 3,034,265 tonnes).

Agriculture

In 2010 the agricultural workforce numbered 413,755 (520,984 in 2005). There were 173,317 farms in 2010. There were 1.38m. ha. of arable land in 2007 and 68,000 ha. of permanent crops. In 2009 Austria set aside 519,000 ha. (18.5% of its agricultural land—the highest percentage in the European Union) for the growth of organic crops. Food and live animals accounted for 4.2% of exports and 5.3% of imports in 2007.

The chief products in 2010 (area in 1,000 ha.; yield in tonnes) were as follows: barley (168.9; 777,961); grain maize (179.8; 1,692,450); potatoes (22.0; 671,722); silo maize (81.2; 3,557,330); sugar beets (44.8; 3,131,666); wheat (302.9; 1,517,805). Other important agricultural products include apples (197,413 tonnes in 2010) and pears (8,185 tonnes in 2010). Wine production in 2007 totalled 2,628,021 hectolitres.

Livestock in 2011: cattle, 1,976,527; pigs, 3,004,907; sheep, 361,183; poultry, 14,644,413.

Forestry

Forested area in 2010, 3.89m. ha. (47% of the land area), around three-quarters of which was coniferous. Felled timber, in 1,000 cu. metres: 2008, 21,795.4; 2009, 16,727.4; 2010, 17,831.0.

Fisheries

Total catch in 2010 came to 375 tonnes, exclusively from inland waters.

INDUSTRY

The leading companies by market capitalization in Austria in March 2015 were: Erste Group, a banking group (US$10.6bn.); OMV Group, an oil and gas company (US$9.0bn.); and Voestalpine, a steel manufacturing group (US$6.3bn.).

Production (in 1,000 tonnes): pig iron (2007), 5,808; paper and paperboard (2007), 5,199; cement (2008), 5,309; distillate fuel oil (2007), 3,461; petrol (2007), 1,702; residual fuel oil (2007), 880; sawnwood (2007), 11.26m. cu. metres; beer (2010), 883.4m. litres.

Labour

Of 3,421,755 employees in 2011 (annual average), 573,571 worked in the manufacturing and production of goods; 529,976 in public administration and defence, and compulsory social security; 518,188 in wholesale and retail trade, and the repair of motor vehicles; 233,994 in human health and social work; 184,548 in accommodation and food service activities. In 2011 there were an average of 73,800 job vacancies.

The unemployment rate in Dec. 2015 was 5.8%.

There were no recorded strikes between 2005 and 2009.

Austria has one of the lowest average retirement ages but reforms passed in 1997 now make it less attractive to retire before 60. Only 15% of men and 6% of women in the 60–65 age range work, although the legal retirement ages are 60 for women and 65 for men.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

In 2011 imports were valued at €131,008m. (€113,652m. in 2010) and exports €121,774m. (€109,373m. in 2010).

Leading import suppliers in 2011 (% of total imports) were: Germany, 38.2%; Italy, 6.5%; Switzerland, 5.4%; China, 4.9%; Czech Republic, 3.7%; USA, 2.9%. Principal export markets in 2011 (% of total exports) were: Germany, 31.2%; Italy, 7.7%; USA, 5.2%; Switzerland, 4.9%; France, 4.1%; Czech Republic 3.9%.

In 2011 chemicals, manufactured goods classified chiefly by material and miscellaneous manufactured articles accounted for 42.5% of Austria's imports and 47.7% of exports; machinery and transport equipment 31.8% of imports and 37.8% of exports; food, live animals, beverages and tobacco 6.3% of imports and 6.7% of exports; mineral fuels, lubricants and related materials 12.0% of imports and 3.4% of exports; inedible crude materials (except fuels), and animal and vegetable oil and fats 5.5% of imports and 3.5% of exports.

Trade Fairs

Vienna ranks as the third most popular convention city in the world (behind Singapore and Brussels) according to the Union des Associations Internationales (UAI), hosting 3.3% of all meetings held in 2012.

In 2007 the road network totalled 107,262 km (Autobahn, 1,677 km; highways, 10,408 km; secondary roads, 23,657 km). In 2007 passenger cars in use numbered 4,245,600, lorries and vans 372,600, buses and coaches 9,300, and motorcycles and mopeds 642,800. There were 691 fatalities in road accidents in 2007.

Rail

The Austrian Federal Railways (ÖBB) has been restructured and was split up into ten new companies, which became operational on 1 Jan. 2005. Length of route in 2011, 5,500 km, of which 3,763 km were electrified. There are also a number of private railways. In 2011, 244.0m. passengers and 107.6m. tonnes of freight were carried by Federal Railways. There is a metro and tramway in Vienna, and tramways in Gmunden, Graz, Innsbruck and Linz.

Civil Aviation

There are international airports at Vienna (Schwechat), Graz, Innsbruck, Klagenfurt, Linz and Salzburg. The national airline is Austrian Airlines, which was privatized after a takeover by Lufthansa in Sept. 2009. In April 2015 Tyrolean Airways merged into Austrian Airlines. In 2010, 65 other airlines had scheduled flights to and from Vienna. In 2011, 312,502 commercial aircraft and 25,704,655 passengers arrived and departed; 227,938 tonnes of freight and 13,551 tonnes of mail were handled. In 2011 Vienna handled 21,069,398 passengers and 218,835 tonnes of freight. Austrian Airlines carried 11,261,000 passengers in 2011. In 2010 there were direct international services to more than 140 destinations from Vienna, 30 from Salzburg, 24 from Graz, 17 from Linz and 16 from Innsbruck.

Shipping

The Danube is an important waterway. Goods traffic (in 1,000 tonnes): 12,084 in 2005; 11,782 in 2006; 12,107 in 2007; 11,209 in 2008 (including the Rhine-Main-Danube Canal). There were four vessels of 300 GT or over registered in Jan. 2009, totalling 14,000 GT.

Telecommunications

Österreichische Industrie Holding AG, the Austrian investment and privatization agency, holds a 28.4% stake in Telekom Austria. In 2014 mobile phone subscribers numbered 12,952,600 (1,519.1 per 1,000 persons). In the same year there were 3,254,700 main (fixed) telephone lines. In 2014, 81.0% of the population were internet users. In March 2012 there were 2.8m. Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The Supreme Court of Justice (Oberster Gerichtshof) in Vienna is the highest court in civil and criminal cases. In addition, in 2012 there were four Courts of Appeal (Oberlandesgerichte), 20 High Courts (Landesgerichte) and 141 District Courts (Bezirksgerichte). There is also a Supreme Constitutional Court (Verfassungsgerichtshof) and a Supreme Administrative Court (Verwaltungsgerichtshof), both seated in Vienna. In 2011 a total of 540,007 criminal offences were reported to the police and 36,461 people were convicted of offences. The population in penal institutions in Jan. 2013 was 8,273 (98 per 100,000 of national population). In 2015 the World Justice Project Rule of Law Index, which provides data on how the rule of law is experienced by the general public across eight categories, ranked Austria fifth of 102 countries for criminal justice and eighth for civil justice.

Education

In 2006–07 there were 5,011 general compulsory schools (including special education) with 71,796 teachers and 639,433 pupils. Secondary schools totalled 1,676 in 2006–07, with 571,651 pupils. Secondary technical and vocational colleges numbered 317 in 2006–07, with 134,609 pupils.

The dominant institutions of higher education are the 16 public universities and six colleges of arts. Student fees were introduced in 2001, but in 2008 the government decided to eliminate fees for Austrian nationals who complete their studies within the minimum time.

In the winter term 2007–08 there were 224,597 students (46,102 foreign) enrolled at the public universities and 9,853 (5,934 foreign) at the colleges of arts. In 1994 Higher Technical Study Centres (Fachhochschul-Studiengänge, FHS) were established, which are private, but government-dependent, institutions. A federal law was passed in 1999 to allow the accreditation of private universities. In 2007 there were 11 accredited private universities.

In 2009 public expenditure on education came to 6.0% of GDP and 11.4% of total government spending. The adult literacy rate is at least 99%.

Health

In 2006 there were 30,068 doctors, 4,467 dentists and 53,782 nurses and midwives. In 2009 there were 267 hospitals and 64,069 hospital beds. In 2008 Austria spent 10.5% of its GDP on health.

Welfare

Maternity/paternity leave is until the child's second birthday. A new parenting allowance was introduced on 1 Jan. 2002, replacing the maternity/paternity allowance. The latest formula is based on family benefit financed from the Family Fund. The basic allowance is €436 per month for a maximum of three years. In June 2003 a reform of the pensions system was approved involving the reduction of pension benefits by 10%, the raising of the retirement age to 65 by increasing the workers' contribution period from 40 to 45 years and the abolition of early retirement by 2017. These reforms provoked Austria's first general strike in over 50 years. There were 2,705,480 pensioners in Dec. 2011.

RELIGION

In 2012 there were 5.36m. Roman Catholics (5.92m. in 2001). There were an estimated 520,000 Muslims in 2009 (350,000 in 2001). Orthodox Christians number around 500,000 and Evangelical Lutherans 300,000. The Roman Catholic Church has two ecclesiastical provinces and seven suffragan dioceses. In Feb. 2016 there was one cardinal.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

There are nine UNESCO sites in Austria. They are: the historic centre of the city of Salzburg (inscribed in 1996); the Palace and gardens of Schönbrunn (1996); Hallstatt-Dachstein Salzkammergut cultural landscape (1997); Semmering Railway (1998); the historic centre of the city of Graz (1999); the Wachau cultural landscape (2000); and the historic centre of the city of Vienna (2001).

Austria shares the Cultural Landscape of Fertő/Neusiedlersee site (2001) with Hungary and the Prehistoric Pile dwellings around the Alps (2011) with France, Germany, Italy, Slovenia and Switzerland.

Press

There were 18 daily newspapers and 273 non-daily newspapers in 2014. The most popular newspaper is the mass-market tabloid Kronen Zeitung, with an average daily circulation of 815,000 in 2014. In the 2011–12 World Press Freedom Index compiled by Reporters Without Borders, Austria ranked fifth out of 179 countries.

Tourism

In 2011, 13,359 hotels and boarding houses had a total of 594,357 beds available; in the same year 23,012,000 non-resident tourists stayed in holiday accommodation and international tourist spending came to €14.3bn. Of 126,002,551 overnight stays in tourist accommodation in 2011, 35,296,997 were by Austrians and 47,389,531 by Germans.

Festivals

The main festivals are the Salzburg Festival, held every July–Aug. (213,592 visitors in 2011), Operafestival St Margarethen, also held in July–Aug. (209,800 visitors in 2010) and the Mörbisch Festival on the Lake (184,779 visitors in 2011), again held in July–Aug. Popular music festivals include Snowbombing music and snow sports festival in Mayrhofen (April), Vienna Jazz Fest (May–July), Donauinselfest in Vienna (June) and Nova Rock Festival at Nickelsdorf (June).

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Rock art at Gobustan, close to Azerbaijan's Caspian Sea coast, dates from 20,000 BC. Part of southern Azerbaijan came under the influence of the Assyrian Empire around 800 BC and was later subsumed into the ancient kingdoms of Manue, Urartu and Medea. During the 6th century BC the Persian Akhemenid dynasty held sway in what was known as Caucasian Albania, fortified by the Zoroastrian religion. Persian influence continued in the form of the Parthian Empire from around 200 BC, followed by periods of Roman rule. The Arshakid dynasty, installed by the Romans to control much of the Caucasus, survived until the Persian Sassanid Empire in the 4th century AD.

Sassanid power reached its zenith under Khosrau II around AD 620, with a sphere of influence stretching from Egypt to the Caucasus, central Asia and northwest India. Arab tribes, newly united around Islam, made incursions into Azerbaijan from the mid-7th century. From 750 the territory came under the rule of Caliph Abu Abbas, whose Abbasid dynasty was centred on Baghdad.

Arab control of Azerbaijan was waning by the late 10th century and the region dissolved into numerous fiefdoms, including Shirvan (centred on Shemakha) and Arran (based at Terter). The 11th century saw an influx of nomadic Oghuz Turks under the Seljuk dynasty from Central Asia. This began a process of Turkification that continued for the next three centuries, punctuated by Mongol incursions including the Golden Horde in 1319 and Timur in 1380.

At the end of the 15th century Azerbaijan became the power base of the Safavid dynasty, centred on Ardabil (now in northern Iran). Shah Ismail I forged a kingdom that controlled all Persia by 1520 and which promoted the Shia branch of Islam as the state religion. There was conflict with Ottoman Turkey, which followed Sunni Muslim traditions, and the Safavids shifted their focus eastwards from Azerbaijan, eventually establishing their capital in Esfahan.

The overthrow of Safavid control in Azerbaijan in 1722 preceded increasing Russian influence in the region, which led to the annexation of Georgia by Tsar Alexander I and the control of the khanates in Azerbaijan. By 1807 Nakhichevan remained the only independent khanate, although Russian forces had to fight off Persian challenges for control. The territory of the present Azerbaijan was acquired by Russia from Persia through the treaties of Gulistan (1813) and Turkmenchai (1828). This period of Russian rule was marked by an influx of Armenians into western Azerbaijan, fleeing persecution from Ottoman Turkey and Persia.

Azerbaijan's oil industry, centred on Baku, began to develop in the 1870s. By the early 20th century half the world's production was supplied from Baku. Tensions between Azeris and Armenians rose against the backdrop of revolutions in Russia (1905–07) and Iran (1906–11), prompting the rise of Azeri nationalism. Following the Bolshevik revolution in 1917, Azerbaijan joined with Armenia and Georgia to form the short-lived Transcaucasian Federation. On 28 May 1918 the Azerbaijani Democratic Republic was declared, with Gandja as its capital. The fledgling nation was soon occupied, first by Ottoman troops and then by British forces until they withdrew in Aug. 1919. After the Red Army achieved victory in Russia's civil war in early 1920, it moved swiftly to secure control of oil-rich Azerbaijan, reaching Baku on 28 April 1920.

In 1922 Azerbaijan joined the Transcaucasian Soviet Federal Socialist Republic, led by Nariman Narimanov. Stalin's administrative reorganization of 1936 made Azerbaijan a separate Soviet Republic, forcing it to break links with other Turkic and Islamic states. Mass killings, deportations and imprisonments followed, reaching their height in the Stalinist purges of 1937. Baku's oilfields were an objective for Nazi forces in the Second World War but their defeat at Stalingrad meant that Azerbaijan remained under Soviet control.

Conflict with Armenia over the enclave of Nagorno-Karabakh escalated in 1988, leading to violent expulsions of Armenians in Azerbaijan and Azeris in Armenia. In 'Black January' 1990 Soviet tanks moved into Baku following rioting and over 100 civilians were killed. War broke out between the two countries in 1992 after the Armenian population of Nagorno-Karabakh declared independence from Azerbaijan. A ceasefire was agreed in 1994 but the dispute over territory remains unsettled, despite the efforts of the Organization for Security and Co-operation in Europe's Minsk Group (co-chaired by France, Russia and the USA) to broker a peace.

On 18 Aug. 1991 the Supreme Soviet of Azerbaijan declared independence from the crumbling Soviet Union. Following an attempted coup in June 1993, Heidar Aliyev was appointed president by the National Assembly and then confirmed in a general election in Oct. Parliament ratified association with the Commonwealth of Independent States on 20 Sept. 1993. A treaty of friendship and co-operation was signed with Russia on 3 July 1997 and Aliyev was re-elected in Oct. 1998, although the administration of the election was criticized by international observers. Following serious illness, Aliyev stood down from the presidency in Oct. 2003. He controversially appointed his son, Ilham, as the party's sole presidential candidate. Ilham Aliyev duly won the presidential election of 15 Oct. 2003 but international observers again criticized the contest as falling below accepted standards. He was re-elected in both 2008 and 2013.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Azerbaijan is bounded in the west by Armenia, in the north by Georgia and the Russian Federation (Dagestan), in the east by the Caspian sea and in the south by Turkey and Iran. Its area is 86,600 sq. km (33,430 sq. miles), and it includes the Nakhichevan Autonomous Republic and the largely Armenian-inhabited Nagorno-Karabakh.

The population at the 2009 census was 8,922,447 (50.5% females); density, 103 per sq. km. In 2011, 52.1% of the population lived in urban areas. The population breaks down into 91.6% Azerbaijanis, 2.0% Lezgis, 1.3% Armenians and 1.3% Russians (2009 census). Population estimate, Jan. 2013: 9,356,500.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 9.75m.

Chief cities (estimates of Jan. 2013): Baku, 1,200,300; Gandija 322,600; Sumgait 290,500. There are 66 districts and 13 cities.

The official language is Azeri. On 1 Aug. 2001 Azerbaijan abolished the use of the Cyrillic alphabet and switched to using Latin script.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

In 2009: births, 152,139; deaths, 52,514; marriages, 78,072; divorces, 7,784. Rates, 2009 (per 1,000 population): births, 17.2; deaths, 5.9; infant mortality (2010, per 1,000 live births), 39. Life expectancy in 2013: 73.9 years for females and 67.6 years for males. Annual population growth rate, 2005–12, 1.3%; fertility rate, 2013, 1.9 children per woman.

CLIMATE

The climate is almost tropical in summer and the winters slightly warmer than in regions north of the Caucasus. Cold spells do occur, however, both on the high mountains and in the enclosed valleys. There are nine climatic zones. Baku, Jan. –6°C, July 25°C. Annual rainfall 318 mm.

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

Parliament is the 125-member Melli-Majlis, with all seats elected from single-member districts. A constitutional referendum and parliamentary elections were held on 12 Nov. 1995. Turnout for the referendum was 86%. The new constitution was approved by 91.9% of votes cast. As a result of a referendum held on 24 Aug. 2002 a number of changes were made to the constitution, including the distribution of the Melli-Majlis seats—previously, 25 seats were distributed proportionally among political parties. The validity of the outcome of the referendum was questioned by international observers. In a referendum on 18 March 2009 a measure to abolish presidential term limits was approved, with 91.8% of votes cast in favour.

CURRENT LEADERS

Ilham Aliyev

Position
President

Introduction

Ilham Aliyev succeeded his father, Heidar Aliyev, as president in Oct. 2003. The Moscow-educated politician has presided over a rapidly-growing economy but also increasing repression of political opposition. He was re-elected president in Oct. 2008 and again in Oct. 2013, although opposition groups dismissed the polls as neither free nor fair.

Early Life

Ilham Heidar oglu Aliyev was born in Baku, capital of the Soviet Socialist Republic of Azerbaijan, on 24 Dec. 1961. His father was Heidar Aliyev, who became deputy prime minister of the Soviet Union under Mikhail Gorbachev and, in Oct. 1993, president of Azerbaijan. Ilham Aliyev graduated in history from the Moscow State Institute for International Relations in 1982. He subsequently gained a PhD in history and began teaching at the Institute. Plans to enter the diplomatic service were curtailed by the collapse of the Soviet Union in 1991 and he established 'business interests' in Moscow and İstanbul. Between 1991 and 1994 his flamboyant lifestyle attracted media attention and he was accused of accumulating large gambling debts.

In May 1994 Ilham Aliyev was appointed vice president of Azerbaijan's state oil company. Four months later President Aliyev signed a 30-year deal valued at more than US$7bn. with eight foreign companies to develop the country's substantial oil reserves. In 1995 Ilham Aliyev was elected to parliament and was subsequently appointed president of the national Olympic committee and head of the Azerbaijan delegation to the Council of Europe. In Dec. 1999 he became a deputy of the ruling New Azerbaijan Party (YAP) and, in 2001, was appointed party vice president.

Following the surprise resignation of Prime Minister Artur Rasizade in Aug. 2003, Heidar Aliyev appointed his son as prime minister. The move was approved by a 101–1 vote in the National Assembly but opposition parties boycotted the election. Critics took the move as proof that the increasingly frail president planned to hand over power to his son (an amendment to the constitution in Aug. 2002 providing for the prime minister to become interim president in the event that the president dies in office or is incapacitated). A few weeks before the presidential elections of Oct. 2003 Heidar Aliyev pulled out of the running, leaving Ilham as the YAP's candidate.

Official results gave Aliyev victory with 76.8% of the vote but opposition parties staged mass protests over alleged intimidation and fraud, charges backed by international observers. Aliyev was sworn in as the president on 31 Oct. 2003. His father died on 12 Dec. 2003.

Career in Office

Aliyev has presided over a rapidly expanding economy, a consequence of the discovery of offshore gas fields, high international oil prices and the completion of pipelines crossing from the Caucasus to Turkey. Unemployment and poverty levels nonetheless remain high, especially in rural areas.

Aliyev released a number of opposition figures from prison in March 2005 following international pressure, particularly from the Council of Europe. However, his administration was criticized for intimidating opposition activists in the run-up to parliamentary elections in Nov. 2005. The YAP, led by Aliyev since March 2005, won 56 of 125 parliamentary seats but the Organization for Security and Co-operation in Europe's international election observer mission reported harassment and vote buying. The opposition Azadlig party refused to accept the election results and organized mass protests in Nov. and Dec. 2005. In Nov. 2006 an independent broadcaster was closed down and a newspaper evicted from offices in Baku. These measures were denounced by the opposition as a clampdown by the regime on freedom of speech. In Oct. 2008 Western observers judged that Aliyev's overwhelming re-election as president was an improvement on the conduct of previous polls but still fell short of fully-democratic standards. A constitutional amendment to abolish presidential term limits was approved in a referendum in March 2009 with nearly 92% of the vote, allowing Aliyev to stand for election a third time. In Nov. 2010 the YAP won a majority of seats in parliamentary elections, although international monitors again cited widespread voting irregularities. There were repeated demonstrations against Aliyev's regime in 2011 but protesters' demands for democratic reforms were rejected and a continuing security crackdown on civil society imposed. Aliyev was nonetheless returned to office again in Oct. 2013 with a landslide victory, while the YAP maintained its dominance in further parliamentary polling in Nov. 2015 that the opposition boycotted and international observers declined to monitor.

In Feb. 2006 Aliyev met Armenia's then president, Robert Kocharian, in Paris, France, but the two failed to agree on a 'declaration of principles' on the disputed territory of Nagorno-Karabakh. Azerbaijan has continued to reject any move towards independence for the Armenian enclave, despite several Russian-brokered meetings between Aliyev and current Armenian president Serzh Sargsyan to find a political settlement over the territory. Sporadic border fighting has meanwhile continued, notably in 2008, 2012, 2014 and most recently April 2016.

Artur Rasizade

Position

Prime Minister

Introduction

Artur Rasizade, an oil engineer-turned-politician, has been prime minister since 1996. He was appointed by President Heidar Aliyev and has served under his son, Ilham Aliyev, since Oct. 2003.

Early Life

Artur Tahir oglu Rasizade was born on 26 Feb. 1935 in Gandja in the Transcaucasian Soviet Federated Socialist Republic. Educated at the Azerbaijan Institute of Industry in Baku, Azerbaijan Soviet Socialist Republic, Rasizade began work as an engineer at the Institute of Oil Machine Construction in 1957. He served as chief engineer at Trust Soyuzneftemash from 1973–77, before taking the post of deputy head of the Azerbaijan state planning committee.

In 1986, after five years as bureau chief of the central committee of the Communist Party of Azerbaijan, Rasizade became first deputy prime minister under Kamran Baghirov, who has been widely blamed for the Republic's economic stagnation and the escalating tension with Armenia over Nagorno-Karabakh.

Following the break-up of the Soviet Union and Azerbaijan's declaration of independence in Aug. 1991, Rasizade became an adviser to the foundation for economic reforms. He served as an assistant to President Heidar Aliyev in early 1996 and was then appointed first deputy prime minister. He was appointed prime minister when Fuad Kuliev resigned following accusations by Aliyev of economic mismanagement. The National Assembly endorsed Rasizade's appointment and he took office on 26 Dec. 1996.

Career in Office

Heidar Aliyev won the presidential election in Oct. 1998 and retained Rasizade (a fellow member of the New Azerbaijan Party) as prime minister until 4 Aug. 2003, when the premier unexpectedly resigned. Rasizade's departure, ostensibly for health reasons, paved the way for Ilham Aliyev to assume office. Ilham Aliyev contested the presidential election of 15 Oct. 2003 and emerged victorious, although the opposition staged mass protests, alleging intimidation and fraud. On 4 Nov. 2003 Rasizade was formally reinstated as prime minister. He was reappointed in Oct. 2008, following Aliyev's first re-election as president, and again in Oct. 2013.

DEFENCE

Conscription is for 18 months, or 12 in the case of university graduates. In 2013 defence spending reached US$3.3bn., up from US$0.4bn. a decade earlier. Defence expenditure in 2013 was equivalent to US$209 per capita and represented 2.6% of GDP.

Army

Personnel, 2011, 56,840. In addition there is a reserve force of 300,000 Azerbaijanis who have received some kind of military service experience within the last 15 years. There is also a paramilitary Ministry of the Interior militia of more than 15,000 and a border guard of approximately 5,000.

Navy

The flotilla is based at Baku on the Caspian Sea. Personnel numbered about 2,200 in 2011. Equipment in 2011 included eight patrol and coastal combatants.

Air Force

How many ex-Soviet aircraft are usable is not known but in 2011 there were 44 combat-capable aircraft and 26 attack helicopters. Personnel, 7,900 in 2011.

INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

There is a dispute with Armenia over the status of the chiefly Armenian-populated Azerbaijani enclave of Nagorno-Karabakh. A ceasefire was negotiated from 1994 with 20% of Azerbaijan's land in Armenian hands and with 1m. Azeri refugees and displaced persons. Nonetheless, sporadic fighting has since continued.

ECONOMY

In 2010 agriculture accounted for 5.8% of GDP, industry 64.7% and services 29.5%.

Overview

After Azerbaijan gained independence in 1991, the economy suffered from corruption, distortion and weak social infrastructure. In 1994 the government signed a production-sharing agreement with a consortium of foreign companies to develop oil deposits in the Caspian Sea and transport oil from Azerbaijan to Turkey via Georgia through the Baku-Tbilisi-Ceyhan and Shah Deniz pipelines. In 1999 the State Oil Fund was created to manage the oil boom. Its assets were valued at US$37.1bn. by the end of 2014. Oil and gas made up 95% of exports and over 40% of GDP in 2014.

After the turn of the century Azerbaijan's economy consistently had among the world's fastest growth rates and was equipped to weather the global financial crisis that hit in 2008. Fiscal stimulus and a stable exchange rate prevented non-oil growth falling below 3%. The central bank provided support to state enterprises, including provision for losses on overseas investments.

Strong oil-based growth has combined with increased wages and well-targeted social programmes to reduce the poverty rate from 50% in 2001 to 5% in 2013, although inequalities in income, health and education have remained high. In the longer term the authorities must seek to reduce dependence on oil and gas revenues. Falling oil prices, declining production and the slow development of non-oil sectors saw a slowdown in growth between 2011 and 2015 to an average of 4.4% per year compared with 16.9% in the previous five-year period. According to the IMF, diversification is dependent on stimulating private sector growth by improving governance and the business environment. While there have been encouraging signs of private sector development since 2013, corruption, limited access to finance and a weak financial sector remain major obstacles.

Currency

The manat (AZM) of 100 gyapiks replaced the rouble in Jan. 1994. It was in turn replaced in Jan. 2006 by the new manat (AZN), also of 100 gyapiks, at 1 new manat = 5,000 manats. In Feb. 2015 it was devalued by 33.5% against the US dollar. Inflation was 20.8% in 2008, but has slowed since then and was 2.4% in 2013 and 1.4% in 2014. Foreign exchange reserves were US$1,028m. in July 2005 and total money supply was 3,846.1bn. manats.

Budget

Budgetary central government revenue in 2011 totalled 15,831.7m. manats and expenditure 7,827.7m. manats.

Principal sources of revenue in 2011 were: grants, 9,006.7m. manats; taxes on goods and services, 2,865.1m. manats; taxes on income, profits and capital gains, 2,861.6m. manats. Main items of expenditure by economic type in 2011: compensation of employees, 1,750.3m. manats; grants, 1,150.7m. manats; use of goods and services, 916.2m. manats.

Performance

Total GDP was US$75.2bn. in 2014. Until 2010 Azerbaijan had one of the fastest-growing economies in the world. Real GDP growth was 26.4% in 2005, 34.5% in 2006 and 25.0% in 2007—the highest rates of any country in each of these years. This was largely thanks to the oil boom. More recently there was growth of 2.2% in 2012, 5.8% in 2013 and 2.8% in 2014.

Banking and Finance

The central bank and bank of issue is the National Bank (Chairman, Dr Elman Rustamov). The largest of the 44 commercial banks in Dec. 2011 was the International Bank of Azerbaijan (the only state-owned bank), with assets of US$6.2bn. The largest private bank is Bank Standard.

In 2010 total external debt was US$6,974m., representing 14.9% of GNI.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Azerbaijan's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy were the equivalent of 3.4 tonnes per capita in 2011.

Electricity

Output was 20.3bn. kWh in 2011; consumption per capita in 2011 was 2,132 kWh. Capacity in 2011 was 6.4m. kW.

Oil and Gas

The most important industry is crude oil extraction. Baku is at the centre of oil exploration in the Caspian. Partnerships with Turkish, western European and US companies have been forged.

In 2013 oil reserves totalled 7.0bn. bbls. A century ago Azerbaijan produced half of the world's oil, but output today is just 1% of the total (although production started to increase in the late 1990s, rising every year between 1997 and 2010). Oil production in 2013 was 43.4m. tonnes. In July 1999 BP Amoco announced a major natural gas discovery in the Shah Deniz offshore field, with reserves of at least 700bn. cu. metres and perhaps as much as 1,000bn. cu. metres. There were proven reserves of 900bn. cu. metres in 2013. Natural gas production in 2013 amounted to 16.2bn. cu. metres—up from just 6.1bn. cu. metres in 2006.

Accords for the construction of an oil pipeline from Baku, the Azerbaijani capital, on the Caspian Sea through Georgia to Ceyhan in southern Turkey (the BTC pipeline) were signed in Nov. 1999. Work on the pipeline began in Sept. 2002 and it was officially opened in May 2005.

A gas pipeline from Baku through Georgia to Erzurum in Turkey (the South Caucasus pipeline) was commissioned in 2006, allowing Azerbaijan to become a net exporter of natural gas.

Minerals

The republic is rich in natural resources: iron, bauxite, manganese, aluminium, copper ores, lead, zinc, precious metals, sulphur pyrites, nepheline syenites, limestone and salt. Cobalt ore reserves have been discovered in Dashkasan, and Azerbaijan has the largest iodine-bromine ore reserves of the former Soviet Union (the Neftchala region has an iodine-bromine mill).

Agriculture

In 2008 the total area devoted to agriculture was 4.8m. ha. In 2007 there were 1.85m. ha. of arable land and 0.22m. ha. of permanent crops. 1.43m. ha. were irrigated in 2007. In 2009, 38% of the economically active population was engaged in agriculture, hunting and forestry. Principal crops include grain, cotton, rice, grapes, citrus fruit, vegetables, tobacco and silk.

Output of main agricultural products (in 1,000 tonnes) in 2008: wheat, 1,646; potatoes, 1,077; barley, 606; tomatoes, 438; watermelons, 408; apples, 205.

Livestock (2009): cattle, 2.28m.; goats, 591,000; sheep, 7.69m.; poultry, 22m. Livestock products (2008, in 1,000 tonnes): beef and veal, 77; poultry, 52; mutton and goat meat, 46; cow's milk, 1,382; eggs, 1.0bn. units.

Forestry

In 2010 forests covered 1.04m. ha., or 12.0% of the total land area. Timber production in 2011 was 7,000 cu. metres.

Fisheries

Total fish catch in 2010 came to 1,081 tonnes, exclusively from inland waters.

INDUSTRY

There are oil extraction and refining, oil-related machinery, iron and steel, aluminium, copper, chemical, cement, building materials, timber, synthetic rubber, salt, textiles, food and fishing industries. Production (2007) in 1,000 tonnes: residual fuel oil, 2,341; distillate fuel oil, 2,109; cement (2009), 1,283; petrol, 1,129; jet fuel, 793; bread and bakery products (2003), 686. Output of other products: footwear (2003), 455,900 pairs.

Labour

In 2009 the economically active workforce numbered 4,331,800. The main areas of activity were: agriculture, hunting and forestry, 1,562,400; wholesale and retail trade/repair of motor vehicles, motorcycles and personal and household goods, 661,500; education, 346,900; public administration and defence/social security, 277,200. The unemployment rate in 2009 was 6-0%. The average monthly salary in 2009 was 298 manats.

Azerbaijan had 33,000 people living in slavery according to the Walk Free Foundation's 2013 Global Slavery Index.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

Goods imports were US$9,178.6m. in 2014 (US$10,763.4m. in 2013) and goods exports US$21,751.7m. (US$23,904.1m. in 2013).

Principal imports in 2014 were machinery and transport equipment (37.7%), manufactured goods, and food, animals and beverages; main exports in 2014 were mineral fuels and lubricants (92.8%), food, animals and beverages, and manufactured goods.

The leading import supplier in 2010 was Russia (17.4%), followed by Turkey and Germany; the leading export destination in 2010 was Italy (33.1%), followed by France and Israel.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

There were 59,141 km of roads (6,928 km highways and main roads) in 2006. Passenger cars in use in 2006 totalled 548,979 (57 per 1,000 inhabitants in 2005). In addition, there were 9,916 lorries and vans, and 27,474 buses and coaches. There were 1,107 fatalities as a result of road accidents in 2007.

Rail

Total length in 2011 was 2,079 km of 1,524 mm gauge (1,244 km electrified). Passenger-km travelled in 2011 came to 1,660m. and freight tonne-km to 7.8bn.

There is a metro and tramway in Baku and a tramway in Sumgait.

Civil Aviation

There is an international airport at Baku. Azerbaijan Airlines, the national airline, had international flights in 2010 to Aktau, Ankara, Astrakhan, Dubai, İstanbul, London, Milan, Moscow, Paris, Rostov, St Petersburg, Tel Aviv and Urumqi. There were direct flights in 2010 with other airlines to Almaty, Ashgabat, Atyrau, Dnepropetrovsk, Donetsk, Dushanbe, Ekaterinburg, Frankfurt, İstanbul, Kabul, Khanty-Mansiysk, Kyiv, London, Mineralnye Vody, Minsk, Moscow, Nizhnevartovsk, Nizhny Novgorod, Novosibirsk, Odesa, Riga, St Petersburg, Samara, Surgut, Tashkent, Tblisi, Tehran, Tyumen, Urumqi and Vienna. In 2005 scheduled airline traffic of Azerbaijan-based carriers flew 14.8m. km, carrying 494,800 passengers.

Shipping

In Jan. 2009 there were 97 ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 458,000 GT. Baku is the main port.

Telecommunications

In 2011 there were 1,684,000 landline telephone subscriptions (180.9 per 1,000 inhabitants) and 10,120,000 mobile phone subscriptions (1,087.5 per 1,000 inhabitants). There were 274.0 internet users per 1,000 inhabitants in 2009. Fixed internet subscriptions totalled 871,000 in 2010 (94.8 per 1,000 inhabitants). In March 2012 there were 782,000 Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The number of recorded crimes in 2009 was 22,830, including 236 murders or attempted murders (604 in 1995); there were 259 crimes per 1,000 inhabitants.

The population in penal institutions in Sept. 2009 was 20,470 (228 per 100,000 of national population).

The death penalty was abolished in 1998.

Education

In 2009–10 there were 7,048 pupils at 368 primary schools, 79,069 pupils at 853 secondary schools and 1,272,361 pupils at 3,299 joint primary and secondary schools. There were a total of 173,299 teachers in primary and secondary schools. 107,954 children were enrolled at pre-school institutions. In 2009–10 there were 117,934 students and 12,813 teaching staff at 37 state higher educational institutions and 21,260 students and 2,120 teaching staff at 16 non-state higher educational institutions. There were 43 institutes of higher education in Baku, with 110,131 students in 2009–10. The Azerbaijan Academy of Sciences, founded in 1945, has 31 research institutes. Adult literacy is 98.8%.

In 2010 public expenditure on education came to 2.8% of GDP and represented 8.8% of total government expenditure.

Health

In 2009 there were 752 state and private hospitals with 67,800 beds. There were 32,503 physicians in 2009 (377 per 100,000 population). In 2006 there were 71,265 nursing and midwifery personnel, 2,431 dentistry personnel and 1,074 pharmaceutical personnel.

Welfare

In Jan. 2004 there were 751,000 age pensioners and 576,000 other pensioners.

RELIGION

Azerbaijan is a secular state. In 2010 Muslims (mostly Shia) accounted for an estimated 97% of the population according to the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life, the balance being mainly Russian Orthodox, Armenian Apostolic and Jewish.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

There are two UNESCO World Heritage sites in Azerbaijan: the Walled City of Baku with the Shirvanshah's Palace and Maiden Tower (2000), which was damaged by an earthquake in 2000, and the Gobustan rock art cultural landscape (2007).

Press

In 2008 Azerbaijan published 32 paid-for daily newspapers with a combined circulation of 120,000. The leading paid-for daily is Yeni Müsavat, with an average daily circulation of 25,000 in 2008.

Tourism

In 2012 there were 2,484,000 non-resident visitors; spending by tourists totalled US$2,634m. in 2012.

Nakhichevan

This territory, on the borders of Turkey and Iran, forms part of Azerbaijan although separated from it by the territory of Armenia. In 1999 its population was 99.1% Azerbaijani. It was annexed by Russia in 1828. In June 1923 it was constituted as an Autonomous Region within Azerbaijan. On 9 Feb. 1924 it was elevated to the status of Autonomous Republic. The 1996 Azerbaijani Constitution defines it as an Autonomous State within Azerbaijan.

Area, 5,500 sq. km (2,120 sq. miles); population (2009 census, provisional), 398,400. Capital, Nakhichevan (2009 provisional census population, 73,900).

Chairman of the Supreme Council: Vasif Talybov.

Prime Minister: Alovzat Bakshshiyev.

Approximately 70% of the economically active population are engaged in agriculture of which the main branches are cotton and tobacco growing. Fruit and grapes are also produced.

In 2009–10 there were 221 primary and secondary schools with 51,846 pupils, and 5,052 students in three higher educational institutions.

Nakhichevan had 43 hospitals and 2,990 hospital beds in 2009; there were 800 physicians and 2,701 paramedic staff.

Nagorno-Karabakh

Established on 7 July 1923 as an Autonomous Region within Azerbaijan, in 1989 the area was placed under a 'special form of administration' subordinate to the USSR government. In Sept. 1991 the regional Soviet and the Shaumyan district Soviet jointly declared a Nagorno-Karabakh republic, which declared itself independent with a 99.9% popular vote (only the Armenian community took part in this vote as the Azeri population had already been expelled from Nagorno-Karabakh) in Dec. 1991. The autonomous status of the region was meanwhile abolished by the Azerbaijan Supreme Soviet in Nov. 1991, and the capital renamed Khankendi. A presidential decree of Jan. 1992 placed the region under direct rule. Azeri-Armenian fighting for possession of the region culminated in its occupation by Armenia in 1993 (and the occupation of seven other Azerbaijani regions outside it), despite attempts at international mediation. Since May 1994 there has been a nominal ceasefire. Negotiations on settlements have been conducted within the OSCE Minsk Group. International pressure on Azerbaijan and Armenia to find a resolution to the conflict increased in 2005, following an OSCE fact-finding mission in the occupied provinces, but bilateral talks held in Aug. of that year proved to be inconclusive. In a referendum held on 10 Dec. 2006, 99% of votes cast were in favour of a constitution declaring a sovereign state with 1% against. Azerbaijan, the USA, the EU and the OSCE all refused to recognize the results. Following renewed violence in the region in March 2008, Armenia and Azerbaijan signed a joint agreement in Nov. that year aimed at reinvigorating efforts to end the dispute. However, talks in Nov. 2009 failed to yield significant progress. Subsequent Russian-brokered contacts between the presidents of the two countries also ended in deadlock, and heightened tensions in 2014 prompted the worst clashes in two decades. Further fighting, resulting in dozens of deaths, erupted in April 2016 before Moscow instigated another ceasefire.

Area, 4,400 sq. km (1,700 sq. miles); population (Dec. 2008 est.), 139,900. Capital, Khankendi (Dec. 2008 est., 51,600). It is mainly populated by Armenians (more than 99% in 2005), with some Russians and others.

In presidential elections held on 19 July 2012 Bako Sahakyan was re-elected with 66.7% of votes cast against 32.5% for Vitaly Balasanyan and 0.8% for Arkady Soghomonyan. With Nagorno-Karabakh being de jure part of Azerbaijan, the election did not receive international support. Legislative elections were held on 23 May 2010. The Free Motherland Party won 14 seats; the Democratic Artsakh Party 7; the Armenian Revolutionary Federation 6; and ind. 6.

President: Bako Sahakyan.

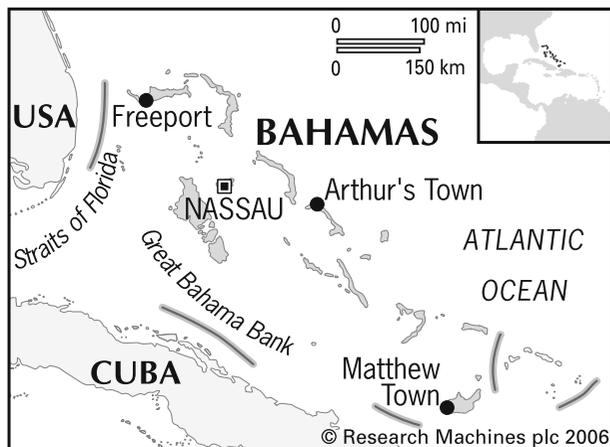

Prime Minister: Araik Arutyunyan.

Main industries are silk, wine, dairy farming and building materials. Cotton, grapes and winter wheat are grown.

In 2008–09, 20,813 pupils were studying in 236 general education schools with 4,525 teachers, 1,365 pupils in four specialized secondary schools and 6,900 students in seven higher educational institutions.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

The islands that make up The Bahamas were first inhabited by Lucayan clans, an Arawak-speaking people who migrated from Cuba from the 7th century and whose ancestors originated in the Amazon Basin. By the 15th century their population may have reached 40,000, with sizeable settlements across several islands. Christopher Columbus made landfall on one of the easterly islands (known to the Lucayans as Guanahani) on 12 Oct. 1492 and named it San Salvador.

Relations between the indigenous population and the Spanish explorers were initially cordial but diseases carried by the Europeans took a heavy toll. Meanwhile, large numbers of Lucayans were transported to Hispaniola and other Spanish colonies across the Caribbean to develop mines and settlements and dive for pearls. By the 1530s The Bahamas were all but uninhabited.

English puritans and freed West African slaves fleeing conflict in Bermuda during the 1640s settled on an island they named Eleuthera. A further wave of settlers from England and Bermuda founded Charles Town on New Providence Island in 1656. It was renamed Nassau in 1695 in honour of King William III of Orange-Nassau, and cotton, tobacco and sugarcane plantations were established. The myriad islands and shoals became notorious as hideouts for hundreds of buccaneers, notably Blackbeard (Edward Teach), who plundered ships plying the increasingly busy route between America, the Caribbean and Europe.

The British Crown took control of The Bahamas in 1717, although Britain and Spain both claimed ownership of the islands until the matter was decided in Britain's favour by the 1793 Peace of Paris. As the first Governor of The Bahamas, Woodes Rogers led a sweeping crackdown on piracy and set up a representative assembly. Following American independence, several thousand Loyalists and their slaves moved out of Florida and Carolina to settle in The Bahamas.

Nassau enjoyed a brief period of prosperity during the American Civil War, becoming a key base for the Confederacy.

Fast steamships evaded the Union's blockade of Southern ports in the early 1860s, trading cotton from Carolina for British military equipment and luxury goods. However, victory for the Union in 1865 precipitated economic decline until fortunes revived in the 1920s and early 1930s when the islands became a hub for rum smuggling to the Prohibition-era USA.

During the Second World War The Bahamas became an important naval base overseen by the Duke of Westminster (formerly King Edward VIII). Installed as Governor in Aug. 1940, he helped quell civil unrest over low wages, but is remembered for describing The Bahamas as a 'third-rate British colony'. Tourism and offshore banking developed in the 1950s, bolstered by a free-trade zone. Internal self-government was granted in 1964, with the first legislative elections held three years later. The centrist Progressive Liberal Party (PLP) emerged victorious and Lynden Pindling became premier.

Pindling led The Bahamas to independence on 10 July 1973 and oversaw a rapid expansion of tourism and financial services. However, his administration was dogged by allegations of corruption and links to Colombian drug-smuggling syndicates. Hubert Ingraham became prime minister in Aug. 1992 after his centre-left Free National Movement (FNM) won an absolute majority in the general election, ending 25 years of rule under Pindling. Ingraham was succeeded in 2002 by Perry Christie but served a second term as prime minister from 2007 until 2012, when the PLP was returned to power.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

The Commonwealth of The Bahamas consists of over 700 islands and inhabited cays off the southeast coast of Florida extending for about 260,000 sq. miles. Only 22 islands are inhabited. Land area, 5,382 sq. miles (13,939 sq. km).

The areas and populations of the 19 divisions used for the most recent census in 2010 were as follows:

	Area (in sq. km)	Population
New Providence	207	246,329
Grand Bahama	1,373	51,368
Abaco	1,681	17,224

Mayaguana	285	277
Rum Cay	78	99
Ragged Island	36	72

Total census population for 2010 was 351,461.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 388,000.

In 2011, 84.3% of the population were urban. The capital is Nassau on New Providence Island (246,329 in 2010). Other large towns are Freeport (on Grand Bahama), West End (also on Grand Bahama) and Coopers Town (on Abaco).

English is the official language. Creole is spoken among Haitian immigrants.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2008 estimated births, 5,600; deaths, 2,000. Rates, 2008 estimates (per 1,000 population): birth, 16.7; death, 6.0; infant mortality (per 1,000 live births), 2010, 14. Expectation of life was 72.1 years for males and 78.2 years for females in 2013. Annual population growth rate, 2005–10, 1.8%; fertility rate, 2008, 2.0 children per woman.

CLIMATE

Winters are mild and summers pleasantly warm. Most rain falls in May, June, Sept. and Oct., and thunderstorms are frequent in summer. Rainfall amounts vary over the islands from 30" (750 mm) to 60" (1,500 mm). Nassau, Jan. 71°F (21.7°C), July 81°F (27.2°C). Annual rainfall 47" (1,179 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

The Commonwealth of The Bahamas is a free and democratic sovereign state. Executive power rests with Her Majesty the Queen, who appoints a Governor-General to represent her, advised by a Cabinet whom he appoints. There is a bicameral legislature. The Senate comprises 16 members all appointed by the Governor-General for five-year terms, nine on the advice of the Prime Minister, four on the advice of the Leader of the Opposition, and three after consultation with both of them. The House of Assembly consists of 38 members elected from single-member constituencies for a maximum term of five years.

CURRENT LEADERS

Perry Christie

Position

Prime Minister

Introduction

Perry Christie was elected prime minister in May 2012. He had previously served as premier from 2002–07.

Early Life

Perry Gladstone Christie was born in Nassau on 21 Aug. 1943. He was schooled in New Providence before moving to the UK, where he graduated from Birmingham University in 1969 and was called to the Bar at London's Inner Temple. He represented The Bahamas in the triple jump at the 1962 Central American and Caribbean Games.

Christie was appointed to the Bahamian Senate in Nov. 1974 by Prime Minister Lynden Pindling. He became head of the national gaming board in Jan. 1977 and in the same year successfully stood in the general election as the Progressive Liberal Party (PLP) candidate for the Centreville constituency. He was subsequently named minister of health and national insurance and after the 1982 election took over the tourism portfolio. However, he left the government two years later amid allegations that several of his party colleagues had taken bribes. Reclaiming his parliamentary seat in 1987 as an independent, he rejoined the PLP in March 1990 and was appointed minister for agriculture, trade and industry.

At the general election of 1992 the PLP lost power for the first time since independence, giving way to the Free National Movement. In Jan. 1993 Christie was elected PLP deputy leader. He succeeded Pindling as leader in April 1997 and led the party to a landslide victory at the polls in May 2002.

In government the PLP was dogged by scandal, including the resignation of the immigration minister, Shane Gibson, over charges that he expedited the residency application of the actress and model Anna Nicole Smith. At parliamentary elections on 4 May 2007 the PLP was defeated by the Free National Movement but Christie remained at the head of the party. As leader of the opposition he proposed a referendum on the inauguration of a national lottery as a means of tackling mounting national debt.

He campaigned for the 2012 election on a platform of lowering the cost of electricity, helping struggling homeowners and championing national health insurance.

Career in Office

Sworn into office on 8 May 2012, Christie pledged to tackle unemployment (which had risen to 15%), address the escalating crime rate, and diversify the economy to reduce its dependency on tourism and the country's status as an offshore financial centre. He also appointed a constitutional commission to advise on possible amendments to the constitution, which has remained unchanged since the country gained independence in 1973.

In Jan. 2013 proposals to legalize gambling outside of casinos and to create a national lottery were rejected in a referendum.

DEFENCE

The Royal Bahamas Defence Force is a primarily maritime force tasked with naval patrols and protection duties in the extensive waters of the archipelago. Personnel in 2011 numbered 860. The base is at Coral Harbour on New Providence Island.

In 2013 defence expenditure totalled US$64m. (US$201 per capita), representing 0.8% of GDP.

Navy

In 2011 the Navy operated 18 patrol craft and three aircraft.

ECONOMY

Services contributed 78.9% to GDP in 2013, with industry accounting for 19.2% and agriculture 1.9%.

Overview

The economy is heavily dependent on tourism and offshore banking. Tourism together with related activities, notably construction, account for approximately 33% of GDP. Financial services, including offshore banking, accounts for 20% of GDP.

Prior to the global financial crisis, growth had been robust (averaging 2.1% between 2000 and 2007) boosted by the construction of new resorts and second homes. However, the crisis saw a collapse in tourism, and in 2009 GDP contracted by 4.2% while unemployment rose. Central government debt reached 47% of GDP in 2012. Output began to rebound in 2010, although short-term growth still remains over-reliant on tourism (especially from the USA, which accounts for 80% of visitors).

Currency

The unit of currency is the Bahamian dollar (BSD) of 100 cents. American currency is generally accepted. Inflation was 0.4% in 2013 and 1.2% in 2014. Foreign exchange reserves were US$731m. in July 2005 and total money supply was B$1,144m.

Budget

The fiscal year is 1 July–30 June.

In 2009–10 revenues were B$1,400.1m. and expenditures B$1,639.3m. Tax revenue accounted for 88.4% of revenues in 2009–10; education accounted for 17.4% of expenditures, health 16.9% and general administration 14.5%.

Performance

The Bahamas experienced a recession during the period 1988–94; this was mainly owing to the recession in the USA leading to a fall in the number of American tourists. The economy has generally been growing since (until the global economic crisis of 2008–09), and there are continuing efforts to diversify. Freeport's tax-free status was extended by 25 years in 1995, and import duties were reduced in the 1996–97 budget.

Real GDP growth was 2.2% in 2012, 0.0% in 2013 and 1.0% in 2014.

Banking and Finance

The Central Bank of The Bahamas was established in 1974. Its Governor is John A. Rolle. The Bahamas is an important centre for offshore banking. Financial business produced 11.3% of GDP in 2004. In 2004, 259 banks and trust companies were licensed, about half being branches of foreign companies. Leading Bahamian-based banks include The Bank of Bahamas Ltd, The Commonwealth Bank Ltd and Private Investment Bank Ltd. There is also a Development Bank.

Gross external debt amounted to US$1,287m. in June 2012.

A stock exchange, the Bahamas International Securities Exchange (BISX) based in Nassau, was inaugurated in May 2000.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy were the equivalent of 11.6 tonnes per capita in 2011.

Electricity

In 2011 installed capacity was 0.6m. kW, all thermal. Output in 2011 was approximately 1.77bn. kWh; consumption per capita in 2011 was 4,821 kWh.

Oil and Gas

The Bahamas does not have reserves of either oil or gas, but oil is refined in The Bahamas. The Bahamas Oil Refining Company (BORCO), in Grand Bahama, operates as a terminal which transships, stores and blends oil.

Minerals

Aragonite is extracted from the seabed.

Agriculture

In 2007 there were some 8,000 ha. of arable land and 4,000 ha. of permanent crops. Production (in 1,000 tonnes), 2003: sugarcane, 56; fruit, 28 (notably grapefruit, lemons and limes); vegetables, 24.

Livestock (2003): cattle, 1,000; sheep, 5,000; goats, 14,000; pigs, 6,000; chickens, 3m.

Forestry

In 2010 forests covered 0.52m. ha. or 51% of the total land area. Timber production in 2011 was 50,000 cu. metres.

Fisheries

Total catch in 2012 amounted to 19,462 tonnes, exclusively from sea fishing.

INDUSTRY

Tourism and offshore banking are the main industries. Two industrial sites, one in New Providence and the other in Grand Bahama, have been developed as part of an industrialization programme. The main products are pharmaceutical chemicals, salt and rum.

Labour

The labour force in 2013 was 220,000 (165,000 in 2003). 80.2% of the population aged 15–64 was economically active in 2013. In the same year 16.2% of the population was unemployed.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

There is a free trade zone on Grand Bahama. Although a member of CARICOM, The Bahamas is not a signatory to its trade protocol.

Imports and Exports

Imports and exports for calendar years in US$1m.:

	2006	2007	2008	2009	2010
Imports c.i.f.	2,984	3,103	3,230	2,699	2,862
Exports f.o.b.	509	670	702	585	620

In 2010 the principal imports were (in US$1m.): mineral fuels, lubricants and related materials, 687; machinery and transport equipment, 494; food and live animals, 427. The principal exports were (in US$1m.): mineral fuels, lubricants and related materials, 160; food and live animals, 75; machinery and transport equipment, 74. In 2010 the USA was the source of 91% of imports; the main export markets were the USA (76%) and the UK (5%).

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

There were about 2,717 km of roads in 2002 (57.4% paved). In 2007 there were around 27,100 vehicles in use.

Civil Aviation

There are international airports at Nassau and Freeport (Grand Bahama Island). The national carrier is the state-owned Bahamasair, which in 2010 flew to Fort Lauderdale, Havana, Miami, Orlando and the Turks and Caicos Islands, as well as providing services between different parts of The Bahamas. There were direct international flights in 2010 with other airlines to Atlanta, Atlantic City, Baltimore, Birmingham (USA), Boston, Buffalo, Calgary, Cayman Islands, Charlotte, Cleveland, Dallas/Fort Worth, Detroit, Fort Lauderdale, Frankfurt, Havana, Holguín, Houston, Kingston, Little Rock, London, Louisville, Miami, Montego Bay, Montreal, Myrtle Beach, New Orleans, New York, Orlando, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Toronto, the Turks and Caicos Islands and Washington, D.C. In 2006 scheduled airline traffic of Bahamas-based carriers flew 8m. km, carrying 1,033,000 passengers (456,000 on international flights).

Shipping

In Jan. 2009 there were 1,240 ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 43.93m. GT (representing 5.6% of the world total and a figure exceeded only by the fleets of Panama and Liberia). Of the 1,240 vessels registered, 439 were general cargo ships, 273 oil tankers, 225 bulk carriers, 146 passenger ships, 78 liquid gas tankers, 62 container ships and 17 chemical tankers.

Telecommunications

There were 129,300 fixed telephone lines in 2010 (377.1 per 1,000 inhabitants) and mobile phone subscribers numbered 428,400. There were 338.8 internet users per 1,000 inhabitants in 2009.

Fixed internet subscriptions totalled 38,600 in 2009 (114.0 per 1,000 inhabitants). In June 2012 there were 164,000 Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

English Common Law is the basis of the Bahamian judicial system, although there is a large volume of Bahamian Statute Law. The highest tribunal in the country is the Court of Appeal. New Providence has 14 Magistrates' Courts, Grand Bahama has three and Abaco one.

The strength of the police force (2004) was 3,352 officers.

There were 44 murders in 2004 (a rate of 14.5 per 100,000 population). The death penalty is in force, the most recent execution being carried out in 2000. The population in penal institutions in Aug. 2012 was 1,600 (444 per 100,000 of national population).

Education

Education is compulsory between five and 16 years of age. In 2004 there were 188 schools (30 independent). In 2004–05 there were 62,110 pupils with 1,365 teachers in primary schools and 26,185 pupils with 1,792 teachers in secondary education. Courses lead to The Bahamas General Certificate of Secondary Education (BGCSE). Independent schools provide education at primary, secondary and high school levels.

The four institutions offering higher education are: the government-sponsored College of The Bahamas, established in 1974; the University of the West Indies (regional), affiliated with The Bahamas since 1960; The Bahamas Hotel Training College, sponsored by the Ministry of Education and the hotel industry; and The Bahamas Technical and Vocational Institute, established to provide basic skills. Several schools of continuing education offer secretarial and academic courses.

Health

In 2003 there was a government general hospital (423 beds) and a psychiatric/geriatric care centre (515 beds) in Nassau, and a hospital in Freeport (88 beds). The Family Islands, comprising 33 health districts, had 21 health centres and 66 main clinics in 2003. There were two private hospitals (495 beds) in New Providence in 2003. In 2004 there were 720 physicians, 76 dentists and 1,323 nurses.

Welfare

Social Services are provided by the Department of Social Services, a government agency which grants assistance to restore, reinforce and enhance the capacity of the individual to perform life tasks, and to provide for the protection of children in The Bahamas.

The Department's divisions include: community support services, child welfare, family services, senior citizens, disability affairs, Family Island and research planning, training and community relations.

RELIGION

In 2010 the population was an estimated 96% Christian (mainly Protestant) according to the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life. Most of the remainder of the population is religiously unaffiliated.

CULTURE

Press

There were four paid-for dailies in 2008.

Tourism

Tourism is the most important industry, accounting for about 60% of GDP. In 2010 there were 1,370,028 overnight tourist arrivals by air and 3,803,122 cruise ship visitors, up from 1,327,007 and 3,255,780 respectively in 2009.

Festivals

Junkanoo is the quintessential Bahamian celebration, a parade or 'rush-out' characterized by colourful costumes, goatskin drums, cowbells, horns and a brass section. It is staged in the early hours of 26 Dec. and the early hours of 1 Jan.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

The natural springs and safe anchorages of the northern reaches of Bahrain island were home to the Dilmun civilization 5,000 years ago, which traded goods such as Omani copper with Mesopotamia and the Indus Valley civilization. From the 6th century BC the archipelago came under the influence of various Persian dynasties—initially the Achaemenids, and then, from the 3rd century BC, the Parthians followed by the Sassanids.

The Christian faith gained some influence during the 4th century, and from around AD 630 Bahrain became one of the first places to embrace Islam. It developed as a centre of Shia Islamic scholarship, benefited from trade with Baghdad (capital of the Abbasid Caliphate from AD 750) and became internationally famed for its pearls. Portuguese forces, which had captured Hormuz in 1505, invaded Bahrain in 1521 and controlled the archipelago for the next 80 years. A succession of Sunni governors from Hormuz proved unpopular with the Shia population, and the Persian army, led by Imam Quli-Khan, ousted the Portuguese in 1602.

In 1783 Bahrain passed into the hands of the Al-Khalifa Sunni dynasty from Qatar, and Manama developed as a cosmopolitan port, linked to British India, Ottoman Basra and Qajar Persia. In the late 18th century Persia and Oman attempted to take control of Bahrain but both were repelled. Wishing to protect British Indian trade against frequent pirate attacks in the Persian Gulf, Britain proposed a peace treaty that was signed by local sheikhs in 1820, including Bahrain's Al-Khalifas. A further maritime truce, established in 1835, was frequently violated, most notably when Bahrain attacked Qatar in 1867. A counter-attack the next year led to over 1,000 deaths, and was followed by the Anglo-Bahraini agreement, by which Bahrain renounced its territorial claims in Qatar. Bahrain was a British protectorate in all but name and by 1880 it had become the region's pre-eminent trading centre.

Bahrain was the site of the first attempts to drill for crude oil in the Gulf, with offshore extraction beginning in the early 1930s (although reserves have proved smaller than elsewhere in the region). Following Britain's ending of its treaty agreements with the Persian Gulf sheikhdoms in 1968, there was an attempt to form a regional union. However, when terms could not be agreed, Bahrain declared its independence, which was granted on 16 Dec. 1971. Sheikh Isa bin Salman Al-Khalifa became the nation's Amir. A constitution ratified in June 1973 provided for a National Assembly of 30 members (popularly elected for a four-year term), plus a 14-member cabinet (appointed by the Amir). However, in 1975 the assembly was dissolved and the Amir began ruling by decree.

In 1986 the opening of the King Fahd Causeway connected Bahrain to the Saudi Arabian mainland. Sheikh Isa died in March 1999 and was replaced as Amir by his son, Sheikh Hamad bin Isa Al-Khalifa. In Feb. 2002 the country became a constitutional monarchy and Sheikh Hamad proclaimed himself king. The first parliamentary elections for almost three decades (and the first to include women voters and candidates) were held in Oct. of the same year. Manama's reputation as a prosperous and stable city suffered in Feb. 2011 when security forces attacked protesters (at times numbering more than 100,000) who were demanding greater political freedom and equality for the majority Shia population.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

The Kingdom of Bahrain forms an archipelago of 36 low-lying islands in the Persian Gulf, between the Qatar peninsula and the mainland of Saudi Arabia. The total area is 720 sq. km.

The island of Bahrain (578 sq. km) is connected by a 2.4 km causeway to the second largest island, Muharraq to the northeast, and by a causeway with the island of Sitra to the east. A causeway links Bahrain with Saudi Arabia. From Sitra, oil pipelines and a causeway carrying a road extend out to sea for 4.8 km to a deep-water anchorage.

In March 2001 the International Court of Justice ruled on a long-standing dispute between Bahrain and Qatar over the boundary between the two countries and ownership of certain islands. Both countries accepted the decision.

Total census population in 2010 was 1,234,571 (males, 768,414; females, 466,157) of which 568,399 were Bahraini and 666,172 non-Bahraini. Among Bahrainis 50.5% of the population in 2010 were males but among non-Bahrainis 72.2% were males. The population density was 1,715 per sq. km in 2010. In 2011, 88.7% of the population were urban.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 1.38m.

There are five governorates: Capital, Central, Muharraq, Northern, Southern. Manama, the capital and commercial centre, had a 2001 census population of 143,035. Other towns (2001 census population) are Muharraq (91,307), Rifa'a (79,550), Hamad Town (52,718), Al-Ali (47,529) and Isa Town (36,833).

Arabic is the official language. English is widely used in business.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

Statistics, 2009: births, 17,841; deaths, 2,387. Rates (per 1,000 population) in 2009: birth, 15.1; death, 2.0. Infant mortality (per 1,000 live births), 9 (2010). Life expectancy at birth, 2007, was 74.2 years for men and 77.4 years for women. Annual population growth rate, 2005–12, 4.7%; fertility rate, 2008, 2.3 children per woman. In 2006 there were 4,714 marriages and 1,130 divorces.

CLIMATE

The climate is pleasantly warm between Dec. and March but from June to Sept. the conditions are very hot and humid. The period June to Nov. is virtually rainless. Bahrain, Jan. 66°F (19°C), July 97°F (36°C). Annual rainfall 5.2" (130 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

The ruling family is the Al-Khalifa who have been in power since 1783.

The constitution changing Bahrain from an Emirate to a Kingdom dates from 14 Feb. 2002. The new constitutional hereditary monarchy has a bicameral legislature, inaugurated on 14 Dec. 2002. National elections for a legislative body took place on 24 and 31 Oct. 2002 (the first since the National Assembly was adjourned 27 years earlier). One chamber (Council of Representatives) is a directly elected assembly while the second (upper) chamber, a Shura consultative council of experts, is appointed by the King. Both chambers have 40 members. All Bahraini citizens over the age of 21—men and women—are able to vote for the elected assembly. In the Oct. 2002 national elections women stood for office for the first time.

CURRENT LEADERS

HH Sheikh Hamad bin Isa Al-Khalifa

Position

King

Introduction

HH Sheikh Hamad bin Isa Al-Khalifa became Amir in March 1999. In Feb. 2001 his national action charter, encompassing a range of reforms, was approved by popular referendum. The state became a kingdom and Sheikh Hamad's title was changed to King. The king is the supreme authority, with members of his ruling Sunni Muslim family holding most senior political and military positions. Bahrain has not been immune to popular disaffection with the political status quo that spread across much of the Arab world from 2011 but Sheikh Hamad has maintained a repressive response to pro-democracy demands, particularly among the Shia majority population.

Early Life

Sheikh Hamad bin Isa Al-Khalifa was born on 28 Jan. 1950 in Ar-Rifa', Bahrain. He was educated in Bahrain and the UK before pursuing a military career. He attended Mons Officer Cadet School in Aldershot, UK, and continued his military training at the US Army Command and Staff College in Fort Leavenworth, Kansas. In 1968 he founded the Bahrain Defence Force (BDF) and served as the minister of defence from 1971–88.

Bahrain has been headed by the Al-Khalifa family since 1783 and Sheikh Hamad was crown prince from 1964 until he succeeded his father as head of state in early 1999. He also became supreme commander of the BDF. His interest in Arabian horses led him to establish the Amiri Stables in 1977.

Career in Office

On becoming Amir, Sheikh Hamad implemented changes to the running of the country. In June 1999 he released all political prisoners and in 2002 reintroduced parliamentary elections, with women granted the right to vote for the first time. He created the supreme judicial council and scrapped old state security laws. These reforms were based on his national action charter, which won 98% approval in a referendum in Feb. 2001.

The parliamentary elections of Oct. 2002 were the first to be held since Sheikh Isa bin Salman Al-Khalifa dissolved the first elected parliament in 1975. Sheikh Isa's subsequent suspension of the constitution and ensuing rule by decree led to widespread civil unrest amongst the Shia majority but the 2002 elections ensured the House of Deputies included a dozen Shia MPs. It is estimated that over 50% of the public voted, despite calls from Islamist parties for a boycott.

Sheikh Hamad encouraged the expansion of the role of women within Bahraini society and politics. In 2000 he appointed four women to the consultative council and in April 2004 Nada Haffadh became the first woman to head a government ministry when she became health minister. In April 2005 Alees Samoan became the first woman, and the first non-Muslim, to chair a parliamentary session.

In a bid to ease inter-religious tensions, Sheikh Hamad pardoned Shia opposition leader Sheikh Abdel Amir Al-Jamin in July 1999, the day after he was sentenced to ten years imprisonment for inciting hostility. Despite support for his reforms, mainly among the Sunni minority population, thousands attended marches in 2005 to demand a fully elected government. Parliamentary elections in Nov. and Dec. 2006 resulted in a stronger showing by the opposition Shia Al-Wefaq group, campaigning against broad social grievances such as unemployment, poor services and corruption.

Discontent among the Shia majority continued, provoking frequent public protests in poorer areas outside the predominantly Sunni capital of Manama in the early months of 2008. In the run-up to the Oct. 2010 parliamentary elections Shia opposition leaders were arrested, accused of instigating violent protests to overthrow the government. However, the Shia Al-Wefaq party won 18 seats in the elections to become the single largest group in the House of Deputies. The incumbent prime minister was meanwhile reappointed and asked to form a new cabinet. In the early months of 2011 political discontent across the Arab world spread to Bahrain. Pro-democracy demonstrations prompted Sheikh Hamad to initially make conciliatory gestures to the Shia opposition before declaring martial law and calling in Saudi military support in March that year to forcefully suppress the protests. Sporadic unrest nevertheless continued, prompting the government to announce a ban in Oct. 2012 on all demonstrations and gatherings.

In Feb. 2013 opposition groups agreed to a dialogue with the government and in March Crown Prince Salman bin Hamad Al-Khalifa, considered less hardline than other members of the ruling family, was appointed first deputy prime minister. However, any hopes of a political reconciliation faded in the wake of renewed demonstrations and the withdrawal from talks in Sept. that year of the main Shia opposition representatives in protest at the arrest of a leading figure in the Al-Wefaq party. The government subsequently suspended further contacts in Jan. 2014 and the political scene has remained unstable against a background of continuing sporadic Shia protests.

DEFENCE

The Crown Prince is C.-in-C. of the armed forces. An agreement with the USA in Oct. 1991 gave port facilities to the US Navy and provided for mutual manoeuvres.

In 2013 defence expenditure totalled US$1,394m. (up from US$943m. in 2011), with spending per capita US$1,088. The 2013 expenditure represented 5.0% of GDP.

Army

The Army consists of one armoured brigade, one infantry brigade, one artillery brigade, one special forces battalion and one air defence battalion. Personnel, 2011, 6,000. In addition there is a National Guard of approximately 2,000 and a paramilitary police force of 11,260.

Navy

The Naval force based at Mina Sulman numbered 700 in 2011.

Air Force

Personnel (2011), 1,500. Equipment includes 39 combat-capable aircraft and 28 attack helicopters.

ECONOMY

Finance and real estate contributed 28.5% of GDP in 2009, crude petroleum and natural gas 23.1% and manufacturing 14.7%.

Overview

Despite having one of the more diversified economies in the Gulf, Bahrain relies on oil for 60% of all exports, 70% of government revenue and over 10% of GDP. Bahrain also competes with Malaysia to be the world's leading Islamic banking centre.

The tourism sector suffered as a result of civil unrest which erupted in 2011. The economy as a whole, however, weathered the global downturn well, with increased oil production spurring growth of 5.3% in 2013. Nonetheless, public debt equivalent to 54% of GDP poses a threat to long-term prosperity. In addition, the unrest of 2011 lessened the country's attractiveness to foreign investors.

Currency

The unit of currency is the Bahraini dinar (BHD), divided into 1,000 fiils. In Feb. 2005 foreign exchange reserves were US$1,742m. Total money supply was BD948m. in April 2005 and gold reserves were 150,000 troy oz. There was inflation of 3.3% in 2013 and 2.7% in 2014.

Budget

Budgetary central government revenue and expenditure (in BD1m.):

	2008	2009	2010
Revenue	2,677.7	1,708.0	2,175.6
Expenditure	1,567.8	1,704.5	1,882.2

Performance

Total GDP in 2014 was US$33.9bn. Real GDP growth was 3.6% in 2012, 5.3% in 2013 and 4.5% in 2014.

Banking and Finance

The Central Bank of Bahrain (Governor, Rasheed Mohammed Al-Maraj) has central banking powers. The banking and financial sector generates around a quarter of GDP. In 2003 Bahrain had 50 offshore banking units. Offshore banking units may not engage in local business. In Sept. 2010 there were 15 locally incorporated commercial banks, 15 foreign commercial banks, 76 wholesale banks and 27 representative offices; assets totalled US$216.4bn.

There is a stock exchange in Manama linked with those of Kuwait and Oman.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Bahrain's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2011 accounted for 24.9 tonnes per capita. An Environmental Performance Index compiled in 2016 ranked Bahrain 86th of 180 countries, with 70.1%. The index examined various factors in nine areas—agriculture, air quality, biodiversity and habitat, climate and energy, fisheries, forests, health impacts, water and sanitation, and water resources.

Electricity

In 2011 installed capacity was an estimated 3.2m. kW; 13.83bn. kWh were produced in 2011. Electricity consumption per capita was 10,788 kWh in 2011.

Oil and Gas

In 1931 oil was discovered. Operations were at first conducted by the Bahrain Petroleum Co. (BAPCO) under concession. In 1975 the government assumed a 60% interest in the oilfield and related crude oil facilities of BAPCO. Oil reserves in 2011 were 125m. bbls. Production (2009) was 67m. bbls. Refinery distillation output amounted to 12.7m. tonnes in 2011.

There were known natural gas reserves of 200bn. cu. metres in 2013. Production in 2013 was 15.8bn. cu. metres. Gas reserves are government-owned.

Water

Water is obtained from artesian wells and desalination plants and there is a piped supply to Manama, Muharraq, Isa Town, Rifa'a and most villages.

Minerals

Aluminium is Bahrain's oldest major industry after oil and gas; production in 2009 was 847,738 tonnes.

Agriculture

In 2007 there were some 2,000 ha. of arable land and 4,000 ha. of permanent crops. There are about 900 farms and smallholdings (average 2.5 ha.) operated by about 2,500 farmers who produce a wide variety of fruits (22,000 tonnes in 2003) including dates (17,000 tonnes). In 2003 an estimated 10,000 tonnes of vegetables were produced. The major crop is alfalfa for animal fodder.

Livestock (2003): sheep, 18,000; goats, 16,000; cattle, 13,000; camels, 1,000.

In 2003 an estimated 8,000 tonnes of lamb and mutton, 6,000 tonnes of poultry meat, 2,000 tonnes of eggs and 14,000 tonnes of fresh milk were produced.

Fisheries

The total catch in 2010 was 13,490 tonnes, exclusively from sea fishing.

INDUSTRY

The largest company by market capitalization in Bahrain in April 2015 was Ahli United Bank (US$4.8bn.).

Industry is being developed with foreign participation: aluminium smelting (and ancillary industries), shipbuilding and repair, petrochemicals, electronics assembly and light industry.

Traditional crafts include boatbuilding, weaving and pottery.

Labour

The labour force in 2013 was 750,000 (more than double the 358,000 in 2003). 71.8% of the population aged 15–64 was economically active in 2013. In the same year 3.7% of the population was unemployed.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Bahrain, along with Kuwait, Oman, Qatar, Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates entered into a customs union in Jan. 2003.

Imports and Exports

Goods imports were US$14,249.1m. in 2012 (US$17,643.3m. in 2011) and goods exports US$16,621.2m. (US$22,561.9m. in 2011).

Principal imports in 2012 were machinery and transport equipment (29.0%), mineral fuels and lubricants, and manufactured goods; main exports in 2012 were mineral fuels and lubricants (59.7%), manufactured goods, and crude materials and animal and vegetable oils.

The leading import supplier in 2010 was Brazil (18.0%), followed by China and Japan; the leading export destination in 2010 was Saudi Arabia (25.5%), followed by Qatar and India.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

A 25-km causeway links Bahrain with Saudi Arabia. In 2008 there were 3,942 km of roads, including 475 km of main roads and 563 km of secondary roads. Bahrain has one of the densest road networks in the world. In 2008 there were 310,200 passenger cars in use (404 per 1,000 inhabitants in 2007). In 2007 there were 91 fatalities in road accidents.

Civil Aviation

The national carrier is Gulf Air, now fully owned by the government of Bahrain after the other three former partners, Qatar, Abu Dhabi and Oman, withdrew in 2002, 2006 and 2007 respectively. In 2010 Gulf Air flew to about 40 international destinations. In 2014 Bahrain International Airport handled 8.10m. passengers (all on international flights) and 219,332 tonnes of freight. In 2003 scheduled airline traffic of Bahrain-based carriers flew 40m. km, carrying 1,850,000 passengers (all on international flights).

Shipping

In Jan. 2009 there were 15 ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 338,000 GT. The port of Mina Sulman is a free transit and industrial area.

Telecommunications

Bahrain's telecommunications industry was fully liberalized on 1 July 2004. In 2014 there were 2,328,994 mobile phone subscriptions (1,732.7 per 1,000 inhabitants) and 284,684 landline telephone subscriptions (equivalent to 211.8 per 1,000 inhabitants). 91.0% of the population were internet users in 2014. Fixed internet subscriptions totalled 287,572 in 2014 (213.9 per 1,000 inhabitants). In March 2012 there were 346,000 Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The new constitution which came into force in Feb. 2002 included the creation of an independent judiciary. The State Security Law and the State Security Court were both abolished in the lead-up to the change to a constitutional monarchy.

The population in penal institutions in 2012 was 2,307 (275 per 100,000 of national population). The death penalty is still in force, although rarely used. The last execution was in 2010.

Education

Adult literacy was 91% in 2008. Government schools provide free education from primary to technical college level. Schooling is in three stages: primary (six years), intermediate (three years) and secondary (three years). Secondary education may be general or specialized. In 2005–06 there were 67,528 primary school pupils, 32,359 intermediate school pupils and 29,223 secondary school pupils; there were a total of 203 schools and 10,836 teachers in 2005–06 including two religious institutes with 1,197 male students and 114 teachers.

In the private sector there were 56 schools with 34,378 pupils and 2,629 teachers in 2005–06.

There were 16 universities and similar institutions in 2005–06 with 29,678 students; and 2,392 persons attending adult education centres.

In 2006 expenditure on education came to 10.8% of total government spending.

Health

There is a free medical service for all residents. In 2003 there were 1,295 physicians, 186 dentists, 3,156 nurses and 158 pharmacists. In 2003 there were ten general hospitals (four government; six private), 21 health centres and five maternity hospitals.

Welfare

In 1976 a pensions, sickness benefits and unemployment, maternity and family allowances scheme was established. Employers contribute 7% of salaries and Bahraini employees 11%. In 2009, 27,503 persons received state welfare payments totalling BD13,904,790. A total of BD6,548,490 was paid out to pensioners, and BD2,183,460 to families.

RELIGION

Islam is the state religion. According to the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life, in 2010 the population was an estimated 70.3% Muslim (of whom around two-thirds Shia and a third Sunni), with 14.5% Christian and 9.8% Hindu.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

In 2005 Qal'at Al-Bahrain archaeological site was added to the UNESCO World Heritage List (reinscribed in 2008). The site was an area of human occupation from about 2300 BC to the 16th century. It is now a site of major excavation. Pearling was added to the list in 2012. The site, consisting of urban properties in Muharraq City, a fort, the seashore and oyster beds, is an exceptional illustration of the cultural tradition of pearling, which brought prosperity to the Persian Gulf between the 2nd and early 20th centuries.

Press

There were eight daily newspapers in 2008 with a combined average daily circulation of 155,000.

Tourism

In 2012 there were 8,062,000 foreign visitors (up from 6,732,000 in 2011, but down from the record high of 11,952,000 in 2010 before the Arab Spring of early 2011 and the subsequent turmoil experienced by Bahrain).

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

India's Maurya Empire established Buddhism in Bengal (Bangla) in the 3rd century BC. The Buddhist Pala Dynasty ruled Bengal and Bihar independently from AD 750, exporting Buddhism to Tibet. Hinduism regained dominance under the Sena Dynasty in the 11th century until the Muslim invasions in 1203–04. Rule from Delhi was broken in the 14th century by local Bengali kings. The Afghan adventurer Sher Shah conquered Bengal in 1539 and defeated the Mughal Emperor Humayun, creating an extensive administrative empire in North India. However, Mughal power was re-established by Akbar in 1576.

The Portuguese arrived in the 15th century, drawn to the rich Bengali cotton trade. They were followed by the Dutch and the British, whose East India Company was centred at Calcutta. The Nawab of Bengal was defeated by Robert Clive's army at the Battle of Plassey in 1757. British rule was maintained through the mainly Hindu zamindar land-owners and the Company was replaced by the Crown in 1858.

The partition of Bengal in 1905 was an attempt to undermine the nationalist influence of the bhadralok, the Hindu middle-classes, by forming a Muslim-dominated eastern province.

Religious violence increased and political interests were represented by newly formed parties, including the All-India Muslim League. The partition was reversed in 1912. Tensions between the Muslim and Hindu communities escalated in the 1930s. The League suffered electoral defeat in 1936 but calls for a Muslim state were strengthened by the Pakistan Resolution of 1940. An agreement between Hindu and Muslim leaders to create an independent, secular Bengal was resisted by Mahatma Gandhi. Further violence, such as the Great Calcutta Killing in 1946, put pressure on the administration and India was hastily partitioned—East Bengal was united with the northwestern Muslim provinces as Pakistan. East Pakistan (as East Bengal became under the 1956 constitution) received 0.7m. Muslims, mainly from Bihar and West Bengal, while over 2.5m. Hindus left for India.

Relations with West Pakistan were strained from the outset. Bengali demands for recognition of their language and resentment of preferential investment in their western partner led to the formation of the Awami League in 1949 to represent Bengali interests. Led by Sheikh Mujibur Rahman (Mujib), the Awami League triumphed as part of the 'United Front' in elections in 1954 but its government was dismissed by Governor-General Ghulam Mohammad after two months. A military government was installed from 1958–62 and in 1966 Mujib was arrested. Civilian government was again suspended in 1969 and in elections in 1970–71 the Awami League won all East Pakistani seats. While talks to form a government foundered, President Yahya Khan sent troops to the East and suspended the assembly, provoking a civil disobedience campaign. On 25 March 1971 the army began a crackdown. Members of the Awami League were arrested or fled to Calcutta, where they declared a provisional Bengali government. 10m. Bengalis fled to India to escape the bloody repression. India, with Soviet support, invaded on 3 Dec. 1971, forcing the surrender of the Pakistani army on 16 Dec. Mujib was released to become prime minister of independent Bangladesh.

Bangladesh suffered famine in 1974 and disorder led to Mujib assuming the presidency with dictatorial powers. Assassinated in Aug. 1975, a coup brought to power Maj.-Gen. Ziaur Rahman, who turned against the former ally, India. Rahman was assassinated in 1981. Hussain Mohammad Ershad became martial law administrator in 1982 and president in 1983. Ershad's National Party triumphed in parliamentary elections in May 1986 but presidential elections in Oct. were boycotted by opposition parties. A campaign of demonstrations and national strikes forced Ershad's resignation in 1990. Rahman's widow, Khaleda, became prime minister after her Bangladesh Nationalist Party won nearly half the seats. The Bangladesh Awami League's victory in 1996 brought Mujib's daughter, Sheikh Hasina Wajed, to the premiership but Khaleda Zia returned to power in 2001.

