All social security benefits are administered by the State Insurance Office and funded 45% by a payroll tax and 55% from the state budget. Pensions, disability payments, child allowances, survivor benefits, maternity benefits, funeral subsidies, sickness compensation and alimony supplements are provided. In 2010 social benefits totalling 198,479.6m. zlotys were paid (including 170,879.5m. zlotys for retirement pay and pensions, 7,830.1m. zlotys for family benefits and supplements to the family benefits, nursing benefits and allowances, 7,213.9m. zlotys for sick benefits, 3,038.2m. zlotys for maternity benefits, 2,622.9m. zlotys for unemployment benefits and 2,435.5m. zlotys for funeral benefits). There were a total of 9,243,427 pensioners in 2010. Unemployment benefits are paid from a fund financed by a 3% payroll tax. It is indexed in various categories to the average wage and payable for 12 months.

A retirement pension is available to an insured person who fulfils the following conditions: has attained the retirement age dependent on gender, specific employment conditions or functions, and an appropriate contributory and non-contributory period. The basic retirement pay for people born before 1949 is defined by job seniority and wages in chosen work periods.

For people who were born after 31 Dec. 1948 and who joined the Open Pension Fund (OPF), or who are not members of the OPF and who did not fulfil the requirements needed to obtain retirement pay under the previous rules, basic retirement pay depends on the capital that was built up in individual insurance accounts.

The retirement age is being raised gradually from 60 for men and 65 for women to 67 for both men and women, by 2020 and 2040 respectively.

RELIGION

State relations are regulated by laws of 1989 which guarantee religious freedom, grant the Church radio and TV programmes and permit it to run schools, hospitals and old age homes. The Church has a university (Lublin) and seminaries. On 28 July 1993 the government signed a Concordat with the Vatican regulating mutual relations. The religious capital is Gniezno. Its archbishop, Henryk Muszyński (b. 1933) is the primate of Poland. Kazimierz Nycz was appointed archbishop of Warsaw on 1 April 2007. In Oct. 1978 Cardinal Karol Wojtyła, archbishop of Kraków, was elected Pope as John Paul II. In Feb. 2016 there were six cardinals.

PORTUGAL

Augustus founded Augustus Emirita (now Mérida) as the capital of Lusitania.

From AD 409, with the Roman Empire in decline, the Iberian Peninsula was invaded by Germanic tribes from central Europe, including the Suevi and Visigoths, who established Christian kingdoms. Southern Galicia was settled by the Suevi, who were converted to Christianity by St Martin of Braga in around AD 550. Following the arrival of Muslim armies in Iberia in 711, the southern part of what is now Portugal became part of the Muslim dominion of al-Andalus. The northern and western fringes of Iberia remained largely agrarian, poor and Christian.

From 850 the Christians began to push southward: the region between the rivers Minho and Douro became known as Territorium Portugualense and was ruled by Mumadona Dias after 931. Fernando I, King of Castile, drove the Muslims from the city of Viseu in 1058 and reconquered Coimbra in 1064. Fernando's successor, Afonso VI of Leon, set up his power base in the town of Braga. His daughter, Teresa, who was married to Henry of Burgundy, then governed Portugal as regent for their son, Afonso Henriques. Teresa eventually lost the support of many of the powerful local barons, who united behind Afonso and made him the first king of Portugal in 1139.

Muslim chroniclers refer to Afonso I as 'the cursed of Allah'. He crusaded southwards through the Muslim strongholds, capturing Lisbon in 1147. However, the Portuguese reconquest was not completed for 150 years, when Afonso III finally took Algarve in the far south. Afonso III established the first Cortes (government) at Leiria in 1254. Large swathes of the newly conquered lands were given over to the army and monastic orders to ensure their protection. Afonso's son, Dinis (1279–1325), became one of the most celebrated of the Burgundian dynasty. He established trade links with other European powers and in 1317 worked with a Genoese admiral to establish a navy. Dinis made the vernacular, rather than Latin, the official language and founded the first university in Lisbon in 1290.

The later kings of the House of Burgundy were entangled in various marriage alliances with neighbouring Castile. Fernando I (1367–83) inherited the Portuguese crown as a battle raged in Castile between King Pedro 'the Cruel' and his half-brother Enrique de Trastámara. Both sides attempted to garner support from outside the kingdom, with the English supporting Pedro (Peter) and his heirs and the French backing Enrique (Henry) and his supporters. Enrique eventually prevailed, being crowned Enrique II of Castile in 1369. The new king offered his support to Fernando, who accepted, and Castilian rule was duly established in Portugal.

After Portugal's heiress, Beatriz, married Juan I of Castile the nobility broadly supported Castilian rule but Portugal's coastal towns wanted independence and rebelled. Their choice for ruler was João of Avis, half brother of Fernando, who was declared King João I in 1384. A year later, with English support, the Portuguese defeated Juan I and his Castilian army at the battle of Aljubarrota. The Anglo-Portuguese alliance was cemented by King João's marriage in 1387 to Philippa of Lancaster, sister of England's future King Henry IV.

Empire Building

Having made peace with Spain, João turned his attention overseas. The capture of the town of Ceuta on the north African coast in 1415 was the beginning of an era of discovery by Portuguese mariners, spearheaded by João's third son Henry who became known as Henry the Navigator. He founded a school of navigation at Sagres and organized numerous expeditions along

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

The western fringe of the Iberian peninsula was inhabited from 8000 BC by Neolithic peoples known as Iberians. Celtic tribes settled in the north and west of the peninsula in the first millennium BC with Phoenician settlements in the southwest around Cádiz from around 800 BC. From 241 BC the Iberian peninsula came under the influence of Carthage, and then Rome after 206 BC. The Romans made their way north to what is now central Portugal and clashed with a Celtic federation, the Lusitanians. They resisted the Roman advance under their leader Viriathus until he was killed in 140 BC, after which the Romans were able to move north across the Douro river. In 25 BC the west coast of Africa. Madeira and the Azores were also discovered and settled during this period.

Relations with Castile deteriorated in the reign of Afonso V (1438–81). Afonso married Juana, daughter of Enrique IV of Castile, and laid claim to the Castilian throne. The marriage of Fernando II and Isabella I of Castile and the merging of the powerful kingdoms of Aragon and Castile, weakened Afonso's claim. There were lengthy battles in the Zamora and Toro regions, which Afonso lost in 1476. Peace was made three years later by Afonso's heir, João II. Overseas explorations were resumed, and Portugal became a haven for tens of thousands of Jews fleeing persecution in Spain.

In 1487 Bartolomeu Dias rounded the southern cape of Africa, but the Portuguese crown rejected Christopher Columbus' proposal for finding a new westward route to the Indies. Backed instead by Fernando II and Isabella I of Castile, he reached the New World in 1492. The 1493 Treaty of Tordesillas gave the newly unified Spain all lands west of a vertical line drawn 370 degrees west of the Cabo Verde Islands. Land to the east, including Brazil, went to Portugal. In 1497, with backing from King Manuel I, Vasco da Gama set out to map a sea route to India. Indian spices were used for preserving food, in the preparation of medicines and in glues, perfumes, dyes and varnishes. The Portuguese built an administrative capital at Goa and by 1550 it was considered Portugal's second city.

Fortified trading posts were later established along the coast of East Africa and India, and commercial centres set up further east. The profits generated by the spice trade made Manuel I 'the Fortunate' one of the wealthiest rulers in Europe. No longer dependent on taxes, Manuel was able to rule independently. The Cortes did not meet between 1502–25 and the expulsion of the Jews in 1496 (a condition of Manuel's marriage to Princess Isabella of Castile, daughter of Isabella I) dealt a heavy blow to the economy.

In 1568 King Sebastião launched a disastrous crusade to eradicate Islam in the Maghreb. More than 10,000 Portuguese troops, including Sebastião, were killed by superior Moroccan forces. After the elderly and childless Cardinal Henrique, the line of succession passed to the cardinal's nephew, Felipe II of Spain.

Spanish Rule

Felipe II annexed Portugal in 1580. The Spanish empire was at its height and Portuguese merchants saw commercial advantages in forming an alliance with Spain. Portugal was granted autonomy but this was gradually eroded. The Inquisition was established in Portugal and the ports of Lisbon and Porto (Oporto) were closed to English and Dutch ships, which then made their own way to the east and snatched control of the spice trade. The 'Spanish domination' of Portugal lasted for 60 years, though after 1621 Spain was considerably weakened by the cost of defending its empire against France and England. A rebellion in Catalonia spurred the Portuguese to stage their own revolution. They rallied round the duke of Bragança, who was crowned King João IV in 1640.

João IV was anxious to formalize new alliances with the other European powers. Spain's peace with France, set out in the 1659 Treaty of the Pyrenees, made João's successor, Afonso VI, anxious to strengthen Portugal's alliance with England. Thus, Catherine of Bragança was married to King Charles II in 1662. Her dowry included the right to trade with the Portuguese colonies and the cession of Bombay and Tangier. In return, England agreed to defend Portugal and its colonies. In the late 1600s gold and then diamonds were discovered in Brazil. Money poured into the Portuguese court, but the crown's wealth did little to enrich the nation. João V (1706–50) emulated Louis XIV of France's lavish spending on ambitious building projects, including a gigantic convent-palace at Mafra.

Portuguese political development lagged behind that of many European states and it remained comparatively untouched by the Enlightenment until the Marquess of Pombal was made chief minister shortly after the great Lisbon earthquake in 1755. His methods were harsh and he made enemies quickly. His principal victims were the conservative Jesuits and the nobility with their vast array of privileges. Pombal is also credited with reforming the education system but ultimately his legacy was limited. When Maria I came to the throne in 1777, she immediately banished Pombal to his estates and rescinded many of his reforms.

After Louis XVI of France was guillotined in 1793, the new French Republic invaded Catalonia and the Basque provinces. Following these defeats, King Charles IV of Spain formed an alliance with Napoleon. In 1801 France and Spain demanded that Portugal abandon its alliance with Britain, open its ports to French and Spanish shipping and hand over some of its colonies to Spain. Portugal refused and a French army marched into Lisbon in 1807. King João VI and his family escaped to Brazil with the help of the British navy and the defence of Portugal was left in the hands of British Generals Wellesley and Beresford. The French were finally driven out of Portugal in 1811 and the British, as a reward, were granted free access to the Brazilian ports, a concession which damaged the Portuguese economy and stoked-up popular resentment.

After an army-backed revolution in Porto in 1820, an unofficial Cortes was set up to devise a new liberal constitution. The Cortes was to be a single chamber parliament elected by universal male suffrage, and feudal and clerical rights would be abolished. Returning from Brazil the following year, João VI accepted the new constitution. Brazil declared its independence, with Pedro IV (João's elder son) as emperor.

Following João's death in 1826, Pedro became king of Portugal in defiance of the Brazilian constitution. Forced to abdicate in favour of his daughter, Maria II, then aged seven, he chose his brother Miguel as her steward. Miguel seized the throne in 1828, defeating the liberals and repealing Pedro's constitution. Pedro IV returned to Portugal in 1832 to lead the liberals in the Miguelist Wars. Maria was eventually restored to the throne. The late 1850s saw improvements in the nation's infrastructure but by the start of the reign of Carlos I in 1889, Portugal's economy was in a poor way. Explorations in Africa strengthened Portugal's hold on Angola and Mozambique but the British refused to give up territory which would have linked the two colonies. Carlos attempted to end inefficiency and corruption, establishing a dictatorship in 1906 under the conservative João Franco. Amidst growing public discontent, Carlos and his eldest son Prince Luís Filipe were assassinated in 1908. Manuel II succeeded to the throne but in 1910 a republican revolution forced his abdication and flight to Britain.

In the First World War Portugal was at first neutral, then joined the Allies in 1916. The economy deteriorated further and in 1926 there was a military coup. Gen. Carmona became president. António de Oliveira Salazar was made finance minister in 1928 with a brief to reform the economy.

Dictatorship to Democracy

Salazar became prime minister in 1932. His Estado Novo (New State) had a strongly nationalist and dictatorial flavour. Political parties, unions and strikes were abolished and dissent was crushed by the notorious PIDE (Policia Internacional e de Defesa do Estado) secret police force. Portugal was neutral in the Second World War but allowed the Allies to establish naval and air bases. After Goa was seized by India in 1961, Salazar was determined to cling on to the African territories. By 1968, over 100,000 Portuguese were fighting independence movements in Angola, Guinea-Bissau and Mozambique.

In 1968 Salazar suffered a stroke and was replaced by Marcello Caetano. Under Caetano repression was eased but the unpopular wars in Africa continued. In 1974, amid mounting public discontent, a group of officers formed the Movement of Armed Forces and toppled the government in a bloodless coup in April that year known as 'the Carnation Revolution'. Gen. António de Spínola was appointed head of the ruling military junta.

The secret police force was abolished. All political prisoners were released; full civil liberties, including freedom of the press and of all political parties, were restored and, in 1975, Angola, Mozambique, São Tomé e Príncipe and Cabo Verde were granted independence. Timor-Leste was forcibly taken by Indonesia. Following an attempted revolt in late 1975, the military junta was dissolved and a Supreme Revolutionary Council ruled until a new constitutional government resumed the following year. During the late 1970s several moderate, Socialist-dominated governments tried unsuccessfully to stabilize the country. In 1982 a centre-right coalition revised the constitution, reducing presidential power and the right of the military to intervene in politics. From 1983 to 1985 a coalition government under Socialist leader Mário Soares made progress in reducing the chaos and poverty that were the legacy of Salazar's long dictatorship.

In 1985 the centrist Social Democratic party under Aníbal Cavaco Silva won an undisputed majority in parliament. In 1986 Soares was elected to the presidency, and Portugal was admitted to the European Community. Political stability and economic reforms created a favourable business climate, especially for renewed foreign investment, and Portugal became one of the fastest-growing economies in Europe. The Socialists returned to power as a minority government after the 1995 parliamentary elections. Macao, Portugal's colony on the south coast of China, was handed back to China in 1999. Portugal joined the single European currency in 2001. In Jan. 2006 the centre-right candidate Aníbal Cavaco Silva was elected president, beginning a period of political 'cohabitation' alongside the Socialist prime minister, José Sócrates. In March 2011, following an appeal to the EU for assistance to avoid a debt default, the government resigned.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Mainland Portugal is bounded in the north and east by Spain and south and west by the Atlantic Ocean. The Atlantic archipelagoes of the Azores and of Madeira form autonomous but integral parts of the republic, which has a total area of 92,207 sq. km. Population (2011 census), 10,562,178 (5,515,578 females). In Dec. 2014 the population was estimated at 10,374,822, with the decline a consequence of emigration outstripping immigration and deaths exceeding births since the 2011 census was taken. There were 134,624 emigrants in 2014, the most in any single year.

Mainland Portugal is divided into five regions. At the 2011 census the regions, with their populations, were: North (3,689,682); Central (2,327,755); Lisbon (2,821,876); Alentejo (757,302); Algarve (451,006). Population of the Azores, 246,772; Madeira, 267,785. Density (2011), 114.5 per sq. km (North, 173; Central, 83; Lisbon, 940; Alentejo, 24; Algarve, 90; Azores, 106; Madeira, 334).

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 10.35m.

In 2011, 61.3% of the population lived in urban areas. The populations of the districts and Autonomous Regions (2011 census):

In 2010 there were 443,055 foreign citizens with legal residency status, with the leading nationalities as follows: Brazil, 119,195;

Ukraine, 49,487; Cabo Verde, 43,510; Romania, 36,830; Angola, 23,233; Guinea-Bissau, 19,304. Large numbers of immigrants have come to Portugal from eastern Europe since 1999, mainly from Ukraine, Romania and Moldova.

The capital is Lisbon (Lisboa), with a population of 547,733 in 2011 (metropolitan area population, 2,821,876 in 2011). Other major cities are Porto, 237,591 in 2011 (metropolitan area population, 1,672,670 in 2011), Almada, Amadora, Braga, Funchal (in Madeira) and Vila Nova de Gaia.

The official language is Portuguese.

The Azores islands lie in the mid-Atlantic Ocean, between 1,200 and 1,600 km west of Lisbon. They are divided into three widely separated groups with clear channels between, São Miguel (759 sq. km) together with Santa Maria (97 sq. km) being the most easterly; about 160 km northwest of them lies the central cluster of Terceira (382 sq. km), Graciosa (62 sq. km), São Jorge (246 sq. km), Pico (446 sq. km) and Faial (173 sq. km); still another 240 km to the northwest are Flores (143 sq. km) and Corvo (17 sq. km), the latter being the most isolated and undeveloped of the islands. São Miguel contains over half the total population of the archipelago.

Madeira comprises the island of Madeira (745 sq. km), containing the capital, Funchal; the smaller island of Porto Santo (40 sq. km), lying 46 km to the northeast of Madeira; and two groups of uninhabited islets, Ilhas Desertas (15 sq. km), being 20 km southeast of Funchal, and Ilhas Selvagens (4 sq. km), near the Canaries.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2012: births, 89,841; deaths, 107,612; marriages, 34,423; divorces, 25,380. Rates per 1,000 population in 2012: birth, 8.5; death, 10.2; marriage, 3.3; divorce, 2.4. Annual population growth rate, 2005–10, 0.2%. Expectation of life at birth, 2013, was 76.9 years for males and 82.9 years for females. Infant mortality in 2010 was three per 1,000 live births, down from 77 per 1,000 live births in 1960, representing the greatest reduction in infant mortality rates in Europe over the past half century. Fertility rate, 2013, 1.3 births per woman (the joint lowest in the world). Around one in five babies are born outside marriage, up from one in 14 in 1970. In 2009 the most popular age range for marrying was 25–29 for both males and females. Portugal legalized same-sex marriage in June 2010.

On 11 Feb. 2007 a national referendum was held on whether to decriminalize abortion up until the 10th week of pregnancy. Turnout was low at 44%; 59.3% of voters approved the motion. Despite results only having to be legally binding if the turnout exceeded 50%, parliament voted overwhelmingly in favour on 9 March 2007. In 1998 the same question had been put in another referendum. 51% voted against the motion; turnout was 32%.

In 2010 Portugal received 160 asylum applications.

CLIMATE

Because of westerly winds and the effect of the Gulf Stream, the climate ranges from the cool, damp Atlantic type in the north to a warmer and drier Mediterranean type in the south. July and Aug. are virtually rainless everywhere. Inland areas in the north have greater temperature variation, with continental winds blowing from the interior. Lisbon, Jan. 52°F (11°C), July 72°F (22°C). Annual rainfall 27.4" (686 mm). Porto, Jan. 48°F (8.9°C), July 67°F (19.4°C). Annual rainfall 46" (1,151 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

Portugal is governed under the constitution of April 1976, amended in 1982, 1989, 1992, 1997, 2001, 2004 and 2005. The 1982 revision abolished the (military) Council of the Revolution and reduced the role of the President under it. Portugal is a sovereign, unitary republic. Executive power is vested in the President, directly elected for a five-year term (for a maximum of two consecutive terms). Political parties may support a candidate in presidential elections but not actually field a candidate.

The President appoints a Prime Minister and, upon the latter's nomination, other members of the Council of Ministers.

The 230-member National Assembly is a unicameral legislature elected for four-year terms by universal adult suffrage under a system of proportional representation. Women did not have the vote until 1976.

CURRENT LEADERS

Marcelo Rebelo de Sousa

Position
President

Introduction

A lawyer and centre-right politician, Marcelo Rebelo de Sousa has been best known in Portugal for his work as a political commentator on major TV networks. His election to the largely ceremonial post of president came only months after the unexpected establishment of a Socialist-led coalition government.

Early Life

Marcelo Duarte Nuno Rebelo de Sousa was born in Lisbon on 12 Dec. 1948. He graduated in law from the University of Lisbon in 1971, specializing in administrative law. Active in the centre-right Social Democratic Party (PSD), he was first elected to the National Assembly in 1980, serving in the government led by Francisco Pinto Balsemão.

Briefly minister of parliamentary affairs in the early 1980s, he turned to journalism following defeat in the 1983 election. He co-founded the Expresso newspaper with Pinto Balsemão, while also developing a reputation as a political commentator on radio. Elected leader of the PSD in 1996, de Sousa became the de facto leader of the opposition to the Socialist Party led by António Guterres. A centre-right coalition with the People's Party (PP) that began in 1998 proved short-lived, with de Sousa resigning a year later amid mounting tensions with the PP leader, Paulo Portas.

Subsequently, de Sousa continued to work as a political commentator, appearing regularly on both public and private TV networks. He was meanwhile a professor of law at the Portuguese Catholic University and also taught at the New University of Lisbon. In Oct. 2015 he declared his intention to run for the presidency. He emerged victorious from the election on 24 Jan.

2016, taking 52.0% of the vote, well ahead of his centre-left rival, António Sampaio de Nóvoa.

Career in Office

De Sousa was sworn in as president on 9 March 2016. He promised to serve as a mediator between the opposing factions in parliament and to focus on improving the economy.

António Costa

Position

Prime Minister

Introduction

On 26 Nov. 2015 António Costa was appointed the first Communist-backed Socialist prime minister of Portugal since the Salazar dictatorship was overthrown in 1974. The lawyer and former mayor of Lisbon promised to 'turn the page on austerity'.

Early Life

António Costa was born on 17 July 1961 in Lisbon, the son of an eminent writer, Orlando da Costa. His mother was a journalist and women's rights advocate. He studied law at Lisbon University in the early 1980s and briefly practised as a solicitor. Elected to Lisbon's municipal council in 1982 for the Socialist Party, he developed his political profile and won a seat at the legislative elections of Oct. 1991.

Costa was named minister of parliamentary affairs in the Socialist government of António Guterres, serving from 1997 until 1999. He was then justice minister until April 2002, after which a spell in the European Parliament followed from 2004–05. He returned to national politics as interior minister in José Sócrates' first government from March 2005, when he gained a reputation as a key ally of the prime minister. He left the interior ministry in May 2007 to contest Lisbon's mayoral election. Having won, he helped to reinvigorate the city as a tourist destination and to stabilize its finances. He was re-elected in 2009 and 2013.

In Sept. 2014 Costa challenged António José Seguro for the Socialist Party leadership and subsequently won the election with 68% of the vote. The general election on 4 Oct. 2015 was closely fought, after which President Aníbal Cavaco Silva asked a centre-right coalition of the Social Democratic Party and the CDS–People's Party to form a government despite not having a working majority. Costa—in alliance with the Communist, Green and Left Bloc parties—passed a vote of no confidence in the new government, toppling it within two weeks. Costa was then chosen by the president as the next premier and took office on 26 Nov. 2015.

Career in Office

Costa promised to temper the effects of the previous administration's austerity policies, raise the minimum wage, lift a freeze on pensions and cancel pay cuts for civil servants, while meeting the country's international commitments on its budget and debts. He was expected to face a tough challenge in keeping his fragile alliance united, particularly in the wake of the country's emergence from the €78bn. international financial bailout arranged in 2011.

DEFENCE

Purchase was abolished in Nov. 2004. Portugal now has a purely professional army.

In 2013 defence expenditure totalled US$2,773m. (US$257 per capita), representing 1.3% of GDP.

Army

Strength (2011) 25,701. There are Army reserves totalling 210,000. Paramilitary forces include the National Republican Guard (26,100) and the Public Security Police (21,600).

Navy

In 2011 the combatant fleet comprised two German-built attack submarines, five frigates and seven corvettes. Naval personnel in 2011 totalled 9,715 including 1,563 marines. There were also 1,267 naval reserves.

Air Force

The Air Force in 2011 had a strength of 7,218. There were 43 combat-capable aircraft (mainly F-16s).

ECONOMY

Services accounted for 76% of GDP in 2012, industry 22% and agriculture 2%.

Overview

Since the 1980s Portugal's economy has become increasingly dependent on services, which accounted for 76.7% of GDP as of the first quarter of 2015. Low productivity, weak competitiveness and high corporate debt have meanwhile hindered growth and led to high fiscal imbalances. The country suffered badly as a result of the global recession of the early 2000s and the accompanying eurozone debt crisis. The economy recorded average annual growth of less than 1% in the period 2004–14 and in 2013 unemployment, at 16.5%, was among the highest in the eurozone.

In April 2011 the government applied to the European Commission for financial assistance to avoid a debt default. The Extended Fund Facility for Portugal was agreed the following month, providing €78bn. (US$116bn.) over three years, funded by the European Union, the European Central Bank and the IMF. To meet the terms of the bailout, income tax rose from 24.5% to 28.5% with effect from Jan. 2013, with a resulting squeeze on living standards and reduced consumer spending. The government also undertook a 'fire sale' of €5bn. worth of state assets to foreign investors. This resulted, for instance, in the sale of 21% of the utility company Energias de Portugal and 25% of the state electricity grid.

The IMF reported signs of recovery by Dec. 2013, with bailout targets on track, growth in line with projections, falling unemployment and stronger than expected domestic demand. The 2014 budget included steps to modernize public administration, improve the sustainability of the pension system and meet a deficit target of 4% of GDP. On the back of increasing exports and higher levels of private domestic consumption, GDP growth of 0.9% in 2014 was followed by an estimated expansion of 1.5% in 2015 and heralded a more positive economic outlook.

Nonetheless, the sovereign debt crisis in the eurozone has continued to threaten long-term recovery and, with Spain accounting for a fifth of Portuguese exports, instability in the Spanish economy has had knock-on effects in Portugal. In addition, following a decline of nearly 35% between 2007 and 2014, investment in capital stocks—crucial to long-term economic health—was still faltering as of 2015.

Currency

On 1 Jan. 1999 the euro (EUR) became the legal currency in Portugal at the irrevocable conversion rate of 200.482 escudos to 1 euro. The euro, which consists of 100 cents, has been in circulation since 1 Jan. 2002. On the introduction of the euro there was a 'dual circulation' period before the escudo ceased to be legal tender on 28 Feb. 2002. Euro banknotes in circulation on 1 Jan. 2002 had a total value of €10.6bn.

Inflation rates (based on OECD statistics):

2.1%	3.0%	2.4%	2.7%	-0.9%	1.4%	3.6%	2.8%	0.4%	-0.2%

Gold reserves were 12.30m. troy oz in Sept. 2009 and foreign exchange reserves US$774m. Total money supply was €52,659m. in Aug. 2009.

Budget

In 2011 central government revenues totalled €69,222m. and expenditures €75,387m. Taxes accounted for 53.0% of revenues in 2011 and social contributions 29.4%; social benefits accounted for 48.1% of expenditures and compensation of employees 21.1%.

Portugal's budget deficit in 2014 was 7.2% of GDP (2013, 4.8%; 2012, 5.7%). The required target set by the EU is a budget deficit of no more than 3%.

The standard rate of VAT is 23.0% (reduced rates, 13% and 6%).

Performance

Real GDP growth rates (based on OECD statistics):

2005	2006	2007	2008	2009	2010	2011	2012	2013	2014
0.8%	1.6%	2.5%	0.2%	-3.0%	1.9%	-1.8%	-4.0%	-1.1%	0.9%

In the years since Portugal joined the European Union its GDP per head has risen from being 53% of the EU average to 80% in 2010. Portugal's total GDP in 2014 was US$230.1bn.

Banking and Finance

The central bank and bank of issue is the Bank of Portugal, founded in 1846 and nationalized in 1974. Its Governor is Carlos Costa.

In 2006 there were 5,039 branches of banks and savings banks and 676 branches of agricultural credit co-operatives. Deposits in all monetary establishments totalled €146.7bn. in 2006. The largest Portuguese bank is the state-owned Caixa Geral de Depósitos, with assets of €111.1bn. in 2008. Other major banks are Banco Comercial Português, Banco Espírito Santo and Banco Português de Investimento.

Gross external debt amounted to US$485,816m. in June 2012.

There are stock exchanges in Lisbon and Porto.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

In 2011, 24.9% of energy consumption came from renewables (wind power, solar power, hydro-electric power, tidal power, geothermal energy and biomass), compared to the European Union average of 13.0%. A target of 31% has been set by the EU for 2020.

Environment

Portugal's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2011 were the equivalent of 4.9 tonnes per capita.

Electricity

Installed capacity was 19.9m. kW in 2011. Production in 2011 was 52.46bn. kWh; consumption per capita was 5,216 kWh.

Minerals

Portugal possesses considerable mineral wealth. Production in tonnes (2005): limestone, marl and calcite, 51,025,000; granite (2006), 27,489,000; marble, 752,000; salt, 597,945; kaolin, 164,072; copper, 89,541; tungsten, 816.

Agriculture

There were 274,563 agricultural holdings in 2007. The agricultural sector employs 11.6% of the workforce. In 2007 there were 1.08m. ha. of arable land and 796,000 ha. of permanent crops.

The following figures show the production (in 1,000 tonnes) of the chief crops:

Animal products in 2007 (1,000 tonnes): meat, 844.8; eggs, 121.6; cheese, 79.5; milk, 2,029m. litres.

Forestry

Forests covered 3.46m. ha. (38% of the land area) in 2010. Portugal is the world's largest producer of cork, averaging 157,000 tonnes annually. Timber production was 10.96m. cu. metres in 2011.

Fisheries

The fishing industry is important, although much less so than in the past, and the Portuguese eat more fish per person than in any other European Union member country (more than twice the EU average). The catch was 197,817 tonnes in 2012 (almost exclusively from marine waters). In the same year the fishing fleet consisted of 8,291 vessels totalling 100,670 GT. Imports of fishery commodities were valued at US$2,027m. in 2011 and exports at US$1,082m.

INDUSTRY

The leading companies by market capitalization in Portugal in March 2015 were: EDP Energias de Portugal, an electricity company (US$11.6bn.); Galp Energia (US$8.3bn.); and Jerónimo Martins, a food distribution group (US$7.9bn.).

Labour

The labour force in 2013 was 5,397,000 (5,463,000 in 2003). 73.6% of the population aged 15–64 was economically active in 2013. Of those in employment in 2013, 68.5% worked in services, 24.9% in industry and 6.6% in agriculture. In Dec. 2015 the unemployment rate was 11.8% (down from 14.1% in 2014 as a whole). A minimum wage is fixed by the government. In 2011 the minimum wage was €485 a month. Retirement is at 65 years for men and 62 for women.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

In 2010 imports (c.i.f.) totalled US$75,573m. (US$69,985m. in 2009); exports (f.o.b.), US$48,744m. (US$43,397m. in 2009).

In 2010 main import sources (in US$1m.) were: Spain (23,557); Germany (10,460); France (5,466); Italy (4,292); Netherlands (3,866). Main export markets in 2010 (in US$1m.) were: Spain (12,917); Germany (6,262); France (5,729); UK (2,656); Angola (2,533).

Principal imports in 2010 (in US$1m.) were: machinery and transport equipment (22,828); manufactured goods (11,294); mineral fuels, lubricants and related materials (11,026); chemicals and chemical products (9,481); food (8,392). Principal exports in 2010 (in US$1m.) were: machinery and transport equipment (13,225); manufactured goods (10,871); miscellaneous manufactured articles including articles of apparel, clothing accessories and footwear (8,037); chemicals and chemical products (4,030); food (3,411).

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

In 2005 there were 2,613 km of motorways, 5,883 km of national roads, 4,406 km of secondary roads and 63,900 km of other roads. In 2006 the number of vehicles registered included 5,234,500 passenger cars, 535,300 motorcycles and mopeds, 119,000 lorries and vans and 29,700 buses and coaches. In 2007 there were 854 deaths in road accidents.

Rail

In 2011 total railway length was 2,794 km. Passenger-km travelled in 2011 came to 3.75bn. and freight tonne-km to 2.06bn. There is a metro (19 km) and tramway (94 km) in Lisbon. New light rail systems were opened in Porto in 2002 and Almada in 2007.

Civil Aviation

There are international airports at Portela (Lisbon), Pedras Rubras (Porto), Faro (Algarve) and Funchal (Madeira). The national carrier is the state-owned TAP-Air Portugal, with some domestic and international flights being provided by Portugália. In 2006 scheduled airline traffic of Portuguese-based carriers flew 171m. km, carrying 9,449,000 passengers (6,449,000 on international flights). In 2007 Lisbon handled 13,393,000 passengers (11,249,000 on international flights) and 82,645 tonnes of freight. Faro was the second busiest in terms of passenger traffic, with 5,471,000 passengers, and Porto was the second busiest for freight, with 31,991 tonnes.

Shipping

In 2007, 15,226 vessels of 151-82m. tonnes entered all Portuguese ports; 367,391 passengers embarked and 368,095 disembarked during 2007. 21.17m. tonnes of cargo were loaded in 2007 and 47.05m. tonnes unloaded. In Jan. 2009 there were 154 ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 981,000 GT.

Telecommunications

Portugal Telecom (PT) was formed from a merger of three state-owned utilities in 1994. It is now fully privatized. In 2013 there were 4,530,000 main (fixed) telephone lines. In the same year mobile phone subscribers numbered 11,991,000 excluding machine-to-machine subscriptions. 62.1% of the population aged 16-74 were internet users in 2013. There were 19.8 broadband subscribers per 100 inhabitants in Dec. 2010. In March 2012 there were 4.2m. Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

There are four judicial districts (Lisbon, Porto, Coimbra and Évora) divided into 58 circuits. In 2007 there were 335 courts, including 329 common courts of first instance. There are also six higher courts (five courts of appeal and a Supreme Court in Lisbon).

Capital punishment was abolished completely in the constitution of 1976.

The population in penal institutions in Nov. 2008 was 11,017 (104 per 100,000 of national population). Portugal was ranked 21st of 102 countries for criminal justice and 23rd for civil justice in the 2015 World Justice Project Rule of Law Index, which provides data on how the rule of law is experienced by the general public across eight categories.

Education

Adult literacy rate was an estimated 94.9% in 2009. Compulsory education has been in force since 1911.

In 2007 there were 263,887 children in pre-school establishments with 16,599 teaching staff, 753,646 pupils in primary schools with 64,274 teaching staff and 680,338 pupils in secondary schools with 92,965 teaching staff.

In 2006 public tertiary education institutions included 14 universities and a non-integrated university institution; 15 polytechnics and a number of polytechnic schools integrated in universities; 9 non-integrated nursing schools; 4 university-level military schools; and 5 polytechnic military schools. In the private sector there were 34 university level institutions and 66 polytechnics as well as a Catholic university. Portugal's oldest university is the University of Coimbra (Universidade de Coimbra), initially established in Lisbon in 1290; its largest is the University of Porto (Universidade do Porto), with 27,184 students in 2007-08. In 2007 there were 366,729 students in higher education with 36,069 academic staff.

Public expenditure on education came to 5.5% of GNI in 2006 (11.3% of total government expenditure).

Health

There were 200 hospitals in 2006 with 36,563 beds, and 378 clinics. In 2007 there were 37,904 doctors, 5,629 dentists, 10,117 pharmacists and 54,079 nurses. In 2007 Portugal spent 10.0% of its GDP on health.

Welfare

There were 1,991,991 old-age pensioners as at 31 Dec. 2012, plus 713,340 survivor pensioners and 277,113 disability pensioners. In 2012 there were 858,080 recipients of child benefit, 638,317 recipients of unemployment benefits, 496,228 recipients of sickness benefits and 167,063 recipients of initial parental benefits.

Pensions are available to men and women aged at least 65 with 15 years of contributions. Pensions are available at a younger age to workers in specified industries including mining, dancing, and the maritime and aviation sectors. The pension value is 2% of the average lifetime salary for each year of contributions, up to 40 years. Until 2017 pensions may also be calculated using an older system (2% of average earnings for the best ten of the last 15 years, multiplied by the number of years of contributions).

RELIGION

There is freedom of worship, both in public and private, with the exception of creeds incompatible with morals and the life and physical integrity of the people. A study by the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life estimated that there were 10.01m. Christians in 2010 (98% of which were Catholics) and 470,000 people with no religious affiliation. In Feb. 2016 there were three cardinals.

CULTURE

The Community of Portuguese-Speaking Countries (CPLP, comprising Angola, Brazil, Cabo Verde, Guinea-Bissau, Mozambique, Portugal and São Tomé e Príncipe) was founded in July 1996 with headquarters in Lisbon, primarily as a cultural and linguistic organization.

World Heritage Sites

(With year entered on list). In the Central Zone of the Town of Angra do Heroísmo in the Azores (1983) are the fortresses of San Sebastião and San Filipe, the latter built around 1590 on the orders of King Phillip II of Spain. The Monastery of the Hieronymites was built at the turn of the 16th century in Belém, Lisbon, while the capital's Tower of Belém was constructed as a monument to Vasco da Gama's explorations (1983 and 2008). The Monastery of Batalha (1983) near Leiria was built from 1388. The Convent of Christ in Tomar (1983) was originally built in 1160 as the centre of the Templar order. It was taken over by the Order of Christ in 1360 of which Henry the Navigator was made governor in 1418, and was greatly enriched in the 16th century. Other sites are the medieval walled Historic Centre of Évora (1988), the Gothic Cistercian 12th century Monastery of Alcobaça, north of Lisbon (1989), the Cultural Landscape of Sintra (1995), the Historic Centre of Porto (1996) and the Laurisilva of Madeira (1999), an area of biodiverse laurel forest. In 2001 two more sites were added: the Alto Douro Wine Region, famous for its port wine since the 18th century, and the Historic Centre of Guimarães, a town closely associated with the formation of Portuguese identity. The Landscape of the Pico Island Vineyard Culture followed in 2004. The Garrison Border Town of Elvas and its Fortifications (2012) houses the remains of an enormous war fortress, extensively fortified from the 17th to 19th centuries. It is the largest bulwarked dry ditch system in the world. The University of Coimbra—Alta and Sofia was added to the list in 2013. Situated on a hilltop, the university has grown and evolved over more than seven centuries.

The Prehistoric Rock Art Sites in the Côa Valley and Siega Verde (1998) is shared with Spain.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Qatar has rock carvings, inscriptions and fragments of pottery dating from 4000 BC. The early population was swelled by seasonal migration of Arab tribes and the peninsula became a centre for fishing and pearls. Commercial activity declined in the Roman era, when trade was concentrated in the Red Sea, but recovered in the 3rd century AD.

Islam was established in Qatar in the mid-7th century AD. During the Abbasid period (750–1258) Qatar enjoyed strong relations with the Caliphs in Baghdad. After briefly coming under Portuguese influence in the early 16th century, Qatar fell under Ottoman sovereignty. For the next four centuries it was nominally part of the Ottoman Empire, though considerable power remained with local tribal sheikhs.

Pearling and trading settlements were established along the coast in the 18th century, which also saw the rise of the Al Thani family who were originally from Saudi Arabia. In the mid-19th century Sheikh Mohammed bin Thani moved the family to the growing coastal town of Doha and established control of the surrounding region. Territorial disputes with the Al Khalifa family in neighbouring Bahrain led to a war in 1867 in which Doha was almost destroyed. The British intervened to recognize the Al Thani family as rulers of Qatar and in 1878 Sheikh Mohammed was succeeded by his son, Sheikh Qassim, who became the first Amir. With the collapse of the Ottoman Empire during the First World War, Qatar came under British rule. Under the treaties of 1916 and 1934 Qatar ceded Britain control over its external affairs in return for British military protection.

Oil was discovered in 1939 and, after a delay caused by the Second World War, exports began in 1949. In Dec. 1961 Qatar joined the Organization of the Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC). In 1968 British troops left Qatar and in 1970 Qatar adopted a constitution confirming the emirate as an absolute monarchy. It led negotiations to establish a union of Arab emirates but terms could not be agreed. On 3 Sept. 1971 Qatar assumed full independence under the rule of Sheikh Ahmad and joined the Arab League and the United Nations. In 1972 Sheikh Ahmad was ousted in a coup and chief minister Sheikh Khalifa bin Hamad Al Thani assumed power.

The discovery in 1971 of a large offshore oil field gave further impetus to the economy and Qatar rapidly developed a modern infrastructure, building up its health and education services. In 1981 it was a founder member of the Gulf Co-operation Council (GCC) and in 1988 established diplomatic relations with the USSR and the People's Republic of China. Qatar allied itself with Saudi Arabia on many regional and international issues and in 1991 joined the US-led international alliance against Iraq following the invasion of Kuwait.

In Jan. 1992 pressure for political reform culminated in demands from 50 prominent Qataris for a consultative assembly. On 27 June 1995 Amir Sheikh Khalifa was ousted by his son, Sheikh Hamad, who announced plans to introduce democratic reforms. In 1996 he survived an assassination attempt, part of an abortive attempt to restore his father to power. In 1996 the Arabic-language news agency Al-Jazeera was established in Doha, with the Amir's personal support and state financial backing. The station has won widespread respect and influence, despite pressure from some powers to tone down what is seen as an anti-West bias.

In 2001 a long-standing territorial dispute between Qatar and Bahrain was settled by the International Court of Justice, with Qatar recognizing Bahrain's sovereignty over the Hamar Islands in return for Bahrain renouncing claims on parts of mainland Qatar. In 2003 Qatar supported the UN-backed, American- and British-led invasion of Iraq, with Doha hosting the coalition headquarters.

In recent years Qatar's economy has grown rapidly. In 2003 a referendum was held to approve the country's constitution, which provides for a parliament with 30 elected and 15 appointed members. In the same year Qatar's first female minister, Sheikha Ahmad Al Mahmoud, was appointed.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Qatar is a peninsula running north into the Persian Gulf. It is bounded in the south by Saudi Arabia. The territory includes a number of islands in the coastal waters of the peninsula, the most important of which is Halul, the storage and export terminal for the offshore oilfields. The area of Qatar is 11,571 sq. km. Population at the mini-census of April 2015, 2,404,776; density 207.8 per sq. km. In 2011, 95.9% of the population lived in urban areas.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 2.24m.

Areas and populations of the seven municipalities:

Municipalities	Sq. km	2010 census population
Doha	234	796,947
Al Rayyan	5,818	445,623
Al Khour	1,551	193,983
Al Wakra	2,520	141,222
Umm Salal	310	60,509
Al Daayen	236	43,176
Al Shamal	902	7,975

The capital is Doha, which is the main port, and had a census population in 2010 of 521,283. Other towns are Dukhan (the centre of oil production), Umm Said (the oil terminal of Qatar), Ruwais, Wakra, Al Khour, Umm Salal Mohammad and Umm Bab.

About 40% of the population are Arabs, 18% Indian, 18% Pakistani and 10% Iranian. Other nationalities make up the remaining 14%. Only about 10% of the working-age population are Qatari citizens.

The official language is Arabic.

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

Qatar is ruled by an Amir. HH Sheikh Tamim bin Hamad Al Thani (b. 1980) assumed power after his father, HH Sheikh Hamad bin Khalifa Al Thani, KCMG, abdicated on 25 June 2013. The heir apparent was Sheikh Hamad's third son, Sheikh Jasim bin Hamad Al Thani (b. 1978), but in Aug. 2003 he named his fourth son, Sheikh Tamim bin Hamad Al Thani, as heir apparent instead.

Qatar's first written constitution was approved in June 2004 and came into force on 9 June 2005. Parliament is the unicameral Advisory Council (Majlis Al-Shura) consisting of 35 members who are appointed by the Amir for three-year terms.

CURRENT LEADERS

Tamim bin Hamad bin Khalifa Al Thani

Position

Amir

Introduction

Sheikh Tamim bin Hamad bin Khalifa Al Thani became Amir on 25 June 2013 following the abdication of Sheikh Hamad bin Khalifa Al Thani, who had led Qatar since 1995.

Early Life

Sheikh Tamim was born on 3 June 1980 in Doha, the second son of Amir Sheikh Hamad and his second wife, Sheikha Mozah bint Nasser Al Missned. Sheikh Tamin attended the UK schools of Sherborne and Harrow, completing his A-levels in 1997. He subsequently attended the UK's Royal Military Academy, Sandhurst. Upon graduating in 1998 he was commissioned as a second lieutenant in the Qatari armed forces. He was named heir apparent in 2003, with older brother Sheikh Jassim bin Hamad Al Thani renouncing his claim.