A state of emergency was declared in Jan. 2007 and elections were postponed following several weeks of violence that claimed more than 40 lives. Sheikh Hasina Wajed became prime minister for a second time when the Bangladesh Awami League won elections held in Dec. 2008, at which time the state of emergency was lifted.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Bangladesh is bounded in the west and north by India, east by India and Myanmar and south by the Bay of Bengal. The area is 147,570 sq. km (56,977 sq. miles). In 1992 India granted a 999-year lease of the Tin Bigha corridor linking Bangladesh with its enclaves of Angarpota and Dahagram. The most recent census took place in March 2011; population, 144,043,697 (72,109,796 males), giving a density of 976 persons per sq. km.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 161.00m.

In 2011, 28.6% of the population lived in urban areas. The country is administratively divided into eight divisions (since Sept. 2015), subdivided into 64 districts (zila). Area (in sq. km) and population (in 1,000) at the March 2011 census of the then seven divisions:

	Area	Population
Barisal division	13,297	8,326
Chittagong division	33,771	28,423
Dhaka division ¹	31,120	47,424
Khulna division	22,272	15,688
Rajshahi division	18,197	18,485
Rangpur division	16,317	15,788
Sylhet division	12,596	9,910

¹In 2015 Mymensingh division was formed by taking four districts from Dhaka.

The populations of the chief cities (2011 census) were as follows:

Dhaka ¹	7,033,075	Tongi	476,350
Chittagong	2,592,439	Rajshahi	449,756
Khulna	663,342	Bogra	350,397
Narayanganj	543,090	Barisal	328,278
Sylhet	479,837	Comilla	326,386

¹Metropolitan area, 11,086,309.

The official language is Bengali. English is also in use for official, legal and commercial purposes.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2008 estimated births, 3,429,000; deaths, 1,054,000. In 2008 the birth rate was an estimated 21.4 per 1,000 population; death rate, 6.6; infant mortality, 2010, 38 per 1,000 live births (down from 99 per 1,000 in 1990). Life expectancy at birth, 2013, 71.5 years for females and 69.9 years for males. Annual population growth rate, 2000–08, 1.6%; fertility rate, 2008, 2.3 births per woman (down from 4.4 in 1990). Bangladesh has made some of the best progress in recent years in reducing child mortality. The number of deaths per 1,000 live births among children under five was reduced from 143 in 1990 to 48 in 2010. A UNICEF report published in 2014 revealed that 39% of women aged 20–49 had been married or in union before the age of 15, the highest percentage of any country.

CLIMATE

A tropical monsoon climate with heat, extreme humidity and heavy rainfall in the monsoon season, from June to Oct. The short winter season (Nov.–Feb.) is mild and dry. Rainfall varies between 50" (1,250 mm) in the west to 100" (2,500 mm) in the southeast and up to 200" (5,000 mm) in the northeast. Dhaka, Jan. 66°F (19°C), July 84°F (28.9°C). Annual rainfall 81" (2,025 mm). Chittagong, Jan. 66°F (19°C), July 81°F (27.2°C). Annual rainfall 108" (2,831 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

Bangladesh is a unitary republic. The Constitution came into force on 16 Dec. 1972 and provides for a parliamentary democracy. The head of state is the President, elected by parliament every five years, who appoints a Vice-President. A referendum of Sept. 1991 was in favour of abandoning the executive presidential system and opted for a parliamentary system. There is a Council of Ministers to assist the President. The President appoints ministers. A 2011 constitutional amendment provided for a single-chamber parliament of 350 members, 300 directly elected every five years and 50 reserved for women, elected by the 300 MPs based on proportional representation in parliament. There have been 16 amendments to the Constitution altogether.

National Anthem

'Amar Sonar Bangla, ami tomay bhalobashi' ('My Bengal of gold, I love you'); words and tune by Rabindranath Tagore.

RECENT ELECTIONS

Abdul Hamid was elected president unopposed on 22 April 2013 after incumbent Zillur Rahman died on 20 March 2013.

In parliamentary elections of 5 Jan. 2014 the Bangladesh Awami League (BAL) gained 231 seats against the National Party (JP) with 33 seats, Workers Party of Bangladesh (WBP) with six seats and the National Socialist Party (JSD) with five seats. The Bangladesh National Front (BNF), Jatiya Party/National Party (Manju) and Bangladesh Tarikat Federation gained one seat each, with the remaining 14 seats going to independents.

Elections in eight of the 300 constituencies were suspended owing to violence and new polls were held on 16 Jan. 2014. Turnout was estimated at 22% owing to the boycott by the main opposition party, the Bangladesh Nationalist Party/Bangladesh Jatiyatabadi Dal (BJD), and violence surrounding the elections.

CURRENT LEADERS

Sheikh Hasina Wajed

Position

Prime Minister

Introduction

Sheikh Hasina, leader of the Bangladesh Awami League (BAL), was elected prime minister in Dec. 2008 after two years of military government. It was her second term as premier, having previously served from 1996–2001. She was re-elected in Jan. 2014.

Early Life

Born on 28 Sept. 1947 in Tungipara, Bangladesh, Sheikh Hasina is the oldest child of Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibar Rahman, former leader of the AL (which later became the BAL) and the nation's first head of state following the 1971 liberation war with Pakistan.

Hasina was vice-president of the student union at the Government Intermediate College from 1966–67 and was a member of the AL's student Chhatra League while at Dhaka University, from where she graduated in 1973. In 1981 she was elected head of the BAL despite being in self-imposed exile, six years after the assassinations of her father, mother and three siblings.

Her chief political rival has been BJD leader Khaleda Zia, widow of the assassinated military president Ziaur Rahman, who had taken power following the death of Hasina's father. Throughout the 1980s and early 1990s Hasina worked to remove the military government, including a BAL boycott of Zia's government in 1994. In 1996 a civilian caretaker government was established ahead of elections, which Hasina won with a landslide to become prime minister. As premier, she secured a 30-year Ganges Water Sharing Treaty with India and signed the Chittagong Hill Tract Peace Accords with rebel tribes in the southeast of the country. Nonetheless, Bangladesh descended into chaos and in 2001 Transparency International ranked it the most corrupt country in the world.

The BJD regained power in elections in 2001, after which political violence involving BJD and BAL supporters escalated. In 2007 a military-backed caretaker government seized control after failed elections and implemented emergency rule. Hasina was arrested on charges of corruption, extortion and murder and was briefly jailed before her release to seek medical care in the USA.

Despite attempts to prevent her return, she arrived in Bangladesh in time to lead the BAL to election victory in Dec. 2008.

Career in Office

Hasina's primary challenge was to re-establish national stability. Internationally, relations with India have been consolidated by trade and co-operation pacts and by agreements on border enclaves and the establishment of transit routes across Bangladesh to India's remote northeastern states. However, in domestic affairs the Nov. 2010 eviction, backed by a High Court order, of Khaleda Zia from her home in Dhaka sparked protests by BJD supporters and opposition boycotts of parliament. Hasina was accused of increasingly autocratic rule.

In Jan. 2012 the army claimed to have uncovered a coup plot by officers hostile to the government, and stability was further undermined by anti-Hasina demonstrations and communal violence through the rest of that year and 2013. Hasina had meanwhile used her party's parliamentary majority to amend the constitution and repeal the requirement (since 1996) that governments cede power to an independent caretaker administration ahead of an election. This provoked further political violence in the run-up to polling on 5 Jan. 2014 and an electoral boycott by the BJD. The BAL won an overwhelming majority of the 300 parliamentary seats in a low voter turnout but Hasina's victory was widely seen as lacking legitimacy. In April 2014 Khaleda Zia and other leading BJD figures were sent for trial on charges of corruption and embezzlement, and in Feb. 2015 she was further charged with instigating an opposition arson attack.

In Nov. 2015 two opposition leaders were executed for war crimes during the country's war of independence in 1971 despite threats of a violent backlash by their supporters.

DEFENCE

The supreme command of defence services is vested in the president. Defence expenditure in 2013 totalled US$1,652m. (US$10 per capita), representing 1.2% of GDP.

As at 31 Aug. 2013 Bangladesh had 7,931 personnel serving in UN peacekeeping operations (the second largest contingent of any country, after Pakistan).

Army

Strength (2011) 126,153. There is also a 5,000-strong specialized police unit (the Armed Police), 20,000 security guards (Ansars) and the Bangladesh Rifles (border guard) numbering 38,000.

Navy

Naval bases are at Chittagong, Dhaka, Kaptai and Khulna. In 2011 the fleet included five frigates, 42 patrol and coastal combatants, and five mine sweepers. Personnel in 2011 numbered 16,900.

Air Force

Personnel strength (2011) 14,000. There were 74 combat-capable aircraft (mainly Chinese F-7s and A-5s) and 23 helicopters in 2011.

ECONOMY

In 2011 agriculture accounted for 18% of GDP, industry 28% and services 54%.

Overview

The economy has achieved impressive and steady growth since the mid-2000s, doubling in size between 2006 and 2013 and remaining resilient throughout the global financial crisis. Growth declined only moderately to 5.9% in 2009 from 6.0% the previous year, reflecting a broad-based, trade-friendly economy. The textiles and garments sector has fared particularly well.

Although the service sector is the dominant contributor to GDP, around half of the population is employed in agriculture and fishing. Despite political upheaval, international reserves have strengthened (doubling between 2011 and 2014) as a result of strong remittances and exports. The current account surplus reached a record 2% of GDP in 2013.

Good progress has been made on structural and tax reforms, although power and gas shortages continue to hold back growth and the application of public-private partnerships has been slow. In addition, low skill levels, poor governance and a weak infrastructure remain obstacles to sustained development and poverty reduction. The economy is also prone to downturns in export demand, with garment sales recording a year-on-year decline of 9.2% in Oct. 2013. Ongoing social unrest and political instability are additional long-term hurdles to progress.

Currency

The unit of currency is the taka (BDT) of 100 poisha, which was floated in 1976. Foreign exchange reserves in July 2005 were US$2,780m., gold reserves were 113,000 troy oz and total money supply was Tk.384,290m. Inflation was 7.5% in 2013 and 7.0% in 2014.

Budget

The fiscal year ends on 30 June. Budget, 2009–10: revenue, Tk.794.8bn.; expenditure, Tk.1,105.2bn.

VAT is 15%.

Performance

Real GDP growth was 6.3% in 2012, 6.0% in 2013 and 6.3% again in 2014. Total GDP was US$172.9bn. in 2014.

Banking and Finance

Bangladesh Bank is the central bank (Governor, Atiur Rahman). There were 47 commercial banks in 2010 of which four were state-owned. In 2008 the Bangladesh Bank had deposits of Tk.211,805m. Sonali Bank Limited is the largest of the nationalized commercial banks, with deposits of Tk.406,152m. at 31 Dec. 2009.

In 2010 total foreign debt was US$24,963m., representing 22.8% of GNI.

There are stock exchanges in Dhaka and Chittagong.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Bangladesh's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2011 were the equivalent of 0.4 tonnes per capita.

The Climate Change and Environmental Risk Atlas 2014 produced by Maplecroft, a risk analytics company, ranked Bangladesh as the country facing the highest economic and social risk from climate change by 2025.

Electricity

Installed capacity was an estimated 6.6m. kW in 2010–11. Electricity generated, 2010–11, 44.06bn. kWh; consumption per capita in 2010–11 was 288 kWh.

Oil and Gas

In 2013 Bangladesh had proven natural gas reserves of 300bn. cu. metres in about 20 mainly onshore fields. Total natural gas production in 2013 amounted to 21.9bn. cu. metres.

Minerals

The principal minerals are lignite, limestone, china clay and glass sand. There are reserves of good-quality coal of 300m. tonnes. Production, 2001–02: limestone, 32,000 tonnes; kaolin, 8,100 tonnes.

Agriculture

In 2007 the agricultural population was approximately 76.11m., of whom 35.54m. were economically active. There were 7.96m. ha. of arable land in 2005 and some 0.5m. ha. of permanent crops. 5.60m. ha. were irrigated in 2005. Bangladesh is a major producer of jute: production, 2003, 801,000 tonnes. Rice is the most important food crop; production in 2003 (in 1m. metric tonnes), 38.06.

Other major crops (1m. tonnes): sugarcane, 6.84; potatoes, 3.69; wheat, 1.55; bananas, 0.65. Livestock in 2003: goats, 34.50m.; cattle, 24.50m.; sheep, 1.24m.; buffalo, 850,000; chickens, 140m. Livestock products in 2003 (tonnes): beef and veal, 180,000; goat meat, 130,000; poultry meat, 115,000; goat's milk, 1.31m.; cow's milk, 797,000; sheep's milk, 25,000; buffalo's milk, 23,000; hen's eggs, 134,000. Bangladesh is the second largest producer of goat's milk, after India.

Forestry

In 2010 the area under forests was 1.44m. ha., or 11% of the total land area. Timber production in 2011 was 27.41m. cu. metres.

Fisheries

Bangladesh is a major producer of fish and fish products. The total catch in 2010 amounted to 1,726,586 tonnes, of which 1,119,094 tonnes came from inland waters. Only China and India have larger annual catches of freshwater fish. Aquaculture production totalled 1,308,515 tonnes in 2010 (the fifth highest in the world).

INDUSTRY

Manufacturing contributed 17.3% of GDP in 2013. The principal industries are jute and cotton textiles, tea, paper, newsprint, cement, chemical fertilizers and light engineering. In 2013 industrial output grew by 9.6%. There were 42,792 manufacturing establishments with ten or more workers in 2012 with the main sectors being textiles (10,983 establishments), food products (8,441 establishments) and ready-made garments (6,984 establishments).

Labour

In 2010 the economically active workforce totalled 56,651,000 over the age of 15 years (39,477,000 males). The main areas of activity (in 1,000) were as follows: agriculture, forestry and fishing, 25,727; wholesale and retail trade, and repair of motor vehicles, motorcycles and personal and household goods, 7,557; manufacturing, 6,737; transportation and storage, 3,983; construction, 2,617. In 2010, 4.5% of the workforce aged 15 or over were unemployed. For the five-year period 2007–12 the National Minimum Wage Board established the minimum monthly wage at Tk.1,500 (equivalent to US$19) for all economic sectors not covered by industry-specific wages. The Ministry of Labor raised the minimum wage in the garment industry from Tk.1,662 (US$21) per month to Tk.3,000 (US$37) per month in 2010, but this still ranks among the lowest of any country.

Bangladesh had 0.34m. people living in slavery according to the Walk Free Foundation's 2013 Global Slavery Index, the tenth highest total of any country.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

Goods imports were US$41,221.7m. in 2011 (US$30,503.8m. in 2010) and goods exports US$24,313.7m. (US$19,231.0m. in 2010).

Principal imports in 2011 were manufactured goods (25.5%), machinery and transport equipment, and crude materials and animal and vegetable oils; main exports in 2011 were miscellaneous manufactured articles including garments (81.1%), manufactured goods, and food, animals and beverages.

The leading import sources are China, India and Kuwait. Leading export markets are the USA, Germany and the UK.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

In 2003 the total road network covered 239,226 km, including 22,378 km of national roads and 81,670 km of secondary roads. In 2007 there were 158,100 passenger cars, 168,600 vans and lorries, 31,600 buses and coaches, and 653,500 motorcycles and mopeds. There were 3,160 fatalities as a result of road accidents in 2006.

Rail

In 2005 there were 2,855 km of railways, comprising 660 km of 1,676 mm gauge, 1,830 km of metre gauge and 365 km of dual gauge. Passenger-km travelled in 2008 came to 402.4m. and freight tonne-km to 952m.

Civil Aviation

There are international airports at Dhaka (Hazrat Shahjalal) and Chittagong, and eight domestic airports. Biman Bangladesh Airlines was state-owned until July 2007 when it became a public limited company. In addition to domestic routes, in 2010 it operated international services to Abu Dhabi, Bangkok, Delhi, Dubai, Hong Kong, Jeddah, Karachi, Kathmandu, Kolkata, Kuala Lumpur, Kuwait, London, Muscat, Riyadh, Rome and Singapore. There were direct international flights in 2010 with other airlines to Abu Dhabi, Bahrain, Bangkok, Beijing, Dammam, Delhi, Doha, Dubai, Guangzhou, Hong Kong, Jeddah, Karachi, Kathmandu, Khartoum, Kolkata, Kuala Lumpur, Kunming, Kuwait, London, Madinah, Mumbai, Muscat, Paro, Riyadh, Sharjah, Singapore and Tripoli. In 2009 Dhaka's Hazrat Shahjalal International Airport handled 4,254,427 passengers (3,657,449 on international flights) and 147,239 tonnes of freight. In 2003 scheduled airline traffic of Bangladesh-based carriers flew 29m. km, carrying 1,579,000 passengers (1,205,000 on international flights).

Shipping

In Jan. 2009 there were 197 ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 407,000 GT. The main port is Chittagong, which handled 27,026,000 tonnes of cargo in 2006 (3,090,000 tonnes loaded and 23,936,000 tonnes unloaded). There is also a seaport at Mongla. There are 8,000 km of navigable inland waterways.

Telecommunications

Mobile phone subscribers numbered 126,866,091 in 2014 (800-4 per 1,000 inhabitants). There were 974,181 main telephone lines in the same year. Fixed internet subscriptions totalled 3,093,171 in 2014 (19.5 per 1,000 inhabitants). In 2014, 9.6% of the population were internet users. In March 2012 there were 2.5m. Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The Supreme Court comprises an Appellate and a High Court Division, the latter having control over all subordinate courts. Judges are appointed by the President and retire at 65. There are benches at Comilla, Rangpur, Jessore, Barisal, Chittagong and Sylhet, and courts at District level.

The population in penal institutions in April 2013 was 72,104 (42 per 100,000 of national population). The International Centre for Prison Studies estimated in 2014 that 73.8% of prisoners had yet to receive a trial. The death penalty is still in force. There were four executions in 2015 although none had taken place in 2014. In 2015 the World Justice Project Rule of Law Index, which provides data on how the rule of law is experienced by the general public across eight categories, ranked Bangladesh 88th of 102 countries for criminal justice and 93rd for civil justice.

Education

In 2007 there were 16.3m. pupils and 364,494 teaching staff at primary schools; 10.4m. pupils and 413,746 teaching staff at secondary schools; 1.1m. students and 60,915 academic staff in tertiary education. In 2006 there were 78 universities of which 27 were public, 42 medical colleges (15 public), 171 polytechnic institutes (42 public) and 3,197 general colleges.

Adult literacy was an estimated 55.9% in 2009 (60.7% among males and 51.0% among females).

In 2007 public expenditure on education came to 2.4% of GNI and 15.8% of total government spending.

Health

In 2008 there were 2,860 hospitals and health complexes with 74,400 beds. There were 49,994 registered physicians in 2008, and 2,344 dentistry personnel and 39,471 nursing and midwifery personnel in 2005.

RELIGION

Islam is the state religion. According to the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life the population was 89.8% Muslim in 2010, with Hindus accounting for 9.1%.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

There are three UNESCO sites in Bangladesh: the Historic Mosque City of Bagerhat (inscribed in 1985); the Ruins of the Buddhist Vihara at Paharpur (1985); the Sundarbans (1997), 140,000 ha. of mangrove forest.

Press

In 2008 there were 430 paid-for daily newspapers with a combined circulation of 1.5m.

Tourism

In 2010 there were 303,000 non-resident tourists, spending US$81m.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Archaeological evidence suggests Barbados was inhabited by Barrancoid Indians from at least 1,000 BC, and by Arawak and Carib people for about 400 years from around AD 1,000. However, Portuguese mariners who landed in 1536 reported that the island was uninhabited. The Portuguese named it Los Barbados—meaning ‘bearded’, seemingly a reference to the appearance of local fig trees.

Lacking obvious mineral resources, the island remained unsettled until an Englishman, William Courteen, established Jamestown in 1627. English colonists began cultivating cotton, tobacco and indigo, before developing plantations using sugarcane shipped from Dutch Brazil in the 1650s. Plantation owners initially imported English and Irish servants and prisoners, but then turned to West Africa, principally the Gold Coast, for slave labour. Hundreds of thousands of slaves were shipped to Barbados over the next two centuries. While many worked on the sugar plantations, others were re-exported to other slave-owning colonies in the Caribbean and North America.

Barbados became the dominant sugar producer in the Caribbean—by the end of the 18th century there were 745 plantations and a population of more than 80,000. Bridgetown, the capital, became the third largest settlement in English America, behind Boston and Port Royal, Jamaica. Revolts against harsh working conditions erupted in the early 19th century, the most notable of which was an 1816 slave uprising led by Bussa, a ranger on one of the largest plantations. Bussa’s Rebellion took place nine years after the British had abolished the slave trade, but not slavery itself. Slaves in Barbados were not fully emancipated until 1838, at the end of an ‘apprenticeship period’ that followed the official abolition of slavery in the British Empire in 1834.

In 1876 a British proposal for a confederation of Barbados and the Windward Islands triggered riots in Bridgetown. Politics remained dominated by wealthy merchants of English and Scottish descent until the 1930s, when the nascent trade union movement challenged the established order against a backdrop of worsening conditions linked to the Great Depression. Grantley Adams founded the Barbados Progressive League, later renamed the Barbados Labour Party (BLP), in 1938. It campaigned for improved conditions for workers, economic development and the extension of political rights. Universal suffrage was introduced in 1951, followed by cabinet government three years later. Adams was elected premier of Barbados in 1958, the year in which the island joined the short-lived ten-member West Indies Federation.

Full internal self-government was attained in Oct. 1961. Errol Barrow, founder of the Democratic Labour Party (DLP), was elected prime minister that year and led the island to independence on 30 Nov. 1966. He served as the nation’s first president until ousted in Sept. 1976. Power has been held alternately by the BLP and DLP for the duration of the country’s post-independence history.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Barbados lies to the east of the Windward Islands. Area 430 sq. km (166 sq. miles). In 2010 the census population was 277,821; density, 646.1 per sq. km.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 284,000.

In 2011, 45.1% of the population were urban. Bridgetown is the principal city: population (including suburbs), 122,000 in 2011. The country is divided into 11 parishes.

The official language is English.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

In 2007: births registered, 3,537; deaths registered, 2,213; birth rate, 12.9 per 1,000 population; death rate, 8.1 per 1,000 population; infant mortality (2010), 17 per 1,000 live births. Expectation of life, 2007, males 74.0 years and females 79.7. Population growth rate, 2005, 0.3%; fertility rate, 2008, 1.5 children per woman.

CLIMATE

An equable climate in winter, but the wet season, from June to Nov., is more humid. Rainfall varies from 50" (1,250 mm) on the coast to 75" (1,875 mm) in the higher interior. Bridgetown, Jan. 76°F (24.4°C), July 80°F (26.7°C). Annual rainfall 51" (1,275 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

The head of state is the British sovereign, represented by an appointed Governor-General. The bicameral Parliament consists of a Senate and a House of Assembly. The Senate comprises 21 members appointed by the Governor-General, 12 being appointed on the advice of the Prime Minister, two on the advice of the Leader of the Opposition and seven at the Governor-General’s discretion. The House of Assembly comprises 30 members elected every five years. In 1963 the voting age was reduced to 18.

The Privy Council is appointed by the Governor-General after consultation with the Prime Minister. It consists of 12 members and the Governor-General as chairman. It advises the Governor-General in the exercise of the royal prerogative of mercy and in the exercise of his disciplinary powers over members of the public and police services.

National Anthem

'In plenty and in time of need'; words by Irvine Burgie, tune by V. R. Edwards.

RECENT ELECTIONS

In the general election of 21 Feb. 2013 the ruling Democratic Labour Party (DLP) won 16 of 30 seats (51.3% of the total vote) and the Barbados Labour Party (BLP) 14 (48.3%). Three smaller parties and independents failed to win any seats.

CURRENT LEADERS

Freundel Stuart

Position

Prime Minister

Introduction

Freundel Stuart was sworn into office in Oct. 2010 after the death of David Thompson, having served as acting prime minister since May that year when Thompson took a leave of absence. In Feb. 2013 he led his Democratic Labour Party to electoral victory.

Early Life

Freundel Jerome Stuart was born on 27 April 1951 in the parish of St Philip. He was educated at Christ Church Boys' Foundation School. He later taught history and Spanish at the Princess Margaret Secondary School in St Philip. In 1970 he joined the Democratic Labour Party (DLP) but did not stand for election until the 1990s.

Stuart graduated in history and political science from the University of the West Indies at Cave Hill in 1975. He gained further degrees in law and was called to the Barbados Bar in 1984. Beginning in criminal law, he later switched to the civil code.

In 1994 Stuart won the seat of St Philip South which he subsequently lost at the 1999 election. From 2003–07 he served in the Senate but in 2008 returned to the lower house after winning the constituency of St Michael South. He was also admitted to the Inner Bar and appointed Queen's Counsel. Stuart joined the Thompson administration as minister of home affairs and was later appointed attorney general and deputy prime minister.

In May 2010 Stuart was named acting prime minister when Thompson took leave because of ill health. On 23 Oct. 2010, after Thompson's death from cancer, Stuart was selected by the DLP as his successor.

Career in Office

Upon taking office, Stuart made few changes to the cabinet except for the appointment of Adriel Brathwaite as attorney general and minister of home affairs. Stuart has largely followed his predecessor's programme, which aims to tackle poverty, unemployment and housing shortages. On 20 Jan. 2011 the government was boosted when Mara Thompson, David Thompson's widow, won the by-election for her late husband's St John seat by an overwhelming majority.

At the general election of 21 Feb. 2013 the DLP won 16 of the 30 parliamentary seats, securing Stuart a mandate for a full term in office. Polls prior to the election had suggested the DLP were running behind the opposition Barbados Labour Party, which took 14 seats.

DEFENCE

The Barbados Defence Force has a strength of about 610. In 2013 defence expenditure totalled US$33m. (US$115 per capita), representing 0.7% of GDP.

Army

Army strength was 500 with reserves numbering 430 in 2011.

Navy

A small maritime unit numbering 110 (2011) operates six patrol vessels. The unit is based in the St Ann's Fort area at the Garrison, Bridgetown.

ECONOMY

In 2009 agriculture accounted for 3% of GDP, industry 23% and services 74%.

Overview

Barbados is the wealthiest and most developed economy in the Eastern Caribbean. Once agriculture-based, it has diversified over the decades, with tourism and light industry providing 80% of GDP. Nonetheless, the global financial crisis took a heavy toll as GDP shrank by an average of 0.5% a year between 2008 and 2013. Public debt reached 94% of GDP at the end of 2013, up from 60% in 2009. Also, government bonds lost 8% of their value in early 2014, reflecting a pattern seen around the Caribbean where other countries, including Belize and Jamaica, have defaulted on their debt.

The government has embarked on a range of measures to reduce the deficit, including cutting 13% of civil service jobs (about 3,000 positions) and freezing wage growth for other public workers. It has also sought to stem the decline in foreign reserves resulting from the fall in tourist numbers following the financial crash in Europe and North America. There is hope of a much-needed boost to the tourism sector with new cruise line facilities expected to open in time for the 2016–17 cruise season and planned investment from a large international hotel chain.

While the IMF has praised measures to raise VAT rates and public transportation tariffs, it recommends broadening the tax base, streamlining government operations and reducing public spending in the interests of reducing public debt to a manageable level. Unemployment is a major challenge, having reached 13% by the end of 2013.

Currency

The unit of currency is the Barbados dollar (BBD), usually written as BDS$, of 100 cents, which is pegged to the US dollar at BDS$2=US$1. Inflation was 1.8% in 2013 and 1.9% in 2014. Total money supply was BDS$1,691m. in June 2005. Foreign exchange reserves were US$575m. in July 2005.

Budget

The financial year runs from 1 April. Budgetary central government revenue and expenditure (in BDS$1m.):

	2008–09	2009–10	2010–11
Revenue	2,662.5	2,531.7	2,410.4
Expenditure	2,957.0	3,035.6	3,112.3

Tax revenue accounted for 92.8% of revenues in 2008–09. Main sources of expenditure in 2008–09 were subsidies, 31.3%; compensation of employees, 28.2%; use of goods and services, 14.7%.

VAT is 17.5% (reduced rate, 7.5%).

Performance

The economy of Barbados experienced a deep recession from 1990–92, but steadily recovered until the global economic downturn of 2001 when it shrank by 2.6%. Seven years of growth followed before Barbados again suffered in the 2009 economic crisis when real GDP decreased by 4.0%. The economy grew by 0.3% in 2012, but there was zero growth in 2013. However, there was a slight recovery in 2014 when real GDP increased by 0.2%. Total GDP in 2014 was US$4.4bn.

Banking and Finance

The central bank and bank of issue is the Central Bank of Barbados (Governor, DeLisle Worrell), which had total assets of BDS$1,248.5m. in Dec. 2003. The provisional figures for the total assets of commercial banks in Dec. 2003 were BDS$6,812.6m. and savings banks' deposits BDS$5,493.8m. In 2003 there were 4,635 international business companies, 413 exempt insurance companies and 51 offshore banks. In addition, there were three commercial banks, one regional development bank, one National Bank (privatized in the meantime), three foreign banks and seven trust companies.

External debt amounted to BDS$2,224m. in 2004.

There is a stock exchange which participates in the regional Caribbean exchange.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2011 were the equivalent of 5.0 tonnes per capita.

Electricity

Production in 2011, 1,049m. kWh. Capacity in 2011 was 0.2m. kW. Consumption per capita was 3,722 kWh in 2011.

Oil and Gas

Crude oil production in 2009 was 300,000 bbls and reserves in 2011 were 1.8m. bbls. Output of natural gas (2009) 18m. cu. metres.

Agriculture

The agricultural sector accounted for 4.4% of GDP in 2003 (24% in 1967). Of the total labour force in 2003, 4.6% were employed in agriculture. Of the total area of Barbados (42,995 ha.), about 16,000 ha. are arable land, which is intensively cultivated. In 2003, 7,515 ha. were under sugarcane cultivation. Production, 2003 (in tonnes): sugarcane, 48,500; sweet potatoes, 2,610; cucumbers, 2,018; okra, 1,446; tomatoes, 1,234; yams, 1,234; carrots, 1,012; cabbage, 640.

Meat and dairy products, 2003 (in tonnes): poultry, 11,458; cow's milk, 7,017; pork, 1,756; eggs, 1,620; beef, 346.

Livestock (2003): sheep, 27,000; pigs, 17,000; cattle, 14,000; chickens, 3m.

Forestry

Timber production in 2011 was 11,000 cu. metres. In 2010 forests covered 8,000 ha. or 19% of the total land area.

Fisheries

The total catch in 2012 was 1,363 tonnes, exclusively from sea fishing.

INDUSTRY

Industry has traditionally been centred on sugar, but there is also light manufacturing and component assembly for export. In 2003, 36,300 tonnes of raw sugar were produced.

Labour

The labour force in 2013 was 161,900 (up from 149,500 in 2003). 80.8% of the population aged 15–64 was economically active in 2013. In the same year 11.6% of the population was unemployed.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

Trade in US$1m.:

	Imports (c.i.f.)	Exports (f.o.b.)
2006	1,628.6	441.2
2007	1,298.7	314.2
2008	1,744.3	454.2
2009	1,340.7	322.7
2010	1,196.2	313.7

In 2010 imports (in US$1m.) were mainly from the USA (525.7), Trinidad and Tobago (85.9), the UK (64.2) and China (57.8). Principal export markets in 2010 were (in US$1m.) the USA (78.2), the UK (52.6), Trinidad and Tobago (26.5) and St Lucia (18.2).

The main imports are machinery and transport equipment; food and live animals; manufactured goods. The main exports are chemicals and petroleum products; manufactured articles; beverages.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

There were 1,600 km of roads in 2004. In 2007 there were 103,500 passenger cars, 15,200 lorries and vans, and 630 buses and coaches. There were 38 deaths as a result of road accidents in 2007.

Civil Aviation

Grantley Adams International Airport is 16 km from Bridgetown. In 2009 it handled 1,939,059 passengers (down from 2,165,125 in 2008) and 21,098 tonnes of freight (up from 19,479 in 2008). There were flights in 2010 to Antigua, Atlanta, Beef Island, Boston, Canouan Island, Charlotte, Curaçao, Dominica, Fort de France, Frankfurt, Georgetown, Grenada, Kingston, London, Manchester, Miami, Montreal, New York, Philadelphia, Port of Spain, St Kitts, St Lucia, St Maarten, St Vincent, San Juan, Tobago and Toronto.

Shipping

There is a deep-water harbour at Bridgetown. In Jan. 2009 there were 91 ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 642,000 GT.

Telecommunications

In 2011 there were 141,000 landline telephone subscriptions (equivalent to 513.5 per 1,000 inhabitants) and 348,000 mobile phone subscriptions (1,270.1 per 1,000 inhabitants). Fixed internet subscriptions totalled 61,000 in 2009 (223.5 per 1,000 inhabitants). In Dec. 2011 Barbados had 118,000 Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

Justice is administered by the Supreme Court and Justices' Appeal Court, and by magistrates' courts. All have both civil and criminal jurisdiction. There is a Chief Justice, three judges of appeal, five puisne judges of the Supreme Court and nine magistrates. The death penalty is authorized. Barbados was one of ten countries to sign an agreement in Feb. 2001 establishing a Caribbean Court of Justice (CCJ) to replace the British Privy Council as the highest civil and criminal court. In the meantime the number of signatories has risen to 12. The court was inaugurated at Port of Spain, Trinidad on 16 April 2005. Barbados is one of only four countries, along with Belize, Dominica and Guyana, to have accepted it as its court of final appeal.

The population in penal institutions in June 2013 was 1,507 (521 per 100,000 of national population).

Education

The adult literacy rate was 99.7% in 2003. There were 22,584 pupils at primary schools in 2007 with 1,553 teaching staff and 20,855 pupils at secondary schools in 2006 with 1,430 teaching staff. There were 23 public and eight private secondary schools in 2003. Education is free in all government-owned and government-maintained institutions from primary to university level.

In 2005 public expenditure on education came to 6.9% of GDP and 16.4% of total government spending.

In 2007 there were 11,405 students in higher education and 786 academic staff. One of the three main campuses of the University of the West Indies is in Barbados, at Cave Hill.

Health

In 2001 there was one general hospital, one psychiatric hospital, five district hospitals, eight health centres and two private hospitals with 35 beds. There were 2,049 hospital beds and 420 doctors in the same year.

Welfare

The National Insurance and Social Security Scheme provides contributory sickness, age, maternity, disability and survivors benefits. Sugar workers have their own scheme.

RELIGION

In 2010 there were an estimated 240,000 Protestants and 10,000 Roman Catholics according to the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life, with the remainder of the population being unaffiliated or following other religions.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

Historic Bridgetown and its Garrison, an outstanding example of British colonial architecture, was inscribed on the UNESCO World Heritage List in 2011.

Press

In 2008 there were two daily newspapers, the Barbados Advocate (est. 1895) and the Daily Nation (est. 1973). The Daily Nation has an average daily circulation of 33,000; the Barbados Advocate, 15,000.

Tourism

In 2010 there were 532,180 overnight tourist arrivals by air (of which 181,054 were from the United Kingdom) and 664,747 cruise ship visitors, up from 518,564 and 635,746 respectively in 2009.

Festivals

The National Cultural Foundation organizes three annual national festivals: the nine-day Congaline Carnival which begins in the last week of April; Crop Over, a three-week festival held from mid-July until Aug.; the National Independence Festival of Creative Arts (NIFCA) which runs throughout Nov. The biggest music festivals are the Barbados Jazz Festival (Jan.) and Gospelfest (May). Other festivals include the Hometown Festival (Feb.), which commemorates the anniversary of the first settlement of Barbados, Holders Season (March), an arts festival at St James, and the Oistins Fish Festival (March–April).

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

There is evidence of Neolithic settlement dating to 4000 BC at Asaviec in northern Belarus. During the third and second millennia BC, parts of present-day Belarus were settled by Finno-Ugric tribes, as well as groups migrating along the Dniepr river and from the southern Baltic. Slavic tribes, notably the Kryvichans, gained dominance between the 5th and 8th centuries AD, seeing off Huns and Avars from the eastern steppes. The territory came under the sway of Kyivan Rus during the 9th century, although the Duchy of Polotsk challenged Kyiv and Novgorod for control of the northern reaches until its decline in the late 12th century. The Duchy of Turau and Pinsk to the south also became powerful during this period.

Kyiv's influence waned in the 13th century and raids by Mongol horsemen in the 1220s and 1230s left the area weak and open to conquest by the Dukes of Lithuania, initially under Mindaugas. Grand Duke Ladislaus Jagiełło's marriage to a Polish princess, Jadwiga, in 1385 made him king of Poland and a powerful rival to Muscovy, and several wars ensued between the two over access to the Baltic Sea, with Belarus one of the battlegrounds.

Jewish settlers arrived in Belarus in the late 14th century, initially in the cities of Brest and Hrodna. Belarusian culture flourished until the Polish-Lithuanian union in 1569, which put Polish rulers in the ascendancy. The Commonwealth reached its zenith in the early 17th century then gradually declined until partitions in 1772, 1793 and 1795 saw control of all Belarusian territory pass to the Russian empire. By the 1830s Russification had taken hold, with the Polish language outlawed in schools and the Russian Orthodox church dominant.

Poverty and hardship under Tsarist rule led to significant emigration, notably by Jews to the USA, and fuelled rebellion. In 1863 anti-Russian uprisings erupted across the eastern Baltic region, led in Belarus by Kastus Kalinouski. By the 1880s several organizations championed Belarusian independence, although the movement gained little ground until the Russian Revolution of 1905, when bans on a free press and non-Russian languages were lifted. The outbreak of the First World War brought a million Russian troops into Belarus, with as many of the local population fleeing or being evacuated.

In March 1918 the first all-Belarusian Congress in Minsk declared an independent republic, but nine months later the Bolshevik government in Smolensk proclaimed the Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic (BSSR). A battlefield in the Russo-Polish war, it was divided by the Treaty of Riga in 1921, with 40% of the territory coming under Polish rule.

In Sept. 1939 the Red Army annexed western Belarus and western Ukraine, setting the stage for the region's devastation. Up to 300,000 people were deported under Stalin prior to the German offensive in June 1941. During the three years of Nazi occupation 2.2m. people died, including almost all the Jewish population, and over 1m. buildings were destroyed. The Red Army liberated Minsk in July 1944 and Belarus was fully integrated into the Soviet Union at the end of the war, becoming the most militarized Soviet Republic and a centre for light industry.

Gorbachev's reforms of the mid-1980s encouraged demands for greater freedom. On 25 Aug. 1991 Belarus declared independence, with the reformist Stanislau Shushkevich becoming head of state. Alyaksandr Lukashenka who, in 1991, had opposed the dissolution of the USSR, was elected president in July 1994. By 1996 only 11% of state enterprises had been privatized and the pro-Russian government worked to establish a Russia-Belarus Union. A referendum held in Nov. 1996 extended the president's term of office from three to five years and increased his powers.

The government maintained its political stranglehold at the 2008 parliamentary election, winning all seats. Lukashenka remained defiant in the face of domestic and international pressure for reform. In Dec. 2010 he secured a further presidential term, although the opposition and international observers alleged vote rigging. He was re-elected again in Oct. 2015 in an election that passed off more peacefully than its 2010 counterpart but that nonetheless prompted more accusations of irregularities.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Belarus is situated along the western Dvina and Dnieper. It is bounded in the west by Poland, north by Latvia and Lithuania, east by Russia and south by Ukraine. The area is 207,600 sq. km (80,155 sq. miles). The capital is Minsk. Other important towns are Homel, Vitebsk, Mahilyou, Bobruisk, Hrodno and Brest. On 2 Nov. 1939 western Belorussia was incorporated with an area of over 108,000 sq. km and a population of 4.8m. Census population, 2009, 9,503,807; density, 45.8 per sq. km. Estimate, Jan. 2014: 9,468,154.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 9.50m.

In 2011, 75.2% of the population lived in urban areas. Major ethnic groups: 81.2% Belarusians, 11.4% Russians, 3.9% Poles, 2.4% Ukrainians.

Belarus comprises six regions and one municipality. Areas and populations:

Province	Area sq. km	Population (2014 estimate)	Capital	Population (2014 estimate)
Brest	32,300	1,388,573	Brest	330,934
Homel	40,400	1,425,537	Homel	512,314
Hrodno	25,000	1,054,861	Hrodno	356,557
Mahilyou	29,000	1,072,545	Mahilyou	370,690
Minsk	40,500	1,402,701	Minsk	—
Minsk City	305	1,921,807	—	—
Vitebsk	40,100	1,202,130	Vitebsk	363,061

Belarusian and Russian are both official languages.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2013 births, 118,463 (rate of 12.5 per 1,000 population); deaths, 125,872 (rate of 13.3 per 1,000 population); marriages, 87,127; divorces, 36,105. Annual population growth rate, 2005–12, –0.5%. Life expectancy at birth, 2013, was 64.2 years for men and 75.8 years for women. Infant mortality, 2010, four per 1,000 live births; fertility rate, 2013, 1.5 children per woman.

CLIMATE

Moderately continental and humid with temperatures averaging 20°F (–6°C) in Jan. and 64°F (18°C) in July. Annual precipitation is 22–28" (550–700 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

A new constitution was adopted on 15 March 1994. It provides for a President who must be a citizen of at least 35 years of age, have resided for ten years in Belarus and whose candidacy must be supported by the signatures of 70 deputies or 100,000 electors. At a referendum held on 17 Oct. 2004, 86.2% of votes cast were in favour of the abolition of the two-term limit on the presidency. The vote was widely regarded as fraudulent.

There is a 12-member Constitutional Court. The chief justice and five other judges are appointed by the president.

Four referenda held on 14 May 1995 gave the president powers to dissolve parliament; work for closer economic integration with Russia; establish Russian as an official language of equal status with Belarusian; and introduce a new flag.

At a further referendum of 24 Nov. 1996 turnout was 84%. 79% of votes cast were in favour of the creation of an upper house of parliament nominated by provincial governors and 70% in favour of extending the presidential term of office by two years to five years. The Supreme Soviet was dissolved and a 110-member lower House of Representatives established, whose members are directly elected by universal adult suffrage every four years. The upper chamber is the Council of the Republic (64 seats; 56 members elected by regional councils and eight members appointed by the president, all for four-year terms). In practice, since 1996 the Belarusian parliament has only had a ceremonial function.

RECENT ELECTIONS

Parliamentary elections were held on 23 Sept. 2012. 109 deputies were elected; one of the 110 seats went to a second round. The two main opposition parties boycotted the election. Independent candidates won 104 seats, the Communist Party 3, the Agrarian Party 1 and the Republican Party of Labour and Justice 1. All the elected deputies are supporters of President Lukashenka. Turnout was 74.2%. According to international observers the elections were neither free nor impartial.

Presidential elections were held on 11 Oct. 2015. Alyaksandr Lukashenka was re-elected with 83.5% of votes cast against 4.4% for Tatsiana Karatkevich, 3.3% for Sergei Gaidukevich and 1.7% for Nikolai Ulakhovich. Turnout was 87.2%. Independent observers noted several violations during the poll while accepting that there was a slight improvement on the previous two elections.

CURRENT LEADERS

Alyaksandr Rygorovich Lukashenka

Position

President

Introduction

Alyaksandr Lukashenka has been president since 1994. A communist from an early age, he has strengthened his powers within the constitution but has drawn international condemnation for his autocratic leadership and human rights abuses against political opponents and journalists.

Early Life

Lukashenka was born on 30 Aug. 1954 in Kepys. After studying history and agricultural economics, he taught at the Mahilyou Teaching Institute and the Belarusian SSR Agro-economics Academy. He was a member of Komsomol, a young communists' group, before working on collective farms. After working in local politics, he became a deputy on the Belarusian Supreme Council in 1990. When Belarus gained independence the following year, he opposed the formation of the CIS, set up by Russia, Belarus and the Ukraine, as well as the nationalist and free market tendencies of Stanislau Shushkevich (the first post-independence leader). By the time of the 1994 presidential elections, Shushkevich had been forced to stand down. Campaigning on a pro-Russian manifesto, Lukashenka won in a second round run-off with former prime minister (1990–94) Vyachaslau Kebich, receiving 80.1% of votes.

Career in Office

Following his election, Lukashenka set about increasing presidential powers and strengthening state control. Countering Shushkevich's efforts to promote Belarusian culture, he reinstated Russian as the official language and sought closer ties, not always successfully, with the Russian Federation. Trade agreements were made with Russia and several other former Soviet states. In 1996 he pressed through constitutional changes to give himself more power and to extend his term of office by two years to 2001. He reversed reforms made by his predecessor after the collapse of the Soviet Union and secured control over the state-owned media and security services. He also rejected Shushkevich's previous moves towards privatization.

Lukashenka used his presidential decree to impose restrictions on opponents and journalists, with the international community accusing him of disregarding democracy.

In the 2000 parliamentary elections, his supporters won 81 of 110 seats. The following year he won a second presidential term, taking 75.6% of the vote against 15.4% for Uladzimir Hancharyk. Both elections were criticized by international observers as undemocratic, with many opposition politicians either boycotting them or remaining in exile. International organizations continued to criticize Lukashenka's repressive regime during 2002 (when the authorities expelled an OSCE delegation) and 2003. The USA meanwhile passed legislation allowing the provision of financial support to the opposition in Belarus.

Further parliamentary elections and a referendum were held on 17 Oct. 2004. No opposition candidates won a parliamentary seat in the poll, while Lukashenka claimed overwhelming support in the referendum for his intention to change the constitution and run for another presidential term. The results were dismissed as fraudulent by most international observers, human rights activists and opposition politicians.

Lukashenka was re-elected for a further term in March 2006, again amid accusations of vote rigging. From April 2006 the EU and the USA imposed travel bans and asset freezes on various Belarusian officials, including Lukashenka, deemed responsible for electoral fraud and civil repression.

In 2007 Belarus was in dispute with Russia over oil supplies, price rises and unpaid debts, and in May that year Belarus' bid for a seat on the United Nations Human Rights Council was rejected.

In the spring of 2008 relations with the USA deteriorated further, as Lukashenka's government expelled US diplomats for criticizing Belarus' human rights record. In Sept. 2008 candidates loyal to the president were again returned to every seat in parliamentary elections considered by European monitors to be only marginally less flawed than previous polls.

Following the lifting of the EU's travel ban in Oct. 2008, Lukashenka visited the Vatican in April 2009 for talks with Pope Benedict XVI in his first official visit to Western Europe since the mid-1990s.

Tensions with Russia over energy trading continued. In Jan. 2010 the Belarus government threatened to cut electricity deliveries to the Russian Baltic enclave of Kaliningrad and there was a further dispute in June that year over Belarus' unpaid debts and transit fees. Russia began reducing gas supplies and Lukashenka threatened to disrupt Russian gas and oil deliveries to Europe before the situation was resolved.

The EU reinstated the travel ban on Lukashenka in response to accusations of human rights violations ahead of the presidential election in Dec. 2010, in which he claimed another overwhelming victory. Subsequent protests in Minsk were broken up by force and there were mass arrests of opposition activists. In April 2011 a terrorist attack on a metro station in the capital was cited by Lukashenka as a plot to destabilize the country. Against a background of increasing social unrest, the economy continued to suffer in 2011, with rising inflation, a sharp devaluation of the currency, declining financial support from Russia and debt-servicing difficulties. In Jan. 2012 new legislation imposed restrictions on access to foreign websites, while in parliamentary elections in Sept., which were boycotted by opposition groups, loyal Lukashenka supporters again secured every assembly seat. In April 2013 concerns over the management of the country's energy sector prompted Lukashenka to replace both the minister for energy and the director-general of Belenergo, the state-owned energy corporation. In Dec. 2014 he dismissed the prime minister, Mikhail Myasnikov, along with several other cabinet members and the chief of the central bank amid deteriorating economic conditions. He chose close ally Andrei Kobyakov as the new premier.

Lukashenka was re-elected for a fifth consecutive term following his convincing victory at the Oct. 2015 presidential elections. Despite foreign observers stating that there appeared to be less repression than had been seen during previous elections, prominent opposition leaders were barred from taking part in the poll.

DEFENCE

Conscription is for 18 months, or 12 in the case of university and college graduates. A treaty with Russia of April 1993 co-ordinates their military activities. All nuclear weapons had been transferred to Russia by Dec. 1996. Total active armed forces in 2011 numbered 72,940. In addition there are Ministry of Interior paramilitary troops numbering 110,000.

Defence expenditure in 2012 totalled US$552m. (US$57 per capita), representing 1.0% of GDP.

Army

In 2011 Army personnel numbered 29,600. In addition there were 289,500 reserves. Equipment in 2011 included 515 main battle tanks (T-72s and T-80s).

Air Force

In 2011 the Air Force and Air Defence Forces operated 128 combat-capable aircraft, including MiG-29s, Su-24s, Su-25s and Su-27s, and 50 attack helicopters. Personnel, 2011, 18,170.

INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

A treaty of friendship with Russia was signed on 21 Feb. 1995. A further treaty signed by the respective presidents on 2 April 1997 provided for even closer integration.

ECONOMY

Mining and manufacturing contributed 25.3% to GDP in 2009; followed by finance, public administration, defence and services, 22.0%; construction, 10.7%; and trade and hotels, 10.7%.

Overview

Following the collapse of the Soviet Union, the economy underperformed relative to other transition economies. From 1991 to 1995 it contracted at an average annual rate of 8.1% compared to the 0.6% experienced by other eastern European economies. In 1995 President Lukashenka reinstated price controls, state intervention in private enterprise and the obstruction of foreign investment. In spite of this, the economy grew at an annual average rate of 6.9% in the decade 1996–2005.

The economy is largely sustained by Russian oil subsidies and the processing and re-export of Russian oil at Belarus' two refining centres, Mozyr and Naftan. Growth averaged 8% per year from 2001–11 thanks to improved terms of trade, under-priced energy from Russia and the buoyancy of Belarus' main trading partners. Nevertheless, the global financial crisis that began in 2008 led to a loss of external financing and a sharp decline in exports, exacerbated by an already high current account deficit and low reserves. In 2011 there was a balance of payments crisis as a result of unsustainably loose macroeconomic policies at the end of 2010. Annual inflation soared and the poverty headcount rose from 5.2% in 2010 to 7.3% in 2011, before declining to 5.5% in 2013.

Stabilization measures implemented from mid-2011 included a more flexible exchange rate regime, fiscal consolidation and constrained credit growth. In addition, oil and gas agreements with Russia saw lower-priced imports. Belarus' foreign exchange markets rebounded and the current account deficit was reduced. Annual GDP growth averaged almost 4% between 2010 and 2013.

Currency

The rouble was retained under an agreement of Sept. 1993 and a treaty with Russia on monetary union of April 1994. Foreign currencies ceased to be legal tender in Oct. 1994. Only banknotes are issued—there are no coins in circulation. In Jan. 2000 the Belarusian rouble was revalued at 1 new rouble (BYR) = 1,000 old roubles (BYB). In Nov. 2000 President Lukashenka and President Putin of Russia agreed the introduction of a single currency, but plans to introduce the Russian rouble to Belarus have since been postponed indefinitely. The inflation rate in 1994 was 2,434% but has since fallen, and was at 7.7% in 2010. However, it then climbed to 53.2% in 2011 and further to 59.2% in 2012—the highest annual rate of any country in both years. It was 18.3% in 2013 and 18.1% in 2014. Foreign exchange reserves in June 2005 were US$1,151m., total money supply was 4,025.7bn. roubles and gold reserves were 100,000 troy oz.

Budget

Central government revenue and expenditure (in 1bn. roubles):

	2008	2009	2010
Revenue	50,478	48,453	51,692
Expenditure	44,064	45,148	51,493

In 2010 tax revenue totalled 27,823bn. roubles (including social security contributions, 19,249bn. roubles). Main items of expenditure by economic type in 2009 were: social benefits, 21,204bn. roubles; grants, 9,791bn. roubles; compensation of employees, 6,147bn. roubles.

VAT is 20%.

Performance

Real GDP growth was 1.7% in 2012, 1.0% in 2013 and 1.6% in 2014. Total GDP in 2014 was US$76.1bn.

Banking and Finance

The central bank is the National Bank (Chairman, Pavel Kallaur). In 2013 there were 32 commercial banks. The largest banks are Belarusbank, Belagroprombank, BPS-Sberbank and Belinvestbank.

In 2010 total external debt was US$25,726m., equivalent to 47% of GNI.

There is a stock exchange in Minsk.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy were the equivalent of 7.0 tonnes per capita in 2011.

Electricity

Installed capacity was an estimated 8.4m. kW in 2011. Production was 32.19bn. kWh in 2011. Consumption per capita in 2011 was 3,997 kWh. Construction of the country's first nuclear power plant at Ostrovets—a joint Belarusian-Russian project—began in Nov. 2013, with a first reactor scheduled to become operational in 2019 and a second in 2020.

Oil and Gas

In 2009 output of crude petroleum totalled 13m. bbls; reserves in 2011 were 198m. bbls. Natural gas production in 2009 was 203m. cu. metres; reserves were 2.8bn. cu. metres in 2013.

Minerals

Particular attention has been paid to the development of the peat industry with a view to making Belarus as far as possible self-supporting in fuel. There are over 6,500 peat deposits. There are rich deposits of rock salt and of iron ore.

Agriculture

Output of main agricultural products (in 1m. tonnes) in 2012: potatoes, 6.91; milk, 6.77; sugar beets, 4.77; wheat, 2.55; barley, 1.92; rye, 1.08; meat, 0.91; oats, 0.42; cheese, 0.15; eggs, 3,846m. units. As of 1 Jan. 2013 there were 4.37m. cattle; 4.24m. pigs; 92,000 horses; and 42.4m. poultry.

Agricultural land makes up 42.5% of the country's land area. At the beginning of 2013 there were 5.52m. ha. of arable land and 119,900 ha. of permanent crops. There were 1,530 agricultural organizations and 2,436 private (peasant) farms in 2012.

Agricultural organizations accounted for 75% of agricultural output in 2012, and private (peasant) farms and households 25%. Agricultural output grew by 6.6% in 2012 compared to 2011.

Forestry

Forests occupied 8.63m. ha., or 42% of the land area, in 2010. There are valuable reserves of oak, elm, maple and white beech. Timber production in 2011 was 10.36m. cu. metres.

Fisheries

The total catch in 2010 came to 897 tonnes, exclusively from inland waters. Aquaculture production totalled 16,265 tonnes in 2010 (95% of total fish production).

INDUSTRY

Belarus has a well-developed industry sector. Output in 2012: (in 1,000 tonnes) distillate fuel oil, 11,667; cement, 4,906; potassium fertilizers, 4,831; petrol, 3,729; steel, 2,869; paper and paperboard, 381; sausages, 299; chemical fibres, 239; (in units) tractors, 71,030; lorries, 24,668; buses, 2,271; dump trucks, 1,671; (in 1,000 units) pneumatic rubber tyres, 5,732; refrigerators and freezers, 1,263; TV sets, 594; washing machines, 324; (in 1m. sq. metres) textiles, 184; carpets, 13; (in 1m. litres) beer, 432; distilled alcoholic beverages, 194; (in 1m. pairs) hosiery, 133.7; footwear, 16.5.

Around 75% of GDP is produced by state-owned companies.

Labour

The labour force in 2013 was 4,482,700 (4,665,400 in 2003). 66.1% of the population aged 15–64 was economically active in 2013. In the same year 6.0% of the population was unemployed.

Belarus had 11,000 people living in slavery according to the Walk Free Foundation's 2013 Global Slavery Index.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

In Jan. 2010 Belarus joined a customs union with Kazakhstan and Russia, which was superseded by the Eurasian Economic Union in Jan. 2015.

Imports and Exports

In 2013 imports were valued at US$37,203m. and exports at US$43,023m. The main import suppliers in 2013 were Russia (53.2%), Germany (7.1%), China (6.6%), Ukraine (4.8%) and Poland (3.7%). Principal export markets were Russia (45.3%), Ukraine (11.3%), the Netherlands (9.0%), Germany (4.7%) and Lithuania (2.9%). Main import commodities are crude petroleum including gas condensates, natural gas, motor cars, pharmaceutical products and communications equipment. Export commodities include petroleum products, milk and dairy products, potash fertilizers, crude petroleum including gas condensates, trucks and tractors.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

In 2013 there were 101,030 km of roads (87.0% paved), including 15,735 km of national roads. There were 2,670,567 passenger cars in use as of 1 Jan. 2014 (282 per 1,000 inhabitants). In 2013 public transport totalled 10,546m. passenger-km and freight 25,603m. tonne-km. There were 894 fatalities as a result of road accidents in 2013.

Rail

In 2013 there were 5,490 km of railways in use (1,520 mm gauge), of which 1,013 km were electrified. Passenger-km travelled in 2013 came to 9bn. and freight tonne-km to 44bn.

Civil Aviation

The main airport is Minsk National Airport, which handled 2,593,559 passengers in 2014 and 19,900 tonnes of freight. The national carrier is Belavia. In 2003 Belavia flew on domestic routes and operated international services to Adler/Sochi, Baku, Berlin, Frankfurt, Hurgada, İstanbul, Kaliningrad, Kyiv, Larnaca, London, Moscow, Paris, Prague, Rome, Shannon, Stockholm, Tashkent, Tbilisi, Tel Aviv, Vienna, Warsaw and Yerevan. In 2003 scheduled airline traffic of Belarus-based carriers flew 7m. km, carrying 234,000 passengers (232,000 on international flights).

Telecommunications

In 2011 there were 4,208,000 landline telephone subscriptions (equivalent to 440.2 per 1,000 inhabitants) and 10,694,900 mobile phone subscriptions (or 1,118.8 per 1,000 inhabitants). In 2011, 39.6% of the population were internet users. In March 2012 there were 409,000 Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The death penalty is retained following the constitutional referendum of Nov. 1996; there were no confirmed executions in 2013, at least three in 2014, but then none again in 2015. Belarus is the only European country that still uses the death penalty.

180,427 crimes were reported in 2007. There were 39,552 prisoners in 2007, at a rate of 408 prisoners per 100,000 population. Belarus was ranked 43rd of 102 countries for criminal justice and 30th for civil justice in the 2015 World Justice Project Rule of Law Index, which provides data on how the rule of law is experienced by the general public across eight categories.

Education

Adult literacy rate in 2008 was over 99%. In 2007 there were 365,298 children and 50,568 teachers at pre-school institutions, 362,282 pupils and 22,990 teachers at primary schools, 772,584 pupils and 99,011 teachers in secondary schools, and 576,679 students and 42,603 academic staff at institutions of tertiary education.

In 2007 there were 56 higher educational establishments (46 public and ten private) of which eight were general universities and 24 specialized universities (including four medical, three agricultural, three economics and three technical). There were also seven academies and 14 institutes. In 2007 there were 354,988 people enrolled at state higher education establishments.

Public expenditure on education in 2007 came to 5.3% of GNI.

Health

In 2007 there were 46,965 doctors (48.5 per 10,000 population), 1,964 dentists, 79,941 nurses, 4,921 midwives and 4,179 pharmacists. There were 112.4 hospital beds per 10,000 population in 2007. Belarus has the highest alcohol consumption rate of any country, at an average of 17.5 litres of alcohol per adult per year in the period 2008–10 compared to the global average of 6.2 litres per person.

Welfare

To qualify for an old-age pension men must be age 60 with 25 years of insurance coverage and women must be 55 with 20 years of insurance coverage. Minimum old-age pension is 25% of the average per capita subsistence budget. The maximum pension is 75% of wage base. Benefits are adjusted periodically according to changes in the minimum wage, which in 2009 was 229,000 roubles a month.

RELIGION

The Orthodox Church claims the most adherents. There is a Roman Catholic archdiocese of Minsk and Mahilyou, and three dioceses. According to a report published by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs in 2011 an estimated 58.9% of the population were believers. Of these, 82% were Orthodox, 12% Catholic and the remainder followers of other religions.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

There are four UNESCO sites in Belarus: the Mir Castle Complex, begun in the 15th century (inscribed on the list in 2000); the Radziwill Family complex at Nesvizh (2005); the Belovezhskaya Pushcha/Białowieża Forest site (1979, 1992 and 2014), shared with Poland; and the Struve Geodetic Arc (2005). The Arc is a chain of survey triangulations spanning from Norway to the Black Sea that helped establish the exact shape and size of the earth and is shared with nine other countries.

Press

In Jan. 2013 there were about 1,500 registered print media in Belarus, of which more than 1,100 were non-state media. The most widely read paper is Sovetskaya Belarussiya, with a daily circulation of about 400,000. There are also Belarusian editions of the Russian daily Komsomolskaya Pravda and weekly Argumenty i Fakty.

Tourism

In 2011 there were 115,700 foreign tourists on organized trips. Spending by tourists totalled US$747m. in 2011.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

The Neanderthal Mousterian culture of the Ardennes region produced flint tools between 80–35,000 years ago. Omalien tribes of the early Neolithic period (5–4000 BC) developed settled agricultural practices, sophisticated tools and decorated black pottery. The Bronze Age Hilversum culture left evidence of contact overseas in Wessex, southern England. During the pre-Roman period Celtic and Germanic tribes moved across the region. Much of northern Gaul and southern Britain was settled by a Celtic group known as the Belgae, forming numerous tribes including the seafaring Morini and Menapii in what is now Flanders and the bellicose Nervii in Artois. In alliance with Germanic and other Belgic tribes, the Nervii led resistance to the invasion of Julius Caesar in 59 BC, succumbing five years later. Roman control was extended as far north as the Rhine and the area divided into the provinces of Gallia Belgica and Germania Inferior. Several tribes survived as Roman administrative civitates.

The network of Roman power, based around wealthy villae (country estates), declined from the mid-3rd century AD, despite the campaigns of Julian, who became emperor in AD 361. The massive influx of Germanic tribes (known commonly as the Barbarian invasions) over the Rhine in 406/7 effectively brought Roman rule in Belgium to an end. Chief among the German tribes were the Franks, who settled in Toxandria (modern Brabant). The Frankish Merovingian Empire, established by Childeric I, was based at Tournai and extended by Childeric's son, Clovis. The successors to the Merovingians, the Pippins (or Carolingians), ruled all but in name from Austrasia in the Ardennes. A partnership between the nobility and the church allowed the expansion of Frankish power north and east across the Rhine, bringing Christianity to the Low Countries by the 7th century, under the sees of Arras, Tournai, Cambrai and, from 720, Liège.

The death of Louis the Pious in 840 precipitated the fragmentation of Charlemagne's huge empire. Viking attacks on the Low Countries came at the end of the 8th century, intensifying in the period 841–75. Resistance began under Charlemagne; provincial princes capitalized on the fortification process and land reclamation to increase their own power. Baldwin 'Iron Arm', count of Flanders, fortified Ghent around 867, cementing his authority over the Flemish towns. His successors extended control into Artois (and to Hainault by personal union) in defiance of the French kings. Philippe IV of France was defeated in 1302 at the Battle of the Golden Spurs at Kortrijk, Flanders and formally recognized Flemish independence. Flanders' alliance with England during the Hundred Years War created an advantageous trading relationship, especially the importation of English wool for the textile industry. Bruges (Brugge), Ypres and Ghent flourished and in the 14th century had to be forcibly restrained from becoming city-states by Philip of Burgundy.

Other principalities emerged in the wake of the Carolingian empire, most notably the duchies of Brabant and Limburg and the prince-bishopric of Liège. Their union was forged under the dukes of Burgundy. The marriage of Philip the Bold, duke of Burgundy, to Margaret of Flanders in 1369 was the first step towards what became the Burgundian Kreis (lands) under Emperor Charles V. The addition of Hainault-Holland, Namur and Luxembourg encouraged Burgundian ambitions of centralization and even a unitary empire, vainly attempted by Duke Charles the Bold in the 1470s. The provinces and towns jealously guarded their imperial and local privileges and resisted the high taxation imposed by their Burgundian lord. Burgundian authority was reinforced by the 1477 marriage of Charles' daughter (and heir), Mary, to the Habsburg Maximilian of Austria, later Holy Roman Emperor, beginning over three centuries of Habsburg rule in the Low Countries.

Trade Centres

Bruges became the principal market of northwest Europe in the 14th century but after the silting of its waterways ceded its role in the 1490s to Antwerp. The volume of Portuguese and English traders and Italian financiers testified to the importance of Antwerp as a mercantile and financial centre; the Antwerpen beurs (stock exchange) was established in 1531. Antwerp's population reached 100,000 in the mid-16th century. The artistic achievements of the 15th century were supported by court patronage. Artists such as Rogier van der Weyden in Brussels and Jan van Eyck in Ghent formed part of a Flemish school that greatly influenced northern European art. The University of Louvain (Leuven), founded in 1425, was a centre of Dutch Humanism made famous by scholars such as Erasmus.

Dynastic pressures increased with the marriage of Archduke Philip the Handsome to the heiress of the Spanish crowns, Joanna the Mad, leaving the Netherlands (the Burgundian Low Countries, including Belgium) under the supervision of governors-general in Brussels. Centralization continued under Philip's son, Charles of Ghent (Holy Roman Emperor Charles V), who regulated the succession to his Burgundian territories by pragmatic sanction. However, it was the imposition of a new ecclesiastical hierarchy by Charles' son, Philip II of Spain, that unified opposition in the Netherlands.

The Netherlands was highly receptive to non-conformist ideas, most notably those of Jean Calvin, whose influence had extended to Antwerp by 1545. Appealing to the urban middle classes and the lower nobility, Calvinism suffered repression, especially after the radical iconoclasm of 1566. The following year Philip sent the duke of Alba to stamp out the religious and political uprisings, sparkling revolution in Holland and other northern provinces. The execution of the counts of Hoorne and Egmond in Brussels in 1568 reinforced opposition to Spanish rule.

The secession of the northern Netherlands was partly the result of the inability of the Spanish armies to penetrate the marshes and dendritic waterways of Holland and Zeeland. Although Alba managed to reassert Philip's authority in the south, his armies never retook the provinces north of the Rhine after 1574. Separation was also caused by the extreme demands of the northern Calvinists, who alienated the more Catholic southern provinces. However, a measure of unity was achieved at the Pacification of Ghent after the atrocities of the 'Spanish Fury'—Spanish troops massacred 7,000 people in Antwerp in 1576.

In 1578 Philip appointed as governor-general Alessandro Farnese, duke of Parma, who ejected Protestants from the governments of the southern provinces and waged successful campaigns against the revolutionaries. The Union of Arras (1579), led by Flanders and Hainaut, accepted the sovereignty of the Spanish king, supported Catholicism and ended the revolt of the southern provinces. In reaction the northern provinces drew up the Union of Utrecht, thus marking the birth of the 'Dutch Republic', though Philip was not rejected as sovereign in the north until 1581. Farnese took Antwerp in 1585, effectively creating the boundaries of the renegade Dutch state. Although fighting resumed after the Twelve Year Truce (1609–21), the Habsburg government accepted the independence of the Dutch Netherlands at the Peace of Westphalia in 1648.

The Spanish Netherlands was governed autonomously for much of the 17th century—Liège remained neutral in the revolt and separate until 1795. Antwerp was at first eclipsed as the principal trading centre of the region by Dutch Amsterdam, which attracted many of the south's skilled artisans and merchants. Economic recovery was helped by new industries such as linen production and diamond processing in Antwerp. Art was dominated by the Baroque style, patronized by the Catholic Church and adopted by Rubens, Van Dyck and Jordaens.

War of Succession

The death of Charles II of Spain without an heir in 1700 caused a constitutional crisis and the War of the Spanish Succession. Philip of Anjou, the heir-designate and a grandson of Louis XIV of France, was urged to hand over the Spanish Netherlands to France. The intervention of England and the Dutch was motivated by the fear of either Franco-Spanish union or the reuniting of the Austrian and Spanish Habsburgs. The Spanish Netherlands were finally settled on Emperor Charles VI after the Treaty of Utrecht in 1713, thus bringing the Netherlands under the sway of the Austrian Habsburgs.

Dynastic succession was again the cause of war after the death of Charles VI in 1740. By pragmatic sanction, his daughter, Archduchess Maria Theresa, succeeded to the Habsburg territories but was barred from the Imperial crown (it was secured for her husband, Francis Stephen of Lorraine). Supported by Great Britain, the Dutch and the Hungarian diet, Maria Theresa's armies repelled the French from the Austrian Netherlands, establishing her authority by the Treaty of Aix-la-Chapelle in 1748 (though she lost Silesia to Prussia). Her reign saw great economic gains in the Netherlands and the beginning of industrial capitalism thanks to good trading relations with Great Britain.

The Austrian regime lost popular support under Maria Theresa's successor, Emperor Joseph II, whose abolition of local privileges and his attempts to exchange the Austrian Netherlands for Bavaria made him highly unpopular. Coupled with his attacks on the power of the Catholic Church, his 'Belgian' subjects—conservatives and progressives alike—revolted in 1789. The bulk of Joseph's forces being engaged on the Ottoman frontier, the Austrian army was easily routed at Turnhout. Conservative elements were victorious in the 'Brabant Revolution' and proclaimed the United States of Belgium in 1790.

Although Joseph's brother, Leopold II, reasserted Austrian authority, the seeds of revolution had been sown, encouraged by events in France. Republican France invaded Belgium in 1795, ending the independence and religious rule of Liège. Discontent with French rule was immediate, partly in reaction to military conscription, persecution of the Church and the denial of autonomy. After peasant uprisings in 1798 the Napoleonic consulate agreed a compromise with the papacy and the Belgian church, ending persecution.

Towards Independence

Napoleon's defeat in 1814 left Belgium in the hands of the Great Powers. Belgium was reunified with the Dutch Netherlands as the Kingdom of the Netherlands at the Congress of Vienna. Despite cultural and linguistic affinities, the relationship between the two Netherlands was uneasy. Belgium, ruled by the Dutch William of Orange, was under-represented in the States General and its French-speaking elite alienated by the declaration of Dutch as the sole legal language. The two economies were in contrast, the Dutch being primarily mercantile while the Belgian was geared towards mechanized industry. Belgium was one of the first areas of continental Europe to adopt the innovations of the Industrial Revolution, most notably in the Ghent textile industry and coal mining in Hainaut. The loss of the French market in 1814 and William's refusal to increase tariffs to protect Belgian industry impacted heavily on the Belgian economy.

Dissent paved the way for the Belgian Revolution of 1830. The secession of Belgium was secured by the intervention of France and Britain, which recognized Belgian independence in 1831. Repelled by the French, William accepted the loss of Belgium in 1838. Limburg and Luxembourg were partitioned and a liberal constitution implemented. The great powers insisted on a Belgian monarch and Prince Leopold of Saxe-Coburg was duly installed.

A Liberal government came to power in 1847 after three devastating harvests. The Liberal prime minister, Walthère Frère-Orban, championed the removal of church control of the schools. The Schools War dominated the political agenda and saw a conservative counter-offensive with the establishment of a network of independent Catholic schools. A conservative Catholic victory in 1884 brought Auguste Beernaert to the premiership. Closely associated with the Flemish revivalists, Beernaert managed the Flemish Equality Law, giving the Flemish language the same rights as French. Changes in the electoral system brought in full male suffrage (over 25 years of age) in 1893.

The Congo

Belgian foreign policy was bound by recognition (and imposition) of neutrality. King Leopold II, set on expanding his kingdom, looked to Africa. The Belgian Congo, acquired as his personal possession in 1885, was soon infamous for colonial abuse and exploitation. After widespread international condemnation, the 'Congo Free State' was formally annexed by Belgium in 1908, thus curbing Leopold's inhuman regime. In Europe, threats were perceived to the west and east. Attempts by Albert I (reigned 1909–34) to arm Belgium against French and German aggression were frustrated by the domestic pacifist movement led by Beernaert. Belgian neutrality was violated by Germany in 1914 after Albert's refusal to allow German free passage. Albert remained with his army on the Yser River throughout the First World War, supported by Allied troops. Neutrality, seen by many Belgians as a hindrance, was abolished under the Treaty of Versailles in 1919; Belgium was awarded the provinces of Eupen and Malmédy and jurisdiction over Ruanda-Urundi from the defeated Germany.

Economic reconstruction after the First World War included an economic union with Luxembourg in 1921. The Belgian Congo was exploited for its minerals. Constitutional changes allowed for equal suffrage of all men over 21 (women were denied the vote until 1948) and the formal linguistic separation of Flanders and Wallonia (excluding Brussels).

The 1930s was a time of rising unemployment and concern over German ambitions. Germany invaded Belgium on 10 May 1940. Capitulation after just 18 days made King Leopold III unpopular, despite his refusal to flee to France (and later to London) with the government. Resistance was active for much of the Second World War. Insurgents managed to protect the port of Antwerp, crucial for Allied support, during the liberation of Belgium in Sept. 1944.

The post-war economy recovered quickly but political unity foundered on the royal question. A referendum on the King's return from imprisonment in Austria sparked protest in Wallonia. In 1951 Leopold abdicated in favour of his son, Baudouin.

European Union

Belgium embarked on international co-operation under the leadership of Prime Minister Paul-Henri Spaak. Economic union with Luxembourg was re-established and extended to include the Netherlands, forming the Benelux Economic Union. In 1949 Belgium joined the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) and in 1951 the European Coal and Steel Community (ECSC). The European Economic Community (EEC) and the European Atomic Energy Community (Euratom) were subsequently created under separate treaties signed in Rome on 25 March 1957.

The administration of the Belgian Congo resisted political reform and demands for greater participation until the 1950s. After violent protest and agitation, local government reform was passed in 1957 but was too late to quell the independence movement, led by Patrice Lumumba. In 1959 the Belgian government rushed through a decolonization programme, leaving the Congo abruptly in 1960. Rwanda and Burundi became independent in 1962.

A milestone in domestic politics was reached in 1958 with the School Pact, ending a century of conflict between secularists and conservative Catholics. Prime Minister Gaston Eyskens negotiated a guarantee of funding for state secondary schools and private religious schools. Relations between Walloon and Flemish society became difficult as a result of the decline of Walloon industry. Strikes and discontent with government subsidies set Belgium on the course of federalization. After the division of Brabant along linguistic lines Belgium officially became a federal state in 1993. King Baudouin, who died in 1993, was respected for his even-handed approach to Belgium's divided society and seen as an important symbol of unity. He was succeeded by his brother, Albert II.

Following elections in June 2007 in which the Christian Democratic and Flemish/New Flemish Alliance won most seats but fell short of an overall majority, no new government was formed for 282 days. After a period of interim administration a coalition took office in March 2008. However, Prime Minister Yves Leterme resigned in Dec. 2008 after criticism of the government's role in the bailing-out of Fortis Bank. He was succeeded by Herman Van Rompuy but returned for another term in Nov. 2009 when Van Rompuy left to become the first president of the European Council. Leterme's coalition collapsed six months later after a dispute over francophone voting rights.

With the parliamentary election of June 2010 resulting in no party having an absolute majority, attempts to form a coalition followed. Fundamental differences between the Flemish separatist New Flemish Alliance and the Francophone Socialist Party led to breakdowns in negotiations. After a series of failed talks, it was only in Dec. 2011 that Elio Di Rupo, leader of the Socialist Party, formed a government comprising six parties. Without an administration for 541 days, Belgium has the record for failing to form a new government following an election.

In Nov. 2015 Brussels-based militants linked to the Islamic State jihadist movement launched assaults in Paris, France that killed 130 people. In March 2016 Islamic State bombers then attacked transport targets in Brussels, killing 35.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Belgium is bounded in the north by the Netherlands, northwest by the North Sea, west and south by France, and east by Germany and Luxembourg. Its area is 30,528 sq. km. Population (at 1 Jan. 2015), 11,209,044 (5,703,950 females); density, 367.2 per sq. km. The Belgian exclave of Baarle-Hertog in the Netherlands has an area of seven sq. km and a population (2010) of 2,504. There were 1,195,122 resident foreign nationals as at 1 Jan. 2013. In 2011, 97.4% of the population lived in urban areas.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 11.30m.

Dutch (Flemish) is spoken by the Flemish section of the population in the north, French by the Walloon south. The linguistic frontier passes south of the capital, Brussels, which is bilingual. Some German is spoken in the east. Each language has official status in its own community. (Bracketed names below signify French/Dutch alternatives.)

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

According to the constitution of 1831, Belgium is a constitutional, representative and hereditary monarchy. The legislative power is vested in the King, the federal parliament and the community and regional councils. The King convokes parliament after an election or the resignation of a government, and has the power to dissolve it in accordance with Article 46 of the Constitution.

The reigning King is Philippe, born 15 April 1960, who succeeded his father, Albert II, on 21 July 2013. Married on 4 Dec. 1999 to Mathilde d'Udekem d'Acoz, daughter of Count d'Udekem d'Acoz and Countess Anna Maria Komorowska. Offspring: Princess Elisabeth, b. 25 Oct. 2001 (heiress apparent); Prince Gabriel, b. 20 Aug. 2003; Prince Emmanuel, b. 4 Oct. 2005; Princess Eléonore, b. 16 April 2008.

Other principal members of the royal family (indicated in bold): Albert II, b. 6 June 1934, reigned 9 Aug. 1993–21 July 2013. Married on 2 July 1959 to Paola Ruffo di Calabria, daughter of Don Fuleo and Donna Luisa Gazelli de Rossena. Princess Astrid, b. 5 June 1962, daughter of Albert II, married Archduke Lorenz of Austria, 22 Sept. 1984. Offspring: Prince Amedeo, b. 21 Feb. 1986, married Elisabetta Maria Rosboch von Wolkenstein, 5 July 2014; Princess Maria Laura, b. 26 Aug. 1988; Prince Joachim, b. 9 Dec. 1991; Princess Luisa Maria, b. 11 Oct. 1995; Princess Laetitia Maria, b. 23 April 2003. Prince Laurent, son of Albert II, b. 19 Oct. 1963, married Claire Coombs, 12 April 2003. Offspring: Princess Louise, b. 6 Feb. 2004; Prince Nicolas, b. 13 Dec. 2005; Prince Aymeric, b. 13 Dec. 2005.

A constitutional amendment of June 1991 permits women to accede to the throne.

The King receives an annual allowance of €11,554,000 for 2016. Albert II's allowance had dropped to €906,000 by 2016 following his abdication in 2013. Princess Astrid received an annual allowance of €315,000 for 2016 and Prince Laurent €302,000.

Constitutional reforms begun in Dec. 1970 culminated in May 1993 in the transformation of Belgium from a unitary into a 'federal state, composed of communities and regions'. The communities are three in number and based on language: Flemish, French and German. The regions also number three, and are based territorially: Flemish, Walloon and the Brussels-Capital Region.

Since 1995 the federal parliament has consisted of a 150-member Chamber of Representatives, directly elected by obligatory universal suffrage from 20 constituencies on a proportional representation system for four-year terms, and a Senate. Most senators were directly elected until reforms that came into effect for the 2014 elections. Since the elections held on 25 May 2014 the Senate comprises 60 members (previously 71), of whom 50 are appointed by and from Community and Regional parliaments (29 by the Flemish parliament; 10 by the parliament of the French Community; 8 by the Walloon parliament; 2 by the French-speaking group in the Brussels-Capital Region parliament; and 1 by the parliament of the German-speaking Community). These senators co-opt a further ten senators (six Dutch-speaking and four French-speaking). The state reform that introduced these changes also devolved an array of powers from federal government to the regions and language communities.

The federal parliament's powers relate to constitutional reform, federal finance, foreign affairs, defence, justice, internal security, social security and some areas of public health. The Senate is essentially a revising chamber, though it may initiate certain legislation, and is equally competent with the Chamber of Representatives in matters concerning constitutional reform and the assent to international treaties.

The number of ministers in the federal government is limited to 15. The Council of Ministers, apart from the Prime Minister, must comprise an equal number of Dutch- and French-speakers. Members of parliament, if appointed ministers, are replaced in parliament by the runner-up on the electoral list for the minister's period of office. Community and regional councillors may not be members of the Chamber of Representatives or Senate.

National Anthem

'La Brabançonne'; words by A. Dechet, tune by F. van Campenhout. The Flemish version is 'O dierbaar België, O heilig land der vaad'ren' ('Noble Belgium, for ever a dear land').

RECENT ELECTIONS

Elections to the 150-member Chamber of Representatives were held on 25 May 2014. The New Flemish Alliance (N-VA) won 33 seats with 20.3% of votes cast; the Socialist Party (PS) 23 seats (11.7%); the Reformist Movement (MR) 20 (9.6%); Christian Democratic and Flemish (CD&V) 18 (11.6%); Open Flemish Liberals and Democrats (Open Vld) 14 (9.8%); Socialist Party Alternative (sp.a) 13 (8.8%); the Humanist Democratic Centre (CDH) 9 (5.0%); Green (Groen) 6 (5.3%); Ecolo 6 (3.3%); Flemish Interest (VB) 3 (3.7%); the Workers' Party Coalition (PVDA-PTB) 2 (3.7%); Francophone Democratic Federalists (FDF) 2 (1.8%); and the People's Party (PP) 1 (1.5%). Turnout was 89.4%.