Sheikh Tamim founded Qatar Sports Investments in 2005, chaired the organizing committee of the 15th Asian Games in Doha (2006) and is chairman of the national Olympic committee. He has variously served as chairman of the government councils responsible for education, the environment and natural reserves, communication and technology, public works and the economy. In 2009 he was appointed deputy commander-in-chief of the Qatari armed forces. He married Sheikha Jawaher bint Hamad bin Suhaim Al Thani in 2005 and Sheikha Anoud bint Mana Al Hajri in 2009.

Career in Office

In the first six months of his rule, Sheikh Tamim undertook a cabinet reshuffle that saw Hamad bin Jassim replaced as prime minister and foreign minister by Sheikh Abdullah bin Nasser bin Khalifa Al Thani and Khalid Al Attiyah respectively.

Economically, the government's long-term Vision 2030 programme has envisaged heavy investment in infrastructure related to the hosting of the 2022 soccer World Cup. This includes a new metro system, museums, revamped roads and a new airport. However, international attention ahead of the 2022 tournament has put pressure on Sheikh Tamim to look at Qatar's labour, immigration and human rights laws.

In regional affairs, Qatar has adopted an active military role since 2014 in the Syrian security crisis against Islamic State jihadists and in the Saudi Arabian-led campaign against Houthi rebels in Yemen, although relations with some neighbouring Gulf states and with Egypt have been soured over Qatar's alleged backing for the Muslim Brotherhood. In Dec. 2015 Qatar also joined in the formation of a 34-state Saudi-led Islamic military coalition to combat terrorism.

DEFENCE

Defence expenditure in 2011 totalled an estimated US$3,476m. (approximately US$1,880 per capita), representing around 2% of GDP.

Army

Personnel (2011) 8,500.

Navy

Personnel in 2011 totalled 1,800 including Marine Police; the base is at Doha.

Air Force

Personnel (2011) 1,500; equipment included 18 combat-capable aircraft and 13 multi-role helicopters.

INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

In March 2001 the International Court of Justice ruled on a long-standing dispute between Bahrain and Qatar over the boundary between the two countries and ownership of certain islands. Both countries accepted the decision.

ECONOMY

Oil, natural gas and other mining contributed 51.7% to GDP in 2010; followed by finance and real estate, 13.4%; manufacturing (excluding oil- and natural gas-related manufacturing), 10.6%; and public administration and defence, 7.7%.

Overview

Qatar, a member of the Gulf Co-operation Council, has one of the world's highest per capita income levels, at US$92,200 in 2014. Oil and natural gas exports are the keystone of the economy, contributing more than 60% of GDP, 85% of export earnings and 70% of government revenues that year. Proven oil reserves of 15bn. bbls should ensure current levels of production can be maintained until well into the 2030s, while reserves of natural gas (the third largest in the world) account for more than 5% of the global total.

After a rapid gas sector-led expansion (including double-digit real GDP growth every year between 2006 and 2011), the economy slowed to record annual average growth of 4.5% between 2012 and 2014. With international energy prices declining from mid-2014, pressure has increased for the government to reduce reliance on the hydrocarbon sector. In particular, there has been major investment in construction and transport infrastructure, with a development plan incorporating publicly-funded projects for a national railway system, a new international airport, a new port and numerous hotels. Investor interest has been further buoyed by Qatar's role as host of the 2022 football World Cup competition, hopefully cementing the country's position as a tourist hub for the long term.

Qatar has a substantial asset base, including significant foreign investments, and a sovereign wealth fund worth in excess of US$250bn. in 2015. Current account surpluses in 2012 and 2013 equivalent to over 30% of GDP have similarly indicated a healthy mid- to long-term outlook.

Currency

The unit of currency is the Qatari riyal (QAR) of 100 dirhams, introduced in 1973. Foreign exchange reserves were US$4,370m. in July 2005, gold reserves were 19,000 troy oz and total money supply was 19,159m. riyals. Inflation rates (based on IMF statistics):

2005	2006	2007	2008	2009	2010	2011	2012	2013	2014
8.9%	11.8%	13.6%	15.2%	-4.9%	-2.4%	1.9%	1.9%	3.1%	3.0%

Budget

The fiscal year is 1 April–31 March. Revenue (2009–10) 154,674m. riyals; expenditure, 108,085m. riyals.

Performance

In terms of GDP per head, Qatar ranks among the richest countries in the world with a purchasing power parity (PPP) per capita GDP of 77,568 current international dollars in 2009. Qatar has the highest density of dollar millionaires of any country, with 14% of households holding private wealth of at least US$1m. The country has been experiencing a period of rapid economic expansion, driven by rising oil prices and the increased exploitation of its natural gas reserves, the third largest in the world. Real GDP growth (based on IMF statistics):

2005	2006	2007	2008	2009	2010	2011	2012	2013	2014
7.5%	26.2%	18.0%	17.7%	12.0%	19.6%	13.4%	4.9%	4.6%	4.0%

Total GDP was US$210.1bn. in 2014.

Banking and Finance

The Qatar Monetary Agency, which functioned as a bank of issue, became the Central Bank in 1995 (Governor, Abdullah bin Saud Al-Thani). In 2003 there were eight commercial domestic banks and seven foreign banks. The largest bank is the Qatar National Bank, with assets in 2008 of US$41.8bn.

A stock exchange was established in Doha by the Amir's decree in 1995.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Qatar's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2011 were the equivalent of 44.1 tonnes per capita, among the highest in the world.

Electricity

Installed capacity was 7.8m. kW in 2011. Production was 30.73bn. kWh in 2011; consumption per capita was 16,081 kWh.

Proven reserves of oil (2012) 23.9bn. bbls. Output more than doubled between 2002 and 2012, rising from 37.4m. tonnes to 83.3m. tonnes.

The North Field, the world's biggest single reservoir of gas and containing 12% of the known world gas reserves, is half the size of Qatar itself. Development cost is estimated at US$25bn. In 2014 natural gas reserves were 24.5trn. cu. metres (the third largest after Iran and Russia); output more than doubled between 2008 and 2012, rising from 77.0bn. cu. metres to 157.0bn. cu. metres. Production in 2014 was 177.2bn. cu. metres.

Agriculture

In 2002, 1.2% of the economically active population were engaged in agriculture. An estimated 13,000 ha. were irrigated in 2002. There were approximately 18,000 ha. of arable land in 2002 and 3,000 ha. of permanent crops. Production (2002) in 1,000 tonnes: dates, 16; tomatoes, 11; pumpkins and squash, 8; aubergines, 5; barley, 5; cucumbers and gherkins, 5; melons and watermelons, 5; onions, 4.

Livestock (2003 estimates): sheep, 200,000; goats, 180,000; camels, 51,000; cattle, 15,000; chickens, 4m. Livestock products, 2003 estimates (in 1,000 tonnes): meat, 15; milk, 22; eggs, 4.

Fisheries

The catch in 2010 totalled 13,760 tonnes, entirely from sea fishing.

INDUSTRY

The leading companies by market capitalization in Qatar in March 2015 were Qatar National Bank (US$37.2bn.); Industries Qatar, a producer of petrochemicals, fertilizer and steel (US$23.1bn.); and Ezdan Real Estate (US$11.4bn.).

Production (2005, in 1,000 tonnes): urea, 2,979; ammonia, 2,134; petrol, 1,656; butane, 1,075; cement, 1,049; distillate fuel oil, 926; jet fuel, 905; steel bars, 791; ethylene, 544; residual fuel oil, 418; polyethylene, 415. There is an industrial zone at Umm Said.

Labour

In 2011 the economically active population totalled 1,271,100. Males constituted 88% of the labour force in 2011; foreigners make up 94% of the workforce. Qatar has the lowest percentages of females in the workforce of any country.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Qatar, along with Bahrain, Kuwait, Oman, Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates entered into a customs union in Jan. 2003.

Imports and Exports

Imports in 2006 totalled US$16,440-1m. and exports US$34,051-3m. The main imports are machinery and equipment, consumer goods, food and chemicals. Main exports are petroleum and petroleum products (52%) and liquefied natural gas (35%). Qatar is by far the world's largest exporter of liquefied natural gas. Principal import suppliers in 2004: France, 26.7%; USA, 9.6%; Saudi Arabia, 9.5%. Leading export markets, 2004: Japan, 41.6%; South Korea, 15.7%; Singapore, 9.1%.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

In 2007 there were about 7,790 km of roads. Vehicles in use in 2007 totalled 605,700. In 2007 there were 199 fatalities as a result of road accidents.

Civil Aviation

The flag carrier is Qatar Airways, which is state-owned and carried 18m. passengers in 2012–13. Qatar's airport is Hamad International Airport, which opened in April 2014 to replace the old Doha International Airport (where passenger numbers had quadrupled between 2003 and 2013).

Telecommunications

In 2013 there were an estimated 413,000 main (fixed) telephone lines; mobile phone subscribers numbered an estimated 3,310,000 in the same year. 69.3% of the population were internet users in 2012. In March 2012 there were 481,000 Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The Judiciary System is administered by the Ministry of Justice which comprises three main departments: legal affairs, courts of justice and land and real estate register. In 2004 a High Judicial Council was established to oversee the court system, which as a result of a new Judicial Authority Law that took effect at the same time comprises the Court of Cassation, the Court of Appeal and the Court of First Instance. The death penalty is in force. There was one execution in 2003, but none since. The population in penal institutions in 2011 was approximately 1,150 (60 per 100,000 of national population).

All issues related to personal affairs of Muslims under Islamic Law embodied in the Holy Koran and Sunna are decided by Sharia Courts.

Education

Adult literacy rate was 94.7% in 2009. There were, in 2007, 75,451 pupils at primary schools (with 6,639 teaching staff in 2006), 61,226 pupils at secondary schools (6,200 teaching staff in 2006) and 8,881 students with 1,153 academic staff in higher education. There were 265 Arab and foreign private schools with 56,183 pupils and 4,092 teachers in 2002–03. The University of Qatar had 8,801 students in 2008 and 637 full-time academic staff in 2007–08. Education City, a campus built in the outskirts of Doha, houses branches of eight prestigious international universities along with the Qatar Faculty of Islamic Studies.

Students abroad (2003–04) numbered 374.

In 2005 public expenditure on education accounted for 19.6% of total government spending.

Health

There were three government and two private hospitals in 2002. In 2005 there were 2,150 physicians, 1,100 pharmacists, 690 dentists and 4,880 nursing and midwifery personnel.

RELIGION

The population is predominantly Muslim, although there is a small Christian minority among expatriates.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

The walled coastal town of Al Zubarah was added to the UNESCO World Heritage List in 2013. It is designated as an archaeological site and flourished as a pearling and trading centre in the late 18th and 19th centuries, although it is now deserted.

Press

There are four Arabic language daily newspapers—Al-Rayah, Al-Sharq, Al-Watan and Al-Arab. The Gulf Times, The Peninsula and Qatar Tribune are English dailies. In 2008 the combined circulation was 115,000. Qatar Chronicle, launched in 2012, is an online news portal published on a daily basis in English and Arabic.

Tourism

In 2013 there were 2,611,000 international tourist arrivals (excluding same-day visitors), up from 2,346,000 in 2012.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Neolithic peoples with links to Anatolia settled from 5000 BC at Lake Golovita, close to Romania's Black Sea coast. The subsequent Boian culture spread across the lower Danube valley by 3500 BC. Later, Indo European peoples, collectively known as the Thracians, entered the Carpathian-Balkan region. The Dacii (or Getae to the Greeks, who had established colonies on the western Black Sea coast by the 7th century BC) occupied much of present-day Romania. Dacian power grew under King Burebista (82–44 BC), attracting Roman attention. In AD 106 the Roman emperor Trajan succeeded in making the kingdom a frontier province.

Under Barbarian attack, in 271 Emperor Aurelian withdrew the Roman Army and administration south of the Danube to Dobrogea (Constanța), although much of Dacia remained in the Roman-Byzantine sphere through trade along the Danube. As Rome's influence waned, Dacia was populated between the 3rd and 9th centuries by tribes from the Steppes to the east, including Goths, Huns, Avars, Bulgars and Magyars. Magyar power was centred on Transylvania and for most of the 10th–13th centuries it was a Hungarian dependency. Mongol Invasion in 1241 was followed by the foundation of the feudal 'Danubian Principalities' of Wallachia and Moldavia in the late 13th and early 14th centuries. In 1415, under Prince Mircea, Wallachia became a vassal of the Ottoman Empire, although retaining some independence. Prince Vlad Țepeș (known as Dracula) ruled Wallachia from 1456–62 and Stephen the Great reigned in Moldavia from 1457–1504.

Following the Magyar defeat at the battle of Mohács in 1526, Transylvania came under Ottoman vassalage. Moldavia succumbed to Ottoman domination in 1538. Michael the Brave, ruler of Wallachia from 1593, defeated an Ottoman invasion in 1595 and conquered Transylvania four years later. In 1600 he briefly unified the three Romanian provinces. Several independent princes then ruled Transylvania in the 17th century until the Habsburgs expanded eastward in the 1680s. In 1686, through the Treaty of Vienna, Transylvania accepted Habsburg protection under Leopold I. In Wallachia, the late 17th century saw prolonged struggle against Ottoman rule, with Princes Cantacuzino and Brâncoveanu even negotiating with the Austrian and Russian Empires. The Ottomans responded by backing the suzerainty of the Istanbul-based Phanariots, whose rule included phases of corruption and enlightened reform. Prince Mavrocordat abolished serfdom in 1746. The treaty of Kuchuk Kainarji (1774) boosted Russian influence in Wallachia and Moldavia.

Phanariot rule ended in 1821, following a revolt led by Tudor Vladimirescu and the outbreak of the Greek War of Independence. Local princes were reinstated in Wallachia and Moldavia. The 1829 Treaty of Adrianople that concluded the Russo-Turkish war prompted Russian repression in the principalities. Transylvania remained under Habsburg influence until revolution in all three provinces in 1848, sparked by opposition to foreign rule and the power of local landowners (boyars). That year the Diet of Cluj voted for union between Transylvania and the other three provinces of Hungary. Support grew for the union of Moldavia and Wallachia. The election of Alexander Cuza as prince of both territories in 1859 paved the way for union as Romania in 1862, with Bucharest as its capital. In 1866 Carol of Hohenzollern was crowned and adopted a constitution based on that of Belgium. Romania was declared independent by the Treaty of Berlin of 1878.

Despite economic expansion, the peasantry remained downtrodden and rebelled in 1907. Romania joined the First World War on the allied side in 1916. Victory brought Transylvania (with large Hungarian and German populations), Bessarabia, Bucovina and Dobruđa into the union with the 'Old Kingdom'. The world recession then drew Romania into Germany's economic orbit. The fascist Iron Guard assassinated Liberal leader Ion G. Duca in 1933 and King Carol II became increasingly totalitarian. Following Nazi and Soviet annexations of Romanian territory in 1940, he abdicated in favour of his son Mihai. The fascist government of Ion Antonescu declared war on the USSR on 22 June 1941 but on 23 Aug. 1944 Mihai, with the backing of opposition parties, deposed Antonescu and switched sides.

The armistice of Sept. 1944 gave the Soviet army control of Romania. This, and the 'spheres of influence' diplomacy of the Allies, ensured Romania's communist future. Transylvania was restored to Romania (although it lost Bessarabia and Northern Bucovina), and large estates were broken up for the benefit of the peasantry. Following elections in Nov. 1946, marred by intimidation and fraud, Mihai was forced to abdicate and a People's Republic proclaimed. The communist leader, Gheorghe Gheorghiu-Dej, purged his fellow leaders in the early 1950s. Under Nicolae Ceaușescu, who became the centre of power in 1965, Romania took a relatively independent stand in foreign affairs while domestic repression and impoverishment increased.

In Dec. 1989 there were mass demonstrations, backed by the army, against the government. Ceaușescu fled the capital and the National Salvation Front (FSN) proclaimed itself the provisional government. Ceaușescu and his family were captured, secretly tried and, on 25 Dec., executed. A day later the FSN's Ion Iliescu became president, overseeing a reformist administration inhibited by its communist origins.

With the economy stalled, a four-party coalition led by Emil Constantinescu came to power in 1996. Iliescu returned as president in 2000 and in 2004 was replaced by Traian Băsescu.

On 1 Jan. 2007 Romania joined the EU. An IMF-led bailout followed the global economic crisis of late 2008. In Dec. 2009 Băsescu was re-elected president and Emil Boc formed a new coalition government. However, Boc resigned in Feb. 2012 amid widespread protests against austerity measures. Mihai-Răzvan Ungureanu replaced him as premier but left office in May 2012 after losing a confidence vote. Victor Ponta of the Social Democratic Party succeeded him as prime minister.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Romania is bounded in the north by Ukraine, in the east by Moldova, Ukraine and the Black Sea, south by Bulgaria, southwest by Serbia and northwest by Hungary. The area is 238,391 sq. km. Population (2011 census), 20,121,641; density, 84.4 per sq. km. In 2011, 58.0% of the population lived in urban areas. Romania's population has been falling at such a steady rate since 1990 that its population at the time of the 2011 census was the same as that in the early 1970s. In Jan. 2014 the population was estimated at 19,947,311.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 19.51m.

Romania is divided into 41 counties (judet) and the municipality of Bucharest (Bucureşti).

At the 2011 census the following ethnic minorities numbered over 25,000: Hungarians, 1,227,600 (mainly in Transylvania);

Roma (Gypsies), 621,600; Ukrainians, 50,900; Germans, 36,000; Turks, 27,700. A Council of National Minorities made up of representatives of the government and ethnic groups was set up in 1993. The actual number of Roma is estimated to be nearer 2m. Romania has one of the largest Roma populations of any country.

The official language is Romanian.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2010 (in 1,000): births, 212.2; deaths, 259.7; marriages, 115.8; divorces, 32.6. Rates, 2010 (per 1,000 population): live births, 9.9; deaths, 12.1; marriages, 5.4; divorces, 1.5. Infant mortality, 2010 (per 1,000 live births), 9.8. Expectation of life at birth, 2013, was 70.3 years for males and 77.5 years for females. In 2010 the most popular age range for marrying was 25–29 for males and 20–24 for females. Measures designed to raise the birth rate were abolished in 1990, and abortion and contraception legalized. The annual abortion rate, at approximately 41 per 1,000 women, ranks among the highest in the world. Population growth rate, 2010, –0.2%; fertility rate, 2013, 1.4 births per woman.

CLIMATE

A continental climate with an annual average temperature varying between 8°C in the north and 11°C in the south. Bucharest, Jan. 27°F (–2.7°C), July 74°F (23.5°C). Annual rainfall 23.1" (579 mm). Constanţa, Jan. 31°F (–0.6°C), July 71°F (21.7°C). Annual rainfall 15" (371 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

A new constitution was approved by a referendum on 18–19 Oct. 2003. Turnout was 55.7%, and 89.7% of votes cast were in favour. The Constitution, which replaces the previous one from 1991, defines Romania as a republic where the rule of law prevails in a social and democratic state. Private property rights and a market economy are guaranteed. The new pro-European constitution was aimed at helping Romania achieve EU membership.

The head of state is the President, elected by direct vote for a maximum of two five-year terms. The president is not allowed to be affiliated with any political party while in office. The President appoints the Prime Minister, who then has to be approved by a vote in parliament. The President is empowered to veto legislation unless it is upheld by a two-thirds parliamentary majority. The National Assembly consists of a 412-member Chamber of Deputies and a 176-member Senate; both are elected for four-year terms from 43 constituencies through a proportional mixed member system. 18 seats in the Chamber of Deputies are reserved for ethnic minorities. There is a 3% threshold for admission to either house. Votes for parties not reaching this threshold are redistributed.

There is a Constitutional Court.

CURRENT LEADERSKlaus IohannisPosition*

President

Introduction

Klaus Iohannis became president on 21 Dec. 2014, having defeated the Social Democratic prime minister, Victor Ponta, in an election the previous month. He is the first president from Romania's ethnic German Protestant minority.

Early Life

Iohannis was born on 13 June 1959 in the city of Sibiu to parents of Transylvanian Saxon heritage. He graduated in physics from Babeș-Bolyai University in Cluj-Napoca in 1983 and became a physics teacher, working in several schools across Sibiu including an eight-year spell at Brukenthal Gymnasium, Romania's oldest German-speaking school. He left full-time teaching in 1997 and took up a position as a school inspector.

A member of the Democratic Forum of Germans in Romania since the 1989 revolution, Iohannis was elected to the party's leadership committee in 1998 and became head of its education commission. He was elected mayor of Sibiu in June 2000 and went on to serve four consecutive terms, overseeing the city's revitalization as a vibrant regional centre and tourist destination. It was named the European City of Culture in 2007 and Iohannis won praise for tackling long-standing corruption and attracting foreign investment.

Following the dismissal of Emil Boc's government in 2009, Iohannis was put forward as an independent prime ministerial candidate by four of the five political groups in parliament. However, the president, Traian Băsescu, refused to endorse him, instead instructing the economist Lucian Croitoru to form a government.

Iohannis joined the National Liberal Party in early 2013 and rose swiftly through its ranks, becoming leader in June 2014. Having helped to forge the Christian Liberal Alliance (ACL) with the centre-right Democratic Liberal Party, he was chosen as the ACL's candidate for the presidential election later in the year. His rival, Prime Minister Victor Ponta, was widely expected to win and took the lead in the first round of voting. However, there were widespread complaints about difficulties and delays experienced by Romanians living abroad as they tried to cast their votes, leading to criticism of the government and prompting the foreign minister to resign. In the second round of voting on 16 Nov. 2014, Iohannis took 54.4% of the vote on a 64% turnout, the highest for 14 years.

Career in Office

Iohannis promised to tackle corruption and build a fully independent judiciary, while favouring a pro-European foreign policy stance and stronger ties with Moldova. However, he inherited a weak economy and challenging fiscal situation, together with growing anti-government sentiment. In June 2015 Iohannis called upon Ponta to resign as prime minister after prosecutors named him in an inquiry into forgery, tax evasion and money laundering. Ponta eventually stood down in Nov., following street protests prompted by a nightclub fire in which over 60 people died amid lax safety regulations. Iohannis appointed Dacian Cioloş as the new premier at the head of a technocratic government until parliamentary elections scheduled for late 2016.

Dacian Cioloş

Position

Prime Minister

Introduction

Dacian Cioloş became prime minister on 17 Nov. 2015. A former European Union commissioner, he was appointed after his predecessor, Victor Ponta, resigned in the wake of protests over the circumstances of a nightclub fire that left 63 dead. Cioloş, a political independent who specializes in agriculture, leads a technocrat government tasked with restoring public confidence in the state.

Early Life

Dacian Cioloş was born on 27 July 1969 in Zalău, in the northwest of Romania, and graduated in horticultural engineering from the University of Agricultural Sciences and Veterinary Medicine in Cluj-Napoca. He undertook postgraduate studies in France at the École Nationale Supérieure Agronomique in Rennes and later at the University of Montpellier, where he gained a doctorate.

Before entering politics, Cioloş worked as a consultant on several rural development projects as Romania transitioned to a market economy. In 2002 he was tasked with managing an agricultural programme designed by the European Commission to assist countries preparing to join the EU. In Jan. 2005 he was made an adviser to Romania's agriculture minister, and also served as the country's spokesman on the EU Council's special committee on agriculture. He was appointed minister of agriculture in Oct. 2007, after Decebal Traian Remeş resigned over a corruption scandal, serving in the post until the parliamentary elections of Dec. 2008.

In Feb. 2010 Cioloş was approved as the commissioner for agriculture under European Commission president José Manuel Barroso. In the course of his four-year term he led a major reform of the Common Agricultural Policy, as well as negotiating a series of international trade agreements on behalf of the EU. In July 2015 he was named special adviser on food security to the new European Commission president, Jean-Claude Juncker.

The high death toll resulting from a fire at a Bucharest nightclub on 30 Oct. 2015 prompted thousands of people throughout Romania to protest against civic corruption. Prime Minister Victor Ponta, who was under investigation at the time for alleged corruption, was forced to step down. With public opinion ranged against the political classes, President Klaus Iohannis appointed Cioloş as his successor.

Career in Office

Although a political independent, Cioloş has often been aligned with the centre-right European People's Party, which first nominated him for a job at the European Commission. His appointment as prime minister was supported by both the ruling Social Democrats and opposition conservative parties, and his cabinet won parliamentary approval by 389 votes to 115 on 16 Nov. 2015. He is expected to remain prime minister until new elections scheduled for Dec. 2016.

Cioloş leads a cabinet of 21 technocrats, which includes experts on the EU and leaders from the private sector. He is charged with restoring public confidence in the government by implementing institutional reform and measures against corruption.

DEFENCE

Compulsory national military service was abolished in 2006.

In 2013 defence expenditure totalled US$2,475m. (US$114 per capita), representing 1.3% of GDP.

Army

Strength (2011) 41,500. There is a joint reserve of 45,000. The Ministry of the Interior operates a paramilitary Border Guard (22,900 strong in 2011) and a Gendarmerie (around 57,000).

Navy

The fleet includes three destroyers and four corvettes. There is also a naval infantry force.

Personnel in 2011 totalled 6,900. There are naval bases at Brăila, Constanţa, Mangalia and Tulcea.

Air Force

The Air Force numbered 9,500 in 2011, with 70 combat-capable aircraft (MiG-21s and Romanian-built IAR-99s).

INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

At the European Union's Helsinki Summit in Dec. 1999 Romania, along with five other countries, was invited to begin full negotiations for membership in Feb. 2000. Romania joined the EU on 1 Jan. 2007. Romania became a member of NATO on 29 March 2004.

ECONOMY

Agriculture accounted for 6.2% of GDP in 2013, industry 27.0% and services 66.8%.

Overview

The global financial crisis saw the economy contract by 7% in 2009. The IMF provided a €20bn. bailout that demanded the introduction of a tough austerity programme. In 2010 reforms led to riots that brought about the downfall of Emil Boc's government. There were, however, soon signs of recovery with growth of 2.3% in 2011 and 0.6% in 2012.

Entry into the EU in 2007 drove modernization and reform programmes, particularly in financial services, public administration and tax collection. The energy sector has been opened up to greater competition, with state-owned energy companies seeking private sector investment. However, plans to adopt the euro have been suspended in light of ongoing eurozone instability.

The economy is weighted heavily towards banking—largely foreign-owned—and exports. However, the eurozone crisis allied to domestic political uncertainty is set to restrict export growth in the short to medium term. Reform of state-owned enterprises is considered key to long-term growth. Romania has one of the widest urban-rural poverty gaps in Europe, with 70% of the population in rural areas beneath the poverty line. Despite once being a 'breadbasket' for Europe, food imports have increased to compensate for the underdeveloped agricultural sector.

Currency

The monetary unit has since 1 July 2005 been the new leu, pl. new lei (RON) notionally of 100 bani, which replaced the leu (ROL) at a rate of one new leu = 10,000 lei. Foreign exchange reserves were US$41,571m. and gold reserves 3.34m. troy oz in Sept. 2009. Inflation was 4.0% in 2013 and 1.1% in 2014.

Total money supply was 64,201m. new lei in Aug. 2009.

Budget

Central government revenue and expenditure (in 1m. new lei) for calendar years:

	2009	2010	2011
Revenue	152,055	162,102	172,162
Expenditure	224,072	211,808	195,999

Romania's budget deficit in 2014 was 1.4% of GDP (2013, 2.2%; 2012, 3.2%). The required target set by the EU is a budget deficit of no more than 3%.

VAT is 24% (reduced rates, 9% and 5%). There is a flat income tax rate of 16%.

Performance

The economy grew by 0.6% in 2012, 3.4% in 2013 and 2.8% in 2014.

Total GDP in 2014 was US$199.0bn.

Banking and Finance

The National Bank of Romania (founded 1880; nationalized 1946) is the central bank and bank of issue under the Minister of Finance. Its Governor is Dr Mugur Isărescu. In 2002 there were 31 banks, plus eight branches of foreign banks. Only one bank remains state-owned. The largest bank is Romanian Commercial Bank (Banca Comercială Română), with a market share of 20% and assets in 2008 of US$24.7bn.; Austria's Erste Bank AG had a 93.6% stake in March 2016. The size of the government's share in the banking sector fell from over 80% in the mid-1990s to just over 40% in 2002.

A stock exchange reopened in Bucharest in 1995.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

In 2011, 21.4% of energy consumption came from renewables (wind power, solar power, hydro-electric power, tidal power, geothermal energy and biomass), compared to the European Union average of 13.0%. A target of 24% has been set by the EU for 2020.

Environment

Romania's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy were the equivalent of 4.1 tonnes per capita in 2011.

Electricity

In 2011 installed capacity was approximately 20.5m. kW; output in 2011 was 62.22bn. kWh (24% hydro-electric and 19% nuclear). Consumption per capita in 2011 was 2,765 kWh. A nuclear power plant at Cernavodă began working in 1996. A second reactor became operational there in 2007.

Oil and Gas

Oil production in 2012 was 4.1m. tonnes, but with annual consumption of more than twice as much a large amount has to be imported. There were 0.6bn. bbls of proven oil reserves in 2012. Romania was the first country to start oil exploration, and in the late 1850s was the world's leading oil producer, with an output of 200 tonnes a year. Natural gas production in 2012 totalled 10.9bn. cu. metres with 100bn. cu. metres in proven reserves.

The oil company Petrom, Romania's largest company, was privatized in 2004 when the government sold a 51% stake to the Austrian oil and gas group ÖMV.

Minerals

The principal minerals are oil and natural gas, salt, lignite, iron and copper ores, bauxite, chromium, manganese and uranium. Output, 2005 (in 1,000 tonnes): lignite, 31,070; salt, 2,420; iron ore, 265; zinc, 14.

Agriculture

Romania has the biggest agricultural area in eastern Europe after Poland. In 2013, 29.3% of the economically active population were engaged in agriculture. There were 13.91m. ha. of agricultural land in 2013 including 8.75m. ha. of arable land and 442,000 ha. of permanent crops. There were 181,000 ha. of irrigated land in 2013.

Production (2013, in 1,000 tonnes): maize, 11,348; wheat, 7,296; potatoes, 3,290; sunflower seeds, 2,196; barley, 1,542; cabbage, broccolis, etc., 1,159; sugar beets, 1,029; grapes, 992; tomatoes, 749.

Livestock, 2013 (in 1,000): sheep, 8,834; pigs, 5,234; cattle, 2,009; goats, 1,266; horses, 575; chickens, 80,136.

Forestry

Total forest area was 6.57m. ha. in 2010 (29% of the land area). Timber production in 2011 was 14.36m. cu. metres.

Fisheries

The catch in 2010 totalled 2,688 tonnes (6,053 tonnes in 2005 and 216,938 tonnes in 1988), of which 2,457 tonnes were from inland waters.

INDUSTRY

In 2001 industry accounted for 37.0% of GDP. Industrial output grew by 7.5% in 2001.

Output of main products (in 1,000 tonnes): cement (2006 estimate), 8,253; rolled steel (2007), 5,589; crude steel (2008), 5,035; distillate fuel oil (2007), 4,660; petrol (2007), 3,799; pig iron (2008), 2,945; hot-rolled steel products (2012 estimate), 2,700; lime (2006 estimate), 1,942; fertilizers (2012), 1,707; wheat flour (2012), 844; residual fuel oil (2007), 1,186; soda ash (2012 estimate), 430; paper and paperboard (2002), 370; caustic soda (2012), 256.

Labour

The labour force in 2013 was 9,521,000 (10,258,000 in 2003). 64.7% of the population aged 15–64 was economically active in 2013. In the same year 7.3% of the population was unemployed. The standard retirement age is 65 years for men and 60 for women. A minimum monthly wage was set in 1993; it was set at 670 new lei for full-time adult employees from 1 Jan. 2011. The average gross monthly wage was 1,845 new lei in 2009.

Romania had 24,000 people living in slavery according to the Walk Free Foundation's 2013 Global Slavery Index.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

Imports in 2007 were valued at US$69,946m. (US$24,003m. in 2003) and exports US$40,247m. (US$17,618m. in 2003). Principal imports are mineral fuels, machinery and transport equipment, and textiles; main export commodities are textiles, mineral products and chemicals.

Romania's main import sources in 2007 were: Germany (17.2%); Italy (12.8%); Hungary (6.9%); Russia (6.3%); France (6.3%). In 2007 Romania's main export markets were: Italy (17.2%); Germany (17.0%); France (7.7%); Turkey (7.0%).

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

There were 198,817 km of roads in 2004, including 228 km of motorways, 14,809 km of highways, main and national roads and 36,010 km of secondary roads. Passenger cars in 2005 numbered 3,363,800 (156 per 1,000 inhabitants). In 2007 there were 2,712 fatalities as a result of road accidents.

Rail

Length of standard gauge route in 2011 was 10,638 km, of which 4,031 km were electrified; there were 135 km of 1,524 mm gauge lines and four km of narrow gauge. Freight carried in 2011, 54.8m. tonnes; passengers, 53.5m. There is a metro (62.4 km) and tram/light rail network (338 km) in Bucharest, and tramways in 13 other cities.

Civil Aviation

Tarom (Transporturi Aeriene Române) is the 97.2% state-owned airline. In 2002 it provided domestic services and international flights to Amman, Amsterdam, Ancona, Athens, Beijing, Beirut, Berlin, Bologna, Brussels, Budapest, Cairo, Chişinău, Copenhagen, Damascus, Dubai, Düsseldorf, Frankfurt, İstanbul, Larnaca, London, Luxembourg, Madrid, Milan, Moscow, Munich, New York, Paris, Prague, Rome, Sofia, Stuttgart, Tel Aviv, Thessaloniki, Treviso, Verona, Vienna, Warsaw and Zürich. Other Romanian airlines which operated international flights in 2007 were Blue Air, Carpatair, Chris Air, Ion Țiriac Air, Jet Tran Air and Romavia. In 2003 scheduled airline traffic of Romanian-based carriers flew 26m. km, carrying 1,255,000 passengers (1,034,000 on international flights).

Bucharest's main airport is Henri Coandă International Airport, generally known by its former official name of Bucharest Otopeni International Airport. A second Bucharest airport, Aurel Vlaicu International, used to be the country's second busiest airport but since early 2012 caters exclusively for business air traffic. Outside of Bucharest the busiest airports are at Cluj-Napoca and Timișoara. Henri Coandă International handled 7,120,024 passengers in 2012 and 26,494 tonnes of freight; Timișoara handled 1,039,109 passengers in 2012, Cluj-Napoca 936,145 and Aurel Vlaicu International 424,016.

Shipping

In Jan. 2009 there were 35 ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 150,000 GT. The Romanian-controlled fleet comprised 57 vessels of 1,000 GT or over in Jan. 2009, of which 11 were under the Romanian flag and 46 under foreign flags. The main ports are Constanța and Constanța South Agigea on the Black Sea and Galați, Brăila and Tulcea on the Danube. In 2009 the length of navigable inland waterways was around 1,730 km including 1,075 km on the Danube River.

Telecommunications

In 2013 there were 4,720,000 main (fixed) telephone lines. In the same year mobile phone subscribers numbered 22,910,000. The telecommunications sector was fully liberalized on 1 Jan. 2003, ending the monopoly of the Greek-controlled operator Romtelecom (now Telekom Romania). In 2013, 49.8% of the population aged 16–74 were internet users. In March 2012 there were 4.2m. Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The legal system is based on the Napoleonic code and the judiciary is constitutionally independent. The High Court of Cassation and Justice is the highest judicial authority, with its judges appointed by the president after consultation with the Superior Council of the Magistracy (an elected professional body). There is also a Constitutional Court.

Day-to-day hearings are administered through a system of local courts and 40 county courts (and the Bucharest Municipal Court), whose judgements may be challenged in any one of 15 courts of appeal.

As a condition of EU accession and World Bank financing, Romania was subject to a Judicial Reform Project aimed at increasing the efficiency of the court system, improving transparency and reducing corruption. This included the implementation of four revised codes (the criminal code, civil code, criminal procedures code and civil procedures code).

The death penalty was abolished in Jan. 1990 and is forbidden by the 1991 constitution. The population in penal institutions in Sept. 2013 was 33,015 (155 per 100,000 of national population). In 2015 the World Justice Project Rule of Law Index, which provides data on how the rule of law is experienced by the general public across eight categories, ranked Romania 28th of 102 countries for both criminal justice and civil justice.

Education

Education is free and compulsory from the age of six. There is compulsory school attendance for ten years. Primary education comprises four years of study, secondary education comprises lower secondary education (organized in two cycles: grades 5th–8th in elementary schools and grades 9th–10th in high schools or vocational schools) and upper secondary education includes further education in high schools. Further secondary education is also available at lycées, professional schools or advanced technical schools.

In 2007 there were 648,862 children and 36,555 teaching staff in pre-primary schools; 917,829 pupils and 55,487 teaching staff in primary schools; and 1,954,077 pupils and 153,805 teaching staff in secondary schools. In 2002–03 primary and secondary education in Hungarian was given to 106,515 pupils, in German to 10,019 pupils and in other national minority languages to 1,536 pupils.

In 2007 there were 928,175 students in tertiary education and 30,583 academic staff. In 2002–03 there were 125 higher education institutions with 742 faculties, 30,000 teaching staff and 596,297 students (545,405 for long-term studies and 50,892 for short-term studies). The distribution of pupils and subjects studied was as follows: pedagogy, 30.3%; economics, 26.5%; technical subjects, 25.6%; law, 10.6%; medicine and pharmacy, 5.4%; arts, 1.5%.

Adult literacy rate in 2009 was estimated at 97.7% (male 98.3%; female 97.0%).

In 2005 public expenditure on education came to 3.6% of GNI and 14.3% of total government spending.

Health

In 2006 there were 419 public hospitals with 141,225 beds; there were 45,815 physicians and 4,360 dentists in the public sector in 2006.

Welfare

In Dec. 2004 pensioners comprised 3,050,500 old age and retirement, 1,441,800 retired farmers, 798,200 disability, 639,500 survivor allowance and 418,000 social assistance. These drew average monthly pensions ranging from 792,698 lei to 3,504,205 lei. The social security spending in 2002 was 10.4% of GDP.

RELIGION

The government officially recognizes 17 religions (which receive various forms of state support); the predominant one is the Romanian Orthodox Church. It is autocephalous, but retains dogmatic unity with the Eastern Orthodox Church. Its Patriarch is Daniel (enthroned 30 Sept. 2007). There are six metropolitanates, made up of archdioceses and dioceses, with a total of 13,527 parishes. In Feb. 2016 there was one cardinal.

Religious affiliation at the 2011 census included: Romanian Orthodox, 16,307,004 (about 81% of the population); Roman Catholic, 870,774; Protestant Reformed Church, 600,932; Pentecostal, 362,314; Greek Catholics, 150,593; Baptist, 112,850.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

Romania has seven sites on the UNESCO World Heritage List: the Danube Delta (inscribed on the list in 1991); the Villages with Fortified Churches in Transylvania (1993 and 1999); the Monastery of Horezu (1993); the Churches of Moldavia (1993); the Historic Centre of Sighișoara (1999); the Dacian Fortresses of the Orăștie Mountains (1999); and the Wooden Churches of Maramureș (1999).

Press

In 2014 there were 42 daily papers (40 paid-for and two free) with a combined circulation of 550,000. The most widely read newspapers are the paid-for Click! and Libertatea and the free Adavarul de seara and Ring.

Tourism

In 2009, 1,275,600 non-resident tourists stayed in holiday accommodation (down from 1,465,900 in 2008) including: 181,100 from Germany; 141,600 from Italy; 100,300 from France; 76,900 from Hungary.

Festivals

The George Enescu Festival of classical music is held every two years in Aug.–Sept. with concerts across Bucharest, Iași and Sibiu. The Peninsula/Félsziget rock festival takes place annually in July or Aug. in Târgu Mureș in Transylvania. Other notable events are the EUROPAfest of music in Bucharest (May), the International Romani Art Festival in Timișoara (July), Garana Jazz Festival at Poiana Lupului (July) and the Romanian National Theatre Festival in Bucharest (Oct.–Nov.).

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Archaeological evidence points to the influence of Arabic and Turkic cultures prior to the 4th century AD. Avar, Goth, Hun and Magyar invasions punctuated the development of the East Slavs over the next five centuries, while trade with Germanic, Scandinavian and Middle Eastern regions began in the 8th century.

In 882 the Varangian prince Oleg of Novgorod took Kyiv and made it the capital of Kievan Rus, the first unified state of the East Slavs, uniting Finnish and Slavic tribes. During the 10th century, trade was extended between the Baltic and Black Seas, forming Kyiv's main economy. The Varangians, led by Rurik of Jutland, led attacks on Baghdad and Constantinople, subsequently establishing a trade link with the latter.

During the 13th century the area was invaded from the west by Teutonic Knights, Lithuanians and Swedes, and from the south by Mongol and Tatar tribes. In 1223 Genghis Khan's grandson, Batu Khan, conquered Kievan Rus. Despite the ruthless reign of the Mongols, trade flourished during the period and many cities were reinvigorated. The Mongols and Tatars created an ascendancy known as the 'Golden Horde' around most of Western Russia and Central Asia and made Itil (near modern Astrakhan) the capital. Its dominance lasted until the 15th century when internal struggles finally forced the break-up of the empire.

Co-operation between Moscow's leader Ivan and the Mongol Öz Beg (ruled 1312–41), in addition to geographical advantages and natural resources, allowed Moscow to develop and prosper. The city was first consolidated under the Muscovite Grand Duke Ivan III (ruled 1462–1505), who adopted the Roman title of tsar and Byzantine ritual after marrying into Byzantine royalty. Ivan annexed the East Slavic regions, as well as Belarus and the Ukraine, conquered Novgorod in 1478 and opened up contacts with Western Europe.

The empire was strengthened and further expanded by his son Vasily III and reformed by Vasily's successor Ivan IV, a sickly and volatile ruler known as Ivan the Terrible (or 'Awesome', Grozny) who came to the throne at the age of 16 in 1547. Ivan's divisive and suppressive administration, oprichnina, led a reign of terror from 1566–72 in which thousands were executed (although it is believed that initially the Russian nobles, or boyars, had strong control over the throne and its direction, including local government reforms, a new law code and restrictions of hereditary rights). Ivan bolstered the military and led campaigns against the khanates of Kazan (1552), Astrakhan (1556) and the Crimea, extending Russia's territory towards Siberia and down to the Caspian Sea. But the costly war with Livonia (1558–82) drained Russia's resources. Ivan murdered his son in 1581 leaving a hereditary gap and a struggle for succession.

Russia was ruled nominally by Ivan's mentally subnormal brother Fyodor I—in actuality by Fyodor's brother-in-law Boris Godunov, who succeeded Fyodor in 1598. But in 1601 False

Dmitri claimed to be Ivan IV's son (Dmitri had died in 1591) and challenged Boris for the throne. With the backing of the boyars, the Cossacks and the Polish nobility, Dmitri succeeded Boris as tsar on the latter's death in 1605. There followed a chaotic period of instability as differing sides fought for control of the realm. The following year Dmitri was assassinated and the boyars crowned the rebel leader Vasily Shuysky in return for privileges. But soon a subgroup of boyars led by the Romanovs gave support to a second False Dmitri in 1608, establishing a shadow government just outside Moscow. Shuysky turned to Sweden for help, bargaining away territory and triggering Poland's invasion of Muscovy and the siege of Smolensk (1609). Both governments collapsed and a coalition government was formed. A peace treaty signed with Sweden in 1617 lost Russia Novgorod in exchange for Baltic control, while an armistice with Poland began the following year.