Voting for the 40 electable seats in the Senate last took place on 13 June 2010. N-VA won 9 seats; PS, 7; CD&V, sp.a, MR and Open Vld, 4 each; VB, 3; Ecolo and Humanist Democratic Centre, 2 each; and Groen!, 1. There were also 31 indirectly elected senators. However, starting with the May 2014 elections the Senate is no longer directly elected, and appointments are instead made by community and regional parliaments.

European Parliament

Belgium has 21 representatives. At the May 2014 elections turnout was 89.6% (90.4% in 2009). The N-VA won 4 seats with 16.8% of the vote (political affiliation in European Parliament: European Conservatives and Reformists); the Open Vld, 3 with 12.8% (Alliance of Liberals and Democrats for Europe); the PS, 3 with 10.7% (Progressive Alliance of Socialists and Democrats); the MR, 3 with 9.9% (Alliance of Liberals and Democrats for Europe); the CD&V, 2 with 12.6% (European People's Party); sp.a, 1 with 8.3% (Progressive Alliance of Socialists and Democrats); Groen, 1 with 6.7% (Greens/European Free Alliance); Ecolo, 1 with 4.3% (Greens/European Free Alliance); the VB, 1 with 4.3% (non-attached); the CDH, 1 with 4.1% (European People's Party); the Christian-Social Party, 1 with 0.2% (European People's Party).

CURRENT LEADERS

Charles Michel

Position

Prime Minister

Introduction

Charles Michel became prime minister in Oct. 2014, heading a centre-right coalition in which his Reformist Movement (MR) is the only French-speaking party.

Early Life

Born on 21 Dec. 1975 in Namur, in the Wallonia region of Belgium, Michel studied law at the Université Libre de Bruxelles (ULB) and the University of Amsterdam. After graduating in 1998 he was admitted to the Brussels Bar. His political career began when he joined the Jodoigne youth wing of the Liberal Reformist Party in 1991, serving as its chairman from 1992–99. He became a councillor for Walloon Brabant in 1994 and was vice-chairman of the provincial council from 1995–99.

Elected as a member of the federal parliament in June 1999, he resigned in 2000 to become minister for interior affairs and civil service in the Walloon parliament, a post he held until July 2004. He was then a city councillor for Wavre, the capital of Walloon Brabant, until Nov. 2006 and became mayor of Wavre in Dec. that year.

From 2004 he was a spokesman for the MR, an alliance principally of Francophone parties. Re-elected to the federal parliament in June 2007, he was minister for development co-operation from 2007–11 until he resigned to assume the party leadership.

In the May 2014 general elections the MR emerged as the third largest party behind the Flemish separatist New Flemish Alliance (N-VA) and the Socialist Party. After initial attempts to form a government foundered, Michel oversaw negotiations and formed a coalition with three Flemish-speaking parties. The inclusion of the N-VA, as well as the MR's position as the administration's sole French-speaking party, brought criticism from other Francophone parties who refused to enter government with separatists. The coalition agreement committed the government to economic austerity measures aimed at cutting €11bn. from the budget over five years.

Career in Office

Michel took office on 11 Oct. 2014. The main cabinet posts were divided equally between representatives of Flemish- and French-speaking parties, in accordance with Belgian law. His early months in office saw strikes and protests against austerity measures. His main challenges were likely to be implementing economic reforms in the face of opposition from centre-left parties and trade unions, while at the same time managing tensions within the coalition.

In Nov. 2015 Michel's government raised the security alert in Brussels to the maximum level and staged armed police raids in response to the risk of an Islamist terror onslaught similar to a series of devastating attacks that month inflicted on Paris in neighbouring France by suspects who had apparently been based in the Belgian capital. In March 2016, days after the capture in Brussels of one of the suspected ringleaders of the Paris attacks, Islamic State-linked bombers struck Brussels' Zaventem Airport and the city's metro system; 35 people died and hundreds were injured.

DEFENCE

Conscription was abolished in 1994 and the Armed Forces were restructured, with the aim of progressively reducing the size and making more use of civilian personnel. Since 1 Jan. 2002 they have been organized into one unified structure consisting of four main components: the Land Component (Army), Naval Component (Navy), Air Component (Air Force) and Medical Component.

In 2013 defence expenditure totalled US$5,294m. (US$507 per capita), representing 1.0% of GDP.

Army

The Land Component (formerly Army) has five 'capacities': the command capacity, the combat capacity, the support capacity, the services capacity and the training capacity. Total strength (2011) 12,544. In addition there are 1,400 reserves. All tracked vehicles are in the process of being phased out in favour of wheeled vehicles. The transition was ongoing as of March 2016.

Navy

The Naval Component (formerly Navy), based at Ostend and Zeebrugge, includes two frigates and five minehunters. Personnel (2011) totalled 1,590. The naval air arm comprised three Aérospatiale Alouette III helicopters in 2011.

Air Force

The Air Component (formerly Belgian Air Force) has a strength of (2011) 5,739 personnel. There are two tactical wings, based at Florennes and Kleine Brogel. Equipment in 2011 included 88 combat-capable aircraft (mostly Lockheed Martin F-16s).

ECONOMY

Services contributed 76% of GDP in 2012, with industry accounting for 23% and agriculture 1%.

According to the anti-corruption organization Transparency International, Belgium ranked 15th in the world in a 2015 survey of the countries with the least corruption in business and government. It received 77 out of 100 in the annual index.

Overview

With a strategic geographical location within the European Union and sophisticated transport links, Belgium's open and highly developed economy is closely linked with those of its main partners—Germany, France and the Netherlands. Its main industries include chemicals, pharmaceuticals and auto manufacture. However, with little in the way of natural resources, the country is a net importer of raw materials.

Economic activity slowed at the end of 2007 and into 2008 as a result of low private consumption and investment as well as negative export growth stemming from the global financial crisis. Bankruptcies increased by 12.5% year-on-year in Dec. 2008. The end of that year also saw a downturn in manufacturing, although consumer confidence and activity in the trade and construction sectors experienced a slow recovery. In Oct. 2008 the French bank BNP Paribas bailed out the Belgian wing of Fortis, the Belgian-Dutch bank conglomerate, the Dutch part having been nationalized the same month.

A slow recovery in GDP growth began in the third quarter of 2009 and continued through 2010, when GDP expanded by 2.7% owing to modest increases in private consumption and exports. However, growth declined to 1.8% in 2011 as confidence weakened in tandem with a significant slowdown across the rest of the eurozone. From the third quarter of 2012 until mid-2013 Belgium experienced recession as quarterly growth rates averaged -0.3% before a modest recovery came in 2014.

Historically, Belgium has suffered from low labour mobility and wage inflexibility, which has contributed to long-term unemployment. In 2014 unemployment stood at 10.7% among people aged between 55 and 64 and 46.3% among those aged 15 to 24. Employment rates for the prime-age working population were comparable to international levels. The jobless rate among ethnic minorities is twice that of native Belgians because of poor education, language barriers and ineffective anti-discrimination legislation.

After more than 500 days under a caretaker government, the establishment of a working coalition that assumed office in Dec. 2011 contributed to a measurable improvement in financial market conditions. In 2009 the government deficit had reached its highest level in decades, at 5.4% of GDP. However, consolidation efforts reduced the fiscal deficit from 4% in 2011 to 3% in 2014. Pension and unemployment insurance reforms were introduced, while the decision to ensure further devolution of power to regions and communities increased stability. The banking system has become less complex and less leveraged, with around two-thirds of bank assets under foreign ownership. Also, the financial authorities have committed to strengthening banking supervision through implementation of the Basel III and Solvency II regulatory frameworks.

Long-term demographic patterns pose a major challenge, with the OECD predicting the old-age ratio will double by 2050, constricting economic growth and putting pressure on public finances and services. Continued eurozone uncertainty, slow recovery across the continent and political instability (exacerbated by the European migrant crisis) also point to an uncertain outlook for the economy.

Currency

On 1 Jan. 1999 the euro (EUR) became the legal currency in Belgium at the irrevocable conversion rate of BEF40:3399 to EUR1. The euro, which consists of 100 cents, has been in circulation since 1 Jan. 2002. On the introduction of the euro there was a 'dual circulation' period before the Belgian franc ceased to be legal tender on 28 Feb. 2002. Euro banknotes in circulation on 1 Jan. 2002 had a total value of €24.0bn.

Inflation rates (based on OECD statistics):

In Sept. 2009 gold reserves were 7.32m. troy oz and foreign exchange reserves US$8,060m. Total money supply was €97,656m. in Aug. 2009.

Budget

Central government revenue and expenditure in €1m. for calendar years:

Belgium's budget deficit in 2014 was 3.1% of GDP (2013, 2.9%; 2012, 4.1%). The required target set by the EU is a budget deficit of no more than 3%.

VAT is 21% (reduced rates, 12% and 6%).

Total GDP in 2014 was US$531.5bn.

Banking and Finance

The National Bank of Belgium was established in 1850. The Governor is Jan Smets. Its shares are listed on Euronext (Brussels).

The law of 22 Feb. 1998 adapted the status of the National Bank of Belgium in view of the realization of the Economic and Monetary Union.

The National Bank of Belgium is within the European System of Central Banks framework in charge of the issue of banknotes, the execution of exchange rate policy and monetary policy. Furthermore, it is the Bank of banks and the cashier of the federal state.

The law of 2 Aug. 2002 relating to the supervision of the financial sector and financial services integrated the supervision of banks and insurance corporations into one institution, the Banking, Finance and Insurance Commission.

The Royal Decree of 3 March 2011 concerning the evolution of the supervisory architecture for the financial sector transferred the responsibilities for the prudential supervision of the financial sector from the Banking, Finance and Insurance Commission to the National Bank of Belgium. The Banking, Finance and Insurance Commission was transformed into the Financial Services and Markets Authority, responsible for the integrity of the financial markets and consumer protection.

On 30 June 2013, 100 credit institutions with a balance sheet totalling €1,088bn. were established in Belgium: 40 governed by Belgian law and 60 by foreign law, all supervised by the National Bank of Belgium. 512 collective investment institutions (130 Belgian and 382 foreign) were marketed in Belgium and supervised by the Financial Services and Markets Authority; and 64 investment firms were operating in Belgium with the approval of the National Bank of Belgium (stockbroking firms) and the Financial Services and Markets Authority (other investment firms).

Gross external debt totalled US$1,379,070m. in June 2012.

There is a stock exchange (a component of Euronext) in Brussels. Euronext was created in Sept. 2000 through the merger of the Amsterdam, Brussels and Paris stock exchanges.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

In 2011 an estimated 4% of energy consumption came from renewables (wind power, solar power, hydro-electric power, tidal power, geothermal energy and biomass), compared to the European Union average of 13%. A target of 13% has been set by the EU for 2020.

Environment

Belgium's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy were the equivalent of 13.4 tonnes per capita in 2011.

Electricity

The production of electricity amounted to 90.2bn. kWh in 2011; consumption per capita (2011) was 8,429 kWh. Installed capacity (2011) was 20.1m. kW. 54% of production in 2011 was nuclear-produced. Belgium had seven operational nuclear reactors in 2010.

Minerals

Belgium's mineral resources are very limited; the most abundantly occurring mineral is calcite.

Agriculture

There were, in 2006, 1,382,390 ha. under cultivation, of which 841,666 ha. were arable land. There were 49,850 farms in 2006.

Chief crops	Area (ha.)		Production (tonnes)

Wheat	204,209	201,330	1,737,552	1,661,958

At the May 2006 agricultural census there were 6,294,904 pigs, 2,663,076 cattle, 153,976 sheep, 34,799 horses, 27,985 goats and 32,866,650 poultry.

Forestry

In 2010 forest covered 0.68m. ha. (22% of the total land area). Timber production in 2011 was 5.13m. cu. metres.

Fisheries

In 2011 the Belgian fishing fleet numbered 89 vessels of 15,800 gross tonnes. Total catch in 2010 was 22,418 tonnes, almost entirely from marine waters.

INDUSTRY

The leading companies by market capitalization in March 2015 were: Anheuser-Busch InBev, a beverages company (US$196.6bn.); KBC, a banking group (US$25.8bn.); and UCB, a biopharmaceutical company (US$14.1bn.).

Output, 2007 unless otherwise indicated, in 1,000 tonnes: distillate fuel oil, 12,737; crude steel (2006), 11,238; cement (2006), 8,192; residual fuel oil, 7,391; petrol, 5,041; sugar (2005), 3,394; beer (2006), 1,784.1m. litres; mineral water (2006), 1,066.8m. litres.

Labour

In 2010 (Labour Force Survey), 60,686 persons worked in the primary sector (agriculture, fishing and mining), 1,049,239 in the secondary sector (industry and construction) and 3,298,598 in the tertiary sector (services). The unemployment rate was 7.9% in Dec. 2015 (down from 8.5% in 2014 as a whole).

In French-speaking Wallonia the rate is more than double that in Dutch-speaking Flanders.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

In 1922 the customs frontier between Belgium and Luxembourg was abolished; their foreign trade figures are amalgamated.

Trade Fairs

Brussels ranks as the second most popular convention city behind Singapore according to the Union des Associations Internationales (UAI), hosting 5.5% of all international meetings held in 2012.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

Length of roads, 2006: motorways, 1,763 km; national roads, 12,585 km; secondary roads, 1,349 km; local roads, 136,559 km. Belgium has one of the densest road networks in the world. In 2007 there were 5,006,300 passenger cars in use, 29,000 buses and coaches, 696,700 lorries and vans, and 371,500 motorcycles and mopeds. Road accidents caused 994 fatalities in both 2008 and 2009 (1,470 in 2000).

Rail

The main Belgian lines were a State enterprise from their inception in 1834. In 1926 the Société Nationale des Chemins de Fer Belges (SNCF) was formed to take over the railways. In 2005 SNCF was divided into separate operating and infrastructure companies. The length of railway operated in 2005 was 3,696 km (electrified, 3,110 km). In 2008, 217m. passengers and 55.5m. tonnes of freight were carried.

The regional transport undertakings Société Régionale Wallonne de Transport and Vlaamse Vervoermaatschappij operate tramways around Charleroi (20 km) and from De Panne to Knokke (55 km). There is also a metro and tramway in Brussels (175 km), and tramways in Antwerp (57 km) and Ghent (30 km). An urban commuter rail network around Brussels is partially open but may not be completed until 2025 or later. A tram link between Hasselt and Maastricht in the Netherlands is currently under construction; it is expected to open in 2017.

Civil Aviation

The former national airline SABENA (Société anonyme belge d'exploitation de la navigation aérienne) was set up in 1923. However, in Nov. 2001 it filed for bankruptcy. Its successor, Delta Air Transport (DAT), a former SABENA subsidiary, was given a new identity in Feb. 2002 as SN Brussels Airlines. In Nov. 2006 SN Brussels Airlines merged with Virgin Express and since March 2007 has been trading under the name Brussels Airlines.

The busiest airport is Brussels National Airport (Zaventem), which handled 18,710,388 passengers in 2008 and 658,743 tonnes of freight. Charleroi is the second busiest airport in terms of passenger numbers and Liège the third busiest.

Shipping

In Jan. 2009 there were 81 ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 3.93m. GT. Of the 81 vessels registered, 23 were general cargo ships, 19 liquid gas tankers, 18 bulk carriers, ten oil tankers, six container ships, four passenger ships and there was one chemical tanker. Antwerp is Europe's second busiest port in terms of both total cargo handled and container traffic after Rotterdam. In 2008, 189,390,000 tonnes of cargo were handled at the port of Antwerp (84,371,000 tonnes loaded and 105,018,000 tonnes discharged), with total container throughput 8,663,000 TEUs (twenty-foot equivalent units).

The length of navigable inland waterways was 1,516 km in 2008; 108.2m. tonnes of freight were carried on inland waterways in 2009.

Telecommunications

In 2014 mobile phone subscribers numbered 12,734,724 (1,142.7 per 1,000 persons). In the same year there were 4,532,475 main (fixed) telephone lines. 85.0% of the population were internet users in 2014. The fixed broadband penetration rate in 2014 was 359.9 subscribers per 1,000 inhabitants. In March 2012 there were 4.6m. Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

Judges are appointed for life. There is a court of cassation, five courts of appeal and assize courts for political and criminal cases. There are 27 judicial districts, each with a court of first instance. In each of the 222 cantons is a justice and judge of the peace. There are also various special tribunals. There is trial by jury in assize courts. The death penalty, which had been in abeyance for 45 years, was formally abolished in 1991.

The Gendarmerie ceased to be part of the Army in Jan. 1992.

The population in penal institutions in Jan. 2013 was 12,126 (108 per 100,000 of national population). Owing to overcrowding in Belgian prisons some inmates have since Feb. 2010 been accommodated at Tilburg prison in the Netherlands. In 2015 the World Justice Project Rule of Law Index, which provides data on how the rule of law is experienced by the general public across eight categories, ranked Belgium 20th of 102 countries for criminal justice and 16th for civil justice.

In Aug. 2003 a new act reformed war crimes legislation introduced in 1993 which allowed for charges to be brought against foreign nationals accused of abuses committed outside

Belgian jurisdiction. The amendment requires that either accuser or defendant be a citizen of or resident in Belgium.

Education

Following the constitutional reform of 1988, education is the responsibility of the three Communities (the French Community, the Flemish Community and the German-speaking Community). Education is free and compulsory from the age of six to 18, although from 16 to 18 it may be part-time.

In 2007 there were 411,951 children and 29,550 teaching staff in pre-primary schools; 732,411 pupils and 65,378 teaching staff in primary schools; 825,293 pupils and (2006) 81,873 teaching staff in secondary schools; and 393,687 students and 26,298 academic staff in tertiary education. There were 16 universities and 73 non-university colleges and institutes in 2006–07. There are five royal academies of fine arts and six royal conservatoires at Brussels (one Flemish and one French), Liège, Ghent, Antwerp and Mons.

Public expenditure on education in 2005 amounted to 6.0% of GNI and represented 12.1% of total government expenditure.

The adult literacy rate is at least 99%.

Health

On 31 Dec. 2006 there were 42,326 physicians, 8,423 dentists and 12,109 pharmacists. There were 210 hospitals with 55,000 beds in 2007. Total health spending accounted for 9.4% of GDP in 2007. In Jan. 2000 the Belgian government agreed to decriminalize the use of cannabis. Euthanasia became legal on 24 Sept. 2002. The Belgian Chamber of Representatives had given its approval on 16 May 2002 to a measure adopted by the Senate on 26 Oct. 2001. Belgium was the second country to legalize euthanasia, after the Netherlands.

Welfare

Expenditure on social security, 2006: wage earners, €50,774.6m.; self-employed, €3,858.9m. Expenditure on pensions, 2006: wage earners, €15,324.55m.; self-employed, €2,192.28m.

The retirement age for men and women is 65. In Oct. 2014 the four parties negotiating the formation of the new government announced that the state pension age will rise to 66 in 2025 and further to 67 in 2030. A full pension is 60% of average lifetime earnings (75% for married couples). Based on size and sustainability of payments, a report by Aon Consulting in Nov. 2005 rated Belgium as the country with the worst pensions system of the 15 pre-expansion EU countries.

RELIGION

The Constitution provides for freedom of religion. Traditionally, Roman Catholicism has been the majority religion but it has been in rapid decline—according to the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life, an estimated 62% of the population in 2010 were Catholics, 29% religiously unaffiliated and 6% Muslim. There are nine Roman Catholic dioceses including the Archdiocese of Mechelen-Brussel. In Feb. 2016 there was one cardinal.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

Belgium has 11 sites which have been included on the UNESCO world heritage list. They are: the Flemish Béguinages (1998); the four lifts on the Canal du Centre and their environs (1998); La Grand Place in Brussels (1998); the historic centre of Bruges (2000); the major town houses of the architect Victor Horta in Brussels (2000); the Neolithic flint mines at Spiennes (2000); Notre Dame cathedral in Tournai (2000); the Plantin-Moretus Museum, a Renaissance printing and publishing house (2005); Stoclet House in Brussels, a house designed by artists of the Vienna Secession movement (2009); and Major Mining Sites of Wallonia, the four best-preserved mining sites of the country dating back to the late 17th century (2012).

Belgium shares the belfries of Belgium and France (1999 and 2005) with France.

Press

In 2013 there were 25 daily newspapers (23 paid-for and two free) with a combined circulation of 1,520,000. There were 14 newspaper online editions in 2012 with 3,818,000 unique daily visitors.

Tourism

In 2014 there were 17,068,872 overnight stays by non-resident visitors, including 4,144,256 by visitors from the Netherlands and 2,449,842 by visitors from France. A total of 11,293,395 overnight stays were for leisure, holiday and recreation purposes, 3,554,876 for conferences, congresses and seminars and 2,220,601 for other business purposes.

Festivals

The country's largest festival is Gentse Feesten (July), which has been held annually in Ghent since 1843 and combines music and theatre. The main rock and pop festivals are Graspop Metal Meeting (June) at Dessel, Rock Werchter (July) at Werchter near Leuven, Klinkers (July–Aug.) in Bruges, Pukkelpop (Aug.) in Hasselt and Marktrock (Aug.) in Leuven.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Evidence of farming settlements at Cuello in northern Belize dates to around 2000 BC. Over the following centuries Mayan towns and villages encompassed Belize, Mexico's Yucatán peninsula and much of Guatemala. The city of Caracol, near Belize's border with Guatemala, is estimated to have spread over 140 sq. km, with some 180,000 residents at its height in the 7th century AD. However, the Mayan civilization declined rapidly after 900 AD for reasons that are still unclear. Construction of the great pyramid temples ceased, literacy was abandoned and subsistence farming returned.

By 1525 the Spanish adventurer, Hernán Cortés, established a base in Honduras. From 1543 Melchor and Alonso Pacheco took control of land around Tipu in southern Belize, which became part of the Spanish Empire. However, Spanish control was limited and Tipu became a centre of Mayan resistance in the late 1630s. By the 1640s British buccaneers were attacking Spanish ships from havens along Belize's coast. Some established settlements and traded logwood, then used in dyes. After the capture of Jamaica from Spain in 1655 they were joined by demobilized British soldiers and sailors.

Spanish attempts to expel the British settlers ended with the defeat of the commander of Yucatán, Arturo O'Neill, at the Battle of St George's Caye in 1798. Belize was part of Britain's 'informal empire' during the 18th century. Logwood and mahogany were harvested by slaves with British Honduras, as it was known, a focal point for Central American trade until the Panama railway was completed in 1855. In 1862 British Honduras was declared a British colony with a Legislative Assembly and a lieutenant-governor under the governor of Jamaica. The administrative connection with Jamaica was severed in 1884.

Belize's small economy was hit by the depression in the 1930s and the capital, Belize City, was laid waste by a hurricane in Sept. 1931. Widespread protests over unemployment and poor living conditions in the mid-1930s were led by Antonio Soberanis Gómez. The establishment of the General Workers' Union became one of the foundations of Belize's nationalist movement after the Second World War. The People's United Party (PUP), formed in 1950, became the dominant political force under George Price. Universal suffrage was introduced in 1964 and thereafter the majority of the legislature were elected rather than appointed.

The road to independence from Britain was complicated by turbulent relations with Guatemala, which had long claimed Belize as its territory. Price rejected calls for an 'associated state' of Guatemala and full independence was achieved on 21 Sept. 1981, prompting Guatemala to threaten war. Price served as Belize's first prime minister until his party was defeated by the United Democratic Party (UDP) under Manuel Esquivel in Dec. 1984. Guatemala officially recognized Belize as an independent sovereign nation in Sept. 1991. But a border dispute rumbled on, remaining unresolved at the time of Dean Barrow's election as prime minister in Feb. 2008, following a landslide victory for the UDP.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Belize is bounded in the north by Mexico, west and south by Guatemala and east by the Caribbean. Fringing the coast there are three atolls and some 400 islets (cays) in the world's second longest barrier reef (140 miles), which was declared a world heritage site in 1996. Area, 22,965 sq. km.

There are six districts as follows, with area, 2010 census population and chief city:

District	Area (in sq. km)	Population	Chief City	Population
Belize	4,307	95,292	Belize City	57,169
Cayo	5,196	75,046	San Ignacio/ Santa Elena	17,878

Stann Creek	2,554	34,323	Dangriga	9,591
Toledo	4,413	30,785	Punta Gorda	5,351

Population at the 2010 census, 324,528; density, 14.1 per sq. km. Estimate, July 2013: 349,728.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 359,000.

The capital is Belmopan (2010 census population, 13,931). In 2010, 45.0% of the population were urban.

English is the official language. Spanish is widely spoken. In 2010 the main ethnic groups were Mestizo (Spanish-Maya), 49.7%; Creole (African descent), 20.8%; Mayans, 9.9%; and Garifuna (Caribs), 4.6%.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2009 births (est.), 8,000; deaths (est.), 1,000. In 2009 the estimated birth rate per 1,000 was 25 and the death rate 4; infant mortality in 2010 was 14 per 1,000 live births. Life expectancy in 2013 was 70.9 years for males and 77.1 for females. Annual population growth rate, 2005–10, 2.5%; fertility rate, 2013, 2.7 children per woman.

CLIMATE

A tropical climate with high rainfall and small annual range of temperature. The driest months are Feb. and March. Belize

City, Jan. 74°F (23.3°C), July 81°F (27.2°C). Annual rainfall 76" (1,890 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

The head of state is the British sovereign, represented by an appointed Governor-General. The Constitution, which came into force on 21 Sept. 1981, provided for a National Assembly, with a five-year term, comprising a 32-member House of Representatives (31 elected by universal suffrage plus the Speaker), and a Senate consisting of 13 members, six appointed by the Governor-General on the advice of the Prime Minister, three on the advice of the Leader of the Opposition, one on the advice of the Belize Council of Churches and the Evangelical Association of Churches, one on the advice of the Belize Chamber of Commerce and Industry and the Belize Business Bureau and one on the advice of the National Trade Union Congress of Belize and the Civil Society Steering Committee plus the Senate President.

CURRENT LEADERS

Dean Barrow

Position

Prime Minister

Introduction

Dean Barrow, leader of the United Democratic Party (UDP), won a landslide victory in the Feb. 2008 general election to become Belize's first black prime minister. He took office promising to root out corruption, reduce crime and reform the faltering economy. He was returned for a second term in March 2012 and for an unprecedented third in Nov. 2015.

Early Life

Dean Barrow was born on 2 March 1951 in Belize City and was educated at St Michael's College. He studied law at the University of the West Indies, Barbados, and the Norman Manley Law School in Kingston, Jamaica. He entered the legal profession in 1975, joining his uncle Dean Lindo's Church Street Chambers in Belize City and becoming a partner in 1977. In the early 1980s he completed a master's degree in international relations at the University of Miami.

In 1983 Barrow was elected to Belize City council. He successfully contested the Dec. 1984 general election for the UDP, winning the Queen's Square division. He was appointed attorney general and minister of foreign affairs, serving until 1989 when the UDP lost office. In 1989 Barrow set up with Rodwell Williams the law firm Barrow & Williams which has acted for influential clients including the Belize Bank and Belize Telecommunications Ltd (BTL). In 1990 Barrow became deputy leader of the UDP.

With the UDP victory at the 1993 general election, Barrow returned to his previous posts of attorney general and minister of foreign affairs but also took on responsibility for the national security, immigration and nationality, and media portfolios. This concentration of power attracted some criticism. In 1998, after the UDP lost all but three seats in the general election, Barrow became party head and oversaw the securing of seven seats in the 2003 election.

In opposition, Barrow argued for greater transparency in public finances and advocated building public infrastructure. In the Feb. 2008 general election the UDP upset predictions of a close result to win 25 out of 31 seats. Barrow took office as prime minister on 8 Feb. 2008 and on 11 Feb. announced his new cabinet with himself as minister of finance.

Career in Office

Barrow's early months in office were dominated by investigations into a financial scandal inherited from the previous administration, involving the alleged misuse of US$20m. of overseas grants. With politicians, the Belize Bank and a health care company all implicated, Barrow requested US assistance to set up an audit. Among his other major challenges were the revitalization of the economy, and implementing a programme to build houses, roads and health centres. The ongoing problem of crime was highlighted in Sept. 2011 as the US government added Belize to a blacklist of countries considered to be producers of or transit routes for illegal drugs. The UDP won the parliamentary election of March 2012 albeit with a reduced majority, giving Barrow a second term in office. The UDP nonetheless won further parliamentary elections in March 2012 and Nov. 2015, extending Barrow's premiership to a third consecutive term.

DEFENCE

The Belize Defence Force numbers around 1,050 (2011) with 700 reservists. There are three infantry battalions, three reserve companies, a support group and an air wing.

In 2013 defence expenditure totalled US$18m. (US$53 per capita), representing 1.1% of GDP.

ECONOMY

In 2011 agriculture accounted for 13% of GDP, industry 23% and services 64%.

Overview

Belize is classified as an upper middle-income country by the World Bank. The largest industries are services, garment production, food processing, tourism, construction and oil. In 2014 sugar and citrus fruits comprised over 50% of total exports, whilst the service sector accounted for 60% of GDP. Other exports include marine products, bananas and papayas. A Commercial Free Zone established in 1994 has seen foreign direct investment substantially increase since 2000. Two tropical storms in 2008 caused damage to agriculture and infrastructure valued at 4.8% of GDP.

Belize weathered the global financial crisis relatively well compared to other Caribbean Community countries. Increased exports of petroleum, citrus fruits and bananas, allied with reduced imports, narrowed the external current account deficit from 6.1% of GDP in 2009 to 3.1% in 2010. GDP growth declined to 1.5% in 2013 owing to a fall in oil production and agricultural output, before rebounding in 2014 to 3.6% as a result of increased agricultural exports and tourist arrivals.

In Feb. 2007 the government restructured 98% of its external debt, worth US$900m., although national debt remains a concern. The government renationalized Belize Telemedia (BTL) and Belize Electricity Limited (BEL) in 2011, prompting Standard & Poor's international agency to downgrade the country's sovereign credit rating from 'B' to 'B-'. In Feb. 2012 it was further downgraded to a lowly 'CCC+'. However, further investment in sugar and non-traditional agricultural products subsequently boosted the economic outlook, resulting in a further rating reclassification to 'B-/B' in Nov. 2014.

Annual GDP growth rates had averaged 7% in the 1980s but declined to less than 4% over the period 2000–10. The overall poverty rate rose from 34% in 2002 to 41% in 2009, while unemployment stood at 10.1% in April 2015. The IMF has highlighted improving the business environment and addressing the widening current account deficit as key to stronger growth.

Currency

The unit of currency is the Belize dollar (BZD) of 100 cents. Since 1976 $B2 has been fixed at US$1. Total money supply was $B463m. in July 2005 and foreign exchange reserves were US$101m. There was inflation of 0.5% in 2013 and 1.2% in 2014.

Budget

Revenues in 2011–12 were $B843.6m. and expenditures $B889.8m. Tax revenues accounted for 81.5% of total revenues; current expenditure accounted for 82.0% of total expenditures.

A Goods and Services Tax (GST) was introduced in July 2006, initially of 10% and since April 2010 of 12.5%.

Performance

Real GDP growth was 3.8% in 2012, 1.5% in 2013 and 3.6% in 2014. Total GDP in 2014 was US$1.7bn.

Banking and Finance

A Central Bank was established in 1981 (Governor, Glenford Ysaguirre) and in 2001 had deposits of $B148m. There were (2001) one development bank and six other banks.

External debt was US$1,057m. in 2007.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy were the equivalent of 1.5 tonnes per capita in 2011.

Electricity

Installed capacity in 2011 was 144,000 kW. Production was 322m. kWh in 2011 and consumption per capita 1,558 kWh.

Oil and Gas

After several years of exploration, oil was discovered in 2005 by Belize Natural Energy. It is the only company producing oil in Belize. Production of crude oil was 4,300 bbls per day in 2010.

Agriculture

In 2005 there were 70,000 ha. of arable land and 32,000 ha. of permanent crops. Output, 2006 (in 1,000 tonnes): sugarcane, 1,192; oranges, 212; bananas, 87. Livestock (2001): cattle, 56,000; pigs, 28,000; horses, 5,000; mules, 4,000; chickens, 1m.

Forestry

In 2010, 1.40m. ha. (61% of the total land area) were under forests. Timber production in 2011 was 167,000 cu. metres.

Fisheries

The total catch in 2012 amounted to 149,806 tonnes, exclusively from sea fishing.

INDUSTRY

Manufacturing is mainly confined to processing agricultural products and timber. There is also a clothing industry. Sugar production in 2006 was 113,000 tonnes; molasses, 42,000 tonnes.

Labour

The labour force in 2013 was 149,600 (100,800 in 2003). 68.3% of the population aged 15–64 was economically active in 2013. In the same year 11.7% of the population was unemployed.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

Merchandise imports in 2014 totalled US$1,004.3m. (US$931.2m. in 2013) and merchandise exports US$359.1m. (US$411.4m. in 2013).

Principal imports in 2014 were food, animals and beverages (21.7%) followed by machinery and transport equipment (21.4%); main exports in 2014 were food, animals and beverages (55.5%) followed by mineral fuels and lubricants (16.3%).

The leading import supplier in 2010 was the USA (47.9%), followed by Mexico and China; the leading export destination in 2010 was the USA (49.1%), followed by the UK and Costa Rica.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

In 2006 there were 575 km of main roads and 2,432 km of other roads. There were 40,000 passenger cars in use in 2006 and 14,800 trucks and vans. In 2006 there were 68 deaths as a result of road accidents.

Civil Aviation

There is an international airport (Philip S. W. Goldson) in Belize City. The national carrier is Maya Island Air, which in 2003 operated domestic services and international flights to Flores (Guatemala). There were direct flights in 2003 with other airlines to Boston, Charlotte, Dallas, Houston, Indianapolis, Las Vegas, McAllen, Miami, Montego Bay, New York, Raleigh, San Pedro Sula, San Salvador and Washington, D.C. In 2013 Philip S. W. Goldson International handled 542,833 passengers (449,291 in 2008).

Shipping

The main port is Belize City, with a modern deep-water port able to handle containerized shipping. There are also ports at Commerce Bight and Big Creek. In Jan. 2009 there were 246 ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 950,000 GT. Nine cargo shipping lines serve Belize, and there are coastal passenger services to the offshore islands and Guatemala.

Telecommunications

In 2011 there were 28,800 landline telephone subscriptions (equivalent to 90.7 per 1,000 inhabitants) and 203,100 mobile phone subscriptions (or 638.7 per 1,000 inhabitants). Fixed internet subscriptions totalled 9,400 in 2010 (30.1 per 1,000 inhabitants).

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

Each of the six judicial districts has summary jurisdiction courts (criminal) and district courts (civil), both of which are presided over by magistrates. There is a Supreme Court, a Court of Appeal and a Family Court. There is a Director of Public Prosecutions, a Chief Justice and two Puisne Judges. Belize was one of ten countries to sign an agreement in Feb. 2001 establishing a Caribbean Court of Justice (CCJ) to replace the British Privy Council as the highest civil and criminal court. In the meantime the number of signatories has risen to 12. The court was inaugurated at Port of Spain, Trinidad on 16 April 2005. Belize became the third country to abolish appeals to the Privy Council and accept the CCJ as its court of last resort in June 2010.

The population in penal institutions in Dec. 2012 was 1,562 (476 per 100,000 of national population). Belize's prison population rate ranks in the top ten in the world. Belize was ranked 97th of 102 countries for criminal justice and 64th for civil justice in the 2015 World Justice Project Rule of Law Index, which provides data on how the rule of law is experienced by the general public across eight categories.

Education

The adult literacy rate was 76.9% in 2003 (76.7% among males and 77.1% among females). Education is in English. State education is managed jointly by the government and the Roman Catholic and Anglican Churches. It is compulsory for children between five and 14 years and primary education is free. In 2008–09 there were 53,000 pupils at primary schools and 32,000 at secondary schools. There are two government-maintained schools for children with special needs. There is a teacher training college. The University College of Belize opened in 1986. The University of the West Indies maintains an extramural department in Belize City.

In 2009 public expenditure on education came to 6.1% of GDP. Expenditure on education was 18.7% of total government spending in 2008.

Health

In 2006 there were 11 hospitals with 12 beds per 10,000 persons. There were 263 physicians, 12 dentists, 441 nurses and 46 pharmacists. Medical services in rural areas are provided by health care centres and mobile clinics.

RELIGION

In 2010 there were an estimated 160,000 Roman Catholics and 110,000 Protestants according to the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life, with the remainder of the population being unaffiliated or following other religions.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

The Belize Barrier Reef Reserve System was inscribed on the UNESCO World Heritage List in 1996.

Press

There are no daily newspapers although there were eight non-dailies in 2008, the largest of which were Belize Times, The Amandala Press and The Reporter.

Tourism

There were 716 hotels and 7,111 hotel rooms in 2011. In 2012 there were 917,869 visitors of which 277,135 stayed overnight and 640,734 arrived on cruise ships.

Festivals

The Belize Carnival is celebrated in the week before Lent begins, with particularly extravagant celebrations in San Pedro. There is also a series of Lobsterfests (at which lobsters prepared in many different ways are consumed) held at different venues throughout June and July. 10 Sept. is St George's Caye Day, held in memory of the defeat of Spanish forces in 1798 and including a battle re-enactment. National Independence Day follows on 21 Sept.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

The People's Republic of Benin is the former Republic of Dahomey. Dahomey was a powerful, well-organized state from the 17th century, trading extensively in slaves through the port of Whydah with the Portuguese, British and French. On the coast an educated African elite was established in the 19th century.

After the defeat of Dahomey and the abolition of the monarchy in 1894, the French occupied territory inland up to the River Niger and absorbed Dahomey into French West Africa. Protest against French rule grew after the Second World War and in 1946 Dahomey was designated a French overseas territory.

After becoming independent on 1 Aug. 1960 civilian government was interrupted by long periods of military rule. In Oct. 1972 Gen. Mathieu Kérékou seized power and installed a left-wing regime. In 1975 Kérékou renamed the country Benin. A constitution was adopted in 1977, based on a single Marxist-Leninist party, the Parti de la Révolution Populaire du Bénin (PRPB). Benin is beset with economic problems, factional fighting and frequent plots to overthrow the regime.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Benin is bounded in the east by Nigeria, north by Niger and Burkina Faso, west by Togo and south by the Gulf of Guinea. The area is 114,763 sq. km, and the population (2013 census) 10,008,749; density, 87.2 per sq. km.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 10-88m.

In 2011, 42.5% of the population were urban.

The areas and populations of the 12 departments are as follows:

Department	Sq. km	Census (2013)	Department	Sq. km	Census (2013)
Alibori	26,242	867,463	Donga	11,126	543,130
Atacora	20,499	772,262	Littoral	79	679,012
Atlantique	3,233	1,398,229	Mono	1,605	497,243
Borgou	25,856	1,214,249	Ouémé	1,281	1,100,404
Collines	13,931	717,477	Plateau	3,264	622,372
Couffo	2,404	745,328	Zou	5,243	851,580

Cotonou, the capital, had a population of 679,012 in 2013; other major towns are Abomey-Calavi, Godomey, Parakou and Porto-Novo.

There are about 40 different ethnic groups, the largest being the Fon, Adja, Yoruba and Bariba.

The official language is French. Over 50 indigenous languages are spoken.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2006 (estimates) births, 303,000; deaths, 79,000. Rates, 2006 estimates (per 1,000 population): births, 38.7; deaths, 10.1. Infant mortality, 2010 (per 1,000 live births), 73. Expectation of life in 2007 was 59.8 years for males and 62.1 for females. Annual population growth rate, 1994-2004, 3.2%. Fertility rate, 2008, 5.4 children per woman.

CLIMATE

In coastal parts there is an equatorial climate, with a long rainy season from March to July and a short rainy season in Oct. and Nov. The dry season increases in length from the coast, with inland areas having rain only between May and Sept. Porto-Novo, Jan. 82°F (27.8°C), July 78°F (25.6°C). Annual rainfall 52" (1,300 mm). Cotonou, Jan. 81°F (27.2°C), July 77°F (25°C). Annual rainfall 53" (1,325 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

The Benin Party of Popular Revolution (PRPB) held a monopoly of power from 1977 to 1989.

In Feb. 1990 a 'National Conference of the Active Forces of the Nation' proclaimed its sovereignty and appointed Nicéphore Soglo prime minister of a provisional government. At a referendum in Dec. 1990, 93.2% of votes cast were in favour of the new constitution, which introduced a presidential regime. The President is directly elected for renewable five-year terms. Parliament is the unicameral National Assembly of 83 members elected by proportional representation for four-year terms.

A 30-member advisory Social and Economic Council was set up in 1994. There is a Constitutional Court.

National Anthem

'L'Aube Nouvelle' ('The Dawn of a New Day'); words and tune by Gilbert Dagnon.

RECENT ELECTIONS

In the first round of presidential elections held on 6 March 2016 Lionel Zinsou (Cowry Forces for an Emerging Benin) won 28.4% of the vote against Patrice Talon (ind.) with 23.8%, Sébastien Ajavon (ind.) with 23.0%, Abdoulaye Bio-Tchané (Alliance for a Triumphant Benin) with 8.8% and Pascal Koupaki (New Consciousness Rally) with 5.9%. 28 other candidates won less than 2% of the vote each. Talon won the second round run-off on 20 March 2016 with 65.4% against Zinsou with 34.6%. Turnout was 64.0% in the first round and 66.1% in the second round.

Parliamentary elections were held on 26 April 2015. The Cowry Forces for an Emerging Benin–Amana Alliance, a coalition supporting then President Yayi Boni, won 33 of 83 seats; Union Makes the Nation, 13; Democratic Renewal Party, 10; Benin Rebirth Party–Patriotic Revival Party, 7; National Alliance for Development and Democracy, 5. Six parties won four seats or fewer.

CURRENT LEADERS

Patrice Talon

Position

President

Introduction

Patrice Talon became president of Benin on 20 March 2016. Having amassed a fortune from the cotton industry, he was a close ally of former president Boni Yayi (who was in power from 2006–16) before being accused in 2012 of plotting a coup. He was pardoned in 2014.

Early Life

Patrice Guillaume Athanase Talon was born in Ouidah on 1 May 1958. He earned a baccalaureate in Dakar, Senegal before joining the science faculty of the University of Dakar. He subsequently went into agribusiness in Paris, France.

In 1985 he returned to Benin and established the Société de Distribution Intercontinentale (SDI), which supplied agricultural products to the cotton industry. In the 1990s Benin began to privatize the industry and Talon used his close ties with government to establish a near monopoly, earning him the nickname 'king of cotton'.

Talon was one of the chief financial backers of Boni Yayi's election campaign in 2006 and again in 2011. In 2009 and 2011 respectively his company, Benin Control, acquired two nationally important enterprises, Sodeco and PVI. However, in 2012 Yayi accused Talon of mismanagement and financial misappropriation before taking Sodeco and PVI into state control. The president also accused his former ally of plotting to poison him and to orchestrate a coup. Talon fled to Paris but was officially pardoned in 2014, although a number of charges against him remain unresolved. In 2015 US business magazine Forbes listed him as the 15th richest individual in Sub-Saharan Africa with personal wealth of some US$400m.

Career in Office

During his 2016 presidential campaign Talon promised to reform the state and harness the country's 'collective drive'. In particular, he has pledged to limit the president to one five-year term in office, to reform the courts and to dilute executive powers. After taking office, he named lawyer Joseph Djogbénou (who previously defended him against the coup charges) as minister of justice and included three women in his first government.

DEFENCE

There is selective conscription for 18 months. Defence expenditure totalled US$86m. in 2013 (US$9 per capita), representing 1.0% of GDP.

Army

The Army strength (2011) was 4,300, with an additional 2,500-strong paramilitary gendarmerie.

Navy

Personnel in 2011 numbered about 200; the force is based at Cotonou.

Air Force

The Air Force has suffered a shortage of funds and operates no combat aircraft. Personnel, 2011, 250.

ECONOMY

Agriculture and fisheries contributed 32.7% to GDP in 2009; followed by trade and restaurants, 17.1%; finance, 10.7%; and public administration, defence and services, 10.1%.

Overview

Over the first decade of the century the economy grew on average by 3.9% per year. The services and agricultural sectors dominate, accounting for more than 85% of GDP, with cotton production particularly important. The Agricultural Productivity and Diversification Program launched in 2011 seeks to implement improved technologies to develop food security and diversify production.

GDP growth was 2.6% in 2010, lower than predicted as a result of flooding and weak exports, but averaged 5.5% per year between 2012 and 2014. Private investment (predominantly focused on oil exploration) increased by 6% in 2013, while inflation stood at 1%.

Benin's geographical location makes it an important transit point for exports from neighbouring countries including Burkina Faso and Nigeria. Benin aims to become an emerging economy by 2025 by achieving the United Nations Millennium Development Goals. However, regional disparities, high levels of poverty, corruption and inefficiency are impediments to long-term growth.

Currency

The unit of currency is the franc CFA (XOF) with a parity of 655-957 francs CFA to one euro. Total money supply was 394,434m. francs CFA in June 2005 and foreign exchange reserves were US$692m. There was inflation of 1.0% in 2013 but deflation of 1.1% in 2014.

Budget

The fiscal year is the calendar year. In 2010 revenues were 651.7bn. francs CFA and expenditures 702.2bn. francs CFA.

VAT is 18%.

Performance

Real GDP growth was 5.4% in 2012, 5.6% in 2013 and 5.4% again in 2014. Total GDP was US$9.6bn. in 2014.

Banking and Finance

The bank of issue and the central bank is the regional Central Bank of West African States (BCEAO). The Governor is Tiémoko Meyliet Koné. In Dec. 2001 it had total assets of 5,517,700m. francs CFA. In 2009 there were 13 banks and one financial institute. The Caisse Autonome d'Amortissement du Bénin manages state funds.

Total foreign debt was US$1,221m. in 2010, representing 18% of GNI.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Benin's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2011 were the equivalent of 0.6 tonnes per capita.

Electricity

Installed capacity in 2011 was an estimated 171,000 kW. In 2011 production was 154m. kWh; Benin also imported 925m. kWh. Consumption per capita in 2011 was 110 kWh.

Oil and Gas

The Semé oilfield, located 15 km offshore, was discovered in 1968. Production commenced in 1982 but ceased in 2004. Crude petroleum reserves in 2011 were 8m. bbls.

Agriculture

Benin's economy is underdeveloped, and is dependent on subsistence agriculture. In 2002, 3.69m. persons depended on agriculture, of whom 1.55m. were economically active. Small independent farms produce about 90% of output. In 2007 an estimated 2.7m. ha. were arable and 0.27m. ha. permanent crops; about 12,000 ha. were irrigated in 2002. There were 185 tractors in 2002. The chief agricultural products, 2002 (in 1,000 tonnes) were: cassava, 2,452; yams, 1,875; maize, 622; seed cotton, 486; cottonseed, 267; sorghum, 195; groundnuts, 146; tomatoes, 141.

Livestock, 2003 estimates: cattle, 1,600,000; goats, 1,300,000; sheep, 670,000; pigs, 550,000; chickens, 10m.

Livestock products, 2003 (estimates, in 1,000 tonnes): beef and veal, 19; pork and pork products, 7; goat meat, 4; poultry meat, 12; eggs, 7; milk, 31.

Forestry

In 2010 there were 4.56m. ha. of forest (41% of the total land area), mainly in the north. Timber production in 2011 was 6.79m. cu. metres.

Fisheries

Total catch in 2010 was 39,791 tonnes, mainly freshwater fish.

INDUSTRY

Only about 2% of the workforce is employed in industry. The main activities include palm-oil processing, brewing and the manufacture of cement, sugar and textiles. Also important are cigarettes, food, construction materials and petroleum. Production (2007 unless otherwise specified, in 1,000 tonnes): cement (2010 estimate), 1,305; palm oil (estimate), 40; cottonseed oil, 22; groundnut oil (estimate), 10; raw sugar, 10; sawnwood, 84,000 cu. metres.

Labour

The estimated labour force numbered 3,825,000 in 2010 (54% males), up from 3,212,000 in 2005. Approximately half of the economically active population is engaged in agriculture, fishing and forestry.

Benin had 80,000 people living in slavery according to the Walk Free Foundation's 2013 Global Slavery Index.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Commercial and transport activities, which make up 36% of GDP, are extremely vulnerable to developments in neighbouring Nigeria, with which there is a significant amount of illegal trade.

Imports and Exports

Merchandise imports in 2014 totalled US$3,596.1m. (US$2,940.7m. in 2013) and merchandise exports US$951.0m. (US$602.0m. in 2013).

Principal imports in 2014 were food, animals and beverages (45.1%) followed by machinery and transport equipment, and mineral fuels and lubricants; main exports in 2014 were crude materials and animal and vegetable oils (35.0%) followed by machinery and transport equipment, and food, animals and beverages.

The main import partners are France, China and Côte d'Ivoire. Principal export partners are China, Nigeria and India.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

There were 19,000 km of roads in 2004, of which 9.5% were paved. Passenger cars in use in 2007 totalled 149,300, buses and coaches 1,100, and lorries and vans 35,700.

Rail

In 2005 there were 438 km of metre gauge railway. In 2007 railways carried 0.1m. tonnes of freight. Passenger services were suspended in 2007 but have since resumed on a limited basis.

Civil Aviation

The international airport is at Cotonou (Cadjehoun), which in 2012 handled 466,778 passengers (all on international flights) and 5,237 tonnes of freight. Westair Benin, the only operational airline based in the country, was founded in 2002. In 2010 there were direct flights to 17 destinations in Africa as well as Paris.

Shipping

There is a port at Cotonou, which handled 6,307,000 tonnes of cargo in 2008 (714,000 tonnes loaded and 5,593,000 tonnes discharged), up from 5,889,000 tonnes in 2007.

Telecommunications

Mobile phone subscribers numbered 10,562,647 in 2014 (996.5 per 1,000 persons). In the same year there were 195,662 main (fixed) telephone lines. 5.3% of the population were internet subscribers in 2014.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The Supreme Court is at Cotonou. There are Magistrates Courts and a tribunal de conciliation in each district. The legal system is based on French civil law and customary law.

The population in penal institutions in 2010 was 6,908 (75 per 100,000 of national population). 74.9% of prisoners had yet to receive a trial according to 2014 estimates by the International Centre for Prison Studies. The death penalty was abolished in Aug. 2011.

Education

Adult literacy rate was 41% in 2008. In 2006 there were 1,356,818 pupils in primary schools with 31,103 teaching staff; and, in 2004, 344,890 pupils in secondary schools with 14,410 teaching staff. There were 42,603 students in higher education in 2006. The leading institution in the tertiary sector is the National University of Benin (Université Nationale du Bénin), located in Cotonou.

In 2006 public expenditure on education came to 3.9% of GNI and 18.0% of total government spending.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Indigenous Monpa clans established settlements in the eastern Himalayas by around 2000 BC. Buddhism was brought to Bhutan in the 7th century AD when Tibetan lamas (monks) founded monasteries at Bumthang and Kyichi, although animist beliefs persisted among the scattered villages. It was the arrival in 1616 of a monk, Zhabdrung Nawang Namgyal, fleeing persecution in Tibet, which led to the foundation of the kingdom of Bhutan. Over a period of 35 years Zhabdrung and his followers built fortresses and monasteries and established the Drukpa sect of Buddhism as well as a dual system of governance known as the Chhoesid. Power was split between the Deb Raja, the head of secular affairs (responsible for four regional governors) and the Dharma Raja, the spiritual head who was charged with enacting laws. In 1720 the Ch'ing dynasty took control of Tibet, claiming suzerainty of it and neighbouring Bhutan.

Tensions between Bhutan and Bengal to the south culminated in a Bhutanese invasion of Cooch Behar in 1772. This prompted the governor of the province to seek military assistance from the British who had defeated the Nawab of Bengal in 1757. Skirmishes continued for two years until peace was brokered by Tashi Lama, then Regent of Tibet. British attempts to develop trade with Bhutan in the 1780s were unsuccessful and new tensions emerged when British India took control of neighbouring Assam in 1826. In 1864 British India claimed ownership of a strip of southern Bhutan known as the Duars. It was formally ceded to India the following year, although the Treaty of Sinchula provided for an annual subsidy to Bhutan as compensation.

In 1907 the office of Dharma Raja came to an end. The governor of Tongsa, Ugyen Wangchuck, was then chosen as Maharajah of Bhutan, the first of a hereditary line (the title is now King of Bhutan). He concluded a treaty with British India in 1910 which allowed for internal autonomy with British control of foreign policy in return for doubling Britain's annual subsidy.

After Indian independence, a treaty of 1949 returned the Duars to Bhutan. The kingdom continued to manage its internal affairs while India inherited control of Bhutan's defence and foreign affairs.

When Communist Chinese forces invaded Tibet in 1950, Bhutan was claimed as part of 'Greater Tibet'. In response, India closed the Bhutan-Tibet border and upgraded roads linking Bengal with Bhutan. Amid mounting Indo-Sino tensions in the early 1960s, Bhutan established a small army, trained and equipped by India. The reign of the third king, Jigme Dorji Wangchuk (1952-72), was marked by gradual economic development and an opening up to the outside world. The 151-seat National Assembly was established in 1952 and Bhutan became a member of the United Nations in 1971, since when relations with China have slowly thawed.

In the early 1990s, tens of thousands of 'illegal immigrants', mostly Nepali-speaking Hindus, were forcibly expelled from southern and western Bhutan. Twenty years on, there are still more than 85,000 people claiming to be Bhutanese refugees in camps set up by the UNHCR in eastern Nepal, although around 23,000 have been resettled in the USA and Europe since March 2008. Bhutan was ruled from 1972-2006 by King Jigme Singye Wangchuck. He abdicated in Dec. 2006 in favour of his son, Jigme Kesar Namgyel Wangchuck. In Dec. 2007 and March 2008 Bhutan held its first democratic parliamentary elections. The leader of the Druk Phuensum Tshogpa (Bhutan Peace and Prosperity Party), Jigme Thinley, took office as the first elected prime minister of Bhutan on 9 April 2008.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Bhutan is situated in the eastern Himalayas, bounded in the north by Tibet and on all other sides by India. In 1949 India retroceded 83 sq. km of Dewangiri, annexed in 1865. Area 46,650 sq. km (18,012 sq. miles); 2005 census population, 672,425 (364,482 males), giving a density of 14 per sq. km.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 775,000.

In 2011, 35.5% of the population lived in urban areas. A Nepalese minority makes up 30-35% of the population, mainly in the south. The capital is Thimphu (2005 population, 79,185). The country is divided into 20 districts (dzongkhag).

The official language is Dzongkha.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2008 (estimates) births, 14,800 (rate of 21.5 per 1,000 population); deaths, 4,900 (rate of 7.1 per 1,000 population). Life expectancy at birth, 2013, was 68.0 years for men and 68.7 years for women. Infant mortality, 2010, 44 per 1,000 live births. Annual population growth rate, 2000-08, 2.5%; fertility rate, 2008, 2.6 children per woman.

CLIMATE

The climate is largely controlled by altitude. The mountainous north is cold, with perpetual snow on the summits, but the centre has a more moderate climate, though winters are cold, with rainfall under 40" (1,000 mm). In the south, the climate is humid sub-tropical and rainfall approaches 200" (5,000 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

Bhutan's first formal constitution came into force on 18 July 2008, after a period of almost seven years of planning. There is a bicameral parliament. The lower house is the National Assembly (with a maximum of 55 members but currently with 47, all elected) and the upper house the 25-member National Council (with 20 members elected and five appointed by the king). Executive power is vested in the Council of Ministers.

The reigning King is Jigme Kesar Namgyel Wangchuck (b. 1980), who succeeded his father King Jigme Singye Wangchuck (abdicated 14 Dec. 2006). He was elected on 6 Nov. 2008. With the introduction of democratic elections in 2007–08, the King's role became more ceremonial. Nonetheless, all leading political parties have affirmed their loyalty to the monarchy, which remains central to political life.

In 1907 the Tongsa Penlop (the governor of the province of Tongsa in central Bhutan), Sir Ugyen Wangchuck, GCIE, KCSI, was elected as the first hereditary Maharaja of Bhutan. The Bhutanese title is Druk Gyalpo, and his successors are addressed as King of Bhutan. The stated goal is to increase Gross National Happiness.

National Anthem

'Druk tsendhen koipi gyelknep na' ('In the Thunder Dragon Kingdom'); words by Gyaldun Dasho Thinley Dorji, tune by A. Tongmi.

RECENT ELECTIONS

Bhutan's first ever elections were held on 31 Dec. 2007 when 15 members (all independents) were elected to the National Council (the non-partisan upper house of Bhutan's bicameral parliament). A further five members were elected on 29 Jan. 2008. In the second National Council elections, 20 members (again, all independents) were elected in single-member constituencies on 23 April 2013. A further five members were appointed by the king.

Two rounds of elections for Bhutan's National Assembly were held on 31 May and 13 July 2013. The 47 seats were contested by four parties in the first round, with the two parties that won the highest number of votes progressing to the second round. In the second round the People's Democratic Party (PDP), led by Tshering Tobgay, won 32 of the 47 seats with 54.9% of the vote against the Druk Phuensum Tshogpa (DPT; Bhutan Peace and Prosperity Party), led by prime minister Jigme Thinley, which gained 15 seats and 45.1% of the vote. Turnout was 55.3% in the first round and 66.2% in the second.

CURRENT GOVERNMENT

In March 2016 the government comprised:

Prime Minister: Tshering Tobgay; b. 1965 (People's Democratic Party; took office on 27 July 2013).

CURRENT LEADERS

Tshering Tobgay

Position

Prime Minister

Introduction

Tshering Tobgay became prime minister in July 2013. A former civil servant, he has promised to address Bhutan's economic problems and focus on domestic development.

Early Life

Born on 16 Sept. 1965, Tshering Tobgay was educated in Kalimpong, India before graduating in mechanical engineering from the University of Pittsburgh's Swanson School of Engineering in Pennsylvania, USA. In 2004 he gained a master's degree in public administration from Harvard University.

In 1991 he began a career as a civil servant in the department of education. Seven years later he established the national technical training authority, expanding the provision of training and vocational courses, and served as its leader until 2003. He was a director in the ministry of labour and human resources from 2003–07, resigning to co-found Bhutan's first registered political party, the People's Democratic Party (PDP).

In 2008, after the PDP claimed just two out of 47 seats in the country's inaugural general election, Tobgay became party leader. He criticized over-reliance on Bhutan's Gross National Happiness (GNH) index and identified growing public debt, corruption and unemployment—particularly youth unemployment—as key issues. He called for measures to tackle the rupee crisis, brought about by a balance of payments deficit, and signalled that he would build closer economic ties with India, eschewing Prime Minister Jigme Thinley's overtures toward China.

In the July 2013 election, Tobgay's PDP decisively defeated the incumbent Bhutan Peace and Prosperity Party (DPT), winning 32 of 47 seats.

Career in Office

Tobgay was sworn in as prime minister on 27 July 2013. He has aimed to develop national infrastructure and create jobs while controlling public debt. Managing relations with India and China has remained the dominant foreign policy challenge. During July–Aug. 2015 Tobgay dismissed Rinzin Dorji as foreign affairs minister over corruption allegations, replacing him with Damcho Dorji whose former post as home affairs minister was assumed by Dawa Gyaltsen.

DEFENCE

Army

In 2008 the Royal Bhutan Army had a strength of 8,000. It is lightly armed, mainly with weapons supplied by India. There is also a small Air Arm.

ECONOMY

Agriculture accounted for 18.7% of GDP in 2009, with industry accounting for 43.2% and services 38.1%.

Overview

Although its economy has historically been based on subsistence agriculture and cottage industry, Bhutan is considered a development success story following a remarkable period of economic expansion and improvement in human development indicators. GDP growth averaged 8.1% in the decade 2003–13, while the poverty rate reduced from 31.7% in 2003 to 12.0% in 2012. Developments in hydro-power have been the driving force behind economic prosperity, contributing an estimated 30% to GDP in 2013 with a further 25% coming from related construction.

The country has benefited from its proximity to India, which typically is the destination for over 80% of Bhutan's exports and the source of 75% of its imports. The currency, the ngultrum, is pegged to the Indian rupee and the Indian government finances a large part of Bhutan's budget expenditures.

Agriculture employs 43% of the labour force, although its share of GDP has steadily declined. Sales of cement, production of which is one of the country's few large-scale industries, have grown since the mid-2000s, reflecting strong performance in the construction and manufacturing sectors. Public expenditure, guided by the government ideology of Gross National Happiness, is focused on health and education.

Total debt stood at 89% of GDP in 2013, half of which was incurred through hydro-power projects. The IMF projects growth to remain at between 8% and 9% in the medium term, supported by the construction of the new Nikachhu and Kholongchhu hydro-power plants.

Other economic activities in the country are underdeveloped, partly owing to a poor business climate, and connections to global markets outside India are limited. In the World Bank's Doing Business 2015 report, Bhutan ranked 125th of 189 economies.

Currency

The unit of currency is the ngultrum (BTN) of 100 chetrum, at parity with the Indian rupee. Indian currency is also legal tender. Foreign exchange reserves were US$425m. in May 2005 and total money supply was Nu8,088m. Inflation was 8.6% in 2013 and 9.6% in 2014.

Budget

Budgetary central government revenue and expenditure (in Nu1m.):

	2006-07	2007-08	2008-09
Revenue	16,083.1	18,277.9	20,624.1
Expenditure	9,092.2	12,352.5	14,257.0

Grants accounted for 31.9% of revenues in 2008-09 and taxes 27.4%; compensation of employees accounted for 35.0% of expenditures and use of goods and services 32.7%.

Performance

Real GDP growth was 6.4% in 2012, 4.9% in 2013 and 6.4% in 2014. Total GDP in 2014 was US$2.0bn.

Banking and Finance

The Royal Monetary Authority (founded 1982; Governor, Daw Tenzin) acts as the central bank. Assets (June 2010) Nu38.25bn. Financial sector total assets were Nu55.29bn. in June 2010 with the country's four commercial banks accounting for 90.6% of assets. The oldest and largest commercial bank is the Bank of Bhutan, which was established in 1968 and operated as the central bank until 1982. The headquarters are at Phuentsholing with 26 branches throughout the country. It is 80%-owned by the government of Bhutan and 20%-owned by the Indian government. There is also a development bank (the Bhutan Development Finance Corporation) and a stock exchange in Thimphu.

In 2010 Bhutan's total external debt amounted to US$898m., equivalent to 63.3% of GNI.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Bhutan's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2011 were the equivalent of 0.5 tonnes per capita.

Electricity

Installed capacity in 2010-11 was 1.5m. kW (nearly all hydro-electric). Production (2010-11) was 7.1bn. kWh. Consumption per capita in 2010-11 was 2,495 kWh. Bhutan exports around 75% of the electricity that it produces, mainly to India. There are four major hydro-electric plants in operation, three of which were financed by neighbouring India. Four further installations are under construction.

Minerals

Large deposits of limestone, marble, dolomite, slate, graphite, lead, copper, coal, talc, gypsum, beryl, mica, pyrites and tufa have been found. Most mining activity (principally limestone, coal, slate and dolomite) is on a small-scale. Output, 2010: dolomite, 1,192,000 tonnes; limestone, 716,000 tonnes; gypsum, 344,000 tonnes; coal, 88,000 tonnes.

Agriculture

The agricultural area in 2007 was an estimated 562,000 ha. In 2007 there were an estimated 128,000 ha. of arable land and 27,000 ha. of permanent crops. The chief products (2007 estimated production in 1,000 tonnes) are rice (74), maize (62), potatoes (61), oranges (37), dried chillies and peppers (11) and ginger (10).

Livestock (2005): cattle, 381,000; goats (estimate), 30,000; pigs, 28,000; horses, 25,000; sheep, 18,000.

Forestry

In 2010, 3.25m. ha. (69% of the land area) were forested. Timber production in 2011 was 5.03m. cu. metres.

Fisheries

The total catch in 2010 amounted to an estimated 160 tonnes, exclusively from inland waters.

INDUSTRY

Industries in Bhutan include cement, wood products, processed fruits, alcoholic beverages and calcium carbide. In 2009 manufacturing accounted for 8.4% of GDP. 2001 production: cement, 160,000 tonnes; veneer sheets, 16,000 cu. metres; particle board, 12,000 cu. metres; plywood, 4,000 cu. metres. In 2001 there were 12,878 licensed industrial establishments, of which 8,536 were construction, 3,773 service and 569 manufacturing industries. The latter included 317 forest-based companies, 116 agriculture-based and 46 mineral-based.

Labour

The labour force in 2013 was 393,400 (273,300 in 2003). 74.8% of the population aged 15-64 was economically active in 2013. In the same year 2.9% of the population was unemployed.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Financial support is received from India, the UN and other international aid organizations.

Imports and Exports

The following table shows the value of Bhutan's foreign trade (in US$1m.):

	Imports (f.o.b.)	Exports (c.i.f.)
2006	418.9	413.9
2007	498.1	674.5
2008	543.3	521.4
2009	529.4	495.8
2010	853.8	413.5

India is by far the biggest trading partner. In 2010 the leading import suppliers (in US$1m.) were: India (640.8); South Korea (43.8); Thailand (21.6). The main export markets in 2010 (in US$1m.) were: India (340.8); Hong Kong (47.8); Bangladesh (19.8). Major imports are machinery and transport equipment, manufactured goods, and mineral fuels and lubricants. Hydro-power, ferrosilicon and cement are the main exports.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

In 2006 there were about 4,153 km of roads, of which 1,577 km were highways. In 2007 there were 19,600 passenger cars, 180 buses and coaches, 5,400 lorries and vans, and 7,500 motorcycles and mopeds. A number of sets of traffic lights were installed during the late 1990s but all have subsequently been removed as they were considered to be eyesores. There had previously been just one set. There were 111 fatalities in road accidents in 2007.

Rail

Bhutan does not currently have a railway network but there are plans for a line funded by India that would link the town of Toribari with Hasimara in India.

Civil Aviation

In 2003 Drukair flew from Paro to Bangkok, Delhi, Dhaka, Kathmandu, Calcutta and Rangoon (Yangon). In the same year it flew 2m. km, carrying 36,000 passengers (all on international flights).

Telecommunications

There were 26,300 fixed telephone lines in 2010 (36.2 per 1,000 inhabitants). Mobile phone subscribers numbered 394,300 in 2010. There were 136.0 internet users per 1,000 inhabitants in 2010. Fixed internet subscriptions totalled 6,700 in 2009 (9.3 per 1,000 inhabitants).

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The High Court consists of eight judges appointed by the King. There is a Magistrate's Court in each district, under a Thrimpon, from which appeal is to the High Court at Thimphu. The death penalty, which had not been used for 40 years, was abolished in 2004.

The population in penal institutions in July 2011 was 1,001 (135 per 100,000 of national population).

Education

In 2008–09 there were 109,000 pupils and 4,000 teachers in primary schools and 57,000 pupils with 3,000 teachers in secondary schools. In 2006 there were 4,141 students in tertiary education and 375 academic staff. Adult literacy was 52.8% in 2005.

In 2005 public expenditure on education came to 7.1% of GNI and 17.2% of total government spending.

Health

In 2006 there were 29 hospitals with 1,133 beds, 176 basic health units and 514 outreach clinics. There were two doctors per 10,000 population in 2005. Free health facilities are available to 90% of the population.

RELIGION

The state religion of Bhutan is the Drukpa Kagyupa, a branch of Mahayana Buddhism. Around 23% of the population is Hindu according to the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life.

CULTURE

Press

Until 2006 there was only one newspaper, the government-controlled Kuensel, which is published in English, Dzongkha and Nepali. Two private non-dailies were launched in 2006. The country's first daily paper, the English-language Bhutan Today, was launched in 2008 and had an average daily circulation of 18,000 that year. Although still published, it no longer appears daily.

Tourism

Bhutan was not formally opened to foreign tourists until 1974, but tourism is now the largest source of foreign exchange. In 2009, 23,000 tourists visited Bhutan; revenue totalled US$32m.

Festivals

Bhutan's most famous festival is Tshechu, a religious celebration of Guru Padsambhava held throughout the country at the end of the harvest. The Thimphu Tshechu takes place around mid-Sept. and includes spectacular masked dances performed by monks. Other important festivals include Dromche (to honour the protective deities of the Bhutanese people) and Jambay Lhakhan Drup (including a fire dance to promote fertility).

DIPLOMATIC REPRESENTATIVES

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Archaeological evidence from the Bolivian Amazon's Llanos de Moxos region points to hunter-gatherer settlements dating from 8000 BC. Small farming settlements were established by 1500 BC on the Altiplano high plains to the southeast of Lake Titicaca and one of them, Tiwanaku, developed sophisticated irrigation techniques that by AD 800 may have supported hundreds of thousands of people. However, the Tiwanaku civilization appears to have waned after AD 950 when there was a shift to drier climatic conditions. In the mid-15th century the area around Lake Titicaca came under the control of the Quechua-speaking Inca people, originally from the Cusco valley. Under Huayna Capac (1464–1527) the empire stretched along the Andes from Ecuador to Chile.

By the late 1520s the Inca civilization was waning, beset by internal rivalries and a feud between Huayna Capac's two sons, Huasca and Atahualpa. The Spanish, led by Francisco Pizarro and Diego de Almagro, landed on the Ecuadorian coast in 1531, building alliances with local groups who resented Inca rule. After victory at the 1532 Battle of Cajamarca, the Spanish conquistadors took Cusco. The Alto Peru high plains briefly came under the control of Almagro, and then Pizarro following the former's assassination in 1538. In that year La Plata (later Sucre) was established as the capital of Alto Peru. It was controlled after 1542 by the Viceroyalty of Peru, which for a time had jurisdiction over all the Spanish colonies in South America.

Having liberated Colombia and Venezuela in the 1820s, Simón Bolívar sent Antonio José de Sucre to counter Spanish royalists further south. Peru's independence came after a prolonged guerrilla war and victory for Bolívar and Sucre's forces in the battles of Junin and Ayacucho in 1824. Alto Peru was declared the Republic of Bolivia on 6 Aug. 1825, with Bolívar its president. A presidential successor, Andrés de Santa Cruz, forged a short-lived union with Peru until 1839. Bolivia's political and military weaknesses—exposed during the 1879–83 War of the Pacific—led to its loss of access to lucrative coastal and nitrate resources to Chile.

Economically weak and politically unstable, Bolivia lost further territory to Brazil (1903) and Paraguay (following the Chaco War, 1932–35). Poverty and poor working conditions fuelled the rise of the National Revolutionary Movement (MNR) in the 1940s. The MNR took power in 1952 after an armed revolt, led by Víctor Paz Estenssoro. His reforms included the granting of universal suffrage, land redistribution and nationalization of mines, as well as an overhaul of the education system and greater rights for indigenous peoples. A military coup staged by Vice-President René Barrientos Ortuño in 1964 brought the first of a succession of military governments. Col. Hugo Banzer Suárez's dictatorship (1971–78) became notorious for human rights abuses and political suppression.

Civilian rule was restored in 1982 when Dr Siles Zuazo became president. He introduced reforms embracing free markets and open trade, which restored stability but widened the gap between rich and poor. After several attempts to return to high office, Banzer was elected president again in 1997. His four-year term was dominated by attempts to strengthen law and order and fight drug trafficking. Amid growing discontent over rising fuel prices and mounting poverty, Evo Morales Ayma was elected as Bolivia's first indigenous president in Dec. 2005. He was re-elected in Dec. 2009 and again in Oct. 2014.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Bolivia is a landlocked state bounded in the north and east by Brazil, south by Paraguay and Argentina, and west by Chile and Peru, with an area of some 1,098,581 sq. km (424,165 sq. miles). A coastal strip of land on the Pacific passed to Chile after a war in 1884. In 1953 Chile declared Arica a free port and Bolivia has certain privileges there.

Population (2012 census): 10,059,856 (5,040,409 females); density, 9.2 per sq. km. In 2011, 67.0% of the population lived in urban areas.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 10.73m.

Area and population of the departments (capitals in brackets) at the 2001 and 2012 censuses:

Departments	Area (sq. km)	Census (2001)	Census (2012)
Beni (Trinidad)	213,564	362,521	422,008
Chuquiaca (Sucre)	51,524	531,522	581,347
Cochabamba (Cochabamba)	55,631	1,455,711	1,762,761
La Paz (La Paz)	133,985	2,350,466	2,719,344
Oruro (Oruro)	53,588	391,870	494,587
Pando (Cobija)	63,827	52,525	110,436
Potosí (Potosí)	118,218	709,013	828,093
Santa Cruz (Santa Cruz de la Sierra)	370,621	2,029,471	2,657,762
Tarija (Tarija)	37,623	391,226	483,518
Total	1,098,581	8,274,325	10,059,856

Population (2012 census, in 1,000) of the principal towns: Santa Cruz de la Sierra, 1,442; El Alto, 847; La Paz, 759; Cochabamba, 632; Oruro, 265; Sucre, 239; Tarija, 180; Potosí, 176; Sacaba, 150.

Spanish along with the Amerindian languages Quechua and Aymará are all official languages; Tupi Guaraní is also spoken. 41% of the population identified themselves as indigenous at the 2012 census.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

In 2008 births totalled an estimated 263,000 (birth rate of 27.1 per 1,000 population); deaths totalled an estimated 73,000 (rate, 7.5 per 1,000); infant mortality (2010), 42 per 1,000 live births, the highest in South America. Expectation of life (2013) was 65.1 years for men and 69.5 years for women. Annual population growth rate, 2000–08, 1.9%. Fertility rate, 2008, 3.5 children per woman (the highest in South America).

CLIMATE

The varied geography produces different climates. The low-lying areas in the Amazon Basin are warm and damp throughout the year, with heavy rainfall from Nov. to March; the Altiplano is generally dry between May and Nov. with sunshine but cold nights in June and July, while the months from Dec. to March are the wettest. La Paz, Jan. 55.9°F (13.3°C), July 50.5°F (10.3°C). Annual rainfall 20.8" (529 mm). Sucre, Jan. 58.5°F (14.7°C), July 52.7°F (11.5°C). Annual rainfall 20.1" (510 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

Bolivia's first constitution was adopted on 19 Nov. 1826. The present constitution, the fifteenth, came into effect following its acceptance in a referendum on 25 Jan. 2009 and defined Bolivia as 'a United Social State of Plurinational Communitarian Law'. Under its terms, running to 411 articles, the majority indigenous population has been granted increased rights (including recognition of indigenous systems of justice), state control is extended over the exploitation of natural resources and regional autonomy is enhanced. The separation of church and state is recognized and land reforms in favour of indigenous populations enshrined. A new 'plurinational Legislative Assembly', consisting of a 130-member Chamber of Deputies and a 36-member Senate, took office following elections in Dec. 2009. The constitution also allows for the president to serve a maximum of two consecutive terms. However, in April 2013 a constitutional tribunal ruled that President Morales could seek a third consecutive term as his first term had begun under the old constitution.

CURRENT LEADERS

Juan Evo Morales Ayma

Position

President

Introduction

Evo Morales Ayma became Bolivia's first indigenous president in Jan. 2006, promising to transform the fortunes of South America's poorest country. The former coca farmer and left-wing activist has sought to embed a state-led socialist economy and strengthen presidential powers, and has been a leading critic of US foreign policies. He was re-elected in Dec. 2009 and again in Oct. 2014.

Early Life

Evo Morales Ayma was born in the mining town of Orinoca, Oruro on 26 Oct. 1959. When the mines began to close in the early 1980s, his family moved to become coca farmers in Chapare. Morales became a leader of the cocaleros and during the 1990s clashed with successive governments, particularly that of the former right-wing military dictator, Hugo Banzer Suárez. Banzer joined the US 'war on drugs' and introduced a five-year plan to eradicate coca cultivation and pressurize the cocaleros into growing alternative crops. In 1997 Morales, by then a member of the Movement Towards Socialism (MAS), was elected to Congress where he continued to fight the government's policy, arguing that coca consumption was an accepted part of daily life for workers and that the West had a responsibility to suppress cocaine demand.

In Jan. 2002 he was removed from Congress on a terrorism charge related to riots in Sacaba over coca eradication, though many claimed his dismissal followed pressure from the US embassy. Morales nevertheless declared his candidacy for the congressional and presidential elections, held in June 2002, on a platform of nationalizing strategic industries, providing basic services for all, land reform and tackling corruption. The MAS came second with 20.9% of the vote, with Morales crediting much of his success to inflammatory comments made against him by the then US ambassador. Refusing to join a coalition with the Nationalist Revolutionary Movement (MNR), led by President Gonzalo Sánchez de Lozada, the MAS became the leading opposition party.

Following a general strike, Morales was involved in an uprising that led to the ousting of de Lozada in Oct. 2003. He was also a key figure in mass protests in La Paz in April 2005 calling for an end to poverty and a greater share of profits from the country's gas reserves. A blockade led to food and fuel shortages in La Paz and when clashes erupted between the police and protesters, Carlos Mesa, the new president, fled the city. In fresh elections in Dec. 2005, Morales defeated the conservative former president, Jorge Quiroga, with 53.7% of the vote, and was sworn in as president on 22 Jan. 2006.

Career in Office

Morales promised 'equality and justice' for the poor and marginalized, and a new constitution providing greater legal representation and more rights for indigenous people. His choice of inexperienced left-wing activists to fill most of the cabinet led to comparisons with Venezuela's late president, Hugo Chávez, with whom Morales swiftly signed an energy co-operation accord. Close links were also forged with communist Cuba, but relations with the USA remained strained (leading to the expulsion of the US ambassador and the suspension of operations of the US drug enforcement agency in Bolivia in Oct.–Nov. 2008).

On 1 May 2006 Morales announced the nationalization of Bolivia's oil and gas industry. The decree required foreign energy companies already operating in the market, including Brazil's Petrobras, to accept harsh new contracts within six months. However, a temporary suspension was announced in Aug. owing to shortage of finance, and the terms accepted by foreign companies by the end of Oct. were less draconian than in the May decree.

In July 2006 Morales and the MAS won elections for a new Constituent Assembly to revise the constitution, but fell well short of the two-thirds majority needed to rewrite it at will. This led MAS delegates to introduce a controversial measure in Sept. allowing the Assembly to approve individual clauses by simple majority vote. Opponents feared the loss of regional autonomy and the greater centralization of political power in the president's hands. There was also resistance from large landowners to Morales' land redistribution reform in favour of the indigenous majority, which passed into law in Nov. 2006. Although Morales retained popular support, he remained locked in a power struggle over the proposed constitution with the wealthier eastern departments. In response, he staged a recall referendum on his leadership in Aug. 2008, which he won convincingly. In Oct. Congress approved the text of the new constitution, which was accepted in a referendum in Jan. 2009.

Presidential and parliamentary elections in Dec. 2009 returned Morales to office in a landslide victory, while his MAS won majorities in the Chamber of Deputies and Senate. Morales resumed the nationalization programme, taking over four electricity companies in May 2010, but he also faced strikes and protests—the first such opposition since he took office in 2006—against his government's restrictive wage policy. In Oct. 2010 Morales and the Peruvian leader signed an accord allowing landlocked Bolivia to build its own Pacific port on a small stretch of Peru's coastline.

There were further mass demonstrations in early 2011 against a government proposal to raise fuel prices sharply, and again in Aug.–Sept. that year against a controversial plan to build a highway through a rainforest reserve. Both initiatives were subsequently dropped. In mid-2012 Morales announced another electricity nationalization, this time of the Bolivian subsidiary of the Spanish power company REE. He also faced strikes by government workers, particularly police officers, over pay.

In April 2013 the Constitutional Court ruled that Morales was entitled to seek re-election in 2014 on the grounds that his first term in office had predated the 2009 constitution and did not therefore count towards the two-term limit. In the same month he expelled the US Agency for International Development from the country, accusing the humanitarian organization of trying to undermine his government.

Morales was re-elected to a third term as president following the elections of 12 Oct. 2014, in which the MAS also retained a substantial parliamentary majority. Then in Sept. 2015 Congress voted to amend the constitution allowing Morales to stand for a fourth presidential term subject to approval in a referendum. However, the proposed change was narrowly rejected in the vote held in Feb. 2016.

DEFENCE

In 2013 defence expenditure totalled US$373m., with spending per capita US$36. The 2013 expenditure represented 1.3% of GDP.

Army

There are six military regions. Strength (2009): 34,800 (25,000 conscripts), including a Presidential Guard infantry regiment under direct headquarters command.

Navy

A small force exists for river and lake patrol duties. Despite being landlocked, Bolivia's naval personnel totalled 4,800 in 2009, including 1,700 marines. There were six Naval Districts in 2009. The Navy had 73 vessels in 2009, including 54 patrol craft.

Air Force

The Air Force, established in 1923, had 33 combat-capable aircraft and 15 armed helicopters in 2009. Personnel strength (2009): 6,500 (including conscripts).

ECONOMY

In 2012 agriculture accounted for 13.0% of GDP, industry 38.7% and services 48.3%.

Bolivia's 'shadow' (black market) economy is estimated to constitute approximately 63% of the country's official GDP, one of the highest percentages of any country in the world.

Overview

Bolivia is a lower-middle income country with an economy based on international trading of minerals, natural gas and agricultural goods. Hydrocarbon income accounts for 31.6% of total revenue, making Bolivia vulnerable to fluctuations in global commodity prices. It is also among the world's largest producers of coca (the raw material for cocaine).

Growth has been volatile over the decades. The 1960s and 1970s were boom years owing to a flourishing mining sector and capital inflows, while the 1980s were marked by hyperinflation, high debt and political crises. In the 1990s consumption-driven expansion led to an average annual investment growth rate of 4–5%. The state also privatized some utilities, but by the end of the decade growth was slowing owing to the knock-on effect of economic upheaval in Brazil and Argentina—both major trading partners—and averaged 3.3% per year over the period 1996–2005.

As a result of development in the domestic services, construction and commodities sectors, growth then revived, averaging 5.1% per year between 2006 and 2014. The country also maintained current account and fiscal surpluses (until 2013) that enabled it to build reserves while also expanding public investment. External debt reduced from 52.5% of GNI in 2006 to below 30% in 2014. International reserves equated to 46% of GDP, while public sector deposits in the Central Bank reached 27% of GDP in 2015. However, the economy slowed again in 2015, largely in response to the declining international oil price. International reserves fell from US$15.1bn. in late 2014 to US$14.3 bn. in Aug. 2015. The government also ran a fiscal deficit for the second successive year.

The poverty rate declined from over 60% in 2005 to 45% in 2011 and the Gini coefficient (a measure of income inequality) dropped from 0.59 to 0.49 between 2005 and 2013. However, Bolivia remains among the poorest countries in Latin America.

Currency

The unit of currency is the boliviano (BOB) of 100 centavos, which replaced the peso on 1 Jan. 1987 at a rate of one boliviano = 1m. pesos. Inflation was 5.7% in 2013 and 5.8% in 2014. In July 2005 foreign exchange reserves were US$922m., total money supply was 7,481m. bolivianos and gold reserves totalled 911,000 troy oz.

Budget

Central government revenue was 54,450m. bolivianos in 2011 and expenditure 56,358m. bolivianos. Income taxes accounted for 58.6% of revenues in 2011 and taxes on hydrocarbons 29.7%; current expenditure accounted for 64.3% of expenditures and capital expenditure 35.7%.

Performance

Real GDP growth was 5.1% in 2012, 6.8% in 2013 and 5.5% in 2014. Total GDP was US$33.0bn. in 2014.

Banking and Finance

The Central Bank (President, Marcelo Zabalaga) is the bank of issue. In 2013 there were 13 licensed banks in Bolivia. The largest banks are Banco Mercantil Santa Cruz, Banco Nacional de Bolivia and Banco BISA.

Foreign direct investment was US$648m. in 2014, down from a record US$1.7bn. in 2013.

In 2010 total external debt was US$5,267m., representing 27.8% of GNI.

There is a stock exchange in La Paz.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

In 2011 Bolivia's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy were the equivalent of 1.4 tonnes per capita.

Electricity

Installed capacity was 1.7m. kW in 2011. Production from all sources in 2011 was 7.22bn. kWh, of which 4.87bn. kWh thermal and 2.35bn. kWh hydro-electric; consumption per capita was 700 kWh in 2011.

Oil and Gas

There are petroleum and natural gas deposits in the Tarija, Santa Cruz and Cochabamba areas. Production of oil in 2010 was 12,607,000 bbls. Reserves in 2011 were 465m. bbls. The US$2.2bn. Bolivia–Brazil pipeline was completed in 2000 and is the longest natural gas pipeline in South America. The 3,150 km pipeline connects Bolivia's gas sources with the southeast regions of Brazil. Natural gas output in 2013 was 20.8bn. cu. metres, with proven reserves of 300bn. cu. metres. In May 2006 Bolivia nationalized the oil and natural gas industries and six months later, in Nov., Bolivia signed up 40 new contracts with oil and natural gas enterprises.

Minerals

Mining accounted for 4% of GDP in 2005. Tin-mining had been the mainstay of the economy until the collapse of the international tin market in 1985. Estimated production in 2005 (preliminary, in tonnes): zinc, 157,019; tin, 18,694; lead, 11,093; antimony, 5,225; wolfram, 658; silver, 420; gold, 8,906 fine kg.

Agriculture

The agricultural population was 3.17m. in 2002, of whom 1.56m. were economically active. There were 2.35m. ha. of arable land in 2004–05. Output in 1,000 tonnes in 2004–05 was: sugarcane, 5,328; soybeans, 1,689; maize, 817; potatoes, 762; rice, 479; bananas, 443; cassava, 370; sorghum, 246; alfalfa, 167. In 2004, 49,000 tonnes of coca (the source of cocaine) were grown. Since 1987 Bolivia has received international (mainly US) aid to reduce the amount of coca grown, with compensation for farmers who co-operate. Bolivia (not Brazil) is the largest producer of brazil nuts (45,000 tonnes in 2012).

Livestock, 2005: cattle, 7,314,000; sheep, 8,816,000; pigs, 2,390,000; goats, 1,896,000; llamas, 2,130,000; asses (2003), 635,000; horses (2003), 323,000; alpacas, 255,000; chickens (2003), 75m.

Forestry

Forests covered 57.20m. ha. (53% of the land area) in 2010. Tropical forests with woods ranging from the 'iron tree' to the light balsa are exploited. Timber production in 2011 was 3.28m. cu. metres.

Fisheries

In 2010 the total catch was 6,946 tonnes, exclusively from inland waters.

INDUSTRY

In 2012 industry accounted for 38.7% of GDP, with manufacturing contributing 13.5%. The principal manufactures are mining, petroleum, smelting, foodstuffs, tobacco and textiles.

Labour

The labour force in 2013 was 5,025,100 (3,913,600 in 2003). 74.2% of the population aged 15–64 was economically active in 2013. In the same year 2.6% of the population was unemployed. In April 2013 the minimum wage was raised from 1,000 bolivianos to 1,200 bolivianos a month.

Bolivia had 30,000 people living in slavery according to the Walk Free Foundation's 2013 Global Slavery Index.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

An agreement of Jan. 1992 with Peru gives Bolivia duty-free transit for imports and exports through a corridor leading to the Peruvian Pacific port of Ilo from the Bolivian frontier town of Desaguadero, in return for Peruvian access to the Atlantic via Bolivia's roads and railways.

Imports and Exports

In 2005 imports (f.o.b.) amounted to US$2,191.8m.; exports (f.o.b.) US$2,810.4m. Main import commodities are road vehicles and parts, machinery for specific industries, cereals and cereal preparations, general industrial machinery, chemicals, petroleum, food, and iron and steel. Main export commodities are natural gas, soybeans and products, fuels, zinc, metallic tin, silver ore, metallic gold and nuts.

Main import suppliers in 2005 (provisional, in US$1m.): Brazil, 486.0; Argentina, 370.2; USA, 294.2; Chile, 154.3; Peru, 145.6; Japan, 135.9. Main export markets in 2005 (provisional, in US$1m.): Brazil, 1,011.6; USA, 385.3; Argentina, 260.5; Colombia, 180.5; Venezuela, 154.3; Japan, 134.3.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

The total length of the road system was 62,479 km in 2004, of which 14,336 km were national roads. Total passenger cars in use in 2007 numbered 174,900, lorries and vans 468,800, and buses and coaches 7,000. There were 1,073 road accident fatalities in 2007.

Rail

In 2007 the railway network totalled 2,866 km of metre gauge track. Passenger-km travelled in 2007 came to 313m. and freight tonne-km in 2005 to 1,027m.

Civil Aviation

The three international airports are La Paz (El Alto), Santa Cruz de la Sierra (Viru Viru) and Cochabamba (Jorge Wisterman). The main airline is Aerosur, which in 2007 ran scheduled services to Asunción, Buenos Aires, Lima, Salta and São Paulo, as well as internal services. The operations of Lloyd Aéreo Boliviano, for many years the national airline, were suspended in April 2007 owing to financial problems but charter flights were resumed in Dec. In Oct. 2007 the government announced the creation of a new airline, Boliviana de Aviación, as a successor flag carrier. It began commercial flights in March 2009 and in March 2016 ran scheduled services to Buenos Aires, Madrid, Miami, Salta and São Paulo as well as internal services. In 2005 scheduled airline traffic of Bolivian-based carriers flew 17.1m. km, carrying 1,396,400 passengers.

Shipping

Lake Titicaca and about 19,000 km of rivers are open to navigation. In Jan. 2009 there were 43 ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 78,000 GT.

Telecommunications

In 2008 President Evo Morales nationalized Entel, Bolivia's leading telecommunications company. It had been privatized in 1995 and was a subsidiary of Telecom Italia. There were 879,800 landline telephone subscriptions in 2011 (equivalent to 87.2 per 1,000 inhabitants) and 8,353,300 mobile phone subscriptions (or 828.0 per 1,000 inhabitants). Fixed internet subscriptions totalled 114,000 in 2010 (11.5 per 1,000 inhabitants); there were 13,000 mobile broadband subscriptions in 2009. In June 2012 there were 1.6m. Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

Justice is administered by the Supreme Court, superior department courts (of five or seven judges) and courts of local justice. The Supreme Court, with headquarters at Sucre, is divided into two sections, civil and criminal, of five justices each, with the Chief Justice presiding over both. Members of the Supreme Court are chosen on a two-thirds vote of Congress. The death penalty was abolished for ordinary crimes in 1997.

The population in penal institutions in 2013 was 14,770 (140 per 100,000 of national population). 83.2% of prisoners had yet to receive a trial according to 2014 estimates by the International Centre for Prison Studies. Bolivia was ranked 99th of 102 countries for criminal justice and 95th for civil justice in the 2015 World Justice Project Rule of Law Index, which provides data on how the rule of law is experienced by the general public across eight categories.

Education

Adult literacy was 90.7% in 2008 (male, 95.9%; female, 86.8%). Primary instruction is free and obligatory between the ages of six and 14 years. In 2007–08 there were 1,508,000 pupils and (2006–07) 62,000 teachers in primary schools, 1,060,000 pupils and (2006–07) 58,000 teachers in secondary schools; there were an estimated 353,000 students and 16,000 academic staff in tertiary education in 2006–07.

In 2005 there were ten universities, two technical universities, one Roman Catholic university, one musical conservatory, and colleges in the following fields: business, six; teacher training, four; industry, one; nursing, one; technical teacher training, one; fine arts, one; rural education, one; physical education, one. Bolivia's largest university is the Universidad Mayor de San Andrés, in La Paz, founded in 1830. There were 37 private universities in 2006–07.

In 2006 public expenditure on education came to 6.3% of GDP.

Health

In the period 2000–10 there were 12.2 physicians for every 10,000 population and 21.3 nursing and midwifery personnel per 10,000 population. There were 241 hospitals with 9,886 hospital beds (one per 954 persons) in 2005.

Welfare

The pensions and social security systems in Bolivia were reformed in 2010. Instead of a defined-contribution system based on privately managed individual capitalization accounts (introduced in 1996), a defined-benefit publicly managed pension system was reintroduced. In 2008 the solidarity bonus (Bonosol) was replaced by a new universal pension (Renta Dignidad). The new universal pension—worth approximately US$340 a year—is paid to all Bolivians over the age of 60.

RELIGION

The State is independent from religion. The Roman Catholic church was disestablished in 2009. It has four archdioceses, six dioceses, five apostolic vicariates and two territorial prelatures. In 2010 there were an estimated 7.9m. Roman Catholics and 1.4m. Protestants according to the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life, with most of the remainder of the population being unaffiliated.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

There are seven UNESCO sites in Bolivia: the City of Potosí (inscribed in 1987), the largest industrial mining complex of the 16th century; the Jesuit Missions of the Chiquitos (1990), six settlements for converted Indians built between 1696 and 1760; the Historic City of Sucre (1991), containing 16th century colonial architecture; El Fuerte de Samaipata (1998), a pre-Hispanic sculptured rock and political and religious centre; Noel Kempff Mercado National Park (2000), a 1,523,000 ha. park in the Amazon Basin; and Tiwanaku: Spiritual and Political Centre of the Tiwanaku Culture (2000), monumental remains from AD 500 to 900. Shared with Argentina, Chile, Colombia, Ecuador and Peru, Qhapaq Ñan, Andean Road System (2014) is an extensive Inca communication, trade and defence network of roads covering 30,000 km.

Press

There were 25 paid-for daily newspapers in 2008 with a combined circulation of 145,000. The top-selling daily is the tabloid El Deber, with an average daily circulation of 15,000 (30,000 on Sundays).

Tourism

In 2010 there were 807,000 international tourists (excluding same-day visitors); total revenue from tourism was US$379m. in 2010.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Settled by Slavs in the 7th century, Bosnia was conquered by the Turks in 1463 when much of the population was gradually converted to Islam. At the Congress of Berlin (1878) the territory was assigned to Austria-Hungary under nominal Turkish suzerainty. Austria-Hungary's outright annexation in 1908 contributed to the outbreak of the First World War. After 1918 Bosnia and Herzegovina became part of a new Kingdom of Serbs, Croats and Slovenes under the Serbian monarchy. Its name was changed to Yugoslavia in 1929. (See SERBIA and MONTENEGRO for developments up to and beyond the Second World War.)

On 15 Oct. 1991 the National Assembly adopted a 'Memorandum on Sovereignty' supporting Bosnian autonomy within a Yugoslav federation. Though boycotted by Serbs, a referendum in March 1992 supported independence. In March 1992 an agreement was reached by Muslims, Serbs and Croats to set up three autonomous ethnic communities under a central Bosnian authority.

Bosnia and Herzegovina declared independence on 5 April 1992. Fighting broke out between the Serb, Croat and Muslim communities, with heavy casualties and destruction in Sarajevo, Muslim territorial losses and an exodus of refugees. UN-sponsored ceasefires were repeatedly violated.

On 13 Aug. 1992 the UN Security Council authorized force to ensure the delivery of humanitarian aid to besieged civilians. Internationally sponsored peace talks were held in Geneva in 1993, but Serb-Muslim-Croat fighting continued. In April 1993 the UN established havens for Muslim civilians in Sarajevo, Srebrenica and Gorazde.

In Dec. 1994 Bosnian Serbs and Muslims signed a countrywide interim ceasefire. Bosnian Croats also signed in Jan. 1995. However, Croatian Serbs and the Muslim secessionist forces under Fikret Abdić continued fighting. On 16 June 1995 Bosnian government forces launched an attack to break the Bosnian Serb siege of Sarajevo. On 11 July Bosnian Serb forces began to occupy UN security zones despite retaliatory NATO air strikes, and on 28 Aug. shelled Sarajevo. In July Srebrenica was the scene of the worst massacre of the war, when Bosnian Serb troops killed over 7,000 Muslim men and boys. Dutch peacekeeping forces whose duty was to protect the area failed to prevent the massacre.

To stop the shelling of UN safe areas, more than 60 NATO aircraft attacked Bosnian Serb military installations on 30-31 Aug. On 26 Sept. in Washington the foreign ministers of Bosnia, Croatia and Yugoslavia (the latter negotiating for the Bosnian Serbs) agreed a draft Bosnian constitution under which a central government would handle foreign affairs and commerce and a Serb Zone, while a Muslim-Croat Federation administered internal affairs. A ceasefire came into force on 12 Oct. 1995.

In Dayton (Ohio) on 21 Nov. 1995 the prime ministers of Bosnia, Croatia and Yugoslavia initialled a US-brokered agreement to end hostilities. The Bosnian state was divided into a Muslim-Croat Federation containing 51% of Bosnian territory and a Serb Republic containing 49%. A central government authority representing all ethnic groups with responsibility for foreign and monetary policy and citizenship issues was established and free elections held. On 20 Dec. 1995 a NATO contingent (IFOR) took over from UN peacekeeping forces to enforce the Paris peace agreements and set up a 4 km separation zone between the Serb and Muslim-Croat territories. After a year IFOR was replaced by SFOR, a 'Stabilization Force'. On 2 Dec. 2004 a 7,000-strong European Union force 'EUFOR' took over from SFOR.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

The republic is bounded in the north and west by Croatia, in the east by Serbia and in the southeast by Montenegro. It has a coastline of only 20 km with no harbours. Its area is 51,210 sq. km, including 210 sq. km of inland waters. The capital is Sarajevo.

The population at the 1991 census—when present-day Bosnia and Herzegovina was still part of Yugoslavia—was 4,377,033, of which the predominating ethnic groups were Muslims (1,905,829), Serbs (1,369,258) and Croats (755,892). Bosnia and Herzegovina is made up of three 'constituent' peoples: Bosniaks, Croats and Serbs. Provisional census population, 2013, 3,791,622; density, 74.0 per sq. km. Census population of the principal cities in 2013 (provisional): Sarajevo, 369,534; Banja Luka, 150,997; Tuzla, 80,570; Zenica, 73,751. According to a 2008 report by the Ministry of Human Rights and Refugees of Bosnia and Herzegovina around 1.35m. Bosnians live abroad, mainly in the USA, Germany, Serbia, Austria and Slovenia.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 3-81m.

In 2011, 49.2% of the population lived in urban areas.

In accordance with the Dayton Agreement the country is divided into two entities: the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina (51% of the territory) and Republika Srpska, sometimes referred to as the Serb Republic (49% of the territory). In addition there is a self-governing unit, Brčko District, which is a de facto third entity in the northeast of the country. See also CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT below.

The official languages are Bosnian, Croatian and Serbian.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2010 births, 33,779; deaths, 34,633. Rates per 1,000, 2010: birth, 8.8; death, 9.0. Annual population growth rate, 2000–08, 0.3%. Life expectancy at birth, 2013, was 73.8 years for men and 78.9 years for women. Infant mortality, 2010, eight per 1,000 live births; fertility rate, 2013, 1.3 children per woman (the joint lowest in the world).

CLIMATE

The climate is generally continental with steady rainfall throughout the year, although in areas nearer the coast it is more Mediterranean.

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

On 18 March 1994 in Washington, D.C., USA, Bosnian Muslims and Croats reached an agreement for the creation of a federation of cantons with a central government responsible for foreign affairs, defence and commerce. It was envisaged that there would be a president elected by a two-house legislature alternating annually between the nationalities.

On 31 May 1994 the National Assembly approved the creation of the Muslim Croat federation (the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina). Alija Izetbegović remained the unitary states' President. An interim government with Hasan Muratović as Prime Minister was formed on 30 Jan. 1996.

The Dayton Agreement including the new constitution was signed and came into force on 14 Dec. 1995. The government structure was established in 1996 as follows:

Heading the state is a three-member Presidency (one Croat, one Muslim, one Serb) with a rotating president. The Presidency is elected by direct universal suffrage, and is responsible for foreign affairs and the nomination of the prime minister. There is a two-chamber parliament: the House of Representatives (which meets in Sarajevo) comprises 42 directly elected deputies, two-thirds Croat and Muslim and one-third Serb; and the House of Peoples (which meets in Lukavica) comprises five Croat, five Muslim and five Serb delegates.

Below the national level the country is divided into two self-governing entities along ethnic lines.

The Bosniak-Croat Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina (Federacija Bosna i Hercegovina) is headed by a President and Vice-President, alternately Croat and Muslim, a 98-member Chamber of Representatives and a 58-member Chamber of Peoples. The Serb Republic (Republika Srpska) is also headed by an elected President and Vice-President, and there is a National Assembly of 83 members, elected by proportional representation.

Central government is conducted by a Council of Ministers, which comprises Muslim and Serb Co-Prime Ministers and a Croat Deputy Prime Minister. The Co-Prime Ministers alternate in office every week.

In Nov. 2005 leaders of the three main ethnic groups agreed on a series of constitutional reforms aimed at enhancing the authority of the central government, reducing the powers of the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina and the Serb Republic, and streamlining the parliament and the office of the presidency.

CURRENT LEADERS

Bakir Izetbegović

Position

President

Introduction

Bakir Izetbegović has served as the Bosniak (Bosnian Muslim) member of the country's tripartite presidency since 10 Nov. 2010. The chairmanship of the presidency rotates every eight months between representatives of the country's three main ethnic groups, with Izetbegović most recently taking the helm (for the third time) on 17 March 2016.

Early Life

Bakir Izetbegović was born in Sarajevo on 28 June 1956. His father was Alija Izetbegović, a Muslim activist who was president of the Socialist Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina when, in 1992, a referendum supporting independence sparked the Bosnian War. He became the first president of Bosnia and Herzegovina after the Dayton Accords of 1995.

Bakir graduated in architecture from the University of Sarajevo in 1981. When war broke out he became his father's personal secretary, and was a key figure in the construction of the Sarajevo tunnel, dug during the winter of 1992–93 to relieve the besieged city.

In 2000 he entered politics as a member of the Party of Democratic Action (SDA) established by his father. He was elected to the regional assembly for Sarajevo Canton before his appointment to the House of Representatives in 2002. After re-election in 2006 he became chairman of the parliamentary delegation to the Council of Europe. He served as vice-president of the SDA between 2003 and 2009.

In the presidential election held on 3 Oct. 2010 Izetbegović gained 34.9% of the Bosniak vote. He was returned to the presidency on 12 Oct. 2014, with 32.9% of that constituency's support, and was joined in the presidential council by Croat Dragan Čović and Serb Mladen Ivanić.

Career in Office

In Feb. 2014 protests erupted on the streets of Sarajevo, Tuzla, Zenica and Mostar. While alleging that an unruly minority had hijacked the demonstrations, Izetbegović acknowledged frustration at high unemployment and said the government should do more to attract foreign investment. Speaking in Brussels in Dec. 2015, on the 20th anniversary of the Dayton Accords, Izetbegović said that it was necessary to take strides to ensure the protection and representation of the country's minority Croat population.

DEFENCE

Defence expenditure in 2012 totalled US$231m. (US$60 per capita), representing 1.4% of GDP.

An EU-led peacekeeping contingent 'EUFOR' took over military operations from the NATO-led 'SFOR' on 2 Dec. 2004. Its mission is to focus on the apprehension of indicted war criminals and counter-terrorism, and provide advice on defence reform. Initially numbering 7,000 personnel, the strength has since been reduced and in 2015 stood at 600.

Army

Reform of the defence forces began in 2003 and resulted, in 2006, in the establishment of a single state army (in place of the previously separate armed forces of the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina and the Serb Republic). Its personnel—including that of the Air Force and Anti-Air Defence Brigade—totalled 9,205 in 2011. The Army had 334 main battle tanks in 2011 plus 127 armoured personnel carriers and 137 armoured infantry fighting vehicles.

Air Force

The Air Force and Anti-Aircraft Defence was established in 2006. It had 19 combat-capable aircraft and 45 helicopters in 2011.

ECONOMY

In 2010 agriculture accounted for 7.6% of GDP, industry 28.0% and services 64.4%.

Overview

Infrastructure and output were damaged by war in the early 1990s but growth has been largely continuous since the Dayton Accords ended fighting in 1995. In the post-war decade GDP growth increased by over two-thirds and the poverty level dropped from 20% to 14%. The economy then fell into recession in 2009 following the onset of the global financial crisis. The government agreed a stand-by arrangement with the IMF to cushion the impact of the deteriorating external environment and adopted policies to redress fiscal and structural imbalances, with additional financing from the World Bank and EU. The economy rebounded in 2011 with growth of 1%, although it briefly returned to recession in 2012. It was dealt a new blow in May 2014 when heavy flooding—affecting a third of the country—damaged infrastructure and disrupted trade flows. However, the IMF predicted the impact of the flooding would be partially offset by healthier exports as economic activity increased across Europe in 2015.

The financial sector plays an important role in the economy, with banking dominated by foreign institutions. It is estimated that donor commitments from international assistance programmes in the first decade of this century exceeded US$5bn. Membership of the Central European Free Trade Agreement was achieved in Sept. 2007 and the country also aims to join the European Union.

Currency

A new currency, the konvertibilna marka (BAM) consisting of 100 pfennig, was introduced in June 1998. Initially trading at a strict 1-to-1 against the Deutsche Mark, it is now pegged to the euro at a rate of 1.95583 convertible marks to the euro. There was deflation of 0.1% in 2013 and 0.9% in 2014. Total money supply was 4,193m. convertible marks in July 2005.

Budget

Budgetary central government revenue in 2009 was 5,509m. convertible marks; expenditure was 5,931m. convertible marks. VAT of 17% was introduced on 1 Jan. 2006.

Performance

Real GDP contracted by 1.2% in 2012 as Bosnia and Herzegovina suffered a recession but recovered to grow by 2.5% in 2013 and 1.1% in 2014. Total GDP was US$18.3bn. in 2014.

Banking and Finance

There is a Central Bank (Governor, Kemal Kozarić). In 2005 there were 28 commercial banks (19 in the Federation and 9 in the Serb Republic).

In 2010 total external debt was US$8,457m., representing 48.8% of GNI.

There are stock exchanges in Banja Luka and Sarajevo.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Bosnia and Herzegovina's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2011 were the equivalent of 7.1 tonnes per capita.

Electricity

Bosnia and Herzegovina is rich in hydro-electric potential and is a net exporter of electricity. Installed capacity was estimated at 4.3m. kW in 2011. Production in 2011 was 15.28bn. kWh. In 2011 consumption per capita was 3,592 kWh.

Minerals

Output in 2008: lignite, 11.2m. tonnes; crushed stone, 4.4m. tonnes; iron ore, 2.7m. tonnes; gravel, 1.5m. tonnes; bauxite, 1.0m. tonnes; aluminium, 156,000 tonnes.

Agriculture

In 2007 there were 1.02m. ha. of arable land and 95,000 ha. of permanent crops. 2009 production (in 1,000 tonnes): maize, 963; potatoes, 414; wheat, 256; plums, 156; cabbage and kale, 82; barley, 77; apples, 72; tomatoes, 46. Livestock in 2009: cattle, 458,000; pigs, 529,000; sheep, 1,055,000; poultry, 18.7m.

Forestry

In 2010 forests covered 2.19m. ha., or 43% of the total land area. Timber production in 2011 was 3.85m. cu. metres.

Fisheries

Estimated total fish catch in 2010: 2,000 tonnes (almost exclusively freshwater).

INDUSTRY

Industry accounted for 28.0% of GDP in 2010, with manufacturing contributing 13.7%. Output in 2008 (in 1,000 tonnes): cement, 1,406; crude steel, 608; lime, 216.

Labour

The active labour force totalled 1,157,940 in April 2010 (62% males). Unemployment in April 2010 was 27.2% (25.6% for men and 29.9% for women). Among 15–24 year olds it was 57.5%¹. Bosnia and Herzegovina had 14,000 people living in slavery according to the Walk Free Foundation's 2013 Global Slavery Index.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

Goods imports were US$10,990.4m. in 2014 (US$10,295.2m. in 2013) and goods exports US$5,892.1m. (US$5,687.5m. in 2013).

Principal imports in 2014 were manufactured goods (21.5%) followed by machinery and transport equipment, and mineral fuels and lubricants; main exports in 2014 were miscellaneous manufactured articles (25.5%), manufactured goods, and machinery and transport equipment.

The leading import supplier in 2010 was Croatia (15.1%), followed by Serbia and Germany; the leading export destination in 2010 was Germany (15.3%), followed by Croatia and Serbia.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

In 2005 there were an estimated 22,419 km of roads (4,104 km main roads). Passenger cars numbered 473,076 in 2007 (123 per 1,000 inhabitants). There were 428 road accident fatalities in 2007.

Source: Agency for Statistics of Bosnia and Herzegovina

Rail

There were 1,017 km of railways in 2008 (771 km electrified). It is estimated that up to 80% of the rail network was destroyed in the civil war, and it was not until July 2001 that the first international services were resumed. There are two state-owned rail companies—the Railway of the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina (ŽFBH) and the Railway of the Serb Republic (ŽRS). In 2008 ŽFBH carried 528,000 passengers and 8.1m. tonnes of freight while ŽRS carried 727,000 passengers and 5.0m. tonnes of freight.

Civil Aviation

There are airports at Sarajevo (Butmir), Tuzla, Banja Luka and Mostar. In 2010 there were direct flights to 14 European destinations. In 2012 Sarajevo handled 580,058 passengers (all international) and 1,858 tonnes of freight.

Telecommunications

In 2011 there were 955,900 landline telephone subscriptions (equivalent to 254.8 per 1,000 inhabitants) and 3,171,300 mobile phone subscriptions (or 845.2 per 1,000 inhabitants). In 2010, 52.0% of the population were internet users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The population in penal institutions in the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina in April 2008 was 1,750; in the Serb Republic the prison population was 928 in Sept. 2007. Bosnia and Herzegovina was ranked 37th of 102 countries for criminal justice and 51st for civil justice in the 2015 World Justice Project Rule of Law Index, which provides data on how the rule of law is experienced by the general public across eight categories.

Police

The European Union Police Mission (EUPM) in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the EU's first civilian crisis management operation, took over from the UN's International Police Task Force on 1 Jan. 2003. It aims to help the authorities develop their police forces to the highest European and international standards.

Education

The adult literacy rate was 98% in 2008. In 2008–09 there were 174,000 pupils in primary schools, 334,000 in secondary schools and 105,000 students in tertiary education. The largest university is the University of Sarajevo, established in 1949 but with its origins dating back to 1531.

Health

In 2005 there were 5,540 physicians, 629 dentistry personnel, 18,332 nursing and midwifery personnel and 308 pharmaceutical personnel. In 2005 there were 30 hospital beds per 10,000 inhabitants.

Welfare

There were 509,000 pensioners in 2006. Only around 30% of the population over 65 receives an old-age pension. The average monthly pension was 246.6 convertible marks in 2006.

RELIGION

According to estimates by the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life, in 2010 the vast majority of the population was Christian (1.98m., of which 1.44m. Orthodox Christians and 0.54m. Catholics) or Muslim (1.70m., most of whom were Sunnis). In Feb. 2016 the Roman Catholic church had one cardinal.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

There are two UNESCO World Heritage sites in Bosnia and Herzegovina: the Old Bridge area of the Old City of Mostar (inscribed on the list in 2005), an important Ottoman frontier town, and the Mehmed Paša Sokolović Bridge in Višegrad (2007), constructed in the 16th century.

Press

There were seven paid-for daily newspapers in 2008 with a combined circulation of 75,000 and 46 paid-for non-dailies.

Tourism

In 2010, 365,000 non-resident tourists stayed in holiday accommodation (up from 311,000 in 2009 and 171,000 in 2000).

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

The Tswana or Batswana people are the principal inhabitants of the country formerly known as Bechuanaland. The territory was declared a British protectorate in 1895 administered by the High Commissioner in South Africa until the post was abolished in 1964. Proposals for the merging of Bechuanaland and the other two High Commission Territories into South Africa were strongly opposed. Economically, however, the country was closely tied to that of South Africa and has remained so. In Dec. 1960 Bechuanaland received its first constitution. Further constitutional change brought self-government in 1965 and independence on 30 Sept. 1966. Botswana had difficulties with the neighbouring settler regime in Rhodesia, until that country became Zimbabwe in 1980. Relations with South Africa were also strained until the ending of apartheid. Today Botswana is one of the few African countries to enjoy stability and (2009 apart) a fast-growing economy.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Botswana is bounded in the west and north by Namibia, northeast by Zambia and Zimbabwe, and east and south by South Africa. The area is 581,730 sq. km. 2011 census population, 2,024,904; density, 3.5 per sq. km.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 2.26m.

In 2011, 61.8% of the population were urban.

The country is divided into nine districts (Central, Ghanzi, Kgalegadi, Kgatleng, Kweneng, North East, North West, South East and Southern).

The main towns (2011 census population) are Gaborone (231,592), Francistown (98,961), Molepolole (66,466), Maun (60,263), Mogoditshane (58,079), Serowe (50,820), Selebi-Phikwe (49,411), Kanye (47,007), Mochudi (44,815) and Mahalapye (43,289).

The official languages are Setswana and English. Setswana is spoken by over 90% of the population and English by approximately 40%. More than ten other languages, including Herero, Hottentot, Kalanga, Mbukushu, San and Sekgalagadi are spoken in various tribal areas. The main ethnic groups are the Tswana (79%) and the Kalanga (11%). Botswana is one of Africa's most homogenous countries.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2008 (estimates) births, 47,000; deaths, 23,000. Rates, 2008 estimates (per 1,000 population): births, 24.5; deaths, 12.1. Infant mortality, 2010 (per 1,000 live births), 36. Expectation of life in 2013 was 62.1 years for males and 66.8 for females. In 2013, 21.9% of all adults between 15 and 49 were infected with HIV. Annual population growth rate, 2000–08, 1.4%. Fertility rate, 2008, 2.9 children per woman.

CLIMATE

In winter, days are warm and nights cold, with occasional frosts. Summer heat is tempered by prevailing northeast winds. Rainfall comes mainly in summer, from Oct. to April, while the rest of the year is almost completely dry with very high sunshine amounts. Gaborone, Jan. 79°F (26.1°C), July 55°F (12.8°C). Annual rainfall varies from 650 mm in the north to 250 mm in the southeast. The country is prone to droughts.

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

The Constitution was adopted in March 1965 and became effective on 30 Sept. 1966. It provides for a republican form of government headed by the President with three main organs: the Legislature, the Executive and the Judiciary. The executive rests with the President who is responsible to the National Assembly. The President is elected for five-year terms by the National Assembly.

The National Assembly consists of 63 members, of which 57 are elected by universal suffrage, four are specially elected members and two, the President and the Speaker, are ex officio.

Elections are held every five years. Voting is on the first-past-the-post system.

There is also a House of Chiefs to advise the government. It consists of the Chiefs of the eight tribes who were autonomous during the days of the British protectorate, plus four members elected by and from among the sub-chiefs in four districts; these 12 members elect a further three politically independent members.

CURRENT LEADERS

Lieut.-Gen. Seretse Khama Ian Khama

Position

President

Introduction

Lieut.-Gen. (retd) Seretse Khama Ian Khama succeeded Festus Mogae as president in 2008. Formerly head of the army and a paramount chief of the Bamangwato people, he entered politics in 1998 and has been closely associated with government efforts to diversify the economy and promote transparency.

Early Life

Seretse Khama Ian Khama was born in the UK on 27 Feb. 1953, the son of Seretse Khama (who later became Botswana's first president) and his English wife. Following the family's return to Botswana in 1956, Khama grew up in Serowe and attended the local school. He pursued further studies in Zimbabwe (then Rhodesia), Swaziland and Switzerland, before enrolling at Sandhurst Military Academy in the UK. After graduating, he joined the Botswana Defence Force (BDF) and rose rapidly through the ranks. In 1977 he was promoted to brigadier and became deputy commander of the BDF under Lieut.-Gen. Mompoti Merafhe.

In 1979 he was made paramount chief of the Bamangwato people, Botswana's largest tribal group. However, Khama devoted his time to the army and in 1989, when Merafhe retired to enter politics, became its commander. Under Khama the BDF developed into a professional force, participating in international peacekeeping, disaster relief and anti-poaching missions.

On 1 April 1998 Khama, newly retired from the army, was named vice-president by the incoming president Festus Mogae. The appointment was widely seen as an attempt to inject new blood into the ruling Botswana Democratic Party (BDP) and to tap into Khama's reputation and influence. Initially unable to take up his post because he did not hold a seat in the National Assembly, Khama was sworn in on 13 July 1998 after winning a by-election in Serowe North. He was put in charge of presidential administration and public affairs and became an arbiter of complaints against government ministers, which made him some political enemies.

Following the BDF's victory in the 1999 general election, Khama was controversially allowed a year's sabbatical to fulfil his duties as chief of the Bamangwato. On his return to the national scene he oversaw the implementation of the government's national development plan, which included privatization measures. Supporters praised him as forceful and efficient while critics accused him of authoritarianism. In 2000 he censured MPs for demanding a salary increase, winning support from the electorate but further alienating some colleagues.

In 2003 Khama became chairman of the BDP, fuelling speculation that he was Mogae's chosen successor. In March 2008 Mogae stood down and the National Assembly elected Khama to the presidency. He took office on 1 April 2008.

Career in Office

Khama was sworn in for his first full five-year term on 20 Oct. 2009 following the BDP's success in parliamentary elections held on 16 Oct. in which they took 45 of the 57 available seats. In April 2010 a breakaway faction of disaffected BDP members formed the Botswana Movement for Democracy, a move criticized by Khama as misguided and self-interested. A damaging nationwide strike by public sector workers over pay in April–May 2011, reflecting deteriorating economic prospects, dented his administration's reputation for good governance and political stability. Nonetheless, the BDP retained power in parliamentary polling in Oct. 2014, albeit with a reduced majority, and Khama was re-elected as president and sworn in for a second term.

DEFENCE

In 2013 defence expenditure totalled US$438m. (US$206 per capita), representing 2.4% of GDP.

Army

The Army personnel (2011) numbered 8,500. There is also a 1,500-strong paramilitary force.

Air Force

The Air Wing operated 30 combat-capable aircraft in 2011 and numbered 500.

ECONOMY

Services accounted for 52.5% of GDP in 2010, industry 45.0% and agriculture 2.5%.

Overview

Botswana has enjoyed consistently high economic growth since gaining independence in 1966. This has reflected its long-term political stability relative to regional neighbours and has been fuelled by the diamond industry. However, with the World Bank suggesting that diamond reserves could be depleted by 2028, economic diversification is a key priority.

When Botswana gained independence, mining contributed only 1% of GDP but as of 2015 it accounted for around 33%. Although diamond mining predominates, nickel and copper exports have become increasingly important and the country also has large reserves of coal, uranium and natural gas. The government has pursued diversification by developing the financial services sector, manufacturing and safari tourism. The potential for agricultural development, however, is limited owing to the arid climate.

Alongside a slowdown in diamond production, the global financial crisis of 2008–09 saw the economy shrink by 4.7% in 2009 despite sub-Saharan Africa as a whole experiencing growth of nearly 3%. However, a rebound in diamond exports and strong returns in non-mining sectors prompted a recovery in 2010. Annual growth from 2010–14 averaged 6.0%. Nonetheless, the fragile global economy—especially in emerging markets—exposes the country's narrow export base to significant risks.

Botswana's long-term economic progress saw the poverty rate decrease from 50% in 1966 to 19% in 2014. However, poverty persists in rural areas and income inequality is high, with unemployment at an estimated 20% in 2014. Furthermore, the HIV/AIDS rate is estimated to be the second highest in the world and has weakened the workforce considerably. Government policy is focused on poverty eradication, tackling high unemployment and diversifying the economy.

Currency

The unit of currency is the pula (BWP) of 100 thebe. The pula was devalued by 7.5% in Feb. 2004 and 12.5% in May 2005. Inflation was 5.8% in 2013 and 3.9% in 2014. Foreign exchange reserves were US$5,770m. in June 2005 and total money supply was P3,878m.

Budget

The fiscal year begins in April. Budgetary central government revenue in 2010–11 totalled P31,838.6m. and expenditure P28,774.1m. Principal sources of revenue in 2010–11 were: taxes on income, profits and capital gains, P9,362.1m.; taxes on international trade and transactions, P6,208.3m.; taxes on goods and services, P4,899.3m. Main items of expenditure by economic type in 2010–11: wages and salaries, P10,308.0m.; use of goods and services, P7,940.7m.; social contributions, P1,590.9m.

VAT is 12%.

Performance

Real GDP grew by 4.8% in 2012, 9.3% in 2013 and 4.4% in 2014. Total GDP in 2014 was US$15.8bn.

Banking and Finance

There were five commercial banks in 2004. Total assets were P24,718.2m. at July 2004. The Bank of Botswana (Governor, Linah Mohohlo), established in 1976, is the central bank. The National Development Bank, founded in 1964, has six regional offices, and agricultural, industrial and commercial development divisions. The Botswana Co-operative Bank is banker to co-operatives and to thrift and loan societies. The government-owned Post Office Savings Bank (Botswana Post) operates throughout the country.

In 2010 external debt totalled US$1,709m., representing 11.6% of GNI.

There is a stock exchange in Gaborone.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Botswana's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2011 were the equivalent of 2.3 tonnes per capita.

Electricity

Installed capacity was 152,000 kW in 2011. Production in 2010 was 430m. kWh. The coal-fired power station at Morupule supplies cities and major towns.

Minerals

Botswana is the world's second biggest diamond producer in terms of value with production estimated to be worth US$3.65bn. in 2014. Diamonds were first discovered in Botswana in 1967. Debswana, a partnership between the government and De Beers, runs four mines. Most of the diamonds produced come from two mines located at Jwaneng and Orapa. Coal reserves are estimated at 17bn. tonnes. There is also copper, salt and soda ash. Diamond production in 2013, 23.2m. carats (the second largest quantity after Russia). Other mineral production, 2003: coal, 823,000 tonnes; salt, 30,000 tonnes; copper, 8,000 tonnes; gold, 8 kg.

Agriculture

70% of the total land area is desert. 80% of the population is rural, 71% of all land is 'tribal', protected and allocated to maintain small farmers, foster commercial ranching and prevent overgrazing. Agriculture provides a livelihood for over 70% of the population, but accounts for only 2.4% of GDP (2003). In 2003, 360,000 ha. were arable and 3,000 ha. permanent crops. There were 7,000 tractors in 2004 and 102 harvester-threshers. Cattle-rearing is the chief industry after diamond-mining, and the country is more a pastoral than an agricultural one, crops depending entirely upon the rainfall. In 2007 an estimated 295,000 persons were economically active in agriculture. In 2004 there were: cattle, 2.2m.; goats, 1.6m.; asses, 330,000 (estimate); sheep, 244,000; chickens, 4.5m. (estimate). A serious outbreak of cattle lung disease in 1995–96 led to the slaughter of around 300,000 animals.

Production in 2004 (in 1,000 tonnes) included: sorghum, 12; maize, 8; millet, 3; beans and pulses, 2.

17% of the land is set aside for wildlife conservation and 20% for wildlife management areas, with four national parks and game reserves.

Forestry

Forests covered 11,351,000 ha., or 20% of the total land area, in 2010. There are forest nurseries and plantations. Concessions have been granted to harvest 7,500 cu. metres in Kasane and Chobe Forestry Reserves, and up to 2,500 cu. metres in the Masame area. In 2011, 791,000 cu. metres of roundwood were cut.

Fisheries

In 2010 the total catch was 60 tonnes, exclusively from inland waters.

INDUSTRY

The most important sector is the diamond industry. A diamond-processing plant opened in Gaborone in March 2008. Meat is processed, and beer, soft drinks, textiles and foodstuffs manufactured. Rural technology is being developed and traditional crafts encouraged. In June 2003 there were 16,773 enterprises operating in Botswana, of which a third were in the wholesale and retail trade.

Labour

The labour force in 2013 was 1,128,700 (867,600 in 2003). 78.9% of the population aged 15–64 was economically active in 2013. In the same year 17.6% of the population was unemployed.

Botswana had 14,000 people living in slavery according to the Walk Free Foundation's 2013 Global Slavery Index.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Botswana is a member of the Southern African Customs Union (SACU) with Lesotho, Namibia, South Africa and Swaziland. There are no foreign exchange restrictions.

Imports and Exports

Merchandise imports in 2013 totalled US$7,433.5m. (US$8,025.3m. in 2012) and merchandise exports US$7,573.3m. (US$5,971.2m. in 2012).

Principal imports in 2013 were manufactured goods (37.0%) followed by machinery and transport equipment, and mineral fuels and lubricants; main exports in 2013 were manufactured goods (82.7%), crude materials and animal and vegetable oils, and machinery and transport equipment. Diamonds accounted for 82.9% of Botswana's exports in 2013.

The leading import supplier in 2010 was South Africa (72.8%), followed by the UK and China; the leading export destination in 2010 was the UK (55.5%), followed by South Africa and Norway.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

In 2005 the total road network was estimated to be 25,798 km (32.6% paved). In Dec. 2008 there were 256,498 motor vehicles registered. There were 497 deaths in road accidents in 2007.

Rail

The main line from Mafeking in South Africa to Bulawayo in Zimbabwe traverses Botswana. The total length of the rail system was 888 km in 2005, including two branch lines. In 2006, 426,894 passengers and 1,712,607 tonnes of freight were carried.

Civil Aviation

There are international airports at Gaborone (Sir Seretse Khama) and at Maun and six domestic airports. The national carrier is the state-owned Air Botswana, which in 2013 carried 265,000 passengers (173,000 on international flights). In 2010 direct flights were operated to Harare, Johannesburg and Nairobi as well as domestic services. In Oct. 1999 an Air Botswana pilot who had been suspended two months earlier crashed an empty passenger plane into the airline's two serviceable aeroplanes at Gaborone Airport, killing himself and destroying the airline's complete fleet in the process. In 2012 Gaborone handled 403,372 passengers.

Telecommunications

In 2011 there were 149,600 landline telephone subscriptions (equivalent to 73.7 per 1,000 inhabitants) and 2,900,300 mobile phone subscriptions (or 1,428.2 per 1,000 inhabitants). In 2011, 7.0% of the population were internet users. In June 2012 there were 224,000 Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

Law is based on the Roman-Dutch law of the former Cape Colony, but judges and magistrates are also qualified in English common law. The Court of Appeal has jurisdiction in respect of criminal and civil appeals emanating from the High Court, and in all criminal and civil cases and proceedings. Magistrates' courts and traditional courts are in each administrative district. As well as a national police force there are local customary law enforcement officers. The death penalty is still in force; there were two executions in 2012 and one in 2013 although none in 2014 or 2015. The population in penal institutions in Dec. 2012 was 4,241 (205 per 100,000 of national population). Botswana was ranked 27th of 102 countries for criminal justice and 33rd for civil justice in the 2015 World Justice Project Rule of Law Index, which provides data on how the rule of law is experienced by the general public across eight categories. Both rankings were the highest of any African country.

Education

Adult literacy rate in 2008 was 83%. Basic free education, introduced in 1986, consists of seven years of primary and three years of junior secondary schooling. In 2005 enrolment in primary schools was 326,500 with 13,472 teaching staff, and 168,720 pupils at secondary level with 12,371 teaching staff. There were 10,950 students in higher education in 2005 with 529 academic staff. 'Brigades' (community-managed private bodies) provide lower-level vocational training. The Department of Non-Formal Education offers secondary-level correspondence courses and is the executing agency for the National Literacy Programme.

In 2009 total expenditure on education came to 8.2% of GNI and 16.2% of total government spending.

Health

In 2004 there were 16 primary hospitals, one mental hospital, three referral hospitals, 15 health centres, 257 clinics and 366 health posts. There were also 761 stops for mobile health teams. In 2004 there were 89 doctors and 2,129 nurses in government health facilities. There are other private health facilities with more personnel.

RELIGION

Freedom of worship is guaranteed under the Constitution. In 2010 there were an estimated 1.32m. Protestants and 120,000 Roman Catholics according to the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life, with most of the remainder of the population being unaffiliated or folk religionists.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

Tsodilo was created a UNESCO World Heritage Site in 2001. It is the site of over 4,500 prehistoric rock paintings in the Kalahari Desert. Okavango Delta, comprising permanent marshlands and seasonally flooded plains, was inscribed on the list in 2014.

Press

The government-owned Daily News is distributed free (circulation, 2008: 65,000). There is one other daily, the independent Mmegi ('The Reporter'), and 14 non-dailies.

Tourism

There were 2,145,000 international tourists (excluding same-day visitors) in 2010, with tourism receipts totalling US$218m.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Evidence of human habitation in Brazil dates to 9000 BC. Before the Portuguese discovery and occupation of Brazil there was a large indigenous population fragmented into smaller tribes. The largest was the Tupi-Guarani, which survived the sub-tropical environment by clearing land for crops.

The first Europeans to encounter the indigenous peoples were exiled criminals, or degradados, and Jesuit missionaries. The first Portuguese contact with Brazil was Pedro Álvares Cabral who left Lisbon in 1500 with orders to travel along the Cape of Good Hope route discovered by the Portuguese navigator Vasco da Gama in 1497–98. In an attempt to avoid storms he set a course more westerly than da Gama's and was carried still farther westward, landing in a place he named Terra da Vera Cruz (Land of the True Cross) and later renamed Terra do Brasil (Land of Brazil).

Although the official motive for Portuguese exploration was religious—the conversion of the natives to the Catholic faith—the greater incentive was to find a direct all-water trade route with Asia and thereby break Italy's commercial domination. Early Portuguese economic activity in Brazil revolved around the exploitation of the huge timber (Brazilwood) resources. This was soon superseded by sugarcane and, to a lesser extent, tobacco, harvested on plantations that sprang up in the interior in the 16th and 17th centuries. As these industries came to dominate the economy the need for large-scale labour became more pressing. Where the indigenous people proved unsuitable or unavailable, largely owing to ill health from newly introduced European diseases, millions of Africans were enslaved and shipped to the region.

The first attempt to establish a working government came in 1533 when the Portuguese divided the land into 15 captaincies, subdivided into leagues and ruled by selected governors (donatários). In 1549 John III sought to establish a more centralized power structure and appointed Tomé de Sousa as governor general, ruling from the newly founded capital, Salvador (Bahia). In 1567 Governor-General Mem da Sá founded Rio de Janeiro to protect its harbour from French incursions. During the Union of Portugal and Spain (1580–1640), Brazil became subject to attacks from Spanish enemies, notably the Netherlands, whose forces were not expelled until 1654.

The Portuguese settlers had set about conquering the vast Brazilian interior by the late 17th century. Early excursions were made by bandeirantes, men pursuing private enterprise and dreams of personal wealth. They discovered the first gold in the region at Minas Gerais in 1695. This opened up a new resource for exploitation by the Portuguese crown. Rio de Janeiro benefited greatly and in 1763 became the colonial capital in place of Salvador. Recife and Ouro Preto were the other major colonial urban centres.

The third quarter of the 18th century saw Spain accept many of Portugal's claims in the region. Portuguese Prime Minister Sebastião José de Carvalho e Mello ended the rule of the donatários, expelled the Jesuits, gave new freedoms to the native population and established two companies to regulate Brazilian trade. As Brazilian government became increasingly centralized a burgeoning nationalism emerged, most famously in the failed rebellion against the Portuguese led by Joaquim José da Silva Xavier (Tiradentes) in 1789.

In 1807 an invasion of Portugal by Napoleon Bonaparte forced the royal family to flee Portugal and take refuge in Rio, declaring it the temporary capital of the Portuguese Empire. In 1816 King João VI ascended the Portuguese throne but for five years refused to return to Lisbon. While in Brazil he initiated reforms which ended Portugal's commercial monopoly and in 1815 granted Brazil equal status with Portugal when he established the United Kingdom of Portugal, Brazil and the Algarves. On his return to Portugal João's son, Pedro, became Brazil's regent.

Independence

Pedro's regency ran into trouble when the Cortes (the Portuguese parliamentary body) demanded his return to Portugal. The Cortes repealed many of João's reforms for the former colony and sought to reduce it to its earlier colonial status. When, in Sept. 1822, the Cortes decided to reduce Pedro's powers he called for Brazilian independence. On 1 Dec. 1822 he was crowned Constitutional Emperor and Perpetual Defender of Brazil. The United States recognized Brazil's independence in May 1824 followed by Portugal itself in 1825.

Pedro was forced to abdicate in 1831 following a disastrous war with Argentina and a financial crisis deepened by his promise to free the slaves. He left his five-year old son Pedro II as the ruler in waiting. In 1840 Pedro II succeeded after nine years of weak rule and civil strife. By 1847, Pedro was established as a leader free of political influences. He ruled for nearly 50 years and despite uprisings Brazil remained relatively stable and its economy strong.

Pedro was instrumental in the overthrow of Juan Manuel de Rosas in Argentina in the 1850s and became involved in Uruguay's civil war in the 1860s. In the 1870s the three nations united to repel the advances of the Paraguayan forces of Francisco Solano López. Pedro outlawed the slave trade in 1854. Emancipation was achieved in 1888 when three-quarters of a million slaves were freed without compensation to their owners. In 1889 Gen. Manuel Deodoro da Fonseca led a military revolt which forced Pedro's abdication. In Feb. 1891 Brazil became a Federal Republic with Fonseca elected as its first president. Forced to resign when he attempted to bypass congress, he was succeeded by Floriano Peixoto who used the military to restore order. In 1894 he was replaced by Brazil's first civilian head of state, Prudente de Morais. He and his immediate successors enjoyed relative peace as Brazil grew rich on coffee exports.

Brazil underwent significant territorial expansion in the early years of the 20th century during the Baron of Rio Branco's tenure as foreign minister. As well as winning 900,000 sq. km of land from other South American nations, he pursued close relations with the USA and UK, which led to a declaration of war against Germany in 1917. However, by the 1920s there was growing internal resentment at the wealth of the coffee barons and in 1922 a failed military coup initiated eight years of civil strife. Amid economic crisis in 1930 Getúlio Vargas lost the presidential election but was swept to power by a military junta which dismissed the legitimately elected government.

The constitution of 1934 provided for universal suffrage and three years later a new constitution, drafted in the aftermath of a failed coup, gave Vargas greatly extended power. During his period of rule some areas, including São Paulo, saw considerable industrial development, helping Brazil to create a modern economy. In the 1940s the first steel plant was built in the state of Rio de Janeiro at Volta Redonda with US financing. In 1942 Brazil followed the lead of the USA and declared war against the Axis powers. In Oct. 1945 the military staged a coup and Vargas was forced to step down.

Economic Problems

The subsequent election was won by Eurico Gaspar Dutra, a favourite of Vargas, whose government set presidential terms at five years and reduced the power of central government. Vargas was returned to power in 1950 but failed to dominate as he had previously. Brazil's economic problems spiralled and in 1954 Vargas was implicated in the attempted murder of a journalist. When the High Command demanded his resignation Vargas shot himself.

Juscelino Kubitschek, popularly known as JK, was elected president in 1956. He launched road and hydro-electric schemes and built a new capital, Brasília. It was hoped these programmes would be the catalyst for the development of Brazil's huge interior but instead brought uncontrollable inflation. The presidency of Jânio Quadros in 1961 was marked by his decoration of Che Guevara in a public ceremony. Antagonizing the right-wing military, he resigned after six months in office. Vice-president João Goulart took over but his leftist policies led to his overthrow by the military in 1964.

There followed 20 years of single party rule and censored press. Humberto Castelo Branco was installed as president in April 1964. Chosen by the military to enforce fundamental political and economic reforms, Branco instead sought to introduce change through democratic channels. He narrowly survived a coup in 1965 but was forced by the military powerbrokers to take a radical line. Laws passed in Oct. 1965 suspended political parties and gave the president emergency powers. An ostensibly two-party state was created, consisting of the government-backed National Renewal Alliance (ARENA) and the Brazilian Democratic Movement (MDB). The MDB declined to field a candidate at the presidential elections of 1966 and ARENA's Costa e Silva took the presidency.

Brazil's military regime was not as brutal as those of Chile or Argentina, but at its height, around 1968 and 1969 when Costa e Silva awarded himself emergency powers, the use of torture was widespread. Costa e Silva had a stroke in Aug. 1970 and was replaced by Gen. Emílio Garrastazú Médici in Oct. He was succeeded in early 1974 by Gen. Ernesto Geisel. Geisel promoted measures to reduce censorship and increase political freedom but reverted to political oppression when electoral victory was in doubt. In April 1977 he dismissed congress when it failed to pass judicial reforms and governed using emergency powers. He resigned in 1979 to be replaced by his favoured successor, Gen. João Baptista de Oliveira Figueiredo. The generals benefited from the Brazilian economic miracle in the late 1960s and '70s, when the economy was growing by more than an annual 10%. However, uncoordinated growth led to rampant bureaucracy, corruption and inflation.

Return to Democracy

Unable to contain hyperinflation, the government authorized the restitution of political rights. In 1980 a militant working-class movement sprang up under the charismatic leadership of a worker, Lula da Silva (better known as Lula). Popular opposition, together with economic problems, forced Figueiredo to adopt the abertura (opening)—a slow process of returning to democratic government.

Tancredo Neves, leader of the Partido do Movimento Democrático Brasileiro (PMDB), the main opposition party, surprised his military opponents by winning the 1985 elections, but died shortly before taking power. José Sarney, his vice-president, guided the country through the transition from military to civilian rule as well as overseeing the drafting and implementation of a new democratic constitution. But the country drifted into the economic chaos afflicting the whole continent, with finance ministers changing frequently and foreign debt reaching CR$115,000m. Price and wage freezes set out in Sarney's Cruzado Plan succeeded only briefly in bringing down inflation. In the presidential run-off of Dec. 1989 voters backed two of Sarney's most vociferous critics, with Fernando Collor de Mello narrowly defeating Labour Party candidate, Lula.

Collor, of the National Reconstruction party, promised reductions in inflation and corruption. In March 1990 he confiscated 80% of every bank account worth more than US$1,200, promising to release them 18 months later with interest. He also announced the privatization of state-owned companies and the opening of Brazilian markets to foreign competition and capital. By 1992 Collor's government had failed to reach many of its targets and was embroiled in scandals and corruption, some of which were linked directly to his family. Inflation was again spiralling. Parliament, under public pressure, forced an impeachment and Itamar Franco, Collor's vice-president, took office until elections were held in Oct. 1994. Under Franco inflation leapt towards 3,000% but his fourth finance minister, Fernando Henrique Cardoso, introduced successful economic reforms.

In 1994 Cardoso was elected president for the Partido da Social Democracia Brasileira, formed in 1990 by PMDB dissidents. He oversaw an economic revolution that included a radical privatization programme, the lowering of trade barriers and the introduction of a new currency, the real. A constitutional amendment in 1997 provided for consecutive presidential terms and the following year Cardoso won re-election at a time when Brazil was feeling the effects of the economic turbulence in the Far East. In Jan. 1999 the real was devalued, losing 35% of its value against the dollar in two months. In Cardoso's second term the public debt reached US$260bn. and the government was forced to reduce spending on health and welfare while increasing taxes. His government failed to address the problems of inequality and corruption and at the 2002 presidential elections Cardoso's successor, José Serra, was defeated by the left-wing leader, Luiz Inácio Lula da Silva.

Lula, the country's first elected socialist president, pledged to combat Brazil's widespread poverty while co-operating with the business sector and international community. In May 2003 he invited the Democratic Movement into government to ensure the passage of key economic reforms. In 2011 Dilma Rousseff, also of the Workers' Party, succeeded him as president.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Brazil is bounded in the east by the Atlantic and on its northern, western and southern borders by all the South American countries except Chile and Ecuador. The total area (including inland waters) is 8,514,877 sq. km. It is the world's fifth largest country and occupies 47.8% of South America. Area and population as at the census of 2010:

The principal metropolitan areas (census, 2010) were São Paulo (11,152,344), Rio de Janeiro (6,320,446), Salvador (2,674,923), Brasília (2,482,210), Fortaleza (2,452,185), Belo Horizonte (2,375,151), Manaus (1,792,881), Curitiba (1,751,907), Recife (1,537,704) and Porto Alegre (1,409,351).

Approximately 54% of the population of Brazil is White, 40% mixed White and Black, and 5% Black. There are some 260,000 native Indians. Less than 0.5% of the population are immigrants.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

The total number of registered live births in 2006 was 2,799,128 (rate of 15.4 per 1,000 population); deaths, 1,020,211 (5.6); marriages, 889,828 (4.9); divorces 162,244 (0.9). The average age at first marriage in 2006 was 28.3 years for men and 25.4 for women. Life expectancy in 2006 was 68.5 years for males and 76.1 for females. Annual population growth rate, 2000–05, 1.5%; infant mortality, 2010, 17 per 1,000 live births (down from 50 per 1,000 in 1990); fertility rate, 2006, 2.0 children per woman. The number of deaths per 1,000 live births among children under five was reduced from 59 in 1990 to 19 in 2010. Brazil's recent economic advances have enabled 36m. people to move out of extreme poverty since the Workers' Party came to power in 2003. Brazil legalized same-sex marriage in May 2013.

CLIMATE

Because of its latitude, the climate is predominantly tropical, but factors such as altitude, prevailing winds and distance from the sea cause certain variations, though temperatures are not notably extreme. In tropical parts, winters are dry and summers wet, while in Amazonia conditions are constantly warm and humid. The northeast sertão is hot and arid, with frequent droughts. In the south and east, spring and autumn are sunny and warm, summers are hot, but winters can be cold when polar air-masses impinge. Brasília, Jan. 72°F (22.3°C), July 68°F (19.8°C). Annual rainfall 60" (1,512 mm). Belém, Jan. 78°F (25.8°C), July 80°F (26.4°C). Annual rainfall 105" (2,664 mm). Manaus, Jan. 79°F (26.1°C), July 80°F (26.7°C). Annual rainfall 92" (2,329 mm). Porto Alegre, Jan. 75°F (23.9°C), July 62°F (16.7°C). Annual rainfall 59" (1,502 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

The present Constitution came into force on 5 Oct. 1988, the eighth since independence. The President and Vice-President are elected for a four-year term. To be elected candidates must secure 50% plus one vote of all the valid votes, otherwise a second round of voting is held to elect the President between the two most voted candidates. Voting is compulsory for men and women between the ages of 18 and 70 apart from illiterates (for whom it is optional); it is also optional for persons from 16 to 18 years old and persons over 70. A referendum on constitutional change was held on 21 April 1993. Turnout was 80%. 66.1% of votes cast were in favour of retaining a republican form of government, and 10.2% for re-establishing a monarchy. 56.4% favoured an executive presidency, 24.7% parliamentary supremacy.

A constitutional amendment of June 1997 authorizes the re-election of the President for one extra term of four years.

Congress consists of an 81-member Senate (three Senators per federal unit plus three from the Federal District of Brasília) and a 513-member Chamber of Deputies. The Senate is directly elected (two-thirds of it and one-third of it elected for eight years in rotation every four years). The Chamber of Deputies is elected by universal franchise for four years. There is a Council of the Republic which is convened only in national emergencies.

Dilma Rousseff

Position

President

Introduction

Dilma Rousseff became Brazil's first female president on 1 Jan. 2011. A left-winger from the Workers' Party, she succeeded Luiz Inácio Lula da Silva, whom she had served as chief of staff for five years and with whose policies she had been closely associated. She was narrowly re-elected in Oct. 2014.

Early Life

Rousseff was born on 14 Dec. 1947 in Belo Horizonte, the state capital of Minas Gerais, to a Bulgarian émigré and his teacher wife. Her father had fled Europe in the 1920s, fearing persecution because of his involvement with the Bulgarian Communist Party. In Brazil he became a successful businessman.

Rousseff was schooled first at a francophone nunnery and then at Central State High School. In 1967 she joined the Worker's Politics faction of the Brazilian Socialist Party. Committed to armed struggle as the best means of achieving socialism's aims, Rousseff became involved in the militant Colina ('National Liberation Command'). She was also editor of a Marxist newspaper, The Piquet, and married fellow militant, Cláudio Galeno Linhares, in 1968. Fearing arrest, Rousseff abandoned her studies at the Minas Gerais Federal University School of Economics and moved to Rio de Janeiro in 1969. Her first marriage failed when she began an affair with another militant, Carlos Araújo, whom she later married.

Rousseff became a leading member of the VAR Palmares (Palmares Armed Revolutionary Vanguard), a military-political organization. In 1970 she was arrested in São Paulo and subsequently claimed that she suffered torture for 22 days. Following her release from jail at the end of 1972 she moved to Porto Alegre, the state capital of Rio Grande do Sul. She graduated with a degree in economics from its Federal University.

In the late 1970s she co-founded the Democratic Labour Party (PDT) of Rio Grande do Sul and was involved in the Direct Elections Now movement, credited with helping bring an end to Brazil's military regime. Having made the transition to mainstream politics, Rousseff was appointed municipal secretary of treasury in Porto Alegre in 1986. She later led the national economics and statistics foundation as well as serving as secretary of energy and communications for Rio Grande do Sul. In the latter role she oversaw a major increase in power production and distribution that ensured the state avoided the power cuts that routinely blighted much of the rest of Brazil.

In 2001 Rousseff joined the Workers' Party led by Luiz Inácio Lula da Silva. In 2002 she was named minister of mines and energy by the newly elected president. The following year she became director of the Brazilian state-controlled oil conglomerate Petrobras. On 21 June 2005 she was appointed Lula's chief of staff following the resignation of José Dirceu in the wake of the Mensalão scandal that rocked the Lula administration. In April 2010 she resigned her position at Petrobras. In June 2010 she announced she was standing for the presidency. Promising to continue the populist policies of Lula, she claimed 56% of the vote in a run-off against her centre-right opponent, José Serra.

Career in Office

Never before elected to public office, Rousseff campaigned on a broad commitment to continue the left-leaning policies of her predecessor. She was also expected to forge close ties with other leftist South American leaders. As a former head of Petrobras, Rousseff has supported state involvement in key areas of the economy including banking, the oil industry and energy.

Growth figures released in March 2011 revealed Brazil had overtaken Italy to become the world's seventh largest economy, but Rousseff had to introduce unpopular measures to forestall economic overheating and reduce inflation. She was also weakened politically in 2011 by the resignations of her chief of staff and the ministers of transport, agriculture and sports, together with her dismissal of the defence minister, over corruption allegations. Despite antipathy towards privatization, she announced plans in Aug. 2012 to encourage private involvement in the building and running of new and essential national infrastructure, while resisting the pay demands of public sector workers. Against a background of stagnating economic growth, a wave of street demonstrations erupted in cities across the country in June 2013, protesting against high prices, poor public services and the cost of hosting the 2014 World Cup football finals.

In May 2012 Rousseff established a truth commission to investigate abuses committed during the military dictatorship of 1964–85. In Sept. 2013 she reacted angrily to reports that the US National Security Agency had been monitoring her personal communications and those of other public figures. She cancelled a planned state visit to Washington in protest.

Rousseff was re-elected as president following her victory in a run-off against Aécio Neves of the Brazilian Social Democracy Party in the elections of Oct. 2014. However, the first year of her second term was blighted by a major corruption scandal involving politicians and former executives of Petrobras while Rousseff was chair of the company. Public indignation over the scandal and the ailing economy led to massive protests across the country, and from late 2015 opposition calls for her impeachment. The lower house of Congress moved to impeach Rousseff in April 2016, with the Senate due to decide its position in May. Rousseff could only be impeached with the support of both houses.

DEFENCE

Conscription is for nine to 12 months.

In 2013 defence expenditure totalled US$34,730m. (US$173 per capita), representing 1.4% of GDP. Brazil was responsible for 49% of South America's military spending in 2013.

As at 31 Jan. 2013, 2,202 personnel (including 2,170 troops) were deployed in UN peacekeeping operations.

Army

There are seven military commands and 12 military regions. Strength, 2011, 190,000 (including 70,000 conscripts). Equipment in 2011 included 267 main battle tanks.

Navy

The principal ship of the Navy and Brazil's only aircraft carrier is the 32,700-tonne São Paulo (formerly the French Foch), commissioned in 1963 and purchased in 2000. There are also five diesel submarines, three anti-submarine warfare frigates bought from the UK in the 1990s, six multipurpose frigates and one training frigate.

Naval bases are at Rio de Janeiro, Salvador, Natal, Belém, Rio Grande and São Paulo, with river bases at Brasília, Ladário and Manaus.

Active personnel in 2011 totalled 59,000, including 15,000 Marines and 2,500 in Naval Aviation.

Air Force

The Air Force has four commands: COMGAR (operations), COMDABRA (aerospace defence), COMGAP (logistics) and COMGEP (personnel). There are seven air regions. Personnel strength, 2011, 69,480. There were 235 combat aircraft in 2011, including Mirage F-2000s and F-5Es.

ECONOMY

Agriculture accounted for 6.1% of GDP in 2009, industry 25.4% and services 68.5%.

In Dec. 2005 the government repaid the country's entire US$15.5bn. debt to the IMF two years ahead of schedule.

Overview

Brazil has experienced rapid economic expansion over the last few decades to become the seventh largest economy in the world and the largest in Latin America. It has an abundance of natural resources and is the tenth largest energy producer in the world. Oil reserves are currently estimated at 16.2bn. bbls, with further offshore natural gas and oil deposits yet to be fully exploited. It is also the third largest food exporter in the world and is a major research centre for biotechnology and genetic sciences.

However, while there is a diverse industrial sector—principally textiles, cement, iron ore, tin, steel, automobiles and aircraft-part manufacturing—the economy remains over-reliant on commodity exports. Sluggish economic growth in 2013 (at 2.7%), coupled with fiscal slippage and a weakening external account, led to the Standard & Poor's international credit rating agency downgrading the country's sovereign debt rating, and it was further reduced to junk status in 2015 (as growth declined to 1.4%).

Despite government promises to achieve a primary budget surplus of 1.2% of GDP in 2015 and 2.0% in 2016, Brazil lost its investment-grade status in late 2015 and the currency declined in value to a record low against the US dollar. Also that year, inflation stood at its highest level in over a decade at 10.7% and public debt was over 50% of GDP owing to the rate of spending on welfare and energy subsidies. Brazil spends a greater share of its national income on pensions than the whole of southern Europe. Consequently, investment in infrastructure development is low, measuring only 1.5% of GDP in 2013 against a global average of 3.8%. A corruption scandal involving the state-controlled petroleum giant Petrobras and several of Brazil's largest construction firms has meanwhile threatened the completion of infrastructure projects valued at US$325bn., including some required for the hosting of the 2016 Olympic Games.

In 2003 the poverty rate stood at 24.9%, but by 2014 the figure had fallen to 7.4%. Extreme poverty (those living on less than US$1.25 a day) fell from 7.2% to 3.8% between 2005 and 2012, according to UNICEF, but had risen to 6.1% in 2013. Hosting the 2014 football World Cup competition failed to boost the economy, with GDP contracting by 0.9% in the second quarter of the year and 0.2% in the third quarter.

Against a backdrop of political instability, in which President Rousseff has faced impeachment proceedings for alleged fiscal and monetary irresponsibility, economic growth was stifled in 2015. With negative growth predicted for 2016, the country is facing its longest downturn since the 1930s. Deep-seated structural challenges remain, and an improvement in educational provision is key to improving long-term productivity.

Currency

The unit of currency is the real (BRL) of 100 centavos, which was introduced on 1 July 1994 to replace the former cruzeiro real at a rate of 1 real (R$1) = 2,750 cruzeiros reais (CR$2,750). The real was devalued in Sept. 1994, March 1995, June 1995 and Jan. 1999, when it was allowed to float. Inflation rates (based on IMF statistics):

2005	2006	2007	2008	2009	2010	2011	2012	2013	2014
6.9%	4.2%	3.6%	5.7%	4.9%	5.0%	6.6%	5.4%	6.2%	6.3%

In 1990 inflation had been 2,948%.

In Sept. 2009 foreign exchange reserves were US$215,978m. (US$32,434m. in 2000); gold reserves totalled 1.08m. troy oz. Total money supply in Aug. 2009 was R$201,761m.

Budget

Central government revenue and expenditure (in R$1m.):

	2009	2010	2011
Revenue	772,793	987,943	1,035,457
Expenditure	851,259	1,006,188	1,089,901

Principal sources of revenue in 2009 were: taxes on goods and services, R$243,260m.; taxes on income, profits and capital gains, R$222,838m.; social security contributions, R$191,248m. Main items of expenditure by economic type in 2009: social benefits, R$270,749m.; interest, R$152,709m.; compensation of employees, R$151,653m.

Performance

Real GDP growth rates (based on IMF statistics):

2005	2006	2007	2008	2009	2010	2011	2012	2013	2014
3.1%	4.0%	6.0%	5.0%	-0.2%	7.6%	3.9%	1.8%	2.7%	0.1%

Brazil experienced a recession with negative growth in the fourth quarter of 2008 and the first quarter of 2009, but the economy then recovered to grow throughout the rest of 2009. The growth rate in 2010 was the highest since the mid-1980s. Total GDP in 2014 was US$2,346.1bn.

Banking and Finance

On 31 Dec. 1964 the Banco Central do Brasil (Governor, Alexandre Tombini) was founded as the national bank of issue and at May 2010 had total assets of R$1,192.4bn.

The Banco do Brasil/Bank of Brazil (founded in 1853 and reorganized in 1906) is a state-owned commercial bank; it had 4,048 branches in 2007 throughout the country. In Nov. 2008 Banco Itaú and Unibanco agreed to merge in a move that created South America's biggest bank, Itaú Unibanco, with assets in 2010 of R$651bn. (US$366bn.). In March 2007 total deposits in banks were R$386.8bn.

In Nov. 1998 the IMF announced a US$41.5bn. financing package to help shore up the Brazilian economy. In Aug. 2001 it gave approval for a new US$15bn. stand-by credit, and in Aug. 2002 granted an additional US$30bn. loan to try to prevent a financial meltdown that was threatening to devastate the region. In Dec. 2005 Brazil repaid all its IMF debts.

Brazil received US$62.5bn. worth of foreign direct investment in 2014, down slightly from US$64.0bn. in 2013. At the end of 2014 foreign direct investment stocks totalled US$754.8bn.

In 2010 total external debt amounted to US$346,978m. (equivalent to 16.9% of GNI), up from US$187,526m. in 2005.

There is a stock exchange in São Paulo.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Brazil's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2011 were the equivalent of 2.4 tonnes per capita. An Environmental Performance Index compiled in 2016 ranked Brazil 46th of 180 countries, with 78.9%. The index examined various factors in nine areas—agriculture, air quality, biodiversity and habitat, climate and energy, fisheries, forests, health impacts, water and sanitation, and water resources.

Brazil has the world's biggest river system and about a quarter of the world's primary rainforest. Current environmental issues are deforestation in the Amazon Basin, air and water pollution in Rio de Janeiro and São Paulo (the world's fourth largest city), and land degradation and water pollution caused by improper mining activities. Contaminated drinking water causes 70% of child deaths.

Electricity

Hydro-electric power accounts for about 78% of Brazil's total electricity output, although its share has been gradually falling—from around 93% in 1990—as the proportion of electricity generated from fossil fuels has been rising. Brazil was only the ninth largest electricity producer overall in the world in 2011, but the second largest producer of hydro-electric power (behind only China). Installed electric capacity (2011) was 117.1m. kW, of which 82.5m. kW hydro-electric. Production cannot meet demand, making Brazil a net importer of electricity. There were two nuclear power plants in 2014, supplying some 2.9% of total output. A third nuclear plant, currently under construction, is scheduled for completion in 2020. There are plans for a further four plants to be built by 2030. Production (2011) 531,759 GWh. Consumption per capita in 2011 was 2,882 kWh.

Oil and Gas

There are 13 oil refineries, of which 11 are state-owned. Oil production in 2011 was a record 114.2m. tonnes. Production rose every year between 2004 and 2011 before dropping back down to 112.2m. tonnes in 2012 and then 109.9m. tonnes in 2013. Proven oil reserves rose to 15.6bn. bbls in 2013. Brazil began to open its markets in 1999 by inviting foreign companies to drill for oil, and in 2000 the monopoly of the state-owned Petrobras on importing oil products was removed. In Nov. 2007 the discovery of a huge offshore oilfield was announced off Brazil's southeastern Atlantic coast that could increase the country's oil reserves by as much as 40%. The Tupi field, which contains reserves estimated at between 5bn. and 8bn. bbls of oil, is the largest new oilfield discovered since Kazakhstan's Kashagan field in 2000. Oil now contributes 12% of total GDP. It has been suggested that by 2020 Brazil could be the world's fifth largest oil producer.

Natural gas production in 2013 was a record 21.3bn. cu. metres with reserves of 500bn. cu. metres. One of the most significant developments has been the construction of the 3,150-km Bolivia-Brazil gas pipeline, one of Latin America's biggest infrastructure projects, costing around US$2bn. (£1.2bn.). The pipeline runs from the Bolivian interior across the Brazilian border at Puerto Suárez-Corumbá to the far southern port city of Porto Alegre. Gas from Bolivia began to be pumped to São Paulo in 1999.

Ethanol

Brazil is the second largest producer of ethanol (after the USA) and the second largest exporter. Production, almost exclusively from sugarcane, totalled 21.1bn. litres in 2012 (also 21.1bn. litres in 2011 but 26.2bn. litres in 2010). Ethanol accounts for half of all the transport fuel used in Brazil.

Minerals

The chief minerals are bauxite, gold, iron ore, manganese, nickel, phosphates, platinum, tin and uranium. Output figures, 2004 (in 1,000 tonnes): phosphate rock, 35,000; bauxite (2003), 17,363; salt, 6,648; hard coal, 5,077; asbestos (crude ore), 3,950; manganese ore, 3,143; aluminium (2003), 1,381; magnesite, 1,339; graphite, 650; chrome (crude ore, 2003), 404; zinc, 159; barytes, 64; nickel ore, 52; zirconium, 35; copper (2003), 26; lead (lead content in concentrate), 15; tin (tin content), 12. Deposits of coal exist in Rio Grande do Sul, Santa Catarina and Paraná. Total reserves were estimated at 9,920m. tonnes in 2005.

Iron is found chiefly in Minas Gerais, notably the Cauê Peak at Itabira. Proven reserves of iron ore amounted to around 15,800m. tonnes in 2005. Total output of iron ore, 2004 was 261.7m. tonnes. Brazil is the second largest producer of iron ore after China.

Gold is chiefly from Pará, Mato Grosso and Minas Gerais; total production (2004), 47.6 tonnes. Silver output (2004), 35.5 tonnes. Diamond output in 2005 was an estimated 900,000 carats, mainly from Minas Gerais and Mato Grosso.

Agriculture

In 2007 the agricultural population was an estimated 23.06m. There were 5.2m. farms in 2006. There were some 59.5m. ha. of arable land in 2007 and 7.0m. ha. of permanent crops.

Production (in tonnes):

	2004	2005
Apples	980,203	850,535
Bananas	6,583,564	6,703,400
Beans	2,967,007	3,021,641
Cassava	23,926,553	25,872,015
Coconut (1,000 fruits)	2,078,226	2,079,291
Coffee	2,465,710	2,140,169
Cotton	3,801,382	3,668,283
Grapes	1,291,382	1,232,564
Maize	41,787,558	35,113,312
Onions	1,157,562	1,137,684
Oranges	18,313,717	17,853,443
Pineapples (1,000 fruits)	1,477,299	1,528,313
Potatoes	3,047,083	3,130,174
Rice	13,277,008	13,192,863
Soya	49,549,941	51,182,074
Sugarcane	415,205,835	422,956,646
Tomatoes	3,515,567	3,452,973
Wheat	5,818,846	4,658,790

Brazil is the world's leading producer of sugarcane, oranges and coffee (and the second largest consumer of coffee after the USA). Coffee production is more than double that of any other country. Harvested coffee area, 2005, 2,325,920 ha., principally in the states of Minas Gerais, Espírito Santo, São Paulo and Paraná. Harvested cocoa area, 2005, 625,384 ha. Bahia furnished 65% of the output in 2005. Two crops a year are grown. Brazil accounts for more than a quarter of annual coffee production worldwide. Harvested castor-bean area, 2005, 230,911 ha. Tobacco is grown chiefly in Rio Grande do Sul and Santa Catarina.

Rubber is produced chiefly in the states of São Paulo, Mato Grosso, Bahia, Espírito Santo and Minas Gerais. Output, 2005, 172,847 tonnes.

Livestock, 2005: cattle, 207.2m.; pigs, 34.1m.; sheep, 15.6m.; goats, 10.3m.; horses, 5.8m.; mules, 1.4m.; asses, 1.2m.; chickens and other poultry, 999.0m.

Livestock products, 2005 (in 1,000 tonnes): beef and veal, 6,346; pork and pork products, 2,157; poultry meat, 7,866; milk, 24.6bn. litres; hen's eggs, 2.8bn. dozen; wool, 11; honey, 34.

Forestry

With forest lands covering 519,522,000 ha. in 2010, only Russia had a larger area of forests. Brazil's forests account for 13% of global forest cover. In 2010, 62.4% of the total land area of Brazil was under forests. The annual loss of 2,194,000 ha. of forests between 2005 and 2010 was the biggest in any country in the world over the same period. Of the total area under forests 92% was primary forest in 2010, 7% other naturally regenerated forest and 1% planted forest.

Timber production in 2011 totalled 284.02m. cu. metres, a figure exceeded only in the USA, India and China. In 1996 the government ruled that Amazonian landowners could log only 20% of their holdings instead of 50%, as had previously been permitted. In 2008 the government pledged to end net deforestation and reduce deforestation in the Amazon by 80% by 2020. Amazon deforestation in 2011–12, at 4,571 sq. km, was around a sixth of the 2003–04 total and at its lowest level since records began. There was, however, an increase again in 2012–13, to 5,891 sq. km.

Fisheries

In 2012 the fishing industry had a catch of 842,987 tonnes, of which 576,945 tonnes came from sea fishing and 266,042 tonnes from inland fishing. Aquaculture production totalled 479,399 tonnes in 2010.

INDUSTRY

The leading companies by market capitalization in Brazil in March 2015 were: Ambev, a beverages company (US$90.7bn.); Itaú Unibanco (US$58.4bn.); and Banco Bradesco (US$43.2bn.).