Romanovs

With the Polish occupiers ejected from Moscow, Mikhail Fyodorovich Romanov, the first of a dynasty that would rule until 1917, became tsar of a country ruined by war and with regions occupied by Swedish, Polish or rebel forces. But by avoiding involvement in the Thirty Years' War, in which Sweden and Poland were embroiled, he managed to restore some stability and to strengthen Russia's holdings in the southern regions. His son Aleksey inherited the throne as a child. Unpopular measures implemented by Aleksey's adviser, Boris Ivanovich Morozov, including a crippling salt tax, led to a riot in 1648 and rebellion in Novgorod and Pskov. Eastern Ukraine was annexed, while the support of a Cossack rebellion against Polish rule in the Ukraine degenerated into a costly war with Sweden and Poland over Ukrainian, Baltic and Belorussian territory. Russia consequently lost the Baltic coast to Sweden in 1661 and later Belarus and parts of the Ukraine to Poland. Sophia succeeded Aleksey to the disputed throne in 1682, followed seven years later by her half brother Peter the Great.

The reign of Peter I (1689–1725) signalled a new era for Russia that broke so far with Muscovy tradition as to be seen as the birth of modern Russia. The empire was expanded and strengthened and there was increased trade with Western Europe. His modest upbringing and travels to the West gave Peter a novel pro-European stance. The capital was transferred from Moscow to the newly built St Petersburg (1712), as part of a Europeanization programme. Peter introduced radical structural changes to the Russian body politic, converting it into the Western European mould. The tsardom of Muscovy became the Empire of All Russias and Peter became head of state as opposed to ruling patriarch. Administrative reforms divided Russia into eight main provinces, put the church under state control and introduced compulsory secular education for the nobility, although the rights of the peasantry were abolished and they were forced into serfdom. Peter expanded industry, created the navy, introduced army conscription and strengthened the southern border against the Crimean Tatars. He formed an alliance with Denmark, Poland and Saxony against Sweden, resulting in the Great Northern War (1700–21), which ended with Russia claiming Livonia in the Treaty of Nystad (1721). The expanded empire made Russia the leading Baltic power.

Catherine the Great

Despite Peter's rejection of hereditary rule in favour of appointing a successor, his choice was never named before his sudden death. The rest of the 18th century was marked by disputed succession. After Peter's death, his widow Catherine I was declared empress, though Peter's collaborator Prince Menshikov ruled in her name. A supreme privy council was established to distribute power; Peter's grandson, Peter II, ruled briefly before dying of smallpox. He was succeeded by Peter I's niece, Anna, the duchess of Courland (1730), then by her niece Anna Leopoldovna, before Peter I's daughter, Elizabeth, came to power in 1741 in a bloodless coup. During her 21-year reign, her father's reforms were consolidated and Western culture and literature flourished. She founded the University of Moscow and established the St Petersburg Academy of Arts. At the end of her reign Russia was involved in the Seven Years' War, occupying Berlin for a short time before Elizabeth's death in 1762. Russia's subsequent withdrawal saved Frederick the Great's Prussia from destruction.

Elizabeth's nephew, Peter III, proved an unpopular ruler. Childless, his politically ambitious wife, Catherine the Great, plotted to depose him, claiming the throne for herself soon after. Influenced by the Enlightenment, she attempted to implement legislative, educative and administrative reforms. But many of these, as well as the emancipation of the serfs, were blocked by the nobility. The imposed Russification of the Ukrainian, Polish and Baltic regions proved unpopular, while civil unrest led to the Pugachev Revolt (1773–75), in which peasants, Cossacks and workers rebelled against the aristocracy. Catherine's foreign policy was an aggressive expansion plan to the south and east to make Russia the leading European power at the expense of the Turks and Tatars. She forged a path through to the Mediterranean Sea to maximize maritime trade routes and developed close relations with Prussia and Austria with whom Poland was shared. But despite two wars with Turkey she failed to take Constantinople, as much an emotional as a political prize.

After Catherine's death in 1796, her son Paul's tyrannical rule led to his murder in 1801. His son Alexander I adopted more liberal policies in administration, science and education. War with France in 1805 led to a crushing defeat at Austerlitz, but when Napoleon invaded Russia in 1812 his army fell victim to the Russian winter. Alexander's death in 1825 provoked instability and uprisings which were quashed by military force. Russia was defeated by Britain, France and Turkey in the Crimean War (1853–56). Alexander II (ruled 1855–81), who followed Nicholas I (ruled 1825–55), implemented reforms, the most important of which was the partial emancipation of the serfs in 1861. Major judicial reform followed three years later and universal military service in 1874. But towards the end of his reign Alexander's increasingly conservative measures exacerbated the revolutionary mood of socialist-influenced university students and the peasantry. He was assassinated in 1881 and was succeeded by Alexander III (1881–94). Labour reforms introduced by Alexander III were harsh and restrictive and the peasants' lot failed to improve. The government's neglect of agricultural policy resulted in crop failure and widespread famine in 1891.

The Russian empire had expanded to the far reaches of Asia, to Afghanistan and into Central Europe. By the end of Alexander III's reign, only half the population spoke Russian or were members of the Orthodox Church.

Revolution

Nicholas II's reign (1894–1917) marked the end of Tsarist Russia. Like his father, he did little to improve social conditions for the masses, concentrating instead on military power. Industrial growth produced an unskilled urban working class whose living conditions fuelled revolutionary feeling. Socialism and Liberalism were also taking hold of the educated middle classes—doctors, teachers and engineers—as well as disaffected civil servants. In 1904 Nicholas embarked on and lost an unpopular war with Japan. The middle classes campaigned for a Legislative Assembly. In Jan. 1905 the priest, Georgy Gapon, led a protest of factory workers to St Petersburg's Winter Palace. Tsarist troops opened fire on the crowds killing over 100 people. Public outrage to 'Bloody Sunday' soon spread throughout the country. A general strike, paralysing most of Russia, led to violence between monarchists and insurgents well into 1907, while factions in the armed forces rebelled. Yielding to the pressure of the 1905 revolution, the tsar permitted the establishment of the first Duma (parliament), which convened in St Petersburg in 1906. But it lasted only 70 days. Violence continued into 1907.

In 1912 the two strands of the Social Democratic Workers' Party—the Bolsheviks (or majority) led by Vladimir Ilyich Ulyanov (Lenin), and the Mensheviks (or minority)—split, the Bolsheviks pursuing revolution, the Mensheviks evolutionary change. The outbreak of the First World War in 1914 temporarily unified Russians in the war effort. The tsar took command of the armed forces in 1915, leaving an authoritarian vacuum that allowed the tsarina and the influential adviser Grigori Rasputin to implement various unpopular ministerial changes. Rasputin was assassinated by disgruntled nobles in 1916. Depleting military resources and social unrest caused by hardship forced the end of the tsar's reign. A succession of anti-tsar demonstrations culminated in a mass protest in St Petersburg. Soldiers deserted, allying themselves with the workers, a pattern repeated throughout the country. A provisional government comprising Menshevik and Bolshevik elements was established and Tsar Nicholas abdicated on 2 March 1917. The Royal Family was executed in July 1918.

Tension between moderate Mensheviks and radical Bolsheviks intensified and in Oct. 1917 the Bolsheviks led by Lenin, newly returned from exile, seized control. The new government headed by Lenin, the Council of People's Commissars, created the Soviet constitution the following year. Russia was declared the Soviet Republic of Workers, Soldiers and Peasants and the capital was moved back to Moscow. Russia eventually withdrew from the First World War in 1918 but its forced acceptance of the unfavourable Brest-Litovsk treaty led many to abandon the government. Between 1918–21 a civil war raged between the Bolshevik Red Army, led by Lenin's ally Leon Trotsky, and the White Army, formed by former imperial officers, Cossacks, anti-communists and anarchists. The government imposed 'war communism'—forced labour and expropriation of business and food supplies—to support its cause, and eventually overcame the White Army. Lenin instituted the New Economic Policy (NEP) in 1921 to replace War Communism, reintroducing a monetary system and private ownership of small-scale industry and agriculture. In 1922 the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics was established comprising Russia, the Ukraine, Belarus and Transcaucasia. The Turkmen and Uzbek republics were added two years later, and the Tadzhik republic joined in 1929.

Stalin

On Lenin's death in 1924, Joseph Stalin (Ioseb Dzhughashvili) became general secretary of the Communist Party. Stalin rejected the 'state capitalism' of the NEP, which had failed to provide enough food for the urban workforce. From 1928 Stalin pursued a programme of industrialization and from 1933 agricultural collectivization, which cost the lives of 10m. peasants through famine or persecution. Constructing a personality cult for Lenin and himself, Stalin reasserted his absolute authority in massive purges; in 1934 and 1937 the NKVD (political police) eliminated millions of political dissidents.

Despite a non-aggression pact signed with Germany in Aug. 1939, the USSR was forced into the Second World War (termed the Great Patriotic War) in 1941 when the Nazi's Plan Barbarossa targeted Kyiv, Moscow and Leningrad for invasion. Up to 20m. Soviet lives were lost, almost 1m. in the battle of Stalingrad alone (1942–43). Expansion before and during the war created 15 aligned republics. Transcaucasia was divided into Armenia, Georgia and Azerbaijan, Kazakh and Kirghiz Soviet Socialist Republics were formed, and, along with Latvia, Lithuania, Estonia and Moldavia, were incorporated into the USSR. Following the war, Stalin managed to gain Western acceptance of a Soviet sphere of influence in Eastern Europe. The Baltic States and large tracts of land from neighbouring countries were annexed, while puppet regimes established Poland, Czechoslovakia, East Germany, Hungary, Bulgaria and Romania as satellites of Moscow.

The blockade of West Berlin (1948–49) and the Soviet detonation of an atomic bomb in Aug. 1949 were major factors in the escalation of the Cold War, waged indirectly in the Korean War (1950–53). On Stalin's death, Nikita Khrushchev reversed many of Stalin's policies and condemned his predecessor. In reaction to the famine in his native Ukraine, he developed the vast wheatfields in Kazakhstan. Relaxing control in the Eastern Bloc allowed for some liberalization although the Hungarian Uprising and the Poznań Riots in Poland (both 1956) were brutally suppressed and the Berlin Wall built in 1961. Relations with the Soviet Union's great ideological ally, China, collapsed over differences in interpretation of Marxist doctrine and Chinese opposition to Khrushchev's attempts at détente with the West (which came to be known as 'peaceful co-existence'). The Cuban Missile Crisis of 1962 intensified hostilities with the West and led the world to the brink of nuclear war. Khrushchev's perceived failure in the crisis, coupled with food shortages, led to widespread discontent. He was forced out of office in a 1964 coup led by Leonid Brezhnev, who ruled until 1982.

Soviet Reform

By the 1970s, Russia's international status had reached its zenith. Along with the USA, it was perceived as one of two global superpowers, despite relative economic stagnation. But Brezhnev kept a tight grip on the Eastern Bloc, introducing his 'Brezhnev Doctrine' which permitted the Soviet Union to intervene in the Eastern Bloc countries if Communist rule was ever threatened. In Aug. 1968 the USSR invaded Czechoslovakia to suppress an increasingly liberal regime. Relations with the West were further strained when the Soviets invaded Afghanistan in 1979. By the end of his tenure Brezhnev's failing health mirrored the country's economic decline. The domestic price of Brezhnev's obsessive pursuit of prominence in the space race was the failure of the agricultural and consumer-goods sectors and the decline of living standards. From his death in 1982, the country was led by his aides Yuri Andropov, a short-lived reformer, then Konstantin Chernenko.

When the latter died in 1985, Mikhail Gorbachev became general secretary of the Communist Party. He launched perestroika, a policy of economic and structural reform. Glasnost ('openness') extended civil liberties, including freedom of the press, and led to official rejection of Stalinist-style totalitarianism. The political system was overhauled, with electoral processes made more democratic and some free-market principles introduced. Gorbachev sought warmer relations with both Communist and Western governments and withdrew troops from Afghanistan in 1989. In a rejection of the 'Brezhnev Doctrine', throughout 1989 and 1990 Gorbachev refused to intervene as one Communist regime after another fell in the Eastern Bloc. Within the USSR, the republics demanded independence. Initially rejected, ethnic tensions arose between and within the republics, with heavy fighting in the Caucasus. Suppressed for so long, the newfound freedom also brought chaos and Gorbachev was blamed. Nonetheless, he won the first USSR presidential elections. Opposition parties were legalized soon after, although he was reluctant to open up the economy to privatization. An attempted coup in Aug. 1991 led to Gorbachev's house arrest for three days and though the coup failed, largely owing to Russian president Boris Yeltsin's intervention (elected June 1991), Gorbachev's leadership was on borrowed time. He resigned his party membership, dismantled the central committee and took KGB and military control away from the Communists. On Christmas Day 1991 Gorbachev resigned as Soviet president and the Soviet Union was dissolved.

Post-Soviet Era

A period of confrontation in 1992–93 between President Yeltsin and parliament climaxed when thousands of armed anti-Yeltsin demonstrators assembled on 3 Oct. 1993 and were urged to seize the Kremlin and television centre. On 4 Oct. troops took the parliament building by storm after a ten-hour assault in which 140 people died. Vice-President Rutskoi and Speaker Khasbulatov were arrested.

Boris Yeltsin was re-elected president in 1996. Many took this as a signal of confidence in the new, democratic Russia. But the reality was a state in which democratic institutions were weakened to the point of impotence by racketeering and bureaucratic dead-weight. Russia defaulted on its debt, the rouble halved in value, imports fell by 45% and oil revenues slumped. In Aug. 1998 the government freed the rouble, in effect devaluing it, imposed currency controls and froze the domestic debt market.

In Aug. 1999 Boris Yeltsin appointed as prime minister Vladimir Putin, a former KGB colonel and director of the KGB's successor organization, the FSB. On 31 Dec. 1999, Yeltsin resigned the presidency, nominating Putin as his interim successor, a job he retained after a clear-cut victory in the presidential election of March 2000. Under Putin, Russia continued the war with separatist Chechnya that began in Dec. 1994. In 2000 a programme of regional reform divided Russia's 89 regions into seven new districts run by Kremlin representatives.

Following the attacks on the USA in Sept. 2001, Putin made clear his support for the war on terrorism. In Oct. 2002 a group of Chechen rebels took control of a Moscow theatre and held hostage 800 people for three days before Russian troops stormed the building. An anaesthetic gas, used to combat the rebels, killed many of the hostages. The new relationship with the USA faltered as a result of the war with Iraq, which Russia opposed. Russia's vulnerability to terrorism was highlighted in Sept. 2004 when hostage takers seized a school in Beslan, in the Russian republic of North Ossetia. A three-day standoff ended with more than 350 people killed, nearly half of them children. Chechen rebels claimed responsibility for the siege.

In 2006 Russia temporarily cut off oil and gas links to Ukraine, Georgia and Belarus ostensibly over pricing disputes. As well as incurring the wrath of those governments immediately involved, the knock-on effects to pipeline flows throughout Europe prompted official protests. The future of Chechnya continues to be a thorn in Moscow's side. Relations with Georgia took a downturn in 2006 over Russia's implicit support for the breakaway Georgian region of South Ossetia. They reached a new low in Aug. 2008 when Russian and Georgian troops fought each other for a week following the Georgian government's military attack on separatist forces in the region.

Putin's human and civil rights records have come under increasing international scrutiny. In the aftermath of the Beslan siege, Putin assumed responsibility for nominating regional governors who had previously been directly elected. Restrictions on press freedom have been criticized as has the absence of a credible opposition and an independent judiciary. Particularly controversial was the imprisonment of Mikhail Khodorkovsky, a multibillion dollar businessman and Putin critic who was sentenced to nine years in 2005 amid claims that the prosecution was politically motivated. In 2006 there was widespread concern at Putin's new powers to monitor non-governmental organizations and potentially expel foreign-based groups, some of which Putin accused of being 'led by puppeteers from abroad'.

In March 2008 Dmitry Medvedev won the presidential election, from which Putin was constitutionally barred. Medvedev named Putin his prime minister in May 2008. At parliamentary elections in Dec. 2011 international observers recorded widespread abuses at the polls and Putin faced popular protests in several cities across the country. In March 2012 he regained the presidency for an extended six-year term and appointed Medvedev as premier.

Following the collapse of President Viktor Yanukovich's regime in Ukraine in Feb. 2014, pro-Russian forces seized control of the Crimea region. On 6 March the parliament of Crimea voted in favour of joining Russia, a proposal that received 97% support in a referendum in the peninsula ten days later. On 18 March Putin signed a bill absorbing Crimea into the Russian Federation, prompting economic sanctions by the USA and the European Union.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Russia is bounded in the north by various seas (Barents, Kara, Laptev, East Siberian) which join the Arctic Ocean, and in which is a fringe of islands, some of them large. In the east Russia is separated from the USA (Alaska) by the Bering Strait; the Kamchatka peninsula separates the coastal Bering and Okhotsk Seas. Sakhalin Island, north of Japan, is Russian territory. Russia is bounded in the south by North Korea, China, Mongolia, Kazakhstan, the Caspian Sea, Azerbaijan, Georgia, the Black Sea and Ukraine, and in the west by Belarus, Latvia, Estonia, the Baltic Sea and Finland. Kaliningrad (the former East Prussia) is an exclave on the Baltic Sea between Lithuania and Poland in the west. Russia's area is 17,075,400 sq. km and it has nine time zones (11 until March 2010). In 2007 Russia claimed control over 1.2m. sq. km of the Arctic Ocean bed, known to be rich in energy sources. Immediately disputed by the international community, the claim will require validation by the UN Commission on the Limits of the Continental Shelf. The 2010 census population was 142,856,536 density, 8.4 per sq. km. In Jan. 2014 the population was estimated at 143,666,931. Ethnicity in 2010 showed 80.9% were Russians, 3.9% Tatars, 1.4% Ukrainians, 1.2% Bashkir, 1.0% Chechens and 1.0% Chuvash.

In 2011, 73.2% of the population lived in urban areas.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 143.46m.

Russia's population has been declining since the break-up of the Soviet Union and will continue to do so in the future. By 2050 its population is projected to be the same as it was in the late 1960s.

The two principal cities are Moscow (Moskva), the capital, with a 2010 census population of 11.50m. and St Petersburg (formerly Leningrad), with 4.88m. Moscow is the most populous agglomeration in Europe. Other major cities (with 2010 populations) are: Novosibirsk (1.47m.), Ekaterinburg (1.35m.), Nizhny Novgorod (1.25m.), Samara (1.16m.) and Omsk (1.15m.). In May 2000 President Putin signed a decree dividing Russia into seven federal districts (okrug), in the process creating a layer above the various federal subjects (see CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT below). These, with their administrative centres and 2010 populations in brackets, are: Central (Moscow, 38.43m.), North-Western (St Petersburg, 13.62m.), Southern (Rostov-on-Don, 13.85m.), Volga (Nizhny Novgorod, 29.90m.), Ural (Ekaterinburg, 12.08m.), Siberian (Novosibirsk, 19.26m.) and Far-Eastern (Khabarovsk, 6.29m.). In Jan. 2010 then President Medvedev created a new North Caucasus federal district by splitting the Southern federal district in two. The 2010 population in the area that constitutes the North Caucasus federal district was 9.43m. Its administrative centre is Pyatigorsk. In March 2014, following Russia's annexation of Crimea, the Crimean federal district was created (with its administrative centre is Simferopol), making nine districts in total. However, most of the international community has refused to recognize the legitimacy of the annexation.

The official federal language is Russian, although there are several other officially-recognized languages within individual administrative units.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2008 births, 1,717,500; deaths, 2,081,000; marriages, 1,178,700; divorces, 703,400. Rates, 2008 (per 1,000 population): birth, 12.1; death, 14.7; marriage, 8.3; divorce, 5.0. At the beginning of the 1970s the death rate had been just 9.4 per 1,000 population. Death rates caused by alcohol abuse in 2009 were 77.0 males and 23.8 females per 100,000 population. Infant mortality, 2010 (per 1,000 live births), 9. There were 1,292,400 legal abortions in 2009. The annual abortion rate (34.2 per 1,000 women aged 15-49 in 2009) ranks among the highest in the world. The divorce rate is also among the highest in the world. The most popular age range for marrying in 2008 was 25-34 for males and 18-24 for females. Expectation of life at birth, 2012, was 64.6 years for males and

75.9 years for females. In 2012, 11% of Russians were living below the national poverty line. Annual population growth rate, 2000–10, –0.3%; fertility rate, 2008, 1.4 births per woman. The suicide rate in 2013 was 20 per 100,000 population, down from 39 per 100,000 in 2000.

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

The Russian Soviet Federative Socialist Republic (RSFSR) adopted a declaration of republican sovereignty by 544 votes to 271 in June 1990. It became a founding member of the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS) in Dec. 1991, and adopted the name ‘Russian Federation’. A law of Nov. 1991 extended citizenship to all who lived in Russia at the time of its adoption and to those in other Soviet republics who requested it.

According to the 1993 constitution the Russian Federation is a ‘democratic federal legally-based state with a republican form of government’. The Federation consists of 85 federal subjects (administrative units), of which 22 are republics, one autonomous region, four autonomous districts, nine territories, 46 regions and three federal cities. This includes Crimea (a republic) and Sevastopol (a federal city), which acceded to Russia in March 2014. However, most of the international community still considers them to be officially part of Ukraine (see CRIMEA on page 1222). The state is secular. Individuals have freedom of movement within or across the boundaries of the Federation; there is freedom of assembly and association, and freedom to engage in any entrepreneurial activity not forbidden by law. The state itself is based upon a separation of powers and upon federal principles, including a Constitutional Court. The most important matters of state are reserved for the federal government, including socio-economic policy, the budget, taxation, energy, foreign affairs and defence. Other matters, including the use of land and water, education and culture, health and social security, are for the joint management of the federal and local governments, which also have the right to legislate within their spheres of competence. A central role is accorded to the President, who defines the ‘basic directions of domestic and foreign policy’ and represents the state internationally. The President is directly elected for a six-year term (since Dec. 2008—previously a four-year term), and for not more than two consecutive terms; he must be at least 35 years old, a Russian citizen, and a resident in Russia for the previous ten years. 2m. signatures are needed to validate a presidential candidate not affiliated to a party represented in the State Duma, no more than 2.5% of which may come from any one region or republic. The President has the right to appoint the prime minister, and (on his nomination) to appoint and dismiss deputy prime ministers and ministers, and may dismiss the government as a whole. In the event of the death or incapacity of the President, the Prime Minister becomes head of state.

Parliament is known as the Federal Assembly (Federalnoe Sobranie). The ‘representative and legislative organ of the Russian Federation’, it consists of two chambers: the Federation Council (Sovet Federatsii) and the State Duma (Gosudarstvennaya Duma). The Federation Council, or upper house, consists of 170 deputies. The State Duma, or lower house, consists of 450 deputies elected for a five-year term. Starting with the elections in Dec. 2007 all deputies to the State Duma are elected from party lists by proportional representation. There is a 7% threshold for the party-list seats. To qualify for candidacy an individual must be nominated by a registered political party. Incumbent parties are automatically included in the ballot; others must obtain a minimum of 200,000 supporting signatures of which no more than 5% may come from any one region. Alternatively, non-incumbent parties may put forward a deposit of 60m. roubles, which is returned if the party manages to win at least 4% of the popular vote. Parties which gain at least 35 seats may register as a faction, which gives them the right to join the Duma Council and chair committees. Any citizen aged over 21 may be elected to the State Duma, but may not at the same time be a member of the upper house or of other representative bodies. The Federation Council considers all matters that apply to the Federation as a whole, including state boundaries, martial law, and the deployment of Russian forces elsewhere. The Duma approves nominations for Prime Minister, and adopts federal laws (they are also considered by the Federation Council but any objection may be overridden by a two-thirds majority; objections on the part of the President may be overridden by both houses on the same basis). The Duma can reject nominations for Prime Minister but after the third rejection it is automatically dissolved. It is also dissolved if it twice votes a lack of confidence in the government, or if it refuses to express confidence in the government when the matter is raised by the Prime Minister.

A law was approved in June 2001 to reduce the proliferation of political parties (numbering some 200 in 2001). It took effect in July 2003. The new law introduced stricter registration criteria and obliging existing parties to reregister within two years. In order to register, political parties are required to have at least 50,000 members and (since Jan. 2006) more than 45 regional branches with a minimum membership of 500 each. Multiple party membership is banned.

There is a 19-member Constitutional Court, whose functions under the 1993 constitution include making decisions on the constitutionality of federal laws, presidential and government decrees, and the constitutions and laws of the subjects of the Federation. It is governed by a Law on the Constitutional Court, adopted in July 1994. Judges are elected for non-renewable 12-year terms.

National Anthem

In Dec. 2000 the Russian parliament, on President Putin’s initiative, decided that the tune of the anthem of the former Soviet Union should be reintroduced as the Russian national anthem. Written by Alexander Alexandrov in 1943, the anthem was composed for Stalin. New words were written by Sergei Mikhalkov, who had written the original words for the Soviet anthem in 1943. The new anthem is ‘Rossiya—svyashennaya nasha derzhava, Rossiya—lyubimaya nasha strana’ (‘Russia—our holy country, Russia—our beloved country’). Boris Yeltsin had introduced a new anthem during his presidency—‘Patriotic Song’, from an opera by Mikhail Glinka and arranged by Andrei Petrov.

RECENT ELECTIONS

In the presidential elections held on 4 March 2012 prime minister Vladimir Putin (United Russia) won 63.6% of the votes cast. Gennady Zyuganov (Communist Party of the Russian Federation; KPRF) took 17.2% of the vote; Mikhail Prokhorov (ind.) 7.9%; Vladimir Zhirinovskiy (Liberal Democratic Party; LDPR) 6.2%; and Sergey Mironov (A Just Russia; SR) 3.9%. Turnout was 65.3%.

The OSCE reported 'procedural irregularities' and the Communist Party of the Russian Federation refused to recognize the result.

Elections for the State Duma were held on 4 Dec. 2011. United Russia won 238 seats with 49.5% of the vote (down from 315 seats and 64.3% at the 2007 elections); the KPRF 92 seats with 19.2% (up from 57 and 11.6% in 2007); A Just Russia 64 with 13.2% (up from 38 and 7.7% in 2007); and the LDPR 56 and 11.7% (up from 40 and 8.1% in 2007). Turnout was 60.2%. There were reports of election fraud, leading to major protests.

Position

President

Introduction

Vladimir Putin became president again in March 2012, having previously served two presidential terms from 1999–2008 and one term as prime minister from 2008. His initial appointment as president at the end of 1999 had been the culmination of a rapid political rise in the post-Communist era. He has made a determined effort to re-establish a more influential world role for his country. However, his handling of the Chechen war led to early international criticism. Later, his opposition to the US-led war in Iraq from 2003, to US plans to expand its missile defence systems into Eastern Europe and more recently to Russia's annexation of the Crimean peninsula from Ukraine in early 2014 have severely strained relations with Washington and the European Union. He has nevertheless maintained a high approval rating among most Russian voters, although his style of government has been perceived as authoritarian and imperial. Precluded from serving a third presidential term under the constitution, he oversaw the election of his chosen successor, Dmitry Medvedev in March 2008 and he assumed the post of prime minister in May. In Sept. 2011 Putin was confirmed as United Russia's candidate for the presidential election scheduled for March 2012. Despite a significant fall in support for his United Russia party in parliamentary polls at the end of 2011, he regained the presidency and in May 2012 replaced Medvedev who in turn took over the premiership. His third presidential term has seen deteriorating political and security tensions with the West, particularly over Russian policy towards Ukraine and Syria. It has also been marked by economic and financial tremors resulting from a depressed oil export market and a currency crisis.

Early Life

Vladimir Putin was born in St Petersburg (then called Leningrad) on 7 Oct. 1952, the son of a war veteran who, with his wife, had survived the siege of Leningrad. Baptized into Russian Orthodoxy, he was an accomplished athlete. After graduating from law school in 1975, he began a 15-year career with the KGB's foreign intelligence arm, stationed in Leningrad and East Germany. When collapse threatened the Soviet Union, he retired as a colonel and embarked on a political career.

In the early 1990s Putin worked in local government in St Petersburg, becoming deputy mayor in 1994. In 1996 President Yeltsin brought him to Moscow and appointed him deputy chief Kremlin administrator. He took charge of relations with Russia's diverse regions and in 1998 became head of the Federal Security Service (successor of the KGB) and secretary of the presidential Security Council. In Aug. 1999 he was named acting prime minister.

Career in Office

Putin became the acting president of Russia after Yeltsin's resignation on 31 Dec. 1999 and was officially elected president on 26 March 2000, taking 53% of the vote. His election programme prioritized a 'dictatorship of law' to combat high crime rates, as well as pledging to tackle poverty and promote family values, patriotism and fair business conditions.

He quickly set about exercising firm control over local government and the economy, with a stated aim of reducing corruption. In a bid to centralize power in Moscow, he restructured 89 legislative regions into seven districts, each with a government-approved leader (the majority of whom had military or security backgrounds). He reversed tax concessions that Yeltsin had brought in to assist the regions and reserved the right to dismiss any democratically-elected politician found to have broken the law.

Putin also removed several high-profile business and media figures from official positions. Yeltsin's daughter was dismissed as a Kremlin adviser but immunity was granted to Yeltsin himself, one of the more controversial moves of the then acting president. Putin appointed former finance minister and Yeltsin ally Mikhail Kasyanov as prime minister while placing other supporters in key Kremlin positions. Putin's economic policy was influenced by his allegiance to Anatoly Chubais, who led the wave of privatization in Russia in the early 1990s.

In April 2001 Putin's Unity party merged with the opposition Fatherland bloc, led by the mayor of Moscow, Yuri Luzhkov. To pass legislation the president needed a simple majority of 226, with the merger giving him at least 132. In the summer of 2001 new laws on land, labour and pensions were proposed. These were opposed by the Communists whose leader Gennady Zyuganov called for a national demonstration against the reforms.

After Oct. 2001 Russians were free to buy residential and commercial land for the first time since the Bolsheviks took power in 1917. Farm land, making up 98% of the total, was not covered by the law. Critics feared that a privileged few would buy up the land much as they bought privatized businesses in the 1990s. Supporters maintained that it would attract foreign investment, speed up economic reform and stop the illegal sale of land.

Putin's image was dented by the sinking of the Kursk nuclear submarine in Aug. 2000 when all 118 Russian sailors on board died. He was widely condemned for inaction, refusing to return from his holiday and turning down offers of help from Norway and the UK. He was subsequently dogged by allegations of an official cover-up.

Putin meanwhile used the war with Chechnya to establish his 'strong man' credentials, although heavy Russian losses cost him some support and alleged human rights abuses led to a suspension of Russia's voting rights in the Council of Europe. In Oct. 2002 Chechen rebels took 800 people hostage inside a Moscow theatre, demanding the immediate withdrawal of Russian troops from Chechnya. The siege lasted three days before the Russian military stormed the building using an anaesthetic gas which killed the rebels but also over 100 hostages. In March 2003 Putin promised greater autonomy for Chechnya. This followed a referendum in the republic supporting a new constitution that would keep Chechnya within Russia but provide for a president and parliament. Moscow claimed 96% support for the proposals although no international observers were present and the referendum was opposed by separatist groups. In May 2003, following two suicide bomb attacks, Putin reaffirmed his determination to defeat Chechnya's rebel forces. He offered an amnesty for rebels who handed over their weapons by 1 Aug. 2003 and for Russian troops accused of human rights violations.

Following the 11 Sept. 2001 attacks on New York and Washington, D.C. there was a rapprochement between Russia and the USA, and Putin gave unprecedented support for UN military action in Afghanistan. His offers of military assistance to the Afghan Northern Alliance, the use of Russian airspace for humanitarian aid and his role in persuading Tajikistan and Uzbekistan to support the campaign were well received in the West where leaders were quick to downplay Russia's role in Chechnya. In May 2002 Putin and US President George W. Bush signed an anti-nuclear deal agreeing to reduce their respective strategic nuclear warheads by two-thirds over the next ten years.

However, tension between the two countries increased over the question of Iraq in late 2002. While President Bush attempted to garner support for military action in Iraq—with Russia holding a power of veto within the UN Security Council—he warned Putin at the same time that he would not support Russian military incursions into Georgia, which Russia claimed was tolerating hostile Chechen activity. Putin's political dealings with 'rogue' nations, including North Korea and Cuba, were also criticized, as was Russia's trading of nuclear fuel and weapons with India, Iran, Iraq and Syria.

When US-led forces began attacking Iraq in March 2003 Russia condemned the action and delayed ratifying the US-Russian strategic arms control treaty (see above) until the war was over. Putin refuted US accusations that Russia had breached UN sanctions by selling armaments, including anti-tank missiles and jamming equipment, to Iraq. In May 2003 Russia nevertheless voted to accept a UN resolution on Iraq's future jointly proposed by the USA, UK and Spain. In return for the immediate ending of sanctions, the UN was to co-operate with the occupying forces to form a new government. In addition Russia would be able to complete long-standing contracts with Iraq. Despite tension in Russia's relationship with the UK as a result of differences over Iraq, Putin made an official state visit to Britain, the first by a Russian leader for over a century.

Having previously avoided party politics, Putin publicly endorsed a pro-government party—United Russia—in the Dec. 2003 parliamentary elections. In the March 2004 presidential elections, he was criticized by the international press and by OSCE monitors for manipulating the Russian media to influence voting in his favour. He was re-elected in the poll, claiming 71% of the vote and leaving his closest rival, the Communist Nikolai Kharitonov, with less than 14%. In May 2004 Putin set out his goals for his second term—modernizing Russia and raising living standards while aiming for a more stable democracy able to pursue strategic interests abroad.

Chechen violence had continued in 2003. Following a referendum in which Chechens agreed to a Moscow-approved constitution, Putin announced that a presidential vote would go ahead. In Oct. 2003, with a turnout of 85%, the pro-Moscow leader Akhmad Kadyrov was elected. However, he was then killed in a bomb attack in Chechnya's capital in May 2004 and Putin pledged to send extra troops in response. Alu Alkhanov was elected president of Chechnya on 29 Aug. 2004, and in Chechen parliamentary elections in Nov. 2005 the pro-Moscow United Russia party claimed about 60% of the popular vote.

In the aftermath of the bloodbath that ended the Beslan school siege by Chechen militants in Sept. 2004 in which more than 350 people were killed, Putin controversially took control of the appointment of regional governors who had been directly elected for the previous decade. Critics saw the move as undermining democracy.

In May 2005 Mikhail Khodorkovsky, a billionaire former head of oil-exporting company Yukos, was sentenced to nine years' imprisonment for tax evasion and fraud. His conviction, following the effective renationalization of Yukos in 2004, was widely viewed as politically motivated, owing to his criticism of Putin's regime (although he was eventually pardoned on humanitarian grounds in 2013).

High oil and gas prices continued to underpin Russia's strong economic growth during Putin's presidency. There was increasing state influence over the energy industry, exercised through the giant gas monopoly Gazprom and through Rosneft (another state-run company that acquired the prime assets of Yukos in 2004). However, Russia's reputation as a reliable international energy trader was tarnished. Several cuts in Russian oil and gas supplies to neighbouring countries—particularly Ukraine and Belarus—from 2006, purportedly over pricing disputes but with suspected political overtones, in turn disrupted pipeline flows to EU countries and prompted high-level protests.

There was meanwhile growing concern for civil and political freedoms in Putin's Russia, with foreign commentators citing increasing authoritarianism, the lack of a genuine opposition or independent judiciary and more general lawlessness, including violent xenophobia. The deaths in late 2006 of two prominent government critics—campaigning journalist Anna Politkovskaya and former intelligence officer Alexander Litvinenko—fuelled widespread suspicions of official involvement. Litvinenko's poisoning in London in particular led to a sharp deterioration in Russian-UK relations.

Plans by the USA to expand its missile defences into the Eastern European member countries of NATO (which were subsequently scaled back) further soured Russian-US relations in Putin's second term of office. In Nov. 2007 he approved a law suspending Russia's participation in the 1990 Conventional Armed Forces in Europe (CFE) Treaty limiting military deployments.

In Dec. 2007 the United Russia party won a landslide victory in parliamentary elections. With his second term set to expire in 2008, Putin announced that he would nevertheless continue in politics as the next prime minister and that Dmitry Medvedev (the chair of Gazprom) would be his preferred successor as president after elections scheduled for March. Russian voters duly endorsed this political continuity at the polls and Putin and Medvedev were sworn into their respective posts in May 2008. Putin therefore remained a pivotal figure in the Russian leadership, having an increasingly centralized grip on power and policy with President Medvedev.

United Russia was again dominant in the parliamentary elections in Dec. 2011, although with a reduced majority of seats and slightly less than 50% of the vote. Reports of electoral fraud prompted unprecedented opposition protests on the streets of Moscow. Despite the apparent decline in his personal support, Putin stood successfully as United Russia's candidate for the presidential election in March 2012 and once more took over the office that he had vacated in 2008. He stepped down as leader of United Russia ahead of being sworn in as president in May 2012.

On the international stage Putin initially opposed outside intervention in the ongoing civil war in Syria, Russia's long-standing ally in the Middle East, although he supported a UN programme for the elimination of Syria's chemical weapons in the face of threatened military action by the West against the Assad regime. Already tense relations with the USA were also aggravated in Aug. 2013 as President Obama cancelled a proposed bilateral summit following Russia's decision to grant asylum to Edward Snowden, a former US contractor who had leaked information about US and UK global intelligence surveillance activities.

In Nov. 2013 the government of neighbouring Ukraine's decision to shelve an integration pact with the European Union was widely attributed to Putin's political and financial pressure. The consequent anti-government protests in Ukraine, removal from power of pro-Russian president Viktor Yanukovich and installation of a new administration intent of eventual integration into Western political and security structures prompted Moscow's alleged fomentation of pro-Russian separatism in eastern Ukraine and its annexation in March 2014 of the Crimea peninsula. The annexation incurred international condemnation and the imposition of Western sanctions which, coupled with a major decline in international oil prices—Russia's principal export revenue source—fuelled a currency crisis towards the end of that year and an economic contraction in 2015.

From Sept. 2015, in a dramatic escalation of the civil war in Syria, Russia intervened militarily with air strikes ostensibly against anti-government Islamic State jihadists in the country. However, Western nations claimed the attacks were directed more widely against moderate opponents of President Assad's regime. In Oct. the downing of a civil airliner over Egypt carrying mainly Russian tourists was seen as jihadist retaliation for the air strikes. Then in Nov. a Russian warplane operating over Syria was shot down by the Turkish military for allegedly violating Turkey's airspace, provoking a furious denunciation by Putin and punitive Russian sanctions.

Dmitry Anatolyevich Medvedev

Position

Prime Minister

Introduction

Dmitry Medvedev's political career has been closely associated with Vladimir Putin's since the mid-1990s. In March 2008 Medvedev was elected by a landslide vote to the presidency as Putin's preferred successor after the latter had completed the two consecutive presidential terms allowed under the constitution. In 2012, after four years in office, Medvedev stood down as Putin ran successfully again for the presidency, and he was subsequently appointed by Putin as prime minister in May that year.

Early Life

Medvedev was born in St Petersburg (then called Leningrad) on 14 Sept. 1965. Both his parents were university teachers. He studied law at Leningrad State University, graduating in 1987. After obtaining a PhD in private law in 1990, he worked as an assistant professor at the university until 1999. In 1990 he also worked at the Leningrad Soviet of People's Deputies. From 1991–95 he served as legal adviser to the chairman of Leningrad city council and to the committee for external relations of the St Petersburg mayor's office, headed by Vladimir Putin. In Nov. 1993 he became legal affairs director of Ilim Pulp Enterprise and in 1998 he was elected to the board of governors of Bratskiy LPK paper mill.

Medvedev was appointed deputy head of the presidential administration by Putin in Dec. 1999. In 2000 he was promoted to the rank of first deputy chief of staff and during the 2000 election was in charge of the presidential campaign headquarters. In the same year Medvedev became chairman of the board of directors of Gazprom, Russia's largest company. From 2001 he served as deputy chairman until, in June 2002, he became chairman again. Under Medvedev, Gazprom acquired other energy companies and expanded overseas, increasing its significance both within the Russian economy and as an international supplier.

In 2003 Medvedev was appointed chief of staff of the presidential executive office and in Nov. 2005 Putin made him first deputy prime minister, giving him control of four national infrastructure projects: health care, education, housing and agriculture. Medvedev's initiatives included supporting foster families and developing pre-school education; he also attempted to reshape relationships between the Kremlin and Russia's billionaire oligarchs. In Dec. 2007, having served the constitutional maximum of two terms, Putin named Medvedev as his chosen successor. This was interpreted by many as an arrangement by which the two could continue to govern in partnership. Medvedev was elected president with 70% of the vote on 2 March 2008 and was sworn in on 7 May 2008.

Career in Office

As expected, Medvedev appointed Putin prime minister. Medvedev pledged to continue Putin's policies, indicating that he would encourage a diversification of the economy to reduce reliance on gas revenues. He also signalled his support for a free press and free judiciary and spoke of limiting the influence of the security services.

Early challenges internationally included a deterioration in relations with NATO and Russia's western neighbours. In Aug. 2008 he sent troops to South Ossetia and Abkhazia in Georgia, in response to Tbilisi's military attacks on separatist forces within the breakaway regions. A week of fierce fighting ended with a French-brokered peace deal. Russia's intervention received widespread international criticism, as did Medvedev's announcement of Russia's unilateral recognition of the independence of the two territories.

In his first state-of-the-nation address in Nov. 2008, Medvedev proposed a constitutional change to extend the presidential term of office from four to six years and that of parliament from four to five years, arguing that it was necessary to guarantee effective government. However, critics considered the move undemocratic and designed to perpetuate authoritarian rule from the Kremlin. In the same speech Medvedev threatened to deploy short-range missiles in Kaliningrad to counter the USA's proposed missile shield in central Europe (although a more conciliatory approach followed Barack Obama's assumption of the US presidency in Jan. 2009). He meanwhile claimed that the USA bore responsibility for the global financial crisis that had undermined the Russian banking system and destabilized markets. Also in Nov. 2008 Medvedev undertook an overseas tour of Latin America and Cuba.

Russia's relations with the USA improved from 2009 following the installation of a new US administration under President Obama. Medvedev met Obama in July as the latter made his first official visit to Moscow and they agreed to negotiate cuts in their countries' nuclear weapons arsenals in a new initiative to supersede the 1991 Strategic Arms Reduction Treaty. (A 30% cut was subsequently concluded under an agreement signed in April 2010.) In Sept. 2009 Medvedev welcomed the US decision not to site missile defence bases in Poland and the Czech Republic, the Russian military having earlier confirmed that plans to deploy short-range missiles in the Kaliningrad enclave were being shelved. Nevertheless, in Nov. 2010 he warned of the dangers of a new arms race unless NATO and Russia reached a co-operative accord within a decade on a joint missile-defence mechanism.

Medvedev had meanwhile called in Nov. 2009 for reform of the economy and re-emphasized the need for Russia to end its dependency on gas and oil exports. He also said that Russia's survival depended on rapid modernization, based on democratic institutions and an end to corruption.

In Nov. 2010 Medvedev became the first Russian leader to visit the Russian-occupied Kurile Islands, which have been the subject of a territorial dispute with Japan since the end of World War II.

In Sept. 2011 Vladimir Putin was confirmed as United Russia's candidate for the presidential election scheduled for March 2012. Following his expected victory, he succeeded Medvedev in May that year as the latter assumed the premiership at the head of the United Russia-dominated government.

By 2013 there were reports in the Western media of Medvedev's apparent isolation from Putin's increasingly centralized 'inner circle'. He was, nevertheless, the first senior Russian leader to visit Crimea following the peninsula's secession from Ukraine and annexation by Russia in March 2014. Then in Aug. he announced an immediate Russian ban on the import of certain Western agricultural products and raw materials in response to punitive sanctions imposed on Russia in the wake of the Ukraine crisis.