The main industries are textiles, shoes, chemicals, cement, lumber, iron ore, tin, steel, aircraft, motor vehicles and parts, and other machinery and equipment. The National Iron and Steel Co. at Volta Redonda, State of Rio de Janeiro, furnishes a substantial part of Brazil's steel. Production (in 1,000 tonnes): cement (2008), 51,970; pig iron (2008), 34,871; distillate fuel oil (2007), 34,035; crude steel (2008), 33,716; sugar (2007), 28,226; rolled steel (2008), 24,693; petrol (2007), 15,733; residual fuel oil (2007), 15,707; cellulose (2008), 12,697; paper (2008), 9,409. Output of other products in 2007: 68.43m. mobile phones; 37.54m. rubber tyres for cars; 12.84m. TV sets; 2.55m. motor vehicles (2008); soft drinks, 12,642.2m. litres; beer, 10,020.2m. litres.

Labour

The labour force in 2013 was 108,384,600 (90,365,500 in 2003). 75.0% of the population aged 15–64 was economically active in 2013. A constitutional amendment of 1996 prohibits the employment of children under 14 years. There is a minimum monthly wage, which was increased from R$622 to R$678 with effect from 1 Jan. 2013. In Sept. 2013, 4.9% of the workforce was unemployed based on figures from six of Brazil's largest metropolitan areas (down from 10.9% in Sept. 2004 and 7.7% in Sept. 2009).

Brazil had 0.21m. people living in slavery according to the Walk Free Foundation's 2013 Global Slavery Index.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

In 1990 Brazil repealed most of its protectionist legislation. Import tariffs on some 13,000 items were reduced in 1995. In 1991 the government permitted an annual US$100m. of foreign debt to be converted into funds for environmental protection.

Imports and Exports

Merchandise imports and exports for calendar years (in US$1m.):

	2012	2013	2014
Imports	223,149.1	239,620.9	229,060.1
Exports	242,579.8	242,178.1	225,098.4

Principal imports in 2014 were machinery and transport equipment (36.4%) followed by chemicals, and mineral fuels and lubricants; main exports in 2014 were crude materials and animal and vegetable oils (29.3%), food, animals and beverages, and machinery and transport equipment.

The leading import supplier in 2010 was the USA (15.1%), followed by China and Argentina; the leading export destination in 2010 was also the USA (9.7%), again followed by China and Argentina.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

In 2004 there were 1,751,868 km of roads, of which 93,071 km were highways, national and main roads. In 2007 there were 37,978,000 vehicles in use, including 30,283,000 passenger cars. In 2006, 407,685 persons were injured in road accidents and 35,155 were killed.

Rail

The Brazilian railways have largely been privatized: all six branches of the large RFFSA network are now under private management. The largest areas of the network are now run by América Latina Logística (12,883 km of metre gauge in 2007) and Ferrovia Centro-Atlântica (7,080 km of metre gauge). The Rio de Janeiro suburban network is run by SuperVia (128m. passengers in 2008) and the São Paulo network by Cia Paulista de Trens Metropolitanos (390m. passengers in 2005). There are plans to develop South America's first high-speed rail service linking Rio de Janeiro and São Paulo. Although it will not be completed in time for the Olympic Games in 2016, it is expected that the rail service will be operational by 2020 at the earliest.

Several other freight routes operate independently and are mainly used by the mining industry. There are metros in Belo Horizonte (30 km), Brasília (40 km), Fortaleza (24 km), Porto Alegre (31 km), Recife (39 km), Rio de Janeiro (46 km), Salvador (7 km), São Paulo (57 km) and Teresina (15 km).

Civil Aviation

There are major international airports at Rio de Janeiro-Galeão (Antonio Carlos Jobim International) and São Paulo (Guarulhos) and some international flights from Brasília, Porto Alegre, Recife and Salvador. The main airlines are LATAM (created in June 2012 when the Brazilian carrier TAM merged with LAN Airlines, Chile's largest airline) and Gol (a low-cost airline launched in 2001). In 2005 TAM carried 17,109,193 passengers and Varig 13,268,869 passengers. Varig was previously Brazil's biggest airline but was surpassed by TAM and was bought by Gol in April 2007. In 2014 LATAM carried 67,833,000 passengers, making it the world's seventh largest airline on the basis of passengers carried.

Brazil's busiest airport is Guarulhos (São Paulo), which handled 18,795,596 passengers in 2007, followed by Congonhas (São Paulo) with 15,244,401 passengers (all on domestic flights) and Brasília International (Presidente Juscelino Kubitschek International Airport) with 11,119,872 passengers. In Feb. 2012 Guarulhos was one of three Brazilian airports to be privatized.

Shipping

Inland waterways, mostly rivers, are open to navigation over some 43,000 km. Tubarão and Itaquí are the leading ports. In 2008 Santos, the leading container port, handled 2.68m. TEUs (twenty-foot equivalent units). In Jan. 2009 there were 166 ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 2.02m. GT. Of the 166 vessels registered, 52 were oil tankers, 44 general cargo ships, 24 passenger ships, 19 bulk carriers, 14 liquid gas tankers, nine container ships and four chemical tankers. In 2007 the cargo moved through Brazilian ports and terminals totalled 754.7m. tonnes of which 35.4% was iron ore.

Telecommunications

Mobile phone services were opened to the private sector in 1996. In 2014 there were 280,728,799 mobile phone subscribers (1,389.5 per 1,000 persons). The state-owned telephone system was privatized in 1998. There were 44,128,188 main (fixed) telephone lines in 2014. In the same year 57.6% of the population were internet users. In June 2012 Brazil had 51.2m. Facebook users, the second highest total after the USA (26% of the population).

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

There is a Supreme Federal Court of Justice at Brasília composed of 11 judges, and a Supreme Court of Justice; all judges are appointed by the President with the approval of the Senate. There are also Regional Federal Courts, Labour Courts, Electoral Courts and Military Courts. Each state organizes its own courts and judicial system in accordance with the federal Constitution.

In Dec. 1999 then President Cardoso created the country's first intelligence agency (the Brazilian Intelligence Agency) under civilian rule. It replaced informal networks which were a legacy of the military dictatorship, and helps authorities crack down on organized drug gangs.

The prison population was 548,003 in Dec. 2012 (274 per 100,000 of national population). Brazil's annual murder rate is among the highest of any country at 27 per 100,000 population in 2013, around seven times that of the USA. In 2015 the World Justice Project Rule of Law Index, which provides data on how the rule of law is experienced by the general public across eight categories, ranked Brazil 68th of 102 countries for criminal justice and 48th for civil justice.

Education

Elementary education is compulsory from seven to 14. Adult literacy in 2008 was 90.0% (male, 89.8%; female, 90.2%). In 2006 there were 107,375 pre-primary schools, with 5,588,153 pupils and 310,241 teachers; 159,016 elementary schools, with 33,282,663 pupils and 1,665,341 teachers; 24,131 secondary schools, with 8,906,820 pupils and 519,935 teachers. In 2003 there were 1,637 higher education institutions, with 3,479,913 students and 227,844 teachers. In 2006, 97.6% of children between the ages of seven and 14 were enrolled at schools.

There were 1,859 universities in Brazil in 2003, of which 207 were public and 1,652 were private. Of the 207 public universities, 83 were federal, 65 were state and 59 were municipal institutions.

In 2008 total expenditure on education came to 5.4% of GDP. Expenditure on education was 16.1% of total government spending in 2007.

Health

In 2005 there were 62,483 hospitals, clinics and health centres (18,496 private). There were a total of 443,210 beds at hospitals, clinics and health centres in 2005 (294,244 private). In 2007, 329,041 doctors, 219,827 dentists, 178,546 nurses and 104,098 pharmacists were registered with Brazil's national health system. In 2006 there were 115 physicians per 100,000 population.

Brazil has been one of the most successful countries in the developing world in the campaign against AIDS. The death rate from HIV/AIDS fell from 9.6 deaths per 100,000 people in 1996 to 6.0 in 2006.

Welfare

Old-age pensions begin at 65 years (men) or 60 years (women) for employees and the urban self-employed, and ages 60 (men) or 55 (women) for the rural self-employed. To qualify there must be at least 35 years contributions for men or 30 years contributions for women. The maximum monthly pension was R$1,869.34 in June 2003.

Unemployment benefits vary depending on insurance but, as a general rule, cover 50% of average earnings in the last three months of employment, up to three times the minimum wage. The minimum benefit is 100% of the minimum monthly wage (R$678 in Jan. 2013).

Family allowances are granted to low-income families with one or more children under the age of 14 or with disabled children attending school. In 2003, R$13.48 a month was provided for each child.

RELIGION

According to the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life the population was an estimated 88.9% Christian in 2010, with folk religionists accounting for 2.8% and a further 7.9% unaffiliated. Only the USA has more Christians, although Brazil has the most Catholics of any country (an estimated 133.7m. in 2010). The Roman Catholic Church has 44 ecclesiastical provinces, each headed by an archbishop. These ecclesiastical provinces are in turn subdivided into 215 dioceses. The Archbishop of São Salvador da Bahia (Murilo Sebastião Ramos Krieger) is also the Primate of Brazil. In Feb. 2016 there were ten Roman Catholic cardinals.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

The sites under Brazilian jurisdiction entered on the UNESCO World Heritage List (with year entered) are: the Historic Town of Ouro Preto (1980), the centre of the gold rush founded at the end of the 17th century; the Historic Centre of Olinda (1982), founded by the Portuguese in the 16th century and largely rebuilt in the 18th century; the centre of Salvador de Bahia, Brazil's first capital (1549–1763), with its early mix of European, African and Amerindian cultures and many colonial buildings; and the Sanctuary of Bom Jesus do Congonhas, an ornate church dating to the late 18th century (both 1985); the Iguazu National Park (1986), with its 2,700 metre waterfall and an impressive range of flora and fauna, shared with the Iguazu National Park in Argentina; Brasília (1987), Brazil's purpose built capital city; Serra da Capivara National Park (1991) including cave paintings over 25,000 years old; the Historic Centre of São Luís (1997), which has examples of late 17th-century architecture; the Historic Centre of Diamantina, a colonial village inhabited by diamond prospectors in the 18th century; the Discovery Coast Atlantic Forest Reserves, incorporating eight separate areas protecting 100,000 ha. of Atlantic forest; and Atlantic Forest Southeast Reserves, covering 470,000 ha. over 25 protected areas (all 1999); the Pantanal Conservation Area (2000), incorporating four protected areas covering 188,000 ha. and offering access to a major freshwater wetland ecosystem; the Central Amazon Conservation Complex, covering over 6m. ha. of Amazon basin (2000 and 2003); the Cerrado Protected Areas, comprising Chapada dos Veadeiros and Emas National Parks, home to a diverse tropical ecosystem; Brazilian Atlantic Islands, comprising Fernando de Noronha and Atol das Rocas Reserves, protecting important marine flora and fauna such as dolphins and turtles and a large concentration of tropical seabirds; the Historic Centre of Goiás, established by colonizing powers in the 18th and 19th centuries (all 2001); São Francisco Square in the town of São Cristóvão, a Franciscan complex dating from the late 17th century (2010); and Rio de Janeiro: Carioca Landscapes between the Mountain and the Sea, key natural elements that have shaped the city including the peaks of the Tijuca mountains, the Botanical Gardens, Corcovado Mountain and its statue of Christ, the hills around Guanabara Bay and the extensive designed landscapes along Copacabana Bay (2012).

Brazil shares the Jesuit Missions of the Guaranis (1983 and 1984), the ruins of five Jesuit missions in the tropical rainforest dating from the 17th and 18th centuries, with Argentina.

Press

There were 784 daily newspapers in 2014 with a combined circulation of 8,478,000. In the same year there were 123 newspapers with online editions. The daily newspapers with the highest circulation are Folha de S. Paulo and the tabloid Super Notícia. In the 2013 World Press Freedom Index compiled by Reporters Without Borders, Brazil was ranked 108th out of 179 countries.

Tourism

In 2012, 5,677,000 tourists visited Brazil (up from 5,433,000 in 2011 and 3,785,000 in 2002). In 2011 the largest number of tourists came from elsewhere in the Americas (3,402,000); 1,663,000 European tourists visited the country, down from 1,938,000 in 2007. Receipts in 2012 totalled US$6.89bn. (US$6.83bn. in 2011).

Festivals

New Year's Eve in Rio de Janeiro is always marked with special celebrations, with a major fireworks display at Copacabana Beach. Immediately afterwards, preparations start for Carnival, which in 2017 will be held from 24–28 Feb. Other notable cultural festivals include the Parintins Folk Festival, held at the end of June and attracting over 40,000 people, and the Bahia Carnival, held in Salvador in Feb. to celebrate African influences in the region.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Records from Chinese and Arab seafarers dating back 1,400 years mention settlements on the northwest coast of Borneo that may have been forerunners to those in modern Brunei. From the early ninth century Vijayapura, which ancient Chinese texts refer to as a highly developed port, came under the control of the Srivijaya Empire (centred on Palumbang on the island of Sumatra). Trade with China blossomed from the late 10th century, with Song dynasty merchants seeking camphor from the hinterland they knew as Po-ni. By the 14th century Po-ni was under the influence of both the Javanese Majapahit Empire and Ming Dynasty Chinese traders.

In the mid-15th century Melaka emerged as the key port in the region, boasting a prosperous society of Malays, Sumatrans, Javans, Gujaratis, Arabs, Persians, Filipinos and Chinese. Following its capture by Portuguese merchants in 1511, Muslim traders were forced to seek alternative ports. Among them was Brunei, where an independent sultanate was established. The reign of Bolkiaah (1485–1521) is considered a 'golden age' during which Brunei developed into a prosperous realm that extended across northern Borneo (modern Sabah and Sarawak), the Sulu archipelago and parts of the Philippines (Manila Bay). The Portuguese explorer Ferdinand Magellan reached Brunei in 1521 and his Venetian navigator, Antonio Pigafetta, described the riches of Rajah Siripadah's court, including gold, pearls the size of hen's eggs, porcelain and tame elephants.

Skirmishes with Spanish naval forces in the 1560s left the Brunei sultanate weakened and it lost control of Manila in 1571 followed shortly by Sulu (both in the Philippines). The Spanish mounted an invasion of Brunei in 1578 until a cholera outbreak forced them to retreat after two months. The sultanate's influence waned further in the 17th century, with much of the region coming under the influence of Bugis warriors from the island of Sulawesi, renowned for their navigational and commercial abilities. Dutch and British influence in the East Indies increased in the 18th and 19th centuries and by the 1880s Brunei had lost much of its territory to the British adventurer James Brooke, who was granted the title of Rajah of Sarawak in 1841. Brunei became a British protectorate in 1888 and from 1906 Britain effectively established indirect rule.

The discovery of oil near the River Seria in 1929 brought great prosperity, with production reaching 6m. bbls per year by 1940. Brunei was occupied by Japanese forces in Dec. 1941, eight days after the attack on Pearl Harbor. After the Japanese surrendered in Sept. 1945 Brunei was governed by the British Military Administration, which was staffed mainly by Australians. In 1959 Sultan Omar Saifuddin III signed a new constitution that saw the Sultan become Supreme Head of State, although Britain retained responsibility for foreign affairs.

In 1962, fearful of the rise of the leftist Brunei People's Party, Sultan Omar declared a state of emergency and began ruling by decree. The following year Brunei decided against joining the Federation of Malaysia and remained a British dependency. Hassanal Bolkiaah became Sultan in Oct. 1967 following his father's abdication. Full independence was achieved in Jan. 1984 and over the following decade Bolkiaah strengthened his grip on power. He outlawed political parties and in 1991 introduced the conservative Malay Muslim Monarchy ideology upon which the nation's political and social institutions are based. Parliament was reopened in Sept. 2004 with 21 appointed members and the constitution was amended to allow for the appointment of elected representatives, although no date for elections has been set.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Brunei, on the coast of Borneo, is bounded in the northwest by the South China Sea and on all other sides by Sarawak (Malaysia), which splits it into two parts, the smaller portion forming the Temburong district. Area, 5,765 sq. km (2,226 sq. miles). Population (2011 census) 393,372 (203,144 males), giving a density of 68.2 per sq. km. Population estimate, July 2014: 411,900.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 423,000.

In 2011, 76.1% of the population lived in urban areas. The four districts are Brunei/Muara (2011 census: 279,924), Belait (60,744), Tutong (43,852) and Temburong (8,852). The capital is Bandar Seri Begawan (estimate 2001: 27,285); other large towns are Kuala Belait (2001: 27,975) and Seria (2001: 15,819). Ethnic groups include Malays (67%) and Chinese (16%).

The official language is Malay but English is in use.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2005 births, 6,933; deaths, 1,072. Rates, 2005: birth per 1,000 population, 18.7; death, 2.9. There were 2,018 marriages in 2005. Life expectancy in 2007: males, 74.9 years; females, 79.6. Annual population growth rate, 1995–2005, 2.5%. Infant mortality, 2010, six per 1,000 live births; fertility rate, 2005, 2.1 children per woman.

CLIMATE

The climate is tropical marine, hot and moist, but nights are cool. Humidity is high and rainfall heavy, varying from 100" (2,500 mm) on the coast to 200" (5,000 mm) inland. There is no dry season. Bandar Seri Begawan, Jan. 80°F (26.7°C), July 82°F (27.8°C). Annual rainfall 131" (3,275 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

The Sultan and Yang Di Pertuan of Brunei Darussalam is HM Sultan Haji Hassanal Bolkiah Mu'izzadin Waddaulah. He succeeded on 5 Oct. 1967 at his father's abdication and was crowned on 1 Aug. 1968. On 10 Aug. 1998 his son, Oxford-graduate Prince Al-Muhtadee Billah, was inaugurated as Crown Prince and heir apparent.

On 29 Sept. 1959 the Sultan promulgated a constitution, but parts of it have been in abeyance since Dec. 1962 under emergency powers assumed by the Sultan. Since 1984 the Legislative Council (Majlis Masyuarat Megeri) has been effectively replaced by a Council of Cabinet Ministers appointed and presided over by the Sultan. The constitution was amended in Sept. 2004, allowing for the Legislative Council to be reconvened, but with no independent executive powers and its 21 members chosen by the Sultan. The amendment allowed for the first elections since 1962, with a third of the members of a new 45-member parliament to be directly elected. However, no date has been set for elections and in Sept. 2005 a 29-member Legislative Council including five indirectly-elected members was appointed. The Sultan is both the head of state and head of government.

CURRENT LEADERS

Sultan Sir Hassanal Bolkiah (Sultan of Brunei)

Position

Head of State

Introduction

The Sultan was crowned Brunei's 29th head of state on 1 Aug. 1968 following the abdication of his father. He is among the world's richest men.

Early Life

The Sultan was born on the 15 July 1946 in Bandar Seri Begawan. He was educated in Darussalam, Brunei and Malaysia. He became the Crown Prince of Brunei in 1961 and in 1966–67 he enlisted as an officer cadet at the Royal Military Academy in Sandhurst in the UK.

In 1978 he led the mission to London which paved the way for Brunei to become a sovereign state. On 1 Jan. 1984 a treaty of friendship ended British control over Brunei's foreign affairs and defence.

Career in Office

The Sultan is head of government as well as head of state. He is prime minister, minister of defence and minister of finance. Under the 1959 constitution and the Malay Muslim Monarchy tradition, he is assisted by a council of cabinet ministers, a privy council, council of succession and a religious council. A legislative council (a third of whose 45 members will, following a constitutional amendment in Sept. 2004, be directly elected) is to be revived, although elections have yet to be scheduled.

In May 2010 the Sultan reshuffled non-royal members of the cabinet, appointing the first female minister and raising the position of attorney general to cabinet rank. In May 2014 a Sharia-based Islamic legal code was introduced for the sultanate's majority Muslim population. In further cabinet changes in Oct. 2015 the Sultan took over the foreign affairs and trade portfolio previously held by Prince Haji Mohammad Bolkiah, and former education minister Dato Seri Setia Haji Awang Abu Bakar bin Haji Apong was appointed home affairs minister.

Brunei's wealth originates from the country's large oil and gas reserves, although earnings from overseas investments have exceeded those from exports. The people of Brunei enjoy high subsidies and pay no taxes.

DEFENCE

In 2013 military expenditure totalled US$416m. (US$1,002 per capita), representing 2.5% of GDP.

Army

The armed forces are known as the Task Force and contain the naval and air elements. Only Malays are eligible for service. Strength (2011): 4,900.

There is a Gurkha reserve unit of 400–500.

Navy

The Royal Brunei Armed Forces Flotilla includes three fast missile-armed attack craft. Personnel in 2011 numbered 1,000.

Air Force

The Royal Brunei Air Force (formerly known as the Air Wing) was formed in 1965. Personnel (2011), 1,100. There are no combat aircraft.

ECONOMY

In 2012 industry contributed 71.1% to GDP, services 28.2% and agriculture 0.7%. The fall in oil prices in 1997–98 led to the setting up of an Economic Council to advise the Sultan on reforms. In 1998 an investigation was mounted into the Amedeo Corporation, Brunei's largest private company, run by Prince Jefri, the Sultan's brother. Amedeo collapsed with large debts.

Overview

Oil and gas production accounts for 98% of exports, 93% of government revenues and 68% of GDP. Brunei is the fourth largest producer of oil in southeast Asia and has one of the highest standards of living in the world. GDP per capita was US$44,000 in 2012, behind only Singapore and Hong Kong in Asia.

Growth averaged 1.2% per year between 2003 and 2012. Oil and gas supplies are dwindling and the government has embarked on a process of diversification. The non-energy sector grew by 5% in 2012 on the back of high government spending. With rainforests covering 70% of the country, eco-tourism is ripe for development and the country also aims to become a major financial centre. The central bank has implemented regulatory reform and improved the financial infrastructure, although future prospects may be limited because banks are unable to set their own loan rates.

Currency

The unit of currency is the Brunei dollar (BND) of 100 cents, which is at parity with the Singapore dollar (also legal tender). Inflation was 0.4% in 2013 but there was deflation of 0.2% in 2014.

Budget

The financial year runs from 1 April–31 March. Revenues in 2008–09 totalled B$11,378m.; expenditures were B$5,974m. Tax revenues accounted for 65.3% of revenues in 2008–09; current expenditure accounted for 83.0% of total expenditures.

Performance

The economy grew by 0.9% in 2012, but as a result of falling oil prices it contracted by 2.1% in 2013 and 2.3% in 2014. Total GDP in 2014 was US$17.1bn.

Banking and Finance

The Brunei Currency Board is the note-issuing monetary authority. In 2002 there were three commercial banks, six foreign banks and one off-shore bank. Total bank assets in 2005 were B$16,971m.

The International Brunei Exchange Ltd (IBX) established an international securities exchange in May 2002.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Brunei's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy were the equivalent of 21.7 tonnes per capita in 2011.

Electricity

Installed capacity was an estimated 0.8m. kW in 2011. Production in 2011 was 3.73bn. kWh and consumption per capita 9,163 kWh.

Oil and Gas

The Seria oilfield, discovered in 1929, has passed its peak production. The high level of crude oil production is maintained through the increase of offshore oilfields production. Output was 6.6m. tonnes in 2013. The crude oil is exported directly, and only a small amount is refined at Seria for domestic uses. There were proven oil reserves of 1.1bn. bbls in 2013.

Natural gas is produced (12.2bn. cu. metres in 2013) at one of the largest liquefied natural gas plants in the world and is exported to Japan. There were proven reserves of 300bn. cu. metres in 2013.

Agriculture

In 2007 there were about 3,000 ha. of arable land and 5,000 ha. of permanent crops. The main crops produced in 2005 were (estimates, in 1,000 tonnes): vegetables, 11; fruit, 5 (notably bananas and pineapples); rice, 1.

Livestock in 2005: cattle, 1,079; buffaloes, 4,790; goats, 2,578; pigs (2003), 1,000; chickens (2003), 11m.

Livestock products (2003 estimates, in 1,000 tonnes): beef and veal, 3; poultry meat, 24; eggs, 6.

Forestry

Forests covered 0.38m. ha., or 72% of the total land area, in 2010. Most of the interior is under forest, containing large potential supplies of serviceable timber. In 2010, 69% of forest area was primary forest. Timber production in 2011 was 119,000 cu. metres.

Fisheries

The 2012 catch totalled 3,938 tonnes, exclusively from sea fishing.

INDUSTRY

Although Brunei has long been dependent on its oil and gas industry, the government has begun a programme of diversification, recognizing oil and gas as non-renewable resources. Greater emphasis is now placed on other sectors such as manufacturing, services, tourism and high technology industries, but oil still accounted for nearly two-thirds of total GDP in 2004.

Labour

The labour force in 2013 was 200,400 (167,200 in 2003). 67.4% of the population aged 15–64 was economically active in 2013. In the same year 3.8% of the population was unemployed.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

Merchandise imports in 2014 totalled US$3,598.7m. (US$3,612.4m. in 2013) and merchandise exports US$10,508.8m. (US$11,447.2m. in 2013).

Principal imports in 2014 were machinery and transport equipment (38.6%) followed by manufactured goods, and food, animals and beverages; main exports in 2014 were mineral fuels and lubricants (92.5%), chemicals, and machinery and transport equipment.

The leading import supplier in 2010 was Malaysia (21.6%), followed by Singapore and Japan; the leading export destination in 2010 was Japan (30.6%), followed by Indonesia and South Korea.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

There were an estimated 3,560 km of roads in 2005; 77.2% of all roads were paved in 2005. The main road connects Bandar Seri Begawan with Kuala Belait and Seria. In 2007 there were 252,700 passenger cars in use (649 per 1,000 inhabitants—one of the highest rates in the world), 16,700 vans and lorries, 1,500 buses and coaches, and 12,200 motorcycles and mopeds. There were 38 fatalities in road accidents in 2005.

Civil Aviation

Brunei International Airport (Bandar Seri Begawan) handled 1,262,343 passengers (all international) in 2005. The national carrier is the state-owned Royal Brunei Airlines (RBA). In 2006 RBA operated services to Auckland, Bangkok, Brisbane, Darwin, Denpasar Bali, Dubai, Frankfurt, Ho Chi Minh City, Hong Kong, Jakarta, Jeddah, Kota Kinabalu, Kuala Lumpur, London, Manila, Perth, Shanghai, Sharjah, Singapore, Surabaya and Sydney. In 2003 RBA flew 28m. km, carrying 956,000 passengers (all on international flights).

Shipping

Regular shipping services operate from Singapore, Hong Kong, Sarawak and Sabah to Bandar Seri Begawan, and there is a daily passenger ferry between Bandar Seri Begawan and Labuan. In 2005 merchant shipping totalled 2.4m. GRT. In 2005 vessels totalling 1,066,381 NRT entered ports and vessels totalling 1,061,339 NRT cleared.

Telecommunications

There is a telephone network linking the main centres. Brunei had an estimated 412,900 mobile phone subscriptions in 2009 (or 1,033.0 per 1,000 inhabitants) and 80,500 fixed telephone lines. There were 787.8 internet users per 1,000 inhabitants in 2009. Fixed internet subscriptions totalled 100,000 in 2009 (255.6 per 1,000 inhabitants). In March 2012 there were 234,000 Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The Supreme Court comprises a High Court and a Court of Appeal and the Magistrates' Courts. The High Court receives appeals from subordinate courts in the districts and is itself a court of first instance for criminal and civil cases. The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in London is the final court of appeal. Sharia Courts—applicable only to the nation's Muslims, who constitute some two-thirds of the population—have traditionally focused on resolving personal and family disputes. However, in Oct. 2013 the Sultan announced that a stricter Sharia code would be introduced; this entered force in May 2014.

The population in penal institutions in Sept. 2012 was 507 (122 per 100,000 of national population).

Education

The government provides free education to all citizens from preschool up to the highest level at local and overseas universities and institutions. In 2005 there were 12,999 children and 701 teachers in pre-primary education; 46,012 pupils and 4,548 teachers in primary education; 41,107 pupils and 3,907 teachers in secondary education; 4,154 students and 658 academic staff in tertiary education. The University of Brunei Darussalam was founded in 1985; in 2006 there were also eight technical and vocational colleges, one teacher training college and an institute of advanced education.

Estimated adult literacy rate, 2009, 95.3% (male, 96.8%; female, 93.7%). Public expenditure on education in 2010 came to 2.0% of GDP.

Health

Medical and health services are free to citizens and those in government service and their dependants. Citizens are sent overseas, at government expense, for medical care not available in Brunei. Flying medical services are provided to remote areas. In 2005 there were four government hospitals and the Jerudong Park private hospital with a total of 1,154 beds; there were 390 physicians, 73 dentists, 1,789 nurses, 748 midwives and 41 pharmacists.

RELIGION

The official religion is Islam. In 2010, 75.1% of the population were Muslims (mostly Sunnis of Malay origin) according to estimates by the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life. There are also some Christians, Buddhists and folk religionists.

CULTURE

Press

In 2008 there were three daily newspapers with an average circulation of 41,000. The Borneo Bulletin and the Brunei Times are English-language papers, while Media Permata is a Malay paper.

Tourism

In 2010, 214,290 non-resident tourists (excluding same-day visitors) arrived by air—up from 157,474 in 2009 but down from 225,757 in 2008.

Festivals

The national day is celebrated on 23 Feb.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Neolithic settlements in central Bulgaria dating from 6000 BC are among the oldest man-made structures yet discovered. Thracian tribes entered the Balkans from the east around 1500 BC, establishing fortified villages. By 500 BC Thracian rulers were under Hellenic influence and Greek colonists founded settlements on the Black Sea coast. Thrace was conquered by Philip of Macedonia in 324 BC and later absorbed into the eastern (Byzantine) Roman Empire, along with Moesia to the north.

Semi-nomadic Turkic clans entered the region—among them Bulgars who united under Khan Kublat in 632. They formed alliances with Slavic tribes during the sixth and seventh centuries and defeated the Byzantines in 681. The first Bulgarian state, centred on Pliska, was characterized by intermarriage between various ethnic groups and the rise of the Slavic language and Orthodox Christianity (adopted by Boris I in 864). Tsar Simeon moved the capital to Preslav in 893. Subsequent tsars battled with Byzantium and the expanding Kievan Rus. Preslav fell in 971, followed by a westward shift and defeat to the Byzantines in 1014.

Ivan Asen I's defeat of the Byzantines in 1187 heralded the Second Bulgarian Empire, centred on Tarnovo. It held sway until the late 13th century, when invading Mongols divided the territory into rival principalities. Following battles at Kosovo (1389) and Nikopol (1396), Bulgaria was absorbed into the Ottoman Empire.

Uprisings against feudal rule occurred at Tarnovo in 1598 and 1668. The failed siege of Vienna in 1683, plus growing Austrian and Russian influence, contributed to a gradual decline in Ottoman dominance in the Balkans.

Bulgaria's 'national awakening' began in 1762 with the publication of Paisi Khilandarski's History of the Bulgarian Slavs. Calls for a separate Bulgarian church in the mid-19th century developed into broader revolutionary movements in the 1860s. The Russo-Turkish war of 1877-78 and the subsequent Treaties of San Stefano and Berlin paved the way for an autonomous principality of Bulgaria.

After Austria annexed Bosnia in 1908, Prince Ferdinand Saxe-Coburg-Gotha became Tsar of independent Bulgaria. To block Austrian expansion into the Balkans, Russia encouraged Greece, Serbia, Montenegro and Bulgaria to attack Turkey (First Balkan War, 1912). The dispute that followed Bulgaria's claims to Macedonia led to the Second Balkan War and the entry of Bulgaria into the First World War in 1915 on the side of Germany and Austria-Hungary.

In 1918 Ferdinand I abdicated in favour of his son, Boris III. Parliamentary government was ended by a military coup in 1934. A year later, Boris established a royal dictatorship.

Bulgaria entered the Second World War in March 1941 allied to Germany. In Sept. 1944 the USSR declared war. An alliance of Communists, agrarians and pro-Soviet army officers led by Kimon Georgiev seized power and a referendum in 1946 abolished the monarchy and established Bulgaria as a republic and one-party state. The government was aligned with Moscow under the authoritarian Todor Zhivkov from 1954. In Nov. 1989 reformers within the Communist Party forced Zhivkov's resignation. Multi-party elections in Oct. 1991 were won by the centre-right Union of Democratic Forces, which formed a coalition with the predominantly ethnic-Turkish Movement for Rights and Freedom. Zhelyu Zhelev became the first directly-elected president in Jan. 1992.

Petar Stoyanov, elected as an anti-Communist pro-reform president in 1996, failed to contain political and economic unrest. In June 2001 the former King, Simeon Saxe-Coburg-Gotha, became premier. Bulgaria joined NATO in 2004 and in 2005 the Socialist leader, Sergey Stanishev, replaced Simeon as prime minister and led Bulgaria into the European Union on 1 Jan. 2007. The general election of July 2009 was won by the Citizens for the European Development of Bulgaria (GERB), led by Boyko Borisov. He resigned amid popular anti-government protests in Feb. 2013 and his government was replaced initially by a caretaker administration and then by a technocratic government. However, Borisov returned as premier at the head of a GERB-Reformist Bloc coalition following the general election of Oct. 2014.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

The area of Bulgaria is 111,002 sq. km (42,858 sq. miles). It is bounded in the north by Romania, east by the Black Sea, south by Turkey and Greece, and west by Serbia and the Republic of Macedonia. The country is divided into 28 districts.

The capital, Sofia, has district status.

The population of Bulgaria at the census of 2011 was 7,364,570 (females, 3,777,999); population density 66.3 per sq. km. Bulgaria's population has been declining since the mid-1980s. It has been falling at such a rate that in 2015 it was even less than it had been in 1950. The United Nations predicts that it will lose more than a quarter of its population by 2050. In 2011, 71.7% of the population were urban. In Dec. 2013 the population was estimated at 7,245,677.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 7.15m.

Population of principal towns (2011 census): Sofia, 1,202,761; Plovdiv, 338,153; Varna, 334,870; Bourgas, 200,271; Rousse, 149,642; Stara Zagora, 138,272; Pleven, 106,954; Sliven, 91,620; Dobrich, 91,030.

Ethnic groups at the 2011 census: Bulgarians, 5,664,624; Turks, 588,318; Roma, 325,343. The actual number of Roma is estimated to be closer to 750,000.

Bulgarian is the official language.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2008: live births, 77,712; deaths, 110,523; marriages, 27,722; divorces, 14,104. Rates per 1,000 population, 2008: birth, 10.2; death, 14.5; marriage, 3.6; divorce, 1.9; infant mortality, 11 per 1,000 live births (2010). There were 37,272 reported abortions in 2006. In 2005 the most popular age range for marrying was 25–29 for males and 20–24 for females. Expectation of life in 2007 was 69.6 years among males and 76.7 years among females. The annual population growth rate for the period 2000–05 was –1.1%, giving Bulgaria one of the fastest declining populations of any country. Fertility rate, 2008, 1.4 children per woman. Bulgaria was ranked 43rd in a gender gap index of 145 countries compiled by the World Economic Forum for its Global Gender Gap Report 2015. The annual index considers economic, political, education and health criteria. A UNICEF report published in 2010 showed that 17.8% of children in Bulgaria live in relative poverty (living in a household in which disposable income—when adjusted for family size and composition—is less than 50% of the national median income).

CLIMATE

The southern parts have a Mediterranean climate, with winters mild and moist and summers hot and dry, but further north the conditions become more Continental, with a larger range of temperature and greater amounts of rainfall in summer and early autumn. Sofia, Jan. 28°F (–2.2°C), July 69°F (20.6°C). Annual rainfall 25.4" (635 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

A new constitution was adopted at Tarnovo on 12 July 1991. The President is directly elected for not more than two five-year terms. Candidates for the presidency must be at least 40 years old and have lived for the last five years in Bulgaria. American-style primary elections were introduced in 1996; voting is open to all the electorate.

The 240-member National Assembly is directly elected by proportional representation. The President nominates a candidate from the largest parliamentary party as Prime Minister.

National Anthem

'Gorda stara planina' ('Proud and ancient mountains'); words and tune by T. Radoslavov.

RECENT ELECTIONS

Presidential elections were held in two rounds on 23 and 30 Oct. 2011. Rosen Plevneliev won the first round with 40.1% of votes cast, ahead of Ivailo Kalfin with 29.0%, Meglena Kuneva with 14.0%, Volen Siderov with 3.6% and Stefan Solakov with 2.5%. There were 13 other candidates, each receiving less than 2% of the vote. In the second round Plevneliev won 52.6% of the vote and Kalfin 47.4%. Turnout was 52.3% in the first round and 48.2% in the second.

Following the government's resignation in July 2014, early parliamentary elections were held on 5 Oct. 2014. Citizens for the European Development of Bulgaria (GERB) won 84 of 240 seats with 32.7% of the vote; the Bulgarian Socialist Party-led BSP–Left Bulgaria won 39 seats with 15.4% of the vote; the Movement for Rights and Freedoms—a predominantly ethnic Turkish minority party—won 38 seats with 14.8%; the Reformist Bloc, 23 with 8.9%; the Patriotic Front, 19 with 7.3%; Bulgaria without Censorship, 15 with 5.7%; the Attack coalition, 11 with 4.5%; Alternative for Bulgarian Revival, 11 with 4.1%. Turnout was 51.1%.

European Parliament

Bulgaria has 17 representatives. At the May 2014 elections turnout was 36.1% (39.0% in 2009). GERB won 6 seats with 30.4% of the vote (political affiliation in European Parliament: European People's Party); the Coalition for Bulgaria, 4 with 18.9% (Progressive Alliance of Socialists and Democrats); the Movement for Rights and Freedoms, 4 with 17.3% (Alliance of Liberals and Democrats for Europe); Bulgaria without Censorship, 2 with 10.7% (European Conservatives and Reformists); the Reformist Bloc, 1 with 6.5% (European People's Party).

CURRENT LEADERS

Rosen Plevneliev

Position

President

Introduction

Rosen Plevneliev was sworn in as president on 22 Jan. 2012, having been elected in Oct. 2011 with the support of the centre-right Citizens for the European Development of Bulgaria (GERB). He succeeded the Socialist Georgi Parvanov, who had held the presidency for the maximum two terms. Prior to the election Plevneliev had never run for public office, having worked as a non-partisan member of the cabinet.

Early Life

Rosen Plevneliev was born in Gotse Delchev, southern Bulgaria in 1964. Having graduated in engineering from the Sofia Technical University in 1989, he founded a building firm, Iris International. From 1991 he worked in Germany as the co-owner of a construction firm subcontracting for the German conglomerate Lindner. In 1998 he returned to Bulgaria to head the Lindner Bulgaria group.

Plevneliev entered politics in June 2009 as part of the GERB economic policy team. The following month he was appointed minister of regional development and public works in Boyko Borisov's cabinet, delivering several long-delayed, large-scale infrastructure projects.

On 4 Sept. 2011 he was nominated as GERB's candidate for the presidency. In a second round of polling, Plevneliev and his vice presidential candidate, former justice minister Margarita Popova, gained 52.6% of the vote to defeat the Socialist candidate, Ivailo Kalfin, and his running mate.

Career in Office

Plevneliev, a pro-European, pledged to oversee the reduction of the budget deficit and implement further austerity measures. He was expected to push for the development of regional and international trade. The diversification of energy supplies was among his most pressing challenges, although a referendum on controversial plans to expand Bulgaria's nuclear generating capacity was invalidated in Jan. 2013 by a low turnout.

In Feb. 2013, in the face of violent protests against economic austerity, Prime Minister Boyko Borisov and his government resigned and Plevneliev appointed a caretaker administration pending fresh parliamentary elections that took place in May. An inconclusive outcome, with no majority party, resulted in the establishment of a Socialist-led government headed by Plamen Oresharski. However, continued political and economic instability, and a banking crisis, led to the resignation of Oresharski and his fragile administration in July 2014, prompting a further election in Oct. This produced another divided parliament, including eight different parties. Plevneliev asked Borisov, as head of the largest party, to form a GERB-led coalition government and his new cabinet was endorsed by parliament in early Nov.

Boyko Borisov

Position

Prime Minister

Introduction

Boyko Metodiev Borisov was sworn in for a second term as prime minister on 7 Nov. 2014, at the head of a right-wing coalition. The leader of the Citizens for the European Development of Bulgaria (GERB) party, Borisov had resigned from his first term as premier in Feb. 2013 amid mass protests that went on to also undermine the subsequent government.

Early Life

Borisov was born in Bankya, western Bulgaria in June 1959. He graduated in engineering from the academy of the interior ministry in 1982 before starting work at the Sofia fire directorate. Between 1985 and 1990 he was a professor at the interior ministry's police academy, where he completed a doctorate in 'Psychological and Physical Training of Operatives'. He resigned in 1990 to found one of Bulgaria's largest security firms, IPON, working as a bodyguard to former communist leader Todor Zhivkov, and to the then-exiled King Simeon II. In this period Borisov became dogged by allegations of underworld associations (some of which he claimed resulted from sharing sports facilities when in his role as coach for the national karate squad).

In 2001 he was named chief secretary of the interior ministry and in 2004 was appointed lieutenant-general. The following year he surrendered his parliamentary seat and gave up his ministerial post to run for the mayor of Sofia. He won the election by a landslide and took office in Nov. 2005.

Borisov founded GERB in Dec. 2006 and fought a successful local election campaign in 2007. As he was prevented from taking the party leadership by a law that prohibits a mayor from heading a political party, GERB was led by his close associate, Tsvetan Tsvetanov. The centre-right party won the largest share of votes in Bulgaria's first European parliamentary elections in June 2007 and joined the European People's Party in early 2008.

GERB emerged from parliamentary elections on 5 July 2009 as Bulgaria's largest party, with 116 of the 240 available seats in parliament. Borisov was sworn in as prime minister on 27 July, pledging to balance the economy, restore EU trust in Bulgaria and reduce the nation's dependence on Russia for its energy supplies.

In Jan. 2010 he was unanimously elected by his party to chair GERB, replacing Tsvetanov. In the same month he attracted domestic and foreign criticism for his nomination of Rumiana Jeleva, the foreign minister and a senior member of GERB, as EU Aid Commissioner. Amid questions over her personal financial interests, Jeleva resigned. Borisov's tenure would be marred by further allegations of corruption against his government colleagues. He announced the resignation of his government in Feb. 2013 amid nationwide protests against low living standards, austerity measures and high electricity prices, which led to clashes between protesters and the police. Elections, scheduled for July 2013, were brought forward to May.

Although GERB again emerged as the largest party, with 97 seats, Borisov called for the results to be annulled on the grounds of alleged illegal campaigning by rivals. He refused President Rosen Plevneliev's invitation to form a government, leading to the formation of a technocratic administration supported by the Bulgarian Socialist Party. This government, plagued by the same protests that had derailed its predecessor, was dissolved on 4 Aug. 2014.

In elections on 5 Oct. 2014 GERB won 84 seats, more than twice as many as its nearest rival. Borisov took office the following month at the head of a coalition with the Reformist Bloc, supported by the right-wing Patriotic Front and the new Alternative for Bulgarian Revival party.

Career in Office

Borisov has faced a catalogue of problems since resuming his premiership, including widespread disenchantment with mainstream politics, the perceived weakness of his coalition, high energy prices and rampant corruption.

In Feb. 2016 Borisov's government survived a parliamentary vote of no confidence by 130 votes to 80. Opposition parties had accused the ruling coalition of failing to reform the country's ailing health system.

DEFENCE

Since 1 Jan. 2008 Bulgaria has had an all-volunteer professional army. Following restructuring the total strength of the armed forces has been reduced from more than 68,000 in 2002 to less than 32,000 in 2011.

Defence expenditure in 2013 totalled US$751m. (US$108 per capita), representing 1.4% of GDP.

Army

In 2011 the Army had a strength of 16,304. In addition there are reserves of 250,500, 12,000 border guards and 18,000 railway and construction troops.

Navy

The Navy, mostly ex-Soviet or Soviet-built, includes one old diesel submarine and two small frigates. The Naval Aviation Wing operates three armed helicopters. Major naval bases are at Atiya and Varna. Personnel in 2011 totalled 3,471, with 7,500 reservists.

Air Force

The Air Force had (2011) 6,706 personnel, with 45,000 reservists. There were 62 combat-capable aircraft in 2011, including MiG-21s, MiG-29s and Su-25s, and 18 attack helicopters.

INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

At the European Union's Helsinki Summit in Dec. 1999 Bulgaria, along with five other countries, was invited to begin full membership negotiations in Feb. 2000. Bulgaria joined the EU on 1 Jan. 2007. It became a member of NATO on 29 March 2004.

ECONOMY

Transport, communications, trade and restaurants contributed 21.8% to GDP in 2011; followed by mining, public utilities and manufacturing, 21.2%; finance and real estate, 15.0%; public administration and defence, 10.8%; and services, 6.8%.

Overview

Bulgaria is classified as an upper middle-income economy by the World Bank, with a per capita income of US$7,420 in 2014.

Its post-communist transition to a market economy in the 1990s was slow, and in 1997 the collapse of the banking system led to a currency crisis and a sharp decline in GDP. However, having applied for membership of the European Union, the government implemented a programme of comprehensive reforms to promote macroeconomic stability and stimulate growth between 2000 and 2007 (when EU accession was attained). The government ran fiscal surpluses between 2004 and 2008, while public debt fell from over 70% of GDP in 2000 to 13.3% in 2008—the second lowest debt level in the EU. Between 2000 and 2008 GDP per capita rose by 6.6% per year, Bulgaria's highest growth rate to date.

Following the global financial crisis that began in 2008, the economy maintained stability through prudent macroeconomic supervision and by keeping public debt at a manageable level (27.6% of GDP in 2014). However, the country remains one of the poorest in the EU. Average annual GDP per capita growth slowed to 1.3% between 2008 and 2014, while income per capita measured only 45% of the EU average in 2013.

Currency

The unit of currency is the lev (BGN) of 100 stotinki. In May 1996 the lev was devalued by 68%. A new lev was introduced on 5 July 1999, at 1 new lev = 1,000 old leva. Runaway inflation (123.0% in 1996 rising to 1,061% in 1997) forced the closure of 14 banks in 1996. However, by 1999 the rate had slowed to 2.6%. Inflation was 0.4% in 2013 but there was deflation of 1.6% in 2014. The lev is pegged to the euro at one euro = 1.95583 new leva. Foreign exchange reserves were US$7,792m. in July 2005, gold reserves were 1.28m. troy oz and total money supply was 11,494m. leva.

Budget

The fiscal year is the calendar year.

Central government revenue and expenditure (in 1m. new leva):

	2009	2010	2011
Revenue	23,292	21,924	23,651
Expenditure	21,631	21,754	23,728

Bulgaria's budget deficit in 2014 was 5.8% of GDP (2013, 0.8%; 2012, 0.6%). The required target set by the EU is a budget deficit of no more than 3%.

VAT is 20%. There is a flat income tax rate of 10%.

Performance

Total GDP in 2014 was US$56.7bn. The economy grew by 0.5% in 2012, 1.1% in 2013 and 1.7% in 2014.

Banking and Finance

The National Bank (Governor, Dimitar Radev) is the central bank and bank of issue. There is also a Currency Board, established in 1997. The largest Bulgarian bank in terms of assets is UniCredit Bulbank (assets of 11.52bn. leva in Dec. 2009). Other major banks are DSK Bank (the last state bank to be privatized, in 2003), United Bulgarian Bank and Raiffeisenbank Bulgaria. In June 2014 there were runs on the country's third and fourth biggest lenders, First Investment Bank and Corporate Commercial Bank, despite the IMF declaring the banking system 'stable and liquid' earlier in the month.

In 2010 total external debt was US$48,077m., representing 104.8% of GNI.

There is a stock exchange in Sofia.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

In 2011, 13.8% of energy consumption came from renewables (wind power, solar power, hydro-electric power, tidal power, geothermal energy and biomass), compared to the European Union average of 13.0%. A target of 16% has been set by the EU for 2020.

Environment

Bulgaria's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy were the equivalent of 7.4 tonnes per capita in 2011.

Electricity

In 2012 there were two nuclear reactors in use, at the country's sole nuclear power plant in Kozloduy (dating from the 1970s). The two oldest of the plant's six reactors closed in Dec. 2002. A further two closed in Dec. 2006, as a condition of Bulgaria's accession to the EU. To compensate, the government had approved plans to complete a nuclear plant in Belene, started in the 1980s but suspended in 1990. However, the project was abandoned by the Borisov government in March 2012. Installed electrical capacity was 10.2m. kW in 2011. Output, 2011, 50.8bn. kWh (59% thermal, 32% nuclear and 7% hydro-electric). Consumption per capita: 5,473 kWh (2011).

Oil and Gas

Oil is extracted in the Balchik district on the Black Sea coast, in an area 100 km north of Varna, and at Dolni Dubnik near Pleven. There are refineries at Bourgas (annual capacity 5m. tonnes) and Dolni Dubnik (7m. tonnes). Crude oil production (2009) was 0.2m. bbls. Bulgaria is heavily dependent on Russia for oil and gas.

Minerals

Output in 2010 (in tonnes): lignite, 29.38m.; hard coal, 26,000. There are also deposits of gold, silver and copper.

Agriculture

In 2002 the total area of land in agricultural use was 5,796,208 ha. (52.2% of the overall territory of the country); there were 3,080,829 ha. under crops, 2,502,723 ha. of permanent grassland and 212,656 ha. of perennial plantations.

Production in 2002 (in 1,000 tonnes): wheat, 4,123; maize, 1,288; sunflower seeds, 645; potatoes, 627; barley, 569; grapes, 409; tomatoes, 390; watermelons, 200; chillies and green peppers, 167; cucumbers and gherkins, 125; cabbage, 109. Bulgaria is a leading producer of attar of roses (rose oil). Bulgaria produced 205,000 tonnes of wine in 2002. Other products (in 1,000 tonnes) in 2002: meat, 488; cow's milk, 1,306; goat's milk, 105; sheep's milk, 93; eggs, 91.

Livestock (2002), in 1,000: cattle, 635; sheep, 1,571; pigs, 1,014; goats, 899; chickens, 18,000.

Forestry

In 2010 forests covered 3.93m. ha., or 36% of the total land area. Timber production in 2011 totalled 6.21m. cu. metres.

Fisheries

In 2010 total catch was 10,769 tonnes, mainly from sea fishing.

INDUSTRY

In 2005 the total output of industrial enterprises was 35,260m. new leva, of which 31,459m. new leva (89.2%) came from the private and 3,801m. new leva (10.8%) from the public sector.

Output in 1,000 tonnes (2007 unless otherwise indicated): cement (2005), 3,618; distillate fuel oil, 2,376; crude steel, 1,909; rolled steel (2005), 1,817; residual fuel oil, 1,550; petrol, 1,466; pig iron, 1,069; nitrogenous fertilizers (2002), 193; paper (2002), 171. Production of other products: cotton fabrics (2005), 67.7m. sq. metres; silk fabrics (2005), 18.3m. sq. metres; woollen fabrics (2005), 9.9m. sq. metres; 17.4bn. cigarettes (2006).

Labour

A total of 2,949,600 persons were in employment in 2011, with the leading areas of activity as follows: manufacturing, 601,600; wholesale and retail trade, and repair of motor vehicles and motorcycles, 538,400; construction, 225,300; public administration and defence, and compulsory social security, 225,300; agriculture, forestry and fishing, 200,500. The unemployment rate was 12.3% in June 2012, up from 11.3% in 2011 as a whole and 5.6% in 2008. The monthly minimum wage was raised from 270 leva to 290 leva in May 2012.

Bulgaria had 28,000 people living in slavery according to the Walk Free Foundation's 2013 Global Slavery Index.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

Goods imports were US$34,740.0m. in 2014 (US$34,306.8m. in 2013) and goods exports US$29,386.5m. (US$29,512.3m. in 2013).

Principal imports in 2014 were machinery and transport equipment (23.4%) followed by mineral fuels and lubricants, and manufactured goods; main exports in 2014 were manufactured goods (22.1%), machinery and transport equipment, and miscellaneous manufactured articles.

The leading import supplier in 2010 was Russia (16.1%), followed by Germany and Italy; the leading export destination in 2010 was Germany (10.6%), followed by Italy and Romania.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

In 2005 Bulgaria had 40,231 km of roads, including 331 km of motorways and 2,961 km of main roads. In 2007 there were 1,971,500 passenger cars (257 per 1,000 inhabitants), 262,900 lorries and vans, 26,300 buses and coaches, and 78,900 motorcycles and mopeds. In 2005 public transport totalled 13.7bn. passenger-km. In 2007, 9,827 persons were injured in road accidents and 1,006 were killed.

Rail

In 2011 there were 3,947 km of 1,435 mm gauge railway (2,862 km electrified) and 125 km of 760 mm gauge. Passenger-km travelled in 2011 came to 2.07bn. and freight tonne-km to 3.17bn.

There is a tramway and a 31-km long metro in Sofia.

Civil Aviation

There is an international airport at Sofia (Vrazhdebna), which handled 3,467,455 passengers (3,266,427 on international flights) and 16,246 tonnes of freight in 2012. The bankrupt former state-owned Balkan Bulgarian Airlines was replaced by Bulgaria Air (initially named Balkan Air Tour) in 2002 as the new national flag carrier. In 2003 Bulgaria Air operated direct services to Berlin, Brussels, Budapest, Copenhagen, Frankfurt, Lisbon, London, Madrid, Moscow, Paris, Prague, Rome, Stockholm, Tel Aviv, Vienna, Warsaw and Zürich. Balkan Air Tour has in the meantime been renamed Bulgaria Air. The independent Hemus Air operated services in 2003 to Athens, Beirut, Bucharest, Damascus, Dubai, Larnaca, Tirana and Tripoli. In 2003 scheduled airline traffic of Bulgarian-based carriers flew 7m. km, carrying 311,000 passengers (270,000 on international flights).

Shipping

In Jan. 2009 there were 86 ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 890,000 GT. Bourgas is a fishing and oil-port. Varna is the other main port.

Telecommunications

The Bulgarian Telecommunications Company was privatized in Jan. 2004. In 2011 there were 2,310,800 landline telephone subscriptions (equivalent to 310.3 per 1,000 inhabitants) and 10,475,100 mobile phone subscriptions (or 1,406.8 per 1,000 inhabitants). In 2011, 51.0% of the population were internet users. In March 2012 there were 2.4m. Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

A law of Nov. 1982 provides for the election (and recall) of all judges by the National Assembly. There are a Supreme Court, 28 provincial courts (including Sofia) and regional courts. Jurors are elected at the local government elections. The Prosecutor General and judges are elected by the Supreme Judicial Council established in 1992.

The population in penal institutions in Oct. 2012 was 10,996 (151 per 100,000 of national population). The maximum term of imprisonment is 20 years. The death penalty was abolished for all crimes in 1998. 21.1% of prisoners had yet to receive a trial according to 2014 estimates by the International Centre for Prison Studies. In 2015 the World Justice Project Rule of Law Index, which provides data on how the rule of law is experienced by the general public across eight categories, ranked Bulgaria 50th of 102 countries for criminal justice and 44th for civil justice.

Education

Adult literacy rate was 98.4% in 2011. Education is free, and compulsory for children between the ages of 7 and 16.

In 2012–13 there were 5,067 educational establishments: 2,070 kindergartens, 2,112 general and special schools, 494 vocational schools, 338 vocational training centres (offering programmes for adults to obtain professional qualifications) and 53 tertiary education institutions (including 36 state universities or equivalent institutions and nine private universities). There were 102,488 teaching staff (23,456 in higher education) and 1,294,682 pupils and students (283,959 in higher education); 128 schools (with 9,367 pupils), 323 vocational training centres (with 21,627 students) and 16 higher institutions (with 49,849 students) were private. The Academy of Sciences was founded in 1869.

In 2010 public expenditure on education came to 4.1% of GDP and 10.8% of total government spending.

Health

All medical services are free. Private medical services were authorized in 1991. In 2012 there were 312 hospitals. Bulgaria had 66 hospital beds per 10,000 inhabitants in 2012. There were 28,643 physicians, 6,706 dentists and 35,350 nurses and midwives in 2012. In 2009 total health spending represented 7.2% of GDP.

Welfare

In 2000 Bulgaria's official retirement age remained unchanged since the Soviet era at 60 years (men) and 55 years (women). However, as part of EU accession reform, the age level increased gradually until 2009 when retirement ages were 63 (men) and 60 (women). They have continued to rise since then, and in 2014 were 63 years and 8 months for men (with a period of social insurance cover of 37 years and 8 months) and 60 years and 8 months for women (with a period of social insurance cover of 34 years and 8 months). The minimum old-age pension at the normal retirement age is 150 leva a month with the required number of contributions.

The family allowance is 35 leva a month for the first child, 50 leva for the second and 35 leva for each subsequent child.

In order for a person to be eligible for unemployment benefits they must have been working and making social insurance contributions for at least nine of the previous 15 months.

RELIGION

'The traditional church of the Bulgarian people' (as it is officially described) is that of the Eastern Orthodox Church. It was disestablished under the 1947 constitution. In 1953 the Bulgarian Patriarchate was revived. The Patriarch is Neofit (enthroned Feb. 2013). The seat of the Patriarch is at Sofia. The Bulgarian Orthodox Church has 15 dioceses, of which 13 are in Bulgaria and two abroad—one covering the United States, Canada and Australia, and the other Central and Western Europe. According to the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life the Orthodox population numbered an estimated 6.22m. in 2010. There were also 1.02m. indigenous Muslims (Pomaks) in 2010 and 310,000 people who were religiously unaffiliated.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

There are nine Bulgarian sites that appear on the UNESCO World Heritage List. They are (with year entered on list): Boyana Church (1979); Madara Rider (1979), an 8th century sculpture carved into a rock face; Rock-hewn Churches of Ivanovo (1979); Thracian Tomb of Kazanlak (1979); Ancient City of Nessebar (1983); Srebarna Nature Reserve (1983); Pirin National Park (1983); Rila Monastery (1983 and 2008); Thracian tomb of Sveshtari (1985).

Press

In 2012 there were 57 daily newspapers with a combined daily circulation of 639,000. The two biggest circulation paid-for dailies are Telegraph (which was only launched in 2005) and Trud, the only title from the socialist era that survived after 1989. A total of 8,263 book titles were published in 2012, including 2,171 fiction titles for adults.

Tourism

There were 6,541,000 non-resident tourists in 2012 (5,151,000 in 2007). Earnings from tourism were US$4,202m. in 2012.

Festivals

The Surva International Festival of Masquerade Games in Pernik takes place every two years in Jan. and is one of the most important celebrations of traditional folkloric culture in the country. Classical music is showcased at the March Music Days festival in Rousse while the Spirit of Bourgas pop and dance music festival takes place in Aug.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Iron-age artefacts found at Boura in southern Burkina Faso suggest settlement dating from around the 3rd century AD. The West African state, much of which is a plateau forming the headwaters of the Volta River, was the scene of several competing kingdoms from the 9th century. The Songhai Empire, centred on Gao (in present-day Mali) controlled the northeast of Burkina Faso, as well as much of Niger and parts of Mali. It developed as a powerful Islamic state, reaching its peak under Sonni Ali Ber (1465–92) and Askia Mohammed (1492–1529), before sliding into civil war. Further undermined by prolonged drought and disease, it fell to Morocco in 1591.

Mossi clans, famed for their horsemanship, entered the high plains from the south during the 12th century and eventually established five independent kingdoms—Tenkodogo, Yatenga, Gourma, Zandoma and Ouagadougou. Ouagadougou emerged as the most powerful. The Mossi resisted Islamic crusades and attacks by the Songhai and Malian empires for centuries, and frequently fought to retain control of trans-Saharan trade routes.

French forces, who had established Saint-Louis in present-day Senegal as a trading post as early as 1659, did not engage in the transatlantic slave trade to the same extent as their British, Portuguese and Spanish counterparts. However, a major French military expansion inland got under way in the late 1850s, led by Gen. Louis Faidherbe. The French encountered considerable resistance but their superior weaponry led to the signing of several treaties with African leaders.

French troops led by Paul Voulet and Julien Chanoine conquered Ouagadougou in Sept. 1896 and within two years the territory of Burkina Faso was loosely under French control. In June 1898 France and Britain agreed on the demarcation of their colonial borders. Upper Volta, as Burkina Faso was then called, was one of six colonies comprising French West Africa, administered by a single governor-general based in Dakar, Senegal.

France made Upper Volta a separate colony in 1919, only to abolish it in 1932 and divide the territory between the Ivory Coast (now Côte d'Ivoire), French Sudan (now Mali) and Niger. In 1947 the territory of Upper Volta was reconstituted as a territory within French West Africa. In 1958 it was granted the status of autonomous republic within the French Community before winning full independence on 5 Aug. 1960.

Upper Volta remained a desperately poor country often hit by drought, particularly from 1972–74 and again from 1982–84. The military has held power for most of the period since independence. In Aug. 1983 Capt. Thomas Sankara, a leading radical, led a coup before heading a left-wing regime allied to the Soviet Union and Cuba. The country was renamed Burkina Faso (meaning 'the land of honest men') in 1984. Sankara was overthrown and killed in another coup on 15 Oct. 1987, the fifth since 1960, mounted by his former friend, Capt. Blaise Compaoré. Establishing himself as a key power-broker in the region, he won a fourth consecutive presidential election in 2010. However, popular protests in 2014 against planned constitutional changes allowing the president to extend his rule resulted in Compaoré being forced from office by the military. He was succeeded by Michel Kafando, who held power in an interim capacity until Roch Marc Christian Kaboré won the presidential election of Nov. 2015. In Jan. 2016 Islamist militants killed 29 people in an attack on a hotel and café in the capital, Ouagadougou.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Burkina Faso is bounded in the north and west by Mali, east by Niger and south by Benin, Togo, Ghana and Côte d'Ivoire. Area: 270,764 sq. km; 2006 census population, 14,017,262, giving a density of 51.8 per sq. km. In 2011 the population was 26.5% urban.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 18-11m.

The largest cities in 2006 were Ouagadougou, the capital (1,475,223), Bobo-Dioulasso (489,967), Koudougou (88,184), Banfora (75,917), Ouahigouya (73,153) and Pouytenga (60,618).

The country is administratively divided into 13 regions (with capitals): Boucle du Mouhoun (Dédougou), Cascades (Banfora), Centre (Ouagadougou), Centre-Est (Tenkodogo), Centre-Nord (Kaya), Centre-Ouest (Koudougou), Centre-Sud (Manga), Est (Fada N'Gourma), Hauts-Bassins (Bobo-Dioulasso), Nord (Ouahigouya), Plateau-Central (Ziniaré), Sahel (Dori), Sud-Ouest (Gaoua).

The principal ethnic groups are the Mossi (48%), Fulani (10%), Bobo (7%), Lobi (7%), Mandé (7%), Grosi (5%), Gurma (5%), Sénoufo (5%) and Tuareg (3%).

French is the official language.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2008 births (estimates), 719,000; deaths, 198,000. Estimated birth rate in 2008 was 47.2 per 1,000 population; estimated death rate, 13.0. Burkina Faso has one of the youngest populations of any country, with 73% of the population under the age of 30 and 45% under 15. Annual population growth rate, 2000–08, 3.3%. Expectation of life at birth, 2013, 56.9 years for females and 55.7 for males. Infant mortality, 2010 (per 1,000 live births), 93. Fertility rate, 2008, 5.9 children per woman.

CURRENT LEADERS

Roch Marc Christian Kaboré

Position
President

Introduction

Roch Kaboré took office as president on 29 Dec. 2015 after a comfortable election victory. A former banker, prime minister and president of the National Assembly, Kaboré was a long-standing ally of President Blaise Compaoré during most of his 27 years in office.

Early Life

Roch Marc Christian Kaboré was born in Ouagadougou on 25 April 1957. He read economics at the University of Dijon in France, before obtaining a master's degree in business administration in 1980. He then returned home and joined the International Bank of Burkina Faso (BIB).

He was key to the surge of revolutionary feeling that culminated in the 1983 coup orchestrated by Compaoré and which saw Thomas Sankara become president. In 1984 Kaboré was named director-general of the BIB. Five years later he supported Compaoré's overthrow of Sankara.

Kaboré became Compaoré's minister for transport and communications in 1989 and, after heading several other ministries, served as prime minister from 1994–96. Until 2014 he remained a key Compaoré loyalist and a central figure in the National Assembly, acting as its president from 2002–12. In 1999 he served as national secretary of Compaoré's Congress for Democracy and Progress (CDP), and four years later took the post of party chairman.

In Jan. 2014 Kaboré defected from the CDP to form and lead the People's Movement for Progress (MPP). The MPP opposed a constitutional amendment that would allow Compaoré to serve another presidential term. Mass uprisings forced Compaoré to flee in Oct. 2014 after 27 years in power. An interim government took over and Kaboré was elected president in Nov. 2015. The elections were the first in the country's history to be widely considered free and fair.

Career in Office

Kaboré has made ambitious pledges to 'build a new Burkina Faso' and break with the previous regime. Specifically, he has promised to curb executive power and strengthen governance, invest in health and education, provide better access to drinking water and support small-to-medium agricultural enterprises. The plans are estimated by the MPP to require US$11bn. over five years, which Kaboré aims to finance primarily through private sector investment and by clamping down on fraud.

DEFENCE

There are three military regions. Defence expenditure totalled US$153m. in 2013 (US$9 per capita), representing 1.3% of GDP.

Army

Strength (2011), 6,400 with a paramilitary Gendarmerie of 4,200. In addition there is a People's Militia of 45,000.

Air Force

Personnel total (2011), 600 with two combat-capable aircraft.

ECONOMY

Agriculture contributed 31.8% of GDP in 2009; followed by public administration, defence and services, 15.6%; manufacturing, 11.1%; trade and hotels, 11.1%; and construction, 6.7%.

Overview

Landlocked Burkina Faso is one of the poorest countries in the world. 80% of the population exists on subsistence farming and less than 10% of the land is cultivable without irrigation. It is Africa's largest cotton grower, with 80% of the crop grown from genetically modified seeds in 2010.

Gold is the main export and mining operations doubled in size between 2009 and 2010, helping the economy to grow by 8.4% that year in the process. Greater political stability and a lull in conflict in neighbouring Côte d'Ivoire have restored transport links, improving mid- to long-term economic prospects. Nonetheless, the economy faces significant challenges from a fast-growing population and must seek to tackle the national debt while improving infrastructure.

Currency

The unit of currency is the franc CFA (XOF) with a parity of 655.957 francs CFA to one euro. Foreign exchange reserves were US$520m. in June 2005 and total money supply was 375,711m. francs CFA. There was inflation of 0.5% in 2013 but deflation of 0.3% in 2014.

Budget

Budgetary central government revenues in 2009 totalled 771.5bn. francs CFA (630.7bn. francs CFA in 2008) and expenses were 499.1bn. francs CFA (453.6bn. francs CFA in 2008). Taxes accounted for 64.1% of revenues in 2009 and compensation of employees 45.8% of expenses.

VAT is 18%.

Performance

Real GDP growth was 6.5% in 2012, 6.6% in 2013 and 4.0% in 2014. Total GDP was US$12.5bn. in 2014.

Banking and Finance

The bank of issue which functions as the central bank is the regional Central Bank of West African States (BCEAO; Governor, Tiémoko Meyliet Koné). There are seven other banks and three credit institutions.

In 2010 external debt totalled US$2,053m., representing 23.3% of GNI.

There is a stock exchange in Ouagadougou.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Burkina Faso's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2011 were the equivalent of 0.1 tonnes per capita.

Electricity

Production of electricity (2011) was 530m. kWh. Thermal capacity in 2011 was 238,000 kW; hydro-electric capacity in 2011 was 32,000 kW. Total installed capacity was 270,000 kW in 2011. Consumption per capita was 64 kWh in 2011.

Minerals

There are deposits of manganese, zinc, limestone, phosphate and diamonds. Gold production was 5,482 kg in 2008.

Agriculture

In 2007 there were about 5.2m. ha. of arable land and 60,000 ha. of permanent crops. An estimated 55,000 ha. were equipped for irrigation in 2013. There were four tractors per 10,000 ha. of arable land in 2006. The agricultural population in 2007 totalled approximately 13.56m., of whom 6.12m. were economically active. Production (2003, in 1,000 tonnes): sorghum, 1,519; millet, 1,214; maize, 738; seed cotton, 500; sugarcane, 420; groundnuts, 301; cottonseed, 250; cotton lint, 207; rice, 97.

Livestock (2003 estimates): goats, 8.8m.; sheep, 6.8m.; cattle, 5.0m.; pigs, 640,000; asses, 531,000; chickens, 24m. Livestock products, 2003 estimates (in 1,000 tonnes): beef and veal, 62; goat meat, 24; poultry meat, 28; cow's milk, 180; goat's milk, 54; eggs, 18.

Forestry

In 2010 forests covered 5.65m. ha., or 21% of the total land area. Timber production in 2011 was 14.13m. cu. metres.

Fisheries

In 2010 total catch was 14,520 tonnes, exclusively from inland waters.

INDUSTRY

In 2002 manufacturing contributed 14.5% of GDP, primarily food-processing and textiles. Industry is underdeveloped and employs only 1% of the workforce. The country's manufactures are mainly restricted to basic consumer goods and processed foods. Output of major products, in 1,000 tonnes: cottonseed oil (2011 estimate), 48; sugar (2002), 35; flour (2002), 10; soap (2002), 10; beer (2003), 55.0m. litres.

Labour

The labour force in 2013 was 7,695,400 (5,625,600 in 2003). 85.1% of the population aged 15–64 was economically active in 2013. In the same year 3.3% of the population was unemployed.

Burkina Faso had 0.11m. people living in slavery according to the Walk Free Foundation's 2013 Global Slavery Index.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

In 2010 imports totalled US$2,048.2m. and exports US$1,288.1m. Principal import suppliers, 2010: Côte d'Ivoire, 16.0%; France, 10.3%; China, 9.7%; Togo, 4.5%. Principal export markets, 2010: Switzerland, 63.5%; South Africa, 11.2%; Singapore, 4.9%; United Kingdom, 3.0%. Machinery and transport equipment accounted for 22.9% of the country's imports in 2010; gold (including gold plated with platinum) accounted for 68.6% of exports in 2010.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

The road system comprised 92,495 km in 2004 (including 15,271 km of main roads). There were 97,100 passenger cars (seven per 1,000 inhabitants), 55,700 lorries and vans, and 356,400 motorcycles and mopeds in use in 2007.

Rail

The railway from Abidjan in Côte d'Ivoire to Kaya (600 km of metre gauge within Burkina Faso) is operated by the mixed public-private company Sitarail, a concessionaire to both governments. Across both countries Sitarail carried 156,569 passengers in 2004 and 759,957 tonnes of freight in 2005.

Civil Aviation

The international airports are Ouagadougou (which handled 485,815 passengers in 2012) and Bobo-Dioulasso. The national carrier is Air Burkina, which in 2010 flew to Abidjan, Accra, Bamako, Cotonou, Dakar, Douala, Libreville, Lomé, Marseille, N'Djaména, Niamey and Paris in addition to operating on domestic routes. In 2013 Air Burkina carried 129,000 passengers (122,000 on international flights).

Telecommunications

In 2011 there were 141,500 landline telephone subscriptions (equivalent to 8.3 per 1,000 inhabitants) and 7,628,100 mobile phone subscriptions (or 452.7 per 1,000 inhabitants). Fixed internet subscriptions totalled 28,700 in 2010 (1.7 per 1,000 inhabitants). In June 2012 there were 116,000 Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

Civilian courts replaced revolutionary tribunals in 1993. A law passed in April 2000 split the supreme court into four separate entities—a constitutional court, an appeal court, a council of state and a government audit office.

The population in penal institutions in Dec. 2012 was 4,899 (28 per 100,000 of national population). In 2015 the World Justice Project Rule of Law Index, which provides data on how the rule of law is experienced by the general public across eight categories, ranked Burkina Faso 70th of 102 countries for both criminal justice and civil justice.

Education

In 2007 adult literacy was 28.7%, among the lowest in the world. The 1994–96 development programme established an adult literacy campaign, and centres for the education of 10–15-year-old non-school attenders. In 2007 there were 1,561,258 pupils at primary schools with 32,760 teaching staff. During the period 1990–95 only 24% of females of primary school age were enrolled in school but by 2006 this had increased to 42%. In 2007 there were 352,376 pupils and 12,498 teaching staff in secondary schools, and 33,459 students in higher education with 1,886 academic staff.

In 2006 public expenditure on education came to 4.5% of GNI and 15.4% of total government expenditure.

Health

In 2007 there were three national hospitals, nine regional hospitals and 75 medical centres. There were 441 physicians, 38 dentists, 4,262 nurses, 604 midwives and 58 pharmacists in the public sector in 2007.

RELIGION

According to estimates by the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life, in 2010 the population was 61.6% Muslim (nearly all Sunnis) with 22.5% Christian (mainly Catholic) and 15.4% folk religionists. In Feb. 2016 the Roman Catholic church had one cardinal.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

The Ruins of Loropéni were inscribed on the UNESCO World Heritage List in 2009. At least 1,000 years old, Loropéni is the best preserved of ten similar fortresses in the Lobi area and is part of a larger group of around 100 stone-built enclosures with ties to the trans-Saharan gold trade.

Press

There were five dailies (two government-owned) with a combined circulation of 36,000 in 2008. The leading newspaper in terms of circulation is Le Pays.

Tourism

In 2009, 269,000 foreign tourists stayed in hotels or similar accommodation.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

From 1890 Burundi was part of German East Africa and from 1919 part of Ruanda-Urundi, administered by Belgium as a League of Nations mandate. The country gained independence on 1 July 1962. In April 1972 fighting between rebels from Burundi and neighbouring countries and the ruling Tutsi, apparently aiming to destroy Tutsi hegemony, killed up to 120,000. Following the deposition of Presidents Micombero and Bagaza by the army on 1 Nov. 1976 and 3 Sept. 1987 respectively, Maj. Pierre Buyoya, a Tutsi, assumed the presidency on 1 Oct. 1987.

On 1 June 1993 Buyoya was defeated in elections by Melchior Ndadaye, who became the country's first elected president and the first Hutu president. However, on 21 Oct. 1993 he and six ministers were killed in an attempted military coup. Another wave of Tutsi-Hutu violence cost thousands of lives. On 6 April 1994 the new president, Cyprien Ntaryamira, was also killed, possibly assassinated, together with the president of Rwanda.

On 25 July 1996 the army seized power, installing Buyoya as president for the second time. In June 1998 Buyoya drew up a transitional power-sharing arrangement, with two vice-presidents—one Hutu and one Tutsi—replacing the prime minister. However, extremists on both sides denounced it. In July 2001 it was agreed that a three-year transitional government should be installed with Buyoya as president and Domitien Ndayizeye, a Hutu, as vice-president for the first 18 months, after which the roles would be reversed. Fighting nevertheless continued until a ceasefire was eventually signed in Dec. 2002 by the government and the Forces for the Defense of Democracy (FDD), the country's principal rebel movement. In Oct. 2003 the FDD and the government sealed a peace deal to implement the 2002 ceasefire.

In March 2005 a new power-sharing constitution won popular approval and Pierre Nkurunziza became president in Aug. that year. In April 2009 the Forces for National Liberation, the last remaining rebel group, gave up its campaign of violence and became a legitimate political party. In June 2010 and July 2015 Nkurunziza won further terms as president.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Burundi is bounded in the north by Rwanda, east and south by Tanzania and west by the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and has an area of 27,830 sq. km (10,745 sq. miles) including 2,150 sq. km of inland water (830 sq. miles). The population at the 2008 census was 8,053,574 (4,088,668 females); density, 314 per sq. km. In 2011, 11·3% of the population lived in urban areas (the smallest proportion of any country in the world).

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 11·18m.

There are 18 provinces (since March 2015), named after their chief towns apart from Bujumbura Rural. These are subdivided into 129 communes. The 17 provinces at the time of the 2008 census (with 2008 populations) were: Bubanza (338,023), Bujumbura Mairie (497,166), Bujumbura Rural (555,933), Bururi (574,013), Cankuzo (228,873), Cibitoke (460,435), Gitega (725,223), Karusi (436,443), Kayanza (585,412), Kirundo (628,256), Makamba (430,899), Muramvya (292,589), Muyinga (632,409), Mwaro (273,143), Ngozi (660,717), Rutana (333,510), Ruyigi (400,530). A new province, Rumonge, came into existence in March 2015 and was created from five communes previously belonging to Bujumbura Rural and Bururi.

The capital, Bujumbura, had a population of 497,166 in 2008. Other large towns are Gitega, Ngozi and Rumonge.

There are four ethnic groups—Hutu (Bantu, forming 81% of the total); Tutsi (Nilotic, 16%); Lingala (2%); Twa (pygmoids, 1%). The local language, Kirundi, and French are both official languages. Swahili is spoken in the commercial centres.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2008 estimates: births, 278,000; deaths, 112,000. Rates, 2008 estimates (per 1,000 population): birth, 34·5; death, 13·9. Life expectancy at birth, 2013, was 52·2 years for men and 56·1 years for women. Infant mortality, 2010, 88 per 1,000 live births. Annual population growth rate, 2000–08, 2·8%; fertility rate, 2008, 4·6 children per woman.

CLIMATE

An equatorial climate, modified by altitude. The eastern plateau is generally cool, the easternmost savanna several degrees hotter. The wet seasons are from March to May and Sept. to Dec. Bujumbura, Jan. 73°F (22·8°C), July 73°F (22·8°C). Annual rainfall 33" (825 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

The constitution of 1981 provided for a one-party state. In Jan. 1991 the government of President Maj. Pierre Buyoya, leader of the sole party, the Union for National Progress (UPRONA), proposed a new constitution which was approved by a referendum in March 1992 (with 89% of votes cast in favour), legalizing parties not based on ethnic group, region or religion and providing for presidential elections by direct universal suffrage. In 2001, following years of civil war, a multi-ethnic broad-based transition government was established. On 28 Feb. 2005 citizens voted overwhelmingly to adopt a new constitution laying the foundations for the end of a 12-year civil war, with 92% of votes cast in favour of the constitution. The constitution gives Tutsis (who have traditionally held power in Burundi but only make up 15% of the population) 40% of seats in the National Assembly, while the Hutus, who constitute 83% of the population, are given 60% of the seats. Initially, the president was only permitted to serve a maximum of two five-year terms. However, in May 2015 the constitutional court ruled controversially that Nkurunziza could seek a third term, since it would be only the second time he was pursuing popular election (having originally been appointed to the post by parliamentary vote). He was duly re-elected in July 2015, sparking widespread unrest.

Burundi has a bicameral legislature, consisting of the National Assembly of 121 members, with 100 members elected to serve five-year terms and 21 co-opted members, and the Senate of 43 members (36 elected and seven appointed, including four former presidents).

National Anthem

'Burundi Bwacu' ('Dear Burundi'); words by a committee, tune by M. Barenayabo.

RECENT ELECTIONS

Pierre Nkurunziza was re-elected president on 21 July 2015 with 69.4% of votes cast. Agathon Rwasa came second with 19.0% of the vote followed by Gerard Nduwayo with 2.1% and five other candidates who took less than 2% each. Several opposition parties boycotted the election amid controversy over Nkurunziza's eligibility for a third term. Turnout was 73.4%.

At the parliamentary elections of 29 June 2015 the ruling National Council for the Defense of Democracy–Forces for the Defense of Democracy (CNDD–FDD) won 77 of 100 available seats with 60.3% of the vote, the Hope for Burundians coalition 21 with 11.2% and Union for National Progress 2 with 2.5%. Turnout was 74.3%. In indirect Senate elections held on 24 July 2015 the National Council for the Defense of Democracy–Forces for the Defense of Democracy won 33 of 36 available seats, the Union for National Progress 2 and the National Forces of Liberation 1. Three ethnic Twa members were appointed to the Senate as were four former presidents. The opposition boycotted the elections.

CURRENT LEADERS

Pierre Nkurunziza

Position

President

Introduction

Pierre Nkurunziza, an ethnic Hutu, became president in Aug. 2005 in the country's first democratic elections since the start of the civil war in 1993. He was re-elected in 2010 and again, more controversially, in July 2015. His administration has attracted criticism for economic mismanagement, corruption and intolerance of opposition.

Early Life

Born in Bujumbura on 18 Dec. 1963, Nkurunziza attended primary school in Ngozi, where in 1972 his father was killed in ethnic violence, and secondary school in Gitega. He studied physical education at the University of Burundi in Bujumbura and graduated in 1990.

Civil war followed the assassination in Oct. 1993 of Burundi's first ethnic Hutu president, Melchior Ndadaye, and Nkurunziza joined the National Council for the Defense of Democracy–Forces for the Defense of Democracy (CNDD–FDD) as a soldier. The group was one of several rebel Hutu groups that fought the Tutsi-dominated army, in a conflict that had killed thousands by the late 1990s. By 1998 Nkurunziza was co-ordinating the activities of the armed and political wings of the CNDD–FDD. That year he was sentenced to death by a Burundian court for alleged involvement in ambushes, but was granted immunity during peace talks that culminated in the Arusha Peace Accord of Aug. 2000.

Elected chairman of the CNDD–FDD in 2001, Nkurunziza began negotiations with Burundi's transitional government. In Nov. 2003 he signed a ceasefire accord, winning official recognition of the CNDD–FDD as a political party. He became state minister of good governance in the transitional government, helping to forge a power-sharing agreement and timetable for democratic elections.

Following CNDD–FDD victories in elections in June and July 2005, Nkurunziza was nominated as the party's presidential candidate. He won an overwhelming victory in a vote by parliament (acting as an electoral college) on 19 Aug. and was sworn in a week later.

Career in Office

President Nkurunziza appointed a cabinet of 20 ministers comprising 11 Hutus and nine Tutsis in accordance with the quotas stipulated in the constitution. He promised free primary education for all children with immediate effect as well as aid for the return of Burundian refugees from Tanzania and Rwanda. In Aug. 2006 an alleged coup attempt prompted a government crackdown on opposition and the arrest of several prominent political and military figures. The following month the government signed a ceasefire agreement with the Palipehutu–FNL rebel group which finally entered the peace process. In 2007 the United Nations completed its peacekeeping mandate in Burundi. In April 2008 there was a renewal of fighting between government forces and the FNL before another ceasefire was negotiated the following month. Then, in April 2009, the FNL officially disarmed and transformed into a legal political party.

Nkurunziza was re-elected overwhelmingly at presidential elections on 28 June 2010, but opposition members dismissed the legitimacy of the poll. In parliamentary elections in July that year, boycotted by the opposition, the CNDD–FDD was returned with a large majority, prompting a sporadic resurgence of violence across the country in 2011 and 2012. In June 2013 the president approved controversial legislation restricting media freedom.

Concerns over his authoritarianism were further heightened in March 2014 when several opposition party activists were jailed for life for insurrection for having attempted to attend a political rally in the capital. At the same time, Nkurunziza unsuccessfully sought parliamentary approval for constitutional amendments that would allow him to run for a third term in office and could politically marginalize the Tutsi minority. However, in May 2015 the Constitutional Court ruled in favour of his re-election bid amid allegations of intimidation of the judiciary, prompting months of widespread protests. In June the CNDD–FDD claimed victory in legislative elections and the following month Nkurunziza won his third term in polling marred by violence and an opposition boycott.

DEFENCE

A new National Defence Force combining government forces and rebels from the FDD was created following the Oct. 2003 peace settlement.

Defence expenditure totalled US$64m. in 2013 (US$6 per capita), representing 2.5% of GDP.

Army

The Army had a strength (2011) of 20,000 including an air wing.

Air Force

There were 200 air wing personnel in 2011 with one combat-capable aircraft and two attack helicopters.

ECONOMY

Agriculture contributed 33.3% to GDP in 2011; followed by public administration and defence, 21.7%; manufacturing, 13.6%; and transport and communications, 6.7%.

Overview

Being landlocked and among the world's poorest countries, Burundi is dependent on foreign aid. 90% of the population relies on subsistence agriculture. The economy is driven by coffee exports and, to a lesser extent, tea, sugar, cotton and hides. Ethnic tensions exacerbated by the civil war that ended in 2005 persist, particularly in light of the Tutsi minority effectively controlling the coffee trade.

However, the economy may be beginning to reap the dividends of post-conflict stability. In 2013 the World Bank named Burundi among the world's top economic reformers. GDP growth was expected to accelerate in 2014, supported by a rebound in coffee production and investment in large-scale construction projects. However, vulnerability to international food and fuel price rises, a high debt burden, continuing political tension and poor infrastructure pose longer-term challenges to growth.

Currency

The unit of currency is the Burundi franc (BIF) of 100 centimes. Inflation was 24.4% in 2008, falling to 6.5% in 2010. More recently it was 7.9% in 2013 and 4.4% in 2014. In July 2005 gold reserves were 1,000 troy oz and foreign exchange reserves US$88m. Total money supply was 139,353m. Burundi francs in Sept. 2004.

Budget

Total revenues in 2011 were 667.5bn. Burundi francs and expenditures 789.0bn. Burundi francs. Tax revenue accounted for 65.1% of revenues in 2011; current expenditure accounted for 72.8% of expenditures.

VAT of 18% was introduced in July 2009, replacing the 17% transaction tax.

Performance

Real GDP growth was 4.0% in 2012, 4.5% in 2013 and 4.7% in 2014. Total GDP in 2014 was US$3.1bn.

Banking and Finance

The Bank of the Republic of Burundi is the central bank and bank of issue. Its Governor is Jean Ciza. The largest commercial banks in 2007 were Interbank Burundi (assets of US$126m.), Banque de Crédit de Bujumbura (US$110m.) and Banque Commerciale du Burundi (US$67m.). Consolidated assets of financial institutions totalled 42.5bn. Burundi francs in 2009. In 2010 foreign debt totalled US$537m., representing 33.8% of GNI.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Burundi's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2011 were the equivalent of less than 0.1 tonnes per capita.

Electricity

Installed capacity was estimated at 33,000 kW in 2011. Production was 143m. kWh in 2011. Consumption per capita in 2011 was 25 kWh.

Minerals

Gold is mined on a small scale. Deposits of nickel (280m. tonnes) and vanadium remain to be exploited. There are proven reserves of phosphates of 17.6m. tonnes.

Agriculture

The main economic activity is agriculture, which contributed 35% of GDP in 2005. In 2007, 0.96m. ha. were arable and 0.35m. ha. permanent crops. 23,000 ha. were equipped for irrigation in 2013. Beans, cassava, maize, sweet potatoes, groundnuts, peas, sorghum and bananas are grown according to the climate and the region.

The main cash crop is coffee, of which about 95% is arabica. It accounts for 90% of exports, and taxes and levies on coffee constitute a major source of revenue. Production (2003) 36,000 tonnes. The main agricultural crops (2002 production, in 1,000 tonnes) are bananas (1,603), sweet potatoes (833), cassava (750), dry beans (245), sugarcane (176) and maize (127).

Livestock (2002): 750,000 goats, 324,000 cattle, 230,000 sheep, 70,000 pigs and 4m. chickens.

Forestry

Forests covered 0.17m. ha., or 7% of the total land area, in 2010. Timber production in 2011 was 10.28m. cu. metres, the majority of it for fuel.

Fisheries

In 2012 the total catch was 12,309 tonnes, exclusively from inland waters.

INDUSTRY

In 2003 production of sugar totalled 20,000 tonnes. Other major products are (2003 output): beer (87.5m. litres), soft drinks (12.1m. litres), cigarettes (354m. units) and blankets (123,000 units).

Labour

The labour force in 2013 was 4,799,400 (3,287,700 in 2003). 83.6% of the population aged 15–64 was economically active in 2013. In the same year 7.0% of the population was unemployed.

Burundi had 71,000 people living in slavery according to the Walk Free Foundation's 2013 Global Slavery Index.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

With Rwanda and the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Burundi forms part of the Economic Community of the Great Lakes.

Imports and Exports

Imports and exports for calendar years in US$1m.:

	2006	2007	2008	2009	2010
Imports c.i.f.	433.6	423.0	315.2	344.8	832.5
Exports f.o.b.	228.5	156.2	141.8	112.9	275.5

Main exports are coffee, gold and tea. Leading imports are road vehicles, medicinal and pharmaceutical products, and cement. In 2010 main import sources (in US$1m.) were: Belgium (101.0); China (101.0); Japan (78.0). Leading export markets in 2010 (in US$1m.) were: Switzerland (74.2); UK (36.8); Belgium (35.8).

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

In 2004 there were 12,322 km of roads of which 10.4% were paved. There were 15,500 passenger cars (two per 1,000 inhabitants) and 32,700 lorries and vans in use in 2007.

Civil Aviation

There were direct flights to Dar es Salaam, Kigali, Mwanza and Nairobi in 2010. Air Burundi is the state-owned national airline, but it has not been operational since Sept. 2009. Bujumbura International airport handled 291,838 passengers and 3,054 tonnes of freight in 2012.

Shipping

There are lake services from Bujumbura to Kigoma (Tanzania) and Kalémie (Democratic Republic of the Congo). The main route for exports and imports is via Kigoma, and thence by rail to Dar es Salaam.

Telecommunications

There were 32,600 fixed telephone lines in 2010 (3.9 per 1,000 inhabitants) and mobile phone subscribers numbered 1.15m. There were 21.0 internet users per 1,000 inhabitants in 2010. Fixed internet subscriptions totalled 5,000 in 2009 (0.6 per 1,000 inhabitants).

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

There is a Supreme Court, an appeal court and a court of first instance at Bujumbura, and provincial courts in each provincial capital.

The death penalty was abolished in April 2009. The population in penal institutions in Feb. 2013 was 6,477 (72 per 100,000 of national population). The International Centre for Prison Studies estimated in 2014 that 51.8% of prisoners had yet to receive a trial.

Education

Adult literacy rate was 66% in 2008. In 2007 there were 1,490,844 pupils in primary schools with 28,671 teachers and 209,945 pupils in secondary schools with 7,501 teachers. There were 15,623 students in higher education in 2007 and 1,007 academic staff. The leading institution in the tertiary sector is the Université du Burundi, located in Bujumbura.

In 2005 public expenditure on education came to 5.2% of GNI.

Health

In 2004 there were 200 physicians and 1,348 nursing and midwifery personnel. In 2006 there were seven hospital beds per 10,000 inhabitants (up from less than one per 10,000 in 1996).

RELIGION

According to estimates by the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life, in 2010 the population was 91.5% Christian with the remainder being folk religionists and Muslims. Around four-fifth of Christians are Catholics and the rest Protestants.

CULTURE

Press

There was one state-controlled daily newspaper (Le Renouveau) in 2008 with a circulation of 20,000.

Tourism

There were 212,000 foreign tourists in 2009 (202,000 in 2008).

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

During centuries of Portuguese rule the islands were gradually peopled with Portuguese, slaves from Africa and people of mixed African-European descent who formed the majority. While retaining some African culture, the Cabo Verdians spoke Portuguese or the Portuguese-derived Crioulo (Creole) language and became Catholics. In 1956 nationalists from Cape Verde (now officially known as Cabo Verde) and Portuguese Guinea founded the Partido Africano da Independência da Guiné e Cabo Verde (PAIGC). In the 1960s the PAIGC waged a successful guerrilla war. On 5 July 1975 Cape Verde became independent, ruled by the PAIGC, which was already the ruling party in the former Portuguese colony of Guinea-Bissau. But resentment at Cape Verdians' privileged position in Guinea-Bissau led to the end of the ties between the two countries' ruling parties. Although the PAIGC retained its name in Guinea-Bissau, in Jan. 1981 it was renamed the Partido Africano da Independência do Cabo Verde (PAICV) in Cape Verde. The constitution of 1981 made the PAICV the sole legal party, but in Sept. 1990 the National Assembly abolished its monopoly and free elections were permitted. In Oct. 2013 the government informed the United Nations that the country would henceforth be designated Cabo Verde rather than Cape Verde.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Cabo Verde is situated in the Atlantic Ocean 620 km off west Africa and consists of ten islands (Boa Vista, Brava, Fogo, Maio, Sal, Santa Luzia, Santo Antão, São Nicolau, São Tiago and São Vicente) and five islets. The islands are divided into two groups, named Barlavento (windward) and Sotavento (leeward). The total area is 4,033 sq. km (1,557 sq. miles). The 2010 census population was 491,875 (248,282 female), giving a density of 122 per sq. km. In 2010, 62% of the population lived in urban areas.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 521,000.

Over 600,000 Cabo Verdeans live abroad (more than still live in the country), mainly in the USA.

Areas and populations of the islands:

Island	Area (sq. km)	Population census 2000	Population census 2010
Santo Antão	779	47,170	43,915
São Vicente ¹	227	67,163	76,140
São Nicolau	388	13,647	12,817
Sal	216	14,816	25,779
Boa Vista	620	4,209	9,162
Barlavento	2,230	147,005	167,813
Maio	269	6,754	6,952
São Tiago	991	236,631	274,044
Fogo	476	37,431	37,071
Brava	64	6,804	5,995
Sotavento	1,803	287,620	324,062

¹Including Santa Luzia island, which is uninhabited.

The main towns are Praia, the capital, on São Tiago (127,832, 2010 census population) and Mindelo on São Vicente (70,468, 2010 census population). It is estimated that around 71% of the population are of mixed African and European descent, with 28% African (mainly Fulani, Balanta and Mandynko) and 1% European. The official language is Portuguese; a creole (Crioulo) is in ordinary use.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2008 estimates: births, 12,000; deaths, 2,000. Rates, 2008 estimates (per 1,000 population): birth, 24.1; death, 5.0. Annual population growth rate, 2000–08, 1.6%. Annual emigration varies between 2,000 and 10,000. Life expectancy at birth, 2013, was 71.1 years for men and 78.8 years for women. Infant mortality, 2010, 29 per 1,000 live births; fertility rate, 2008, 2.7 children per woman. Cabo Verde has had one of the largest reductions in its fertility rate of any country in the world over the past quarter of a century, having had a rate of 5.3 births per woman in 1990.

CLIMATE

The climate is arid, with a cool dry season from Dec. to June and warm dry conditions for the rest of the year. Rainfall is sparse, rarely exceeding 5" (127 mm) in the northern islands or 12" (304 mm) in the southern ones. There are periodic severe droughts. Praia, Jan. 72°F (22.2°C), July 77°F (25°C). Annual rainfall 10" (250 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

The Constitution was adopted in Sept. 1992 and was revised in 1995 and 1999.

A constitutional referendum was held on 28 Dec. 1994; turnout was 45%. 82.06% of votes cast favoured a reform extending the powers of the presidency and strengthening the autonomy of local authorities. The President is elected for five-year terms by universal suffrage.

The 72-member National Assembly (Assembleia Nacional) is elected for five-year terms.

National Anthem

'Cântico da Liberdade' ('Song of Freedom'); words by A. S. Lopes, tune by A. H. T. Silva.

RECENT ELECTIONS

Elections for the National Assembly of 72 members were held on 20 March 2016. Turnout was 66.0%. The Movement for Democracy (MPD) won 40 seats with 54.5% of votes cast, the African Party for the Independence of Cabo Verde (PAICV) won 29 seats with 38.2% and the Democratic and Independent Cabo Verdean Union won 3 with 6.9%. Three smaller parties failed to win any seats.

In the first round of presidential elections held on 7 Aug. 2011 Jorge Carlos Fonseca won 37.3% of the vote against Manuel Inocêncio Sousa with 32.0%, Aristides Lima with 27.4% and Joaquim Jaime Monteiro with 2.0%. Turnout was 53.1%. In the run-off held on 21 Aug. 2011, Fonseca won 54.5% of the vote and Sousa 45.5%. Turnout was 59.7%.

CURRENT LEADERS

Jorge Carlos Fonseca

Position

President

Introduction

Jorge Carlos Fonseca was elected president in Aug. 2011, having previously served as foreign minister. As leader of the main opposition party, the Movement for Democracy (MPD), he pledged co-operation with the ruling African Party for the Independence of Cabo Verde (PAICV) to boost economic growth and to strengthen representative democracy.

Early Life

Born on 20 Oct. 1950 in São Velenti, Jorge Carlos de Almeida Fonseca was educated in Praia and Mindelo, before studying law at the University of Lisbon. He returned to Cape Verde (now officially known as Cabo Verde) in 1975 when the island gained independence from Portugal. From 1975–77 he served under the ruling African Party for the Independence of Guinea and Cape Verde (PAIGC) as director general of emigration. From 1977–79 he was secretary general at the ministry of foreign affairs.

Returning to academic life, he worked at the University of Lisbon from 1982 before becoming a professor of criminal law at Lisbon's National Institute of Legal Medicine in 1987. From 1989–90 he was a resident director and associate professor of law and public administration at the University of East Asia, Macau. As a founder member of the centrist MPD in 1990, he helped negotiate Cape Verde's first multi-party elections in Jan. 1991, in which he was elected to parliament. He served as minister of foreign affairs in the MPD government from 1991–93, before leaving the party to co-found the Democratic Convergence Party (PCD) in 1994.

Representing a coalition of minor parties, he stood unsuccessfully for the presidency in 2001. For the next decade he pursued a career as an academic and political activist. He co-founded the Law and Justice Foundation in 2004 and was appointed president of the Higher Institute of Legal and Social Sciences in Praia. He fought the Aug. 2011 presidential election as the MPD candidate, promising to sustain economic growth and build the island's infrastructure. He won in the second round with close to 55% of the vote.

Career in Office

Fonseca took office on 9 Sept. 2011, pledging to work with the governing PAICV to maintain political stability and attract inward investment. His main challenge has been to boost the economy and reduce high unemployment in an adverse global economic climate.

DEFENCE

National service is by selective conscription. The President of the Republic is C.-in-C. of the armed forces. Defence expenditure totalled US$9m. in 2013 (US$18 per capita), representing 0.5% of GDP.

Army

The Army is composed of two battalions and had a strength of 1,000 in 2011.

Navy

There is a coast guard of about 100 (2011) with three patrol and coastal combatants.

Air Force

The Air Force had under 100 personnel and no combat aircraft in 2011.

ECONOMY

Agriculture accounted for 8.9% of GDP in 2009, industry 19.7% and services 71.4%.

Overview

Tourism is the main engine of the economy, providing around 75% of annual GDP. The economy is also heavily dependent on remittances, which account for some 20% of GDP and provide vital stocks of foreign currency. The country has few natural resources, although frozen marine products are an important source of exports.

Real GDP growth averaged over 7% between 2003 and 2008 but dropped to 1% in 2013, with declining consumer and business confidence leading to a fall in foreign direct investment. Despite a difficult international economic environment, Cabo Verde nonetheless boasts one of the highest rates of GDP per capita in sub-Saharan Africa.

Nominal debt stood at 93% of GDP in 2013. The government has sought to boost the economy through short- and medium-term fiscal consolidation. There is potential for further government fiscal stimulus since banks have been failing to lend, in part because they carry an excess of non-performing loans.

Although unemployment remains high, particularly among young people, and female participation in the labour force is low, the poverty rate declined from 37% to 27% between 2002 and 2010. With a growing reputation for long-term political and economic stability, Cabo Verde became only the second country to graduate from the United Nations' list of least developed countries (LDCs) to 'developing country' status in 2007.

Currency

The unit of currency is the Cabo Verde escudo (CVE) of 100 centavos, which is pegged at 110.265 to the euro. Foreign exchange reserves were US$164m. in June 2005 and total money supply was 25,156m. escudos. There was inflation of 1.5% in 2013 but deflation of 0.2% in 2014.

Budget

Budgetary central government revenues in 2011 were 37,300m. escudos (including taxes, 29,187m. escudos) and expenditures 33,929m. escudos (including compensation of employees, 5,993m. escudos).

VAT is 15% (reduced rate, 6%).

Performance

Real GDP growth was 1.1% in 2012, 1.0% in 2013 and 1.8% in 2014. Total GDP in 2014 was US$1.9bn.

Banking and Finance

The Banco de Cabo Verde is the central bank (Governor, Carlos Burgo) and bank of issue, and was also previously a commercial bank. Its latter functions have been taken over by the Banco Comercial do Atlântico, mainly financed by public funds. The Caixa Económica de Cabo Verde (CECV) has been upgraded into a commercial and development bank. Two foreign banks have also been established there. In addition, the Fundo de Solidariedade Nacional acts as the country's leading savings institution while the Fundo de Desenvolvimento Nacional administers public investment resources and the Instituto Caboverdiano channels international aid.

External debt totalled US$857m. in 2010 and represented 54.3% of GNI.

There is a stock exchange in Mindelo.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Cabo Verde's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2011 were the equivalent of 0.8 tonnes per capita. An Environmental Performance Index compiled in 2016 ranked Cabo Verde 143rd of 180 countries, with 52.0%. The index examined various factors in nine areas—agriculture, air quality, biodiversity and habitat, climate and energy, fisheries, forests, health impacts, water and sanitation, and water resources.

Electricity

Installed capacity was 109,000 kW in 2011. Production was 362m. kWh in 2011. Consumption per capita in 2011 was 738 kWh.

Minerals

Salt is obtained on the islands of Sal, Boa Vista and Maio. Volcanic rock (pozzolana) is mined for export. There are also deposits of kaolin, clay, gypsum and basalt.

Agriculture

In 2002, 21.7% of the economically active population were engaged in agriculture. Some 10–15% of the land area is suitable for farming. In 2003, 46,000 ha. were arable and 3,000 ha. permanent crops, mainly confined to inland valleys. 3,000 ha. were irrigated in 2003. The chief crops (production, 2002, in 1,000 tonnes) are: sugarcane, 14; bananas, 6; coconuts, 6; maize, 5; cabbage, 4; mangoes, 4; sweet potatoes, 4; tomatoes, 4.

Livestock (2003): 200,000 pigs, 112,000 goats, 22,000 cattle, 14,000 asses.

Forestry

In 2010 the forest area was 85,000 ha., or 21% of the total land area.

Fisheries

In 2009 the total catch was 16,828 tonnes, exclusively from marine waters.

INDUSTRY

The main industries are the manufacture of paint, beer, soft drinks, rum, flour, cigarettes, canned tuna and shoes.

Labour

In 2010 the estimated economically active population was 221,000 (57% males).

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

Merchandise imports in 2013 totalled US$726.4m. (US$754.8m. in 2012) and merchandise exports US$69.2m. (US$55.8m. in 2012).

Principal imports in 2013 were food, animals and beverages (30.1%), mineral fuels and lubricants, and machinery and transport equipment; main exports in 2013 were food, animals and beverages (86.1%), manufactured goods, and crude materials and animal and vegetable oils.

The leading import supplier in 2010 was Portugal (45.5%), followed by the Netherlands; the leading export destination in 2010 was Spain (68.2%), followed by Portugal.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

In 2002 there were an estimated 1,100 km of roads (78% paved); in 2005 there were 2,244 registered vehicles.

Civil Aviation

Amilcar Cabral International Airport, at Espargos on Sal, is a major refuelling point on flights to Africa and Latin America. A new international airport, Praia International Airport, has been built at Praia on São Tiago, and was opened in 2005. Transportes Aéreos de Cabo Verde (TACV), the national carrier, provided services to most of the other islands in 2003, and internationally to Abidjan, Amsterdam, Bamako, Bissau, Conakry, Dakar, Fortaleza, Las Palmas, Lisbon, Madrid, Milan, Munich, Paris and Zürich. In 2006 Amilcar Cabral International Airport handled 562,972 passengers and 1,415 tonnes of freight. In 2003 scheduled airline traffic of Cabo Verde-based carriers flew 5m. km, carrying 253,000 passengers (86,000 on international flights).

Shipping

The main ports are Mindelo and Praia. In Jan. 2009 there were 19 vessels of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 19,000 GT. There is a state-owned ferry service between the islands.

Telecommunications

In 2011 there were 74,500 landline telephone subscriptions (equivalent to 148.8 per 1,000 inhabitants) and 396,400 mobile phone subscriptions (or 791.9 per 1,000 inhabitants). There were 296.7 internet users per 1,000 inhabitants in 2009. Fixed internet subscriptions totalled 12,900 in 2009 (26.3 per 1,000 inhabitants).

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

There is a network of People's Tribunals, with a Supreme Court in Praia. The Supreme Court is composed of a minimum of five Judges, of whom one is appointed by the President, one elected by the National Assembly and the other by the Supreme Council of Magistrates.

The population in penal institutions in 2012 was 1,348 (267 per 100,000 of national population). The death penalty was abolished in 1981.

Education

Adult literacy in 2009 was estimated at 84.8% (90.1% among males and 80.2% among females). Primary schooling is followed by lower (13–15 years) and upper (16–18 years) secondary education options. In 2005–06 there were 3,196 primary school teachers for 81,162 pupils; and 2,363 teachers for 52,969 pupils at secondary schools. There are two universities: the Jean Piaget University of Cabo Verde and the University of Cabo Verde.

In 2007 public expenditure on education came to 5.9% of GNI.

Health

Cabo Verde's main hospitals are located in Praia and Mindelo. There is a network of health centres and clinics. In 2005 there were 21 hospital beds per 10,000 inhabitants. There were 217 physicians and 471 nurses in 2006.

RELIGION

According to the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life, in 2010 the population was an estimated 89.1% Christian with a further 9.1% being religiously unaffiliated and the remainder followers of other religions. Around 90% of Christians are Catholics. In Feb. 2016 there was one cardinal.

CULTUREWorld Heritage Sites

Cidade Velha, the historic centre of Ribeira Grande, was inscribed on the UNESCO World Heritage List in 2009. It was the first European colonial town to be built in the tropics.

Press

In 2008 there were 12 non-daily newspapers although no dailies. The most popular newspaper is the weekly A Semana.

Tourism

Tourism has experienced huge growth in the past few years. In 2009 there were 287,183 non-resident tourists staying at hotels and similar establishments, compared to 267,188 in 2007 and 197,844 in 2005.

Festivals

Festivals include the São Vicente Creole Carnival (Feb.) and the music festivals, Gamboa Festival in São Tiago (May) and São Vicente Baía das Gatas Festival (Aug.).

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Neolithic communities, probably linked to migration from southeast China, were established by 1000 BC in the Kompong Cham province of eastern Cambodia. From around 300 BC the Indianized Funan kingdom held sway across much of present-day Cambodia with trading links to China, India, the Middle East and Rome. The state of Chenla broke away from Funan control during the 6th century and over the next 300 years its influence spread to western Cambodia, central Laos and northern Thailand. Cambodia's southern coast came under Javanese control in the eighth century, forcing Khmer-speaking groups inland. The crowning of Jayavarman II as a deva-rajā (or god king) in 802 heralded a long period of regional Khmer domination centred around Angkor.

The Indian-influenced civilization prospered with the development of agriculture and trade, notably under King Yasovarman I around 900 AD and during the reign of Suryavarman II (1113–50), when the temple complex at Angkor Wat was constructed. The empire was attacked by the Islamic Kingdom of Champa (now in central Vietnam) in the 12th and 13th centuries and was subsequently vulnerable to Thai incursions from Ayudhya. Thai forces sacked Angkor in 1432, ushering in a period of dominance by the kings of Siam on Cambodia's western frontier and pressure from Annam to the east. Cambodian nobility established a capital at Phnom Penh in the 16th century, although its influence was limited and the city was sacked by Rama I of Siam in 1772. In 1811–12 Siamese and Vietnamese forces fought for control of Cambodia, with the kingdom coming under Vietnam's control in 1835–40. King Ang Doung wrested back control in 1848 and appealed for military assistance from France, a major naval force in the region with bases in southern Vietnam. Under King Norodom I, a French protectorate was established in 1863, although resentment grew as French control extended beyond foreign affairs and defence. Rebellions were suppressed in the 1870s and 1880s and Cambodia became part of the Union of Indochina in 1887.

Anti-French feeling strengthened in 1940–41 when the Vichy French submitted to Japanese demands for bases in Cambodia. Son Ngoc Thanh was one of the leaders of a nascent nationalist movement after French control was reasserted in 1945. Having returned to Cambodia in 1951, he joined the Khmer Issarak guerrillas to fight the French. Independence was achieved on 9 Nov. 1953, the result of deft diplomacy by King Norodom Sihanouk and France's increasingly weak position in a war against Vietnam's communist revolutionaries. Sihanouk abdicated in 1955 to form the popular Socialist Party which dominated the general election of that year. He served as the country's leader until 1970 when he was deposed by the US-backed Lon Nol amid growing communist incursions from North Vietnam, a rapidly deteriorating economy and political corruption.

The country's name was changed to the Khmer Republic in Oct. 1970. US forces attacked Cambodia's communist strongholds, which led to the rise of the Khmer Rouge. In 1973 direct US involvement came to an end, precipitating a civil war between the Khmer Republic and the United National Cambodian Front (including the Khmer Rouge), supported by North Vietnam and China. After unsuccessful attempts to capture Phnom Penh in 1973 and 1974, the Khmer Rouge, led by Pol Pot, overthrew Lon Nol's government in April 1975.

Renaming the country Democratic Kampuchea, Pol Pot instituted a harsh and highly centralized regime. All cities and towns were forcibly evacuated and citizens set to work in the fields. Intellectuals, members of the professional classes and people identified as enemies of the Khmer Rouge were murdered in their hundreds of thousands and many more died as a result of disease, malnutrition and overwork, resulting in the loss of an estimated 2m. Cambodian lives from 1975–79. In response to repeated border attacks, Vietnam invaded Cambodia in 1978. On 7 Jan. 1979 Phnom Penh was captured by the Vietnamese and Pol Pot fled. During the 1980s the country was destabilized by warring factions fighting both the Vietnamese and the Khmer Rouge. On 23 Oct. 1991 an agreement was signed in Paris by the warring factions and 19 countries, instituting a UN-monitored ceasefire.

A new constitution was promulgated in 1993 restoring parliamentary monarchy. The Khmer Rouge continued hostilities, refusing to take part in the 1993 elections, and by 1996 had split into two factions. The leader of one faction, Ieng Sary, had been sentenced to death in absentia for genocide but was pardoned in Sept. 1996. In Nov. 1996 Ieng Sary and 4,000 of his troops joined with government forces. Prince Norodom Ranariddh, styled as First Prime Minister of the Royal Government, was exiled in July 1997 and coup-leader Hun Sen appointed himself prime minister. In March 1998 Ranariddh returned with a Japanese-brokered plan to ensure 'fair and free' elections, which took place in July 1998. Against a background of violence Hun Sen's Cambodian People's Party (KPK) declared victory.

King Norodom Sihanouk abdicated in Oct. 2004 for health reasons and was succeeded by his son, Norodom Sihamoni. In July 2007 UN-backed tribunals investigated allegations of genocide by the Khmer Rouge. The KPK claimed victory in the parliamentary elections of July 2008 and announced that it would remain in coalition with the depleted Royalist FUNCINPEC (National United Front for an Independent, Neutral, Peaceful and Co-operative Cambodia).

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Cambodia is bounded in the north by Laos and Thailand, west by Thailand, east by Vietnam and south by the Gulf of Thailand. It has an area of about 181,035 sq. km (69,898 sq. miles).

Population, 13,395,682 (2008 census), of whom 6,879,628 were females; density, 74.0 per sq. km. In 2011, 20.4% of the population lived in urban areas.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 15.58m.

The capital, Phnom Penh, had a population of 1,242,992 in 2008. Other cities are Battambang and Siem Reap. Khmers make up around 90% of the population. There are also Vietnamese, Chinese and ethnic hill tribes.

Khmer is the official language.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2008 estimated births, 360,000; deaths, 121,000. Rates, 2008 estimates (per 1,000 population): births, 24.7; deaths, 8.3. Infant mortality, 2010 (per 1,000 live births), 43. Expectation of life in 2013 was 69.1 years for males and 74.5 for females. Annual population growth rate, 2000–08, 1.7%. Fertility rate, 2008, 2.9 children per woman, down from 5.8 births per woman in 1990.

CLIMATE

A tropical climate, with high temperatures all the year. Phnom Penh, Jan. 78°F (25.6°C), July 84°F (28.9°C). Annual rainfall 52" (1,308 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

A parliamentary monarchy was re-established by the 1993 constitution. King Norodom Sihamoni (b. 14 May 1953; appointed 14 Oct. 2004 and sworn in on 29 Oct. 2004) was chosen in the first ever meeting of the nine-member Throne Council following the abdication of his father King Norodom Sihanouk (b. 31 Oct. 1922) on health grounds. As the Cambodian constitution allowed for a succession only in the event of the monarch's death, a new law had to be approved after King Norodom Sihanouk announced his abdication.

Cambodia has a bicameral legislature. There is a 123-member National Assembly, which on 14 June 1993 elected Prince Sihanouk head of state. On 21 Sept. 1993 it adopted a constitution (promulgated on 24 Sept.) by 113 votes to five with two abstentions making him monarch of a parliamentary democracy. Its members are elected by popular vote to serve five-year terms. There is also a 61-member Senate, established in 1999.

National Anthem

'Nokoreach' ('Royal kingdom'); words by Chuon Nat, tune adapted from a Cambodian folk song.

RECENT ELECTIONS

Parliamentary elections were held on 28 July 2013. The ruling Cambodian People's Party (CPP) won 68 seats with 48.8% of the vote (down from 90 and 58.1% in 2008), with the Cambodia National Rescue Party (CNRP) taking 55 seats and 44.5%. The CNRP was formed in 2012 as an electoral alliance between the two main opposition parties, the Sam Rainsy Party and the Human Rights Party. At the 2008 election they had only won 29 seats between them. The opposition rejected the result, claiming there were 'serious irregularities'.

CURRENT GOVERNMENT

In April 2016 the government comprised:

Prime Minister: Hun Sen; b. 1951 (KPK; sworn in 30 Nov. 1998 and reappointed 14 July 2004, 25 Sept. 2008 and 24 Sept. 2013 having first become prime minister in 1985).

CURRENT LEADERS

Hun Sen

Position

Prime Minister

Introduction

Hun Sen has been the dominant figure in Cambodian politics since becoming prime minister in 1985. His tenure has coincided with national recovery from the rule of the Khmer Rouge in the 1970s and the subsequent occupation by Vietnamese forces, although he has been criticized for the repressive tactics he has used to retain power. Despite the economy having suffered from endemic corruption and a failure to attract foreign investment, Hun Sen has moved it away from state socialism towards one based on free market principles. A UN-backed tribunal to investigate charges of genocide against prominent Khmer Rouge figures has sought to conclude that turbulent period in the nation's history. In Jan. 2015 Hun Sen marked 30 years in office as prime minister.

Early Life

Hun Sen was born into a peasant family in Kompang in 1951 and was educated in Phnom Penh by Buddhist monks. In 1970 he joined the Khmer Rouge, losing an eye in battle in 1975, but in 1977 he joined anti-Khmer Rouge forces operating out of Vietnam. After Vietnamese troops invaded Kampuchea in 1979, Hun Sen was appointed foreign minister in the newly established People's Republic of Kampuchea. He became prime minister in 1985.

Career in Office

On assuming office, Hun Sen was confronted with a country in turmoil as pro- and anti-Vietnamese forces waged guerrilla war. In 1989 Vietnamese forces withdrew from the country, which was renamed the State of Cambodia. Buddhism was re-established as the state religion and Hun Sen announced the end of state socialism. In 1991 the UN brokered a peace treaty and a transitional government was installed, with Prince Sihanouk as head of state.

FUNCINPEC, the royalist party of Prince Norodom Ranariddh, was victorious at the 1993 elections but Hun Sen refused to relinquish power. A compromise government was formed with Ranariddh as first prime minister and Hun Sen as his deputy. In 1997 Hun Sen received international condemnation and saw Cambodia expelled from ASEAN for deposing Ranariddh while he was absent from the country. The Cambodian People's Party (KPK) won the 1998 elections but did not gain enough seats to form a government. Hun Sen agreed to head a coalition that included FUNCINPEC. Ranariddh was found guilty in absentia of arms smuggling but received a royal pardon and was named president of the National Assembly. Pol Pot died that year, having been sentenced to life imprisonment for his crimes the previous year.

In 2001 Prince Norodom Sirivudh became leader of the opposition FUNCINPEC party, having received a royal pardon in 1999 for a ten-year prison sentence he received in absentia for his alleged involvement in an assassination plot against Hun Sen. In the same year the east and west of the country were connected for the first time by a bridge across the Mekong River.

In 2002 Thailand agreed to extradite Sok Yoeun, a leading figure in the Cambodian Sam Rainsy Party, for alleged involvement in an assassination plot against Hun Sen. Sok Yoeun declared that the charges were part of a political attack and Amnesty International classified him as a prisoner of conscience.

In 2002 the KPK was the dominant party at the country's first multi-party local elections, although opposition groups claimed ballots were rigged. At the general elections of 2003 the KPK emerged as the single biggest party but fell short of the two-thirds majority required to form the government. Coalition talks were frosty and relations were not improved when Hun Sen removed 17 FUNCINPEC politicians from senior posts, claiming neglect of duty. The opposition FUNCINPEC and Sam Rainsy parties agreed to join a ruling coalition but not under Hun Sen. The king finally confirmed Hun Sen as head of government in July 2004, after almost a year without a properly functioning administration.

After winning Senate approval, Cambodia began talks with the UN on a tribunal to try former Khmer Rouge leaders for genocide. Negotiations were protracted and in 2003 the UN concluded that the tribunal was unlikely to function alongside Cambodia's existing judicial system, which claimed precedence over international law. The issue was further complicated by Khmer Rouge leaders transferring allegiance to the government in the years following Pol Pot's fall from power. Hun Sen himself was a soldier in the Khmer Rouge, though he denied claims that he ever held a senior position. Nevertheless, the UN-backed tribunal, run by Cambodian and international judges, finally held its first public hearing in Nov. 2007 and achieved its first conviction (of a prison commandant) in July 2010. Preliminary hearings against three senior Khmer Rouge figures began in June 2011 and their trial started in Nov. that year. One of the three, Ieng Sary, died in March 2013, leaving only Nuon Chea and Khieu Samphan awaiting judgment. In Aug. 2014 they were convicted and received life sentences for crimes against humanity.

In 2003 a Thai celebrity suggested that the religious complex of Angkor Wat had been stolen by Cambodia from Thailand. The comments caused outrage in Cambodia and led to a siege of the Thai embassy in Phnom Penh. Observers accused Hun Sen of aggravating the situation. In 2004 Hun Sen threatened to boycott a joint Asian-European summit if, as the European Union was requesting, Myanmar was banned from attending. In the same year, with economic growth and foreign investment falling, Hun Sen outlined proposals to cut business costs, reduce red tape and counter corruption. He also promised to increase civil service salaries. However, he did not offer a timeframe for these developments. Entry into the WTO was ratified in Aug. 2004 after long delays.

Other significant problems confronting Hun Sen's government have included deforestation and the spread of AIDS. In Aug.–Sept. 2006 he pushed two controversial measures through the National Assembly. The first curtailed the right of parliamentarians to speak openly without fear of prosecution and the second imposed a ban on adultery.

Following public criticism by Hun Sen, Prince Ranariddh resigned as president of the National Assembly and in March 2007 was sentenced in absentia to 18 months imprisonment for breach of trust over the sale of the FUNCINPEC headquarters.

On 26 Sept. 2008 Hun Sen was reappointed prime minister after the KPK had secured over two-thirds of the seats in the National Assembly in elections in July that were criticized by EU monitors as falling short of international standards.

In Oct. 2008 tensions between Cambodia and Thailand worsened as border skirmishes resulted in the deaths of two Cambodian soldiers in a disputed area around Preah Vihear, an ancient temple and (since July 2008) a UNESCO World Heritage site. Exchanges of gunfire on the border were reported in the spring of 2009 and again in Feb. and April 2011 before the International Court of Justice (ICJ) ruled in July that year that both sides should withdraw their forces from the area. In Nov. 2013 the ICJ ruled in favour of Cambodian sovereignty in the dispute, which was welcomed by Hun Sen.

In Sept. 2010 exiled opposition leader Sam Rainsy was sentenced in absentia to ten years imprisonment by a Cambodian court for disinformation and manipulating public documents. However, he was subsequently pardoned and returned from exile in July 2013. National Assembly elections that month were again won by the KPK amid opposition allegations of voting irregularities. Sam Rainsy's Cambodia National Rescue Party (CNRP) made significant gains in the poll but refused to take up its parliamentary seats and maintained a year-long protest campaign against the results until July 2014 when Hun Sen agreed to electoral reforms. Political tensions remained despite the apparent truce and were exacerbated by the removal of the deputy opposition leader, Kem Sokha, as vice president of the National Assembly in Oct. 2015 in a vote that was boycotted by the CNRP. In Nov. 2015 an arrest warrant was issued against Sam Rainsy over a conviction for defamation in 2011. Earlier, in July, several opposition activists were imprisoned on insurrection charges.

DEFENCE

The King is C.-in-C. of the Royal Cambodian Armed Forces (RCAF). Conscription has not been implemented since 1993 although it is authorized. Defence expenditure in 2013 totalled US$394m. (US$26 per capita), representing 2.5% of GDP.

Army

Strength in 2011 was an estimated 75,000. There are also provincial forces numbering some 45,000 and paramilitary local forces organized at village level.

Navy

Naval personnel in 2011 totalled about 2,800 including a naval infantry of 1,500. In 2011 the Navy had 11 patrol boats.

Air Force

Aviation operations were resumed in 1988, initially under the aegis of the Army and since 1993 as part of the RCAF. Personnel (2011), 1,500. There were 24 combat-capable aircraft in 2011.

ECONOMY

Agriculture accounted for 36% of GDP in 2009, industry 23% and services 41%.

Overview

The economy was devastated by the Khmer Rouge regime of 1975–79, when trade collapsed to an agrarian barter system, the industrial base was destroyed, and the banking system and domestic currency abolished. Economic recovery remained slow until the Paris Peace Accord of 1991 brought about a ceasefire in the civil war. At the time of signing, Cambodia faced rapid inflation, exchange rate depreciation, monetary instability, negative real interest rates and high fiscal deficits. Since the Accord, and with the aid of the World Bank and the IMF, the government has tried to restore monetary stability and improve fiscal performance. Privatization of state-owned enterprises was completed by 1996 and the trade regime was liberalized as Cambodia joined the Association of South East Asian Nations and prepared for accession to the World Trade Organization.

Annual economic growth averaged over 9% between 2000 and 2007, thanks to agricultural expansion, buoyant exports and a healthy urban economy underpinned by the construction, services and financial sectors.

However, the global financial crisis resulted in minimal growth in 2009 before the economy rebounded in 2010. In 2012 growth of 7.3% was recorded, thanks to a surge in tourism alongside further agricultural expansion and private investment. Exports also played a key role in this resurgence, particularly the garments sector that benefitted from preferential market access to the European Union. Nonetheless, a narrow export base means that Cambodia is exposed to fluctuations in global demand.

Per capita income increased from US$783 in 2010 to US$1,008 in 2013. Although Cambodia remains among the poorest countries outside of Africa, the poverty rate has declined from 47% in 1993 to 20.5% in 2013. About 90% of the poor reside in the countryside. To secure long-term prosperity the government must address high levels of corruption and income inequality, as well as continue to develop the private sector and manage the country's natural resources.

Currency

The unit of currency is the riel (KHR) of 100 sen. In July 2005 total money supply was 1,222.4bn. riels, foreign exchange reserves were US$937m. and gold reserves 400,000 troy oz. Following inflation of 25.0% in 2008 there was deflation of 0.7% in 2009. More recently there was inflation of 3.0% in 2013 and 3.9% in 2014.

Budget

In 2010 revenues were 7,312bn. riels and expenditures 9,500bn. riels. Tax revenue accounted for 67.6% of revenues in 2010; current expenditure accounted for 52.3% of expenditures.

VAT is 10%.

Performance

The economy grew by 7.3% in 2012, 7.4% in 2013 and 7.0% in 2014. Total GDP in 2014 was US$16.8bn.

Banking and Finance

Banking and money were banned during the rule of the Khmer Rouge from 1975–79. The National Bank of Cambodia (Governor, Chea Chanto), which was founded in 1954 and re-established in Oct. 1979 after the fall of the Khmer Rouge, is the bank of issue. In 2011 there were 31 commercial banks of which 22 were local incorporated banks and nine were foreign bank branches, seven specialized banks and 32 licensed microfinance institutions. The largest banks in Dec. 2011 were Aclada Bank (with assets of US$1.49bn.), Canadia Bank (assets of US$1.30bn.) and Cambodian Public Bank (assets of US$1.01bn.). The largest specialized bank is the Rural Development Bank.

In 2010 external debt totalled US$4,676m., equivalent to 43.4% of GNI.

A stock exchange opened in Phnom Penh in July 2011 but only started trading in April 2012.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2011 were the equivalent of 0.3 tonnes per capita in 2011.

The Climate Change and Environmental Risk Atlas 2014 produced by Maplecroft, a risk analytics company, ranked Cambodia as the country facing the eighth highest economic and social risk from climate change by 2025.

Electricity

Installed capacity was 570,000 kW in 2011. Production (2011) was 1,053m. kWh; consumption per capita was 185 kWh.

Oil and Gas

Oil was discovered in 2005 off the coast of Cambodia. The reserves are estimated to total at least 400m. bbls. Construction of the first oil refinery was scheduled to begin in 2013 but work on the project was postponed. Construction has started in the meantime although there is no confirmed completion date.

Minerals

There are phosphates and high-grade iron-ore deposits. Some small-scale gold panning and gem (mainly zircon) mining is carried out.

Agriculture

The majority of the population is engaged in agriculture, fishing or forestry. Before the spread of war in the 1970s the high productivity provided for a low but well-fed standard of living for the peasant farmers, the majority of whom owned the land they worked before agriculture was collectivized. A relatively small proportion of the food production entered the cash economy. The war and unwise pricing policies led to a disastrous reduction in production, so much so that the country became a net importer of rice. Private ownership of land was restored by the 1989 constitution. In 2007 there were around 3.80m. ha. of arable land and 155,000 ha. of permanent crops.

A crop of 3.82m. tonnes of rice was produced in 2002. Production of other crops, 2002 (in 1,000 tonnes): sugarcane, 209; maize, 149; bananas, 146; cassava, 122; coconuts, 70; oranges, 63.

Livestock (2002): cattle, 2.92m.; pigs, 2.11m.; buffaloes, 626,000; poultry, 17m.

Livestock products, 2003 (in 1,000 tonnes): pork and pork products, 105; beef and veal, 54; poultry meat, 28; buffalo meat, 13; eggs, 17; milk, 20.

Forestry

Some 10.09m. ha., or 57% of the land area, were covered by forests in 2010. Timber exports have been banned since Dec. 1996. There are substantial reserves of pitch pine. Rubber plantations are a valuable asset with production at around 40,000 tonnes per year. Timber production in 2011 was 8.47m. cu. metres.

Fisheries

2010 catch was approximately 490,000 tonnes (mainly from inland waters).

INDUSTRY

Some development of industry had taken place before the spread of open warfare in 1970, but little was in operation by the 1990s except for rubber processing, sea-food processing, jute sack making and cigarette manufacture. Garment manufacture, rice milling, wood and wood products, rubber, cement and textiles production are the main industries. In the private sector small family concerns produce a wide range of goods. Light industry is generally better developed than heavy industry.

Labour

The labour force in 2013 was 8,446,300 (6,311,500 in 2003). 84.9% of the population aged 15–64 was economically active in 2013. In the same year 0.3% of the population was unemployed.

Cambodia had 0.11m. people living in slavery according to the Walk Free Foundation's 2013 Global Slavery Index.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Foreign investment has been encouraged since 1989. Legislation of 1994 exempts profits from taxation for eight years, removes duties from various raw and semi-finished materials and offers tax incentives to investors in tourism, energy, the infrastructure and labour-intensive industries.

Imports and Exports

In 2010 imports (c.i.f.) totalled US$4,902.5m. (US$3,905.7m. in 2009); exports (f.o.b.), US$5,590.1m. (US$4,992.0m. in 2009).

Main imports are: textile yarn, fabrics and finished articles; road vehicles; specialized machinery; gold. Main exports are: textile yarn, fabrics and finished articles; printed matter; specialized machinery; road vehicles.

Major import sources, 2010: China (24.2%), Thailand (14.1%) and Hong Kong (11.3%). Principal export destinations, 2010: USA (34.1%), Hong Kong (24.8%) and Singapore (7.7%).

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

There were 8,257 km of roads in 2004, of which 6.3% were paved. In 2005 there were 195,300 passenger cars in use plus 3,200 buses and coaches, 32,100 lorries and vans and 566,300 motorcycles and mopeds. There were 1,545 fatalities in road accidents in 2007.

Rail

All official rail services had been suspended by 2009 owing to the dilapidated state of the 600 km metre gauge network. However, a rehabilitation project began in 2006 and freight services were resumed in Oct. 2010 between Phnom Penh and Touk Meas. Some passenger services have been restored and plans are under way to build a 255 km extension to link the country to Vietnam.

Civil Aviation

Phnom Penh International Airport handled 1,587,986 passengers in 2009 and Siem Reap International Airport 1,255,166. The flag carrier is Cambodia Angkor Air (51% state-owned), which began services in 2009. The former national airline, Royal Air Cambodge, had gone bankrupt in 2001.

Shipping

There is an ocean port at Kompong Som; the port of Phnom Penh can be reached by the Mekong (through Vietnam) by ships of between 3,000 and 4,000 tonnes. In Jan. 2009 there were 730 ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 1,966,000 GT.

Telecommunications

Cambodia had 20,451,982 mobile phone subscribers in 2014 (1,327.3 for every 1,000 persons) but only 361,056 main (fixed) telephone lines (23.4 per 1,000 population). 9% of the population were internet users in 2014.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The population in penal institutions in Nov. 2012 was 15,397 (106 per 100,000 of national population). The International Centre for Prison Studies estimated in 2014 that 63.6% of prisoners had yet to receive a trial. The death penalty was abolished in 1989. In 2015 the World Justice Project Rule of Law Index, which provides data on how the rule of law is experienced by the general public across eight categories, ranked Cambodia last of 102 countries for civil justice and 98th for criminal justice.

Education

In 2004–05 there were 6,990 schools of which 6,180 were primary, 578 junior high and 232 senior high. There were 111,090 pupils in pre-primary schools and 4,415 teaching staff in 2007; 2,479,644 pupils and 48,736 teaching staff in primary schools; and in general secondary education 30,258 teaching staff for 875,120 pupils. There were 92,340 students in tertiary education in 2007 and (2006) 3,261 academic staff. Adult literacy in 2008 was 78%.

In 2007 public expenditure on education came to 1.7% of GNI and 12.4% of total government spending.

Health

In 2011 there were 2,391 doctors (including 91 specialists), 8,433 nurses and 3,748 midwives. 42% of the population did not have access to safe drinking water in 2014.

RELIGION

The constitution of 1989 reinstated Buddhism as the state religion; it had an estimated 13.69m. adherents in 2010 according to the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life. There are small Muslim, folk religionist and Protestant minorities.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

There are two UNESCO world heritage sites in Cambodia: Angkor (inscribed in 1992), an archaeological park that was the site of various capitals of the Khmer Empire from the 9th to the 15th centuries containing the Temple of Angkor Wat and the Bayon Temple at Angkor Thom; and the Temple of Preah Vihear (2008), an outstanding example of Khmer architecture that dates back to the first half of the 11th century and is composed of a series of sanctuaries linked by a system of pavements and staircases.

Press

There were 22 paid-for daily newspapers in 2008 with a combined circulation of 60,000, including the English-language Cambodia Daily.

Tourism

In 2010 there were 2,399,000 international tourist arrivals (excluding same-day visitors), up from 2,046,000 in 2009 and 2,001,000 in 2008.

CAMEROON

The Duala acted as middlemen between European explorers and tribes in the interior, trading ivory, palm oil and slaves. The port of Bimbia and its surrounding area became the focal point for the slave trade, with hundreds of thousands shipped to plantations in São Tomé e Príncipe, Equatorial Guinea, the Caribbean and the Americas.

By the early 1800s much of Cameroon's coastal trade was under British control, although its influence inland remained limited. The north was increasingly Islamic following the arrival of Fulani settlers from the northwest, led by Uthman Dan Fodio. In 1858 an English naval engineer and missionary, Alfred Saker, founded the colony of Victoria (Limbe), which relied on exports of gold, ivory and palm oil after the demise of the slave trade.

British colonial operations centred on Lagos were supplanted by German influence in 1884 when a treaty between the Duala and Gustav Nachtigal (on behalf of Kaiser Wilhelm) created the protectorate of Kamerun. The port of Kamerunstadt (Douala) was developed and roads, bridges and settlements (including the future capital, Yaoundé) were established inland using forced labour.

In 1915 a combined force of British, French and Belgian troops defeated the German administrators. After the First World War the territory was governed briefly by Britain and France, before partition. The British sector encompassed two small provinces along the border with Nigeria (the North and South Cameroons), administered from Lagos, while the French sector (Cameroun) aligned with most of the former German colony. Both areas became mandated territories under the League of Nations in 1922 and, after the Second World War, Trust Territories of the newly established UN.

In French Cameroun the Union des Populations du Cameroun (UPC) was founded in 1948 to call for independence and 'reunification' with British Cameroons. In 1955 uprisings organized by the UPC broke out in several towns. From 1958 more moderate parties, such as l'Union Camerounaise of Ahmadou Ahidjo, were permitted to work towards independence within the French administration. This was achieved on 1 Jan. 1960 when Ahidjo was inaugurated as president. In a referendum on 11 Feb. 1961 British Southern Cameroons voted to join the new federal republic of Cameroon, while British Northern Cameroons chose to join Nigeria.

Re-elected in 1965 and 1970, Ahidjo became increasingly authoritarian and by 1976 opposition parties were outlawed. He stepped down, apparently for health reasons, in 1982, to be succeeded by Paul Biya, a Christian from the south. Cameroon faced economic hardship in the late 1980s linked to the depletion of oil reserves, sparking demands for democracy.

Biya narrowly won the first multi-party elections in Oct. 1992. Tensions with Nigeria over the potentially oil-rich Bakassi peninsula erupted in 1994, with flare-ups continuing until Nigeria retracted its claims in Aug. 2008. Biya won presidential elections in 1997, 2004 and 2011, although opposition parties rejected the results on each occasion amid claims of widespread fraud.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Cameroon is bounded in the west by the Gulf of Guinea, northwest by Nigeria, east by Chad and the Central African Republic, and south by the Republic of the Congo, Gabon and Equatorial Guinea. The total area is 475,650 sq. km (land area, 466,050 sq. km). On 29 March 1994 Cameroon asked the International Court of Justice to confirm its sovereignty over the oil-rich Bakassi peninsula, occupied by Nigerian troops.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Neolithic settlements at Shum Laka and Abeke date from between 5000 and 4000 BC. From around 500 BC Bantu-speaking farmers originating in central Cameroon began migrating to the east and south and, over the next 2,000 years, dispersed across most of the African continent. The Sao civilization developed in the far north, close to Lake Chad, from around 600 AD. It developed ties with the Kanem kingdom, which for a time controlled trans-Saharan trade.

By the 14th century Sao was reduced to small, scattered settlements under the control of the Kotoko state, itself comprised of several kingdoms across northern Cameroon including the Makari, Mara and Kousseri. The Duala, mainly located in the coastal lowlands, made contact with Portuguese, Dutch and British mariners during the 15th and 16th centuries, with Fernando Gomes reaching the Wouri river in 1472 and naming it Rio de Cameroes (or 'shrimp river').

The dispute continued for eight years, with Equatorial Guinea also subsequently becoming involved. In Oct. 2002 the International Court of Justice rejected Nigeria's claims and awarded the peninsula to Cameroon. All parties agreed to accept the Court's judgment. At the 2005 census the population was 17,463,836 (50.6% female); Jan. 2010 estimate, 19,406,100, giving a density of 41.6 per sq. km.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 23.34m.

In 2011, 59.2% of the population were urban.

The areas, estimated populations and chief towns of the ten provinces are:

Province	Sq. km	Census 2005	Chief town	Census 2005
Adamaoua	63,701	884,289	Ngaoundéré	152,698
Centre	68,953	3,098,044	Yaoundé	1,817,524
Est	109,002	771,755	Bertoua	88,462
Extrême-Nord	34,263	3,111,792	Maroua	201,371
Littoral	20,248	2,510,263	Douala	1,906,962
Nord (Bénoué)	66,090	1,687,959	Garoua	235,996
Nord-Ouest	17,300	1,728,953	Bamenda	269,530
Ouest	13,892	1,720,047	Bafoussam	239,287
Sud	47,191	634,655	Ebolowa	64,980
Sud-Ouest	25,410	1,316,079	Buéa	90,090

The population is composed of Sudanic-speaking people in the north (Fulani, Sao and others) and Bantu-speaking groups, mainly Bamileke, Beti, Bulu, Tikar, Bassa and Duala, in the rest of the country. The official languages are French and English.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2008 estimates: births, 704,000; deaths, 271,000. Rates, 2008 estimates (per 1,000 population): birth, 36.9; death, 14.2. Annual population growth rate, 2000–08, 2.3%. Infant mortality, 2010, 84 per 1,000 live births. Life expectancy in 2013: males, 53.9 years; females, 56.2. Fertility rate, 2008, 4.6 children per woman.

CLIMATE

An equatorial climate, with high temperatures and plentiful rain, especially from March to June and Sept. to Nov. Further inland, rain occurs at all seasons. Yaoundé, Jan. 76°F (24.4°C), July 73°F (22.8°C). Annual rainfall 62" (1,555 mm). Douala, Jan. 79°F (26.1°C), July 75°F (23.9°C). Annual rainfall 160" (4,026 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

The constitution was approved by referendum on 20 May 1972 and became effective on 2 June; it was amended in Jan. 1996. It provides for a President as head of state and government. The President is directly elected for a seven-year term, and there is a Council of Ministers whose members must not be members of parliament. A constitutional bill removing a two-term presidential limit was adopted in April 2008.

The National Assembly, elected by universal adult suffrage for five years, consists of 180 representatives. After 1966 the sole legal party was the Cameroon People's Democratic Movement (RDPC), but in Dec. 1990 the National Assembly legalized opposition parties. The 1996 amendment to the constitution established a 100-seat Senate, although elections to it were not held until April 2013.

National Anthem

'O Cameroon, Thou Cradle of our Fathers'/'O Cameroun, Berceau de nos Ancêtres'; words by R. Afame, tune by R. Afame, S. Bamba and M. Nko'o.

GOVERNMENT CHRONOLOGY

1982– UNC, RDPC Paul Biya

RECENT ELECTIONS

Presidential elections were held on 9 Oct. 2011. Incumbent Paul Biya was re-elected with 78.0% of the votes ahead of John Fru Ndi with 10.7% and Garga Haman Adji with 3.2%. There were 20 other candidates. Turnout was 68.3%.

National Assembly elections were held on 30 Sept. 2013. The ruling Cameroon People's Democratic Movement (Rassemblement Démocratique du Peuple Camerounais; RDPC) won 148 seats, Social-Democratic Front (Front Social-Démocratique; SDF) 18, National Union for Democracy and Progress (Union Nationale pour la Démocratie et le Progrès; UNDP) 5, Democratic Union of Cameroon (Union Démocratique du Cameroun; UDC) 4, Union of the Peoples of Cameroon (Union des Populations du Cameroun; UPC) 3, Cameroon Renaissance Movement (Mouvement Pour la Renaissance du Cameroun; MRC) 1 and Movement for the Defence of the Republic (Mouvement pour la Défense de la République; MDR) 1.

First elections to the Senate took place on 14 April 2013. The Cameroon People's Democratic Movement won 56 seats of the 70 contested with 73% of the vote; the opposition Social-Democratic Front obtained 14 seats with 17%. The remaining 30 seats are appointed.

CURRENT GOVERNMENT

President: Paul Biya; b. 1933 (RDPC; assumed office 6 Nov. 1982, elected 14 Jan. 1984, re-elected 24 April 1988, also 10 Oct. 1992, 12 Oct. 1997, 11 Oct. 2004 and once again re-elected 9 Oct. 2011).

In March 2016 the cabinet comprised:

Prime Minister: Philémon Yang; b. 1947 (RDPC; in office since 30 June 2009).

Deputy Prime Minister and Minister Delegate at the Presidency in Charge of Relations with the Assembly: Amadou Ali.

CURRENT LEADERS

Paul Biya

Position

President

Introduction

President since 1982, Biya has kept tight political control over Cameroon. Despite some concessions to democracy, his regime has been dogged by allegations of widespread corruption. His international profile has been low, although he has maintained close relations with France, the former colonial ruler.

Early Life

Born on 13 Feb. 1933 in Mvomeka'a, Sud Province, Biya attended a Catholic mission school and, in the early 1950s, a seminary. He specialized in philosophy at the Lycée Général Leclerc in Yaoundé before studying law at the Université de la Sorbonne, Paris. His postgraduate studies included a diploma in public law from the Institut des Hautes Etudes d'Outre-Mer.

Biya's political career began in 1962 as chargé de mission at the Presidency of the Republic. He became secretary-general of the ministry of national education in 1965. In 1970 he was made a minister of state, serving as secretary-general to the Presidency. On 30 June 1975 Biya was appointed prime minister by President Ahmadou Ahidjo. An amendment to the constitution in 1979, designating the prime minister as successor to the president in case of vacancy, allowed Biya to assume the presidency on 6 Nov. 1982 following Ahidjo's resignation.

Career in Office

The succession, although constitutional, was not peaceful. In Aug. 1983 Biya forced Ahidjo into exile, and then consolidated his position by replacing Ahidjo's northern supporters with fellow southerners. Direct presidential elections by universal suffrage were instituted in Jan. 1984, which Biya won. Despite his initial democratic and modernizing aspirations, freedom of speech and the press were soon curtailed, largely as a result of problems with the old regime. The Republican Guard revolt of April 1984 provoked Biya to reform the sole political party, the Cameroon National Union (UNC), which was seen as Ahidjo's personal support base. Transformed into the Cameroon People's Democratic Movement (RDPC; Rassemblement Démocratique du Peuple Camerounais), it elected Biya as party president in March 1985.

In the early 1980s Cameroon's economy suffered from a downturn in the commodity export trade. Biya only admitted the severity of the economic crisis in 1987, submitting the national economy to scrutiny and assistance from the World Bank. Despite popular dissatisfaction, he was re-elected in April 1988.

Opposition political parties were legalized in Dec. 1990, although the delay in organizing multi-party elections and a ban on opposition party meetings caused rioting and a general strike in 1991. Biya relented in Oct. promising elections, which took place in March 1992. The RDPC was forced into coalition with the Movement for the Defence of the Republic (MDR; Mouvement pour la Défense de la République) to attain a majority in the National Assembly. Biya himself was re-elected in Oct. by a narrow majority.

Conflict over the Bakassi Peninsula, on the Nigerian border, and its oil and fishing rights began when the Nigerian leader Gen. Abacha sent troops to claim the area. Biya responded with military force and appealed to the International Court of Justice, which ruled in Cameroon's favour in 2002 (with Cameroon eventually taking control of the territory in Aug. 2008).

The presidential elections of Oct. 1997 were boycotted by the three main opposition parties after a year of popular unrest. The removal of elected mayors after the 1996 municipal elections and the Supreme Court's controversial rulings concerning the May 1997 National Assembly elections were two of the more prominent causes of the boycott. Biya was re-elected with a large majority of the vote.

By that time, Biya's presidency was marked by anglophone separatist unrest and allegations of corruption and human rights abuses. The secessionist Southern Cameroon National Council (SCNC), claiming to represent the country's 5m. English speakers, was targeted by the government and its leaders charged with treason. In 1998 Transparency International, the Berlin-based anti-corruption organization, classed Cameroon as the most corrupt country of the 85 covered by their survey. Amnesty International meanwhile claimed that extrajudicial executions and politically-motivated detentions were continuing despite international pressure.

In parliamentary elections in 2002 the RDPC won 149 of the 180 seats in National Assembly. On 11 Oct. 2004 Biya was re-elected for a further presidential term with over 70% of the vote, although opposition parties alleged widespread fraud and international observers said the poll lacked credibility in key areas. By 2006 new measures against corruption were in place, including a law requiring the declaration of assets by public officials and the establishment of an anti-corruption commission. In the 2007 legislative elections the RDPC retained its overwhelming majority and in April 2008 parliament approved a controversial constitutional amendment enabling Biya to run for a third term of office. He again secured re-election in Oct. 2011 by a landslide margin, claiming 78% of the vote. In Nov. 2012 Biya celebrated 30 years in executive power and in Sept. 2013 the RDPC maintained its dominance in National Assembly elections.

Terrorist attacks in the north of the country by Boko Haram, an Islamist extremist group operating mainly in Nigeria, escalated in 2015, threatening Cameroon's security and political stability and undermining its trade and tourism industry.

DEFENCE

The President of the Republic is C.-in-C. of the armed forces. Defence expenditure totalled US$393m. in 2013 (US$19 per capita), representing 1.4% of GDP.

Army

Total strength (2011) is 12,500 and includes a Presidential Guard; there is a Gendarmerie 9,000 strong.

Navy

Personnel in 2011 numbered about 1,300. There are bases at Douala (HQ), Limbe and Kribi.

Air Force

Aircraft availability is low because of funding problems. Personnel (2011), 300–400. There were nine combat-capable aircraft in 2011.

ECONOMY

In 2009 agriculture, fishing and forestry contributed 21.6% of GDP; followed by trade and hotels, 19.4%; manufacturing, 15.0%; mining, 7.3%; finance and real estate, 6.9%; services, 6.7%.

Overview

Cameroon became an oil exporter in 1977, with production peaking in 1985. The country came to be regarded as an African success story in the early 1980s. However, an economic reversal was triggered in 1985 by a sharp fall in prices for primary products including cocoa and oil. Underlying the external trade shock were weak economic and political structures, a fiscal crisis and an overvalued exchange rate. In 1994 the currency was devalued.

A programme of privatization began in 1995, taking in the export, infrastructure, banking and insurance sectors. In 1996, supported by the IMF and World Bank, the government adopted structural reforms and macroeconomic policies encompassing forestry, banking, transportation and privatization of public utilities. Despite these reforms, corruption and poor resource management remain.

The Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative and the Multilateral Debt Relief Initiative helped reduce the country's debt burden from 51.8% of GDP in 2005 to 9.5% in 2008. However, the debt level subsequently increased, standing at 13.7% in 2011, and was projected to rise further. Consequently, the World Bank increased Cameroon's external debt distress rating (indicating the likelihood of debt repayment problems) from low to moderate in 2014.

Average annual real GDP growth was 3% over the period 2007–11. Between 2011 and 2014 it was expanding at a rate above 4% each year. The inflation rate fluctuated during the 1990s and early 2000s, but was contained at around 2% between 2010 and 2013. High economic growth, however, has not been reflected in improved social indicators. Although declining since 1950s, the poverty rate remains close to 40%. Moreover, Cameroon's Human Development Index ranking remains among the lowest in the world.

A further downturn in the fortunes of the eurozone, Cameroon's main trading partner, would threaten to hold back economic activity. After a sharp decline in the late 1990s, growth of imports and exports picked up in the middle of the next decade, only to fall again in the aftermath of the global financial and eurozone debt crises from 2008. Although import and export growth recovered from 2011–13, Cameroon's economy remains overly dependent on its trading partners' economic health.

Currency

The unit of currency is the franc CFA (XAF) with a parity of 655.957 francs CFA to one euro. In June 2005 foreign exchange reserves were US$759m. (negligible in 1997), total money supply was 757,006m. francs CFA and gold reserves were 30,000 troy oz. Inflation was 2.1% in 2013 and 1.9% in 2014.

Budget

The financial year used to end on 30 June but since 2003 has been the calendar year. In 2013 revenues totalled 2,727bn. francs CFA and expenditures 3,223bn. francs CFA.

VAT is 19.25%.

Performance

Real GDP growth was 4.6% in 2012, 5.6% in 2013 and 5.7% in 2014. Total GDP in 2014 was US$32.1bn.

Banking and Finance

The Banque des États de l'Afrique Centrale (Governor, Lucas Abaga Nchama) is the sole bank of issue. The largest commercial banks are Afriland First Bank, Banque internationale du Cameroun pour l'épargne et le crédit (BICEC) and Société générale des banques au Cameroun (SGBC).

External debt totalled US$2,964m. in 2010 and represented 13.5% of GNI.

The Douala Stock Exchange was opened in 2003.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Cameroon's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2011 were the equivalent of 0.4 tonnes per capita.

Electricity

Installed capacity in 2011 was 1.0m. kW. Total production in 2011 was 6.00bn. kWh (73% hydro-electric), with consumption per capita 283 kWh. Cameroon is rich in hydro-electric potential, of which only a very small proportion is currently exploited.

Oil and Gas

Oil production (2009), mainly from Kole oilfield, was 27m. bbls. In 2011 there were proven reserves of 200m. bbls. In June 2000 the World Bank approved funding for a 1,000-km US$4bn. pipeline to run from 300 new oil wells in Chad through Cameroon to the Atlantic Ocean. Oil started pumping in July 2003.

Minerals

Tin ore and limestone are extracted. There are deposits of aluminium, bauxite, uranium, nickel, gold, cassiterite and kyanite. Aluminium production in 2008 was 89,700 tonnes.

Agriculture

In 2002, 57.1% of the economically active population were engaged in agriculture. In 2001 there were 5.96m. ha. of arable land and 1.20m. ha. of permanent crops. 33,000 ha. were irrigated in 2001. There were 500 tractors in 2001. Main agricultural crops (with 2003 production in 1,000 tonnes): cassava, 2,619; sugarcane, 1,350; plantains, 1,200; maize, 1,040; bananas, 689; tomatoes, 419; sorghum, 331; yams, 311; groundnuts, 295; seed cotton, 244; sweet potatoes, 234; millet, 196; dry beans, 182; potatoes, 162; palm oil, 144; cocoa beans, 125; pumpkins and squash, 122; cucumbers and gherkins, 115.

Livestock (2003): 5.9m. cattle; 4.4m. goats; 3.8m. sheep; 1.3m. pigs; 24m. chickens.

Livestock products (in 1,000 tonnes), 2003: beef and veal, 95; lamb and mutton, 16; pork and pork products, 16; goat meat, 15; poultry meat, 29; cow's milk, 125; goat's milk, 42; sheep's milk, 17; eggs, 13.

Forestry

Forests covered 19.92m. ha. in 2010 (42% of the total land area), ranging from tropical rain forests in the south (producing hardwoods such as mahogany, ebony and sapele) to semi-deciduous forests in the centre and wooded savannah in the north. Timber production in 2011 was 12.17m. cu. metres.

Fisheries

In 2012 the total catch was an estimated 140,000 tonnes (mainly from inland waters).

INDUSTRY

Manufacturing is largely small-scale. Output in 1,000 tonnes (2007 unless otherwise indicated): cement (2005), 1,026; distillate fuel oil, 694; kerosene, 404; petrol, 390; residual fuel oil, 387. In 2005, 444m. litres of beer and 1.8bn. cigarettes were produced. There are also factories producing shoes, soap, oil and food products.

Labour

The total labour force numbered 8,906,000 in 2013. 70% of employed persons work in agriculture.

Cameroon had 0.15m. people living in slavery according to the Walk Free Foundation's 2013 Global Slavery Index.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

Merchandise imports in 2013 totalled US$6,657.2m. (US$6,515.1m. in 2012) and merchandise exports US$4,520.9m. (US$4,275.0m. in 2012).

Principal imports in 2013 were mineral fuels and lubricants (23.5%) followed by machinery and transport equipment, and food, animals and beverages; main exports in 2013 were mineral fuels and lubricants (55.9%), food, animals and beverages, and crude materials and animal and vegetable oils.

The leading import supplier in 2010 was Nigeria (18.2%), followed by France and China; the leading export destination in 2010 was Spain (18.5%), followed by the Netherlands and Italy.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

There were about 51,300 km of roads in 2004, of which 8.4% were paved. In 2005 there were 174,900 passenger cars, 56,200 lorries and vans, 15,600 buses and coaches, and 65,600 motorcycles and mopeds. In 2007 there were 990 deaths in road accidents.

Rail

Cameroon Railways (Camrail), 977 km in 2011, link Douala with Nkongsamba and Ngaoundéré, with branches from M'Banga to Kumba and Makak to M'Balmayo. In 2011 railways carried 1.5m. passengers and 1.6m. tonnes of freight.

Civil Aviation

There are 45 airports including three international airports at Douala, Garoua and Yaoundé (Nsimalen). In 2011 Douala handled 746,092 passengers. In 2003 Cameroon Airlines (Camair), the then national carrier, operated on domestic routes and provided international services to Abidjan, Bamako, Bangui, Brazzaville, Bujumbura, Cotonou, Dakar, Johannesburg, Kigali, Kinshasa, Lagos, Libreville, Malabo, N'Djaména, Paris and Pointe-Noire. It ceased operations in March 2008. In 2003 scheduled airline traffic of Cameroon-based carriers flew 9m. km, carrying 315,000 passengers (225,000 on international flights).

Shipping

In Jan. 2009 there were four vessels of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 2,000 GT. The main port is Douala; other ports are Bota, Campo, Garoua (only navigable in the rainy season), Kribi and Limbo-Tiko.

Telecommunications

There were 496,500 fixed telephone lines in 2010 (25.3 per 1,000 inhabitants) and mobile phone subscribers numbered 8.16m. In 2010 there were 40.0 internet users per 1,000 inhabitants. In the same year 1.9% of households had internet access at home. In June 2012 there were 494,000 Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The Supreme Court sits at Yaoundé, as does the High Court of Justice (consisting of nine titular judges and six surrogates all appointed by the National Assembly). There are magistrates' courts situated in the provinces.

The population in penal institutions in Dec. 2011 was 24,000 (119 per 100,000 of national population). The International Centre for Prison Studies estimated in 2014 that 62.2% of prisoners had yet to receive a trial. Cameroon was ranked 91st of 102 countries for criminal justice and 96th for civil justice in the 2015 World Justice Project Rule of Law Index, which provides data on how the rule of law is experienced by the general public across eight categories.

Education

In 2007 there were 217,284 children and 12,349 teaching staff at pre-primary schools. There were 3,120,357 pupils in primary schools in 2007 with 70,230 teaching staff and 750,777 secondary level pupils with (2006) 43,193 teaching staff.

In 2007, 132,134 students were in tertiary education with 3,040 academic staff. There were six public universities and five private universities in 2007. The adult literacy rate in 2008 was 76%.

Public expenditure on education came to 3.9% of GNI in 2007 and 17.0% of total government spending.

Health

In 2004 there were 3,124 physicians, 147 dentists, 26,042 nurses and 700 pharmacists. There were 15 hospital beds per 10,000 population in 2006.

RELIGION

In 2010 there were an estimated 7.6m. Roman Catholics, 6.2m. Protestants, 3.6m. Muslims and 0.7m. folk religionists according to the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life. A further 1.1m. people had no religious affiliation. In Feb. 2016 there was one cardinal.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

The Dja Faunal Reserve was inscribed on the UNESCO World Heritage List in 1987. Surrounded by the Dja River, it is one of Africa's largest rainforests. Sangha Trinational, a transboundary conservation complex situated in Cameroon, Central African Republic and the Republic of the Congo, was added to the UNESCO World Heritage List in 2012. The site consists of three contiguous national parks totalling around 750,000 ha. Much of it is unaffected by human activity and features a wide range of humid tropical forest ecosystems with rich flora and fauna.

Press

In 2008 there was one national government-owned daily newspaper with a circulation of 25,000, four privately-owned dailies and about 200 other privately owned-newspapers that appeared at irregular intervals.

Tourism

In 2010 there were 573,000 non-resident visitors (498,000 in 2009). Receipts from tourism totalled US$171m. in 2010.

Festivals

The Cameroon National Festival takes place on 20 May. The Ngonda festival in Douala takes place over ten days ending on the first Sunday of Dec. and involves water ceremonies of the jengu cult.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

The first habitation in Canada dates from the last stages of the Pleistocene Ice Age up to 30,000 years ago. Tribes from Central and Northern Asia crossed the Bering Strait by a land bridge in search of mammoth, bison and elk. These hunter-gatherers were the forefathers of some of Canada's native people referred to today as the First Nations. There are currently two other Aboriginal groups; the Inuit (Arctic people, formerly known as Eskimos) and the Métis. The Inuit were one of the last groups to arrive, around 1000 BC, whereas the Métis evolved from the union of natives and Europeans (mostly French).

The numerous tribes that made up the First Nations consisted of 12 major language groups with a number of sub groups with diverse spiritual beliefs, laws and customs. Around 6000 BC, during the Boreal Archaic age, the glaciers of the Canadian Shield melted and lakes were formed. The Iroquois speaking tribes, including the Mohawks and the Huron, settled along the St Lawrence River and the Great Lakes. Excellent farmers, they lived in large communities. Trade flourished but tribal wars were common. By 1000 BC the Early Woodland Culture had developed in the east. Among the eight tribes were the Algonquin, one of the largest language groups, who spread west to the Plains to hunt buffalo along with the Blackfoot, Sioux and Cree. The tribes of the Pacific Coast, such as the Tlingit and Salish, made a living from whaling and salmon fishing and enjoyed a more elaborate social structure. The peoples in the north around Yukon and Mackenzie River basins and the Inuit around the Arctic were nomadic hunters foraging for limited food in small family groups. However, one factor common to all was that they were self-governing and politically independent.

In 1963 remains of a Viking settlement were found at L'Anse aux Meadows in Newfoundland and Labrador dating from AD 1000. Trade had been established between the Norse men and the Inuit but settlements were abandoned when the Norse withdrew from Greenland. John Cabot, an Italian navigator, commissioned by King Henry VII of England in 1497, charted the coasts around Labrador and Newfoundland and found large resources of fish.

The Frenchman, Jacques Cartier, discovered the Gulf of St Lawrence in 1534 and claimed it for the French crown. In the following years fisheries were set up by the English and French with Indians bringing valuable furs, mostly beaver, to trade for iron and other goods. Realising the potential, the French sent Samuel de Champlain in 1604 to establish a fur trade and organize a settlement. This he achieved in 1605 in an area called Acadia (now New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island). The French traded with the Algonquin and Huron and supported them during fierce raids by the Iroquois. In retaliation the Iroquois later became the fur trading allies of the Dutch and then the English. Champlain, having founded Quebec City, went on to explore Huron territory, now central Ontario, and is considered by many to be the father of New France.

English–French Rivalry

In opposition to French expansion, England sent explorers such as Martin Frobisher, William Baffin and Henry Hudson to claim new territory. Colonies sprang up along the English coast and the Hudson Bay Company was formed in 1670 to gain a fur-trading monopoly over the area. Rivalry between the English and French for trade at Hudson Bay persisted throughout the 17th century. In 1713 the Treaty of Utrecht, signed by Queen Anne of England and Louis XIV, gave England complete control of the Hudson Bay territory, Acadia and Newfoundland. France, however, retained Cape Breton Island, the St Lawrence Islands and fishing rights in Newfoundland. Led by Gen. Wolfe, Britain's victory over France at the Battle of the Plains of Abraham in 1759 gained Quebec, and in 1760 Montreal too was taken. This brought an end to the Seven Years' War (1756–63) confirmed in 1763 by the Treaty of Paris by which all French Canadian territory was ceded to the British.

Relations with Indian tribes formerly allied to the French were strained and there was much resentment at the invasion of their lands by white settlers. The Royal Proclamation of 1763, administered by the Indian Department, ruled that aboriginal peoples could only sell land to crown representatives. Numerous treaties were signed over the following decades, redistributing thousands of acres of land. To soothe the British rule of a French speaking colony, the British government passed the Quebec Act in 1774 allowing French Canadians religious and linguistic freedom, the right to collect tithes and recognition of French civil law.

The attack on Montreal in 1775, during the American War of Independence, failed and Americans, loyal to Britain, sought refuge in Canada. Around 50,000 emigrated to Nova Scotia, from which New Brunswick was created in 1784. In an attempt to keep the peace the Constitutional Act of 1791 divided Quebec into Lower Canada (mostly French) and Upper Canada (mostly British from America).

Exploration continued on the Pacific Coast and into the Plains and the Northwest. Capt. James Cook charted the Pacific Coast from Vancouver to Alaska in 1778. From trading posts set up by the Hudson Bay Company (HBC) expeditions were made by traders including Samuel Hearne who, in 1771, was the first man to reach the Arctic Ocean by land. A rival company, the North West Company (NWC), was set up in Montreal in 1783. In 1793 Alexander Mackenzie, from the NWC, crossed the Rocky Mountains and reached the coast making him the first man to cross the continent. Competition between the two companies erupted into violence between new settlers and established traders including the Métis who were hired, mainly by NWC, to transport furs and supply food. To resolve the conflict the British government pressed for the merger of the two companies. This was achieved in 1821.

After the American war against Britain in Canada in 1812 (which ended in stalemate), large numbers of English, Scottish and Irish settlers swelled the English-speaking population. By 1837 radical reformers were seeking accountable government with a broader electorate. Rebellions led by William Lyon Mackenzie in Upper Canada and by Louis-Joseph Papineau in Lower Canada were quashed by government troops. Following a report by Lord Durham, who was sent from England as governor-general to conduct an enquiry, the two colonies were united under one central government in 1841 with both enjoying equal representation. Vancouver Island was acknowledged to be British by the Oregon Boundary Treaty of 1846. The 1850s saw a significant period of growth. Railways were built and industry and commerce thrived, enhanced by the Reciprocity Treaty of 1854 with the USA.

Dominion Status

However, by the 1860s ethnic clashes had made Canada almost ungovernable. The American Civil War also posed a threat. Three political leaders, George Étienne Cartier (Conservative–Canada East), George Brown (Reform Movement–Canada West) and John A. Macdonald (Conservative–Canada West) formed a coalition government in 1864. Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and the Canadas (now Ontario and Quebec) were united in 1867 as the Dominion of Canada. What became known as the Constitution Act, confirmed the language and legal rights of the French and provided for the division of power between the federal government and the provinces. John Macdonald was elected prime minister.