In Dec. 2015, following the Turkish military's shooting down of a Russian warplane near the Turkey-Syria border the previous month, Medvedev said that, in addition to trading sanctions already approved, Russia's visa-free regime for Turkish citizens would be suspended and that Russian employers could no longer hire Turkish nationals.

In Jan. 2016 Medvedev acknowledged the challenges encountered by the Russian economy over the previous year owing to 'plunging oil prices, the pressure from [Western] sanctions and the nascent change in the global economic paradigm'. He added, however, that 'the economic situation is not simple but manageable. There are several positive trends which we will be working to strengthen this year.'

DEFENCE

The President of the Republic is C.-in-C. of the armed forces. Conscription was reduced to 18 months for those drafted in 2007 and was further reduced to one year for those drafted from 1 Jan. 2008.

A presidential decree of 1997 ordered a cut in the armed forces of 200,000 men, reducing them to an authorized strength of 1,004,000 in 1999. In 2011 active armed forces totalled 956,000, plus 474,000 personnel in paramilitary forces. There were estimated to be around 20m. reserves (all armed forces) in 2011 of whom 2m. had seen service within the previous five years.

Defence expenditure totalled US$68,163m. in 2013 (just over a tenth of that of the USA), equivalent to US$478 per capita and representing 3.1% of GDP. Russia was the world's third biggest military spender in 2013.

Nuclear Weapons

Russia's strategic warhead count is now shrinking and stood at an estimated 1,780 in Jan. 2015 according to the Stockholm International Peace Research Institute. There are about a further 5,720 warheads held in reserve or scheduled to be dismantled, giving a total stockpile of around 7,500 warheads. Shortfalls in planned investments to replace current systems as they reach the end of their service lives means the number of strategic warheads will continue to decline.

At the height of the Cold War each side possessed over 10,000 nuclear warheads. The START I arms-control treaty, signed in 1991, limited to approximately 6,000 the number of nuclear warheads that Russia and the USA may each deploy on long-range, or 'strategic', land-based missiles, submarine-launched missiles and bombers. The 1993 START II treaty would have obliged both sides to reduce their stocks of strategic weapons to 3,500 nuclear warheads. However, instruments of ratification were never exchanged and the treaty lapsed. Russia retracted acceptance in June 2002 after the USA withdrew from the Anti-Ballistic Missile treaty. START I expired on 5 Dec. 2009. On 24 May 2002 the USA and Russia signed the Strategic Offensive Reductions Treaty (or Moscow Treaty) to reduce the number of US and Russian warheads to between 1,700 and 2,200 each. The treaty was in force from June 2003 until Feb. 2011. It was then superseded by the Measures to Further Reduction and Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms (known as New START), signed by the Russian and US presidents in April 2010 and ratified by the US Senate in Dec. 2010 and the Russian Federal Assembly in Jan. 2011. Under its terms, both Russia and the USA were limited to 1,550 warheads, a 30% drop on previous levels, to be implemented within seven years.

Chemical and Biological Weapons

Russia has converted or destroyed its former chemical weapon production facilities and is currently working to complete destruction of its chemical weapon stockpile in accordance with the provisions of the 1993 Chemical Weapons Convention. Russia has the largest declared stockpile of chemical weapons, originally totalling 40,000 tonnes although over 30,000 tonnes have since been destroyed.

The Soviet Union had perhaps the world's largest biological weapon programme until at least the 1980s. Russia has reiterated its commitment to the 1972 Biological and Toxin Weapons Convention.

Arms Trade

Russia is the world's second largest exporter of arms after the USA, with 26.5% of the global major weapons total over the period 2010-14.

Army

In 2011 Army personnel numbered around 305,000 (including about 100,000 conscripts). There were over 20,000 Russian troops stationed outside Russia in 2011, the majority in various states of the former USSR.

The Army is deployed in four military commands: West, Centre, South and East. Equipment in 2011 included more than 2,800 main battle tanks (T-72s, T-80s and T-90s) plus some 18,000 in store. There were also more than 7,300 armoured infantry fighting vehicles and 9,700 armoured personnel carriers.

Strategic Nuclear Ground Forces

In 2012 there were three rocket armies. Each rocket army is divided into launcher groups with ten silos and one control centre. Inter-continental ballistic missiles numbered 506. Personnel, 40,000.

Navy

The Russian Navy continues to reduce steadily and levels of sea-going activity remain very low with activity concentrated on a few operational units in each fleet. The safe deployment and protection of the reduced force of ballistic missile submarines remains its first priority; and the defence of the Russian homeland its second. The strategic missile submarine force operates under command of the Strategic Nuclear Force commander whilst the remainder come under the Main Naval Staff in Moscow, through the Commanders of the fleets.

The Northern and Pacific fleets count the entirety of the ballistic missile submarine force, all nuclear-powered submarines, the sole operational aircraft carrier (the Admiral Kuznetsov) and most major surface warships. The Baltic Fleet organization is based in the St Petersburg area and in the Kaliningrad exclave. The Black Sea Fleet is based at facilities in Crimea, which came under Russia's direct control following its annexation of the peninsula in March 2014. Amid heightened tensions in the aftermath of the annexation (during which Russia temporarily took possession of a number of Ukrainian vessels moored in Crimea), Moscow announced plans in Sept. 2014 to add a further 80 warships to the Black Sea Fleet by 2020, making a total of some 206 ships and vessels. The additional ships are expected to be based at new naval facilities in Novorossiisk, scheduled for completion during 2016. There is a small Caspian Sea flotilla. In Nov. 2008 Russia held joint exercises with the Venezuelan Navy in the Caribbean Sea.

The material state of all the fleets is suffering from continued inactivity and lack of spares and fuel. The nuclear submarine refitting and refuelling operations in the Northern and Pacific Fleets remain in disarray, given the large numbers of nuclear submarines awaiting defuelling and disposal. The strength of the submarine force has now essentially stabilized, but there are still large numbers of decommissioned vessels awaiting their turn for scrapping in a steadily deteriorating state. In Jan. 2003 it was announced that up to a fifth of the fleet was to be scrapped.

In Jan. 2015 there were 11 operational nuclear-fuelled ballistic-missile submarines (two of Delta-III class; five Delta-IV, plus one in overhaul; one Typhoon; three Borei). There was one Typhoon-class submarine in reserve, which was used as a test platform. After a series of test launches, a new submarine-launched ballistic missile 'Bulava' (SS-NX-30) was officially approved for service in Dec. 2011. It was deployed on the new 'Borei'-class nuclear submarines in Jan. 2013, with 150 expected to be operational by 2020. Ten 'Borei'-class submarines are planned in total.

The attack submarine fleet comprises a wide range of classes, from the enormous 16,250 tonne 'Oscar' nuclear-powered missile submarine to diesel boats of around 2,000 tonnes. The inventory of tactical nuclear-fuelled submarines comprises five 'Oscar'-class, nine 'Akula'-class, four 'Sierra'-class and four 'Victor III'-class submarines.

The diesel-powered 'Kilo' class, of which the Navy operates 19, is still building at a reduced rate mostly for export.

Cruisers are divided into two categories; those optimized for anti-submarine warfare (ASW) are classified as 'Large Anti-Submarine Ships' and those primarily configured for anti-surface ship operations are classified 'Rocket Cruisers'. In 2011 the principal surface ships of the Russian Navy included the following classes:

Aircraft Carrier. The Admiral Kuznetsov of 67,500 tonnes was completed in 1989. It is capable of embarking 20 aircraft and 15–17 helicopters. All other aircraft carriers have been decommissioned or scrapped.

Cruisers. The ships of this classification are headed by two ships of the Kirov-class, the largest combatant warships, apart from aircraft carriers, to be built since the Second World War. There are, in addition, three Slava-class and one of the Nikolaev ('Kara') class in operation.

Destroyers. There are eight Udaloy I-class, the first of which entered service in 1981, one Udaloy II-class and five Sovremenny-class guided missile destroyers in operation. In addition there is a single remaining 'modified Kashin'-class ship in operation.

Frigates. There are eight frigates in operation: four Steregushchiy-class ships—all of which have been commissioned since 2007—two Neustrashimy-class vessels, one Krivak I-class and one Krivak II-class.

The Russian Naval Aviation operated some 116 combat-capable aircraft in 2011 including Su-23s, Su-24s, Su-25s and Tu-142s. In 2011 there were also 90 anti-submarine warfare helicopters in operation.

Total Naval personnel in 2011 numbered around 154,000. Some 35,000 served in naval aviation in 2011 and there were 9,500 naval infantry/coastal defence troops.

Air Force personnel is estimated at 160,600 and equipment includes some 1,850 combat aircraft and about 2,000 helicopters.

The Air Force was reorganized in 2009 and now consists of: Operational Strategic Command for Air-Space Defence; First Air Force and Air Defence Command; Second Air Force and Air Defence Command; Third Air Force and Air Defence Command; Fourth Air Force and Air Defence Command; Military Transport Aviation Command; and Long Range Aviation Command. An air force base opened in Kyrgyzstan in Oct. 2003.

Prior to the restructuring equipment of the 37th Air Army included 124 Tu-22M5 plus Tu-95s and Tu-160s.

Tactical Aviation comprised in 2006 (numbers in brackets) Su-24 (400) and Su-25 (275) fighter-bombers and MiG-29 (314), MiG-31 (279) and Su-27 (390) fighters. In addition MiG-25 and Su-24s are used for reconnaissance missions.

Military Transport Aviation Command comprised nine regiments in 2006 and has some 293 aircraft. Funding shortages have reduced serviceability drastically.

ECONOMY

Agriculture accounted for 4.0% of GDP in 2010, industry 35.4% and services 60.6%.

Overview

Russia emerged from a decade of post-Soviet economic and political turmoil to reassert itself as a world power in the early 2000s. Its vast resources in oil and natural gas helped to regenerate the economy. The state-run gas monopoly, Gazprom, is the world's largest producer and exporter of oil and gas.

Nonetheless, the economy grew by only 0.6% in 2014 (down from an average of 3.4% over the previous four years). This decline was the result of falling domestic demand, capital flight, low business confidence and a lack of economic diversification. Impediments to medium- and long-term growth prospects include an uncertain external environment (exacerbated by strained relations with the West and several regional neighbours), poor educational standards, mismanagement of public finances and a lack of infrastructure investment.

The economy has also been severely affected by international sanctions in response to the Russian government's role in the unrest in Ukraine since 2013. As a result, there has been increased volatility on the exchange rate market and a significant depreciation of the currency, alongside reduced access to international financial markets. Meanwhile, the decline in the global oil price, which fell by around 35% during 2015, has hurt exports and revenues.

Russia became a member of the World Trade Organization in 2012 after 18 years of negotiations. However, its future prosperity is dependent on an upsurge in oil revenues, the relaxation of sanctions and increased political stability, both domestically and at the international level.

Currency

The unit of currency is the rouble (RUB), of 100 kopeks. In Jan. 1998 the rouble was redenominated by a factor of a thousand. Foreign exchange reserves were US$383,664m. in Sept. 2009 and gold reserves 19.00m. troy oz. In Feb. 2005 Russia abandoned its de facto dollar peg and switched to a euro-dollar basket. Inflation rates (based on IMF statistics):

2005	2006	2007	2008	2009	2010	2011	2012	2013	2014
12.7%	9.7%	9.0%	14.1%	11.7%	6.9%	8.4%	5.1%	6.8%	7.8%

Inflation had been 2,510% in 1992. Total money supply in Dec. 2008 was 7,419.7bn. roubles. In Nov. 2000 President Putin and President Lukashenka of Belarus agreed the introduction of a single currency, but plans to introduce the Russian rouble to Belarus have since been postponed indefinitely.

Budget

Central government revenue totalled 14,151.8bn. roubles in 2009 (14,127.3bn. roubles in 2008) and expenditure 12,063.3bn. roubles (8,887.8bn. roubles in 2008). Principal sources of revenue in 2009: taxes on international trade and transactions, 2,599.2bn. roubles; social security contributions, 2,354.7bn. roubles; taxes on goods and services, 2,288.9bn. roubles. Main items of expenditure by economic type in 2009: social benefits, 4,146.3bn. roubles; compensation of employees, 1,982.8bn. roubles; grants, 1,693.9bn. roubles.

VAT is 18% (reduced rate, 10%).

Performance

Real GDP growth rates (based on IMF statistics):

2005	2006	2007	2008	2009	2010	2011	2012	2013	2014
6.4%	8.2%	8.5%	5.2%	-7.8%	4.5%	4.3%	3.4%	1.3%	0.6%

Real GDP shrank by 3.7% in 2015, the worst recorded growth rate since the 2009 recession. Total GDP was US$1,860.6bn.

in 2014. In June 2002 Russia was acknowledged as a market economy under United States trade law, symbolically underscoring the country's transformation from a state-planned economy.

Banking and Finance

The central bank and bank of issue is the State Bank of Russia (Chairman, Elvira Nabiullina). The Russian Bank for Reconstruction and Development and the State Investment Company were created in 1993 to channel foreign and domestic investment. Foreign bank branches have been operating since Nov. 1992.

By 1995 the number of registered commercial banks had increased to around 5,000 but following the Aug. 1997 liquidity crisis, owing to the ensuing bankruptcies, mergers and the Central Bank's revoking of licences, the number fell to 2,500. This has since fallen to 1,300. Approximately 80% of the commercial banks were state-owned through ministries or state enterprises.

Sberbank is the leading bank with assets of US$553.2bn. in March 2014, followed by VTB Bank (formerly Vneshtorgbank) with assets of US$266.6bn. In Sept. 2011 there were 991 credit institutions with 2,825 branches.

In the wake of one of the worst financial crises that Russia's market economy had experienced, the central bank tripled interest rates to 150% in May 1998 in an effort to restore stability to the financial system. By 2002 the banking sector in Russia was healthier than at any time since the collapse of the former Soviet Union.

External debt was US$384,740m. in 2010, representing 26.9% of GNI.

In 2014 Russia received US$21.0bn. worth of foreign direct investment, down from US$69.2bn. in 2013.

There are stock exchanges in Moscow, Novosibirsk, St Petersburg and Vladivostok.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Russia's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2011 accounted for 5.3% of the world total (the fourth highest after China, the USA and India), and were equivalent to 12.0 tonnes per capita. An Environmental Performance Index compiled in 2016 ranked Russia 32nd of 180 countries, with 83.5%. The index examined various factors in nine areas—agriculture, air quality, biodiversity and habitat, climate and energy, fisheries, forests, health impacts, water and sanitation, and water resources.

Electricity

In 2011 installed capacity was 223.0m. kW and electricity production 1,054.77bn. kWh (713.69bn. kWh thermal, 167.61bn. kWh hydro-electric and 172.94bn. kWh nuclear). Consumption per capita was 7,196 kWh in 2011. There were 31 nuclear reactors in use in 2009.

Oil and Gas

Russia was the second largest oil producer in 2014 (after Saudi Arabia) and the second largest exporter (also after Saudi Arabia). Russia consumes less than a third of the oil that it produces. Oil and gas account for 50% of Russia's export revenues. In 2013 there were proven crude petroleum reserves of 93.0bn. bbls. 2014 production of oil was a record 534.1m. tonnes (12.7% of the world total). Oil production rose every year between 1998 and 2007 but fell slightly in 2008 before increasing again every year between 2009 and 2013. There is an extensive domestic oil pipeline system. The main export pipeline to Europe is the Druzhba pipeline (crossing Belarus before splitting into northern and southern routes). The main export terminal is at Novorossiisk on the Black Sea. A 964-km pipeline from Skovorodino in Russia to Daqing in China was inaugurated in Jan. 2011, allowing Russia—as the world's largest oil producer—to increase significantly its exports to China. Other export pipeline developments include the Baltic Pipeline System I and II and the Caspian Pipeline Consortium's pipeline from Tengiz (Kazakhstan) to Novorossiisk.

Output of natural gas was a record 607.0bn. cu. metres in 2011, although it was slightly lower in 2014 at 578.7bn. cu. metres. Russia is now the world's second largest producer, having been surpassed as the largest producer by the USA in 2009. It has the second largest reserves of natural gas—in 2014 it had proven reserves of 32.6trn. cu. metres (17.4% of the world total). There is a comprehensive domestic distribution system (run by state-owned Gazprom, in which the government has a 50.23% stake), as well as gas pipelines linking Russia with former Soviet republics. In Russia's biggest-ever takeover Gazprom agreed in Sept. 2005 to buy a 72.7% stake in Sibneft, a leading oil company. The main export pipelines run from western Siberia through Ukraine and Belarus to European markets. Russia is seeking to diversify its gas export routes and a number of pipeline projects are under development. However, work stopped in 2014 on the US$22bn. South Stream pipeline, designed to bring gas from Russia to southeast Europe without passing through Ukraine, against a backdrop of rising tensions with the West in the aftermath of the annexation of Crimea from Ukraine earlier in the year. Russia is also looking to export its natural gas to Asian markets.

Minerals

Russia contains great mineral resources, including: coal (18% of global coal reserves), iron ore, gold, platinum, copper, zinc, lead, tin and rare metals. Output in 2011 (in tonnes): coal, 258.0m.; iron ore, 104.0m.; lignite, 76.8m.; potash, 6.5m.; bauxite, 4.5m.; aluminium, 3.9m.; alumina, 2.9m.; salt, 1.8m.; copper, 839,130; chrome ore, 400,000; zinc, 275,000; nickel, 264,000; molybdenum, 3,900; gold, 199,650 kg. Diamond production, 2013: 37.8m. carats (the most of any country). Annual uranium production is around 3,000 tonnes.

Agriculture

A presidential decree of Dec. 1991 authorized the private ownership of land on a general basis, but excluded farmland. Nevertheless, large state and collective farms, inherited from the Soviet era, were forced officially to reorganize, with most becoming joint-stock companies. Farm workers could branch off as private farmers by obtaining a grant of land from their parent farm, although they lacked full ownership rights. In Jan. 2003 a new law came into force regulating the possession, use and disposal of land plots designated as agricultural land. The law provides that: the authorities may confiscate farmland if its owners are using it for non-agricultural purposes; regional authorities will have the first option to purchase farmland from its owners; and farmland can only be sold to third parties if authorities refuse their option to buy. The law also deprives foreigners of the right to own agricultural land, although they may lease it for up to 49 years. In 2012 there were an estimated 119.75m. ha. of arable land and 1.60m. ha. of permanent crops. There were 4.2m. ha. of irrigated land in 2008.

Output in 2009 (in 1,000 tonnes) included: wheat, 61,740; potatoes, 31,134; sugar beets, 24,892; barley, 17,881; sunflower seeds, 6,454; oats, 5,401; rye, 4,333; maize, 3,963; cabbage, broccoli, etc., 3,312; tomatoes, 2,170; onions, 1,602; apples, 1,596; carrots and turnips, 1,519. Russia was the world's largest producer of barley, oats, rye and sunflower seeds in 2009.

Livestock products in 2009 (in tonnes): poultry meat, 2.3m.; pork and pork products, 2.2m.; beef and veal, 1.7m.; cow's milk, 32.3m.; goat's milk, 0.2m.; eggs, 2.2m.; cheese, 0.6m.

Forestry

Russia has the largest area covered by forests of any country in the world, with 809.1m. ha. in 2010 (49% of the land area). In 2011 timber production was 149.87m. cu. metres. Russia was the world's largest exporter of roundwood in 2011, with 16.4% of the world total.

Fisheries

Total catch in 2010 was 4,069,624 tonnes (down from 8,211,516 tonnes in 1989). Approximately 94% of the fish caught are from marine waters.

INDUSTRY

As a result of Soviet central planning, Russian industry remains dominated by heavy industries, such as energy and metals. As of 1 Jan. 2010 there were 418,600 manufacturing enterprises and organizations (of which 383,300 were private) and 433,700 construction enterprises and organizations (413,400 private). Manufacturing accounted for 13.1% of GDP in 2009 and construction 4.8%.

The leading companies by market capitalization in Russia in March 2015 were: Gazprom, a gas company (US$56.6bn.); Rosneft, an oil and gas company (US$46.0bn.); and Lukoil, an oil and gas producer (US$39.6bn.).

Output in 2007 (unless otherwise indicated) includes: (in tonnes) crude steel, 72.4m.; residual fuel oil (2009), 69.6m.; distillate fuel oil (2009), 67.2m.; cement, 59.9m.; rolled steel, 59.7m.; pig iron, 51.5m.; petrol, 35.1m.; coke, 32.3m.; jet fuel, 10.7m.; sulphuric acid (2006), 9.5m.; steel pipe, 8.7m.; bread, 7.9m.; paper and paperboard (2011), 7.6m.; sugar (2010), 3.0m.; clays, 2.2m.; caustic soda, 1.3m.; (in cu. metres) sawnwood (2008), 21.6m.; plywood, 2.8m.; (in sq. metres) cotton fabrics, 2,108m.; woollen fabrics, 28.7m.; (in units) cigarettes (2009), 413bn.; bricks, 13,090m.; televisions (2009), 4.8m.; refrigerators and freezers, 3.5m.; washing and drying machines (2009), 2.3m.; microwaves, 2.5m.; bicycles, 1.5m.; passenger cars, 1.3m.; trucks (2009), 91,676; combine harvesters, 8,060; tractors, 7,500; (in litres) beer (2009), 10,911m.; soft drinks, 5,982m.; mineral water, 3,632m.; spirits and liqueurs, 1,315m.

Labour

In 2010 the economically active population numbered 75.45m. (38.58m. males and 36.87m. females). Of those in employment in 2010, 18.1% worked in wholesale and retail trade/repair of motor vehicles, motorcycles and personal and household goods, 15.4% in manufacturing, 9.6% in agriculture and forestry, 8.8% in education, 7.9% in transport, 7.8% in construction and 7.0% in health and social work. The unemployment rate was 9.9% in May 2009—with 7.5m. people unemployed using ILO methodology—down from 10.2% in April 2009 although up from 6.1% in Oct. 2008. Average monthly wages were 20,952.2 roubles in 2010 (compared to 8,554.9 roubles in 2005); the monthly minimum wage in 2010 was 4,330 roubles (up from 132 roubles in 2000). In 2010, 18.5m. people, or 13.1% of the population, had an average per capita money income lower than the subsistence minimum (down from 29.0% of the population in 2000). The state Federal Employment Service was set up in 1992. Unemployment benefits are paid by the Service for 12 months, payable at: 75% of the average monthly wage during the last two months preceding unemployment for the first three months; 60% for the next four months; and 45% for the last five months. Annual paid leave is 24 working days. In 2013, just 200 working days were lost through strikes compared with 85,900 in 2005. Retirement age is 55 years for women, 60 for men.

Russia had 0.52m. people living in slavery according to the Walk Free Foundation's 2013 Global Slavery Index, the sixth highest total of any country.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

In Jan. 2010 Russia joined a customs union with Belarus and Kazakhstan, which was superseded by the Eurasian Economic Union in Jan. 2015.

Imports and Exports

The following table shows the value of Russia's foreign trade (in US$1bn.):

	2006	2007	2008	2009	2010
Exports f.o.b.	301.2	351.9	467.6	301.7	396.6

Of imports in 2010, 44.4% by value was machinery and transport equipment, 16.1% chemicals products and rubber, 15.9% foodstuffs and agricultural raw materials, and 7.4% metals and precious stones. Of exports, 68.4% by value was mineral products, 12.8% metals and precious stones, 6.2% chemical products and rubber, and 5.4% machinery and transport equipment. China provided 13.4% of imports in 2009, Germany 12.4%, USA 5.4%, Ukraine 5.3% and France 4.9%. In 2009 the Netherlands accounted for 12.0% of exports, Italy 8.3%, Germany 6.2%, Belarus 5.5% and China 5.5%. China is Russia's leading trading partner overall.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

There were 933,000 km of roads in 2006, of which 80.9% were hard surfaced. In 2007, 78bn. passenger-km were travelled by road. There were 29,249,000 passenger cars in use in 2007 plus 4,730,000 lorries and vans and 861,000 buses and coaches. In 2013 there were 27,000 road deaths.

Rail

Length of railways in 2010 was 86,000 km, of which about half is electrified. In 2011, 933.1m. passengers and 1,381.3m. tonnes of freight were carried by rail; passenger-km travelled came to 140bn. and freight tonne-km to 2,128bn. There are metro services in Moscow (309 km), St Petersburg (105 km), Nizhny Novgorod (15 km), Novosibirsk (14 km), Samara (10 km), Ekaterinburg (9 km) and Kazan (7 km). Kazan's metro opened in 2005, making it the first metro to be opened in Russia since the breakup of the Soviet Union.

Civil Aviation

The main international airports are at Moscow (Domodedovo, Sheremetyevo and Vnukovo) and St Petersburg (Pulkovo). The national carrier is Aeroflot International Russian Airlines (51% state-owned), which carried 11.3m. scheduled passengers in 2010. Rossiya, S7 Airlines, Transaero and UTair also operate internationally.

In 2009 scheduled airline traffic of Russian-based carriers flew 836m. km, carrying 34,403,000 passengers (11,992,000 on international flights). The three busiest airports all serve Moscow. Domodedovo is Russia's busiest airport in terms of passenger traffic (22,255,000 in 2010, a 19% increase on 2009). Sheremetyevo handled 19,329,000 passengers in 2010 (up 31% on 2009), and Vnukovo handled 9,460,000 in 2010 (up 22% on 2009). The fourth busiest airport is Pulkovo, which serves St Petersburg and handled 8,444,000 passengers in 2010 (up 25% on 2009).

Shipping

In Jan. 2009 there were 1,272 ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 4.90m. GT. Of the 1,272 vessels registered, 857 were general cargo ships, 296 oil tankers, 58 bulk carriers, 24 chemical tankers, 24 passenger ships, 12 container ships and one liquid gas tanker. The Russian-controlled fleet comprised 1,418 vessels of 1,000 GT or over in Jan. 2009, of which 945 were under the Russian flag and 473 under foreign flags. In 2010, 16m. passengers and 102m. tonnes of freight were carried on 101,000 km of inland waterways. The busiest ports are Novorossiisk (which handled 81,633,000 tonnes in 2008), Primorsk (75,582,000 tonnes in 2008) and St Petersburg (59,945,000 tonnes in 2008).

Telecommunications

In 2013 there were 40,473,000 main (fixed) telephone lines. Active mobile phone subscriptions numbered 208,065,000 in 2012

(1,453.3 per 1,000 persons). There were 61.5m. internet users in 2011. In March 2012 there were 5.2m. Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The Supreme Court is the highest judicial body on civil, criminal and administrative law. The Supreme Arbitration Court deals with economic cases. The KGB, and the Federal Security Bureau which succeeded it, were replaced in Dec. 1992 by the Federal Counter-Intelligence Service. The legal system is, however, crippled by corruption.

A new civil code was introduced in 1993 to replace the former Soviet code. It guarantees the inviolability of private property and includes provisions for the freedom of movement of capital and goods.

12-member juries were introduced in a number of courts after Nov. 1993, but in the years that followed jury trials were not widely used. However, on 1 Jan. 2003 jury trials began to be phased in nationwide. A new criminal code came into force on 1 Jan. 1997, based on respect for the rights and freedoms of the individual and the sanctity of private property. A further new code that entered force on 1 July 2002 introduced new levels of protection for defendants and restrictions on law enforcement officials. The death penalty is retained for five crimes against the person. It is not applied to minors, women or men over 65.

In 2010, 2,629,000 crimes were recorded, including 15,600 murders and attempted murders (down from 31,800 in 2000), 1,108,000 thefts and 4,900 rapes and attempted rapes. In 1996 there were 140 executions (86 in 1995; 1 in 1992). President Yeltsin placed a moratorium on capital punishment in 1996 when Russia joined the Council of Europe, but parliament has refused to abolish the death penalty. The last execution was in Aug. 1996. The prison population in May 2011 was 806,100 (568 per 100,000 population—the second highest rate in the world after the USA). In 2010 there were 1,052 prison establishments and institutions. In 2015 the World Justice Project Rule of Law Index, which provides data on how the rule of law is experienced by the general public across eight categories, ranked Russia 74th of 102 countries for criminal justice and 60th for civil justice.

Education

Adult literacy rate in 2010 was 99.7%. In 2009 there were 5.02m. pupils in primary schools, 9.61m. in secondary schools and 9.33m. students in tertiary education (56.6% of whom were females). There were 5.23m. children in 45,300 pre-school establishments in 2009.

In 2012 public expenditure on education came to 4.2% of GDP.

Russia's largest university is the M. V. Lomonosov Moscow State University. Founded in 1755, it now has 30 faculties and 15 research centres. It has an annual enrolment of 31,000 students. The Russian Academy of Sciences, founded in 1724 and reorganized in 1925 as the Academy of Sciences of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, was restored under its present name in 1991. It is the highest scientific self-governing institution in Russia and has 18 divisions on particular areas of science. The Academy also has three regional branches: the Urals Branch, the Siberian Branch and the Far East Branch.

Health

Doctors numbered 703,000 in 2012, equivalent to 49 doctors per 10,000 population. There were 45,628 dentists, 1,214,292 nurses and midwives and 11,521 pharmacists in 2006. In 2012 there were 93 hospital beds per 10,000 inhabitants. Expenditure on health in 2009 was 5.4% of GDP. Russia had 62,581 newly diagnosed HIV infections in 2010 (44.1 cases per 100,000 of population). As at Sept. 2012 there were over 682,000 registered HIV-infected patients. In 2012 there were 74 cases of tuberculosis per 100,000 people. In 2009, 39.1% of Russian adults smoked (males, 60.2%; females, 21.7%). Cigarette consumption is among the highest of any country.

Welfare

State welfare provision includes: old age, disability and survivor pensions; sickness and maternity benefits; work injury payments; unemployment benefits; and family allowances. The basic pension is a flat amount provided to all those reaching retirement age (60 for males and 55 for females) with a minimum contribution record of five years. The old-age pension is calculated as the sum of three components. In 2010 the basic monthly flat-rate amount for pensioners under the age of 80 varied from 2,622 roubles to 5,124 roubles according to the number of dependents; the basic monthly flat-rate amount for a pensioner age 80 or older varied from 5,124 roubles to 7,686 roubles according to the number of dependents.

RELIGION

The Russian Orthodox Church is the largest religious association in the country. In early 2010 it had 160 dioceses with over 30,000 parishes, more than 200 bishops and 28,000 priests and about 790 monasteries. A survey conducted in 2012 by the Levada-Center (an independent, non-governmental polling and sociological research organization) estimated that some 74% of the population are Orthodox believers and 7% Muslims; 76% of Russians who described themselves as Orthodox believers were church-goers. There are still many Old Believers, whose schism from the Orthodox Church dates from the 17th century. The Russian Church is headed by the Patriarch of Moscow and All Rus' (Patriarch Kirill I—Metropolitan Kirill of Smolensk and Kaliningrad, b. 1946; elected Jan. 2009). Muslims represent the second largest religious community in Russia. In Feb. 2010 the Supreme Co-ordinating Council of Russian Muslims was established to be co-chaired by the heads of the three major organizations—Talgat Tadzhuiddin of the Central Spiritual Board of Muslims, Rawil Gaynetdin of the Council of Muftis of Russia and Ismail Berdiyev of the Co-ordinating Muslim Council of the North Caucasus.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

Russia's World Heritage sites as classified by UNESCO (with year entered on list) are: the Historic Centre of St Petersburg (1990); the Kremlin and Red Square in Moscow (1990); Khizi Pogost (1990); the Historic Monuments of Novgorod and surroundings (1992); Cultural and Historic Ensemble of the Solovetsky Islands (1992); the White Monuments of Vladimir and Suzdal (1992); Architectural Ensemble of the Trinity Sergius Lavra in Sergiev Posad (1993); the Church of the Ascension, Kolomenskoye (1994); Virgin Komi Forests (1995); Lake Baikal (1996); Volcanoes of Kamchatka (1996, 2001); Golden Mountains of Altai (1998); Western Caucasus (1999); the Ensemble of Ferapontov Monastery (2000); Historic and Architectural Complex of the Kazan Kremlin (2000); Central Sikhote-Alin (2001); the Citadel, Ancient City and Fortress Buildings of Derbent (2003); Ensemble of the Novodevichy Convent in southwest Moscow (2004); Natural System of Wrangel Island Reserve (2004); the Historical Centre of the City of Yaroslavl (2005); the Putorana Plateau (2010); the Lena Pillars Nature Park (2012); and Bolgar Historical and Archaeological Complex (2014).

The Russian Federation also shares three UNESCO sites: the Curonian Spit with Lithuania (2000); Uvs Nuur Basin with Mongolia (2003); and the Struve Geodetic Arc (2005), a chain of survey triangulations spanning from Norway to the Black Sea that helped establish the exact shape and size of the earth, with nine other countries.

Press

In 2012 there were 546 daily newspapers. There were 27,801 non-daily newspapers in 2012. The most popular daily newspaper in 2013 was Komsomol'skaya Pravda, with an average daily readership of 2.5m., followed by Moskovsky Komsomolets, with a readership of 1.4m. A presidential decree of 22 Dec. 1993 brought the press agencies ITAR-TASS and RIA-Novosti under state control. In 2012, 116,888 new or revised books were published.

Tourism

In 2011 arrivals of non-resident visitors—including Russians living abroad—totalled 24,932,000 (22,281,000 in 2010), of which 2,336,000 were tourists (2,134,000 in 2010). There were 7,866 hotels and similar establishments in 2011, with 537,000 beds.

Festivals

One of the most popular festivals is the White Nights Festival, which is held from May to July in St Petersburg and combines ballet, opera and music performances. The Annual Summer Ballet Festival runs from June to Sept. in Moscow while the Moscow International Film Festival takes place in June. The biggest rock and pop festival is Nashestvie, which is held annually near Moscow in Aug.

THE REPUBLICS

The 22 republics that with Russia itself constitute the Russian Federation were (except for Crimea; see CRIMEA on page 1222) part of the RSFSR in the Soviet period. On 31 March 1992 the federal government concluded treaties with the then 20 republics, except Checheno-Ingushetia and Tatarstan, defining their mutual responsibilities. Crimea became the 22nd republic in March 2014 although most of the international community does not accept the validity of its accession. The Council of the Heads of the Republics is chaired by the Russian President and includes the Russian Prime Minister. Its function is to provide an interaction between the federal government and the republican authorities.

Adygeya

Part of Krasnodar Territory. Area, 7,600 sq. km (2,950 sq. miles); population (2002 census), 477,109. Estimated population, 1 Jan. 2010, 443,200. Capital, Maikop (2002 census, 156,931). Established 27 July 1922; granted republican status in 1991.

President: Aslan Tkhakushinov (in office since 13 Jan. 2007).

Prime Minister: Murat Kumpilov (in office since 12 May 2008—acting until 28 May 2008).

Chief industries are timber, woodworking and food processing; there is some engineering and gas production. Agriculture consists primarily of crops (beets, wheat, maize), on partly irrigated land. Industry accounted for 15.2% of gross regional product in 2003 and agriculture 13.6%.

In 2004 there were 12,400 pupils in 126 pre-school institutions and 50,700 pupils in 175 primary and secondary day schools. There were 20,000 students at the two institutions of higher education, Adygeya State University and Maikop State Technological Institute.

In 2004 the rates of doctors and hospital beds per 10,000 population were 37.2 and 110 respectively.

Altai

Part of Altai Territory. Area, 92,600 sq. km (35,750 sq. miles); population (2002 census), 202,947. Estimated population, 1 Jan. 2010, 210,700. Capital, Gorno-Altai (2002 census, 53,538). Established 1 June 1922 as Oirot Autonomous Region; renamed 7 Jan. 1948; granted republican status in 1991 and renamed in 1992.

Chairman of the Government: Aleksandr Berdnikov.

Cattle breeding predominates. Chief industries are clothing and footwear, foodstuffs, gold mining, timber, chemicals and dairying. Industrial output was valued at 838m. roubles in 2004 and agricultural output at 2,972m. roubles.

In 2004 there were 6,600 pupils in 130 pre-school institutions and 32,300 pupils in 202 primary and secondary day schools. There were 6,000 students at Gorno-Altai State University.

The rates of doctors and hospital beds per 10,000 population in 2004 were 38.0 and 123 respectively.

Bashkortostan

Area 143,600 sq. km (55,450 sq. miles), population (2002 census), 4,104,336. Estimated population, 1 Jan. 2010, 4,066,000. Capital, Ufa (2002 census population, 1,042,437). Bashkiria was annexed to Russia in 1557. It was constituted as an Autonomous Soviet Republic on 23 March 1919. A declaration of republican sovereignty was adopted in 1990, and a declaration of independence on 28 March 1992. A treaty of Aug. 1994 with Russia preserves the common legislative framework of the Russian Federation while defining mutual areas of competence. The main ethnic groups are Russians, Tatars and Bashkirs. There are also Chuvash and Mari minorities.

A constitution was adopted on 24 Dec. 1993. It states that Bashkiria conducts its own domestic and foreign policy, that its laws take precedence in Bashkiria, and that it forms part of the Russian Federation on a voluntary and equal basis.

President: Rustem Khamitov.

Industrial production was valued at 354,000m. roubles in 2004 and agricultural output at 57,160m. roubles. The most important industries are oil and oil products; there are also engineering, glass and building materials enterprises. Agriculture specializes in wheat, barley, oats and livestock.

In 2004 there were 144,600 pupils in 1,904 pre-school institutions and 583,300 pupils in 3,187 primary and secondary day schools. There were 150,200 students in 17 institutions of higher education. There is a state university and a branch of the Academy of Sciences with eight learned institutions.

In 2004 the rates of doctors and hospital beds per 10,000 population were 41.9 and 104 respectively.

Buryatia

Area is 351,300 sq. km (135,650 sq. miles). The Buryat Republic, situated to the south of Sakha, adopted the Soviet system on 1 March 1920. This area was penetrated by the Russians in the 17th century and finally annexed from China by the treaties of Nerchinsk (1689) and Kyakhta (1727). Population (2002 census), 981,238. Estimated population, 1 Jan. 2010, 963,500. Capital, Ulan-Ude (2002 census population, 359,391). The main ethnic groups are Russians, followed by Buryats. There are also Ukrainian, Tatar and Belarusian minorities.

There is a 65-member parliament, the People's Hural.

Head of the Republic: Vyacheslav Nagovitsyn (since 12 May 2012; previously president from 10 July 2007–12 May 2012).

The main industries are engineering, brown coal and graphite, timber, building materials, sheep and cattle farming. Industrial production was valued at 32,161m. roubles in 2004 and agricultural output at 8,352m. roubles.

In 2004 there were 30,100 pupils in 423 pre-school institutions and 139,000 pupils in 572 primary and secondary day schools. There were 31,900 pupils in five institutions of higher education.

In 2004 the rates of doctors and hospital beds per 10,000 population were 38.3 and 109 respectively. The level of poverty in Buryatia was 38.2% in 2003.

Chechnya

GENERAL DETAILS

The area of the Republic of Chechnya is 15,000 sq. km (5,800 sq. miles). The population at the 2002 census was 1,103,686. The estimated population at 1 Jan. 2010 was 1,268,000. Capital, Dzhohar (since March 1998; previously known as Grozny; 2002 census population, 210,720). The Chechens and Ingushes were conquered by Russia in the late 1850s. In 1920 each nationality were constituted areas within the Soviet Mountain Republic and the Chechens became an Autonomous Region on 30 Nov. 1922. In Jan. 1934 the two regions were united, and on 5 Dec. 1936 constituted as the Checheno-Ingush Autonomous Republic. This was dissolved in 1944 and the population was deported en masse, allegedly for collaboration with the German occupation forces. It was reconstituted on 9 Jan. 1957: 232,000 Chechens and Ingushes returned to their homes in the next two years.

In 1991 rebel leader Jokhar Dudayev seized control of Chechnya and won elections. In Nov. he declared an independent Chechen Republic. Ingush desire to separate from Chechnya led to fighting along the Chechen-Ingush border and a deployment of Russian troops. An agreement to withdraw was reached between Russia and Chechnya on 15 Nov. 1992. The separation of Chechnya and Ingushetia was formalized in Dec. 1992. In April 1993 President Dudayev dissolved parliament. Hostilities continued throughout 1994 between the government and forces loosely grouped under the 'Provisional Chechen Council'. The Russian government, which had never recognized the Chechen declaration of independence of Nov. 1991, moved troops and armour into Chechnya on 11 Dec. 1994. Grozny was bombed and attacked by Russian ground forces at the end of Dec. 1994 and the presidential palace was captured on 19 Jan. 1995, but fighting continued. On 30 July 1995 the Russian and Chechen authorities signed a ceasefire. However, hostilities, raids and hostage-taking continued; Dudayev was killed in April 1996 and a ceasefire was agreed on 30 Aug. 1996.

Fighting broke out again, however, in Sept. 1999 as Russian forces launched attacks on 'rebel bases'. Fighting intensified and more than 200,000 civilians were forced to flee, mostly to neighbouring Ingushetia. By Feb. 2000 much of Grozny had been destroyed and was closed by the Russians. In June 2000 Vladimir Putin declared direct rule. The conflict continues, with estimates of the number of deaths varying from 6,500 to 15,000. Over 4,000 Russian soldiers have been killed. However, on 18 Nov. 2001 the first official meeting between negotiators for the Russian government and Chechen separatists took place. In Oct. 2002 a group of Chechen rebels took control of a Moscow theatre and held hostage 800 people for three days, before Russian troops stormed the building. An anaesthetic gas, used to combat the rebels, also killed many of the hostages.

On 23 March 2003 a referendum was held on a new constitution that would keep Chechnya within Russia but give it greater autonomy, and provide a new president and parliament for the republic. Although 96% of votes cast were in favour of the new constitution there was criticism of the conduct of the referendum. Presidential elections held on 5 Oct. 2003 were won by the Kremlin-backed candidate Akhmad Kadyrov, with 80.8% of the vote, but there was widespread condemnation of the electoral process. President Kadyrov was assassinated on 9 May 2004. Presidential elections held on 29 Aug. 2004, widely seen as rigged, were won by the Kremlin-backed Alu Alkhanov with 73.5% of the vote, against 5.9% for Movsur Khamidov, head of the Chechen department of the Federal Security Service. There were five other candidates. Turnout was 85.2%. On 27 Nov. 2005 the first parliamentary elections took place since Russian troops restored Moscow's control over Chechnya in 1999. In the elections to the People's Assembly (lower chamber) the United Russia party won 19 of 38 seats with 60.7% of the vote, the Communist Party 3 with 12.2%, the Union of Rightist Forces 1 with 12.4%, the Eurasian Union 1 with 3.9%; independents won 14 seats. In the Council of the Republic (upper chamber), United Russia won 14 of 20 seats, the Communist Party 3 and the Union of Rightist Forces 3.

Separatist President Aslan Maskhadov was killed by Russian troops on 8 March 2005, as was his successor Abdul-Khalim Sadulayev on 17 June 2006.

Moscow-backed Acting Head of the Republic: Ramzan Kadyrov; b. 1976.

Amir of the Caucasus Emirate (self-proclaimed): Doku Umarov; b. 1964.

Chechnya's economy has been destroyed as a result of years of conflict with Russia. Following the conclusion of the second Chechen war in May 2000, it was estimated that over 90% of the working population lacked regular employment. The region is rich in oil—Chechnya's oil reserves are estimated at some 220m. bbls. In 2003 oil production was 1.8m. tonnes. In 2004 there were 212,300 pupils in 460 primary and secondary day schools. There were 23,500 students in three institutions of higher education. In 2011 there were a total of 368 medical facilities.

Chuvashia

Area, 18,300 sq. km (7,050 sq. miles); population (2002 census), 1,313,754. Estimated population, 1 Jan. 2010, 1,278,400. Capital, Cheboksary (2002 census population, 440,621). The territory was annexed by Russia in the middle of the 16th century. On 24 June 1920 it was constituted as an Autonomous Region, and on 21 April 1925 as an Autonomous Republic. The main ethnic groups are Chuvash, followed by Russians. There are also Tatar and Mordovian minorities. Republican sovereignty was declared in Sept. 1990.