One of the first actions of the new federal government was to purchase the Northwest Territories from the HBC, a move that led to rebellion by white settlers and the Métis, under Louis Riel. The result was the creation of Manitoba in 1870 with political power divided between the French and English. British Columbia joined the federation in 1871 and Prince Edward Island in 1873. The former agreed to join on the promise of a federally financed railway. To make way for new settlers from 1868–77, treaties were negotiated with Indians from Ontario to the Rocky Mountains. In return for moving to reserves the Indians were to receive financial support and other concessions. They were also to be assimilated into Christian society. In the years following the government failed in its obligations and many Plains Indians suffered poverty, starvation and disease. Later legislation even outlawed traditional practices such as the Sun Dance and the potlatch (exchange of gifts). Many Métis had moved out of Manitoba and settled further west but were not awarded the same rights as those of the Aboriginal Indians. Resistance grew, and Riel, who had emigrated to Montana, was urged to lead a revolt. In response, troops were rushed in by rail and the rebellion was crushed. The importance of the railway became evident and money was found for its completion across the Rockies. The new railway was opened in 1885, the same year in which Riel was executed.

Prosperity and Reform

Following the death of Macdonald in 1891, the Liberal leader Wilfrid Laurier came to power in 1896 and there followed a period of growth and stability. Mineral resources were found in British Columbia and Ontario as well as gold which precipitated the Klondike gold rush of 1897. The Yukon Territory was established in 1898 to ensure Canadian jurisdiction over the exploitation of gold. The provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta were created in 1905, each with its own premier and elected assembly. By 1911 the population in the provinces had doubled and there was a powerful business sector. When reformers called for action to alleviate conditions in overcrowded cities, health and welfare programmes were introduced. A new women's movement campaigned for equal rights and women's suffrage. Anti-monopoly legislation was passed in 1910. However, much industrial investment was backed by American money and many French Canadians began to agitate for autonomy. In 1910 Laurier founded the Canadian Navy with the provision that in time of war it would be placed under British command. This further angered the French Canadians. Laurier's decision to negotiate a new trade agreement with the USA, coupled with the navy issue, lost him the 1911 election to the Conservatives. Robert Laird Borden became prime minister.

When the First World War broke out in 1914 thousands of British-born Canadians volunteered to fight. At first troops were under British command, but by the time conscription had been introduced in 1917 they were under Canadian leadership. Around 60,000 men lost their lives in the battles of Ypres, Vimy Ridge and Passchendaele, and another 173,000 were wounded. Having won recognition for its contribution to the war effort, Canada participated as an independent state at the Paris Peace Conference and joined the League of Nations. French Canadians had been bitterly opposed to conscription and to counteract this Borden formed a joint government of Liberals and Conservatives. This was split into the English speaking Unionists and the French speaking Liberals. At the election in 1917 the Unionists won every province but Quebec.

Women's suffrage was granted in 1918. 1921 saw the Liberals back in power under William Lyon Mackenzie King who strove to unify the nation and gain autonomy. This was achieved in 1931 by the Statute of Westminster in which Canada was granted complete independence. In the same year Norway formally recognized the Canadian title to the Sverdrup group of Arctic islands. Canada thus holds sovereignty in the whole Arctic sector north of the Canadian mainland.

Following the Wall Street Crash of 1929, the country chose the Conservatives under the leadership of Richard Bedford Bennett in the election of 1930. Despite measures to alleviate the effects of the depression and the severe drought in the prairies, Bennett was unsuccessful and in 1935 King was re-elected. King introduced a new Reciprocity Treaty (1936) with the USA, nationalized the Bank of Canada, created the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and made available federal money to provide social services.

Post-War Politics

Canada's contribution in the Second World War was even more extensive than that in the First World War although casualties were lower. A post-war plan introduced unemployment insurance, family allowances, veterans' benefits, subsidized housing, health plans and improved pensions. Industrial controls were lifted and trade was encouraged. Canada became a founder member of the United Nations in 1945 and has been active in a peacekeeping role ever since. King retired in 1948 to be succeeded by Louis St Laurent, a Quebec lawyer, who won an overwhelming victory in 1949. In the same year, Newfoundland—including Labrador—became a Canadian province thus completing the Confederation. Also in that year, Canada joined NATO.

An amendment to the Indian Act in 1959 increased opportunities for Indians to influence decisions affecting them, and in 1960 the federal government granted the franchise to all Indians, with several provinces following suit.

For 20 years after 1950 Canada enjoyed growth, prosperity and a 'baby boom'. The face of industrial Canada changed with the discovery of radium, petroleum and natural gas. Canada took a more active part in foreign affairs, especially in the 1956 Suez war when Lester B. Pearson, external affairs minister, won the Nobel Peace Prize. The North American Air Defense Command (NORAD) was formed with the USA in 1957. In the same year, after 22 years of Liberal rule, the Conservatives won the election with John Diefenbaker as leader. However, internal struggles and an economic recession saw the return of the Liberals in 1963 under Pearson. During his five years as prime minister Canada gained a national flag, a social security system and medical care for all its citizens.

Having chosen Pierre Trudeau to succeed Pearson, the Liberals won the 1968 election. At the same time there was a revival of French nationalism, especially in Quebec, with the formation of the Parti Québécois (PQ) led by René Lévesque. Keen to preserve national unity, Trudeau passed the Official Languages Act in 1969 which affirmed the equality of French and English in all governmental activities. However, in 1970 he had to send troops into Quebec following the murder of the Labour minister, Pierre Laporte, by the separatist Front de Libération du Québec. In 1976 a pledge on separatism won the PQ the provincial election and French became the official language of Quebec. Despite these milestones, a referendum to make the province an independent country was rejected by Quebec voters in 1980.

Indian Rights

In the sixties and seventies Indians sought special rights and settlement of their outstanding treaty claims. The National Indian Brotherhood was formed in 1968 to represent the interest of Indians at federal level. By 1973 the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development was instructed to resolve these claims. In 1982, with the exception of Quebec, the country agreed to a new constitution giving Canada, as opposed to the British Parliament, prerogative over all future constitutional changes. At the same time a charter of Rights and Freedoms was introduced recognizing the nation's multi-cultural heritage, affirming the existing rights of native peoples and the principle of equality of benefits to the provinces.

Retiring in 1984, Trudeau was succeeded by John Turner who was ousted the same year by the Conservative leader Brian Mulroney. In 1987 at a meeting in Meech Lake, a series of constitutional amendments were drawn up to win Quebec's acceptance of the new constitution. English Canadians objected to the Meech Lake Accord and it was rejected by Newfoundland and Manitoba. This failure sparked another separatist revival in Quebec leading to the drafting of the Charlottetown Accord incorporating extensive amendments, including recognition of Quebec as a 'distinct society', offering better representation in parliament, and self-government for indigenous peoples. This was defeated in a national referendum in 1992.

Mulroney negotiated a free trade agreement with the United States which went into effect in 1989. This was followed in 1994 by North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA) with the USA and Mexico. Voter opposition coupled with a recession in the early nineties forced Mulroney to resign in 1993. He was replaced by Kim Campbell, Canada's first female prime minister. In the Oct. election of that year, Campbell and the Conservatives suffered a major defeat retaining only two of their 154 seats. Led by Jean Chrétien, the Liberals won 177 seats and the Reform Party 52 seats. The PQ became the major opposition party with 54 seats.

Another referendum on Quebec's independence from Canada failed narrowly in 1995. Again in 1997 leaders of all provinces and territories (apart from Quebec) met in Calgary and signed a declaration recognizing the 'unique character' of Quebec's society. The following year the Supreme Court ruled that Quebec was prohibited from declaring itself independent without first negotiating an agreement with the federal government and other provinces.

In the 1990s further protests were made by native peoples anxious to claim their territory. In 1997 the Supreme Court ruled that two aboriginal groups had title to 22,000 square miles of ancestral lands in British Columbia. The following year a formal apology was issued by the government for the treatment of Indian and Inuit peoples had received since the arrival of the Europeans. After decades of complex negotiations, the Inuit were granted their own territory of Nunavut in 1999, an area once part of the Northwest Territories. In the same year the government agreed that Indians and the Inuit should have the right of self-government.

Following a period of economic growth Chrétien's government made major tax cuts in 2000. In an attempt to form a more effective opposition, the Reform Party accepted the 'united alternative' proposed by party leader Preston Manning which resulted in the Canadian Alliance (Canadian Reform Conservative Alliance), a broad-based conservative party with Stockwell Day as its first leader. However, with the Progressive Conservative Party declining to join forces, Chrétien was returned for a third term in Nov. 2000 with an increased majority.

Chrétien stood down from the premiership in late 2003 and was replaced by his Liberal colleague, Paul Martin. Martin and his party soon became embroiled in a financial scandal over misuse of government money for advertising. In the Jan. 2006 general election the Conservative Party, led by Stephen Harper, defeated the Liberals, taking power for the first time in 12 years. In Dec. 2011 Canada became the first country to formally withdraw from the Kyoto Protocol. From Oct. 2014 the air force took part in US-led air strikes against Islamic State militants in Iraq and Syria. A year later Harper was replaced as premier by Liberal leader, Justin Trudeau.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Canada is bounded in the northwest by the Beaufort Sea, north by the Arctic Ocean, northeast by Baffin Bay, east by the Davis Strait, Labrador Sea and Atlantic Ocean, south by the USA and west by the Pacific Ocean and USA (Alaska). The area is 9,984,670 sq. km, of which 891,163 sq. km are fresh water. 2011 census population, 33,476,688 (51.0% female), giving a density of 3.7 per sq. km. July 2013 population estimate: 35,158,304. In 2011, 81.1% of the population were urban.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 35.94m.

¹Census respondents who reported multiple ethnic origins are counted for each origin they reported.

The aboriginal population (those persons identifying with at least one aboriginal group, and including North American Indian, Métis or Inuit) numbered 1,836,035 in 2011. In 2011, 57.8% of the population gave their mother tongue as English and 21.7% as French (English and French are both official languages); 17.5% of the population reported speaking at least two languages at home, compared to 14.2% in 2006. In 2011 foreign-born residents numbered 6,775,800 and accounted for 20.6% of the total population; 1,162,900 people immigrated into Canada between 2006 and 2011, 56.9% of whom were from Asia (including the Middle East), 13.7% from Europe, 12.5% from Africa, 12.3% from the Caribbean, Central and South America and 3.9% from the USA.

In 2011 the vast majority of the foreign-born population (94.8%) lived in four provinces: Ontario (with 53.3%), British Columbia (17.6%), Quebec (14.4%) and Alberta (9.5%).

Yukon had the biggest population increase between 2006 and 2011 with 11.6%, while the Northwest Territories had the smallest population growth at 0.0%.

Life expectancy at birth, 2013, was 79.3 years for men and 83.6 years for women. Infant mortality, 2010, five per 1,000 live births; fertility rate, 2013, 1.7 children per woman. Canada legalized same-sex marriage in 2005.

CLIMATE

The climate ranges from polar conditions in the north to cool temperate in the south, but with considerable differences between east coast, west coast and the interior, affecting temperatures, rainfall amounts and seasonal distribution. Winters are very severe over much of the country, but summers can be very hot inland. See individual provinces for climatic details.

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

In Nov. 1981 the Canadian government agreed on the provisions of an amended constitution, to the end that it should replace the British North America Act and that its future amendment should be the prerogative of Canada. These proposals were adopted by the Parliament of Canada and were enacted by the UK Parliament as the Canada Act of 1982. This was the final act of the UK Parliament in Canadian constitutional development. The Act gave to Canada the power to amend the Constitution according to procedures determined by the Constitutional Act 1982. The latter added to the Canadian Constitution a charter of Rights and Freedoms, and provisions which recognize the nation's multi-cultural heritage, affirm the existing rights of native peoples, confirm the principle of equalization of benefits among the provinces, and strengthen provincial ownership of natural resources.

Under the Constitution legislative power is vested in Parliament, consisting of the Queen, represented by a Governor-General, a Senate and a House of Commons. The members of the Senate are appointed until age 75 by summons of the Governor-General under the Great Seal of Canada. Members appointed before 2 June 1965 may remain in office for life. The Senate consists of 105 senators: 24 from Ontario, 24 from Quebec, 10 from Nova Scotia, 10 from New Brunswick, 6 from Manitoba, 6 from British Columbia, 6 from Alberta, 6 from Saskatchewan, 6 from Newfoundland and Labrador, 4 from Prince Edward Island, 1 from Yukon, 1 from the Northwest Territories, and 1 from Nunavut. Each senator must be at least 30 years of age and reside in the province for which he or she is appointed. The House of Commons, currently of 338 members, is elected by universal secret suffrage, by a first-past-the-post system. Legislation that came into force in May 2007 stipulates that elections will be held on the third Monday of Oct. in the fourth calendar year following the previous general election, except when a government loses a vote of confidence. Representation is based on the population of all the provinces taken as a whole with readjustments made after each census. State of the parties in the Senate (March 2016): Conservatives, 44; Liberals, 26; ind., 11; vacant, 24.

The First Nations have representation in the Assembly of First Nations (National Chief: Perry Bellegarde, elected Dec. 2014).

The office and appointment of the Governor-General are regulated by letters patent of 1947. In 1977 the Queen approved the transfer to the Governor-General of functions discharged by the Sovereign. The Governor-General is assisted by a Privy Council composed of Cabinet Ministers.

Position

Prime Minister

Introduction

Justin Trudeau was sworn in as prime minister in Oct. 2015. He has led the Liberal Party of Canada since 2013 and is the son of Pierre Trudeau, one of the country's longest serving Liberal prime ministers (from 1968–79 and 1980–84).

Early Life

Justin Pierre James Trudeau was born in Ottawa on 25 Oct. 1971. The oldest of three boys, he grew up at the premier's official residence until the Liberal government was defeated in 1979. His parents, meanwhile, separated in 1977.

Trudeau attended Collège Jean-de-Brébeuf in Montreal. In 1994 he graduated in English literature from McGill University, where he was an active member of the debating union. Four years later he received a degree in education from the University of British Columbia, before working as a teacher in Vancouver.

He came to public attention in Oct. 2000 when he delivered a eulogy at his father's state funeral. Thereafter, he built his public profile as he promoted various causes and appeared regularly on television and radio. He subsequently abandoned his master's degree in environmental geography at McGill to dedicate himself to a political career. In 2008 he ran in the parliamentary election as the Liberal candidate for the Montreal riding of Papineau and narrowly defeated Bloc Québécois incumbent Vivian Barbot. He co-chaired the Liberal Party's 2009 national convention in Vancouver and until 2011 held several party positions responsible for youth, citizenship, immigration and sport.

In March 2012 Trudeau fought a boxing match against Conservative senator Patrick Brazeau to raise money for cancer research. In the same year, he announced his intentions to contest the Liberal leadership, which he won in 2013. His election prompted a surge in popular support that lifted the party from third to first in the polls. Trudeau went on to lead his party to victory in the 2015 federal election.

Career in Office

Trudeau has pledged to prioritize transparency in the execution of his office and to re-engage with the press following the sometimes uneasy relationship between his Conservative predecessor, Stephen Harper, and the media. Trudeau appointed a young cabinet, with half of the positions taken by women, while he himself took charge of the intergovernmental affairs and youth portfolios.

His government pledged to end Canada's involvement in air strikes against Islamic State jihadists in the Middle East. Domestically, he is expected to pursue a pro-choice abortion policy, the legalization of marijuana, gender parity, senate reform, improved relations with First Nation indigenous peoples and a reform of the first-past-the-post voting system.

DEFENCE

The armed forces have been unified since 1968 as the Canadian Armed Forces (usually referred to as the Canadian Forces). The three commands are the Canadian Army (known until Aug. 2011 as Land Force Command), the Royal Canadian Navy (Maritime Command until Aug. 2011) and the Royal Canadian Air Force (Air Command until Aug. 2011). In 2011 the active armed forces numbered 65,700; reserves, 33,950.

In 2010 defence expenditure totalled US$20,240m. (US$600 per capita), representing 1.3% of GDP.

Army

The Canadian Army numbered 34,800 in 2011; reserves numbered 23,150. It had 121 main battle tanks in 2011 and 1,220 armoured personnel carriers.

Navy

The naval combatant force is headquartered at Halifax (Nova Scotia), and includes four diesel submarines, three destroyers and 12 helicopter-carrying frigates. Naval personnel in 2011 numbered about 11,000, with 4,150 reserves. The main bases are Halifax, where about two-thirds of the fleet is based, and Esquimalt (British Columbia).

Air Force

The Royal Canadian Air Force numbered 19,900 in 2011 with 95 combat-capable aircraft (mainly CF-18s). There were also 2,350 primary reservists in 2011.

ECONOMY

Services accounted for 70.8% of GDP in 2010, industry 27.7% and agriculture 1.5%.

According to the anti-corruption organization Transparency International, Canada ranked ninth in the world in a 2015 survey of the countries with the least corruption in business and government. It received 83 out of 100 in the annual index.

Canada gave US$4.2bn. in international aid in 2014, equivalent to 0.24% of GNI (compared to the UN target of 0.7%).

Overview

Canada has the 11th largest economy in the world and is a major exporter of energy, food and minerals. As a party to the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA), it is closely integrated economically with the USA, its largest trading partner.

Canada has vast natural resources. The country has the third largest oil reserves in the world after Venezuela and Saudi Arabia and is the world's fourth largest natural gas exporter. However, a collapse in world oil prices since mid-2014 has put pressure on Canada's primary industry. The Canadian government has lobbied hard over several years for US ratification of the Keystone XL cross-border pipeline. This would allow hydrocarbons to flow across Canada and into the USA, where they would be processed ahead of onward sale to domestic and international markets. The Keystone project, however, has been repeatedly rejected by the White House on the basis of environmental concerns and the lack of proportionate benefits to the US economy.

Canada suffered during the 2008-09 global financial crisis and the economy dropped into recession as GDP fell by 2.7% in 2009. A recovery followed, with growth averaging 2.5% between 2010 and 2014 reflecting sound macroeconomic and financial sector management. The central bank maintained low interest rates throughout the recovery, encouraging an increase in consumer spending. However, this contributed to mounting household debt, which was estimated at 163.7% of disposable income in the third quarter of 2015. Consumer spending is nevertheless expected to remain high as the central bank has expressed its intention to keep interest rates low in an attempt to counteract the adverse effects of the oil slump. The property market has meanwhile been among the most over-valued in the world, leaving many homeowners at risk of bankruptcy in the event of steep interest rate rises or a house-price crash.

Improving economic conditions in the USA in 2015 have offered cause for optimism, although Canada's unemployment has been rising since the end of 2014, reaching 7.1% in Nov. 2015 (but still below the 8.7% peak recorded at the height of the recession in Aug. 2009). Youth joblessness measured 13% in 2015.

The Liberal government elected in Oct. 2015 brought to an end a decade of Conservative rule, but maintains its predecessor's aim to rebalance the export base by pursuing free trade agreements with emerging economies in Asia and Latin America (where Canada has historically had little presence). However, unlike the previous government, the Liberal administration advocates fiscal stimulus and public investment to boost long-term growth potential. Its main economic challenges include the slowdown in the world economy and falling oil prices.

Currency

The unit of currency is the Canadian dollar (CAD) of 100 cents. In Sept. 2009 gold reserves were 0.11m. troy oz and foreign exchange reserves totalled US$46,327m. Total money supply was $434,519m. CDN in Dec. 2008.

Budget

In 2012-13 budgetary revenues totalled $256.6bn. CDN and total expenses $275.6bn. CDN, giving a federal deficit of $18.9bn. CDN. The deficit had been $26.3bn. CDN in 2011-12 and $55.6bn. CDN in 2009-10.

In 2012-13 revenue included (in $1bn. CDN): personal income tax, 125.7; corporate income tax, 35.0; goods and services tax, 28.8; employment insurance premium revenues, 20.4. Expenses in 2012-13 included (in $1bn. CDN): direct programme operating expenses, 78.0; elderly benefits, 40.3; direct programme transfer payments, 34.9; public debt charges, 29.2.

On 1 Jan. 1991 a 7% Goods and Services Tax (GST) was introduced, superseding a 13.5% Manufacturers' Sales Tax. This was reduced to 6% from 1 July 2006 and 5% from 1 Jan. 2008. A Harmonized Sales Tax (HST) that combines the GST and the regional Provincial Sales Tax (PST) into a single value added sales tax applies in five provinces: New Brunswick (13%), Newfoundland and Labrador (13%), Nova Scotia (15%), Ontario (13%) and Prince Edward Island (14%). Following a referendum held in Aug. 2011, British Columbia—which had been using HST—reinstated the GST/PST system on 1 April 2013.

Performance

Real GDP growth rates (based on OECD statistics):

2005	2006	2007	2008	2009	2010	2011	2012	2013	2014
3.2%	2.6%	2.0%	1.2%	-2.7%	3.4%	3.0%	1.9%	2.0%	2.4%

Real GDP grew by 1.2% in 2015 according to Statistics Canada. Total GDP was US$1,785.4bn. in 2014.

Banking and Finance

The Bank of Canada (established 1935) is the central bank and bank of issue. The Governor (Stephen Poloz) is appointed by the Bank's directors for seven-year terms. The Minister of Finance owns the capital stock of the Bank on behalf of Canada. Banks in Canada are chartered under the terms of the Bank Act, which imposes strict conditions on capital reserves, returns to the federal government, types of lending operations, ownership and other matters. As of June 2008 there were 20 domestic banks, 24 foreign bank subsidiaries, 22 full service foreign bank branches and seven foreign bank lending branches operating in Canada; these manage over $2.7trn. CDN in assets between them. Chartered banks accounted collectively for over 70% of the total assets of the Canadian financial services sector, with the six largest domestic banks (Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, Bank of Nova Scotia, Bank of Montreal, National Bank of Canada, TD Canada Trust and Royal Bank of Canada) accounting for over 90% of the total assets held by the banking industry. In 2011 there were 2,090 automated bank machines per 1m. of the adult population. The First Nations Bank was founded in Dec. 1996 to provide finance to Inuit and Indian entrepreneurs.

The activities of banks are monitored by the federal Office of the Superintendent of Financial Institutions (OSFI), which reports to the Minister of Finance. Canada's federal financial institutions legislation is reviewed at least every five years. Significant legislative changes were made in 1992, updating the regulatory framework and removing barriers separating the activities of various types of financial institutions. In 1999 legislation was passed allowing foreign banks to establish operations in Canada without having to set up Canadian-incorporated subsidiaries. In 2001 Bill C-8, establishing the Financial Consumer Agency of Canada (the FCAC), was implemented. It aimed to foster competition in the financial sector and provide a holding company option allowing additional organizational flexibility to banks and insurance companies. The FCAC is responsible for enforcing consumer-related provisions of laws governing federal financial institutions.

Foreign direct investment was US$53.9bn. in 2014, down from US$70.6bn. in 2013. At the end of 2014 foreign direct investment stocks totalled US$631.3bn.

In June 2012 Canada's gross external debt amounted to US$1,202,858m.

There are stock exchanges at Calgary (Alberta Stock Exchange), Montreal, Toronto, Vancouver and Winnipeg.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Canada's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2011 were the equivalent of 16.2 tonnes per capita.

An Environmental Performance Index compiled in 2016 ranked Canada 25th of 180 countries, with 85.1%. The index examined various factors in nine areas—agriculture, air quality, biodiversity and habitat, climate and energy, fisheries, forests, health impacts, water and sanitation, and water resources.

Electricity

Generating capacity, 2011, 138.7m. kW. Production, 2010, 602.00bn. kWh (351.46bn. kWh hydro-electric, 151.02bn. kWh thermal, 90.66bn. kWh nuclear and 8.87bn. kWh other); consumption per capita was 16,887 kWh in 2010. There were 18 nuclear reactors in use in 2010. Canada is one of the world's leading exporters of electricity, with 44.4bn. kWh in 2010.

Oil and Gas

Oil reserves in 2014 were 172.9bn. bbls (5.8bn. bbls of conventional crude oil and condensate reserves and 167.1bn. bbls of oil sands reserves in Alberta), ranking Canada third after Venezuela and Saudi Arabia. Natural gas reserves in 2013 were 2.0trn. cu. metres. Production of oil in 2014 was a record 209.8m. tonnes; natural gas production was 162.0bn. cu. metres. The oil sands of Alberta account for more than half of Canada's annual oil production.

Canada's first off-shore field, 250 km off Nova Scotia, began producing in June 1992.

Minerals

Mineral production in 1,000 tonnes (in 2008): sand and gravel, 241,591; coal, 67,750; iron ore, 32,102; salt, 14,224; potash, 10,379 (the highest of any country in the world); lignite, 9,900; gypsum, 5,819; aluminium, 3,127; lime, 2,046; peat, 1,246; zinc, 705; copper, 584; nickel, 246; asbestos, 160; lead, 87; uranium (2010), 9.8; cobalt, 4.8. Silver production in 2008 was 709 tonnes; gold, 95 tonnes; diamonds, 14.5m. carats.

Agriculture

Grain growing, dairy farming, fruit farming, ranching and fur farming are all practised. In 2011 there were 293,295 farm operators (a decline of 10.1% from 2006) and 297,683 paid employees.

The total farm area in 2011 was 648,127 sq. km (7.1% of the total land area). There were 205,730 farms in 2011 (down from 229,373 in 2006); average size, 315 ha. Total farm cash receipts (2012), $53,688,347,000 CDN. There were 685,914 tractors in 2011 and 90,903 combine harvesters.

The following table shows the value of receipts for selected agricultural commodities in 2009 (in $1m. CDN):

Crops	22,971	Livestock and products	17,903
Barley	763	Beef	5,278

Canada is the world's second largest producer of rapeseeds and oats.

Livestock

In parts of Saskatchewan and Alberta, stockraising is still carried on as a primary industry, but the livestock industry of the country at large is mainly a subsidiary of mixed farming. The following table shows the numbers of livestock (in 1,000) by provinces in July 2009:

Provinces	Total cattle and calves (including dairy cows)	Dairy cows	Sheep and lambs	Pigs
Newfoundland and Labrador	11.8	6.2	4.0	1.8
Prince Edward Island	68.5	13.0	4.1	48.8
Nova Scotia	88.8	22.2	26.2	16.4
New Brunswick	82.1	18.9	8.1	81.2
Quebec	1,385.0	366.0	285.0	3,870.0
Ontario	1,828.8	321.0	315.0	3,064.8

British Columbia	705.0	72.0	58.0	112.0
Total	14,840.0	982.8	1,062.4	12,065.0

Other livestock totals (2007 estimates): chickens, 165m.; turkeys, 5.6m.

Livestock Products

Slaughtering in 2008: pigs, 21.69m.; cattle, 3.84m.; sheep, 0.72m. Production, 2009 (in 1,000 tonnes): pork and pork products, 1,945; beef and veal, 1,255; poultry meat, 1,212; horse meat, 18; lamb and mutton, 17; cow's milk, 8,213; hens' eggs, 422; cheese, 390; honey, 29; hides, 96.

Fruit production in 2007, in 1,000 tonnes: apples, 446; blueberries, 78; grapes, 76; cranberries, 71; peaches, 34; strawberries, 24; raspberries, 12; pears, 12.

Forestry

Forests and other wooded land make up nearly half of Canada's landmass. Forestry is of great economic importance, and forestry products (pulp, newsprint, building timber) constitute Canada's most valuable exports. In 2010 Canada had 310-13m. ha. of forest land (8% of the world's forest cover) and 91-95m. ha. of other wooded land. 2.4m. ha. were burned by forest fires in 2011. 148-18m. cu. metres of roundwood was produced in 2011.

Fur Trade

In 2009, 730,915 wildlife pelts (valued at $14,847,952 CDN) and 2,279,810 ranch-raised pelts (valued at $146,991,034 CDN) were produced.

Fisheries

In 2012 landings of commercial fisheries totalled 832,768 tonnes with a value of $2,188m. CDN. More than 96% of the total catch in 2012 was from sea fishing; in 2012 Atlantic landings totalled 673,923 tonnes and Pacific landings 129,519 tonnes, with freshwater fish totalling 29,326 tonnes. Value of sea fish landed in 2012 was $2,121m. CDN and of freshwater fish $67m. CDN. Imports of fishery commodities were valued at US$2,688m. in 2012 and exports at US$4,213m.

INDUSTRY

The leading companies by market capitalization in Canada in March 2015 were: Royal Bank of Canada (US$86.8bn.); Toronto-Dominion Bank (US$79.2bn.); and Valeant Pharmaceuticals International (US$67.3bn.).

Value of manufacturing shipments for all industries in 2008 was $598,217.1m. CDN. Principal manufactures in 1,000 tonnes: petrol (2007), 32,630; distillate fuel oil (2007), 31,223; wood pulp (2007), 22,381; paper and paperboard (2007), 18,113; crude steel (2007), 15,569; cement (producers' shipments, 2008), 13,672; pig iron (2007), 8,577; residual fuel oil (2007), 8,407; newsprint (2007), 6,640; sulphuric acid (2007), 4,328; jet fuel (2007), 4,038; kerosene (2007), 1,544. Output of other products: 2.05m. motor vehicles (2008); 19bn. cigarettes and equivalent (2009; down from 73bn. in 1981); sawn lumber (2008), 57.25m. cu. metres; chipboard (2007), 10.04m. cu. metres; plywood (2007), 2.07m. cu. metres.

According to the World Bank's Doing Business 2016 Canada is the third easiest country in which to start a business, after New Zealand and Macedonia.

Labour

In 2015 the labour force was 19,278,000 (10,182,400 males; 9,095,600 females), of whom 17,946,600 (9,422,700 males; 8,523,900 females) were employed. The unemployment rate in 2015 was 6.9% (7.5% among men and 6.3% among women).

In 2011 an average of about one hour per employee was lost to labour disputes, amounting to an estimated 1,967,000 workdays lost in the year; at provincial level, New Brunswick lost the most time to labour disputes (4.5 hours per employee).

Canada had 6,000 people living in slavery according to the Walk Free Foundation's 2013 Global Slavery Index.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

A North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA) between Canada, Mexico and the USA was signed on 7 Oct. 1992 and came into force on 1 Jan. 1994.

Imports and Exports

Total value of imports and exports of goods in US$1m.:

	2012	2013	2014
Imports	462,366.2	461,764.1	462,000.0
Exports	454,099.0	456,605.4	472,866.1

Canada is heavily dependent on foreign trade. In 2011 imports of goods and services were equivalent to 31.7% of GDP and exports equivalent to 30.4%. The trade deficit that Canada experienced in 2009 at the height of the global economic downturn was the country's first in 15 years.

Principal imports in 2014 were machinery and transport equipment (41.3%), manufactured goods, and miscellaneous manufactured articles; main exports in 2014 were mineral fuels and lubricants (27.2%), machinery and transport equipment, and manufactured goods.

Leading import suppliers in 2010: USA, 50.4%; China, 11.0%; Mexico, 5.5%; Japan, 3.3%; Germany, 2.8%; UK, 2.7%. Leading export markets in 2010: USA, 74.8%; UK, 4.1%; China, 3.3%; Japan, 2.3%; Mexico, 1.3%; Germany, 1.0%.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

In 2007 there were 1,409,000 km of public roads, including 17,000 km of motorways, 86,000 km of main roads and 115,000 km of secondary roads. The National Highway System, spanning almost 25,000 km, includes the Trans-Canada Highway and other major east-west and north-south highways. While representing only 3% of total road infrastructure, the system carries about 30% of all vehicle travel in Canada.

Registered road motor vehicles totalled 21,387,132 in 2009; they comprised 19,876,990 passenger cars and light vehicles, 829,695 trucks and truck tractors (weighing at least 4,500 kg), 85,579 buses and 594,866 motorcycles and mopeds.

There were 2,209 fatalities (a rate of 6.6 deaths per 100,000 population) in road accidents in 2009, the lowest annual total since records began.

Rail

In Dec. 2009 the length of track operated for freight and passenger rail transportation totalled 68,092 km. Canada has two great trans-continental systems: the Canadian National Railway system (CN), a body privatized in 1995 that operates the largest network with 36,565 km of routes in 2009, and the Canadian Pacific Railway (CP), with 21,055 km in 2009. A government-funded organization, VIA Rail, operates passenger services in all regions of Canada; 4.6m. passengers were carried in 2008. There are several regional railways, operating 10,203 km in 2009.

There are metros in Montreal and Toronto, and tram/light rail systems in Calgary, Edmonton, Ottawa, Toronto and Vancouver.

Civil Aviation

Civil aviation is under the jurisdiction of the federal government. The technical and administrative aspects are supervised by Transport Canada, while the economic functions are assigned to the Canadian Transportation Agency.

The busiest Canadian airport is Toronto Pearson International, which in 2012 handled 34,912,029 passengers (21,265,866 on international flights), ahead of Vancouver International, with 17,742,065 passengers (9,170,801 on domestic flights) and Montreal (Pierre Elliot Trudeau International), with 13,798,672 passengers (8,466,108 on international flights). Toronto is also the busiest airport for freight, handling 417,022 tonnes in 2012.

Air Canada (privatized in 1989) is the largest full-service airline and largest provider of scheduled passenger services in the Canadian market, carrying 34.9m. revenue passengers in 2012; it took over its main competitor, Canadian Airlines, in 2000. Other major Canadian airlines are Air Transat and WestJet.

Shipping

In Jan. 2009 there were 171 ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 1.29m. GT. Of the 171 vessels registered, 114 were passenger ships, 26 oil tankers, 18 general cargo ships, nine bulk carriers, two chemical tankers and two container ships.

In 2009 the total tonnage handled by Canadian ports was 409.1m. tonnes (251.0m. loaded and 158.1m. unloaded). Canada's leading port in terms of cargo handled is Vancouver. Other major ports are Saint John, Fraser River, Montreal and Quebec.

The major canals are those of the St Lawrence Seaway. Main commodities moved along the seaway are grain, iron ore, coal, other bulk and steel. The St Lawrence Seaway Management Corporation was established in 1998 as a non-profit making corporation to operate the Canadian assets of the seaway for the federal government under a long-term agreement with Transport Canada.

In 2010 total traffic on the Montreal-Lake Ontario (MLO) section of the seaway was 26,920,000 tonnes; on the Welland Canal section it was 29,180,000 tonnes. There were 3,925 vessel transits in 2010, generating $60.7m. CDN in toll revenue.

Telecommunications

Telecommunications in Canada is dominated by three companies—Bell, Rogers and Telus. In 2013 there were 28,360,000 mobile phone subscriptions (806.1 per 1,000 persons). In the same year retail access lines numbered 16,921,000. A 2010 survey found that 78% of households had a mobile phone and 13% only had a mobile phone; 17% only had a landline. In 2012, 81.5% of households had internet access. The fixed broadband penetration rate in Dec. 2010 was 30.7 subscribers per 100 inhabitants. In Dec. 2011 there were 17.1m. Facebook users (49% of the population).

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The courts in Canada are organized in a four-tier structure. The Supreme Court of Canada, based in Ottawa, is the highest court, having general appellate jurisdiction in civil and criminal cases throughout the country. It is comprised of a Chief Justice and eight puisne judges appointed by the Governor-in-Council, with a minimum of three judges coming from Quebec. The second tier consists of the Federal Court of Appeal and the various provincial courts of appeal. The third tier consists of the Federal Court (which replaced the Exchequer Court in 1971), the Tax Court of Canada and the provincial and territorial superior courts (which include both a court of general trial jurisdiction and a provincial court of appeal). The majority of cases are heard by the provincial courts, the fourth tier in the hierarchy. They are generally divided within each province into various divisions defined by the subject matter of their respective jurisdictions (for example a Traffic Division, a Small Claims Division, a Family Division and a Criminal Division).

There were 2,194,968 Criminal Code Offences (excluding traffic) reported in 2008 (down from 2,440,650 in 1998), including 310,398 crimes of violence (up from 300,058 in 1998). In 2010 there were 554 homicides in Canada, giving a rate of 1.6 homicides per 100,000 population (the lowest rate since 1966). In 2011–12 the average daily population in penal institutions (including youth offenders) was 40,544 (118 per 100,000 of national population). The death penalty was abolished for all crimes in 1998.

Canada was ranked 17th of 102 countries for criminal justice and 18th for civil justice in the 2015 World Justice Project Rule of Law Index, which provides data on how the rule of law is experienced by the general public across eight categories.

Police

Total police officers in Canada in 2008 numbered 65,283. There were 12,207 female police officers, up from 3,573 in June 1990. Policing costs in 2007 totalled $10.54bn. CDN.

Royal Canadian Mounted Police (RCMP)

The RCMP is Canada's national police force maintained by the federal government. Established in 1873 as the North-West Mounted Police, it became the Royal Northwest Mounted Police in 1904. Its sphere of operations was expanded in 1918 to include all of Canada west of Thunder Bay, Ontario. In 1920 the force absorbed the Dominion Police and its headquarters was transferred from Regina, Saskatchewan to Ottawa, Ontario. Its title also changed to Royal Canadian Mounted Police. The RCMP is responsible to the Minister of Public Safety and Emergency Preparedness Canada and is controlled by a Commissioner who is empowered to appoint peace officers in all the provinces and territories of Canada.

The responsibilities of the RCMP are national in scope. The administration of justice within the provinces, including the enforcement of the Criminal Code of Canada, is the responsibility of provincial governments, but all the provinces except Ontario and Quebec have entered into contracts with the RCMP to enforce criminal and provincial laws under the direction of the respective Attorneys-General. In these eight provinces the RCMP is under agreement to provide police services to municipalities as well. The RCMP is also responsible for all police work in the three territories—Yukon, Northwest Territories and Nunavut—enforcing federal law and territorial ordinances. The 16 Divisions, alphabetically designated, make up the strength of the RCMP across Canada; they comprise 740 detachments containing varying numbers of police officers. Headquarters Division, as well as the Office of the Commissioner, is located in Ottawa.

Supporting Canada's law enforcement agencies, the RCMP's National Police Services includes seven diverse service lines providing a broad range of programmes and services throughout Canada. It comprises Information and Identification Services, Forensic Laboratory Services, Canadian Police College, Criminal Intelligence Service Canada, Technical Operations, National Child Exploitation Coordination Centre and Chief Information Officer.

In 2005 the Force had a total strength of over 22,000 including regular members, special constables, civilian members and public service employees. It maintained 10,385 motor vehicles, 112 police dog teams across Canada and 195 horses.

The Force has 16 divisions actively engaged in law enforcement, one Headquarters Division and one training division. Marine services are divisional responsibilities and the Force currently has 308 boats at various points across Canada. The Air Services Branch has offices throughout the country and maintains a fleet of 34 operational aircraft.

Education

Under the Constitution the provincial legislatures have powers over education. These are subject to certain qualifications respecting the rights of denominational and minority language schools. School board revenues derive from local taxation on real property, and government grants from general provincial revenue.

In 2009–10 there were 5,077,021 pupils enrolled in elementary and secondary public schools and 337,600 educators (including teaching support staff and administrators).

The federal government shares responsibility with First Nations for the provision of education to children ordinarily resident on reserve and attending provincial, federal or band-operated schools. In 2011–12 the government provided $1.55bn. CDN in support for 116,400 First Nations students in elementary and secondary education and $322m. CDN for 22,000 at postsecondary level. About 60% of First Nations children attend schools on reserves, while 40% go off reserve to schools under provincial authority. Funding is also provided for postsecondary tuition, books and living allowances for students residing on or off reserve.

The Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada represents 97 public and private not-for-profit universities and degree-level colleges. In 2010–11 there were 912,000 full-time and 325,581 part-time students enrolled in universities and 520,584 full-time and 197,172 part-time students enrolled in colleges. Full-time faculty staff in universities numbered 44,934 (16,448 women) in 2010–11. According to data from the 2011 National Household Survey and Statistics Canada, 11,782,700 adults aged between 25 and 64 had a postsecondary qualification; 4,755,420 had a university degree and 3,913,710 had a college diploma. The proportion of adults with a high school diploma or equivalent as their highest level of educational attainment was 23.2%.

The adult literacy rate is at least 99%.

In 2010 public education expenditure represented 5.5% of GDP.

Health

Constitutional responsibility for health care services rests with the provinces and territories. Accordingly, Canada's national health insurance system consists of an interlocking set of provincial and territorial hospital and medical insurance plans conforming to certain national standards rather than a single national programme. The Canada Health Act (which took effect from April 1984 and consolidated the original federal health insurance legislation) sets out the national standards that provinces and territories are required to meet in order to qualify for full federal health contributions, including: provision of a comprehensive range of hospital and medical benefits; universal population coverage; access to necessary services on uniform terms and conditions; portability of benefits; and public administration of provincial and territorial insurance plans. From 1996–97 the federal government's contribution to provincial health and social programmes was consolidated into a single block transfer—the Canada Health and Social Transfer (CHST). However, following reforms introduced by the 2003 Accord on Health Care Renewal to improve health spending accountability it was split into the Canada Health Transfer (CHT) for health and the Canada Social Transfer (CST) for post-secondary education, social service and social assistance in April 2004. The CHT is the federal government's largest transfer—in 2015–16 the provinces and territories were scheduled to receive $34.0bn. CDN, up from $32.1bn. CDN in 2014–15.

Over and above this health transfer, the federal government also provides financial support for such provincial and territorial extended health care service programmes as nursing-home care, certain home care services, ambulatory health care services and adult residential care services.

The approach taken by Canada is one of state-sponsored health insurance. The advent of insurance programmes produced little change in the ownership of hospitals, almost all of which are owned by non-government non-profit corporations, or in the rights and privileges of private medical practice. Patients are free to choose their own general practitioner. Except for a small percentage of the population whose care is provided for under other legislation (such as serving members of the Canadian Armed Forces and inmates of federal penitentiaries), all residents are eligible, regardless of whether they are in the workforce. Benefits are available without upper limit so long as they are medically necessary, provided any registration obligations are met.

In addition to the benefits qualifying for federal contributions, provinces and territories provide additional benefits at their own discretion. Most fund their portion of health costs out of general provincial and territorial revenues. Most have charges for long-term chronic hospital care geared, approximately, to the room and board portion of the OAS–GIS payment mentioned under Welfare below. Health spending accounted for 10.9% of GDP in 2011.

In 2010 there were 69,699 physicians, giving a rate of 2.1 per 1,000 population; in 2009 there were 350,547 nursing and midwifery personnel (10.5 per 1,000 population); and in 2008 there were 41,798 dentists (1.3 per 1,000 population).

Welfare

The social security system provides financial benefits and social services to individuals and their families through programmes administered by federal, provincial and municipal governments and voluntary organizations. Federally, Human Resources and Skills Development is responsible for research into the areas of social issues, provision of grants and contributions for various social services and the administration of income security programmes, including the Old Age Security (OAS) programme, the Guaranteed Income Supplement, the Allowance and the Canada Pension Plan (CPP).

The Old Age Security pension is payable to persons 65 years of age and over who satisfy the residence requirements stipulated in the Old Age Security Act. The amount payable, whether full or partial, is also governed by stipulated conditions, as is the payment of an OAS pension to a recipient who absents himself from Canada. OAS pensioners with little or no income apart from OAS may, upon application, receive a full or partial supplement known as the Guaranteed Income Supplement (GIS). Entitlement is normally based on the pensioner's income in the preceding year, calculated in accordance with the Income Tax Act (which excepts OAS income). The spouse or common-law partner (same sex or opposite sex since the Modernization of Benefits and Obligations Act of 2000) of an OAS pensioner, meeting specific citizenship/residency requirements and aged 60 to 64, may be eligible for a full or partial benefit called the Allowance (introduced in 1975 and formerly known as the Spouse's Allowance). The Allowance is payable, on application, to spouses/partners of individuals receiving OAS and GIS, where the couple's joint income is classified as low. An Allowance for the Survivor (introduced in 1985) is available to persons aged 60–64 whose spouse or common-law partner has died and where the survivor has not entered into a subsequent marriage or common law relationship. The Allowance and Allowance for the Survivor stop when the recipient becomes eligible for the OAS at age 65.

As of 1 July 2011 the maximum OAS pension was $533.70 CDN monthly; the maximum Guaranteed Income Supplement was $723.65 CDN monthly for a single pensioner or a married pensioner whose spouse or common law partner was not receiving an OAS pension, and $479.84 CDN monthly for each spouse of a married couple/common law partner where both were pensioners.

The Canada Pension Plan is designed to provide workers with a basic level of income protection in the event of retirement, disability or death. Benefits may be payable to a contributor, a surviving spouse or an eligible child. Actuarially adjusted retirement benefits may begin as early as age 60 or as late as age 70. Benefits are determined by the contributor's earnings and contributions made to the Plan. Contribution is compulsory for most employed and self-employed Canadians aged 18 to 65. The CPP does not operate in Quebec, which has exercised its constitutional prerogative to establish a similar plan. In 2011 the maximum monthly retirement pension payable under CPP was $960.00 CDN; the maximum disability pension was $1,153.37 CDN; and the maximum surviving spouse's pension was $576.00 CDN (for survivors 65 years of age and over). The survivor pension payable to a surviving spouse under 65 (maximum of $529.09 CDN in 2011) is composed of two parts: a flat-rate component and an earnings-related portion.

The CPP is financed through mandatory contributions from employers, employees and the self-employed, and through revenue generated from investments. The combined contribution rate is 9.9% of earnings between the year's basic exemption ($3,500 CDN in 2010) and the year's maximum pensionable earnings ($47,200 CDN in 2010). The contribution rate (maximum rate of $4,326.30 CDN in 2010) is split equally between employers and employees, while the self-employed pay both shares. Changes to the CPP were introduced incrementally between 2011 and 2016 whereby the monthly pension amount has been increased by a larger percentage if taken after age 65 and decreases by a larger percentage if taken before 65.

The Canada Pension Plan Investment Board, an independent investment organization separate from the CPP, was established to invest excess CPP funds in a diversified portfolio of securities, beginning operations in April 1998. A total of 4.3m. Canadians received Canada Pension Plan benefits amounting to $27.5bn. CDN in fiscal year 2007–08. Social security agreements co-ordinate the operation of the Old Age Security and the CPP with the comparable social security programmes of certain other countries.

Canada Child Tax Benefit (CCTB) is a tax-free monthly payment made to eligible families to help them with the cost of raising children under 18. Included with the CCTB is the National Child Benefit Supplement (NCBS), a monthly benefit for low-income families with children.

RELIGION

Membership of main religious denominations (2011 National Household Survey data):

Roman Catholic	12,728,885	Pentecostal	478,705

Hindu	497,960	Mennonite	175,880

A total 7,850,605 people described themselves as not having any religious affiliation. In Feb. 2016 the Roman Catholic church had three cardinals.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

Sites under Canadian jurisdiction which appear on UNESCO's world heritage list are (with year entered on list): L'Anse aux Meadows National Historic Site (1978), the remains of an 11th-century Viking settlement in Newfoundland and Labrador; Nahanni National Park (1978), containing canyons, waterfalls and a limestone cave system—fauna includes wolves, grizzly bears, caribou, Dall's sheep and mountain goats; Dinosaur Provincial Park (1979), in Alberta, a major area for fossil discoveries, including 35 species of dinosaur; S'Gaang Gwaii (Anthony Island) (1981), illustrating the Haida people's art and way of life; Head-Smashed-In Buffalo Jump (1981), in southwest Alberta, incorporating an aboriginal camp—the name relates to the aboriginal custom of killing buffalo by chasing them over a precipice; Wood Buffalo National Park (1983), in north-central Canada, home to America's largest population of wild bison as well as important fauna; Canadian Rocky Mountain Parks (1984 and 1990), incorporating the neighbouring parks of Banff, Jasper, Kootenay and Yoho, as well as the Mount Robson, Mount Assiniboine and Hamber provincial parks, and the Burgess Shale fossil site; Historic District of Québec (1985), retaining aspects of its French colonial past; Gros Morne National Park (1987), in Newfoundland and Labrador; Old Town Lunenburg (1995), a well-preserved British colonial settlement established in 1753; Miguasha Park (1999), among the world's most important fossil sites for fish species of the Devonian age, forerunners of the first four-legged, air-breathing terrestrial vertebrates (tetrapods); Rideau Canal (2007), a 19th century monumental canal running from Ottawa to Kingston Harbour; Joggins Fossil Cliffs (2008), a 689 ha. palaeontological site along the coast of Nova Scotia; Landscape of Grand Pré in Nova Scotia (2012), a symbolic reference landscape for the Acadian way of life and deportation; and Red Bay Basque Whaling Station (2013), one of the best-preserved examples of the European whaling tradition, located in Newfoundland and Labrador.

Two UNESCO World Heritage Sites fall under joint Canadian and US jurisdiction: Kluane/Wrangell-St Elias/Glacier Bay/Tatshenshini-Alesk (1979, 1992 and 1994), parks in Yukon, British Columbia and Alaska, include the world's largest non-polar icefield, glaciers and high peaks, and important fauna; Waterton Glacier International Peace Park (1995), in Alberta and Montana, with collections of plant and mammal species as well as prairie, forest, and alpine and glacial features.

Press

In 2014 there were 95 daily papers with a total average circulation of 5.31m.; The Globe and Mail had the largest circulation at 358,000 in 2014, followed by Toronto Star with 343,000. Le Journal de Montréal is the largest francophone daily with an average daily circulation in 2014 of 233,000.

Tourism

In 2010 foreign visitors made 15,864,000 overnight trips to Canada of which 11,749,000 were made by Americans. The next biggest tourist markets are the UK, France, Germany, Japan and Australia. Tourism expenditure by staying visitors amounted to $11,902m. CDN in 2010. In 2010, 617,300 were employed in tourism.

Festivals

Canada Day, held each July, is marked nationwide with firework displays, parades and parties. The Quebec Winter Festival is held each Feb. The Calgary Stampede (the world's largest rodeo, incorporating a series of concerts and a carnival) is in July. Also in July are the Québec Festival d'Été/Summer Festival (featuring music and art performances) and the Montréal Juste Pour Rire/Just for Laughs comedy festival. The Toronto international film festival takes place in Sept. and the Vancouver international film festival is the following month. Popular music festivals include the Montreal International Jazz Festival and North by Northeast in Toronto in June, the Ottawa International Jazz Festival in June–July, Ottawa Bluesfest and Halifax Rocks in July and Osheaga in Montreal in July–Aug. Les FrancoFolies de Montréal, a festival dedicated to francophone music, is held every summer.

CANADIAN PROVINCES

GENERAL DETAILS

The ten provinces each have a separate parliament and administration, with a Lieut.-Governor, appointed by the Governor-General in Council at the head of the executive. They have full powers to regulate their own local affairs and dispose of their revenues, provided that they do not interfere with the action and policy of the central administration. Among the subjects assigned exclusively to the provincial legislatures are: the amendment of the provincial constitution, except as regards the office of the Lieut.-Governor; property and civil rights; direct taxation for revenue purposes; borrowing; management and sale of Crown lands; provincial hospitals, reformatories, etc.; shop, saloon, tavern, auctioneer and other licences for local or provincial purposes; local works and undertakings, except lines of ships, railways, canals, telegraphs, etc., extending beyond the province or connecting with other provinces, and excepting also such works as the Canadian Parliament declares are for the general good; marriages, administration of justice within the province; education. On 18 July 1994 the federal and provincial governments signed an agreement easing inter-provincial barriers on government procurement, labour mobility, transport licences and product standards. Federal legislation of Dec. 1995 grants provinces a right of constitutional veto.

For the administration of the three territories see Northwest Territories, Nunavut and Yukon below.

Local Government

Under the terms of the British North America Act the provinces are given full powers over local government. All local government institutions are, therefore, supervised by the provinces, and are incorporated and function under provincial acts.

The acts under which municipalities operate vary from province to province. A municipal corporation is usually administered by an elected council headed by a mayor or reeve, whose powers to administer affairs and to raise funds by taxation and other methods are set forth in provincial laws, as is the scope of its obligations to, and on behalf of, the citizens. Similarly, the types of municipal corporations, their official designations and the requirements for their incorporation vary between provinces. The following table sets out the classifications as at the 2011 census:

	Economic regions	Census divisions
Nfld.	4	11
PEI	1	3 ¹
NS	5	18 ¹

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The administration of justice within the provinces, including the enforcement of the Criminal Code of Canada, is the responsibility of provincial governments, but all the provinces except Ontario and Quebec have entered into contracts with the Royal Canadian Mounted Police (RCMP) to enforce criminal and provincial law. In addition, in these eight provinces the RCMP is under agreement to provide police services to municipalities.

Alberta

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

The southern half of Alberta was administered from 1670 as part of Rupert's land by the Hudson's Bay Company. Trading posts were set up after 1783 when the North West Company took a share in the fur trade. In 1869 Rupert's Land was transferred from the Hudson's Bay Company (which had absorbed its rival in 1821) to the new Dominion and in the following year this land was combined with the former Crown land of the North Western Territories to form the Northwest Territories. In 1882 'Alberta' first appeared as a provisional 'district', consisting of the southern half of the present province. In 1905 the Athabasca district to the north was added when provincial status was granted to Alberta.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

The area of the province is 661,848 sq. km, 642,317 sq. km being land area and 16,531 sq. km water area. The population at the 2011 census was 3,645,257. The urban population (2006), centres of 1,000 or over, was 82.1% and the rural 17.9%. Population (2006 census) of the 16 cities, as well as the two largest specialized municipalities: Calgary, 988,193; Edmonton, 730,372; Red Deer, 82,772; Lethbridge, 74,637; St Albert, 57,719; Medicine Hat, 56,997; Grande Prairie, 47,076; Airdrie, 28,927; Spruce Grove, 19,496; Leduc, 16,967; Lloydminster (Alberta portion), 15,910; Camrose, 15,620; Fort Saskatchewan, 14,957; Brooks, 12,498; Cold Lake, 11,991; Wetaskiwin, 11,673; Specialized Municipality of Strathcona County (Sherwood Park), 82,551; Specialized Municipality of Wood Buffalo (Fort McMurray), 51,496.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

Births in 2013–14 numbered 56,078 and deaths 23,233. In 2012 the infant mortality rate was 4.3 per 1,000 live births. Life expectancy in the period 2009–11 was 83.5 years for females and 79.1 years for males.

CLIMATE

Alberta has a continental climate of warm summers and cold winters—extremes of temperature. For the capital city, Edmonton, the hottest month is usually July (mean 17.5°C), while the coldest are Dec. and Jan. (–12°C). Rainfall amounts are greatest between May and Sept. In a year, the average precipitation is 461 mm (19.6") with about 129.6 cm of snowfall.

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

The constitution of Alberta is contained in the British North America Act of 1867, and amending Acts; also in the Alberta Act of 1905, passed by the Parliament of the Dominion of Canada, which created the province out of the then Northwest Territories. The province is represented by six members in the Senate and 34 in the House of Commons of Canada.

The executive is vested nominally in the Lieut.-Governor, who is appointed by the federal government, but actually in the Executive Council or the Cabinet of the legislature. Legislative power is vested in the Assembly in the name of the Queen.

Members of the 87-member Legislative Assembly are elected by the universal vote of adults, 18 years of age and older.

RECENT ELECTIONS

In elections on 5 May 2015 the opposition New Democratic Party won 40.6% of the vote (taking 54 of 87 seats), the Wildrose Party 24.2% (21), the ruling Progressive Conservative Party 27.8% (10), the Liberal Party 4.2% (1) and the Alberta Party 2.3% (1). Turnout was 53.7%. The Progressive Conservative Party had been in power continuously since 1971.

CURRENT GOVERNMENT

Lieut.-Governor: Lois Mitchell (sworn in 12 June 2015).

As of Feb. 2016 the members of the Executive Council were as follows:

Premier and President of Executive Council: Rachel Notley; b. 1964 (New Democratic; sworn in 24 May 2016).

Deputy Premier and Minister of Health: Sarah Hoffman. Infrastructure and Transportation: Brian Mason. Education: David Eggen. Economic Development and Trade: Deron Bilous. President of the Treasury Board and Minister of Finance: Joseph Ceci. Justice and Solicitor General: Kathleen Ganley. Environment and Parks: Shannon Phillips. Agriculture and Forestry: Oneil Carlier. Municipal Affairs: Danielle Larivee. Energy: Margaret McCuaig-Boyd. Human Services: Irfan Sabir. Seniors and Housing: Lori Sigurdson. Indigenous Relations: Richard Feehan. Labour: Christina Gray. Service Alberta and Status of Women: Stephanie McLean. Culture and Tourism: Ricardo Miranda. Advanced Education: Marlin Schmidt.

ECONOMY

GDP per person in 2009 was $67,321 CDN.

Budget

Total revenue in 2008–09 was $51,388m. CDN (own source revenue, $47,005m. CDN; specific purpose transfers, $3,159m. CDN; general purpose transfers, $1,224m. CDN). Total expenditures in 2008–09 amounted to $49,201m. CDN (including: health, $13,119m. CDN; education, $11,509m. CDN; transportation and communication, $5,469m. CDN).

Performance

Real GDP grew by 5.7% in 2011 (the second highest rate of any of the Canadian provinces and territories that year) and then 4.5% in 2012 (the highest rate of any of the provinces or territories).

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Electricity

Electricity generation totalled 63.6bn. kWh in 2013 (44.9bn. kWh conventional steam), representing 10.4% of Canada's production.

Oil and Gas

Oil sands underlie some 140,200 sq. km of Alberta, the three major deposits being: the Athabasca, Cold Lake, and Peace River deposits. Some 20% (28,040 sq. km) of the Athabasca deposit can be recovered by open-pit mining techniques. The rest of the Athabasca, and all the deposits in the other areas, are deeper reserves which must be developed through in situ techniques. These reserves reach depths of 75 metres. In 2012 Alberta produced 556,000 bbls per day of conventional crude oil and 1.8m. bbls per day of synthetic crude oil and non-upgraded bitumen. The 2012 value of Albertan producers' sales of conventional crude oil plus upgraded and non-upgraded bitumen was $67.5bn. CDN. Alberta accounted for 76% of Canada's total crude oil and equivalent production in 2012.

Natural gas is found in abundance in numerous localities. In 2012, 3,450bn. cu. ft valued at $8.4bn. CDN were produced in Alberta.

Minerals

Coal production in 2012 was 28.0m. tonnes with 6.4m. tonnes of coal being exported.

The value of mineral production in 2011 (excluding oil and gas) was $2,696m. CDN.

Agriculture

There were 49,431 farms in Alberta in 2006 with a total area of 21,095,393 ha.; 9,621,606 ha. were land in crop in 2006. The majority of farms are made up of cattle, followed by grains and oilseed, and wheat. For particulars of livestock see CANADA: Agriculture.

Farm cash receipts in 2004 totalled $8,043.4m. CDN of which crops contributed $2,616.8m. CDN, livestock and products $3,993.3m. CDN and direct payments $1,433.3m. CDN.

Forestry

Alberta is covered by 38m. ha. of provincially owned Crown forest. In 2003–04 Alberta had a regulated harvest of 24,819,100 cu. metres of net merchantable forest.

Fisheries

The largest catch in commercial fishing is whitefish. Perch, tullibee, walleye, pike and lake trout are also caught in smaller quantities. Commercial fish production in 2003–04 was 2,127 tonnes, value $3.46m. CDN.

INDUSTRY

The leading manufacturing industries are food and beverages, petroleum refining, metal fabricating, wood industries, primary metal, chemicals and chemical products and non-metallic mineral products.

Manufacturing shipments had a total value of $52,965.8m. CDN in 2004. Greatest among these shipments were (in $1m. CDN): refined petroleum and coal products, 10,018; chemicals and chemical products, 9,645; food, 9,087; fabricated metal products, 4,135; machinery, 4,062; wood products, 3,753; primary metal, 2,137; paper and allied products, 1,784; non-metal mineral products, 1,695; and computer and electronic products, 1,471.

Total retail sales in 2004 were $43,703m. CDN, as compared to 2003 with $38,925m. CDN in sales. Main sales in 2004 were (in $1m. CDN): automobiles, 10,007.8; food, 7,650.9; general merchandise, 5,032.2; fuel 4,072.8; and pharmacies and personal care, 2,111.8.

Labour

In 2015 the labour force was 2,449,200 (1,099,800 females), of whom 2,301,100 (1,038,700) were employed. The unemployment rate in 2015 was 6.0%.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

Alberta's exports were valued at a record $80.6bn. CDN in 2007, an increase of 3.7% on 2006. The largest export markets were the USA, China, Japan, Mexico and the Netherlands, which together accounted for 93% of Alberta's international exports. Energy accounted for 68% of exports in 2007.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

In 2005 there were 30,800 km of provincial highways and 153,500 km of local roads.

On 31 March 2005 there were 2,459,926 motor vehicles registered.

Rail

In 2003 the length of main railway lines was 7,136 km. There are light rail networks in Edmonton (12.3 km) and Calgary (35.7 km).

Civil Aviation

Calgary International is Canada's fourth busiest airport (handling 11,775,000 passengers in 2010) and Edmonton the fifth busiest (5,981,000 passengers in 2010).

Telecommunications

In 2013, 90.1% of households had at least one mobile phone (the highest rate of any of the Canadian provinces) and 21.2% of households only had a mobile phone. 83% of households had home internet access in 2010.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The Supreme Judicial authority of the province is the Court of Appeal. Judges of the Court of Appeal and Court of Queen's Bench are appointed by the Federal government and hold office until retirement at the age of 75. There are courts of lesser jurisdiction in both civil and criminal matters. The Court of Queen's Bench has full jurisdiction over civil proceedings. A Provincial Court which has jurisdiction in civil matters up to $2,000 CDN is presided over by provincially appointed judges. Youth Courts have power to try boys and girls 12–17 years old inclusive for offences against the Young Offenders Act.

The jurisdiction of all criminal courts in Alberta is enacted in the provisions of the Criminal Code. The system of procedure in civil and criminal cases conforms as nearly as possible to the English system. In 2009–10, 53,375 Criminal Code cases were disposed of in an adult criminal court. In 2010 there were 77 homicides (a rate of 2.1 per 100,000 population).

Education

Schools of all grades are included under the term of public school (including those in the separate school system, which are publicly supported). The same board of trustees controls the schools from kindergarten to university entrance. In 2001–02 there were approximately 546,961 pupils enrolled in grades 1–12, including private schools and special education programmes. The University of Alberta (in Edmonton), founded in 1907, had, in 2004–05, 35,666 students; the University of Calgary had 28,306 students; Athabasca University had 29,542 students; the University of Lethbridge had 7,086 students. Alberta has 34 post-secondary institutions including four universities and two technical colleges.

CULTURE

Tourism

Alberta attracted more than 4,661,000 visitors from outside the province in 2003. It is known for its mountains, museums, parks and festivals. Total tourism receipts in 2003 were $4.3bn. CDN.

British Columbia

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

British Columbia, formerly known as New Caledonia, was first administered by the Hudson's Bay Company. In 1849 Vancouver Island was given crown colony status and in 1853 the Queen Charlotte Islands became a dependency. The discovery of gold on the Fraser river and the subsequent influx of population resulted in the creation in 1858 of the mainland crown colony of British Columbia, to which the Strikine Territory (established 1862) was later added. In 1866 the two colonies were united.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

British Columbia has an area of 944,735 sq. km of which land area is 925,186 sq. km. The capital is Victoria. The province is bordered westerly by the Pacific Ocean and Alaska Panhandle, northerly by the Yukon and Northwest Territories, easterly by the Province of Alberta and southerly by the USA along the 49th parallel. A chain of islands, the largest of which are Vancouver Island and the Queen Charlotte Islands, affords protection to the mainland coast.

The population at the 2011 census was 4,400,057. The principal metropolitan areas and cities and their population census for 2006 are as follows: Metropolitan Vancouver, 2,116,581; Metropolitan Victoria, 330,088; Abbotsford (amalgamated with Matsqui), 123,864; Kelowna, 106,707; Kamloops, 80,376; Nanaimo, 78,692; Prince George, 70,981; Chilliwack, 69,217; Vernon, 35,944; Penticton, 31,909; Campbell River, 29,572; Courtenay, 21,940; Cranbrook, 18,267; Port Alberni, 17,548; Fort St John, 17,402; Salmon Arm, 16,012.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

Births in 2013–14 numbered 43,781 and deaths 32,985. In 2012 the infant mortality rate was 3.8 per 1,000 live births. Life expectancy in the period 2009–11 was 84.4 years for females and 80.3 years for males.

CLIMATE

The climate is cool temperate, but mountain influences affect temperatures and rainfall considerably. Driest months occur in summer. Vancouver, Jan. 36°F (2.2°C), July 64°F (17.8°C). Annual rainfall 58" (1,458 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

The British North America Act of 1867 provided for eventual admission into Canadian Confederation, and on 20 July 1871 British Columbia became the sixth province of the Dominion.

British Columbia has a unicameral legislature of 85 elected members. Government policy is determined by the Executive Council responsible to the Legislature. The Lieut.-Governor is appointed by the Governor-General of Canada, usually for a term of five years, and is the head of the executive government of the province.

The Legislative Assembly is elected for a maximum term of five years. Every Canadian citizen 18 years and over, having resided a minimum of six months in the province, duly registered, is entitled to vote. The province is represented in the Federal Parliament by 42 members in the House of Commons and six Senators.

RECENT ELECTIONS

At the Legislative Assembly elections of 14 May 2013 the ruling Liberal Party won 44.1% of the vote and 49 of the 85 seats, the New Democratic Party 39.7% and 34 seats and the Green Party 8.1% and one seat; an independent also took one seat. Turnout was 55.3%.

CURRENT GOVERNMENT

Lieut.-Governor: Judith Guichon (sworn in 2 Nov. 2012).

The Liberal Executive Council comprised in Feb. 2016:

Premier and President of the Executive Council: Christy Clark.

Deputy Premier, and Minister of Natural Gas Development: Rich Coleman.

Minister of Aboriginal Relations and Reconciliation: John Rustad. Advanced Education: Andrew Wilkinson. Agriculture: Norm

Letnick. Children and Family Development: Stephanie Cadieux. Community, Sport and Cultural Development: Peter Fassbender. Education: Mike Bernier. Energy and Mines: Bill Bennett. Environment: Mary Polak. Finance: Michael de Jong. Forests, Lands and Natural Resources Operations: Steve Thomson. Health: Terry Lake. International Trade: Teresa Wat. Jobs, Tourism and Skills Training: Shirley Bond. Justice and Attorney General: Suzanne Anton. Public Security: Mike Morris. Small Business, and Red Tape Reduction: Coralee Oakes. Social Development and Social Innovation: Michelle Stilwell. Technology, Innovation and Citizens' Services: Amrik Virk. Transportation and Infrastructure: Todd Stone.

ECONOMY

GDP per person in 2009 was $42,827 CDN.

Budget

Total revenue in 2008–09 was $48,949m. CDN (own source revenue, $42,334m. CDN; specific purpose transfers, $4,951m. CDN; general purpose transfers, $1,663m. CDN). Total expenditures in 2008–09 amounted to $51,533m. CDN (including: health, $14,960m. CDN; education, $11,853m. CDN; social services, $7,242m. CDN).

Performance

Real GDP grew by 2.8% in 2011 and 2.4% in 2012.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Electricity

Electricity generation totalled 64.1bn. kWh in 2013 (58.2bn. kWh hydro), representing 10.5% of Canada's production.

Oil and Gas

In 2004 natural gas production, from the northeastern part of the province, was valued at $5.83bn. CDN.

Minerals

Coal, copper, gold, zinc, silver and molybdenum are the most important minerals produced but natural gas amounts to approximately half of the value of mineral and fuel extraction. The value of mineral production in 2006 was estimated at $5.99bn. CDN. Coal production (from the northeastern and southeastern regions) was valued at $2.11bn. CDN. Copper was the most valuable metal with production totalling $2.19bn. CDN; gold production amounted to $344m. CDN.

Agriculture

Only 3% of the total land area is arable or potentially arable. Farm holdings (19,844 in 2006) cover 2.8m. ha. with an average size of 143 ha. Farm cash receipts in 2007 were $2.4bn. CDN, led by dairy products valued at $424m. CDN, floriculture and nursery products valued at $404m. CDN and poultry and eggs valued at $382m. CDN. For particulars of livestock see CANADA: Agriculture.

Forestry

Around 49.9m. ha. are considered productive forest land of which 48.0m. ha. are provincial crown lands managed by the Ministry of Forests. Approximately 96% of the forested land is coniferous. The total timber harvest in 2007 was 72.9m. cu. metres. Output of forest-based products, 2007: lumber, 3.7m. cu. metres; plywood (2006), 1.6m. cu. metres; pulp, 4.7m. tonnes; newsprint, paper and paperboard, 2.5m. tonnes.

Fisheries

In 2006 the total landed value of the catch was $786m. CDN; wholesale value $1.3bn. CDN. Salmon (wild and farmed) generated 53% of the wholesale value of seafood products, followed by groundfish and shellfish. In 2006, 7,800 people worked in the commercial fishery, aquaculture and fish processing industries.

INDUSTRY

The value of shipments from all manufacturing industries reached $42.2bn. CDN in 2004, including wood ($13.0bn. CDN), paper ($5.9bn. CDN), food ($5.0bn. CDN) and primary metals ($2.4bn. CDN).

Labour

In 2015 the labour force was 2,457,600 (1,159,700 females), of whom 2,306,200 (1,095,800) were employed. The unemployment rate in 2015 was 6.2%.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

Imports in 2007 totalled $38,687m. CDN in value, while exports amounted to $31,459m. CDN. The USA is the largest market for products exported through British Columbia customs ports ($19,009m. CDN in 2007), followed by Japan ($4,102m. CDN) and People's Republic of China, excluding Hong Kong ($1,744m. CDN).

Wood products accounted for 22.7% of exports in 2007, energy products 19.6%, pulp and paper products 16.2%, machinery and equipment 11.0% and metallic mineral products 10.9%.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

In 2001 there were 42,440 km of provincial highway, of which 23,710 km were paved. In 2007, 1,995,000 passenger cars and 664,000 commercial vehicles were registered.

Rail

The province is served by two transcontinental railways, the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Canadian National Railway. Passenger service is provided by VIA Rail, a Crown Corporation, and the publicly owned British Columbia Railway. In 1995 the American company Amtrak began operating a service between Seattle and Vancouver after a 14-year hiatus. British Columbia is also served by the freight trains of the B.C. Hydro and Power Authority, the Northern Alberta Railways Company and the Burlington Northern and Southern Railways Inc. The combined route-mileage of mainline track operated by the CPR, CNR and BCR totals 6,800 km. The system also includes CPR and CNR wagon ferry connections to Vancouver Island, between Prince Rupert and Alaska, and interchanges with American railways at southern border points. There is a light rail system in Vancouver, opened in 1985 (50 km). A commuter rail service linking Vancouver and the Fraser Valley was established in 1995 (69 km).

Civil Aviation

Vancouver International Airport is Canada's second busiest airport. It handled 16,254,000 passengers in 2010, up from 15,660,000 in 2009. The second busiest in British Columbia is Victoria International Airport. It handled 1,464,000 passengers in 2010, down from 1,491,000 in 2009.

Shipping

The major ports are Vancouver (the largest dry cargo port on the North American Pacific coast), Prince Rupert and ports on the Fraser River. Other deep-sea ports include Nanaimo, Port Alberni, Campbell River, Powell River, Kitimat, Stewart and Squamish. Total cargo shipped through the port of Vancouver in 2007 was 82.7m. tonnes. 961,000 cruise passengers visited Vancouver in 2007.

British Columbia Ferries—one of the largest ferry systems in the world—connect Vancouver Island with the mainland and also provide service to other coastal points; in 2006–07, over 21m. passengers and more than 8.5m. vehicles were carried. Service by other ferry systems is also provided between Vancouver Island and the USA. The Alaska State Ferries connect Prince Rupert with centres in Alaska.

Telecommunications

In 2013, 87.1% of households had at least one mobile phone and 23.1% of households only had a mobile phone (the highest rate of any of the Canadian provinces). 84% of households had home internet access in 2010.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The judicial system is composed of the Court of Appeal, the Supreme Court, County Courts and various Provincial Courts, including Magistrates' Courts and Small Claims Courts. The federal courts include the Supreme Court of Canada and the Federal Court of Canada.

In 2009–10, 40,467 Criminal Code cases were disposed of in an adult criminal court. In 2010 there were 83 homicides (a rate of 1.8 per 100,000 population).

Education

Education, free up to Grade XII level, is financed jointly from municipal and provincial government revenues. Attendance is compulsory from the age of five to 16. There were 582,691 pupils enrolled in 1,634 public schools from kindergarten to Grade 12 in Sept. 2007.

The universities had a full-time enrolment of 114,536 for 2006–07. Enrolment at the six universities (2006–07): the University of British Columbia, 48,293; Simon Fraser University, 24,842; University of Victoria, 19,372; Thompson Rivers University, 14,711; University of Northern British Columbia, 3,672; Royal Roads University, 3,646. There were three university-colleges in 2006: Kwantlen University College, Surrey; Malaspina University-College, Nanaimo; University College of the Fraser Valley, Abbotsford. British Columbia also had 12 colleges and five institutes in 2006: Camosun College, Victoria; Capilano College, North Vancouver; College of New Caledonia, Prince George; College of the Rockies, Cranbrook; Douglas College, New Westminster; Langara College, Vancouver; North Island College, Courtenay; Northern Lights College, Dawson Creek; Northwest Community College, Terrace; Okanagan College, Kelowna; Selkirk College, Castlegar; Vancouver Community College, Vancouver; British Columbia Institute of Technology, Burnaby; Emily Carr Institute of Art and Design, Vancouver; Institute of Indigenous Government, Burnaby; Justice Institute of British Columbia, New Westminster; Nicola Valley Institute of Technology, Merritt.

Televised distance education and special programmes through KNOW, the Knowledge Network of the West, are also provided.

Health

The government operates a hospital insurance scheme giving universal coverage after a qualifying period of three months' residence in the province. The province has come under a national medicare scheme which is partially subsidized by the provincial government and partially by the federal government. In March 2003 there were approximately 8,400 acute care and rehabilitation hospital beds. The provincial government spent an estimated $12.1bn. CDN on health programmes in 2006–07. 38% of the government's total expenditure was for health care in 2005–06.

CULTURE

Tourism

British Columbia's greatest attractions are Vancouver, and the provincial parks and ecological reserves that make up the Protected Areas System. There were more than 11,000 campsites and over 6,000 km of hiking trails in 2007. In 2003, 21.87m. tourists spent $8.95bn. CDN in the province.

Manitoba

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Manitoba was known as the Red River Settlement before it entered the dominion in 1870. During the 18th century its only inhabitants were fur-trappers, but a more settled colonization began in the 19th century. The area was administered by the Hudson's Bay Company until 1869 when it was purchased by the new dominion. In 1870 it was given provincial status. It was enlarged in 1881 and again in 1912 by the addition of part of the Northwest Territories.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

The area of the province is 647,797 sq. km (250,114 sq. miles), of which 553,556 sq. km are land and 94,241 sq. km water. From north to south it is 1,225 km, and at the widest point it is 793 km.

The population at the 2011 census was 1,208,268. The 2006 census showed the following figures for areas of population of over 10,000 people: Winnipeg, the province's capital and largest city, 694,668; Brandon, 41,511; Thompson, 13,446; Portage la Prairie, 12,773; Steinbach, 11,066.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

Births in 2013–14 numbered 16,248 and deaths 10,588. In 2012 the infant mortality rate was 5.9 per 1,000 live births. Life expectancy in the period 2009–11 was 82.2 years for females and 77.7 years for males.

CLIMATE

The climate is cold continental, with very severe winters but pleasantly warm summers. Rainfall amounts are greatest in the months May to Sept. Winnipeg, Jan. –3°F (–19.3°C), July 67°F (19.6°C). Annual rainfall 21" (539 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

The provincial government is administered by a Lieut.-Governor assisted by an Executive Council (Cabinet), which is appointed from and responsible to a Legislative Assembly of 57 members elected for five years. Women were enfranchised in 1916. The province is represented by six members in the Senate and 14 in the House of Commons of Canada.

RECENT ELECTIONS

In elections to the Legislative Assembly held on 19 April 2016 the Progressive Conservative Party of Manitoba won 40 of 57 seats (53.4% of the vote), the New Democratic Party of Manitoba 14 seats (25.6%) and the Liberal Party 3 seats (14.2%). Turnout was 57.6%.

CURRENT GOVERNMENT

Lieut.-Governor: Janice Filmon; b. 1943 (took office on 19 June 2015).

The members of the Progressive Conservative Party of Manitoba government in May 2016 were:

Premier, President of the Executive Council, and Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs and International Relations: Brian Pallister; b. 1954.

Deputy Premier, and Minister of Justice and Attorney General: Heather Stefanson.

Minister of Agriculture: Ralph Eichler. Crown Services: Ron Schuler. Education and Training: Ian Wishart. Families: Scott Fielding. Finance: Cameron Friesen. Growth, Enterprise and Trade: Cliff Cullen. Health, Seniors and Active Living: Kelvin Goertzen. Indigenous and Municipal Relations: Eileen Clarke.

Infrastructure: Blaine Pedersen. Sport, Culture and Heritage: Rochelle Squires. Sustainable Development: Cathy Cox.

ECONOMY

GDP per capita was $41,809 CDN in 2009.

Budget

Total revenue in 2008–09 was $14,715m. CDN (own source revenue, $10,788m. CDN; general purpose transfers, $2,458m. CDN; specific purpose transfers, $1,469m. CDN). Total expenditures in 2008–09 amounted to $15,025m. CDN (including: health, $4,470m. CDN; education, $3,237m. CDN; social services, $1,901m. CDN).

Performance

Real GDP grew by 2.1% in 2011, rising to 3.3% in 2012.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Electricity

Electricity generation totalled 35.9bn. kWh in 2013 (35.4bn. kWh hydro), representing 5.9% of Canada's production.

Oil and Gas

Oil production in 2010 was a record 11.7m. bbls. The estimated value of oil sold in 2010 was $907m. CDN, up 45.3% from 2009.

Minerals

Principal minerals mined are nickel, zinc, copper, gold and small quantities of silver. The value of mineral production increased 24.0% in 2010 to $1,663.5m. CDN. At $674m. CDN, nickel is Manitoba's most important mineral product, accounting for 26.2% of the province's total value of mineral production. Copper accounted for 24.6% of the value of mineral production in 2010, with a large increase in price and an 8.0% gain in the province's output. Zinc, which accounts for 10.3% of mineral production value, also saw a jump in price, while its volume of production was steady in 2010. Gold was 10.8% of mineral production value, with strong growth in both price and production in Manitoba.

Agriculture

Rich farmland is the main primary resource, although the area in farms is only about 18% of the total land area. In 2010 total farm cash receipts increased by 0.1% to $4.85bn. CDN. Crop receipts fell 2.2% to $2.74bn. CDN but livestock receipts increased 6.2% to $1.76bn. CDN. Crop receipts accounted for 61% of total market receipts while livestock accounted for 39%. Within crops, the oilseeds share increased compared to wheat during the 2000s, illustrating its growing importance to Manitoba agriculture. For particulars of livestock see CANADA: Agriculture.

Fisheries

From about 57,000 sq. km of rivers and lakes, the value of fisheries production to fishers was about $27.0m. CDN in 2008–09 representing about 12,130 tonnes of fish. Pickerel, pike, sauger and whitefish are the principal varieties of fish caught.

INDUSTRY

Manitoba's diverse manufacturing sector is the province's largest industry, accounting for approximately 10.7% of total GDP. The value of manufacturing shipments declined by 1.6% in 2010 to $14.4bn. CDN.

Labour

In 2015 the labour force was 674,100 (317,400 females), of whom 636,200 (299,400) were employed. The unemployment rate in 2015 was 5.6%.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

In 2002 Manitoba merchandise exports to the US rose 1% to $7.6bn. CDN. Manitoba is the only province in Canada to record higher exports to the USA in 2001 and 2002. Merchandise exports to the USA comprise 82% of Manitoba's total foreign merchandise exports. In 2002 merchandise exports to Japan (Manitoba's second-most important foreign market) increased 3.2% while exports declined to Mexico, Hong Kong, Belgium and China. Manufacturing industries' exports, which account for about two-thirds of Manitoba's total foreign exports, increased by 1%. Gains were posted by four of the five largest manufacturing industry categories. Leading growth export industries include machinery, printing and wood products.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

Highways and provincial roads total 18,500 km, with 2,800 bridges and other structures. In 2003 there were 498,880 passenger vehicles (including taxis), 118,823 trucks, 51,122 farm trucks, 27,978 off-road vehicles and 9,138 motorcycles registered in the province.

Rail

The province has about 5,650 km of commercial track, not including industrial track, yards and sidings. Most of the track belongs to the country's two national railways. Canadian Pacific owns about 1,950 km and Canadian National about 2,400 km. The Hudson Bay Railway, operated by Denver-based Omnitrax, has about 1,300 km of track. Fort Worth-based Burlington Northern's railcars are moved in Manitoba on CN and CP tracks and trains.

Civil Aviation

Winnipeg (James Armstrong Richardson International Airport) was Canada's eighth busiest airport in 2010, handling 3,385,000 passengers (3,372,000 in 2009).

Telecommunications

In 2013, 82.9% of households had at least one mobile phone and 18.5% of households only had a mobile phone. 73% of households had home internet access in 2010.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

In 2009–10, 16,849 Criminal Code cases were disposed of in an adult criminal court. In 2010 there were 45 homicides (a rate of 3.6 per 100,000 population)

Education

Education is controlled through locally elected school divisions. There were 181,446 students enrolled in the province's public schools in the 2007–08 school year. Student teacher ratios (including all instructors but excluding school-based administrators) averaged one teacher for every 17.6 students in 2006–07.

Manitoba has four universities with a total full- and part-time undergraduate and graduate enrolment for the 2003–04 academic year of 39,500. They are the University of Manitoba, founded in 1877; the University of Winnipeg; Brandon University; and the Collège universitaire de Saint Boniface.

Community colleges in Brandon, The Pas and Winnipeg offer two-year diploma courses in a number of fields, as well as specialized training in many trades. They also give a large number and variety of shorter courses, both at their campuses and in many communities throughout the province. Provincial government expenditure on education and training for the 2003–04 fiscal year was budgeted at $1.59bn. CDN.

CULTURE

Tourism

Between 2009 and 2010 Manitoba recorded a 14.1% increase in total visitor numbers. In 2009 visitors spent $1.2bn. CDN (representing 2.8% of GDP). The province received a total of 6,910,000 visits in 2009 of which 371,000 were from the USA and 82,000 from other foreign countries. 24,800 people were employed in tourism-related jobs in 2009.

New Brunswick

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Visited by Jacques Cartier in 1534, New Brunswick was first explored by Samuel de Champlain in 1604. With Nova Scotia, it originally formed one French colony called Acadia. It was ceded by the French in the Treaty of Utrecht in 1713 and became a permanent British possession in 1759. It was first settled by British colonists in 1764 but was separated from Nova Scotia, and became a province in June 1784 as a result of the influx of United Empire Loyalists. Responsible government from 1848 consisted of an executive council, a legislative council (later abolished) and a House of Assembly. In 1867 New Brunswick entered the Confederation.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

The area of the province is 72,908 sq. km (28,150 sq. miles), of which 71,450 sq. km (27,587 sq. miles) is land area. The 2011 census counted 751,171 people in New Brunswick. At the time of the 2006 census, the most frequently reported ethnic origin, whether reported alone or in combination with other origins, was Canadian (53%). French was the second most frequently reported ancestry (27%), followed by English (25%), Irish (21%) and Scottish (20%). A total of 36,015 persons in New Brunswick identified themselves as Aboriginal (that is, as a North American Indian, Métis or Inuit) in 2006.

The seven urban centres of the province and their respective populations based on 2006 census figures are: Moncton, 126,424; Saint John, 122,389; Fredericton (capital), 85,688; Bathurst, 31,424; Miramichi, 24,737; Edmundston, 21,442; Campbellton (part only), 14,826. The official languages are English and French.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

Births in 2013–14 numbered 6,827 and deaths 6,832. In 2012 the infant mortality rate was 5.7 per 1,000 live births. Life expectancy in the period 2009–11 was 83.1 years for females and 78.4 years for males.

CLIMATE

A cool temperate climate, with rain in all seasons but temperatures modified by the influence of the Gulf Stream. Annual average total precipitation in Fredericton: 1,131 mm. Warmest month, July (average high) 25.6°C.

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

The government is vested in a Lieut.-Governor, appointed by the Queen's representative in New Brunswick, and a Legislative Assembly of 55 members, each of whom is individually elected to represent the voters in one constituency or riding. The political party with the largest number of elected representatives, after a Provincial election, forms the government.

The province has ten appointed members in the Canadian Senate and elects ten members in the House of Commons.

RECENT ELECTIONS

Elections to the provincial assembly were held on 22 Sept. 2014. The Liberal Party won 27 seats (with 42.7% of the vote), the Progressive Conservative Party 21 seats (with 34.6%) and the Green Party one seat (6.6%).

CURRENT GOVERNMENT

Lieut.-Governor: Jocelyne Roy-Vienneau (took office on 23 Oct. 2014).

The members of the Liberal government were as follows in Feb. 2016:

Premier and President of Executive Council Office: Brian Gallant; b. 1982.

Deputy Premier, Minister of Public Safety and Solicitor General, and Justice: Stephen Horsman.

Minister of Natural Resources, and Human Resources: Denis Landry. Energy and Mines: Donald Arseneault. Economic Development, and Agriculture, Aquaculture and Fisheries: Rick Doucet. Health: Victor Boudreau. Environment and Local Government: Brian Kenny. Tourism, Heritage and Culture: Bill Fraser. Finance, and Transport and Infrastructure: Roger Melanson. Post-Secondary Education, Training and Labour: Francine Landry. Social Development, and Healthy and Inclusive Communities: Cathy Rogers. Education and Early Childhood Development: Serge Rousselle.

ECONOMY

GDP per capita in 2009 was $36,663 CDN.

Budget

Total revenue in 2008–09 was $8,978m. CDN (own source revenue, $6,313m. CDN; general purpose transfers, $1,824m. CDN; specific purpose transfers, $840m. CDN). Total expenditures in 2008–09 amounted to $9,373m. CDN (including: health, $3,245m. CDN; education, $1,886m. CDN; debt charges, $945m. CDN).

Performance

Real GDP grew by 0.6% in 2011 but then contracted by 0.4% in 2012.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Electricity

Hydro-electric, thermal and nuclear generating stations of NB Power had an installed capacity of 3,142 MW at 31 March 2010, consisting of 14 generating stations. Electricity generation totalled 13.9bn. kWh in 2013 (4.4bn. kWh conventional steam), representing 2.3% of Canada's production.

Oil and Gas

In 2002 Enbridge Gas New Brunswick continued developing the natural gas distribution system in the province, which is now available in Fredericton, Moncton, St John, St George and Oromocto.

Minerals

The total value of minerals produced in 2006 was $1,538.6m. CDN. The top four contributors to mineral production are zinc, lead, silver and peat, accounting for 79.7% of total value in 2006. In 2007 New Brunswick ranked first in Canada for the production of zinc, bismuth and lead, second for silver and sixth for copper.

Agriculture

The total area under crops was 151,996 ha. in 2006. Farms numbered 2,776 and averaged 142 ha. (census 2006). Potatoes account for 33% of total farm cash receipts and dairy products 11%. New Brunswick is self-sufficient in fluid milk and supplies a processing industry. For particulars of livestock see CANADA: Agriculture. Net farm income in 2005 was $25.4m. CDN.

Forestry

New Brunswick contains some 6m. ha. of productive forest lands. The value of shipments of forest products in 2008 was $1.25bn. CDN; the value of manufacturing shipments for the wood-related industries was $871m. CDN. In 2008 nearly 13,000 people were employed in all aspects of the forest industry.

Fisheries

Commercial fishing is one of the most important primary industries of the province, employing 6,366 in 2007. Landings in 2005 (117,295 tonnes) amounted to $197m. CDN. In 2005 molluscs and crustaceans ranked first with a value of $178m. CDN, 90% of the total landed value. Exports in 2005, totalling $653.4m. CDN, went mainly to the USA and Japan.

INDUSTRY

Important industries include food and beverages, paper and allied industries, and timber products.

Labour

In 2015 the labour force was 390,200 (188,000 females), of whom 351,800 (174,300) were employed. The unemployment rate in 2015 was 9.8%.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

New Brunswick's location, with deepwater harbours open throughout the year and container facilities at Saint John, makes it ideal for exporting. The main exports include lumber, wood pulp, newsprint, refined petroleum products and electricity. In 2009 the major trading partners of the province were the USA with 86% of total exports, followed by the Netherlands with 3%. Imports totalled $9,396m. CDN while exports reached $9,902m. CDN in 2009.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

There are 21,423 km of roads in the Provincial Highway system, of which 8,333 km consists of arterial, collector and local roads that provide access to most areas. The main highway system, including approximately 964 km of the Trans-Canada Highway, links the province with the principal roads in Quebec, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, as well as the Interstate Highway System in the eastern seaboard states of the USA. At 31 March 2009 total road motor vehicle registrations numbered 524,300 of which 489,507 were vehicles weighing less than 4,500 kilograms, 7,662 were vehicles weighing 4,500 kilograms to 14,999 kilograms, 4,643 were vehicles weighing 15,000 kilograms or more, 3,086 were buses and 19,399 were motorcycles and mopeds.

Rail

New Brunswick is served by the Canadian National Railways, Springfield Terminal Railway, New Brunswick Southern Railway, New Brunswick East Coast Railway, Le Chemin de fer de la Matapédia et du Golfe and VIA Rail. The Salem-Hillsborough rail is popular with tourists.

Civil Aviation

There are three major airports at Fredericton, Moncton and Saint John. There are also a number of small regional airports.

Shipping

New Brunswick has five major ports. The Port of Saint John handles approximately 20m. tonnes of cargo each year including forest products, steel, potash and petroleum. The Port of Belledune is a deep-water port and open all year round. Other ports are Dalhousie, Bayside/St Andrews and Miramichi.

Telecommunications

In 2013, 80.5% of households had at least one mobile phone and 13.0% of households only had a mobile phone. 70% of households had home internet access in 2010.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

In 2009, 47,923 Criminal Code offences were reported, including 12 homicides.

Education

Public education is free and non-sectarian.

There were, in Sept. 2009, 106,394 students (including kindergarten) and 7,896 full-time equivalent/professional educational staff in the province's 322 schools.

There are four universities. The University of New Brunswick at Fredericton (founded 13 Dec. 1785 by the Loyalists, elevated to university status in 1823 and reorganized as the University of New Brunswick in 1859) had 9,007 full-time students at the Fredericton campus and 3,017 full-time students at the Saint John campus (2002–03); the Université de Moncton at Moncton, 5,089 full-time students; St Thomas University at Fredericton, 2,897 full-time students; Mount Allison University at Sackville had 2,199 full-time students.

CULTURE

Tourism

New Brunswick has a number of historic buildings as well as libraries, museums and other cultural sites. Tourism is one of the leading contributors to the economy. In 2007 tourism revenues reached $1.4bn. CDN.

Newfoundland and Labrador

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Archaeological finds at L'Anse aux Meadows in northern Newfoundland show that the Vikings established a colony here in about AD 1000. This site is the only known Viking colony in North America. Newfoundland was discovered by John Cabot on 24 June 1497, and was soon frequented in the summer months by the Portuguese, Spanish and French for its fisheries. It was formally occupied in Aug. 1583 by Sir Humphrey Gilbert on behalf of the English Crown but various attempts to colonize the island remained unsuccessful. Although British sovereignty was recognized in 1713 by the Treaty of Utrecht, disputes over fishing rights with the French were not finally settled until 1904. By the Anglo-French Convention of 1904, France renounced her exclusive fishing rights along part of the coast, granted under the Treaty of Utrecht, but retained sovereignty of the offshore islands of St Pierre and Miquelon. Self-governing from 1855, the colony remained outside of the Canadian confederation in 1867 and continued to govern itself until 1934, when a commission of government appointed by the British Crown assumed responsibility for governing the colony and Labrador. This body controlled the country until union with Canada in 1949.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Area, 405,212 sq. km (156,452 sq. miles), of which freshwater, 31,340 sq. km (12,100 sq. miles). In March 1927 the Privy Council decided the boundary between Canada and Newfoundland in Labrador. This area, now part of the Province of Newfoundland and Labrador, is 294,330 sq. km (113,641 sq. miles) of land area.

Newfoundland island's coastline is punctuated with numerous bays, fjords and inlets, providing many good deep water harbours. Approximately one-third of the area is covered by water. Grand Lake, the largest body of water, has an area of about 530 sq. km. Good agricultural land is generally found in the valleys of the Terra Nova River, the Gander River, the Exploits River and the Humber River, which are also heavily timbered. The Strait of Belle Isle separates the island from Labrador to the north. Bordering on the Canadian province of Quebec, Labrador is a vast, pristine wilderness and extremely sparsely populated (approximately 10 sq. km per person). Labrador's Lake Melville is 2,934 sq. km and its highest peak, Mount Caubvick, is 1,700 metres.

The population at the 2011 census was 514,536. The capital of the province is the City of St John's (2006 census population, 100,646). The other cities are Mt Pearl (24,671 in 2006) and Corner Brook (20,083); important towns are Conception Bay South (21,966), Grand Falls-Windsor (13,558), Paradise (12,584), Gander (9,951), Happy Valley-Goose Bay (7,572), Labrador City (7,240), Stephenville (6,588), Portugal Cove-St Philip's (6,575), Torbay (6,281), Marystown (5,436), Bay Roberts (5,414) and Clarenville (5,274).

SOCIAL STATISTICS

Births in 2013–14 numbered 4,484 and deaths 4,849. In 2012 the infant mortality rate was 5.5 per 1,000 live births. Life expectancy in the period 2009–11 was 82.0 years for females and 77.1 years for males.

CLIMATE

The cool temperate climate is marked by heavy precipitation, distributed evenly over the year, a cool summer and frequent fogs in spring. St. John's, Jan. -4°C, July 15-8°C. Annual rainfall 1,240 mm.

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

Until 1832 Newfoundland was ruled by a British Governor. In that year a Legislature was brought into existence, but the Governor and his Executive Council were not responsible to it. Under the constitution of 1855, the government was administered by the Governor appointed by the Crown with an Executive Council responsible to the House of Assembly.

Parliamentary government was suspended in 1933 on financial grounds and Government by Commission was inaugurated on 16 Feb. 1934. Confederation with Canada was approved by a referendum in July 1948. In the Canadian Senate on 18 Feb. 1949 Royal Assent was given to the terms of union of Newfoundland and Labrador with Canada, and on 23 March 1949, in the House of Lords, London, Royal Assent was given to an amendment to the British North America Act, made necessary by the inclusion of Newfoundland and Labrador as the tenth Province of Canada. Since April 1949 Newfoundland and Labrador has had a Lieut.-Governor rather than a Governor, and its House of Assembly (comprised of 48 members) was reconstituted.

The province is represented by six members in the Senate and by seven members in the House of Commons of Canada.

RECENT ELECTIONS

Elections were held on 30 Nov. 2015. The Liberal Party won 31 of the 40 seats in the House of Assembly with 57.2% of the vote; the Progressive Conservative Party, 7 (30.1%); and the New Democratic Party, 2 (12.1%).

CURRENT GOVERNMENT

Lieut.-Governor: Frank Fagan; b. 1945 (assumed office 19 March 2013).

In Feb. 2016 the Liberal cabinet was composed as follows:

Premier and Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs, and Labrador and Aboriginal Affairs: Dwight Ball (sworn in 14 Dec. 2015).

Minister of Advanced Education and Skills: Gerry Byrne. Business, Tourism, Culture and Rural Development: Christopher Mitchelmore. Child, Youth and Family Services: Sherry Gambin-Walsh. Education and Early Childhood Development: Dale Kirby. Environment and Conservation: Perry Trimper. Finance and President of the Treasury Board: Cathy Bennett. Fisheries and Aquaculture: Steve Crocker. Health and Community Services: Dr John Haggie. Justice and Public Safety: Andrew Parsons. Municipal Affairs, and Service NL: Eddie Joyce. Natural Resources: Siobhan Coady. Transportation and Works: Al Hawkins.

Speaker of the House of Assembly: Wade Verge.

ECONOMY

GDP per capita was $49,067 CDN in 2009.

Budget

Total revenue in 2008–09 was $8,374m. CDN (own source revenue, $4,396m. CDN; general purpose transfers, $3,280m. CDN; specific purpose transfers, $697m. CDN). Total expenditures in 2008–09 amounted to $7,121m. CDN (including: health, $2,228m. CDN; education, $1,535m. CDN; transportation and communication, $588m. CDN).

Performance

Real GDP grew by 3.1% in 2011, but then contracted by 4.5% in 2012.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Electricity

Newfoundland and Labrador is served by two large physically independent electrical systems with a total of 7,412 MW of operational electrical generating capacity and 23 small isolated systems primarily supplied by diesel-fuelled internal combustion generators. In 2011 total provincial electricity generation equalled 41.2bn. kWh, of which about 97% was from hydro-electric sources. Approximately 73% of total electricity generation was exported outside the province. Electricity service for a total of 274,000 retail customers is provided by two utilities and regulated by the Board of Commissioners of Public Utilities.

Oil and Gas

Newfoundland and Labrador is home to three active offshore oil projects: Hibernia, Terra Nova and White Rose. In 2011 oil production from Hibernia reached 56.3m. bbls. The Terra Nova development started producing oil in Jan. 2002 and in 2003 produced more than 40m. bbls, although production declined in 2011 to 15.7m. bbls. Production at the White Rose development started in Nov. 2005 and reached 25.2m. bbls in 2011. Oil production from a fourth development, Hebron, is expected to begin in 2017.

Minerals

The mineral resources are vast but only partially documented. Large deposits of iron ore, with an ore reserve of over 5,000m. tonnes at Labrador City, Wabush City and in the Knob Lake area, are supplying approximately half of Canada's production. Other large deposits of iron ore are known to exist in the Julienne Lake area. The Central Mineral Belt, which extends from the Smallwood Reservoir to the Atlantic coast near Makkovik, holds uranium, copper, beryllium and molybdenite potential.

The percentage share of mineral shipment value in 2009 stood at 59% for iron ore and 20% for nickel. Other major mineral products were copper, zinc and gold. The value of mineral shipments in 2011 totalled $4.6bn. CDN, representing a 22% increase over 2010.

Agriculture

Farm receipts in 2011 were $124.8m. CDN, an increase of 5.8% on 2010. In 2011 dairy products contributed $43.3m. CDN, crops $18.2m. CDN, eggs $17.1m. CDN and furs $15.8m. CDN. For particulars of livestock see CANADA: Agriculture.

Forestry

The forestry economy in the province is mainly dependent on the operation of its one remaining newsprint mill. Paper shipments totalled 246,000 tonnes in 2012. The province's forestry sector estimated value for 2009 was $250m. CDN for the products produced. This included newsprint, lumber and value added production. Lumber mills and saw-log operations produced 81.2m. bd ft in 2011.

Fisheries

Closure of the northern cod and other groundfish fisheries has switched attention to secondary seafood production and aquaculture. The total catch in 2009 was 301,496 tonnes valued at $423m. CDN. Shellfish accounted for 55.3% of total landings and 83.1% of landed value. 10,300 people were employed in the fishing industry in 2009.

INDUSTRY

The total value of manufacturing shipments in 2012 was $7.3bn. CDN, a 32.0% increase on 2011, mainly owing to higher production of refined petroleum products. Other significant contributors were fish products and newsprint.

Labour

In 2015 the labour force was 270,800 (129,700 females), of whom 236,200 (116,900) were employed. The unemployment rate in 2015 was 12.8%.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

In 2012 there were 20,210 km of roads, of which 11,703 km were paved. In 2010 there were 334,912 motor vehicles registered.

Rail

The Quebec North Shore and Labrador Railway operated both freight and passenger services on its 588 km main line from Sept-Iles, Quebec, to Shefferville, Quebec and its 58 km spur line from Ross Bay Junction to Labrador City, Newfoundland. In 2013 iron ore freight totalled 19.6m. tonnes.

Civil Aviation

The province is linked to the rest of Canada by regular air services provided by Air Canada and a number of smaller air carriers.

Shipping

Marine Atlantic, a federal crown corporation, provides a freight and passenger service all year round from Channel-Port aux Basques to North Sydney, Nova Scotia; and seasonal ferries connect Argentia with North Sydney, and Lewisporte with Goose Bay, Labrador.

Telecommunications

In 2013, 85.9% of households had at least one mobile phone and 15.8% of households had three or more mobile phones. 74% of households had home internet access in 2010.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

In 2009–10, 4,846 Criminal Code cases were disposed of in an adult criminal court. In 2010 there were four homicides (a rate of 0.8 per 100,000 population).

Education

In 2014–15 total enrolment for elementary and secondary education was 67,293 and full-time equivalent teachers numbered 5,379; total number of schools was 264 in 2013–14. Memorial University, offering courses in arts, humanities and social sciences, professional programmes and sciences, had 18,420 students in 2014–15 (14,225 full-time).

CULTURE

Tourism

In 2014, 507,900 non-resident tourists (497,900 in 2013) spent approximately $491.1m. CDN in the province.

Nova Scotia

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Nova Scotia was visited by John and Sebastian Cabot in 1497–98. In 1605 a number of French colonists settled at Port Royal. The old name of the colony, Acadia, was changed in 1621 to Nova Scotia. The French were granted possession of the colony by the Treaty of St-Germain-en-Laye (1632). In 1654 Oliver Cromwell sent a force to occupy the settlement. Charles II, by the Treaty of Breda (1667), restored Nova Scotia to the French. It was finally ceded to the British by the Treaty of Utrecht in 1713. In the Treaty of Paris (1763) France resigned all claims and in 1820 Cape Breton Island united with Nova Scotia. Representative government was granted as early as 1758 and a fully responsible Legislative Assembly was established in 1848. In 1867 the province entered the dominion of Canada.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

The area of the province is 55,284 sq. km (21,345 sq. miles), of which 53,338 sq. km are land area and 1,946 sq. km water area. The population at the 2011 census was 921,727.

Population of the major urban areas (2006 census): Halifax Regional Municipality, 372,679; Cape Breton Regional Municipality, 102,250. Principal towns (2006 census): Truro, 11,765; Amherst, 9,505; New Glasgow, 9,455; Bridgewater, 7,944; Yarmouth, 7,162; Kentville, 5,815.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

Births in 2013–14 numbered 8,613 and deaths 8,966. In 2012 the infant mortality rate was 4.6 per 1,000 live births. Life expectancy in the period 2009–11 was 82.6 years for females and 78.1 years for males.

CLIMATE

A cool temperate climate, with rainfall occurring evenly over the year. The Gulf Stream moderates the temperatures in winter so that ports remain ice-free. Halifax, Jan. 23.7°F (−4.6°C), July 63.5°F (17.5°C). Annual rainfall 54" (1,371 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

Under the British North America Act of 1867 the legislature of Nova Scotia may exclusively make laws in relation to local matters, including direct taxation within the province, education and the administration of justice. The legislature of Nova Scotia consists of a Lieut.-Governor, appointed and paid by the federal government, and holding office for five years, and a House of Assembly of 52 members, chosen by popular vote at least every five years. The province is represented in the Canadian Senate by ten members, and in the House of Commons by 11.

RECENT ELECTIONS

At the provincial elections of 8 Oct. 2013 the opposition Liberal Party won 33 seats (45.7% of the vote), the Progressive Conservatives 11 (26.3%) and the New Democratic Party 7 (26.8%). Turnout was 59.1%.

CURRENT GOVERNMENT

Lieut.-Governor: John James Grant; b. 1936 (assumed office 12 April 2012).

The members of Nova Scotia's Liberal cabinet in Feb. 2016 were:

Premier, President of the Executive Council, and Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs, and Aboriginal Affairs: Stephen McNeil.

Deputy Premier, Deputy President of the Executive Council, Attorney General and Minister of Justice: Diana C. Whalen. Agriculture, and Fisheries and Aquaculture: Keith Colwell. Energy, and Acadian Affairs: Michel P. Samson. Health and Wellness, and Seniors: Leo A. Glavine. Education and Early Childhood Development: Karen Lynn Casey. Labour and Advanced Education: Kelly Regan. Transportation and Infrastructure Renewal: Geoff MacLellan. Municipal Affairs, and Communications Nova Scotia: Zach Churchill. Finance and Treasury Board, and Gaelic Affairs: Randy Delorey. Communities, Culture and Heritage, and African Nova Scotian Affairs: Tony Ince. Community Services, and the Voluntary Sector: Joanne Bernard. Immigration: Lena Metlege Diab. Public Service Commission, and Internal Services: Labi Kousoulis. Business, and Service Nova Scotia: Mark Furey. Natural Resources: Lloyd Hines. Environment: Margaret Miller.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Electricity

Electricity generation totalled 10.5bn. kWh in 2013 (8.5bn. kWh conventional steam), representing 1.9% of Canada's production.

Oil and Gas

Significant finds of offshore natural gas are currently under development. Gas is flowing to markets in Canada and the USA (the pipeline was completed in 1999). Total marketable gas receipts for 2005 was 3.9bn. cu. metres.

Minerals

Principal minerals in 2005 were: gypsum, 6.8m. tonnes, valued at $81.1m. CDN; stone, 10.8m. tonnes, valued at $73.0m. CDN. Total value of mineral production in 2005 was $286.1m. CDN.

Agriculture

In 2006 there were 3,795 farms in the province with 116,609 ha. of land under crops. Dairying, poultry and egg production, livestock and fruit growing are the most important branches. Farm cash receipts for 2005 were $453.4m. CDN. Cash receipts from sale of dairy products were $107.0m. CDN, with total milk and cream sales of 166.7m. litres. The production of poultry meat in 2005 was 37,030 tonnes, of which 33,508 tonnes were chicken and 3,522 tonnes were turkey. Egg production in 2005 was 17.9m. dozen. For particulars of livestock see CANADA: Agriculture.

The main fruit crops in 2005 were apples, 39,372 tonnes; blueberries, 16,239 tonnes; strawberries, 1,769 tonnes.

Forestry

The estimated forest area of Nova Scotia is 15,830 sq. miles (40,990 sq. km), of which about 28% is owned by the province. Softwood species represented 89.4% of the 6,254,716 cu. metres of the forest round products produced in 2005. Employment in the forest sector was 4,100 persons in 2005.

Fisheries

The fisheries of the province in 2005 had a landed value of $647m. CDN of sea fish; including lobster fishery, $339m. CDN; and crab fishery, $73m. CDN. Aquaculture production in 2005 was 8,917 tonnes with a value of $40.4m. CDN; finfish accounted for 64% of total value while shellfish made up the remainder.

INDUSTRY

The number of employees in manufacturing establishments was 38,055 in 2004; wages and salaries totalled $1,444m. CDN. The value of shipments in 2005 was $10,596m. CDN, and the leading industries were food, paper production, and plastic and rubber products.

Labour

In 2015 the labour force was 490,200 (240,100 females), of whom 448,100 (223,300) were employed. The unemployment rate in 2015 was 8.6%.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

Total of imports and exports to and from Nova Scotia (in $1m. CDN):

	2002	2003	2004	2005
Imports	5,140	5,816	6,590	6,989
Exports	5,345	5,477	5,859	5,815

The main exports in 2005 included fish and fish products, natural gas and paper. Major trading partners were the USA with 80.1% of total exports, followed by Japan and the United Kingdom.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

In 2005 there were 26,000 km of highways, of which 13,600 km were paved. The Trans Canada and 100 series highways are limited access, all-weather, rapid transit routes. The province's first toll road opened in Dec. 1997. In 2005 total road vehicle registrations numbered 561,325 and over 600,000 persons had road motor vehicle operators licences.

Rail

The province has an 805-km network of mainline track operated predominantly by Canadian National Railways. The Cape Breton and Central Nova Scotia Railway operates between Truro and Cape Breton Island. The Windsor and Hantsport Railway operates in the Annapolis Valley region. VIA Rail operates the Ocean for six days a week, a transcontinental service between Halifax and Montreal.

Civil Aviation

Halifax (Robert L. Stanfield International Airport) was Canada's seventh busiest airport in 2010, handling 3,509,000 passengers. There are other major airports at Sydney and Yarmouth.

Shipping

Ferry services connect Nova Scotia to the provinces of Newfoundland and Labrador, Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick as well as to the USA. The deep-water, ice-free Port of Halifax handles about 14m. tonnes of cargo annually.

Telecommunications

In 2013, 82.9% of households had at least one mobile phone and 17.2% of households only had a mobile phone. 77% of households had home internet access in 2010.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The Supreme Court (Trial Division and Appeal Division) is the superior court of Nova Scotia and has original and appellate jurisdiction in all civil and criminal matters unless they have been specifically assigned to another court by Statute. An appeal from the Supreme Court, Appeal Division, is to the Supreme Court of Canada.

In 2009–10, 11,760 Criminal Code cases were disposed of in an adult criminal court. In 2010 there were 21 homicides (a rate of 2.2 per 100,000 population).

Education

Public education in Nova Scotia is free, compulsory and undenominational through elementary and high school. Attendance is compulsory to the age of 16. In 2004–05 there were 438 elementary-secondary public schools, with 9,581 full-time teachers and 145,396 pupils. The province has 11 degree-granting institutions. The Nova Scotia Agricultural College is located at Truro. The Technical University of Nova Scotia, which grants degrees in engineering and architecture, amalgamated with Dalhousie University and is now known as DalTech.

The Nova Scotia government offers financial support and organizational assistance to local school boards for provision of weekend and evening courses in academic and vocational subjects, and citizenship for new Canadians.

Health

A provincial retail sales tax of 8% provides funds for free hospital in-patient care up to ward level and free medically required services of physicians. The Queen Elizabeth II Hospital in Halifax is the overall referral hospital for the province and, in many instances, for the Atlantic region. The Izaak Walton Killam Hospital provides similar regional specialization for children.

Welfare

General and specialized welfare services in the province are under the jurisdiction of the Department of Community Services. The provincial government funds all of the costs.

CULTURE

Tourism

Tourism revenues were $1.3bn. CDN in 2005. Total number of visitors in 2005 was 2,114,000.

Ontario

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

The French explorer Samuel de Champlain explored the Ottawa River from 1613. The area was governed by the French, first under a joint stock company and then as a royal province, from 1627 and was ceded to Great Britain in 1763. A constitutional act of 1791 created the province of Upper Canada, largely to accommodate loyalists of English descent who had immigrated after the United States war of independence. Upper Canada entered the Confederation as Ontario in 1867.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

The area is 1,076,395 sq. km (415,596 sq. miles), of which some 917,741 sq. km (354,340 sq. miles) are land area and some 158,654 sq. km (61,256 sq. miles) are lakes and fresh water rivers. The province extends 1,690 km (1,050 miles) from east to west and 1,730 km (1,075 miles) from north to south. It is bounded in the north by the Hudson and James Bays, in the east by Quebec, in the west by Manitoba, and in the south by the USA, the Great Lakes and the St Lawrence Seaway.

The census population in 2011 was 12,851,821. Population of the principal cities (2006 census):

Toronto ¹	2,503,281	Kitchener	204,668	Barrie	128,430
Ottawa	812,129	Oakville	165,613	Cambridge	120,371
Mississauga	668,549	Burlington	164,415	Kingston	117,207

Quebec—Québec

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Quebec was known as New France from 1534 to 1763; as the province of Quebec from 1763 to 1790; as Lower Canada from 1791 to 1846; as Canada East from 1846 to 1867, and when, by the union of the four original provinces, the Confederation of the Dominion of Canada was formed, it again became known as the province of Quebec (Québec).

The Quebec Act, passed by the British Parliament in 1774, guaranteed to the people of the newly conquered French territory in North America security in their religion and language, their customs and tenures, under their own civil laws. In a referendum on 20 May 1980, 59.5% voted against ‘separatism’. At a further referendum on 30 Oct. 1995, 50.6% of votes cast were against Quebec becoming ‘sovereign in a new economic and political partnership’ with Canada. The electorate was 5m.; turnout was 93%. On 20 Aug. 1998 Canada’s supreme court ruled that Quebec was prohibited by both the constitution and international law from seceding unilaterally from the rest of the country but that a clear majority in a referendum would impose a duty on the Canadian government to negotiate. Both sides claimed victory. On 27 Nov. 2006 Canada’s parliament passed a motion recognizing that ‘the Québécois form a nation within a united Canada’.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

The area of Quebec (as amended by the Labrador Boundary Award) is 1,542,056 sq. km (595,388 sq. miles), of which 1,365,128 sq. km is land area (including the Territory of Ungava, annexed in 1912 under the Quebec Boundaries Extension Act). The population at the 2011 census was 7,903,001.

Principal cities (2011 census populations): Montreal, 1,649,519; Quebec (capital), 516,622; Laval, 401,553; Gatineau, 265,349; Longueuil, 231,409; Sherbrooke, 154,601; Saguenay, 144,746; Lévis, 138,769; Trois-Rivières, 131,338; Terrebonne, 106,322; Saint-Jean-sur-Richelieu, 92,394; Repentigny, 82,000; Brossard, 79,273; Drummondville, 71,852; Saint-Jérôme, 68,456; Granby, 63,433; Blainville, 53,510; Sainte-Hyacinthe, 53,236; Shawinigan, 50,060.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

Births in 2013–14 numbered 88,250 and deaths 61,050. In 2012 the infant mortality rate was 5.0 per 1,000 live births. Life expectancy in the period 2009–11 was 83.6 years for females and 79.4 years for males.

CLIMATE

Cool temperate in the south, but conditions are more extreme towards the north. Winters are severe and snowfall considerable, but summer temperatures are quite warm. Quebec, Jan. -12.5°C, July 19.1°C. Annual rainfall 1,123 mm. Montreal, Jan. -10.7°C, July 20.2°C. Annual rainfall 936 mm.

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

There is a Legislative Assembly consisting of 125 members, elected in 125 electoral districts for four years. The province is represented by 24 members in the Senate and 78 in the House of Commons of Canada.

RECENT ELECTIONS

At the elections of 7 April 2014 the federalist Quebec Liberal Party won 70 seats with 41.5% of votes cast, the separatist Parti québécois 30 seats with 25.4%, the Coalition Avenir Québec 22 seats with 23.1% and Québec Solidaire 3 seats with 7.6%. Turnout was 71.4%.

CURRENT GOVERNMENT

Lieut.-Governor: J. Michel Doyon (took office on 24 Sept. 2015).

Electricity generation totalled 206.8bn. kWh in 2013 (205.0bn. kWh hydro), representing 33.7% of Canada’s production (the highest of any province or territory). Quebec is among the largest producers of hydro-electric power in the world.

Water

There are 4,500 rivers and 500,000 lakes in Quebec, which possesses 3% of the world’s freshwater resources.

Minerals

For 2013 the value of mineral production was $8,095m. CDN. Chief minerals: iron ore, $2,821m. CDN; gold, $1,659m. CDN; nickel, $497m. CDN; zinc, $256m. CDN; copper, $240m. CDN. Non-metallic minerals produced include: titanium-dioxide, sulphur, salt, peat and quartz (silica). Among the building materials produced in 2013 were: stone, $494m. CDN; cement, $359m. CDN; sand and gravel, $121m. CDN.

Agriculture

In 2011 the agricultural area was 3,341,333 ha. The production of the principal crops was (2011 in 1,000 tonnes):

Crops	Production	Crops	Production
Tame hay	3,900	Barley	196
Corn for grain	3,125	Wheat	116
Fodder corn	2,000	Mixed grains	42
Soya	800	Canola	36
Oats	223

There were 29,437 farms operating in 2011. Cash receipts, 2011, $7,968m. CDN (livestock and livestock products, 61.6%; crops, 30.2%; direct payments, 8.2%). Quebec was a net importer of food and agricultural produce in 2011. For particulars of livestock see CANADA: Agriculture.

Saskatchewan

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Saskatchewan derives its name from its major river system, which the Cree Indians called 'Kis-is-ska-tche-wan', meaning 'swift flowing'. It officially became a province when it joined the Confederation on 1 Sept. 1905.

In 1670 Charles II granted to Prince Rupert and his friends a charter covering exclusive trading rights in 'all the land drained by streams finding their outlet in the Hudson Bay'. This included what is now Saskatchewan. The trading company was first known as The Governor and Company of Adventurers of England; later as the Hudson's Bay Company. In 1869 the Northwest Territories was formed, and this included Saskatchewan. The North-West Mounted Police Force was inaugurated four years later. In 1882 the District of Saskatchewan was formed and in 1885 the Canadian Pacific Railway's transcontinental line was completed, bringing a stream of immigrants to southern Saskatchewan. The Hudson's Bay Company surrendered its claim to territory in return for cash and land around the existing trading posts.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Saskatchewan is bounded in the west by Alberta, in the east by Manitoba, in the north by the Northwest Territories and in the south by the USA. The area of the province is 651,036 sq. km (251,365 sq. miles), of which 591,670 sq. km is land area and 59,366 sq. km is water. The population at the 2011 census was 1,033,381. Population of cities, 2006 census: Saskatoon, 202,340; Regina (capital), 179,246; Prince Albert, 34,138; Moose Jaw, 32,132; Yorkton, 15,038; Swift Current, 14,946; North Battleford, 13,190; Estevan, 10,084; Weyburn, 9,433; Lloydminster, 8,118; Melfort, 5,192; Humboldt, 4,998; Melville, 4,149.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

Births in 2013–14 numbered 15,345 and deaths 9,684. In 2012 the infant mortality rate was 5.5 per 1,000 live births. Life expectancy in the period 2009–11 was 82.2 years for females and 77.2 years for males.

CLIMATE

A cold continental climate, with severe winters and warm summers. Rainfall amounts are greatest from May to Aug. Regina, Jan. 0°F (−17.8°C), July 65°F (18.3°C). Annual rainfall 15" (373 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

The provincial government is vested in a Lieut.-Governor, an Executive Council and a Legislative Assembly of 58 seats, elected for five years. Women were given the franchise in 1916. The province is represented by six members in the Senate and 14 in the House of Commons of Canada.

RECENT ELECTIONS

In elections on 4 April 2016 the Saskatchewan Party (SP) won 51 of 61 seats (62.4% of the vote) and the New Democrats (NDP) 10 (30.2%).

CURRENT GOVERNMENT

Lieut.-Governor: Vaughn Schofield (took office 22 March 2012).

The Saskatchewan Party ministry comprised as follows in Feb. 2016:

Premier, President of the Executive Council and Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs: Brad Wall.

Deputy Premier and Minister of Crown Investments: Don McMorris. Economy, and Energy and Resources: Bill Boyd. Education, and Labour Relations and Workplace Safety: Don Morgan, QC. Social Services: Donna Harpauer. Finance: Kevin Doherty. Health: Dustin Duncan. Justice and Attorney General: Gordon Wyant, QC. Government Relations: Jim Reiter. Agriculture: Lyle Stewart. Highways and Infrastructure: Nancy Heppner. Central Services: Jennifer Campeau. Parks, Culture and Sport: Mark Docherty. Environment: Herb Cox. Advanced Education: Scott Moe.

ECONOMY

GDP per capita in 2009 was $54,943 CDN.

Budget

Total revenue in 2008–09 was $17,032m. CDN (own source revenue, $14,955m. CDN; specific purpose transfers, $1,734m. CDN; general purpose transfers, $343m. CDN). Total expenditures in 2008–09 amounted to $14,325m. CDN (including: health, $4,189m. CDN; education, $3,365m. CDN; transportation and communication, $1,363m. CDN).

Performance

There was real GDP growth in 2011 of 5.8% (the highest rate of any of the Canadian provinces or territories that year) and in 2012 of 3.1%.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Electricity

SaskPower (the Saskatchewan Power Corporation) generated 20,969m. kWh in 2011, 55% of which came from coal-fired power plants.

Minerals

In 2011 mineral sales were valued at $21,290m. CDN, of which (in $1m. CDN): petroleum, 12,369; potash, 6,853; others (including uranium, salt, natural gas, sand and gravel), 2,068.

Agriculture

Agriculture accounted for 11.4% of the provincial GDP in 2011, second to the mining sector which accounted for 13.4%. Saskatchewan normally produces about two-thirds of Canada's wheat. Wheat production in 2012 (in 1,000 tonnes) was 12,727.3 from 13.1m. acres; canola, 6,137.1 from 11.2m. acres; barley, 2,351.4 from 2.6m. acres; oats, 1,236.9 from 1.3m. acres; flax, 381.0 from 775,000 acres; rye, 148.6 from 310,000 acres. Livestock (1 July 2012): cattle and calves, 2.9m.; swine, 1.1m.; sheep and lambs, 127,000. Poultry in 2012: chickens, 26.6m.; turkeys, 883,000. Cash income from the sale of farm products in 2012 was $11,828m. CDN. At the 2011 census there were 36,952 farms in the province covering an area of 26,019,885 ha. (with 14,032,487 ha. of land under crops).

The South Saskatchewan River irrigation project, the main feature of which is the Gardiner Dam, was completed in 1967. It will ultimately provide for an area of 0.2m. to 0.5m. acres of irrigated cultivation in Central Saskatchewan. As of 2012, 247,158 acres were intensively irrigated. Total irrigated land in the province, 339,583 acres.

Forestry

Half of Saskatchewan's area is forested, but only 115,000 sq. km are of commercial value at present. Forest products valued at $612m. CDN were produced in 2003–04.

Fisheries

In 2010 commercial freshwater fisheries landings had a total weight of 2,731 tonnes (of which whitefish 1,137 tonnes) and a value of $3,192,000 CDN.

INDUSTRY

In 2011 there were 1,682 manufacturing establishments, employing 27,785 persons. In 2011 manufacturing value added totalled $4,424.6m. CDN; sale of manufactured goods totalled $12,577.5m. CDN. In 2012 total value of building permits was $3,114m. CDN. Total public and private investment in construction was $14,382m. CDN.

Labour

In 2015 the labour force was 604,100 (275,800 females), of whom 573,700 (263,100) were employed. The unemployment rate in 2015 was 5.0%.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

In 2005 there were 26,168 km of provincial highways and 198,375 km of municipal roads (including prairie trails). Motor vehicles registered totalled 750,640 (2005). Bus services are provided by two major lines.

Rail

In 2005 there were approximately 9,513 km of railway track.

Civil Aviation

Saskatchewan's busiest airports are Saskatoon and Regina, which handled 1,196,000 and 1,102,000 passengers in 2010 respectively.

Telecommunications

In 2013, 86.1% of households had at least one mobile phone and 20.9% of households only had a mobile phone. 76% of households had home internet access in 2010.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

In 2009–10, 21,665 Criminal Code cases were disposed of in an adult criminal court. In 2010 there were 34 homicides (a rate of 3.3 per 100,000 population).

Education

The Saskatchewan education system in 2005–06 consisted of 28 school divisions, of which nine are Roman Catholic, serving 107,331 elementary pupils, 59,801 high-school students and 1,577 students enrolled in special classes. In addition, the Saskatchewan Institute of Applied Science and Technology (SIASST) had approximately 13,200 full-time and 29,000 part-time and extension course registration students in 2005–06. There are also eight regional colleges with an enrolment of approximately 19,700 students in 2004–05.

The University of Saskatchewan was established at Saskatoon in 1907. In 2005–06 it had 15,300 full-time students, 4,000 part-time students and 961 full-time academic staff. The University of Regina, established in 1974, had 9,678 full-time and 2,977 part-time students and 425 full-time academic staff in 2005–06.

CULTURE

Tourism

An estimated 1.8m. out-of-province tourists spent $513.3m. CDN in 2004.

The Northwest Territories

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

The Territory was developed by the Hudson's Bay Company and the North West Company (of Montreal) from the 17th century. The Canadian government bought out the Hudson's Bay Company in 1869 and the Territory was annexed to Canada in 1870. The Arctic Islands lying north of the Canadian mainland were annexed to Canada in 1880.

A plebiscite held in March 1992 approved the division of the Northwest Territories into two separate territories. (For Nunavut see CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT below, and NUNAVUT on page 303).

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

The Northwest Territories comprises all that portion of Canada lying north of the 60th parallel of N. lat. except those portions within Nunavut, Yukon and the provinces of Quebec and Newfoundland and Labrador. The total area of the Territories was 3,426,320 sq. km, but since the formation of Nunavut is now 1,346,106 km. Of its five former administrative regions—Fort Smith, Inuvik, Kitikmeot, Keewatin and Baffin—only Fort Smith and Inuvik remain in the Northwest Territories.

The population at the 2011 census was 41,462. The capital is Yellowknife, population (2006); 18,700. Other main centres (with population in 2006): Hay River (3,648), Inuvik (3,484), Fort Smith (2,364), Behchokò (1,894). Iqaluit and Rankin Inlet, formerly in the Northwest Territories, are now in Nunavut. In Aug. 2003 an agreement was reached for the Tlicho First Nation to assume control over 39,000 sq. km of land in the Northwest Territories (including Canada's two diamond mines), creating the largest single block of First Nation-owned land in Canada.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

Births in 2013–14 numbered 695 and deaths 198. In 2012 the infant mortality rate was 4.4 per 1,000 live births. Life expectancy in the period 2009–11 was 80.1 years for females and 76.3 years for males.

CLIMATE

Conditions range from cold continental to polar, with long hard winters and short cool summers. Precipitation is low. Yellowknife, Jan. mean high -24.7°C , low -33°C ; July mean high 20.7°C , low 11.8°C . Annual rainfall 26.7 cm.

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

The Northwest Territories is governed by a Premier, with a cabinet (the Executive Council) of eight members including the Speaker, and a Legislative Assembly, who choose the premier and ministers by consensus. There are no political parties. The Assembly is composed of 19 members elected for a four-year term of office. A Commissioner of the Northwest Territories is the federal government's senior representative in the Territorial government. The seat of government was transferred from Ottawa to Yellowknife when it was named Territorial Capital on 18 Jan. 1967. On 10 Nov. 1997 the governments of Canada and the Northwest Territories signed an agreement so that the territorial government could assume full responsibility to manage its elections.

Legislative powers are exercised by the Executive Council on such matters as taxation within the Territories in order to raise revenue, maintenance of justice, licences, solemnization of marriages, education, public health, property, civil rights and generally all matters of a local nature. The territory is represented by one member in the Senate and one in the House of Commons of Canada.

The Territorial government has assumed most of the responsibility for the administration of the Northwest Territories but political control of Crown lands. In a Territory-wide plebiscite in April 1982, a majority of residents voted in favour of dividing the Northwest Territories into two jurisdictions, east and west. Constitutions for an eastern and western government have been under discussion since 1992. A referendum was held in Nov. 1992 among the Inuit on the formation of a third territory, Nunavut ('Our Land'), in the eastern Arctic. Nunavut became Canada's third territory on 1 April 1999.

RECENT ELECTIONS

On 23 Nov. 2015, 19 members (MLAs) were returned to the 18th Legislative Assembly. There were 59 candidates, 16 of whom were incumbents. All members are independent.

CURRENT GOVERNMENT

Commissioner: George L. Tuccaro; b. 1950 (took office in May 2010).

Members of the Executive Council of Ministers in Feb. 2016:
Premier, and Minister of the Executive, and Aboriginal Affairs and Intergovernmental Relations, and Industry, Tourism and Investment: Bob McLeod.

Deputy Premier, and Minister of Finance, Lands, and Municipal and Community Affairs: Robert McLeod. Health and Social Services, and Human Resources: Glen Abernethy. Education, Culture and Employment: Alfred Moses. Public Works and Services: Caroline Cochrane. Environment and Natural Resources, and Transportation: Wally Schumann. Justice: Louis Sebent.

Speaker: Jackie Jacobson.

Government of the Northwest Territories Website:

ECONOMY

GDP per person in 2009 was $93,280 CDN, the highest of any Canadian province or territory.

Budget

Total revenue in 2008–09 was $1,624m. CDN (own source revenue, $593m. CDN; general purpose transfers, $820m. CDN; specific purpose transfers, $211m. CDN). Total expenditures in 2008–09 amounted to $1,730m. CDN (including: health, $377m. CDN; education, $316m. CDN; social services, $153m. CDN).

Performance

The Northwest Territories experienced a recession in 2011 with real GDP growth of -8.1% , but there was a slight recovery in 2012 when real GDP grew by 2.2% .

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Oil and Gas

Crude petroleum production was 1,373,000 cu. metres in 2003; natural gas production was 780m. cu. metres in 2003.

Minerals

Mineral production in 2006: diamonds, 12,976,000 carats ($1,567,019,000 CDN); sand and gravel (including Nunavut), 362,000 tonnes ($2,157,000 CDN); stone, 461,000 tonnes ($4,500,000 CDN); tungsten, 2,500 tonnes ($64,497,000 CDN). Total mineral production in 2006 was valued at $1.64bn. CDN.

Forestry

Forest land area in the Northwest Territories consists of 61.4m. ha., about 18% of the total land area. The principal trees are white and black spruce, jack-pine, tamarack, balsam poplar, aspen and birch. In 2004, 26,000 cu. metres of timber were produced.

Trapping and Game

Wildlife harvesting is the largest economic activity undertaken by aboriginal residents in the Northwest Territories. The value of the subsistence food harvest is estimated at $28m. CDN annually in terms of imports replaced. Fur-trapping (the most valuable pelts being white fox, wolverine, beaver, mink, lynx and red fox) was once a major industry, but has been hit by anti-fur campaigns. In 2009–10, 27,489 pelts worth $830,921 CDN were sold.

Fisheries

Fish marketed through the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation in 2005–06 totalled 734,000 kg at a value of $705,000 CDN, principally whitefish, northern pike and trout.

INDUSTRY

Mining is the largest private sector industry, with major mines for ore including gold, uranium and diamonds. Oil and gas exploration and development onshore and offshore are also becoming important.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

The Mackenzie Route connects Grimshaw, Alberta, with Hay River, Pine Point, Fort Smith, Fort Providence, Rae-Edzo and Yellowknife. The Mackenzie Highway extension to Fort Simpson and a road between Pine Point and Fort Resolution have both been opened.

Highway service to Inuvik in the Mackenzie Delta was opened in spring 1980, extending north from Dawson, Yukon as the Dempster Highway. The Liard Highway connecting the communities of the Liard River valley to British Columbia opened in 1984.

In 2014 there were a total of 38,185 vehicle registrations, including 27,087 passenger motor vehicles and 5,806 trailers.

Rail

There is one small railway system in the north which runs from Hay River, on the south shore of Great Slave Lake, 435 miles south to Grimshaw, Alberta, where it connects with the Canadian National Railways, but it is not in use.

Civil Aviation

The busiest airport is Yellowknife, which handled 319,000 passengers in both 2009 and 2010.

Shipping

A direct inland-water transportation route for about 1,700 miles is provided by the Mackenzie River and its tributaries, the Athabasca and Slave rivers. Subsidiary routes on Lake Athabasca, Great Slave Lake and Great Bear Lake total more than 800 miles. Communities in the eastern Arctic are resupplied by ship each summer via the Atlantic and Arctic Oceans or Hudson Bay.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

In 2009–10, 1,706 Criminal Code cases were disposed of in an adult criminal court. In 2010 there was one homicide (a rate of 2.3 per 100,000 population).

Education

The Education System in the Northwest Territories is comprised of eight regional bodies (boards) that have responsibilities for the K-12 education programme.

For the 2010–11 school year there were 46 public plus three (Catholic) private schools operating in the NWT. Within this system there were 758 teachers, excluding those at Aurora College and community learning centres, for 8,576 students. 98% of students have access to high school programmes in their home communities. There is a full range of courses available in the school system, including academic, French immersion, Aboriginal language, cultural programmes, and technical and occupational programmes.

A range of post-secondary programmes are available through the Northwest Territories' Aurora College. The majority of these programmes are offered at the three main campus locations: Inuvik, Yellowknife and Fort Smith.

Health

In 2011 there were eight health authorities. Expenditure on health and social services totalled $349.7m. CDN in 2009–10.

Welfare

Welfare services are provided by professional social workers. Facilities included (2006): family violence services in seven communities, eight helplines, seven group homes or shelters and one residential treatment centre.

Nunavut

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Inuit communities were to be found in what is now the Canadian Arctic between 4500 BC and AD 1000. By the 19th century these communities were under the jurisdiction of the Northwest Territories. In 1963 the Canadian government first introduced legislation to divide the territory, a proposal that failed at the order paper stage. In 1973 the Comprehensive Land Claims Policy was established which sought to define the rights and benefits of the Aboriginal population in a land claim settlement agreement. The Northwest Territories Legislative Assembly voted in favour of dividing the territory in 1980, and in a public referendum of 1982, 56% of votes cast were also for the division. In 1992 the proposed boundary was ratified in a public vote and the Inuit population approved their land claim settlement. A year later, the Nunavut Act (creating the territory) and the Nunavut Land Claim Agreement Act were passed by parliament. Iqaluit was selected as the capital in 1995.

On 15 Feb. 1999 Nunavut held elections for its Legislative Assembly. The territory was officially designated and the government inaugurated on 1 April 1999.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

The total area of the region is 2,093,190 sq. km or about 21% of Canada's total mass, making Nunavut Canada's largest territory. It contains seven of Canada's 12 largest islands and two-thirds of the country's coastline. The territory is divided into three regions: Qikiqtaaluk (Baffin), Kivalliq (Keewatin) and Kitikmeot. The total population at the 2011 census was 31,906. The population is divided up into 25 communities of which the largest is in the capital Iqaluit, numbering 6,184.

The native Inuit language is Inuktitut.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

Births in 2013–14 numbered 885 and deaths 182. In 2012 the infant mortality rate was 21.4 per 1,000 live births. Life expectancy in the period 2009–11 was 73.9 years for females and 68.8 years for males.

CLIMATE

Conditions range from cold continental to polar, with long hard winters and short cool summers. In Iqaluit there can be as little as four hours sunshine per day in winter and up to 21 hours per day at the summer solstice. Iqaluit, Jan. mean high -22°C ; July mean high, 15°C .

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

Government is by a Legislative Assembly of 22 elected members, who then choose a leader and ministers by consensus. There are no political parties. Government is highly decentralized, consisting of ten departments spread over 11 different communities. By 2020 Inuktitut is intended to be the working language of government but government agencies will also offer services in English and French. Although the Inuits are the dominant force in public government, non-Inuit citizens have the same voting rights. The territory is represented by one member in the Senate and one in the House of Commons of Canada.

RECENT ELECTIONS

Legislative Assembly elections were held on 28 Oct. 2013. There were 73 non-partisan candidates; 21 were elected (three women) but there was a tie in one constituency. A by-election was held on 10 Feb. 2014, with the winning candidate bringing the number of members of the the Legislative Assembly up to 22.

CURRENT GOVERNMENT

Commissioner: Edna Elias (took office in May 2010).

In Feb. 2016 the cabinet was as follows:

Premier, and Minister of Executive and Intergovernmental Affairs: Peter Taptuna (took office on 19 Nov. 2013).

Deputy Premier, and Minister of Economic Development and Transportation, and Energy: Monica Ell-Kanayuk.

Minister of Culture and Heritage, Languages, and Family Services: George Kuksuk. Environment: Johnny Mike. Justice, and Health: Paul Okalik. Finance: Keith Peterson. Education: Paul Quassa. Community and Government Services: Joe Savikataaq.

Government of Nunavut Website: <http://www.gov.nu.ca>

ECONOMY

GDP per person was $47,360 CDN in 2009.

Currency

The Canadian dollar is the standard currency.

Budget

Total revenue in 2008–09 was $1,385m. CDN (general purpose transfers, $979m. CDN; specific purpose transfers, $224m. CDN; own source revenue, $182m. CDN). Total expenditures in 2008–09 amounted to $1,402m. CDN (including: health, $287m. CDN; education, $243m. CDN; housing, $194m. CDN).

Performance

Real GDP grew by 4.8% in 2011 and 1.2% in 2012.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Minerals

There are two lead and zinc mines operating in the High Arctic region. There are also known deposits of copper, gold, silver and diamonds.

Hunting and Trapping

Most communities still rely on traditional foodstuffs such as caribou and seal. The Canadian government now provides meat inspections so that caribou and musk ox meat can be sold across the country.

Fisheries

Fishing is still very important in Inuit life. The principal catches are shrimp, scallops and arctic char.

INDUSTRY

The main industries are mining, tourism, fishing, hunting and trapping and arts and crafts production.

Labour

In 2013 the labour force numbered 14,500, of whom 12,500 were in employment. The employment rate in 2013 was 48.5% for Inuit and 89.3% for non-Inuit.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

There is one 21-km government-maintained road between Arctic Bay and Nanisivik. There are a few paved roads in Iqaluit and Rankin Inlet, but most are unpaved. Some communities have local roads and tracks but Kivalliq has no direct land connections with southern Canada.

Civil Aviation

The busiest airport is Iqaluit, which handled 129,000 passengers in 2010.

Shipping

There is an annual summer sea-lift by ship and barge for transport of construction materials, dry goods, non-perishable food, trucks and cars.

Telecommunications

In 2010, 85% of households had telephones. Because of the wide distances between communities, there is a very high rate of internet use in Nunavut. However, line speeds are slow and there is a problem with satellite bounce.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

In 2009–10, 1,494 Criminal Code cases were disposed of in an adult criminal court. In 2010 there were six homicides (a rate of 18.1 per 100,000 population—by some way the highest of any Canadian province or territory).

Education

Approximately one quarter of Nunavut's population aged over 15 have less than Grade 9 schooling. Training and development is seen as central to securing a firm economic foundation for the province.

Courses in computer science, business management and public administration may be undertaken at Arctic College. In 2010–11 there were 42 schools with 8,855 students.

Health

There is one hospital in Iqaluit. 26 health centres provide nursing care for communities. For more specialized treatment, patients of Qikiqtaaluk may be flown to Montreal, patients in Kivalliq to Churchill or Winnipeg and patients in Kitikmeot to Yellowknife's Stanton Regional Hospital.

CULTURE

Tourism

Nunavut has four national parks—Auyuittuq, Quttinirpaaq, Sirmilik and Ukkusiksalik—offering the opportunity of seeing Inuit life first-hand. Tourism generates $30m. CDN per year for the Territory, with 20% of visitors arriving on cruise ships. During the 2008 high season (June–Oct.) there were 33,000 visitors.

Yukon

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

The territory owes its fame to the discovery of gold in the Klondike at the end of the 19th century. Formerly part of the Northwest Territories, the Yukon joined the Dominion as a separate territory on 13 June 1898.

Yukon First Nations People lived a semi-nomadic subsistence long before the region was established as a territory. The earliest evidence of human activity was found in caves containing stone tools and animal bones estimated to be 20,000 years old. The Athapaskan cultural linguistic tradition to which most Yukon First Nations belong is more than 1,000 years old. The territory's name comes from the native 'Yu-kun-ah' for the great river that drains most of this area.

The Yukon was created as a district of the Northwest Territories in 1895. The Klondike Gold Rush in the late 1890s saw thousands pouring into the gold fields of the Canadian northwest. Population at the peak of the rush reached 40,000. This event spurred the federal government to set up basic administrative structures in the Yukon. The territory was given the status of a separate geographical and political entity with an appointed legislative council in 1898. In 1953 the capital was moved south from Dawson City to Whitehorse, where most of the economic activity was centred. The federal government granted the Yukon responsible government in 1979.

The Yukon Act of 1 April 2003 gave the territory more control over its own governance and changed its name from the Yukon Territory to Yukon.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

The territory consists of one city, three towns, four villages, two hamlets, 13 unincorporated communities and eight rural communities. It is situated in the northwestern region of Canada and comprises 482,443 sq. km of which 8,052 sq. km is fresh water.

The population at the 2011 census was 33,897. Yukon had the fastest-growing population of any Canadian province or territory between 2006 and 2011, with an 11.6% increase over the five-year period.

Principal centres in 2006 were Whitehorse, the capital, 20,461; Dawson City, 1,327; Watson Lake, 846; Haines Junction, 589; Carmacks, 425.

Yukon represents 4.8% of Canada's total land area.

Births in 2013–14 numbered 439 and deaths 221. In 2012 the infant mortality rate was 2.2 per 1,000 live births. Life expectancy in the period 2009–11 was 79.6 years for females and 75.2 years for males.

CLIMATE

Temperatures in Yukon are usually more extreme than those experienced in the southern provinces of Canada. A cold climate in winter with moderate temperatures in summer provide a considerable annual range of temperature and moderate rainfall.

Whitehorse, Jan. –18.7°C (–2.0°F), July 14°C (57.2°F). Annual precipitation 268.8 mm. Dawson City, Jan. –30.7°C (–23.3°F), July 15.6°C (60.1°F). Annual precipitation 182.7 mm.

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

Yukon was constituted a separate territory on 13 June 1898. The Yukon Legislative Assembly consists of 19 elected members and functions in much the same way as a provincial legislature. The seat of government is at Whitehorse. It consists of an Executive Council with parliamentary powers similar to those of a provincial cabinet. The Yukon government consists of 14 departments, as well as a Workers' Compensation Health and Safety Board and four Crown corporations. The territory is represented by one member in the Senate and one in the House of Commons of Canada.

RECENT ELECTIONS

At elections held on 11 Oct. 2011 the Yukon Party took 11 of the available 19 seats; the New Democratic Party 6; and the Liberal Party 2.

CURRENT GOVERNMENT

Commissioner: Douglas Phillips (took office on 17 Dec. 2010).

In Feb. 2016 the Yukon Party Ministry comprised:

Premier, Minister of the Executive Council Office, and Finance: Darrell Pasloski.

Deputy Premier, and Minister of Tourism and Culture: Elaine Taylor. Justice: Brad Cathers. Education: Doug Graham. Energy, Mines, and Resources, and Highways and Public Works: Scott Kent. Community Services, and Public Service Commission: Currie Dixon. Environment: Wade Istchenko. Health and Social Services: Mike Nixon. Economic Development: Stacey Hassard.

Speaker: David Laxton.

ECONOMY

GDP per person was $63,332 CDN in 2009.

Budget

Total revenue in 2008–09 was $990m. CDN (general purpose transfers, $575m. CDN; own source revenue, $254m. CDN; specific purpose transfers, $160m. CDN). Total expenditures in 2008–09 amounted to $1,019m. CDN (including transportation and communication, $165m. CDN; education, $157m. CDN; health, $138m. CDN).

Performance

Real GDP grew by 4.3% in 2011 and then 2.6% in 2012.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Electricity

Electricity generation totalled 0.4bn. kWh in 2013 (mainly hydro).

Oil and Gas

In 1997 the Yukon Oil and Gas Act was passed, replacing the federal legislation. This Act provides for the transfer of responsibility for oil and gas resources to Yukon jurisdiction. Five unexplored oil and gas basins with rich potential exist. Current net production is about 1.7m. cu. metres of natural gas per day.

Minerals

Gold and silver are the chief minerals. There are also deposits of lead, zinc, copper, tungsten and iron ore. Gold deposits, both hard rock and placer, are being mined.

Estimates for 2006 mineral production: gold, $37.5m. CDN; and silver, $0.2m. CDN. Total: $37.7m. CDN.

Agriculture

Many areas have suitable soils and climate for the production of forages, vegetables, domestic livestock and game farming. The greenhouse industry is Yukon's largest horticulture sector.

In 2006 there were 148 farms operating full- and part-time. The total area of farms was 10,125 ha. of which 2,658 ha. were in crops.

Gross farm receipts in 2005 were estimated at $4.1m. CDN. Total farm capital at market value in 2006 was $66.1m. CDN.

Forestry

The forests, covering 281,000 sq. km of the territory, are part of the great Boreal forest region of Canada, which covers 58% of Yukon.

Fur Trade

The fur-trapping industry is considered vital to rural and remote residents and especially First Nations people wishing to maintain a traditional lifestyle. In 2009, 2,324 wildlife pelts (valued at $199,546 CDN) were produced.

Fisheries

Commercial fishing concentrates on chinook salmon, chum salmon, lake trout and whitefish.

INDUSTRY

The key sectors of the economy are tourism and government.

Labour

The 2006 labour force average was 16,200, of whom 15,500 were employed.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

In 2003 exports made up 15.6% of Yukon goods and services produced. In 2003 exports were valued at $353m. CDN.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

The Alaska Highway and branch highway systems connect Yukon's main communities with Alaska, the Northwest Territories, southern Canada and the United States. The 733-km Dempster Highway north of Dawson City connects with Inuvik, in the Northwest Territories. In 2006 there were 4,902.5 km of roads maintained by the government of Yukon: 3,780.8 km is primary (including the 998.1 km Alaska Highway); 1,121.7 km is secondary. Vehicles registered in 2006 totalled 29,003 (excluding buses, motorcycles and trailers), including 26,621 passenger vehicles.

Rail

The 176-km White Pass and Yukon Railway connected Whitehorse with year-round ocean shipping at Skagway, Alaska, but was closed in 1982. A modified passenger service was restarted in 1988 to take cruise ship tourists from Skagway to Carcross, Yukon, over the White Pass summit.

Civil Aviation

The busiest airport is Whitehorse (Erik Nielsen Whitehorse International Airport), which handled 230,000 passengers in 2010.

Shipping

The majority of goods are shipped into the territory by truck over the Alaska and Stewart-Cassiar Highways. Some goods are shipped through the ports of Skagway and Haines, Alaska, and then trucked to Whitehorse for distribution throughout the territory.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

In 2009–10, 1,050 Criminal Code cases were disposed of in an adult criminal court. In 2010 there was one homicide (a rate of 2.9 per 100,000 population).

Education

The Yukon Department of Education operates (with the assistance of elected school boards) the territory's 29 schools, both public and private, from kindergarten to grade 12. In May 2006 there were 5,148 pupils. There is also one French First Language school and three Roman Catholic schools. The total enrolment figure for Yukon College in 2005–06 was 5,057. The Whitehorse campus is the administrative and programme centre for 13 other campuses located throughout the territory. In 2005–06 a total of 600 full-time and 4,457 part-time students enrolled in programmes and courses.

Health

In 2006 there were two hospitals with 71 staffed beds, 14 health centres, 74 resident doctors and 16 resident dentists.

CULTURE

Tourism

In 2006, 396,377 visitors came to Yukon. Tourism is the largest private sector employer. In 2005 approximately 80% of employees in Yukon worked for businesses that reported some level of tourism revenue. In 2005, 15% of businesses generated more than a third of gross revenues from tourism.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

One of the four territories of French Equatorial Africa, the Central African Republic became independent on 13 Aug. 1960. A constitution of 1976 provided for a parliamentary democracy to be known as the Central African Empire. President Bokassa became Emperor Bokassa I. He was overthrown in 1979. In 1981 Gen. André Kolingba took power, initiating a gradual return to constitutional rule.

On 5 June 1996, following an army mutiny, President Patassé accepted an agreement brokered by France which led to the formation of a government of national unity. But mutineers demanded the replacement of President Patassé. France chaired a mediation committee of various neighbouring French-speaking states. An agreement to end the mutiny was signed in 1997 and a peacekeeping force from neighbouring states, MISAB, was set up. Conflicts between the mutineers and MISAB continued until a ceasefire was concluded on 2 July 1997. There was an attempted coup on 28 May 2001, allegedly led by Gen. Kolingba, who had been the country's military ruler from 1981 to 1993. However, it failed following several days of fighting in and around the capital, Bangui. Fighting erupted once more in Oct. 2002 after another coup attempt. In March 2003 a further coup saw Gen. François Bozizé, a former army chief, seize power.

Bozizé claimed victory in the presidential election of May 2005. Despite reaching peace agreements in 2008 with two of the three main rebel groups in the country, his tenure was marked by violent civil unrest. In Sept. 2007 the UN established a peacekeeping force to protect civilians affected by the fighting in Darfur in neighbouring Sudan, withdrawing the mission three years later. In Jan. 2011 Bozizé won a further term in office. However, in March 2013 he fled the country following a coup by Séléka coalition rebel forces led by Michel Djotodia, who suspended the constitution and dissolved parliament. Djotodia was sworn in as president in Aug. 2013, with the UN secretary-general Ban Ki-moon condemning the 'total breakdown of law and order' in the country. Amid increasing sectarian violence, Djotodia resigned in Jan. 2014 and was replaced as president by Catherine Samba-Panza, the mayor of Bangui, on an interim basis. At its peak in 2014, 930,000 people were internally displaced by the conflict, with 190,000 refugees fleeing to neighbouring countries between Dec. 2013 and Aug. 2014. In April 2014 the UN agreed to send a 12,000-strong peacekeeping force to the country but violence continued to plague the country into 2015. In March 2016 the swearing in of Faustin-Archange Touadéra following his victory in presidential elections the previous month heralded an end to the period of transitional government.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

The republic is bounded in the north by Chad, northeast by Sudan, east by South Sudan, south by the Democratic Republic of the Congo and the Republic of the Congo, and west by Cameroon. Area, 622,984 sq. km (240,534 sq. miles). The population at the 2003 census was 3,895,139, giving a density of 6 per sq. km. In 2011, 39.2% of the population were urban.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 4.90m.

The areas, populations and capitals of the prefectures are as follows:

Prefecture	Sq. km	2003 census	Capital

¹Autonomous commune. ²Economic prefecture.

The capital, Bangui, had a census population in 2003 of 622,771. Other main towns, with 2003 census populations, are Bimbo (124,176), Berbérati (76,918), Carnot (45,421), Bambari (41,356) and Bouar (40,353).

There are a number of ethnic groups, the largest being Gbaya (34%), Banda (27%) and Mandja (21%).

Sango and French are the official languages.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2008 births (estimates), 154,000; deaths, 74,000. Estimated birth rate in 2008 was 35.4 per 1,000 population; estimated death rate, 17.0. Infant mortality, 2010 (per 1,000 live births), 106. Expectation of life in 2013 was 48.3 years for males and 52.1 for females. Annual population growth rate, 2000–08, 1.8%. Fertility rate, 2008, 4.8 children per woman.

CLIMATE

A tropical climate with little variation in temperature. The wet months are May, June, Oct. and Nov. Bangui, Jan. 31.9°C, July 20.7°C. Annual rainfall 1,289.3 mm. Ndele, Jan. 36.3°C, July 30.5°C. Annual rainfall 203.6 mm.

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

Under the Constitution adopted by a referendum on 21 Nov. 1986, the sole legal political party was the Rassemblement Démocratique Centrafricain. In Aug. 1992 the Constitution was revised to permit multi-party democracy. Further constitutional reforms followed a referendum in Dec. 1994, including the establishment of a Constitutional Court. Following the coup of March 2003 Gen. François Bozizé suspended the constitution and dissolved parliament. However, at a referendum on 5 Dec. 2004, 90.4% of voters approved the adoption of a new constitution; voter participation was 77.4%. The new constitution resembles the previous one but permits the President to serve not more than two terms of five years. The President appoints the Prime Minister and leads the Council of Ministers. There is a 105-member National Assembly, with members elected in single-member constituencies for a five-year term. However, the constitution was suspended by Michel Djotodia after he seized power in March 2013.

CURRENT LEADERS

Faustin-Archange Touadéra

Position

President

Introduction

A former prime minister, Faustin-Archange Touadéra was elected president on 14 Feb. 2016. Widely considered to have been an outsider in the presidential race, he faces a formidable task in reconciling a country riven by civil war since 2013.

Early Life

Touadéra was born 21 April 1957 in Bangui, one of ten children. He studied at the Universities of Bangui and Abidjan before earning a doctorate in mathematics from Lille University of Science and Technology in France.

After returning from Lille in 1987 he became an assistant mathematics lecturer at the University of Bangui and, from 1989, vice-dean of its faculty of science. In 1992 he was appointed director of the Teachers' Training College in Bangui. He joined the Inter-State Committee for the Standardisation of Mathematics Programs in French-speaking Countries and the Indian Ocean in 1999, serving as committee president from 2001–03. In 2004 he earned a second doctorate in mathematics from the University of Yaoundé in Cameroon and became vice-chancellor of the University of Bangui. A year later he was appointed rector of the University of Bangui.

In 2008, with the country increasingly volatile under President François Bozizé, Prime Minister Élie Doté resigned and Bozizé invited the largely unknown Touadéra to succeed him. To appease rebel forces, Touadéra was instructed by Bozizé to form a national unity government in 2009. Unrest nonetheless continued and in 2013 Séléka rebels staged a coup, prompting Touadéra and his family to spend six months on a United Nations base before leaving for Lille.

At the 2015 presidential election Touadéra ran as an independent against 29 other candidates. He defeated Anicet-Georges Dologuélé, who had run with Bozizé's endorsement, after two rounds of voting.

Career in Office

Touadéra was sworn in on 30 March 2016. Although the election process was fraught with accusations of fraud, his appointment was widely welcomed by the international community and accepted by Dologuélé. Touadéra must attempt to oversee the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of rebel forces, while fostering reconciliation in a country that has seen almost 1m. people displaced internally and across borders since 2013. Reconstituting the national army will be key to his chances of success.

DEFENCE

Selective national service for a two-year period is in force.

Defence expenditure totalled an estimated US$54m. in 2011 (approximately US$11 per capita), representing around 2.5% of GDP.

In Dec. 2013, 1,600 French troops were deployed to the Central African Republic to try to restore order after months of violence. An African Union-led peacekeeping mission, initially numbering 6,000 personnel, was also deployed in Dec. 2013 as the conflict worsened. In Sept. 2014 a UN operation, the United Nations Multidimensional Integrated Stabilization Mission in the Central African Republic (MINUSCA), took over peacekeeping responsibilities. In June 2015 it numbered 10,806 uniformed personnel.

Army

The Army consisted (2011) of about 2,000 personnel. There is an infantry regiment and a territorial defence regiment. In addition there are some 1,000 personnel in the paramilitary Gendarmerie.

Navy

The Army includes a small naval wing operating a handful of patrol craft.

Air Force

Personnel strength (2011) was 150. There are no combat aircraft.

ECONOMY

Agriculture, fishing and forestry contributed 50.2% to GDP in 2011; followed by trade, hotels and restaurants, 12.4%; finance and real estate, 6.4%; manufacturing, 6.2%; transport and communications, 5.4%.

Overview

Despite being rich in natural resources—including diamonds, gold, timber and uranium—and having favourable agricultural conditions, the Central African Republic is one of the world's poorest countries. Political turmoil and armed conflict, along with droughts, a landlocked geography, poor transport infrastructure and government mismanagement have hampered growth for decades.

A coup d'état in 2003 preceded two years of transition culminating in legislative and presidential elections in May 2005. The return to representative government prompted the strongest economic growth for a decade. GDP growth was around 4% in 2006 owing to increased private consumption following the resumption of regular salary payments to civil servants, a pick-up in investment, recovery in diamond and timber exports, and an upturn in agriculture (the economy's largest sector).

A series of external shocks, including the breakdown of a major hydro-power plant, a price surge in imported commodities and the global economic downturn, led to slower growth and accelerated inflation from 2008. However, the current account deficit narrowed to 7.7% of GDP in 2009 from 10.3% the previous year, reflecting improvements in terms of trade as a result of lower oil prices and rising diamond prices.

In June 2009 the country completed its IMF-led Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative, so qualifying for additional aid. As of 2012 total debt stood at 30% of GDP. In June that year the government signed an extended credit facility with the IMF. A coup in 2013 led to a surge in sectarian violence that resulted in thousands of deaths and the displacement of around 1m. people by the end of the year, which led to GDP contracting by 36%. In Jan. 2014 the World Bank announced it was mobilizing US$100m. to restore key government services and provide food supplies and healthcare.

Currency

The unit of currency is the franc CFA (XAF) with a parity of 655.957 francs CFA to one euro. Total money supply in June 2005 was 98,664m. francs CFA, with foreign exchange reserves US$132m. and gold reserves 11,000 troy oz. Inflation was 9.3% in 2008, falling to 1.2% in 2011 before increasing to 6.6% in 2013 and 11.6% in 2014.

Budget

Budgetary central government revenues in 2011 (provisional) were 125,400m. francs CFA and expenditures 154,688m. francs CFA.

VAT is 19%.

Performance

Total GDP in 2014 was US$1.7bn. Real GDP growth was 3.3% in 2011 and 4.1% in 2012. However, as a result of the rebel uprising of 2013 the economy shrank by 36.0% that year—the worst performance of any country. The economy recovered very slightly in 2014, growing by 1.0%.

Banking and Finance

The Banque des États de l'Afrique Centrale (BEAC) acts as the central bank and bank of issue. The Governor is Lucas Abaga Nchama. There are three commercial banks, a development bank and an investment bank.

In 2010 external debt totalled US$385m., representing 19% of GNI.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

The Central African Republic's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2011 were the equivalent of 0.1 tonnes per capita.

Electricity

Installed capacity was an estimated 44,000 kW in 2011. Production in 2011 was estimated at 174m. kWh (around 84% hydro-electric). Consumption per capita in 2011 was about 39 kWh.

Minerals

In 2011 an estimated 243,000 carats of gem diamonds and 81,000 carats of industrial diamonds were mined; and 53 kg of gold. There are also oil, uranium and other mineral deposits that are for the most part unexploited.

Agriculture

In 2002 the agricultural population numbered 2.21m. persons, of whom 1.27m. were economically active. In 2002 about 1.93m. ha. were arable and 94,000 ha. permanent crops. The main crops (production 2002, in 1,000 tonnes) are cassava, 563; yams, 350; groundnuts, 128; bananas, 115; maize, 113; taro, 100; sugarcane, 90; plantains, 82; sorghum, 48.

Livestock, 2002: cattle, 3.27m.; goats, 2.92m.; pigs, 738,000; sheep, 246,000; chickens, 5m.

Forestry

There were 22.61m. ha. of forest in 2010, or 36% of the total land area. The extensive hardwood forests, particularly in the southwest, provide mahogany, obeche and limba. Timber production in 2011 was 2.73m. cu. metres.

Fisheries

The catch in 2010 was estimated at 35,000 tonnes, exclusively from inland waters.

INDUSTRY

In 2011 manufacturing accounted for 6.2% of GDP. The country's small industrial sector includes factories producing wood products, cotton fabrics, footwear and beer.

Labour

The labour force in 2013 was 2,236,000 (1,777,000 in 2003). 79.2% of the population aged 15–64 was economically active in 2013. In the same year 7.4% of the population was unemployed. The Central African Republic had 32,000 people living in slavery according to the Walk Free Foundation's 2013 Global Slavery Index.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

Imports and exports for calendar years in US$1m.:

	2005	2006	2007	2008	2009
Imports c.i.f.	185.3	140.4	197.8	185.0	211.7
Exports f.o.b.	110.7	109.8	131.1	114.2	80.5

Principal imports in 2009 (in US$1m.) were: cereal and cereal preparations (27.2); fruit and vegetables (23.7); medicinal and pharmaceutical products (23.3). Leading exports in 2009 (in US$1m.) were: industrial diamonds (49.6); wood (24.9); coffee (1.8).

In 2009 major import sources (in US$1m.) were: France (48.0); USA (33.0); Cameroon (18.6); China (16.8). Major export markets in 2009 (in US$1m.) were: Belgium (47.1); China (7.5); France (7.5); Germany (6.8).

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

There were 23,417 km of roads in 2002, including 5,200 km of highways or main roads. In 2007 there were 1,200 passenger cars, 58 lorries and vans, and 4,500 motorcycles and mopeds. There were 583 road accident deaths in 2007.

Civil Aviation

There is an international airport at M'Poko, near Bangui, which handled 124,940 passengers (91,854 on international flights) in 2012. In 2010 there were direct services operating to Brazzaville, Casablanca, Cotonou, Douala, Luanda, Nairobi, Paris and Tripoli. The only airline based in the Central African Republic is Karinou Airlines, which was founded in 2012 as African Airlines and renamed in 2013.

Shipping

Timber and barges are taken to Brazzaville (Republic of the Congo).

Telecommunications

There were 12,000 fixed telephone lines in 2010 (2.7 per 1,000 inhabitants). Mobile phone subscribers numbered 1.02m. in 2010. There were 1,410 wireless broadband subscriptions in 2012 and 120 fixed internet subscriptions in 2010. In June 2012 there were 144,000 Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The Criminal Court and Supreme Court are situated in Bangui. There are 16 high courts throughout the country. The population in penal institutions in Nov. 2011 was 845 (19 per 100,000 of national population). 70.2% of prisoners had yet to receive a trial according to 2014 estimates by the International Centre for Prison Studies.

World Heritage Sites

The Manovo-Gounda St Floris National Park was inscribed on the UNESCO World Heritage List in 1988. Poaching and violence led to the park's closure to tourism in 1997. Sangha Trinational, a transboundary conservation complex situated in Cameroon, the Central African Republic and the Republic of the Congo, was added to the UNESCO World Heritage List in 2012. The site consists of three contiguous national parks totalling around 750,000 ha. Much of it is unaffected by human activity and features a wide range of humid tropical forest ecosystems with rich flora and fauna.

Press

In 2008 there were 30 newspapers, of which six were dailies with a circulation of 5,000.

Tourism

In 2009, 52,000 non-resident tourists—excluding same-day visitors—arrived by air (up from 31,000 in 2008).

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

France proclaimed a protectorate over Chad in 1900 and in July 1908 the territory was incorporated into French Equatorial Africa. It became a separate colony in 1920, and in 1946 one of the four constituent territories of French Equatorial Africa. It achieved full independence on 11 Aug. 1960. Conflicts between the government and secessionist groups, particularly in the Muslim north and centre, from 1965 led to civil war. In 1982 Hissène Habré gained control of the country. In June 1983 Libyan-backed forces reoccupied some territory but a ceasefire took effect in Sept. 1987. Rebel forces of the Popular Salvation Movement led by Idriss Déby entered Chad from Sudan in Nov. 1990. On 4 Dec. 1990 Déby declared himself President.

In Feb. 2000 Hissène Habré was charged with torture and barbarity and put under house arrest in Senegal, where he remained as of 2013 despite having been sentenced to death by a Chadian court in absentia. Déby won disputed presidential elections in 2001, 2006 and 2011 and militant rebels have remained active throughout his tenure. Cross-border clashes between Chadian and Sudanese forces severely strained relations between the two countries and resulted in the deployment of a UN peacekeeping force in the area between 2007 and 2010.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Chad is bounded in the west by Cameroon, Nigeria and Niger, north by Libya, east by Sudan and south by the Central African Republic. In Feb. 1994 the International Court of Justice ruled that the Aozou Strip along the Libyan border, occupied by Libya since 1973, was part of Chad. Area, 1,284,000 sq. km. The population at the 2009 census was 11,039,873.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 14.04m.