Head of the Republic: Mikhail Ignatyev.

Prime Minister: Ivan Motorin.

The timber industry antedates the Soviet period. Other industries include railway repair works, electrical and other engineering industries, building materials, chemicals, textiles and food industries. Grain crops account for nearly two-thirds of all sowings and fodder crops for nearly a quarter. Chuvashia is Russia's main producer of hops and the republic has a significant brewing industry. Industrial output was valued at 49,826m. roubles in 2004 and agricultural output at 12,722m. roubles.

In 2004 there were 47,100 pupils at 433 pre-school institutions and 166,200 pupils in 619 primary and secondary day schools. There were 63,900 students in seven higher educational establishments.

In 2004 the rates of doctors and hospital beds per 10,000 population were 46.8 and 116 respectively.

Dagestan

Area, 50,300 sq. km (19,400 sq. miles); population (2002 census), 2,576,531. Estimated population, 1 Jan. 2010, 2,737,300. Capital, Makhachkala (2002 census population, 462,412). Over 30 nationalities inhabit this republic apart from Russians; the most numerous are Dagestanis and there are also Azerbaijani, Chechen and Jewish minorities. Annexed from Persia in 1723, Dagestan was constituted an Autonomous Republic on 20 Jan. 1921. In 1991 the Supreme Soviet declared the area of republican, rather than autonomous republican, status. Many of the nationalities who live in Dagestan have organized armed militias, and in May 1998 rebels stormed the government building in Makhachkala. In Aug. 1999 Dagestan faced attacks from Islamic militants who invaded from Chechnya. Although Russian troops tried to restore order and discipline, the guerrilla campaign has continued with a series of bombings targeting Russian military personnel.

President: Ramazan Abdulatipov (in office since 28 Jan. 2013—acting until 8 Sept. 2013).

Prime Minister: Abdusamad Gamidov (in office since 25 July 2013).

There are engineering, oil, chemical, woodworking, textile, food and other light industries. Agriculture is varied, ranging from wheat to grapes, with sheep farming and cattle breeding. Industrial output was valued at 41.0bn. roubles in 2012 and agricultural output at 64.9bn. roubles.

In 2004 there were 55,900 pupils in 593 pre-schools and 443,300 pupils in 1,683 primary and secondary day schools. There were 105,500 students in 15 institutions of higher education.

There is a branch of the Russian Academy of Sciences with ten learned institutions.

In 2004 the rates of doctors and hospital beds per 10,000 population were 38.2 and 70 respectively.

Ingushetia

The history of Ingushetia is interwoven with that of Chechnya (see CHECHNYA: General Details). Ingush desire to separate from Chechnya led to fighting along the Chechen-Ingush border and a deployment of Russian troops. The separation of Ingushetia from Chechnya was formalized by an amendment of Dec. 1992 to the Russian Constitution. On 15 May 1993 an extraordinary congress of the peoples of Ingushetia adopted a declaration of state sovereignty within the Russian Federation. Skirmishes between Ingush refugees and local police broke out in Aug. 1999 and tensions remained high with the danger of further outbreaks of fighting. The Russian attacks on neighbouring Chechnya in Sept. 1999 led to thousands of Chechen refugees fleeing to Ingushetia. In April 2004 President Murat Zyazikov survived an assassination attempt, as did Prime Minister Ibragim Malsagov in Aug. 2005.

Area, 4,300 sq. km (1,700 sq. miles); population (2002 census), 467,294. Estimated population, 1 Jan. 2010, 516,700.

There is a 27-member parliament. On 27 Feb. 1994 presidential elections and a constitutional referendum were held. Turnout was 70%. At the referendum 97% of votes cast approved a new constitution stating that Ingushetia is a democratic law-based secular republic forming part of the Russian Federation on a treaty basis.

President: Yunus-bek Yevkurov.

Prime Minister: Abubakar Malsagov.

Industry accounted for 14.6% of gross regional product in 2003 and agriculture 14.1%. A special economic zone for Russian residents was set up in 1994, and an 'offshore' banking tax haven in 1996.

In 2004 there were 2,500 pupils in 20 pre-school institutions and 64,600 pupils in 113 primary and secondary day schools. There were 9,400 students in five institutions of higher education.

In 2004 the rates of doctors and hospital beds per 10,000 population were 22.8 and 41 respectively.

Kabardino-Balkaria

Area, 12,500 sq. km (4,850 sq. miles); population (2002 census), 901,494. Estimated population, 1 Jan. 2010, 893,800. Capital, Nalchik (2002 census population, 274,974). Kabarda was annexed to Russia in 1557. The republic was constituted on 5 Dec. 1936. The main ethnic groups are Kabardinians, followed by Russians and Balkars. There are also Ukrainian, Ossetian and German minorities.

A treaty with Russia of 1 July 1994 defines their mutual areas of competence within the legislative framework of the Russian Federation. The recent history of Kabardino-Balkaria has been marked by the instability that has plagued the whole of the north Caucasus. In Oct. 2005 militants staged a large-scale assault on government buildings in Nalchik, an act for which Chechen rebel leader Shamil Besayev claimed responsibility.

Prime Minister: Aly Musukov (since 11 Oct. 2014).

Main industries are ore-mining, timber, engineering, coal, food processing, timber and light industries, building materials. Grain, livestock breeding, dairy farming and wine-growing are the principal branches of agriculture. Agriculture accounted for 31.9% of gross regional product in 2003 and industry 14.2%.

In 2004 there were 26,100 pupils in 102 pre-school institutions and 123,400 pupils in 371 primary and secondary day schools. There were 28,500 students in four institutions of higher education. There is a branch of the Academy of Sciences with five learned institutions.

In 2004 the rates of doctors and hospital beds per 10,000 population were 41.3 and 101 respectively.

Kalmykia

Area, 76,100 sq. km (29,400 sq. miles); population (2002 census), 292,410. Estimated population, 1 Jan. 2010, 283,200. Capital, Elista (2002 census population, 104,254). The population is mainly Kalmyk and Russian, with small Chechen, Kazakh and German minorities.

The Kalmyks migrated from western China to Russia (Nogai Steppe) in the early 17th century. The territory was constituted an Autonomous Region on 4 Nov. 1920, and an Autonomous Republic on 22 Oct. 1935; this was dissolved in 1943. On 9 Jan. 1957 it was reconstituted as an Autonomous Region and on 29 July 1958 as an Autonomous Republic once more. In Oct. 1990 the republic was renamed the Kalmyk Soviet Socialist Republic; it was given its present name in Feb. 1992.

Head of the Republic: Aleksey Orlov.

Prime Minister: Igor Zotov.

In April 1993 the Supreme Soviet was dissolved and replaced by a professional parliament consisting of 25 of the former deputies. On 5 April 1994 a specially-constituted 300-member constituent assembly adopted a 'Steppe Code' as Kalmykia's basic law. This is not a constitution and renounces the declaration of republican sovereignty of 18 Oct. 1990. It provides for a President elected for five-year terms with the power to dissolve parliament, and a 27-member parliament, the People's Hural, elected every four years. It stipulates that Kalmykia is an equal member and integral part of the Russian Federation, functioning in accordance with the Russian constitution.

Main industries are oil and gas production, canning and building materials. Cattle breeding and irrigated farming (mainly fodder crops) are the principal branches of agriculture. Overgrazing during the Soviet period has led to the desertification of Kalmykia's pastures and agricultural output has declined substantially in recent years. Agriculture accounted for 10.4% of gross regional product in 2003 and industry 6.4%.

In 2004 there were 9,500 pupils in 119 pre-school institutions and 44,900 pupils in 213 primary and secondary day schools. There were 10,000 students in two institutions of higher education. In 2004 the rates of doctors and hospital beds per 10,000 population were 51.0 and 136 respectively. The main religion is Buddhism.

Karachai-Cherkessia

Area, 14,300 sq. km (5,500 sq. miles); population (2002 census), 439,470. Estimated population, 1 Jan. 2010, 427,000. Capital, Cherkessk (2002 census population, 116,244). A Karachai Autonomous Region was established on 26 April 1926 (out of a previously united Karachaevo-Cherkess Autonomous Region created in 1922), and dissolved in 1943. A Cherkess Autonomous Region was established on 30 April 1928. The present Autonomous Region was re-established on 9 Jan. 1957. The Region declared itself a Soviet Socialist Republic in Dec. 1990. Tension between the two ethnic groups increased after the first free presidential election in April 1999 was won by Vladimir Semyonov, an ethnic Karchayev. Despite numerous allegations of fraud the result was upheld by the Supreme Court. There were subsequently fears that the ethnic Cherkess opposition would attempt to set up breakaway government bodies.

Acting Head of the Republic: Rashid Temrezov.

Acting Prime Minister: Ruslan Kazanokov.

There are ore-mining, engineering, chemical and woodworking industries. The Kuban-Kalauusi irrigation scheme irrigates 200,000 ha. Livestock breeding and grain growing predominate in agriculture. Conflict in the north Caucasus has had a serious impact on the economy and the agricultural sector is supported by central government. Agriculture accounted for 19.4% of gross regional product in 2003 and industry 18.7%.

In 2004 there were 10,900 pupils in 99 pre-school institutions and 60,000 pupils in 190 primary and secondary day schools. There were 16,200 students in two institutions of higher education.

In 2004 the rates of doctors and hospital beds per 10,000 population were 33.9 and 101 respectively.

Karelia

The Karelian Republic, capital Petrozavodsk (2002 census population, 266,160), covers an area of 172,400 sq. km, with a 2002 census population of 716,281. Estimated population, 1 Jan. 2010, 684,200. Russians constitute the majority of the population, with some Karelians, Belarusians and Ukrainians.

Karelia (formerly Olonets Province) became part of the RSFSR after 1917. In June 1920 a Karelian Labour Commune was formed and in July 1923 this was transformed into the Karelian Autonomous Soviet Socialist Republic (one of the autonomous republics of the RSFSR). On 31 March 1940, after the Soviet-Finnish war, practically all the territory (with the exception of a small section in the neighbourhood of the Leningrad area) which had been ceded by Finland to the USSR was added to Karelia, and the Karelian Autonomous Republic was transformed into the Karelo-Finnish Soviet Socialist Republic as the 12th republic of the USSR. In 1946, however, the southern part of the republic, including its whole seaboard and the towns of Viipuri (Vyborg) and Keksholm, was attached to the RSFSR, reverting in 1956 to autonomous republican status within the RSFSR. In Nov. 1991 it declared itself the 'Republic of Karelia'.

Head of the Republic: Aleksandr Khudilainen (in office since 22 May 2012—acting until 24 May 2012).

Karelia has a wealth of timber, some 70% of its territory being forest land. It is also rich in other natural resources, having large deposits of mica, diabase, spar, quartz, marble, granite, zinc, lead, silver, copper, molybdenum, tin, baryta and iron ore. Its lakes and rivers are rich in fish.

There are timber mills, paper-cellulose works, mica, chemical plants, power stations and furniture factories. Industrial output was valued at 512,000m. roubles in 2004. Over half of Karelia's production output is exported annually, principally to EU countries. Exports totalled US$842m. in 2004.

In 2004 there were 28,800 pupils in 496 pre-schools and 81,100 pupils in 293 primary and secondary day schools. There were 21,900 students in three institutions of higher education. There is a branch of the Russian Academy of Sciences with seven learned institutions.

In 2004 the rates of doctors and hospital beds per 10,000 population were 49.4 and 123 respectively.

Khakassia

Area, 61,900 sq. km (23,900 sq. miles); population (2002 census), 546,072. Estimated population, 1 Jan. 2010, 539,200. Capital, Abakan (2002 census population, 165,197). Established 20 Oct. 1930; granted republican status in 1991.

Head of the Republic: Viktor Zimin.

There are coal- and ore-mining, timber and woodworking industries. The region is linked by rail with the Trans-Siberian line. Industrial output was valued at 25,651m. roubles in 2004 and agricultural output at 3,807m. roubles.

In 2004 there were 16,500 pupils in 157 pre-school institutions and 69,200 pupils in 289 primary and secondary day schools. There were 20,400 students in three higher education institutions.

In 2004 the rates of doctors and hospital beds per 10,000 population were 37.3 and 110 respectively.

Komi

Area, 415,900 sq. km (160,550 sq. miles); population (2002 census), 1,018,674. Estimated population, 1 Jan. 2010, 951,200. Capital, Syktyvkar (2002 census population, 230,011). Annexed by the princes of Moscow in the 14th century, the territory was constituted as an Autonomous Region on 22 Aug. 1921 and as an Autonomous Republic on 5 Dec. 1936. The largest ethnic group are Russians, followed by Komis, with Ukrainian and Belarusian minorities.

A declaration of sovereignty was adopted by the republican parliament in Sept. 1990, and the designation 'Autonomous' dropped from the republic's official name.

Acting Head of the Republic: Sergey Gaplikov.

There are coal, oil, timber, gas, asphalt and building materials industries, and light industry is expanding. Livestock breeding (including dairy farming) is the main branch of agriculture. Industrial output was valued at 87.5bn. roubles in 2004 and agricultural output at 4.3bn. roubles.

In 2004 there were 47,700 pupils in 412 pre-schools and 128,300 pupils in 531 primary and secondary day schools. There were 35,400 students in seven institutions of higher education.

In 2004 the rates of doctors and hospital beds per 10,000 population were 43.9 and 116 respectively.

Mari-El

Area, 23,200 sq. km (8,950 sq. miles); population (2002 census), 727,979. Estimated population, 1 Jan. 2010, 698,200. Capital, Yoshkar-Ola (2002 census population, 256,719). The Mari people were annexed to Russia, with other peoples of the Kazan Tatar Khanate, when the latter was overthrown in 1552. On 4 Nov. 1920 the territory was constituted as an Autonomous Region, and on 5 Dec. 1936 as an Autonomous Republic. The republic renamed itself the Mari Soviet Socialist Republic in Oct. 1990, and adopted a new constitution in June 1995. In Dec. 1991 Vladislav Zotin was elected the first president. The main ethnic groups are Russians, followed by Maris, with some Tatars.

Head of the Republic: Leonid Markelov.

Coal is mined. The main industries are metalworking, timber, paper, woodworking and food processing. Crops include grain, flax, potatoes, fruit and vegetables. Industry accounted for 24.4% of gross regional product in 2003 and agriculture 16.5%.

In 2004 there were 25,700 pupils in 265 pre-school institutions and 88,600 pupils in 382 primary and secondary day schools. There were 28,500 students in five institutions of higher education.

In 2004 the rates of doctors and hospital beds per 10,000 population were 35.2 and 125 respectively.

Mordovia

Area, 26,200 sq. km (10,100 sq. miles); population (2002 census), 888,766. Estimated population, 1 Jan. 2010, 826,500. Capital, Saransk (2002 census population, 304,866). By the 13th century the Mordovian tribes had been subjugated by Russian princes. In 1928 the territory was constituted as a Mordovian Area within the Middle-Volga Territory, on 10 Jan. 1930 as an Autonomous Region and on 20 Dec. 1934 as an Autonomous Republic. The main ethnic groups are Russians, followed by Mordovians, with some Tatars.

Head of the Republic: Vladimir Volkov (since May 2012).

Prime Minister: Vladimir Sushkov (since May 2012).

Industries include wood-processing and the production of building materials, furniture, textiles and leather goods. Agriculture is devoted chiefly to grain, sugar beet, sheep and dairy farming. Industrial output was valued at 29,117m. roubles in 2002.

In 2004 there were 23,900 pupils in 241 pre-school institutions and 97,300 students in 713 primary and secondary day schools. There were 42,900 students in four institutions of higher education.

In 2004 the rates of doctors and hospital beds per 10,000 population were 51.4 and 134 respectively.

North Ossetia (Alania)

Area, 8,000 sq. km (3,100 sq. miles); population (2002 census), 710,275. Estimated population, 1 Jan. 2010, 700,900. Capital, Vladikavkaz (2002 census population, 315,608). North Ossetia was annexed by Russia from Turkey and named the Terek region in 1861. On 4 March 1918 it was proclaimed an Autonomous Soviet Republic, and on 20 Jan. 1921 set up with others as the Mountain Autonomous Republic, with North Ossetia as the Ossetian (Vladikavkaz) Area within it. On 7 July 1924 the latter was constituted as an Autonomous Region and on 5 Dec. 1936 as an Autonomous Republic. In the early 1990s there was a conflict with neighbouring Ingushetia to the east, and to the south the decision of the Georgian government to disband the republic of South Ossetia led to ethnic war, with North Ossetia supporting the South Ossetians. Pressure for Ossetian reunification continues. In Sept. 2004 hostage takers seized a school in the town of Beslan. A three-day standoff ended with more than 350 people killed, nearly half of them children. Chechen rebels claimed responsibility for the siege.

A new constitution was adopted on 12 Nov. 1994 under which the republic reverted to its former name, Alania. Ossetians are the largest ethnic group, followed by Russians, with some Chechens, Armenians and Ukrainians.

Prime Minister and Acting Head of the Republic: Vyacheslav Bitarov.

The main industries are non-ferrous metals (mining and metallurgy), maize processing, timber and woodworking, textiles, building materials, distilleries and food processing. There is also a varied agriculture. Agriculture accounted for 16.8% of gross regional product in 2003 and industry 13.0%.

In 2004 there were 22,000 pupils in 216 pre-school institutions and 95,200 pupils in 218 primary and secondary day schools. There were 32,200 students in nine institutions of higher education.

In 2004 the rates of doctors and hospital beds per 10,000 population were 68.0 and 115 respectively.

Sakha

The area is 3,103,200 sq. km (1,197,750 sq. miles), making Sakha the largest republic in the Russian Federation; population (2002 census), 949,280. Estimated population, 1 Jan. 2010, 949,300. Capital, Yakutsk (2002 census population, 210,642). The Yakuts were subjugated by the Russians in the 17th century. The territory was constituted an Autonomous Republic on 27 April 1922. The largest ethnic group are Russians, followed by Yakuts, with Ukrainian and Tatar minorities.

Head of the Republic: Yegor Borisov.

Prime Minister: Galina Danchikova.

The principal industries are mining (gold, tin, mica, coal) and livestock-breeding. Silver- and lead-bearing ores and coal are worked. Large diamond fields have been opened up; Sakha produces most of the Russian Federation's output. Timber and food industries are developing. Trapping and breeding of fur-bearing animals (sable, squirrel, silver fox) are an important source of income. Industry accounted for 41.1% of gross regional product in 2003 and agriculture 3.6%.

In 2004 there were 51,900 pupils in 697 pre-school institutions and 168,400 pupils in 692 primary and secondary day schools. There were 43,700 students in eight institutions of higher education.

In 2004 the rates of doctors and hospital beds per 10,000 population were 49.5 and 147 respectively.

Tatarstan

Area, 68,000 sq. km (26,250 sq. miles); population (2002 census), 3,779,265. Estimated population, 1 Jan. 2010, 3,778,500. Capital, Kazan (2002 census population, 1,105,289). From the 10th to the 13th centuries this was the territory of the Volga-Kama Bulgar State; conquered by the Mongols, it became the seat of the Kazan (Tatar) Khans when the Mongol Empire broke up in the 15th century, and in 1552 was conquered again by Russia. On 27 May 1920 it was constituted as an Autonomous Republic. The main ethnic groups are Tatars and Russians, with Chuvash, Ukrainian and Mordovian minorities.

In Oct. 1991 the Supreme Soviet declared independence. At a referendum in March 1992, 61.4% of votes cast were in favour of increased autonomy. A constitution was adopted in April 1992, which proclaims Tatarstan a sovereign state which conducts its relations with the Russian Federation on an equal basis. On 15 Feb. 1994 the Russian and Tatar presidents signed a treaty defining Tatarstan as a state united with Russia on the basis of the constitutions of both. On 26 June 2007 Tatarstan's relationship with Russia was further defined, and its autonomy consolidated with the signing of a treaty between the two governments.

President: Rustam Minnikhanov.

Prime Minister: Ildar Khalikov.

The republic has engineering, oil and chemical, timber, building materials, textiles, clothing and food industries. Industrial production was valued at 252,037m. roubles in 2003 and agricultural output at 43,639m. roubles. Tatarstan is one of the fastest-growing Russian republics.

In 2004 there were 149,900 pupils in 1,982 pre-school institutions and 472,900 pupils in 2,448 primary and secondary day schools. There were 207,100 students in 35 institutions of higher education. There is a branch of the Russian Academy of Sciences with four learned institutions. In 2004 the rates of doctors and hospital beds per 10,000 population were 44.9 and 109 respectively.

Tuva

Area, 170,500 sq. km (65,800 sq. miles); population (2002 census), 305,510. Estimated population, 1 Jan. 2010, 317,100. Capital, Kyzyl (2002 census population, 104,105). Tuva was incorporated in the USSR as an autonomous region on 11 Oct. 1944 and elevated to an Autonomous Republic on 10 Oct. 1961. The largest ethnic group are Tuvans, followed by Russians. Tuva renamed itself the 'Republic of Tuva' in Oct. 1991.

A new constitution was promulgated on 22 Oct. 1993 which adopts the name 'Tyva' for the republic. This constitution provides for a 32-member parliament (Supreme Hural), and a Grand Hural alone empowered to change the constitution, asserts the precedence of Tuvan law and adopts powers to conduct foreign policy. It was approved by 62.2% of votes cast at a referendum on 12 Dec. 1993.

Tuva is well-watered and hydro-electric resources are important. The Tuvans are mainly herdsmen and cattle farmers and there is much good pastoral land. There are deposits of gold, cobalt and asbestos. The main exports are hair, hides and wool. There are mining, woodworking, garment, leather, food and other industries. Industrial production was valued at 1,700m. roubles in 2003 and agricultural output at 1,994m. roubles.

In 2004 there were 14,700 pupils in 217 pre-school institutions and 64,400 pupils in 176 primary and secondary day schools. There were 5,800 students at Tuva State University.

In 2004 the rates of doctors and hospital beds per 10,000 population were 42.7 and 178 respectively.

Udmurtia

Area, 42,100 sq. km (16,250 sq. miles); population (2002 census), 1,570,316. Estimated population, 1 Jan. 2010, 1,526,300. Capital, Izhevsk (2002 census population, 632,140). The Udmurts (formerly known as 'Votyaks') were annexed by the Russians in the 15th and 16th centuries. On 4 Nov. 1920 the Votyak Autonomous Region was constituted (the name was changed to Udmurt in 1932), and on 28 Dec. 1934 was raised to the status of an Autonomous Republic. The main ethnic group are Russians, followed by Udmurts, with Tatar, Ukrainian and Mari minorities. A declaration of sovereignty and the present state title were adopted in Sept. 1990.

A new parliament was established in Dec. 1993 consisting of a 50-member upper house, the Council of Representatives, and a full-time 35-member lower house.

Head of the Republic: Alexander Solovyov.

Prime Minister: Viktor Savelyev.

Heavy industry includes the manufacture of locomotives, machine tools and other engineering products, most of them for the defence industries, as well as timber and building materials. There are also light industries: clothing, leather, furniture and food. Industrial production was valued at 82,405m. roubles in 2004 and agricultural output at 16,662m. roubles.

In 2004 there were 73,900 pupils in 806 pre-school institutions and 185,400 pupils in 849 primary and secondary day schools. There were 73,300 students in eight institutions of higher education.

In 2004 the rates of doctors and hospital beds per 10,000 population were 56.4 and 131 respectively.

Autonomous Districts and Provinces

Chukot

Situated in Magadan region (Far East); area, 737,700 sq. km, population (2010 census), 50,526. Capital, Anadyr. Formed 1930. Population chiefly Russian, also Chukchi, Koryak, Yakut, Even. Minerals are extracted in the north, including gold, tin, mercury and tungsten.

Khanty-Mansi

Situated in Tyumen region (western Siberia); area, 523,100 sq. km, population (2010 census), 1,532,243, chiefly Russians but also Khants and Mansi. Capital, Khanty-Mansiisk. Formed 1930.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

The Twa—hunter-gatherer pygmies—were the first people to inhabit Rwanda. They now comprise 1% of the population. The Hutu were the next group to settle in Rwanda. They arrived at some point between AD 500 and 1100. They were small-scale agriculturalists, led by a king who ruled over clan groups. The final group to migrate to Rwanda was the Tutsi around 1400. Their ownership of cattle and their combat skills allowed them to gain economic and political control of the country. A feudalistic system developed where the Tutsi lent cows to the Hutu in return for labour and military service. At the apex was the Tutsi king, the mwami (pl., abami), who was believed to be of divine origin. The abami consolidated their power by centralizing the monarchy and reducing the power of neighbouring chiefs. Mwami Kigeri IV (reigned 1853–95) established the borders of Rwanda in the 19th century.

The Conference of Berlin in 1885 placed Rwanda under German control. However, no German actually reached the area until 1894 when Count von Götzen became the governor of German East Africa. The Belgians and British had ambitions in the area owing to its strategic position at the juncture of their separate empires. However, by 1910 German rule was accepted.

A consequence of German influence was the arrival of the Catholic Church through the mission of the White Fathers, who established schools and missions from 1899. Germany did not change the political structure of the country but made use of the mwami, Yuhi V (reigned 1896–1931), who accepted German overlordship. The victors of the First World War disrupted this relationship by stripping Germany of all her colonies. Rwanda was occupied by Belgian forces in 1916 and was declared a Belgian mandate in Aug. 1923 by the League of Nations. The Belgians ruled more directly than the Germans, curtailing the mwami's power and favouring the Tutsi minority on more explicitly racial grounds. From 1952 the UN ordered Belgium to integrate Rwandans into the political system. The Belgians continued their policy of favouring the fairer skinned Tutsi and placed them in a position of domination over the Hutu majority. Increasing civil unrest erupted into a civil war by 1959. A state of Ruanda-Urundi was established in 1960, under Belgian trusteeship, following an election. In 1961, while abroad, Mwami Kigeli V was exiled by the Belgians, who refused to allow him to return despite pressure from the UN. On 27 June 1962 the parliament voted to terminate the trusteeship and on 1 July 1962 Rwanda became independent.

Independence

The independent state of Rwanda was first governed by the Parmehutu party (a Hutu party representing the 85% Hutu population), led by Grégoire Kayibanda, but this was not accepted by some Tutsis. An attempted invasion in 1963 by Tutsis who had fled to Uganda and Burundi was repelled. In retaliation over 12,000 Tutsis in Rwanda were massacred by the Hutu. The next massacre in 1972–73 was partly in response to the persecution of Hutus in neighbouring Tutsi-dominated Burundi. An attempt by Kayibanda to revive his waning popularity, the violence instead spurred Maj.-Gen. Juvénal Habyarimana, a senior army commander, to launch a bloodless coup and take over government. In 1975 Habyarimana formed le Mouvement Révolutionnaire National pour le Développement (MRND), and turned Rwanda into a one-party and tightly controlled police state, discriminating against the Tutsi in favour of the Hutu.

In 1990 the Rwandan Patriotic Front (RPF), of between 5,000 and 10,000 Tutsis, invaded Rwanda from Uganda, starting a civil war. A ceasefire was agreed on 29 March 1991 and on 14 July 1992 the Arusha Accords were signed. These allowed other political parties to stand for election and share power.

Many Hutus opposed Arusha. Multi-partyism led to the rise of far-right Hutu power groups who believed that the only solution to Hutu-Tutsi problems was the extermination of the Tutsi. The assassination of the first legitimately elected Hutu president of Burundi (21 Oct. 1993) by Tutsi army officers and the massacre of over 150,000 Hutus in Burundi served to further destabilize Rwanda. The assassination of Habyarimana in a plane crash on 6 April 1994, probably shot down by Hutu extremists, was the first step in a carefully premeditated genocide which killed around 1m. Rwandans in three months and forced over 2m. to flee to neighbouring countries.

Among the victims was the moderate Hutu prime minister, Agathe Uwilingiyimana. Gangs of interahamwe (civilian death squads) roamed the capital, Kigali, killing, looting and raping Tutsis and politically-moderate Hutus. When the RPF, led by Paul Kagame, reached Kigali the killings spread to other parts of the country. The UN sent a peacekeeping force (the United Nations Assistance Mission for Rwanda; UNAMIR) but a lack of resources, an unclear mandate and international apathy made it impotent as the genocide took hold. Eventually France dispatched 2,000 troops on a humanitarian mission on 22 June 1994 to maintain a 'safe zone'. Owing to France's affinity with the French-speaking Hutu former government, this zone served as an escape route for Hutu extremists to flee to Zaïre (now the Democratic Republic of the Congo).

The RPF declared the war over on 17 July 1994 and was quickly recognized as the new government. Genocide trials began in Arusha, Tanzania in Dec. 1996. In Sept. 1998 Jean Kambanda, the former prime minister (April–July 1994), was sentenced to life imprisonment.

Rwanda was destabilized by the presence of Hutu refugee camps on the Zaïre borders. Amongst the 1.1m. refugees were interahamwe who used the camps as bases for attacks on Rwanda. These were broken up by Laurent Kabila in May 1997, before he assumed power in Zaïre (later renamed the Democratic Republic of the Congo).

In April 2000 Paul Kagame (the Tutsi vice president and defence minister) was elected president by parliament, replacing Pasteur Bizimungu, a Hutu who had been appointed by the RPF, in July 1994. Kagame was re-elected president in Aug. 2003 in Rwanda's first democratic elections since the atrocities.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Rwanda is bounded south by Burundi, west by the Democratic Republic of the Congo, north by Uganda and east by Tanzania. A mountainous state of 25,314 sq. km (9,774 sq. miles), its western third drains to Lake Kivu on the border with the Democratic Republic of the Congo and thence to the Congo river, while the rest is drained by the Kagera river into the Nile system.

The population was 7,164,994 at the 1991 census, of whom over 90% were Hutu, 9% Tutsi and 1% Twa (pygmy). Following the genocide of 1994 ethnicity was not enumerated at the 2002 census, when the population was 8,128,553. Population at the 2012 census, 10,515,973; density, 415.4 per sq. km.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 11.61m.

In 2011 the population was 19.2% urban.

Since Jan. 2006 Rwanda has been reorganized into five provinces (intara). It had previously been composed of 12 provinces that were less multiethnic. Among the reasons given for the change were the reduction of ethnic divisions and the suppression of reminders of the 1994 genocide. Areas and populations at the 2012 census were:

Province	Area (in sq. km)	Population (2012 census)
Eastern	9,458	2,595,703
Kigali	730	1,132,686
Northern	3,276	1,726,370
Southern	5,963	2,589,975
Western	5,883	2,471,239

Kigali, the capital, had a population of 1,132,686 in 2012; other towns are Butare, Gisenyi, Gitarama and Ruhengeri.

Kinyarwanda, which is the language of the entire population, along with English and French are the official languages. In 2008 English replaced French as the language of instruction in schools. Swahili is spoken in the commercial centres.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2008 estimates: births, 400,000; deaths, 141,000. Estimated birth rate in 2008 was 41.1 per 1,000 population; estimated death rate, 14.5. Annual population growth rate, 2005–10, 2.8%. Life expectancy at birth during the period 2005–10 was 61.1 years for females and 58.5 for males, up from 24.8 years for females and 21.4 years for males in 1990–95 (at the height of the civil war). Infant mortality, 2010, 44 per 1,000 live births; fertility rate, 2008, 5.4 births per woman.

CLIMATE

Despite the equatorial situation, there is a highland tropical climate. The wet seasons are from Oct. to Dec. and March to May. Highest rainfall occurs in the west, at around 70" (1,770 mm), decreasing to 40–55" (1,020–1,400 mm) in the central uplands and to 30" (760 mm) in the north and east. Kigali, Jan. 67°F (19.4°C), July 70°F (21.1°C). Annual rainfall 40" (1,000 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

Under the 1978 constitution the MRND was the sole political organization.

A new constitution was promulgated in June 1991 permitting multi-party democracy.

The Arusha Agreement of Aug. 1994 provided for a transitional 70-member National Assembly, which began functioning in Nov. 1994. The seats won by the MRNDD (formerly MRND) were taken over by other parties on the grounds that the MRNDD was culpable of genocide.

A referendum was held on 26 May 2003 which approved a draft constitution by 93.4% (turnout was 87%). The new constitution, subsequently approved by the Supreme Court, provides for an 80-member Chamber of Deputies and a 26-member Senate, with the provision that no party may hold more than half of cabinet positions. 53 members of the Chamber of Deputies are directly elected, 24 women are elected by provincial councils, two members are elected by the National Youth Council and one is elected by a disabilities organization.

In 2015 a constitutional amendment reduced the length of presidential terms from seven years to five years and maintained a two-term limit. However, the relevant legislation allowed incumbent president Paul Kagame to be exempted, enabling him to seek a third seven-year term in 2017, potentially followed by two further five-year terms. The proposals won 98% support in a referendum.

National Anthem

'Rwanda Nziza' ('Beautiful Rwanda'); words by F. Murigo, tune by Capt. J.-B. Hashakaimana.

RECENT ELECTIONS

In a popular election on 9 Aug. 2010 Paul Kagame was re-elected president for a seven-year term with 93.1% of the vote. Jean Damascene Ntawukurirayo won 5.1%, Prosper Higiro 1.4% and Alvera Mukabaramba 0.4%. Turnout was 97.5%.

In parliamentary elections held between 16 and 18 Sept. 2013, President Kagame's Rwandan Patriotic Front (RPF) maintained its absolute majority in the Chamber of Deputies by winning 76.2% of the vote. The RPF won 41 of the 53 directly elected seats, the Social Democratic Party (PSD) 7 and the Liberal Party 5. Following the Sept. 2013 election, of the 80 Members of Parliament there were 51 women (63.75%) and 29 men (36.25%). Rwanda remains the only country in the world to have a female majority in parliament (in part as a consequence of the adoption of quotas, which stipulate that at least 24 of the 80 seats must be filled by women).

CURRENT GOVERNMENT

President: Paul Kagame; b. 1957 (RPF; sworn in 22 April 2000 having been acting president since 24 March 2000, and re-elected in Aug. 2003 and Aug. 2010).

CURRENT LEADERS

Paul Kagame

Position

President

Introduction

Paul Kagame was elected president by the transitional National Assembly in April 2000 and democratic elections in 2003 cemented his mandate. He is leader of the ruling Rwandan Patriotic Front (RPF) and the first member of the Tutsi minority to be president since Rwanda gained independence in 1962. Although a leading force in the country, he is a low-key public figure. He has openly criticized the United Nations, arguing it could have done more to avoid the genocide of 1994 when around 1m. Rwandans were killed, and also accused France of complicity. He was re-elected president for another seven-year term by an overwhelming margin in Aug. 2010.

Early Life

Kagame was born in Oct. 1957 in the Gitarama prefecture. Following ethnic violence in Rwanda, his family fled to Uganda in 1960 where he grew up in a refugee camp and then studied at Makerere University in Kampala. In 1979 Kagame joined the National Salvation Front (FRONASA), led by Yoweri Museveni, which took part in the Tanzanian removal of Idi Amin's regime in 1979. In 1980 he became a founding member of Museveni's National Resistance Army (NRA) and fought against the dictatorship of Milton Obote in Uganda. He became head of intelligence of the NRA in 1986 and the following year established the Rwandan Patriotic Front (RPF), with support from Museveni, which launched a guerrilla war against President Juvénal Habyarimana and his Hutu government. In 1993 a peace agreement was signed, but the death of Habyarimana in 1994 triggered the Hutu massacres of the Tutsi. The RPF resumed the civil war and soon gained control over the country. The new government of national unity, formed in July 1994, was led by Pasteur Bizimungu, a Hutu, with Kagame as vice president and defence minister.

Career in Office

Rwanda's involvement in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC; known as Zaïre until 1997) began covertly in 1996 with an agreement with Uganda to oust the Zaïrean president Mobutu Sese Seko. Kagame and Museveni sent troops back into the east of the DRC in 1998 to assist rebel groups against President Laurent Kabila and to eliminate the interahamwe (death squads from the 1994 genocide in Rwanda). In Nov. 1998 Kagame publicly admitted that Rwandan forces were active in the DRC for reasons of national security. However, divisions began to appear between Kagame and Museveni, as the enlargement and reorganization of the Rwandan forces was interpreted as a direct threat by Museveni.

In March 2000 President Bizimungu resigned, claiming that he and the prime minister, Pierre-Celéstine Rwigema, were hounded from office for being Hutus. Elected president by the transitional National Assembly in April 2000, Kagame relinquished the defence ministry to Col. Emmanuel Habyarimana, a Hutu, and promoted Nyamuusa Kayumba, the army chief, to Major-General, a rank only Kagame himself had held previously. Kagame attempted to portray himself as a civilian and neutral president, calling for ethnic peace and reconciliation.

Following the assassination of Laurent Kabila (president of the DRC) in Jan. 2001, his son and successor, Joseph Kabila, met Kagame who accused the DRC of harbouring Hutu militias. Kabila blamed Rwanda for killing more than 3.5m. inhabitants of the DRC and refused to co-operate until Rwandan troops were withdrawn. However, on 30 July 2002 the two nations signed a peace deal in South Africa under which the DRC agreed to disarm and arrest Hutu rebels and Rwanda withdrew its troops from the DRC in Oct. 2002.

Kagame was elected president by a popular democratic vote on 25 Aug. 2003. His win—with 95% of the vote—prompted allegations of irregularities from his main rival, Faustin Twagiramungu, although he accepted the win in Sept. Museveni's attendance at Kagame's inauguration ceremony demonstrated the easing of tensions between the two men. In 2007 Kagame authorized the release of several thousand prisoners accused of genocide. He also awarded a presidential pardon to Pasteur Bizimungu, who had served three years of a 15-year prison sentence for attempting to form a militia and for embezzlement. Parliamentary elections in Sept. 2008 returned the ruling coalition led by Kagame's RPF to power with almost 79% of the vote.

In Nov. 2006 a French investigative judge had accused Kagame of ordering the assassination of President Habyarimana in 1994. Kagame responded by cutting diplomatic links with France. Then, in Aug. 2008, a Rwandan report commissioned by Kagame made a counter-accusation of complicity by French politicians (including former president François Mitterrand) and army officers in the genocide. However, diplomatic ties were eventually restored in Nov. 2009 and French President Nicolas Sarkozy paid an official visit to Rwanda in Feb. 2010. The two leaders met again in Paris in Sept. 2011 in a further bid to restore trust.

From Aug. 2008 fighting in the DRC intensified between the army and the mainly Tutsi insurgents loyal to Laurent Nkunda. Kabila's government had for some time claimed that Kagame was giving Rwandan support to Nkunda. However, in an apparent reversal of Rwandan policy, troops from both countries launched a joint offensive in Jan. 2009 against Nkunda's headquarters in the DRC and the rebel leader was arrested when he fled into Rwanda. Following the operation, relations between Rwanda and the DRC stabilized, but in 2012 there were further allegations of Rwandan support for rebel forces opposed to the Kabila regime, prompting the USA, UK and the Netherlands to suspend aid contributions.

In Nov. 2009 Rwanda was admitted to the Commonwealth despite (like Mozambique) not having had colonial or constitutional ties to the United Kingdom.

In Aug. 2010 Kagame was re-elected as president with another landslide share of the vote, although the opposition claimed that the election was not free and fair. In polling in Sept. 2013 the RPF retained its absolute parliamentary majority. In Oct. 2015 parliament agreed to a constitutional amendment that would allow Kagame to remain in power beyond the end of the constitutionally-specified two-term limit (in 2017). The controversial proposal received overwhelming backing in a referendum in Dec. 2015.

Earlier, in July 2014, Kagame nominated Anastase Murekezi as the new prime minister after dismissing Pierre Damien Habumuremyi.

Anastase Murekezi

Position

Prime Minister

Introduction

Anastase Murekezi, an ethnic Hutu and member of the Social Democratic Party, became prime minister on 24 July 2014. He was previously minister of public service and labour, and is an agricultural engineer by training.

Early Life

Born in 1961, Murekezi read agriculture at the Université Catholique de Louvain in Belgium. In 2004 he was appointed minister of state in charge of industry and investment. The following year he joined the cabinet as minister of agriculture, and from 2008–14 he held the civil service and labour portfolio. During his tenure he faced a parliamentary committee investigating irregularities in ministry-run departments. Nonetheless, President Paul Kagame appointed him premier in July 2014 after dismissing his predecessor in the post, Pierre Damien Habumuremyi, who had served since 2011.

Career in Office

While Kagame publicly gave no reason for sacking Habumuremyi, he appointed Murekezi after stating his desire to revitalize the cabinet. When Murekezi took office, he named five new cabinet ministers although the incumbents of key ministries including defence, foreign affairs, finance and internal security remained unchanged.

In Oct. 2014 Murekezi announced the launch of an Environment and Climate Change Fund (Fonerwa) to support sustainable development, backed by a number of international bilateral development agencies. Meanwhile, his opponents have exerted pressure on him to curb the government's increasingly hard-line approach to its critics.

DEFENCE

In 2013 defence expenditure totalled US$82m. (US$7 per capita), representing 1.1% of GDP.

Army

Strength (2011), 32,000. There were local defence forces of some 2,000 in 2011.

ECONOMY

Agriculture accounted for 32.2% of GDP in 2010, industry 15.0% and services 52.8%.

Overview

Since the 1994 genocide and civil war, Rwanda has registered strong economic growth and macroeconomic stability. Subsistence agriculture dominates, and accounted for 35% of GDP, 80% of employment and 45% of export earnings between 2006 and 2010. The effects of the global financial crisis reduced GDP growth from a peak of 11.2% in 2008 to 6.2% in 2009. The economy has prospered since then, largely driven by the services sector. Annual GDP growth averaged 6.8% between 2010 and 2013.

According to the World Bank, 40% of Rwanda's budget is financed by international aid. The poverty rate declined from 57% in 2005–06 to 46% in 2012–13. An economic development and poverty reduction strategy is aiming to elevate Rwanda into a lower-middle income economy by 2020 through improved infrastructure, rural development, increased productivity and youth employment, and responsible governance. In the World Bank's 2014 Doing Business survey Rwanda ranked as one of the top ten most improved economies. Its ranking for the ease of doing business improved from 139th in 2009 to 32nd in 2014.

Currency

The unit of currency is the Rwanda franc (RWF) notionally of 100 centimes. On 3 Jan. 1995, 500-, 1,000- and 5,000-Rwanda franc notes were replaced by new issues, demonetizing the currency taken abroad by exiles. The currency is not convertible. Foreign exchange reserves were US$312m. in July 2005. Total money supply in Dec. 2003 was 82,305m. Rwanda francs. Inflation was 15.4% in 2008, and more recently 4.2% in 2013 and 1.8% in 2014.

Budget

Budgetary central government revenues in 2011 totalled 982,062m. Rwanda francs (provisional); expenditures totalled 578,363m. Rwanda francs (provisional). Grants accounted for 41.6% of revenue with taxes on goods and services contributing 27.1%; main items of expenditure by economic type were grants (38.1%) and use of goods and services (29.5%).

VAT is 18%.

Performance

Real GDP growth was 24.5% in 1995, following two years of negative growth including a rate of –41.9% in 1994 at the height of the civil war. From 2000–08 growth averaged 8.1%. Real GDP growth was 8.8% in 2012, 4.7% in 2013 and 6.9% in 2014. Total GDP in 2014 was US$7.9bn.

Banking and Finance

The central bank is the National Bank of Rwanda (founded 1960; Governor, John Rwangombwa), the bank of issue since 1964. There are seven commercial banks (Banque de Kigali, Banque de Commerce et de Développement Industriel, Banque Continentale Africaine au Rwanda, Banque à la Confiance d'Or, Banque Commerciale du Rwanda, Caisse Hypothécaire du Rwanda and Compagnie Générale de Banque), one development bank (Rwandan Development Bank) and one credit union system (Rwandan Union of Popular Banks).

A stock exchange opened in Kigali in Jan. 2011.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

The islands of St Kitts (formerly St Christopher) and Nevis were discovered and named by Columbus in 1493. They were settled by Britain in 1623 and 1628, but ownership was disputed with France until 1783. In Feb. 1967 colonial status was replaced by an ‘association’ with Britain, giving the islands full internal self-government. St Kitts and Nevis became fully independent on 19 Sept. 1983. In Oct. 1997 the five-person Nevis legislature voted to end the federation with St Kitts. However, in a referendum held on 10 Aug. 1998 voters rejected independence, only 62% voting for secession when a two-thirds vote in favour was needed. In Sept. 1998 Hurricane Georges caused devastation, leaving 25,000 people homeless, with some 80% of the houses in the islands damaged.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

The two islands of St Kitts and Nevis are situated at the northern end of the Leeward Islands in the eastern Caribbean. Nevis lies 3 km to the southeast of St Kitts. Population, 2011 census, 46,398. In 2011, 32.6% of the population were urban.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 56,000.

CURRENT LEADERS

Timothy Harris

Position

Prime Minister

Introduction

Timothy Harris of the People's Labour Party (PLP) became prime minister in Feb. 2015 at the head of a three-party coalition government, ending the 20-year tenure of Denzil Douglas.

Early Life

Timothy Harris was born on 18 Jan. 1964 in Tabernacle, St Kitts. He graduated in accountancy from the University of the West Indies (UWI) in Barbados in 1988. He then worked for a manufacturing, retail and shipping company before studying for a master's degree in accountancy from UWI, Trinidad from 2000–02.

He was elected as a Labour MP in the 1995 general election, becoming minister of agriculture, lands and housing in Douglas' government. He served in this post for five years, overseeing a programme to decentralize agricultural support services. From 2001 he served as minister of education, labour and social services, and from 2004 as minister of foreign affairs and education. In 2007 he became minister of foreign affairs, international trade, industry and commerce. The following year he ceded the role of foreign minister to Douglas, taking on the finance portfolio in its place.

In Feb. 2010 he was appointed senior minister and minister of international trade, industry, commerce, agriculture, marine resources, consumer affairs and constituency empowerment. In these posts his responsibilities included implementing plans to increase food production and prioritizing competing demands for land use. In Jan. 2013, following a series of policy disagreements with Douglas, Harris was fired from the cabinet. Later that year he founded the PLP and in Sept. 2013 became leader of Team Unity, an alliance of the PLP, the People's Action Movement and the Concerned Citizens' Movement. In Feb. 2015 Team Unity fought a successful general election campaign, promising to boost local economies, provide permanent jobs and increase transparency in government.

Career in Office

Harris took office on 18 Feb. 2015. His challenges have included maintaining an effective coalition government while delivering on pledges to increase prosperity.

ECONOMY

Agriculture accounted for 1.5% of GDP in 2009, industry 20.0% and services 78.5%.

Overview

The economy has been in transition since the government's closure of the sugar industry in 2005, a move encouraged by the European Union and World Trade Organization after years of heavy losses. The most important sources of revenue are service industries, offshore finance and tourism but the country is vulnerable to external shocks, such as natural disasters and shifts in the tourist market.

The economy contracted annually between 2009 and 2012 following falls in tourism receipts and foreign investment in construction activity. An increasing fiscal deficit led to the implementation of revenue reforms, including the introduction of VAT and excise tax changes in 2010, as well as expenditure cuts, including a freeze on public wages. GDP rebounded in 2013 and 2014, with growth of over 6% both years on the back of strong performance in the tourism and construction sectors, plus an inflow of investment via the government's Citizenship-by-Investment (CBI) programme. Debt restructuring lowered public debt levels from 164% of GDP in 2010 to 105% in 2013. Nonetheless, over-reliance on CBI revenues renders long-term recovery uncertain.

Currency

The East Caribbean dollar (XCD) (of 100 cents) is in use. Inflation was 1.0% in 2013 and 0.8% in 2014. In July 2005 foreign exchange reserves were US$75m. Total money supply was EC$200m. in June 2005.

Budget

Central government revenues in 2011 were EC$718.3m. and expenditures EC$594.9m. Taxes accounted for 51.5% of revenues in 2011; compensation of employees accounted for 37.3% of expenditures.

Performance

The economy contracted by 0.9% in 2012, but grew by 6.2% in 2013 and 6.1% in 2014. Total GDP was US$0.9bn. in 2014.

Banking and Finance

The East Caribbean Central Bank (Governor, Timothy Antoine) is located in St Kitts. It is a regional bank that serves the OECS countries. In 2002 there were four domestic commercial banks (Bank of Nevis, Caribbean Banking Corporation, Nevis Co-operative Bank and St Kitts-Nevis-Anguilla National Bank), three foreign banks and one development bank. Nevis has some 9,000 offshore businesses registered.

Foreign debt in 2007 amounted to US$274m.

St Kitts and Nevis is a member of the Eastern Caribbean Securities Exchange, based in Basseterre.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2011 were the equivalent of 5.4 tonnes per capita.

Electricity

Installed capacity was 40,000 kW in 2011. Production in 2011 was an estimated 196m. kWh.

Minerals

In 2007 an estimated 223,000 tonnes of sand and gravel and 131,000 tonnes of crushed stone were produced.

Agriculture

Sugarcane was a mainstay of the agricultural sector until the sugar industry was closed down following the 2005 harvest after years of losses at the state-run sugar company. In 2012 there were an estimated 5,000 ha. of arable land. Most of the farms are small-holdings and there are a number of coconut estates amounting to some 400 ha. under public and private ownership. Production, 2012 estimates (in tonnes): coconuts, 3,012; sweet potatoes, 250; tomatoes, 200; potatoes, 170; watermelons, 170; pineapples, 165. Production of other fresh tropical fruit amounted to an estimated 1,906 tonnes in 2012.

Livestock (2013 estimates): goats, 9,100; sheep, 7,100; pigs, 7,000; cattle, 6,500; chicken, 80,000.

Forestry

The area under forests in 2010 was 11,000 ha., or 42% of the total land area.

Fisheries

The estimated catch in 2012 was 21,802 tonnes.

INDUSTRY

There are three industrial estates on St Kitts and one on Nevis. Export products include electronics and data processing equipment, and garments for the US market. Other small enterprises include food and drink processing, and construction.

Labour

Of 24,778 persons on St Kitts aged 15 or over in 2001, 17,044 were economically active of whom 16,171 were employed and 873 were unemployed. Large numbers of the population living below the poverty line are in work, with unemployment among this group in 2001 standing at just 5.3% on St Kitts and 5.0% on Nevis.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

Imports (c.i.f.), 2008, US$324.8m.; exports (f.o.b.), US$51.2m. The USA is by far the biggest trading partner. In 2008, 60.1% of imports were from the USA and 84.6% of exports went to the USA. Trinidad and Tobago is the second largest import supplier and the United Kingdom the second largest export destination. Main imports include machinery, manufactures, food and precious jewellery. Major exports are machinery, transport equipment, printed matter and beer.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

In 2002 there were about 383 km of roads, of which 42.5% were paved; and 6,900 passenger cars and 2,500 commercial vehicles.

Rail

In 2005 there were 50 km of railway, formerly operated by the sugar industry but now used for tourist purposes.

Civil Aviation

The main airport is the Robert Llewelyn Bradshaw International Airport (just over 3 km from Basseterre). In 2010 there were flights to Antigua, Atlanta, British Virgin Islands, Charlotte, London, Miami, Nevis (Newcastle), New York, Puerto Rico, Sint Maarten and the US Virgin Islands.

Shipping

There is a deep-water port at Bird Rock (Basseterre). In Jan. 2009 there were 200 ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 892,000 GT. Among the 200 vessels registered were 132 general cargo ships and 47 oil tankers. The government maintains a commercial motor boat service between the islands.

Telecommunications

In March 2013 there were an estimated 77,000 mobile phone subscriptions and an estimated 19,200 main (fixed) telephone lines. In 2010, 56.5% of households had internet access.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

Justice is administered by the Supreme Court and by Magistrates' Courts. They have both civil and criminal jurisdiction. St Kitts and Nevis was one of ten countries to sign an agreement in Feb. 2001 establishing a Caribbean Court of Justice to replace the British Privy Council as the highest civil and criminal court. In the meantime the number of signatories has risen to 12. The court was inaugurated at Port of Spain, Trinidad on 16 April 2005 but has not yet been accepted as St Kitts and Nevis' final court of appeal.

The death penalty is in force and was used in 2008 for the first time since 1998.

The population in penal institutions in Aug. 2013 was 330 (equivalent to 611 per 100,000 of national population, the third highest rate in the world).

Education

Adult literacy was 97.8% in 2006. Education is compulsory between the ages of 5 and 16. In 2007 there were 2,360 pupils in pre-primary schools with 357 teaching staff, 6,172 pupils with 372 teaching staff in primary schools and 4,522 pupils with 447 teaching staff in secondary schools.

The main post-secondary institution is the Clarence Fitzroy Bryant College (formerly the St Kitts and Nevis College of Further Education). There are six divisions: Adult and Continuing Education; Arts, Sciences and General Studies; Health Science; Hospitality Studies; Teacher Education; and Technical and Vocational Education and Management Studies.

In 2005 public expenditure on education came to 10.9% of GNI.

Health

In 2005 there were 68 physicians; there were 37.9 registered nurses per 10,000 inhabitants in 2005. In 2008 there were four hospitals and 17 health centres. In 2005 there were 55 hospital beds per 10,000 population.

RELIGION

According to the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life, an estimated 94.6% of the population were Christians in 2010 with 1.6% religiously unaffiliated. Anglicans are the largest denomination.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

There is one site on the UNESCO World Heritage List: Brimstone Hill Fortress National Park (inscribed on the list in 1999), a well-preserved example of 17th and 18th century British military architecture.

Press

In 2008 there was one daily newspaper with a circulation of 2,000. There were also four non-dailies.

Tourism

In 2010 there were 610,084 visitors in total including 514,825 cruise ship passengers and 91,561 staying visitors.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

The island was probably discovered by Columbus in 1502. An unsuccessful attempt to colonize by the British took place in 1605 and again in 1638 when settlers were soon murdered by the Caribs who inhabited the island. France claimed the right of sovereignty and ceded it to the French West India Company in 1642. St Lucia regularly and constantly changed hands between Britain and France, until it was finally ceded to Britain in 1814 by the Treaty of Paris. Since 1924 the island has had representative government. In March 1967 St Lucia gained full control of its internal affairs while Britain remained responsible for foreign affairs and defence. On 22 Feb. 1979 St Lucia achieved independence, opting to remain in the British Commonwealth.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

St Lucia is an island of the Lesser Antilles in the eastern Caribbean between Martinique and St Vincent, with an area of 617 sq. km (238 sq. miles). Population (2010 census, provisional) 166,526; density, 269.9 per sq. km. In 2011 the population was 28.1% urban.

Areas and populations of the districts at the 2010 census (provisional) were:

Districts	Sq. km	Population
Anse-la-Raye	31	6,247
Canaries	16	2,044
Castries	79	65,656
Choiseul	31	6,098

Dr Kenny Anthony

Position

Prime Minister

Introduction

Dr Kenny Anthony returned to office as prime minister on 30 Nov. 2011, having previously served two consecutive terms from 1997 to 2006. After electoral defeat in Dec. 2006, he remained leader of the Saint Lucia Labour Party (SLP) in opposition before returning to power.

Early Life

Kenny Davis Anthony was born on 8 Jan. 1951. He studied law at the University of the West Indies before studying for a PhD at Birmingham University in the United Kingdom.

He joined the SLP on his return to St Lucia, serving as minister of education from 1980–81. A former consultant to the United Nations on its development programmes, Anthony was also a member of the Caribbean Community secretariat from 1995–97 and served as chairman of the Organisation of Eastern Caribbean States. He became SLP leader in 1996 and was sworn in as prime minister for the first time in May 1997.

In his first term Anthony was at the centre of a dispute with the USA and World Trade Organization over alleged preferential treatment for former colonial banana suppliers to the European Union. In Sept. 2002 tropical storm Lili hit the island, devastating the banana crop and exacerbating economic problems. The government sought to diversify the economy, with a focus on increasing investment in tourism. Anthony also oversaw extensive domestic infrastructure development, while education spending rose significantly.

However, he was criticized for St Lucia's high levels of borrowing, with the debt-to-GDP ratio standing at around 63% in 2005. Meanwhile, the crime rate remained stubbornly high, despite the passage of a new criminal code. In July 2003 parliament amended the constitution to replace the oath of allegiance to the British monarch with a pledge of loyalty to the St Lucian people (although Queen Elizabeth II remained head of state).

At the general election of 11 Dec. 2006, the SLP won only six seats against 11 for the United Workers Party, headed by Sir John Compton. Anthony nonetheless retained his own constituency and continued as leader of the SLP. Compton died in Sept. 2007 and was succeeded as prime minister by Stephenson King. During his time in opposition, Anthony visited Cuba, where he thanked the Cuban administration for its aid to St Lucia and other Caribbean nations. In the general election held in Nov. 2011 the SLP were returned to power, taking 11 of the available 17 seats.

Career in Office

With the economy in need of urgent attention, Anthony warned the island's population that 'difficult times lie ahead'. He also faced a strained relationship with Taiwan following St Lucia's establishment of diplomatic ties with China during his previous tenure.

Legislation criminalizing gang membership came into force in June 2014 with the aim of countering a growing threat from gang-associated violence on the island.

ECONOMY

In 2010 agriculture contributed 3.5% of GDP, industry 16.6% and services 79.9%.

Overview

St Lucia, the largest economy in the East Caribbean Currency Union, avoided a recession during the global economic crash although growth faltered. The economy suffers from high unemployment and high public debt—amounting to 77% of GDP—while debt servicing costs constrain opportunities for growth.

Tourism generated 65% of GDP in 2012. Agriculture is also important but the combination of a widespread banana leaf disease between 2009 and 2011 and Hurricane Tomas in 2010 cut production and cost jobs. The other main industry is oil refining, with the country operating a plant with capacity for 10m. bbls per year.

The introduction of a Value Added Tax in Oct. 2012 led to a jump in inflation, which stood around 3% from 2010–12.

Currency

The East Caribbean dollar (XCD) (of 100 cents) is in use. US dollars are also normally accepted. There was inflation of 1.5% in 2013 and 3.5% in 2014.

Budget

The fiscal year ends on 31 March. Revenues were EC$816.0m. in the fiscal year 2008–09 and expenditures EC$959.1m.

VAT of 15% (reduced rate, 8%) was introduced in Oct. 2012.

Performance

The economy shrank by 1.1% in 2012 but then made a very slight recovery, growing by 0.1% in 2013 and 0.5% in 2014. Total GDP in 2014 was US$1.4bn.

Banking and Finance

The East Caribbean Central Bank based in St Kitts and Nevis functions as a central bank. The Governor is Timothy Antoine. There are three domestic banks (Caribbean Banking Corporation, St Lucia Co-operative Bank, East Caribbean Financial Holding Company) and three foreign banks.

External debt totalled US$464m. in 2010 and represented 54.0% of GNI.

St Lucia is a member of the Eastern Caribbean Securities Exchange, based in Basseterre.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2011 were the equivalent of 2.6 tonnes per capita.

Electricity

Installed capacity in 2011 was 76,000 kW. Production in 2011 was 385m. kWh; consumption per capita in 2011 was 2,149 kWh.

Agriculture

In 2007 St Lucia had approximately 3,000 ha. of arable land and 7,000 ha. of permanent crops. Bananas, cocoa, breadfruit and mango are the principal crops, but changes in the world's trading rules and changes in taste are combining to depress the banana trade. Farmers are experimenting with okra, tomatoes and avocados to help make up for the loss. Production, 2003 estimates (in 1,000 tonnes): bananas, 120; mangoes, 28; coconuts, 14; yams, 4; grapefruit and pomelos, 3.

Livestock (2003 estimates): pigs, 15,000; cattle, 12,000; sheep, 12,000; goats, 10,000.

Forestry

In 2010 the area under forests was 47,000 ha. (77% of the total land area).

Fisheries

In 2010 the total catch was 1,844 tonnes.

INDUSTRY

The main areas of activity are clothing, assembly of electronic components, beverages, corrugated cardboard boxes, tourism, lime processing and coconut processing.

Labour

The labour force in 2013 was 96,000 (80,000 in 2003). 74.8% of the population aged 15–64 was economically active in 2013.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

Imports and exports for calendar years in US$1m.:

	2003	2004	2005	2006
Imports c.i.f.	407.7	421.6	485.8	592.4
Exports f.o.b.	62.5	79.8	64.2	93.7

Main imports in 2006: machinery and transport equipment, 25.8%; food and live animals, 15.9%; petroleum and petroleum products, 12.1%; chemicals and related products, 6.9%. Main exports, 2006: petroleum and petroleum products, 21.7%; bananas, 19.0%; machinery and transport equipment, 18.2%; beer, 14.0%. Main import suppliers, 2006: USA, 39.2%; Trinidad and Tobago, 16.9%; UK, 6.9%; Japan, 6.3%. Main export markets, 2006: Trinidad and Tobago, 30.1%; UK, 20.7%; USA, 20.6%; Barbados, 6.6%.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

The island had about 1,210 km of roads in 2002, of which 150 km were main roads and a further 150 km secondary roads. Passenger cars numbered 13,100 in 2002.

Civil Aviation

There are two international airports: Hewanorra International (near Vieux-Fort) and George F. L. Charles (near Castries). In 2009 Hewanorra handled 513,959 passengers (483,632 in 2008) and George F. L. Charles—which handles inter-Caribbean flights—309,132 passengers (358,313 in 2008).

Shipping

There are two ports, Castries and Vieux Fort.

Telecommunications

Fixed telephone lines numbered 36,800 in 2012 (203.7 per 1,000 persons) and there were 216,500 mobile phone subscriptions in 2011 (or 1,207.8 per 1,000 inhabitants). Fixed internet subscriptions totalled 21,700 in 2011. As of 2013 there were 59,600 wireless broadband subscriptions (326.8 per 1,000 inhabitants).

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The island is divided into two judicial districts, and there are nine magistrates' courts. Appeals lie to the Eastern Caribbean Supreme Court of Appeal. St Lucia was one of ten countries to sign an agreement in Feb. 2001 establishing a Caribbean Court of Justice to replace the British Privy Council as the highest civil and criminal court. In the meantime the number of signatories has risen to 12. The court was inaugurated at Port of Spain, Trinidad on 16 April 2005. It has not yet replaced the Privy Council as St Lucia's final court of appeal.

The population in penal institutions in Dec. 2010 was 551 (315 per 100,000 of national population). The International Centre for Prison Studies estimated in 2014 that 59.0% of prisoners had yet to receive a trial.

Education

Primary education is free and compulsory. In 2008–09 there were 1,000 teachers for 20,000 pupils at primary school level; and 16,000 pupils and an estimated 1,000 teachers at secondary level. There is a community college. The adult literacy rate was 90.1% in 2003 (89.5% among males and 90.6% among females).

In 2006 public expenditure on education came to 6.9% of GNI and 19.1% of total government spending.

Health

In 2002 there were five hospitals (with 305 beds) and 35 health centres. There were 70 physicians, seven dentists and 302 nurses.

RELIGION

According to estimates by the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life, 91.1% of the population in 2010 was Christian and 6.0% had no religious affiliation. In Feb. 2014 there was one cardinal.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

There is one UNESCO World Heritage site in St Lucia: Pitons Management Area (inscribed on the list in 2004). The site near the town of Soufrière includes the Pitons, two volcanic spires rising side by side from the sea, linked by the Piton Mitan ridge.

Press

There are no daily newspapers. In 2008 there were six paid-for non-daily newspapers: the thrice-weekly The Voice and The Star; and the weekly The Mirror, The Crusader, The Vanguard and One Caribbean.

Tourism

In 2010 there were 305,937 tourist arrivals by air, up from 278,491 in 2009. St Lucia received 670,043 cruise ship visitors in 2010 (when there were 380 cruise ship calls), down from 699,306 in 2009. There were 7,613 other same-day visitors in 2010.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

St Vincent was discovered by Columbus on 22 Jan. (St Vincent's Day) 1498. British and French settlers occupied parts of the islands after 1627. In 1773 the Caribs recognized British sovereignty and agreed to a division of territory between themselves and the British. Resentful of British rule, the Caribs rebelled in 1795, aided by the French, but the revolt was subdued within a year. On 27 Oct. 1969 St Vincent became an Associated State with the UK responsible for foreign policy and defence. On 27 Oct. 1979 the colony gained full independence as St Vincent and the Grenadines.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

St Vincent is an island of the Lesser Antilles, situated in the eastern Caribbean between St Lucia and Grenada, from which latter it is separated by a chain of small islands known as the Grenadines. The total area of 389 sq. km (150 sq. miles) comprises the island of St Vincent itself (345 sq. km) and those of the Grenadines attached to it, of which the largest are Bequia, Mustique, Canouan, Mayreau and Union.

The population at the 2012 census was 109,991 (provisional), of whom 99,757 lived on St Vincent; density, 283 per sq. km. In 2011, 49.8% of the population lived in urban areas.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 109,000.

The capital, Kingstown, had 26,721 inhabitants in June 2012 (provisional, including suburbs). The population is mainly of Black (72.8% in 2001) and mixed (20.0%) origin, with small White, Asian and American minorities.

English is the official language, although French patois is widely spoken.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

Births, 2008 estimate, 1,900; deaths, 800. 2008 estimated rates (per 1,000 population): births, 17.6; deaths, 7.5. Infant mortality, 2010, 19 per 1,000 live births. Life expectancy, 2013, was 70.4 years for males and 74.7 years for females. Annual population growth rate, 2000–08, 0.1%; fertility rate, 2008, 2.1 births per woman.

CLIMATE

The climate is tropical marine, with northeast trades predominating and rainfall ranging from 150" (3,750 mm) a year in the mountains to 60" (1,500 mm) on the southeast coast. The rainy season is from June to Dec., and temperatures are equable throughout the year.

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

The head of state is Queen Elizabeth II, represented by a Governor-General. Parliament is unicameral with a 23-member House of Assembly consisting of 15 members directly elected for a five-year term from single-member constituencies, six senators appointed by the Governor-General (four on the advice of the Prime Minister and two on the advice of the Leader of the Opposition) and two ex officio members.

National Anthem

'St Vincent, land so beautiful'; words by Phyllis Punnett, tune by J. B. Miguel.

RECENT ELECTIONS

At the elections to the House of Assembly on 9 Dec. 2015 the ruling Unity Labour Party (ULP, social democratic) won 8 of the 15 elected seats with 52.3% of the vote, against 7 (47.4%) for the opposition New Democratic Party (NDP, conservative).

CURRENT GOVERNMENT

Governor-General: Sir Frederick Ballantyne (since 2 Sept. 2002).

In March 2016 the government comprised:

Prime Minister, and Minister of Finance, Grenadine Affairs, Legal Affairs, National Security and Public Service: Dr Ralph E. Gonsalves; b. 1946 (ULP; sworn in 29 March 2001 and re-elected in Dec. 2005, Dec. 2010 and Dec. 2015).

CURRENT LEADERS

Dr Ralph E. Gonsalves

Position

Prime Minister

Introduction

Dr Ralph E. Gonsalves became prime minister in 2001 after his Unity Labour Party (ULP) won an election brought forward from 2003 following anti-government protests in 2000. He won further terms in 2005, 2010 and 2015.

Early Life

'Comrade Ralph' was born in 1946. He studied at the University of the West Indies in Jamaica, gaining a PhD in political science. He later graduated in law from the University of the West Indies in Barbados, before returning home. In 1982 he founded the left-wing Movement for National Unity, which in 1994 amalgamated with the St Vincent Labour Party to form the ULP. Gonsalves succeeded the ULP's first leader, Vincent Beache, in 1998 and led the party to electoral victory in 2001, ending 15 years of New Democratic Party rule.

Career in Office

Gonsalves has sought to tackle the problems of money laundering, gun violence and drug-related crime. In June 2003 St Vincent and Grenadines was removed from a list of uncooperative countries in the fight against money laundering throughout the Caribbean islands.

The country's economy is reliant on the banana trade and the government continues to pay large subsidies to farmers. However, a decline in banana prices and demand has led to some diversification. In June 2004 Gonsalves announced the launch of National Investments Promotions Incorporated to attract investment and boost exports, and the tourism sector has seen significant growth.

Gonsalves has maintained close ties with Taiwan and Cuba. In May 2005 Taiwan made a gift of computer equipment to his government to enhance efficiency. It also helped to build facilities for the 2007 Cricket World Cup. In Jan. 2005 Gonsalves met with Fidel Castro to announce that new diplomatic missions would be established in their respective countries. Castro promised Cuban assistance to Gonsalves' campaign to increase national literacy rates.

Feb. 2005 saw the launch of the World Bank-assisted HIV/AIDS prevention and control project, with the St Vincent government expected to invest at least US$1.7m. over five years. In April 2005 Gonsalves signed agreements with St Lucia and Dominica to introduce measures to combat climate change in the coastal areas of the three Windward Islands (with substantial funding from the USA and Japan). In May 2005 his government ratified the Kyoto protocol.

In parliamentary elections in Dec. 2005 the ULP retained the 12 seats (of 15) won in 2001. Gonsalves was sworn in for a second term and took over the national security portfolio. In May 2007 his government introduced VAT to increase public revenue (with a reduced rate for hotel accommodation to help protect the tourist industry). Plans for a new constitution and the establishment of a republic, for which Gonsalves campaigned for acceptance, were rejected by 55% of voters in a referendum in Nov. 2009. The ULP only narrowly retained its parliamentary majority in elections in Dec. 2010 and Dec. 2015, taking eight seats on both occasions, but the party's victories gave Gonsalves a third and fourth consecutive term as premier.

In 2008 diplomatic relations were established with Iran.

ECONOMY

Agriculture accounted for 6.9% of GDP in 2009, industry 18.9% and services 74.2%.

Overview

St Vincent and the Grenadines is a lower-middle income country with a relatively underdeveloped economy. It is heavily dependent on agriculture, especially banana production. This enjoyed preferential access to EU markets until 2007 and still accounts for around a third of export earnings.

Economic growth has traditionally fluctuated with agricultural output and world market prices. Annual growth averaged 5.8% from 2004–08, supported by construction and public sector activity. However, the global slowdown then led to reduced levels of tourism and foreign direct investment. Nonetheless, the economy returned to growth in the period 2011–14, averaging 1.2% per year.

The government has encouraged diversification into tourism, financial services and call centres. It is hoped that the country's first international airport, scheduled to open in the course of 2016, will also boost growth in the medium to long term.

Currency

The currency in use is the East Caribbean dollar (XCD). Inflation was 0.8% in 2013 and 0.2% in 2014. Foreign exchange reserves were US$66m. in July 2005. Total money supply was EC$319m. in June 2005.

Budget

In 2009 revenues totalled EC$522.5m. and expenditures EC$571.5m.

VAT is 15% (reduced rate, 10%).

Performance

The economy grew by 1.3% in 2012 and 2.3% in 2013, but then shrank by 0.2% in 2014. In 2014 total GDP was US$0.7bn.

Banking and Finance

The East Caribbean Central Bank is the bank of issue. The Governor is Timothy Antoine. There are branches of Barclays Bank PLC, the Caribbean Banking Corporation, FirstCaribbean International, the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce and the Bank of Nova Scotia. Locally-owned banks: First St Vincent Bank, Owens Bank, New Bank, the National Commercial Bank and St Vincent Co-operative Bank. The 'offshore' sector numbered over 11,000 organizations in 2001.

Foreign debt was US$253m. in 2007.

St Vincent and the Grenadines is a member of the Eastern Caribbean Securities Exchange, based in Basseterre.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Agriculture

In 2007 the agricultural population was an estimated 23,000, of which 11,000 were economically active. There were an estimated 7,000 ha. of arable land and 5,000 ha. of permanent crops in 2007. The sugar industry was closed down in 1985 although some sugarcane is grown for rum production. Production (2003, in 1,000 tonnes): bananas, 50; coconuts, 3; copra, 2; maize, 2; oranges, 2; plantains, 2; sugarcane, 2; sweet potatoes, 2; yams, 2.

Livestock (2003, in 1,000): sheep, 12; pigs, 9; goats, 7; cattle, 5.

Forestry

Forests covered 27,000 ha. in 2010, or 68% of the land area.

Fisheries

Total catch, 2009, 4,058 tonnes (all from sea fishing).

INDUSTRY

Industries include assembly of electronic equipment, manufacture of garments, electrical products, animal feeds and flour, corrugated galvanized sheets, exhaust systems, industrial gases, concrete blocks, plastics, soft drinks, beer and rum, wood products and furniture, and processing of milk, fruit juices and food items.

Labour

The labour force in 2013 was 55,000 (50,000 in 2003). 72.2% of the population aged 15–64 was economically active in 2013.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

Imports (c.i.f.) in 2010 totalled US$379.5m. and exports (f.o.b.) US$41.5m. Principal imports are basic manufactures, machinery and transport equipment, and food products. Principal exports are bananas, packaged flour and packaged rice. Main import suppliers, 2005: USA, 33.3%; Trinidad and Tobago, 23.6%; UK, 9.4%. Main export markets, 2005: UK, 26.8%; Barbados, 12.8%; Trinidad and Tobago, 12.3%.

Joshua handled 273,000 passengers; 29,000 aircraft passed through or landed. A new airport is under construction at Argyle and is scheduled to open during 2016.

Shipping

In Jan. 2009 there were 580 ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 5.10m. GT. Among the 580 vessels registered were 413 general cargo ships, 80 bulk carriers and 31 passenger ships.

Telecommunications

In 2013 there were 125,400 mobile phone subscriptions (1,146.3 for every 1,000 inhabitants) and 19,100 fixed telephone lines. In the same year an estimated 52.0% of the population were internet users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

Law is based on UK common law as exercised by the Eastern Caribbean Supreme Court on St Lucia. Final appeal lies to the UK Privy Council. St Vincent and the Grenadines was one of 12 countries to sign an agreement establishing a Caribbean Court of Justice to replace the British Privy Council as the highest civil and criminal court. The court was inaugurated at Port of Spain, Trinidad on 16 April 2005 but has yet to be accepted as the final court of appeal for St Vincent and the Grenadines. Strength of police force (2009), 750.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Polynesians settled in the Samoan group of islands in the southern Pacific from about 1000 BC. Although probably sighted by the Dutch in 1722, the first European visitor was French in 1768. Treaties were signed between the Chiefs and European nations in 1838–39. Continuing strife among the chiefs was compounded by British, German and US rivalry for influence. In the Treaty of Berlin 1889 the three powers agreed to Western Samoa's independence and neutrality. When unrest continued, the treaty was annulled and Western Samoa became a German protectorate until in 1914 it was occupied by a New Zealand expeditionary force. The island was administered by New Zealand from 1920 to 1961. On 1 Jan. 1962 Western Samoa gained independence. In July 1997 the country renamed itself the Independent State of Samoa.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Samoa lies between 13° and 15° S. lat. and 171° and 173° W. long. It comprises the two large islands of Savai'i and Upolu, the small islands of Manono and Apolima, and several uninhabited islets lying off the coast. The total land area is 2,785 sq. km (1,075 sq. miles), of which 1,694 sq. km (654 sq. miles) are in Savai'i and 1,091 sq. km (421 sq. miles) in Upolu (including Manono and Apolima). The islands are of volcanic origin, and the coasts are surrounded by coral reefs. Rugged mountain ranges form the core of both main islands. The large area laid waste by lava-flows in Savai'i is a primary cause of that island supporting less than one-third of the population of the islands despite its greater size than Upolu.

The population was 187,820 at the 2011 census; density, 67 per sq. km. The population at the 2011 census was 143,418 in Upolu (including Manono and Apolima) and 44,402 in Savai'i. The capital and chief port is Apia in Upolu (population 36,735 in 2011). In 2011, 20.1% of the population lived in urban areas.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 193,000.

The official languages are Samoan and English.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2006: births, 4,935; deaths, 728. Rates, 2006 (per 1,000 population): births, 27.3; deaths, 4.0. Expectation of life in 2007 was 68.4 years for males and 74.7 for females. Annual population growth rate, 2001–06, was 0.5%. Infant mortality, 2010, 17 per 1,000 live births; fertility rate, 2006, 4.2 births per woman.

CLIMATE

A tropical marine climate, with cooler conditions from May to Nov. and a rainy season from Dec. to April. The rainfall is unevenly distributed, with south and east coasts having the greater quantities. Average annual rainfall is about 100" (2,500 mm) in the drier areas. Apia, Jan. 80°F (26.7°C), July 78°F (25.6°C). Annual rainfall 112" (2,800 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

HH Malietoa Tanumafili II, who was Head of State for life, died on 11 May 2007. The Head of State is henceforth elected by the Legislative Assembly and holds office for five-year terms.

The executive power is vested in the Head of State, who swears in the Prime Minister (who is elected by the Legislative Assembly) and, on the Prime Minister's advice, the Ministers to form the Cabinet. The Constitution also provides for a Council of Deputies of three members, of whom the chairman is the Deputy Head of State.

The Legislative Assembly contains 50 members serving five-year terms. 49 are directly elected (with 47 seats reserved for ethnic Samoans and two open to members of other communities) and a requirement that 10% of MPs are women meant that in March 2016 one extra woman was awarded a seat.

National Anthem

'Samoa, tula'i ma sisi ia laulu'a ('Samoa, Arise and Raise your Banner'); words and tune by S. I. Kuresa.

RECENT ELECTIONS

In elections on 4 March 2016 the Human Rights Protection Party (HRPP) won 44 seats against two for the Tautua Samoa Party. Independents won three seats.

Tuitua Tupua Tamasese Efi was elected head of state unanimously by the Legislative Assembly on 16 June 2007. He was re-elected unopposed for a second term in July 2012.

CURRENT GOVERNMENT

Head of State: Tuitua Tupua Tamasese Efi; b. 1938 (in office since 20 June 2007).

In March 2016 the cabinet was composed as follows:

Prime Minister, and Minister of Foreign Affairs and Trade: Tuila'epa Sailele Malielegaoi; b. 1945 (Human Rights Protection Party; sworn in 23 Nov. 1998, and re-elected in March 2001, March 2006, March 2011 and March 2016).

CURRENT LEADERS

Tuila'epa Sailele Malielegaoi

Position

Prime Minister

Introduction

Tuila'epa Sailele Malielegaoi became prime minister in Nov. 1998 and won further terms in March 2001, March 2006, March 2011 and March 2016. He is leader of the Human Rights Protection Party (HRPP), the traditional ruling party of Samoa since 1982.

Early Life

Tuila'epa Sailele Malielegaoi was born on 14 April 1945 in Lepa, Samoa. He was educated in Samoa and at New Zealand's Auckland University, graduating with a master's degree (the first Samoan to do so) in commerce in 1969.

In 1978 he moved to Brussels to work for the European Economic Community. He entered Samoa's parliament two years later while working as a partner in the accounting firm Coopers and Lybrand. He was elected to the premiership after former prime minister Tofilau Eti Alesana retired in 1998.

Career in Office

Malielegaoi has aimed to diversify an economy dependent on fishing and agriculture and susceptible to natural disasters, focusing particularly on the tourism industry. In Aug. 2004 his government introduced internet access to assist economic development.

Malielegaoi has also been keen to promote education in Samoa. There is a scholarship scheme offering study opportunities in New Zealand, Australia and Fiji, and in Jan. 2003 a new inter-denominational Christian secondary school was opened. The police and health sectors have also received increased funding. In Jan. 2004 parliament voted to abolish the death penalty and in the same year Australia provided $A7m. to fund training of Samoan security forces.

In foreign relations, Malielegaoi has pursued close relations with China. China agreed to help build an aquatic centre in Samoa for the 2007 South Pacific Games and has been aiding the construction of new buildings for the Samoan parliament and Justice Department. Japan has also invested in Samoa, providing funding for education and vocational training and for land redevelopment. In 2004 Samoa hosted the 35th Pacific Forum, which concentrated on regional economic and political co-operation and the Pacific-wide campaign to tackle HIV and AIDS.

Malielegaoi was re-elected for a third term when his Human Rights Protection Party won the March 2006 election. In May 2007 King Malietoa Tanumafili II died after 45 years on the throne, having been appointed king for life at independence in 1962. Under the constitution, his successor, Tuiatua Tupua Tamasese Efi, was elected for a five-year term by the Legislative Assembly in June 2007 (and re-elected unopposed in July 2012).

Opposition to controversial road traffic legislation by Malielegaoi (changing the driving side from right to left), which took effect in Sept. 2009, had earlier led to defections from the HRPP and to the formation in 2008 of two new political parties—the Tautua Samoa Party and the People's Party. In elections in March 2011 the HRRP won a landslide victory, heralding a fourth term for the premier.

At the end of 2011 Samoa crossed westward over the international date line for trading reasons (to align with Australia and New Zealand) and effectively erased a day from its calendar. In May 2012 Samoa acceded to the World Trade Organization as its 155th member, and in June that year the country celebrated 50 years of independence from New Zealand.

In March 2016 Malielegaoi was sworn in to a fifth term following the victory of the HRRP at elections.

ECONOMY

Agriculture accounted for 9.7% of GDP in 2010, industry 28.1% and services 62.2%.

Overview

The economy is heavily dependent on agriculture (principally coconuts and its by-products, plus coffee) and fishing, which annually account for 90% of exports and employ two-thirds of the labour force. As a result, Samoa is vulnerable to climate shocks.

Efforts to diversify the economy have been broadly successful. Tourism is a growing sector (contributing around 25% of GDP annually) and growth in visitor numbers has helped reverse economic downturns that followed an earthquake in 2009 and Cyclone Evan in Dec. 2012. Samoa attracted a record 139,000 visitors in 2015 when it hosted the Commonwealth Youth Games. Meanwhile, deregulation has spurred growth in the financial sector and light manufacturing has attracted foreign direct investment.

Currency

The unit of currency is the tala (WST) of 100 sene. There was inflation of 0.6% in 2013, but then deflation of 0.4% in 2014. Foreign exchange reserves were US$94m. in July 2005. Total money supply was 133m. tala in June 2005.

Budget

The fiscal year begins on 1 July. For 2008–09 revenue was SA$492.0m. (tax revenue, 66.0%); expenditure, SA$551.0m. (current expenditure, 64.7%).

VAT is 12.5%.

Performance

The economy grew by 1.2% in 2012, but shrank by 1.1% in 2013. It then recovered with growth of 1.9% in 2014. Total GDP in 2014 was US$0.8bn.

Banking and Finance

The Central Bank of Samoa (founded 1984) is the bank of issue. The Governor is Atalina Enari. There is one development bank. Commercial banks include: ANZ, Industrial Bank, International Business Bank Corporation, National Bank of Samoa, Samoa Commercial Bank and Westpac Bank Samoa.

External debt totalled US$308m. in 2010 and represented 56.6% of GNI.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Samoa's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2011 were the equivalent of 0.8 tonnes per capita.

Electricity

Installed capacity in 2011 was estimated at 42,000 kW. Production was 114m. kWh. in 2011 and consumption per capita 608 kWh.

Agriculture

In 2002 there were 60,000 ha. of arable land and 69,000 ha. of permanent cropland. The main products (2002, in 1,000 tonnes) are coconuts (140), bananas (22), taro (17), copra (11) and pineapples (5).

Livestock (2003 estimates): pigs, 201,000; cattle, 29,000; asses, 7,000.

Forestry

Forests covered 0.17m. ha. (60% of the land area) in 2010. Timber production was 76,000 cu. metres in 2011.

Fisheries

Fish landings in 2009 totalled 13,279 tonnes.

INDUSTRY

Some industrial activity is being developed associated with agricultural products and forestry.

Labour

In 2012 there were 34,530 employed persons (21,787 males and 12,743 females). The unemployment rate in 2012 was 8.7%.

INTERNATIONAL TRADEImports and Exports

In 2005 imports were valued at 647m. tala and exports at 236m. tala. Main imports are machinery and transport equipment, foodstuffs and basic manufactures. Principal exports are coconuts, palm oil, taro and taamu, coffee and beer. New Zealand is the principal import source, accounting for 39.2% of imports in 2004. Australia was the largest export market in 2004, accounting for 71.5% of exports. Australia is the second biggest supplier of imports and the USA the second biggest export market.

COMMUNICATIONSRoads

In 2002 the road network covered 790 km, of which 235 km were main roads. In 2005 there were 5,920 passenger cars plus 4,600 lorries and vans in use.

Civil Aviation

There is an international airport at Apia (Faleolo), which handled 321,973 passengers and 1,175 tonnes of freight in 2009. The national carrier is Virgin Samoa, known until 2011 as Polynesian Blue. In 2007 it operated domestic services and international flights to Auckland, Brisbane and Sydney.

Shipping

In Jan. 2009 there were four ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 9,000 GT.

Telecommunications

There are three radio communication stations at Apia. Radio telephone service connects Samoa with American Samoa, Fiji, New Zealand, Australia, Canada, USA and UK. In 2008 there were 28,800 main (fixed) telephone lines; mobile phone subscribers numbered 124,000 in 2008 (69.3 per 100 persons). There were 9,000 internet users in 2008.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONSJustice

The population in penal institutions in 2012 was approximately 430 (228 per 100,000 of national population). The death penalty, not used in more than 50 years, was abolished in 2004.

Education

There were 30,000 pupils at primary schools in 2008–09 with 1,000 teaching staff and 25,000 pupils at secondary schools with 1,000 teaching staff. The University of the South Pacific has a School of Agriculture in Samoa, at Apia. A National University was established in 1984. In 2006 it had 2,298 students and 151 academic staff. There is also a Polytechnic Institute that provides mainly vocational and training courses.

The adult literacy in 2009 was estimated at 98.8%.

In 2008 public expenditure on education came to 5.7% of GDP and 13.4% of total government spending.

Health

In 2002 there were 33 general hospitals (with 320 beds), one private hospital, 11 district hospitals and 12 primary health care centres. In 2002 there were 43 physicians, six dentists, 333 nurses and 13 midwives.

RELIGION

According to the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life, an estimated 96.8% of the population were Christians in 2010 with 2.5% having no religious affiliation.

CULTUREPress

There are two dailies, plus a weekly, a fortnightly and a monthly. The most widely read newspaper is the independent Samoa Observer.

Tourism

In 2014 there were 131,795 visitor arrivals (124,673 in 2013).

SAN MARINO

Repubblica di San Marino
(Republic of San Marino)

Capital: San Marino

Population estimate, 2015: 32,000

GDP per capita, 2014: US$58,393

Internet domain extension: .sm

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

San Marino is a small republic situated on the Adriatic side of central Italy. According to tradition, St Marinus and a group of Christians settled there to escape persecution. By the 12th century San Marino had developed into a commune ruled by its own statutes and consul. Unsuccessful attempts were made to annex the republic to the papal states in the 18th century and when Napoleon invaded Italy in 1797 he respected the rights of the republic and even offered to extend its territories. In 1815 the Congress of Vienna recognized the independence of the republic. On 22 March 1862 San Marino concluded a treaty of friendship and co-operation, including a de facto customs union, with Italy, thus preserving its independence although it is completely surrounded by Italian territory.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

San Marino is a land-locked state in central Italy, 20 km from the Adriatic. Area is 61.19 sq. km (23.6 sq. miles) and the population (June 2012), 32,368; population density, 529.0 per sq. km. At July 2010, 12,722 citizens lived abroad.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 32,000.

In 2010, 94.1% of the population were urban. The capital, San Marino, has 4,236 inhabitants (June 2012); the largest town is Serravalle (10,540 in June 2012), an industrial centre in the north. The official language is Italian.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

Births registered in 2009, 306; deaths, 233; marriages, 238; divorces, 63. Birth rate, 2009 (per 1,000 population), 9.3; death rate, 6.9. Annual population growth rate, 2003–13, 0.9%; fertility rate, 2013, 1.5 births per woman; infant mortality rate, 2010, two per 1,000 live births (one of the lowest rates in the world).

CLIMATE

Temperate climate with cold, dry winters and warm summers.

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

The legislative power is vested in the Great and General Council of 60 members elected every five years by popular vote, two of whom are appointed every six months to act as Captains Regent, who are the heads of state.

Executive power is exercised by the ten-member Congress of State, presided over by the Captains Regent. The Council of Twelve, also presided over by the Captains Regent, is appointed by the Great and General Council to perform administrative functions.

National Anthem

No words, tune monastic, transcribed by F. Consolo.

RECENT ELECTIONS

In parliamentary elections on 11 Nov. 2012 the San Marino Common Good coalition won 35 of 60 seats with 50.7% of the vote (Sammarinese Christian Democratic Party–We Sammarinese 29.5% and 21 seats, Party of Socialists and Democrats 14.3% and 10, Popular Alliance 6.7% and 4); the Agreement for the Country coalition won 12 seats with 22.3% (Socialist Party 12.1% and 7, Union for the Republic 8.3% and 5); Active Citizenry won 9 seats with 16.1% (United Left 9.1% and 5, Civic10 6.7% and 4); Civic Movement R.E.T.E. won 4 seats with 6.3%. Turnout was 63.9%.

CURRENT GOVERNMENT

Captains Regent: Gian Nicola Berti (since 1 April 2016); Massimo Andrea Ugolini (since 1 April 2016).

In March 2016 the Congress of State comprised:

Minister of Foreign and Political Affairs: Pasquale Valentini. Internal Affairs, Public Administration and Justice: Gian Carlo Venturini. Finance, Budget and Post: Giancarlo Capicchioni. Education, Culture and the University, Scientific Research, Social Affairs and Equal Opportunities: Giuseppe Maria Morganti. Health, Social Security, Family, Welfare and Economic Planning: Francesco Mussoni. Territory, Environment, Agriculture, Telecommunications, International Economic Co-operation and Civil Protection: Antonella Mularoni. Labour, Co-operation and Information: Iro Belluzzi. Industry, Trade, Commerce, Transportation and Research: Marco Arzilli. Tourism and Sport: Teodoro Lonfernini.

CURRENT LEADERS

Gian Nicola Berti

Position

Captain Regent

Introduction

Gian Nicola Berti, a lawyer and politician, was sworn in for his first term as a Captain Regent on 1 April 2016.

Early Life

Gian Nicola Berti was born in San Marino on 9 Aug. 1960. He graduated in law from the University of Urbino, Italy in 1986 and, having gained further legal qualifications, started work as a solicitor in 1988. He has served on the executive council of San Marino's Order of Lawyers and Notaries and was first elected to San Marino's Great and General Council in 2008, representing the centrist We Sammarinese. The party formed part of the centre-right Pact for San Marino coalition. Between 2008 and 2011 Berti served on the government committees for health, welfare, sport and the environment.

Career in Office

Inaugurated as joint head of state in April 2016, Berti has served on the commissions of justice, internal affairs, education and cultural heritage since 2012 when We Sammarinese joined forces with the Sammarinese Christian Democratic Party to form part of the ruling coalition known as San Marino Common Good.

Massimo Andrea Ugolini

Position

Captain Regent

Introduction

Massimo Andrea Ugolini, an accountant and politician, was sworn in for his first term as a Captain Regent on 1 April 2016.

Early Life

Massimo Ugolini was born in San Marino on 26 July 1978. He received a diploma in accountancy from the Rino Molari Technical Institute near Rimini, Italy in 1998. He worked for a software development company before joining the Bank of San Marino in 2007, where he has continued to work in the foreign transfers department. He was first elected to the Great and General Council in 2008, representing the centre-right Sammarinese Christian Democratic Party (PDCS).

Career in Office

Inaugurated as joint head of state in April 2016, Ugolini is one of 21 PDCS and We Sammarinese representatives elected to the 60-seat Great and General Council in Dec. 2012, and is also part of the ruling San Marino Common Good coalition. He is a member of the Council of Twelve (Consiglio dei XII, which serves as the supreme tribunal of the republic) and has sat on government committees covering finance, constitutional matters and foreign affairs.

DEFENCE

Military service is not obligatory, but all citizens between the ages of 16 and 55 can be called upon to defend the State. They may also serve as volunteers in the Military Corps. There is a military Gendarmerie.

ECONOMY

Overview

The economy is integrated with that of Italy via a monetary and customs union, close trade links and labour mobility. It relies principally on manufacturing, financial services and tourism. The country attracts around 3.2m. visitors a year.

The global financial crisis, coupled with pressure to improve banking transparency, resulted in an economic contraction of nearly 30% between 2008 and 2014. An Italian amnesty on tax evasion in 2009–10 prompted an outflow of bank deposits. Whilst manufacturing and commercial activity improved moderately from early 2011, unemployment increased from 5% to 9% in the period 2009–14.

The financial sector has undergone deep restructuring and attempts to normalize international links since 2010 have proved fruitful. The government has signed Tax Information Exchange Agreements with many leading countries to promote international co-operation, and a monetary agreement with the European Union was activated in 2012. Prospects for recovery were boosted when San Marino was removed from Italy's tax blacklist in Feb. 2014.

Currency

Since 1 Jan. 2002 San Marino has been using the euro (EUR). Italy has agreed that San Marino may mint a small part of the total Italian euro coin contingent with their own motifs. Inflation was 1.3% in 2013 and 1.1% in 2014. Total money supply in June 2005 was €906m.

Budget

Revenues totalled €583.0m. in 2009 and expenditures €598.5m. Social contributions accounted for 28.8% of revenue in 2009 with taxes on goods and services accounting for 20.0%; social benefits accounted for 36.7% of expenditure in 2009 with wages and salaries accounting for 29.6%.

Performance

The economy contracted by 7.5% in 2012, 4.5% in 2013 and 1.0% in 2014 (the sixth consecutive year of negative growth). Total GDP was US$1.9bn. in 2008.

Banking and Finance

The Banca Centrale della Repubblica di San Marino (President, Renato Clarizia) was established in 2005 as an amalgamation of the Istituto di Credito Sammarinese and the Ispettorato per il Credito e le Valute (the Inspectorate for Credit and Currencies). Many of its functions have since been taken over by the European Central Bank and it has taken on a more supervisory role. Commercial banks include: Banca di San Marino, Credito Industriale Sammarinese, Cassa di Risparmio della Repubblica di San Marino and the Banca Agricola Commerciale della Repubblica di San Marino.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Electricity

Electricity is supplied by Italy.

Agriculture

There were 1,000 ha. of arable land in 2011. Wheat, barley, maize and vines are grown.

INDUSTRY

Labour

Out of 20,530 people in employment in 2006, 6,247 worked in manufacturing and 2,901 in wholesale and retail trade. In 2006 there were 473 registered unemployed persons.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

Import commodities are a wide range of consumer manufactures and foodstuffs. Export commodities are building stone, lime, wine, baked goods, textiles, varnishes and ceramics. San Marino maintains a customs union with the European Union.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

A bus service connects San Marino with Rimini. There are 252 km of public roads and 40 km of private roads, and (2006) 32,263 passenger cars and 5,907 commercial vehicles.

Civil Aviation

The nearest airport is Rimini, 10 km to the east in Italy, which had scheduled flights in 2003 to Berlin, Düsseldorf, Frankfurt, Hamburg, Helsinki, Munich, Naples and Rome.

Telecommunications

San Marino had 18,800 fixed telephone subscriptions in 2013 and 36,800 mobile phone subscriptions. In the same year an estimated 50.8% of the population were internet users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

Judges are appointed permanently by the Great and General Council; they may not be San Marino citizens. Petty civil cases are dealt with by a justice of the peace; legal commissioners deal with more serious civil cases, and all criminal cases and appeals lie to them from the justice of the peace. Appeals against the legal commissioners lie to two appeals judges as a court of third instance.

Education

Education is compulsory up to 16 years of age. In 2005 there were 15 nursery schools with 1,054 pupils and 141 teachers, 14 elementary schools with 1,497 pupils and 245 teachers, three junior high schools with 805 pupils and 144 teachers, and one high school with 1,289 pupils and 77 teachers. The University of San Marino began operating in 1988.

Health

In 2003 there were 139 hospital beds and 135 doctors.

RELIGION

A 2010 study by the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life estimated that 91.6% of the population were Roman Catholics, with 7.2% religiously unaffiliated.

CULTUREWorld Heritage Sites

There is one UNESCO World Heritage site in San Marino: San Marino Historic Centre and Mount Titano (inscribed on the list in 2008).

Press

San Marino had four paid-for daily newspapers in 2008 (including one sports paper). There are also three dailies published in Italy that include pages on San Marino.

Tourism

In 2011, 2,038,400 tourists visited San Marino (1,385,700 Italians and 652,700 other foreigners).

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

The islands of São Tomé and Príncipe off the west coast of Africa were colonized by Portugal in the fifteenth century. There may have been a few African inhabitants earlier but most of the population arrived during the centuries when the islands served as a slave-trading depot for South America. In the 19th century the islands became the first parts of Africa to grow cocoa. In 1876 Portugal officially abolished slavery but in practice it continued with many Angolans, Mozambicans and Cabo Verdians brought in to work on the cocoa plantations. Because the slave-descended population was cut off from African culture, São Tomé had a higher proportion than other Portuguese colonies of assimilados (Africans acquiring full Portuguese culture and some rights). São Tomé saw serious riots against Portuguese rule in 1953. From 1960 a Movement for the Liberation of São Tomé e Príncipe operated from neighbouring African territories. In 1970 Portugal formed a 16-member legislative council and a provincial consultative council. Following the Portuguese revolution of 1974 a transitional government was formed. Independence came on 12 July 1975. Independent São Tomé e Príncipe officially proclaimed Marxist-Leninist policies but maintained a non-aligned foreign policy and has received aid from Portugal.

The government was overthrown by a coup on 16 July 2003 while President Fradique de Menezes and his foreign minister were abroad. The coup leader, Major Fernando Pereira, installed a junta but accepted a general amnesty from parliament on 24 July after agreeing to allow the ousted president to form a government of national unity.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

The republic, which lies about 200 km off the west coast of Gabon, in the Gulf of Guinea, comprises the main islands of São Tomé (845 sq. km) and Príncipe and several smaller islets including Pedras Tinhosas and Rolas. It has a total area of 1,001 sq. km (387 sq. miles). Population (census, 2012) 179,200; density, 179 per sq. km. In 2011, 63.0% of the population were urban.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 190,000.

Areas and populations of the two provinces:

Province	Sq. km	Census 2012	Chief town
São Tomé	859	171,856	São Tomé
Príncipe	142	7,344	São António

The capital, São Tomé, had an estimated population of 64,000 in 2011. The official language is Portuguese. Lungwa São Tomé, a Portuguese Creole, and Fang, a Bantu language, are the spoken languages.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2006: births, 5,072; deaths, 1,111. Rates, 2006 (per 1,000 population): birth, 33.4; death, 7.3; infant mortality (2010), 53 per 1,000 live births. Expectation of life, 2006, 63.5 years for males and 68.5 years for females. Annual population growth rate, 2000–05, 1.9%; fertility rate, 2008, 3.8 births per woman.

CLIMATE

The tropical climate is modified by altitude and the effect of the cool Benguela current. The wet season is generally from Oct. to May, but rainfall varies considerably, from 40" (1,000 mm) in the hot and humid northeast to 150–200" (3,800–5,000 mm) on the plateau. São Tomé, Jan. 79°F (26.1°C), July 75°F (23.9°C). Annual rainfall 38" (951 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

The 1990 constitution was approved by 72% of votes at a referendum of March 1990 and became effective in Sept. 1990. It abolished the monopoly of the Movement for the Liberation of São Tomé e Príncipe (MLSTP). The President must be over 34 years old, and is elected by universal suffrage for one or two (maximum) five-year terms. He or she is also head of government and appoints a Council of Ministers. The 55-member National Assembly is elected for four years.

Since April 1995 Príncipe has enjoyed internal self-government, with a five-member regional government and an elected assembly.

National Anthem

'Independência total, glorioso canto do povo' ('Total independence, glorious song of the people'); words by A. N. do Espírito Santo, tune by M. de Sousa e Almeida.

RECENT ELECTIONS

At the presidential election on 17 July 2011 former president Manuel Pinto da Costa (ind.) won 35.8% of the votes cast against former prime ministers Evaristo Carvalho (Independent Democratic Action/ADI) with 21.8%, Maria das Neves (ind.) with 14.0% and Delfim Neves (Democratic Convergence Party-Reflection Group/Force for Change Democratic Movement-Liberal Party) with 13.9%. Six other candidates received less than 5% of votes cast. Turnout was 68.4%. In the run-off held on 7 Aug. 2011, Manuel Pinto da Costa won 52.9% of the vote and Evaristo Carvalho 47.1%. Turnout was 74.0%.

At the National Assembly elections on 12 Oct. 2014 ADI won 33 of 55 seats, the Liberation Movement of São Tomé e Príncipe-Social Democratic Party (MLSTP-PSD) 16, Democratic Convergence Party-Reflection Group (PCD) 5 and Union for Democracy and Development (UDD) 1.

CURRENT LEADERS

Manuel Pinto da Costa

Position

President

Introduction

Manuel Pinto da Costa, a Marxist, came out of retirement to win the presidency in Aug. 2011. He promised to tackle corruption and poverty but opponents warned of a return to authoritarian rule.

Early Life

Manuel Pinto da Costa was born in São Tomé on 5 Aug. 1937. The son of a plantation official, he was educated in São Tomé, Angola and Portugal. He graduated from the University of Lisbon and was a founder of the Committee for the Liberation of São Tomé e Príncipe in 1960. Da Costa spent time in France and Cuba in the early part of the decade before completing a doctorate in economics at Humboldt University in East Berlin.

Elected secretary-general of the new Movement for the Liberation of São Tomé e Príncipe (MLSTP) in 1972, da Costa developed links with other independence groups in Angola, Guinea-Bissau and Mozambique. When Portugal's fascist government was overthrown in April 1974, he spearheaded negotiations that led to independence in July 1975.

As leader of the MLSTP, the sole legal party, da Costa was blamed for the economic hardships that accompanied the nationalization of plantations and the departure of skilled workers to Portugal. After an attempted coup by foreign-based mercenaries in 1978 and amid rising political tensions the following year, da Costa called upon Angolan troops to maintain the peace in a deeply unpopular move.

During the early 1980s he became increasingly authoritarian, but a new constitution ended one-party rule in 1990 and he announced that he would not contest the 1991 multi-party elections. Miguel Trovoada became president, elected unopposed as an independent candidate, and da Costa moved to Angola.

He nonetheless returned to contest the 1996 presidential election, narrowly losing to Trovoada. Re-elected leader of the MLSTP in 1998, he also contested the 2001 presidential election, this time losing to Fradique de Menezes. He remained party leader until retiring in Feb. 2004. However, he returned again to run as an independent candidate for the presidency in July 2011, promising to overcome instability, poverty and corruption. He received sufficient support to force a run-off against the parliamentary speaker, Evaristo Carvalho, and emerged victorious with 52.9% of the vote. He was sworn in on 3 Sept. 2011.

Career in Office

Pinto da Costa's priority was to revitalize the struggling economy by developing tourism, the nascent oil industry and coffee exports, while working in conjunction with Patrice Trovoada, whose Independent Democratic Action (ADI) party had won legislative elections in 2010. In Nov. 2012 Trovoada lost a no-confidence vote in the National Assembly and da Costa dismissed his government the following month, appointing Gabriel Arcanjo da Costa as premier. However, the ADI won an outright majority of seats in further elections in Oct. 2014 and Trovoada was reappointed as prime minister.

ECONOMY

In 2010 wholesale and retail trade, hotels and restaurants were estimated to have contributed 28% to GDP; followed by agriculture, forestry, fishing and hunting, 19%; transport, storage and communication, 15%; and construction, 10%.

Overview

São Tomé e Príncipe is among the poorest countries, with over 50% of the population living in poverty in 2010. Heavily reliant on cocoa exports and foreign aid, it receives debt relief under the IMF Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative (HIPC) and Multilateral Debt Relief initiatives. The debt-to-GDP ratio is one of the world's highest.

Growth averaged 5% between 2001 and 2007 but slowed in 2009 after the global financial crisis prompted sharp declines in foreign direct investment, remittances, tourist arrivals and donor assistance. Increases in international food and fuel prices also hit the economy hard but growth recovered to 4.9% in 2011.

A three-year Extended Credit Facility (ECF) worth US$4m. was approved by the IMF in July 2012. The potential exploitation of large oil reserves in territorial waters could transform the economy's medium- to long-term outlook.

Currency

The unit of currency is the dobra (STD) of 100 centimos. Inflation was 8.1% in 2013 and 7.0% in 2014. In Dec. 2006 foreign exchange reserves were US$34m. Total money supply in Dec. 2004 was 172,817m. dobras (up from 23,683m. dobras in Dec. 1996).

Budget

In 2010 budgetary central government revenues totalled 1,390bn. dobras and expenditures 766bn. dobras.

Performance

Real GDP growth was 4.5% in 2012, 4.0% in 2013 and 4.5% again in 2014. In 2014 total GDP was US$337m.

Banking and Finance

In 1991 the Banco Central de São Tomé e Príncipe (Governor, Maria do Carmo Trovoada) replaced the Banco Nacional as the central bank and bank of issue. A private commercial bank, the Banco Internacional de São Tomé e Príncipe, began operations in 1993. Foreign debt amounted to US$170m. in 2010, representing 85.3% of GNI.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

In 2011 carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy were the equivalent of 0.8 tonnes per capita.

Electricity

Installed capacity, 2011, 18,000 kW. Production was estimated at 60m. kWh in 2011, with consumption per capita an estimated 328 kWh.

Oil and Gas

There are large oil reserves around São Tomé e Príncipe that could greatly add to the country's wealth; the Joint Development Zone was set up with Nigeria to administer the exploitation because the reserves are located in shared waters. The first license to begin exploration was granted in 2004. However, oil production has yet to commence.

Agriculture

After independence all landholdings over 200 ha. were nationalized into 15 state farms. These were partially privatized in 1985 by granting management contracts to foreign companies, and distributing some state land as small private plots. There were an estimated 9,000 ha. of arable land in 2007 and 47,000 ha. of permanent crops. Production (2003 estimates in 1,000 tonnes): bananas, 27; coconuts, 27; cassava, 6; palm kernels, 4; cocoa beans, 3; maize, 2; palm oil, 2. There were an estimated 5,000 goats, 4,000 cattle, 3,000 sheep and 2,000 pigs in 2003.

Forestry

In 2010 forests covered 27,000 ha., or 28% of the land area. In 2011, 122,000 cu. metres of timber were cut.

Fisheries

There are rich tuna shoals. The total catch in 2010 amounted to 4,827 tonnes.

INDUSTRY

Manufacturing contributed 4% of GDP in 2013. There are a few small factories in agricultural processing (including beer and palm oil production), timber processing, bricks, ceramics, printing, textiles and soap-making.

Labour

The unemployment rate was 13.9% in 2012.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

Trade figures for 2006: imports, US$70.9m.; exports, US$3.8m. Cocoa accounts for two-thirds of all exports.

In 2006 the main import suppliers were Portugal (63.6%), Angola (18.3%) and Belgium (4.6%); main export markets were Portugal (33.3%), the Netherlands (27.1%) and Belgium (14.3%).

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

There were 500 km of roads in 2009, 375 km of which were paved. Approximately 4,500 passenger cars, 2,183 motorcycles and over 1,800 trucks and vans were in use in 2008.

Civil Aviation

São Tomé airport had flights in 2010 to Libreville, Lisbon, Luanda, Port-Gentil and Praia. In 2007 São Tomé handled 50,625 passengers. There is a light aircraft service to Príncipe.

Shipping

São Tomé is the main port, but it lacks a deep water harbour. Neves handles oil imports and is the main fishing port. In Jan.

2009 there were 14 ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 19,000 GT.

Telecommunications

In 2013 there were 7,000 fixed telephone subscriptions; mobile phone subscriptions numbered 125,300 that year (64.9 per 100 persons). In 2013 an estimated 23.0% of the population were internet users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

Members of the Supreme Court are appointed by the National Assembly. There is no death penalty. The population in penal institutions in 2012 was 217 (128 per 100,000 of national population).

Education

Adult literacy was 88% in 2008. Education is free and compulsory. In 2007–08 there were 90 primary schools and 32,616 pupils, and ten secondary schools and 8,380 pupils; 96% of primary age children were attending school in 2006. There are two institutions of higher education.

Health

In 2004 there were 81 physicians, 11 dentists, and 308 nurses and midwives.

RELIGION

In 2010 an estimated 82.2% of the population were Christians according to the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life, with 12.6% religiously unaffiliated. Of the Christians in 2010, an estimated 86% were Catholics and 14% Protestants.

CULTURE

Press

In 2008 there was one daily newspaper. Two government-owned and six independent papers were also published irregularly.

Tourism

In 2011 there were 12,000 non-resident tourists.

SAUDI ARABIA

The leaders who succeeded Muhammad, known as caliphs, spread the Islamic faith throughout and beyond the Arab world. However, Arabia itself began to fragment and by the latter part of the 7th century it had become a province of the Islamic realm, although the holy cities of Makkah and Madinah retained their spiritual focus. Meanwhile, increasingly remote from the main centres of Islamic authority under the Umayyad and Abbasid caliphate dynasties, Arabia became an arena for sectarian divisions—Shia, Sunni and Kharijite—which developed within the Islamic faith.

After 1269 most of the Hejaz region came under the suzerainty of the Egyptian Mameluks. The Ottoman Turks conquered Egypt in 1517 and, to counter the influence of the Christian Portuguese presence in the Gulf region, extended their nominal control over the whole Arabian Peninsula. Portuguese traders were followed by British, Dutch and French merchants during the 17th and 18th centuries, the British gradually securing political and commercial supremacy in the Gulf and southern Arabia through a system of protectorates and local treaties.

Saudi Arabia's origins as a political entity lay in the rise of the puritanical Wahhabi movement of the 18th century, which called for a return to the original principles of Islam and gained the allegiance of the powerful Al-Saud dynasty (founded in the 15th century) in the Nejd region of central Arabia. By 1811 the Al-Saud/Wahhabi armies controlled most of the peninsula and were seen as a threat to the Ottoman Turkish overlord. The Sultan called on his viceroy in Egypt, Mehmet Ali, to suppress the Wahhabis, who were defeated between 1811 and 1818. Nevertheless, the house of Al-Saud continued to hold sway over the interior of Arabia until 1891 when, after a long period of tribal warfare, the rival Al-Rashid family, with Ottoman support, seized control of the city of Riyadh.

The Al-Saud family was exiled to Kuwait but Abdulaziz bin Abdul Rahman (known to Europeans as Ibn Saud) restored Wahhabi fortunes, recapturing Riyadh in 1902 and reasserting Al-Saud control over Nejd by 1906. On the eve of the First World War Abdulaziz gained the al Hasa region east of Nejd on the Gulf from the Ottoman Turks. In 1920 he captured the Asir region and in 1921 added the Jebel Shammar territory (northwest of Nejd) of the Al-Rashid family. In 1925 Abdulaziz completed his conquest of Hejaz, overthrowing Hussein, Sharif of Makkah and a member of the Hashimi family. Abdulaziz became both Sultan of Nejd and King of the Hejaz. Britain recognized Abdulaziz as an independent ruler by the Treaty of Jeddah on 20 May 1927, and in 1932 Nejd and Hejaz were unified as the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia, ruled as an absolute monarchy under Islamic law.

Abdulaziz (died 9 Nov. 1953) concentrated on the political consolidation and modernization of the country. Oil was discovered in 1938 and its exploitation was developed with the support of the USA after the Second World War. Crown Prince Saud succeeded his father and ruled until Nov. 1964, when he was effectively deposed by his brother Faisal. During his reign Saudi relations with the pan-Arabist Nasser regime in Egypt deteriorated, most notably over the 1962 revolution in Yemen.

As king and prime minister, Faisal used oil production revenues to build up the country's economic base. In 1970 came the first of the five-year economic development programmes. Meanwhile, financial support was given to other Arab states in their conflict with Israel. Leading on from the Oct. 1973 Arab-Israeli war Arab producers, including Saudi Arabia, cut supplies to the USA and other Western countries, causing a fourfold increase in oil prices. However, Faisal subsequently adopted a more conciliatory stance than the more radical members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC, founded

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Nomadic tribes have existed across the Arabian peninsula for thousands of years. The pre-Islamic period saw the development of civilizations based on trade in frankincense and spices, notably, from about the 12th century BC, the Minaeans in the southwest of what is now Saudi Arabia and Yemen. The Sabaeans and Himyarite kingdoms flourished from around 650 BC and 115 BC respectively, their loose federations of city states lasting until the 6th century AD. Although increased trade brought these civilizations into contact with the Roman and Persian empires—the two great regional powers before the advent of Islam—they remained, for the most part, politically independent. The Nabataeans, an Aramaic people whose capital was at Petra, modern-day Jordan, spread into northern Arabia over a period covering the 1st century BC and the 1st AD before annexation of their territory by Rome. Persian influence was prevalent along Arabia's eastern coast, centred on Dilmun which covered parts of the mainland and the island of Bahrain.

By the 6th century AD the Hejaz region in northwestern Arabia was becoming increasingly powerful and an important link in the overland trade route from Egypt and the Byzantine Empire to the wider East. One of the principal cities of Hejaz was Makkah (Mecca), a staging post on the camel train routes and site of pilgrimage to numerous pre-Islamic religious shrines. The leading tribe in the city was the Quraysh, into which the Prophet Muhammad was born in 570. Muhammad and his followers (known as Muslims) took control of Makkah in 630. He had earlier declared himself a prophetic reformer, destroying the city's pagan idols and declaring it a centre of Muslim pilgrimage dedicated to the worship of Allah (God) alone. Muhammad died in AD 632, by then commanding the loyalty of almost all of Arabia.

in 1960) and the close Saudi economic relationship with the USA was reinforced with a co-operation agreement in 1974. In March 1975, when Faisal was assassinated by a nephew, believed to be mentally unstable, his half-brother Khalid became king.

Khalid continued Faisal's policies promoting Islamic solidarity and Arab unity in the wake of hostilities with Israel. In practice his moderate stance was in marked contrast to the militancy of many other Arab states, particularly over oil pricing by OPEC and opposition to Egypt's 1978 peace treaty with Israel. Khalid was also involved in early efforts to stop the civil war in Lebanon and, in 1981, he inaugurated the Gulf Co-operation Council (GCC). Domestically, he maintained his family's absolute political control and the conservative Islamic character of the country. However, opposition to his regime was demonstrated in Nov. 1979 when Sunni Muslim fundamentalists occupied the Grand Mosque at Makkah. A two-week siege ended with over 200 deaths. The second and third five-year development plans (1975–79 and 1980–84), both launched by Khalid, created much of the country's current economic infrastructure. Owing to Khalid's poor health throughout his reign much of his executive responsibility was assumed by his younger half-brother, Crown Prince Fahd.

Fahd succeeded to the throne on 13 June 1982. Like his predecessors, he maintained absolute power but broadened the process of political consultation and decision-making by setting up the Consultative Council (Majlis Al-Shura) of royal appointees from 1993. In 1986 he assumed the title of 'Custodian of the Two Holy Mosques' but the Saudi role in protecting religious pilgrims incurred international criticism in 1987 when 400 Iranian worshippers were killed in clashes in Makkah with security forces and again in 1994 when 270 pilgrims died in a stampede. Internationally, Fahd adopted a moderate policy on regional problems and closely allied the kingdom with the USA. Fahd was a key participant in diplomatic efforts to end the Iran-Iraq war in 1988 and, in 1989, he participated in the Taif reconciliation accord ending the 14-year Lebanese civil war. His pro-Western stance and co-operation in the 1990–91 Gulf crisis were crucial to the deployment and successful military operations of the US-led multinational force raised against Iraq following its invasion of Kuwait.

However, anti-Western disaffection among Saudi nationals has become more overt in recent years. In 1996 a bomb exploded at a US military complex at Dhahran, killing 19 and wounding over 300. In 2000 a series of bomb blasts, blamed by Saudi officials on British nationals engaged in criminal activity, was widely believed abroad to be the work of Saudi dissidents. Up to 15 Saudi nationals were involved in the attacks on New York and Washington, D.C. on 11 Sept. 2001, co-ordinated by Saudi dissident Osama bin Laden and his al-Qaeda network. In Nov. 2002 the Saudi government refused permission for the US to use its military facilities to attack Iraq, even if sanctioned by the United Nations. In May 2003 suicide bombers killed ten US citizens and many others at housing compounds for Western expatriate workers in Riyadh. In April 2003 the US agreed to pull out most of its troops from the kingdom, while stressing that the two countries would remain allies.

As King Fahd's health declined, his half-brother, Crown Prince Abdullah bin Abdulaziz Al-Saud, assumed responsibility for government in 1996. When Fahd died on 1 Aug. 2005, Abdullah was appointed his successor. In Feb. 2013, 30 women were sworn on to the Shura consultative council—the first time females have held public office in Saudi Arabia. Saudi Arabia joined four fellow Arab states and the USA in launching air strikes on Islamic State strongholds in Syria from Sept. 2014. In Jan. 2015 King Abdullah died and was succeeded by another half-brother, Salman bin Abdulaziz Al-Saud.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Saudi Arabia, which occupies nearly 80% of the Arabian peninsula, is bounded in the west by the Red Sea, east by the Persian Gulf, Qatar and the United Arab Emirates, north by Jordan, Iraq and Kuwait and south by Yemen and Oman. For the border dispute with Yemen see YEMEN: Territory and Population. The total area is 2,149,690 sq. km (829,995 sq. miles). Riyadh is the political, and Makkah (Mecca) the religious, capital.

Population at the census of April 2010 (provisional), 27,136,977; density, 12.6 per sq. km. Approximately 32% of the population are foreigners. In 2011, 82.3% of the population lived in urban areas.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 31.54m.

Principal cities (with 2010 provisional census populations in 1m.): Riyadh, 5.19; Jeddah, 3.43; Makkah, 1.53; Madinah, 1.10; Dammam, 0.90; Hofuf, 0.66.

The Neutral Zone (5,700 sq. km, 3,560 sq. miles), jointly owned and administered by Kuwait and Saudi Arabia from 1922 to 1966, was partitioned between the two countries in 1966, but the exploitation of the oil and other natural resources continues to be shared.

The official language is Arabic.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2008 estimates: births, 590,000; deaths, 92,000. Birth rate (2008 estimate) was 23.4 per 1,000 population; death rate, 3.6. 75% of the population is under the age of 30. Expectation of life at birth, 2013, was 73.9 years for males and 77.6 years for females. Annual population growth rate, 2000–08, 2.4%. Infant mortality, 2010, was 15 per 1,000 live births, down from 58 in the years 1980–85. Fertility rate, 2008, 3.1 births per woman. Saudi Arabia was ranked 134th in a gender gap index of 145 countries compiled by the World Economic Forum for its Global Gender Gap Report 2015. The annual index considers economic, political, education and health criteria.

CLIMATE

A desert climate, with very little rain and none at all from June to Dec. The months May to Sept. are very hot and humid, but winter temperatures are quite pleasant. Riyadh, Jan. 58°F (14.4°C), July 108°F (42°C). Annual rainfall 4" (100 mm). Jeddah, Jan. 73°F (22.8°C), July 87°F (30.6°C). Annual rainfall 3" (81 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

The reigning King, Salman bin Abdulaziz Al-Saud (b. 1935), Custodian of the two Holy Mosques, succeeded in Jan. 2015, after King Abdullah's death. Crown Prince: Prince Mohammad bin Naif bin Abdulaziz Al-Saud (b. 1959). The Saudi royal family is around 8,000-strong.

Constitutional practice derives from Sharia law. There is no formal constitution, but three royal decrees of 1 March 1992 established a Basic Law which defines the systems of central and municipal government, and set up a 60-man Consultative Council (Majlis Al-Shura) of royal nominees in Aug. 1993. The Chairman is Abdullah Al-Asheikh. In July 1997 the King decreed an increase of the Consultative Council to a chairman plus 90 members, selected from men of science and experience; in 2001 it was increased again to a chairman plus 120 members and in 2005 further to a chairman plus 150 members. A Royal Order of Jan. 2013 specified that at least 20% of the members should be women. The King swore in the first 30 female members of the Consultative Council in Feb. 2013.

The Council does not have legislative powers.

Saudi Arabia is an absolute monarchy; executive power is discharged through a Council of Ministers, consisting of the King, Deputy Prime Minister, Second Deputy Prime Minister and Cabinet Ministers.

The King has the post of Prime Minister and can veto any decision of the Council of Ministers within 30 days.

In Oct. 2003 the government announced that municipal elections would be held in 2004 for the first time (although they were subsequently postponed until 2005), followed by city elections and partial elections to the Majlis Al-Shura in the following years. In March 2011 the government announced that the second municipal elections, previously scheduled for 2009, would be held in Sept. 2011. Women were eligible to vote and stand for office for the first time at the elections of Dec. 2015.

CURRENT LEADERS

King Salman bin Abdulaziz Al-Saud

Position

King

Introduction

A member of the ruling Saud family, King Salman acceded to the throne in Jan. 2015 following the death of his half-brother, King Abdullah.

Early Life

Salman was born on 31 Dec. 1935 in Riyadh and was educated at the city's Princes' School. In 1963 he became governor of Riyadh and remained in the position for the next 48 years. During this time, Riyadh's population increased from 200,000 to over 5m. and it became a centre for foreign investment. Salman earned a reputation as a mediator within the Saud family, and won recognition for his support of various humanitarian causes.

He was named defence minister in 2011 and became crown prince in 2012. In this latter role, he undertook many official trips on behalf of the monarchy, including meeting with US President Barack Obama in April 2012.

Career in Office

Salman acceded to the throne on 23 Jan. 2015 and promptly addressed the issue of succession by appointing his half-brother, Prince Muqrin, as the new crown prince. Prince Mohammed bin Nayef, who had been interior minister since 2012, was named the new deputy crown prince. This was the first time a grandchild of the Saudi Kingdom's founding monarch, Abdulaziz, had entered the order of succession.

Salman vowed to improve educational standards, healthcare and housing, while urging businesses to do their 'national duty' in creating jobs for the growing younger population. Numerous advisory bodies have been streamlined into two councils—one headed by Prince Mohammed bin Nayef focusing on politics and security, and the other overseen by defence minister Prince Mohammed bin Salman concerned with economic and development policy. In Dec. 2015 women were allowed to vote and stand for public office for the first time in municipal elections.

Internationally, Salman has been confronted by political instability in neighbouring Yemen and increasing rivalry with Iran. Since March 2015 a Saudi-led regional coalition of Gulf Arab states has conducted a military campaign of air strikes against an Iranian-backed insurgency by rebel Shia Houthi forces in Yemen. The consequent friction with Iran was aggravated further in Jan. 2016 when the Saudi execution of a prominent Shia cleric led to the ransacking by protesters of the Saudi embassy in the Iranian capital and the retaliatory severing of diplomatic relations with Iran by the Saudi government.

In Sept. 2015 hundreds of people died in two fatal incidents in the country—the first when a crane collapsed at the Grand Mosque in the holy city of Makkah during bad weather and the second in a stampede by Muslim worshippers attending the annual Hajj pilgrimage.

DEFENCE

In 2013 defence expenditure totalled US$59,560m. (up from US$48,531m. in 2011), with spending per capita US$2,211. The 2013 expenditure represented 8.0% of GDP.

5,000 US troops were stationed in Saudi Arabia after the 1991 Gulf War and were joined by a further 20,000 during the 2003 conflict. However, virtually all US troops have now been withdrawn. In March 2011 the Gulf Co-operation Council's Peninsula Shield Force, which is based in Saudi Arabia and whose mission is to protect the security of member states from any external aggression, consisted of approximately 40,000 troops.

Army

Strength (2011) was 75,000. There is a paramilitary Border Guard (10,500) and a National Guard (see below).

Navy

The Royal Saudi Naval Forces fleet includes three destroyers, four frigates and four corvettes. Naval Aviation forces operate 46 helicopters.

The main naval bases are at Riyadh (HQ Naval Forces), Jeddah (Western Fleet) and Jubail (Eastern Fleet). Naval personnel in 2011 totalled 13,500, including 3,000 marines.

Air Force

Current combat aircraft include F-15s, F-5Bs, F-5Fs, Panavia Tornados and Eurofighter Typhoons. The Air Force operated 296 combat-capable aircraft in total and numbered 20,000 personnel in 2011.

Air Defence Force

This separate Command was formerly part of the Army. In 2011 it operated surface-to-air missile batteries and had a strength of 16,000.

National Guard

The total strength of the National Guard amounted to 100,000 (75,000 active, 25,000 tribal levies) in 2011. The National Guard's primary role is the protection of the Royal Family and vital points in the Kingdom. It is directly under royal command. The UK provides small advisory teams to the National Guard in the fields of general training and communications.

Industrial Security Force

This force was established in 2007 to protect state oil facilities in response to attacks in 2006 on the Abqaiq oil processing plant. Strength in 2011 was more than 9,000.

ECONOMY

Agriculture accounted for 1.9% of GDP in 2013, industry 60.0% and services 38.1%. Manufacturing's share of total GDP was 10.0%.

Overview

The economy is dominated by the oil sector, which accounts for over 80% of total export revenue. Saudi Arabia is the world's largest oil producer and exporter, with a sixth of the world's proven oil reserves and over 60% of spare capacity in global oil supply. The industrial sector is based on hydrocarbon resources, although the country also has deposits of iron ore, phosphates, bauxite and copper.

In 1998 American and European oil companies were allowed to invest in the energy sector for the first time. Structural reforms were introduced in 1999 to attract foreign investment. The stock market was opened to foreign investors and tax and customs regulations were reformed. Improvements in the investment climate facilitated full membership of the World Trade Organization in 2005. A tourism authority was also established.

In the 1980s the economy posted negative annual growth rates over five years. In the 1990s annual growth averaged 3.1%, which was low compared to developing countries, particularly in the Asia-Pacific region. In 2001 and 2002 the Saudi economy barely grew at all. However, rising oil prices boosted performance in 2003 and annual growth accelerated to 7.9%. Over half of the 2004 fiscal surplus was used to reduce central government debt by 16% to 66% of GDP, while the rest was put into a fund to finance investment in priority areas over a five-year period.

Oil production fell in 2008 and the global financial crisis caused the stock market to decline by 46% in the last quarter of that year. Nonetheless, high oil prices contributed to real GDP growth averaging 6.1% per annum between 2008 and 2012. Recovery in global demand meant that the non-oil sector also grew 7.5% per annum from 2010-12, with the manufacturing, retail and transport sectors seeing double-digit growth. Government debt was 7.5% of GDP in 2011. When Libyan oil output was disrupted that year, Saudi Arabia increased its production to offset shortfalls. Per capita GDP also grew robustly in 2011, with the World Bank recording a level of over US$24,000. Inflation has meanwhile stayed in single figures as a result of a flexible labour market and an open trade system.

The steep drop in oil prices in 2014-15 was expected to prompt a year-on-year decline in GDP. A fiscal deficit of 3.4% was registered in 2014, down from a surplus of 5.8% in 2013, although government debt was extremely low, at just 1.6% of GDP at the end of 2014. Nonetheless, the fall in fiscal revenues has emphasized the need to diversify the economy and capitalize on growth opportunities in the private sector. The labour market is divided, with Saudis largely employed in the public sector and non-Saudis dominating the private sector. The government has invested in tertiary education and implemented reforms to boost Saudi nationals' competitiveness and access to high-paying jobs in the private sector. However, joblessness remains a serious problem, with youth unemployment over 40% and female unemployment around 33% at the end of 2014.

The World Bank ranked Saudi Arabia 82nd out of 189 economies for ease of doing business in its 2015 index.

Currency

The unit of currency is the rial (SAR) of 100 halalah. Foreign exchange reserves totalled US$27,637m. in Sept. 2009 and gold reserves were 4.60m. troy oz. Total money supply in June 2009 was SAR474,307m. Inflation rates (based on IMF statistics):

2005	2006	2007	2008	2009	2010	2011	2012	2013	2014
0.5%	1.9%	5.0%	6.1%	4.1%	3.8%	3.7%	2.9%	3.5%	2.7%

Budget

In 2012 revenues totalled SAR1,239.5bn. and expenditures SAR853.0bn. Oil revenues accounted for 92.0% of revenue in 2012; current expenditures accounted for 66.6% of expenditure.

Performance

Real GDP growth rates (based on IMF statistics):

2005	2006	2007	2008	2009	2010	2011	2012	2013	2014
7.3%	5.6%	6.0%	8.4%	1.8%	4.8%	10.0%	5.4%	2.7%	3.5%

Total GDP in 2014 was US$746.2bn. Per capita GDP is now around half the level of 1980.

Banking and Finance

The Saudi Arabian Monetary Agency (Governor, Fahed Al-Mubarak), established in 1953, functions as the central bank and the government's fiscal agent. In 2002 there were three national banks (the National Commercial Bank, the Al-Rajhi Banking and Investment Corporation and the Riyad Bank), five specialist banks, eight foreign banks and three government specialized credit institutions. The leading banks are National Commercial Bank (assets in 2008 of US$59.1bn.), Samba Financial Group (US$47.7bn. in 2008) and Al-Rajhi Bank (US$44.0bn. in 2008). Sharia (the religious law of Islam) forbids the charging of interest; Islamic banking is based on sharing clients' profits and losses and imposing service charges. In 2005 total assets of commercial banks were US$202.4bn.

A number of industry sectors are closed to foreign investors, including petroleum exploration, defence-related activities and financial services.

There is a stock exchange in Riyadh.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Saudi Arabia's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2011 were the equivalent of 21.1 tonnes per capita. An Environmental Performance Index compiled in 2016 ranked Saudi Arabia 95th of 180 countries, with 68.6%. The index examined various factors in nine areas—agriculture, air quality, biodiversity and habitat, climate and energy, fisheries, forests, health impacts, water and sanitation, and water resources.

Electricity

Installed capacity was 51.1m. kW in 2011. Currently all electricity is thermally generated, but Saudi Arabia plans to build 16 nuclear power reactors under Russia's supervision. Production was 250.08bn. kWh in 2011; consumption per capita in 2011 was 9,008 kWh.

Oil and Gas

Proven oil reserves in 2014 were 267.0bn. bbls, the second highest after those of Venezuela and around 16% of world resources. However, Saudi Arabia has far more reserves that are readily accessible than Venezuela. Oil production began in 1938 by Aramco, which is now 100% state-owned and accounts for about 99% of total crude oil production. It is the world's largest oil company in terms of output. Production in 2014 totalled 543.4m. tonnes and accounted for 12.9% of the global oil output. Saudi Arabia lost its status as the world's largest oil producer to Russia in 2009 but regained it in 2011. In 2009 oil export revenues were US$157bn., the highest of any country.

Production comes from 14 major oilfields, mostly in the Eastern Province and offshore, and including production from the Neutral Zone. The Ghawar oilfield, located between Riyadh and the Persian gulf, is the largest in the world, with estimated reserves of 70bn. bbls. Oil reserves are expected to run out in approximately 2075.

In 2014 natural gas reserves were 8.2trn. cu. metres; output in 2014 was 108.2bn. cu. metres. The gas sector has been opened up to foreign investment.

Water

Efforts are under way to provide adequate supplies of water for urban, industrial, rural and agricultural use. Most investment has gone into sea-water desalination. In 2006 desalination plants produced 2.8m. cu. metres of water a day. Irrigation for agriculture consumes the largest amount, from fossil reserves (the country's principal water source) and from surface water collected during seasonal floods. In 2006 there were 230 dams with a holding capacity of 850.3m. cu. metres. Treated urban waste water is an increasing resource for both agricultural and industrial purposes.

Minerals

Production began in 1988 at Mahd Al-Dahab gold mine, the largest in the country. In 2010 total gold production was 4,476 kg. Deposits of iron, phosphate, bauxite, uranium, silver, tin, tungsten, nickel, chrome, zinc, lead, potassium ore and copper have also been found.

Agriculture

Land ownership is under the jurisdiction of the Ministry of Municipal and Rural Affairs.

Since 1970 the government has spent substantially on desert reclamation, irrigation schemes, drainage and control of surface water and of moving sands. Undeveloped land has been distributed to farmers and there are research and extension programmes. Large scale private investment has concentrated on wheat, poultry and dairy production.

In 2002 there were an estimated 3.60m. ha. of arable land and 194,000 ha. of permanent cropland. Approximately 1.62m. ha. were irrigated in 2002. In 2002, 8.5% of the economically active population were engaged in agriculture (19.1% in 1990).

Production of leading crops, 2002 (in 1,000 tonnes): wheat, 2,431; dates, 829; melons and watermelons, 450; tomatoes, 403; potatoes, 313; sorghum, 239; cucumbers and gherkins, 168; barley, 136; grapes, 117; pumpkins and squash, 101; onions, 80.

Livestock (2002): 8.17m. sheep, 2.50m. goats, 323,000 cattle, 260,000 camels and 130m. chickens. Livestock products (2003, in 1,000 tonnes): milk, 948; meat, 642; eggs, 130.

Forestry

The area under forests was 0.98m. ha. (less than 0.5% of the land area) in 2010.

Fisheries

In 2011 the total catch was 64,481 tonnes, entirely from sea fishing. Imports of fishery commodities were valued at US$487m. in 2011.

INDUSTRY

The largest companies in Saudi Arabia by market capitalization in March 2015 were SABIC (Saudi Basic Industries), at US$63.9bn.; Saudi Telecom (US$33.5bn.); and National Commercial Bank (US$32.6bn.).

In 2005 manufacturing accounted for 9.5% of GDP and construction 4.7%. The government encourages the establishment of manufacturing industries. Its policy focuses on establishing industries that use petroleum products, petrochemicals and minerals. Petrochemical and oil-based industries have been concentrated at eight new industrial cities, with the two principal cities at Jubail and Yanbu. Products include chemicals, plastics, industrial gases, steel and other metals. In 2004 there were 3,657 factories employing 340,000 workers.

Labour

The labour force in the first half of 2015 totalled 11,912,200. In 2015 females constituted 15.8% of the labour force—one of the lowest percentages of females in the workforce of any country. In the first half of 2015, 15.7% of the employed population were engaged in public administration and defence/compulsory social security, 13.0% in construction, 12.5% in wholesale and retail trade/repair of motor vehicles, and 12.3% education. There are 9m. foreign workers, including over 1m. Egyptians and over 1m. Indians. In the period Jan.–June 2015 unemployment was 5.7% overall but 11.6% for Saudis.

Saudi Arabia had 58,000 people living in slavery according to the Walk Free Foundation's 2013 Global Slavery Index.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Saudi Arabia, along with Bahrain, Kuwait, Oman, Qatar and the United Arab Emirates entered into a customs union in Jan. 2003.

Imports and Exports

Trade in US$1m.:

	2006	2007	2008	2009	2010
Imports c.i.f.	69,800	90,214	115,134	95,552	106,863
Exports f.o.b.	211,306	234,951	313,462	192,314	251,143

The principal export is crude oil; refined oil, petrochemicals, fertilizers, plastic products and wheat are other major exports. Saudi Arabia is the world's largest exporter of oil, accounting for 85.4% of all the country's exports in 2006. Crude oil exports in 2010 were 6.6m. bbls a day. Major import suppliers, 2006: USA, 14.5%; China, 8.6%; Germany, 8.1%; Japan, 8.1%. Main export destinations, 2006: Japan, 16.5%; USA, 15.1%; South Korea, 9.2%; China, 6.3%.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

In 2005 there was a total road network of 221,372 km (21.5% paved), including 3,891 km of motorway. A causeway links Saudi Arabia with Bahrain. Passenger cars in use in 2005 numbered 3,206,000 (415 per 1,000 inhabitants in 2004) and there were 1,127,900 lorries and vans. Although there is no specific law prohibiting women from driving, the Saudi interior ministry does not issue licenses to female drivers. In 2004–05 there were 293,281 road accidents resulting in 5,168 deaths.

Rail

In 2010, 1,412 km of 1,435 mm gauge lines linked Riyadh and Dammam with stops at Hofuf and Abqaiq. The network is being extended, consisting of links to Jeddah, the Jordanian border, and Makkah and Madinah. The line under construction from Makkah to Madinah via Jeddah will be Saudi Arabia's first high-speed rail link. It is expected to open in late 2016 or early 2017. In 2012 railways carried 1.3m. passengers and 4.5m. tonnes of freight. The first line of a metro system in Makkah opened in 2010, covering 18.1 km.

Civil Aviation

The national carrier is the part-privatized Saudi Arabian Airlines, which in 2006 owned 139 aircraft and served 76 destinations. In 2005 scheduled airline traffic of Saudi-based carriers flew 117.1m. km and carried 11,126,300 passengers. There are four major international airports, at Jeddah (King Abdulaziz), Dhahran, Riyadh (King Khaled) and Dammam (King Fahd). There are also 23 domestic airports. Jeddah handled 25,785,463 passengers in 2012 (17,547,530 on international flights) and 265,629 tonnes of freight in 2011. Riyadh was the second busiest airport in 2012, handling 17,690,764 passengers (8,720,576 on domestic flights) and 305,943 tonnes of freight.

Shipping

The ports of Dammam and Jubail are on the Persian Gulf and Jeddah, Yanbu and Jizan on the Red Sea. There is a deepwater oil terminal at Ras Tanura. In 2009 the major ports handled 142.3m. tonnes of cargo (84.1m. tonnes loaded and 58.2m. tonnes discharged). In Jan. 2009 there were 83 ships of 300 GT or over registered (including 38 oil tankers, 18 general cargo ships and 14 passenger ships), totalling 1.25m. GT.

Telecommunications

In 2013 there were 4.9m. main (fixed) telephone lines. In the same year mobile phone subscriptions numbered 53.1m. (1,842.0 per 1,000 persons). The government sold a 30% stake in Saudi Telecom Company (STC) in Dec. 2002. STC lost its monopoly in the mobile phone market in 2005 and in landline services in 2007. In 2013 an estimated 60.5% of the population were internet users. In March 2012 there were 5.1m. Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The religious law of Islam (Sharia) is the common law of the land, and is administered by religious courts, at the head of which is a chief judge, who is responsible for the Department of Sharia Affairs. Sharia courts are concerned primarily with family inheritance and property matters. However, following judicial reforms of Oct. 2007 a newly established Supreme Court replaced the Supreme Judiciary Council as the highest judicial authority. Specialized courts are also to be established to operate alongside the Sharia courts and there are plans to codify Sharia and introduce the principle of precedent into court practice. The Committee for the Settlement of Commercial Disputes is the commercial court. Other specialized courts or committees include one dealing exclusively with labour and employment matters; the Negotiable Instruments Committee, which deals with cases relating to cheques, bills of exchange and promissory notes; and the Board of Grievances, whose preserve is disputes with the government or its agencies and which also has jurisdiction in trademark-infringement cases and is the authority for enforcing foreign court judgments.

The death penalty is in force for murder, rape, sodomy, armed robbery, sabotage, drug trafficking, adultery and apostasy; executions may be held in public. According to Amnesty International there were at least 90 executions in 2014 and at least 158 in 2015. The population in penal institutions in Feb. 2013 was 47,000 (162 per 100,000 of national population). 58.7% of prisoners had yet to receive a trial according to 2014 estimates by the International Centre for Prison Studies.

Education

The educational system provides students with free education, books and health services. General education consists of kindergarten, six years of primary school and three years each of intermediate and high school. In 2005–06 there were: 1,449 pre-primary schools with 10,150 teachers and 97,137 pupils; 13,163 primary schools with 213,355 teachers and 2,417,811 pupils; 7,086 intermediate schools with 104,675 teachers and 1,071,747 pupils; 4,215 secondary schools with 79,754 teachers and 954,141 pupils. Students can attend either high schools offering programmes in arts and sciences, or vocational schools. Girls' education has traditionally been administered separately, but in Sept. 2009 the country's first mixed-gender university was opened and in

Oct. 2009 a trial of mixed-gender education in 15 private elementary schools was launched. In 2005 there were 903 institutions for special needs pupils with 18,958 students. The adult literacy rate in 2009 was an estimated 86.1% (90.0% among males and 81.1% among females). Although Saudi girls were not even allowed to attend school until 1964 women now make up nearly 60% of Saudi Arabia's higher education students.

In 2005 there were 3,775 adult education centres. In 2005–06 there were 11 universities (including two Islamic universities and one university of petroleum and minerals); there were 603,767 students in total in higher education and 26,827 teachers.

Health

In 2005 there were 1,848 health care centres, 1,043 private dispensaries and 364 hospitals with 51,130 beds. Health personnel, 2005: 42,975 physicians, 78,587 nurses and 49,167 technical staff. At Jeddah there is a quarantine centre for pilgrims.

Welfare

The retirement age is 60 (men) or 55 (women), with eligibility based on 120 months of contributions. The minimum monthly old-age pension is SAR1,500, calculated as 2.5% of the average monthly wage during the previous two years multiplied by the number of years of contributions. A 1969 law requires employers with more than 20 employees to pay 100% of wages for the first 30 days of sick leave and 75% of wages for the next 60 days. Unemployment benefits of SAR2,000 (US$535) a month were introduced in 2011 for applicants who proved they were looking for work or undergoing training.

Workers' medical benefits include medical, dental and diagnostic treatment, hospitalization, medicines, appliances, transportation and rehabilitation.

RELIGION

According to the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life, in 2010 an estimated 78–83% of the total population were Sunni Muslims, 10–15% Shias, 4% Christians and 1% Hindus. The Grand Mufti, Sheikh Abdul Aziz bin Abdullah bin Mohammed Al-Sheikh, has cabinet rank. A special police force, the Mutaween, exists to enforce religious norms.

The annual Hajj, the pilgrimage to Makkah, takes place from the 8th to the 13th day of Dhu al Hijjah, the last month of the Islamic year. It attracts more than 1.8m. pilgrims annually. In the current Islamic year, 1437, the Hajj will begin on 9 Sept. 2016 in the Gregorian calendar.

Saudi Arabia has four sites on the UNESCO World Heritage List: the archaeological site of Madain Salih (Al-Hijr) was inscribed in 2008; the At-Turaif District in Ad-Dir'iyah, founded in the 15th century and the first capital of the Saudi dynasty, was inscribed in 2010; Historic Jeddah, the Gate to Makkah, which is situated on the eastern shore of the Red Sea, was inscribed in 2014; and Rock Art in the Hail Region of Saudi Arabia, a property made up of two components and situated in a desert landscape, was inscribed in 2015.

Press

In 2008 there were 16 daily newspapers with a combined circulation of 1,420,000. The most widely read newspapers are the Saudi-owned London-based Asharq Al-Awsat ('The Middle East'), Al-Riyadh and Al-Watan.

Tourism

There were 14,276,000 international tourists in 2012; spending by tourists in 2012 totalled US$8.4bn.

Calendar

Saudi Arabia follows the Islamic hegira (AD 622, when Mohammed left Makkah for Madinah), which is based upon the lunar year of 354 days. The Islamic year 1437 corresponds to 15 Oct. 2015–2 Oct. 2016, and is the current lunar year.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

For much of the 1st millennium AD Senegal was under the influence of the gold-rich Ghana Empire of the Soninke people. In western Senegal the Takrur state was established in the 9th century. Islam was introduced in the 11th century by the Zenega Berbers of southern Mauritania, who gave their name to the region. The power of the Malinke (Madingo) in present-day Mali expanded in the 13th and 14th centuries, especially under Mansa Musa, who subjugated Takrur and the Tukulor in Senegal. The west was dominated by the Jolof empire, which fragmented into four kingdoms in the 16th century.

Portuguese trading colonies were established on Gorée Island and at Rufisque in around 1444, encouraging the growth of the slave trade. The Dutch took control of Senegalese trade in the 17th century, only to be evicted in 1677 by the French, based at Saint-Louis at the mouth of the Sénégal River. Inland, the Tukulor created a Muslim theocracy in Fouta Toro, usurping the Denianké Dynasty in 1776. Tukulor power grew in the 1850s under al-Hajj Umar Tal, whose jihad was contained by treaty with the French in 1857. Britain accepted French hegemony in the region in 1814 after half a century of colonial rivalry, while retaining the Gambia River. Railway construction in 1879 cemented French control over western Senegal and Dakar became the capital of French West Africa in 1904. Casamance and eastern Senegal were conquered in the 1890s.

Senegalese service in the French army in the First World War secured representation in Paris and French citizenship for Africans in certain communes. The colonial administration followed a moderate liberalization programme, including the right to form political parties and trade unions. However, the decline in the groundnut trade in the 1930s increased poverty in Senegal. The expansion of the vote after the Second World War gave support to the Democratic Bloc (BDS), which joined the Socialist Party to become the Progressive Union (UPS), dominating the 1959 elections in the newly autonomous Senegal. Membership of the French Community lasted until independence on 20 June 1960 as part of the Federation of Mali with French Soudan (Mali); the Federation was dissolved on 20 Aug. 1960.

Leopold Sédar Senghor, the BDS founder and leader of the UPS, was elected president on 5 Sept. 1960. Relations with his prime minister, Mamadou Dia, deteriorated and Senghor had him arrested in Dec. 1962 after an attempted coup. Presidential power was augmented by referendum in 1963, allowing Senghor to ban all other parties in 1966. Senghor appointed Abdou Diouf prime minister in 1973 and began relaxing political restrictions. Abdoulaye Wade founded the Democratic Party (PDS) and a Marxist-Leninist party was formed. Recession and political agitation forced Senghor's resignation in Dec. 1980; Diouf succeeded and was confirmed by elections in 1983, 1988 and 1993.

Diouf pursued a vigorous foreign policy via the Organization of African Unity and the Economic Community of West African States. He reinstated the Gambian president, Sir Dawda Jawara, in 1981, creating the Senegambian confederation, which lasted until 1989. Unrest in the southern Casamance region escalated into secessionist civil war in the early 1990s. A skirmish on the Mauritanian border in 1989 resulted in the death of Senegalese and Mauritanians expatriates and the closing of the border, a dispute not resolved until 1994. The deterioration of the economy and the Casamance crisis led to electoral defeat in 2000. He conceded peacefully, handing power to his long-term rival, PDS leader Abdoulaye Wade. Wade was re-elected in 2007 and received legal dispensation to contest a third term in 2012, despite the constitution of 2001 limiting presidents to two terms of office. The decision prompted popular protests, leading to Macky Sall defeating Wade to become the new president in April 2012.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Senegal is bounded by Mauritania to the north and northeast, Mali to the east, Guinea and Guinea-Bissau to the south and the Atlantic to the west with The Gambia forming an enclave along that shore. A short section of the boundary with The Gambia is undefined. Area, 196,712 sq. km, including 4,190 sq. km of inland water. Population (2013 census), 13,508,715 (50.1% female). Density, 70.2 per sq. km. In 2011 the population was 42.7% urban.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 15-13m.

About 2m. Senegalese live abroad, particularly in France, Italy, Spain and the USA.

The areas, populations and capitals of the regions are:

Region	Area (in sq. km)	Population 2013 census	Capital
Dakar	547	3,137,196	Dakar
Diourbel	4,824	1,497,455	Diourbel

Dakar, the capital, had a census population in 2013 of 2,646,503. Other large cities (with 2013 census population figures) are: Touba (753,315), Thiès (317,763), Kaolack (233,708), Mbour (232,777), Rufisque (221,066) and Saint-Louis (209,752).

Ethnic groups are the Wolof (36% of the population), Fulani (16%), Serer (16%), Diola (9%), Tukulor (9%), Bambara (6%), Malinké (6%) and Sarakole (2%).

The official language is French; Wolof is widely spoken.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2005 estimates: births, 430,000; deaths, 132,000. Rates, 2005 estimates (per 1,000 population): births, 39.4; deaths, 12.1. Annual population growth rate, 2000–05, 2.8%; infant mortality, 2010, 50 per 1,000 live births. Life expectancy in 2007 was 53.9 years for men and 56.9 for women. Fertility rate, 2008, 5.0 births per woman. 51% of the population were living in poverty in 2005.

CLIMATE

A tropical climate with wet and dry seasons. The rains fall almost exclusively in the hot season, from June to Oct., with high humidity. Dakar, Jan. 72°F (22.2°C), July 82°F (27.8°C). Annual rainfall 22" (541 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

A new constitution was approved by a referendum held on 7 Jan. 2001. The head of state is the President, elected by universal suffrage for not more than two five-year terms (previously two seven-year terms). However, in Jan. 2012 the incumbent, Abdoulaye Wade won a court ruling allowing him to run for a third term on the grounds that the constitutional provision was not enacted until a year after his first term of office had begun. The President has the power to dissolve the National Assembly, without the agreement, as had been the case, of a two-thirds majority. The new constitution also abolished the upper house (the Senate), confirmed the status of the prime minister and for the first time gave women the right to own land. Senegal has a bicameral legislature. For the 150-member National Assembly, 90 members are elected by simple majority vote in single or multi-member constituencies for five years with 60 elected by a system of party-list proportional representation. The Senate was re-established in Jan. 2007 six years after being dissolved. In Sept. 2012 parliament voted to abolish it after severe floods hit Senegal, with the money that would be saved going towards improving the country's flood defences and aid for flood victims.

National Anthem

'Pincez tous vos koras, frappez les balafos' ('All pluck the koras, strike the balafos'); words by Léopold Sédar Senghor, tune by Herbert Pepper.

RECENT ELECTIONS

Presidential elections took place on 26 Feb. 2012. Incumbent Abdoulaye Wade won 34.8% of the vote, ahead of former prime minister Macky Sall with 26.6%, Moustapha Niasse with 13.2% and Ousmane Tanor Dieng with 11.3%. There were ten other candidates. Turnout was 51.6%. In the run-off held on 25 March, Sall won 65.8% of the vote and Wade 34.2%. Turnout was 55.0%.

Parliamentary elections were held on 1 July 2012. Turnout was 36.8%. The United in Hope coalition backing President Macky Sall took 119 of the 150 seats in the National Assembly and the Senegalese Democratic Party 12 with smaller parties taking four seats or fewer. Of the 150 members of parliament there were 64 women (42.7%), among the highest percentages of women MPs in the world. A law on gender parity in electoral lists was introduced in 2010, at which time there were only 33 women MPs.

In indirect elections to the Senate held on 19 Aug. 2007 the Senegalese Democratic Party won 34 of the available 35 seats, with one going to And-Jëf/African Party for Democracy and Socialism. Elections were then scheduled for Sept. 2012, but shortly beforehand the president proposed to abolish the Senate and return to a unicameral chamber. Parliament approved the abolition.

CURRENT LEADERS

Macky Sall

Position

President

Introduction

Macky Sall, a former prime minister under President Wade and founder of the liberal Alliance for the Republic (APR), was elected president in March 2012. Having broken with Wade's administration over issues of transparency and public spending, Sall pledged to cut the size of government and tackle Senegal's long-standing problems of unemployment, poor infrastructure and food insecurity.

Early Life

Macky Sall was born on 11 Dec. 1961 in Fatick, western Senegal. After graduating in geological engineering from Cheikh Anta Diop University, Dakar, he completed further studies in geophysics at the French Petroleum Institute in Paris from 1992–93. He worked for the state-owned oil company PETROSEN from 1994–2000.

A member of Wade's Senegalese Democratic Party (PDS), Sall became general secretary of its Fatick regional convention in 1998. Following the PDS victory at elections in 2000, he served as director general of PETROSEN from Dec. 2000 until July 2001. He was special presidential adviser on energy and mines from April 2000 to May 2001, and from 2001–03 served as minister for mines, energy and hydraulics.

Sall became mayor of Fatick in 2002 and from 2003–04 was minister of the interior and government spokesperson. In April 2004 he was appointed prime minister by President Wade.

He served until June 2007, when he was elected president of the National Assembly. In Nov. 2007, after Sall initiated an enquiry into spending by an agency headed by the president's son, the term of the National Assembly president was reduced to one year, prompting his resignation.

In Dec. 2008 Sall founded the APR and in 2009 was again elected mayor of Fatick. Against a background of rising public discontent with the government and anger at Wade's decision to circumvent constitutional limits and stand for a third term as president, Sall ran a vigorous 2012 presidential campaign. Arguing for cuts in public spending and increased transparency, he proposed halving the size of government and reducing Senegal's diplomatic representation abroad, using the savings to reduce food prices. He also promised to attract foreign investment to boost the economy and develop infrastructure.

After claiming second place in the first round of voting, Sall won the support of 12 eliminated opposition candidates and on 25 March 2012 took almost 66% of the vote in a run-off. Wade conceded defeat and Sall was sworn in on 2 April 2012.

Career in Office

Sall took office promising to tackle corruption and deliver economic growth, while dealing with severe food crises in the drought-stricken Sahel region. He was also expected to enter negotiations with neighbouring The Gambia to end three decades of conflict in the southern Casamance region (where a ceasefire was subsequently declared in May 2014). In Sept. 2013 he dismissed the prime minister, Abdoul Mbaye, and replaced him with Aminata Touré, previously the justice minister, who became the country's second woman premier. However, she was dismissed in July 2014 and was replaced by Mohamed Dionne, a technocrat.

DEFENCE

There is selective conscription for two years. Defence expenditure totalled US$231m. in 2013 (US$17 per capita), representing 1.6% of GDP.

Army

There are four military zones. The Army had a strength of 11,900 (including conscripts) in 2011. There is also a paramilitary force of gendarmerie and customs of 5,000.

Navy

Personnel (2011) totalled 950, and bases are at Dakar and Casamance.

Air Force

The Air Force, formed with French assistance, has one combat-capable aircraft. Personnel (2011) 770.

ECONOMY

Agriculture accounted for 17% of GDP in 2012, industry 24% and services 59%.

Overview

In contrast to many of its West African neighbours, Senegal enjoys social and political stability and is open to the outside world. Annual GDP growth averaged 3.3% from 2006 to 2013, markedly below the sub-Saharan average of 6.0% and down from 4.5% between 1995 and 2006. A development strategy launched in Nov. 2014, known as Plan Sénégal Emergent (PSE), aims to transform the lower-middle income nation into an emerging economy by 2035.

The service sector accounted for 58.8% of GDP in 2014, having grown rapidly since the 1990s (especially transportation and telecommunications). Construction is also important as is agriculture, although the agricultural sector is in long-term decline. In 2000 Senegal became eligible for the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries (HIPC) initiative, reaching the completion point of the initiative in 2004 and so earning debt relief totalling US$850m.

The economy has historically been plagued by a weak business environment, poor infrastructure and an inefficient energy sector. The ebola crisis in 2014 led to lower-than-expected tourist arrivals, which—coupled with poor harvests—restricted growth to 4.7%, despite buoyant services and construction sectors. The PSE envisages increasing GDP—and so reducing poverty and unemployment—by attracting private and foreign direct investment.

The port of Dakar serves as an important centre of trade in West Africa. A 20-ha. dry port project was completed in 2009 while Jafza International of Dubai is developing a Special Economic Zone adjacent to Dakar International Airport. Oil exploration in the Casamance region offers potential for future revenue streams, although work has been hampered by weak transportation links and civil unrest.

Currency

The unit of currency is the franc CFA (XOF) with a parity of 655.957 francs CFA to one euro. In June 2005 total money supply was 930,246m. francs CFA and foreign exchange reserves totalled US$1,380m. There was inflation of 0.7% in 2013 but deflation of 1.1% in 2014.

Budget

Revenues in 2012 totalled 1,723bn. francs CFA (tax revenue, 82.5%) and expenditures 2,157bn. francs CFA (current expenditure, 59.4%).

VAT is 18%.

Performance

Real GDP growth was 4.4% in 2012, 3.6% in 2013 and 4.7% in 2014. Total GDP in 2014 was US$15.7bn.

Banking and Finance

The Banque Centrale des États de l'Afrique de l'Ouest is the bank of issue of the franc CFA for all the countries of the West African Economic and Monetary Union (Benin, Burkina Faso, Côte d'Ivoire, Guinea-Bissau, Mali, Niger, Senegal and Togo) but has had its headquarters in Dakar, the Senegalese capital, since 1973. Its Governor is Tiémoko Meyliet Koné. There are eight commercial banks, the largest including Banque Internationale pour le Commerce et l'Industrie and Banque de l'Habitat. There are also four development banks and an Islamic bank. Only about 5% of the population have bank accounts.

External debt amounted to US$3,677m. in 2010. As a share of GNI, external debt fell from 78.7% in 2000 to 28.5% in 2010.

Senegal is affiliated to the regional BRVM stock exchange (serving the member states of the West African Economic and Monetary Union), based in Abidjan, Côte d'Ivoire.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Senegal's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2011 were the equivalent of 0.5 tonnes per capita.

Electricity

In 2011 installed capacity was an estimated 0.6m. kW. Production in 2011 was 2.71bn. kWh and consumption per capita 222 kWh.

Minerals

Output, 2008, included (in tonnes): sand, 6.4m.; calcium phosphate, 645,000; salt, 241,000. Annual gold production was approximately 600 kg for many years but increased to over 5,000 tonnes in 2009 following the opening of a new mine in 2008.

Agriculture

Because of erratic rainfall 25% of agricultural land needs irrigation. Most land is owned under customary rights and holdings tend to be small. In 2007 the economically active population engaged in agriculture was an estimated 3,750,000. In 2006 approximately 2.99m. ha. were used as arable land and 52,000 ha. for permanent crops. An estimated 63,000 ha. were irrigated in 2006. There were about 700 tractors in use in 2006 and 155 harvester-threshers. Production, 2005–06 (in 1,000 tonnes): sugarcane, 829; groundnuts, 703; millet, 609; maize, 400; rice, 289; cassava, 281; watermelons, 241; tomatoes, 161; sorghum, 144; onions, 76; mangoes, 62.

Livestock (2006): 5.00m. sheep; 4.26m. goats; 3.14m. cattle; 518,000 horses; 415,000 asses; 318,000 pigs.

Meat production (2006, in 1,000 tonnes): beef and veal, 69; lamb and mutton, 17; goat meat, 12; pork and pork products, and camel, 5. Milk production (2006, in 1,000 litres): cow's milk, 135; goat's milk, 46; sheep's milk, 31.

Forestry

Forests covered 8.47m. ha. in 2010 (44% of the land area), down from 9.35m. ha. in 1990 and 8.90m. ha. in 2000. Roundwood production in 2011 amounted to 6.26m. cu. metres.

Fisheries

In 2012 the total catch was an estimated 461,000 tonnes, around 93% of which came from sea fishing.

INDUSTRY

Predominantly agricultural and fish processing, phosphate mining, petroleum refining and construction materials.

Labour

The labour force in 2013 was 6,118,000 (4,484,000 in 2003). 78.0% of the population aged 15–64 was economically active in 2013. In the same year 10.3% of the population was unemployed.

Senegal had 0.10m. people living in slavery according to the Walk Free Foundation's 2013 Global Slavery Index.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

In 2010 imports (f.o.b.) totalled US$4,782.2m. and exports (f.o.b.) US$2,088.1m. Chief imports: petroleum and petroleum products, food and live animals, and machinery and transport equipment. Chief exports: fish, petroleum and petroleum products, and chemicals and related products. Main import suppliers, 2010: France, 19.7%; Nigeria, 10.2%; China, 8.3%; Netherlands, 5.3%; UK, 4.9%; Main export markets, 2010: Mali, 26.1%; India, 10.0%; Switzerland, 7.9%; Bunkers and ship stores, 7.6%; France, 4.6%.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

The length of roads in 2006 was 14,805 km, of which 29.3% were paved. In 2008 there were 205,704 passenger cars, 56,795 trucks and vans and 15,982 coaches. There were 320 deaths as a result of road accidents in 2007.

Rail

There were previously four railway lines but the total length of the track fell from 1,034 km (metre gauge) in 1986 to 645 km in 2005. Only the Dakar–Kidira line (continuing in Mali) is still theoretically in service although traffic was suspended in 2003 and again since 2009 owing to the poor state of the track. There is also a suburban rail service linking Dakar and Rufisque, which carried 4.9m. passengers in 2009. In 2009, 364,000 tonnes of freight were carried.

Civil Aviation

The international airport is at Dakar/Yoff (Léopold Sédar Senghor), which handled 1,882,242 passengers and 21,816 tonnes of freight in 2008. Air Sénégal International was 49% state-owned and 51% owned by Royal Air Maroc (RAM). After an attempted takeover bid by the government to gain 64% of the shares, RAM pulled out of the airline and flights were suspended on 24 April 2009 owing to financial difficulties. Sénégal Airlines was launched as a replacement national carrier in Oct. 2009. It is 64% privately-controlled with the Senegalese government owning the remaining 36% of shares. Flights, initially only within Africa, commenced in Jan. 2011.

Shipping

In Jan. 2009 there were three ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 5,000 GT. 10.6m. tonnes of freight were handled in the port of Dakar in 2008. There is a river service on the Senegal from Saint-Louis to Podor (363 km) open throughout the year, and to Kayes (924 km) open from July to Oct. The Senegal River is closed to foreign flags. The Saloum River is navigable as far as Kaolack, the Casamance River as far as Ziguinchor.

Telecommunications

In 2013 there were 343,700 main (fixed) telephone lines; mobile phone subscriptions numbered 13,134,000 that year (92.9 per 100 persons). In 2013 an estimated 20.9% of the population were internet users. In June 2012 there were 666,000 Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

There are juges de paix in each département and a court of first instance in each region. Assize courts are situated in Dakar, Kaolack, Saint-Louis and Ziguinchor, while the Court of Appeal resides in Dakar. The death penalty, last used in 1967, was abolished in Dec. 2004.

The population in penal institutions in Dec. 2012 was 8,428 (64 per 100,000 of national population). In 2015 the World Justice Project Rule of Law Index, which provides data on how the rule of law is experienced by the general public across eight categories, ranked Senegal 52nd of 102 countries for criminal justice and 46th for civil justice.

Education

The adult literacy rate in 2006 was 42%. In 2007 there were 1,572,178 pupils (45,957 teaching staff) in primary schools; 505,097 pupils (20,007 teaching staff) in secondary schools; and 76,949 students in tertiary education. There are two public universities (Cheikh Anta Diop and Gaston Berger) and three private universities (Dakar Bourguiba, Sahel and Suffolk).

In 2006 public expenditure on education came to 4.9% of GNI and 26.3% of total government spending.

Health

In 2006 there were 22 hospitals, 68 health centres and 949 health posts. In 2004–05 medical personnel in government service included: 765 doctors, 64 dentists, 54 pharmacists, 546 midwives and 874 nurses. In 2003 there were 551 doctors and 567 midwives in the private sector. Senegal has been one of the most successful countries in Africa in the prevention of AIDS. Levels of infection have remained low, with the anti-AIDS programme having started as far back as 1986. The infection rate has been kept below 2%.

RELIGION

According to a study by the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life, in 2010 there were an estimated 11.98m. Muslims (equivalent to 96.4% of the population). Most Muslims in Senegal are members of Sufi brotherhoods—Sufis are often described as being 'mystic' Sunnis. There were also an estimated 450,000 Christians in 2010, around 93% of whom were Catholics. There was one Roman Catholic cardinal in Feb. 2016.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

Gorée Island, off the coast of Senegal, was added to the UNESCO World Heritage List in 1978. It was formerly the largest slave trading centre on the African coast. The Djoudj Sanctuary in the Senegal River delta (added in 1981), protects 1.5m. birds, including the white pelican, the purple heron, the African spoonbill, the great egret and the cormorant. Niokolo-Koba

National Park, along the banks of the Gambia River (added in 1981), is home to the Derby eland (largest of the antelopes), chimpanzees, lions, leopards and a large population of elephants as well as many birds, reptiles and amphibians. The Island of Saint-Louis joined the UNESCO list in 2000 (reinscribed in 2007), as a reminder of its status as the capital between 1872 and 1957. The Saloum Delta (2011) comprises brackish channels encompassing over 200 islands and islets and is marked by numerous shellfish mounds produced by its human inhabitants over 2,000 years. The Bassari Country, comprising the Bassari-Salémata area, the Bedik-Bandafassi area and the Fula-Dindéfello area, was added to the UNESCO list in 2012. The site houses original and still vibrant cultures of the Bassari, Fula and Bedik peoples, featuring their original traits of agro-pastoral, social, ritual and spiritual practices.

Senegal shares a UNESCO site with The Gambia: the Stone Circles of Senegambia (added in 2006) are a collection of 93 stone circles, tumuli and burial mounds from between the 3rd century BC and the 16th century AD.

Press

In 2008 there were 26 daily newspapers with a total average circulation of 123,000 copies and 30 non-dailies.

Tourism

In 2011 there were 968,000 international tourist arrivals (excluding same-day visitors), up from 900,000 in 2010.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

The Serbs were converted to Orthodox Christianity by the Byzantines in 891, before becoming a prosperous independent state under Stevan Nemanja (1167–96). A Serbian Patriarchate was established at Peć during the reign of Stevan Dušan (1331–55). Dušan's attempted conquest of Constantinople failed and after he died many Serbian nobles accepted Turkish vassalage. The reduced Serbian state under Prince Lazar received the coup de grace at Kosovo on St Vitus' Day, 1389. However, Turkish preoccupations with a Mongol invasion and wars with Hungary delayed the incorporation of Serbia into the Ottoman Empire until 1459.

The Turks tolerated the Orthodox church though the Patriarchate was abolished in 1776. The native aristocracy was eliminated and replaced by a system of fiefdoms held in return for military or civil service. Local self-government based on rural extended family units (zadruga) continued. In its heyday the Ottoman system was no harder on the peasantry than the Christian feudalism it had replaced, but with the gradual decline of Ottoman power, corruption, oppression and reprisals led to economic deterioration and social unrest.

In 1804, murders carried out by mutinous Turkish infantry provoked a Serbian rising under Đorđe Petrović (Karadžorđe). By the Treaty of Bucharest (1812) Russia agreed that Serbia, known as Servia until 1918, should remain Turkish. The Turks reoccupied Serbia with ferocious reprisals. A rebellion in 1815 was led by Miloš Obrenović who, with Russian support, won autonomy for Serbia within the Ottoman empire. Obrenović had Karadžorđe murdered in 1817. After he was forced to grant a constitution establishing a state council he abdicated in 1839. In 1842 a coup overthrew the Obrenovići and Alexander Karadžorđević was elected ruler. He was deposed in 1858.

During the reign of the western-educated Michael Obrenović (1860 until his assassination in 1868) the foundations of a modern centralized and militarized state were laid, and the idea of a 'Great Serbia', first enunciated in Prime Minister Garašanin's Draft Programme of 1844, took root. Milan Obrenović, adopting the title of king, proclaimed formal independence in 1882. He suffered defeats against Turkey (1876) and Bulgaria (1885) and abdicated in 1889. After Alexander Obrenović was assassinated in 1903 Peter Karadžorđević brought in a period of stable constitutional rule.

Serbia's aim to secure an outlet to the sea was thwarted by Austria. Annexing Bosnia in 1908, Austria forced the Serbs to withdraw from the Adriatic after the first Balkan war (1912).

The assassination of Archduke Franz Ferdinand of Austria in Sarajevo on 28 June 1914 precipitated the First World War. In the winter of 1915–16 the Serbian army was forced to retreat to Corfu, where the government aimed at a centralized, Serb-run state. But exiles from Croatia and Slovenia wanted a South Slav federation. This was accepted by the victorious Allies as the basis for the new state. The Croats were forced by the pressure of events to join Serbia and Montenegro on 1 Dec. 1918. From 1918–29 the country was known as the Kingdom of the Serbs, Croats and Slovenes.

A constitution of 1921 established an assembly but the trappings of parliamentary rule could not bridge the gulf between Serbs and Croats. The Croat peasant leader, Radić, was assassinated in 1928; his successor, Vlatko Maček, set up a separatist assembly in Zagreb. Faced with the threat of his kingdom's dissolution, on 6 Jan. 1929 the king suspended the constitution and established a royal dictatorship, redrawing provincial boundaries without regard for ethnicity and renaming the country Yugoslavia. In Oct. 1934 he was murdered by a Croat extremist while on an official visit to France.

During the regency of Prince Paul, the government pursued a pro-fascist line. On 25 March 1941 Paul was persuaded to adhere to the Axis Tripartite Pact. On 27 March he was overthrown by military officers in favour of the boy king Peter. Germany invaded on 6 April. Within ten days Yugoslavia surrendered; king and government fled to London. Resistance was led by a royalist group and the communist-dominated partisans of Josip Broz, nicknamed Tito. Having succeeded in liberating Yugoslavia, Tito set up a Soviet-type constitution but he was too independent for Stalin who sought to topple him. However, Tito made a rapprochement with the west and it was the Soviet Union under Khrushchev that had to extend the olive branch in 1956. Yugoslavia was permitted to evolve its 'own road to socialism'. Collectivization of agriculture was abandoned and Yugoslavia became a champion of international 'non-alignment'. A collective presidency came into being with the death of Tito in 1980.

Dissensions in Kosovo between Albanians and Serbs, and in parts of Croatia between Serbs and Croats, reached crisis point after 1988. In 1988 the Serbian presidency fell to the nationalist Slobodan Milošević, who aimed at the creation of an enlarged Serbian state. On 25 June 1991 Croatia and Slovenia declared independence. Fighting began in Croatia between Croatian forces and Serb irregulars from Serb-majority areas of Croatia. On 25 Sept. the UN Security Council imposed a mandatory arms embargo on Yugoslavia. A three-month moratorium agreed at EU peace talks on 30 June having expired, both Slovenia and Croatia declared their independence from the Yugoslav federation on 8 Oct. After 13 ceasefires had failed, a fourteenth was signed on 23 Nov. under UN auspices. A Security Council resolution of 27 Nov. proposed the deployment of a UN peacekeeping force if the ceasefire was kept. Fighting, however, continued. On 15 Jan. 1992 the EU recognized Croatia and Slovenia as independent states. Bosnia and Herzegovina was recognized on 7 April 1992 and Macedonia on 8 April 1993. A UN delegation began monitoring the ceasefire on 17 Jan. and the UN Security Council on 21 Feb. voted to send a 14,000-strong peacekeeping force to Croatia and Yugoslavia. On 27 April 1992 Serbia and Montenegro created a new federal republic of Yugoslavia.

On 30 May, responding to further Serbian military activities in Bosnia and Croatia, the UN Security Council voted to impose sanctions. In mid-1992 NATO committed air, sea and eventually land forces to enforce sanctions and protect humanitarian relief operations in Bosnia. At a joint UN-EC peace conference on Yugoslavia held in London on 26–27 Aug. some 30 countries and all the former republics of Yugoslavia endorsed a plan to end the fighting in Croatia and Bosnia, install UN supervision of heavy weapons, recognize the borders of Bosnia and Herzegovina and return refugees. At a further conference at Geneva on 30 Sept. the Croatian and Yugoslav presidents agreed to make efforts to bring about a peaceful solution in Bosnia, but fighting continued. Following the Bosnian-Croatian-Yugoslav (Dayton) agreement all UN sanctions were lifted in Nov. 1995.

In July 1997 Slobodan Milošević switched his power base to become president of federal Yugoslavia. The former Yugoslav foreign minister, Milan Milutinović, succeeded Milošević as Serbian President. Meanwhile, in Montenegro, the pro-western Milo Đukanović succeeded a pro-Milošević president.

Following the break-up of Yugoslavia, in March 1998 a coalition government was formed between the Socialist Party of Slobodan Milošević and the ultra-nationalist Serb Radical Party.

Kosovo

In 1998 unrest in Kosovo, with its largely Albanian population, led to a bid for outright independence. Violence flared resulting in what a US official described as 'horrendous human rights violations', including massive shelling of civilians and destruction of villages. A US-mediated agreement for negotiations to proceed during an interim period of autonomy allowed for food and medicine to be delivered to refugees. American support for a degree of autonomy (short of independence), accepted in principle by President Milošević, lifted the immediate threat of NATO air strikes. Further outbreaks of violence in early 1999 were followed by the departure of the 800-strong team of international 'verifiers' of the fragile peace. Peace talks in Paris broke down without a settlement though subsequently Albanian freedom fighters accepted terms allowing them broad autonomy. The sticking point on the Serbian side was the international insistence on having 28,000 NATO-led peacemakers in Kosovo to keep apart the warring factions. Meanwhile, the scale of Serbian repression in Kosovo persuaded the NATO allies to take direct action. On the night of 24 March 1999 NATO aircraft began a bombing campaign against Yugoslavian military targets. Further Serbian provocation in Kosovo caused hundreds of thousands of ethnic Albanians to seek refuge in neighbouring countries. On 9 June after 78 days of air attacks NATO and Yugoslavia signed an accord on the Serb withdrawal from Kosovo, and on 11 June NATO's peacekeeping force, KFOR, entered Kosovo.

When the general election held on 24 Sept. 2000 resulted in a victory for the opposition democratic leader Vojislav Koštunica, President Milošević demanded a second round of voting. A strike by miners at the Kolubara coal mine on 29 Sept. was followed by a mass demonstration in Belgrade on 5 Oct. when the parliament building was set on fire. On 6 Oct. Slobodan Milošević accepted defeat. He was arrested on 1 April 2001 after a 30-hour confrontation with the authorities. On 28 June he was handed over to the United Nations War Crimes Tribunal in The Hague to face charges of crimes against humanity. Prime Minister Zoran Žižić resigned the next day. On 12 Feb. 2002 the trial of Slobodan Milošević, on charges of genocide and war crimes in the Balkans over a period of nearly ten years, began at the International Criminal Tribunal in The Hague. However, Milošević's death in March 2006 from heart failure while in the custody of the Tribunal brought proceedings to a close.

On 14 March 2002 Serbia and Montenegro agreed to remain part of a single entity called Serbia and Montenegro, thus relegating the name Yugoslavia to history. The agreement was ratified in principle by the federal parliament and the republican parliaments of Serbia and Montenegro on 9 April 2002. The new union came into force on 4 Feb. 2003. The country's fragile political structures came under the spotlight on 12 March 2003 when the Serbian prime minister Zoran Đinđić, a key figure in the toppling of the Milošević regime, was shot dead on the stairway of Serbia's chief government building.

After 4 Feb. 2006 Serbia and Montenegro had the right to vote for independence. Following a referendum on 21 May 2006, Montenegro declared independence and was recognized as such by Serbia on 15 June. As a result of Montenegro's vote, Serbia's parliament formally proclaimed Serbia to be independent for the first time since 1918 on 5 June 2006.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Serbia is bounded in the northwest by Croatia, in the north by Hungary, in the northeast by Romania, in the east by Bulgaria, in the south by Macedonia and in the west by Albania, Montenegro and Bosnia and Herzegovina. According to the constitution it includes the two provinces of Kosovo and Metohija in the south and Vojvodina in the north. With these Serbia's area is 88,361 sq. km; without, 55,968 sq. km. Population at the 2011 census was (with Vojvodina but without Kosovo and Metohija) 7,186,862; population density per sq. km, 92.8. Population at the 2011 census without both Vojvodina and Kosovo and Metohija was 5,255,053. The population was 56.4% urban in 2011. June 2014 population estimate: 7,131,787.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 8.85m.

The capital is Belgrade (2011 census population, 1,166,763). Populations (2011 census) of principal towns:

Belgrade	1,166,763	Subotica	97,910

The official language is Serbian.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

In 2008 there were a total of 69,083 live births in Serbia (without Kosovo and Metohija), a rate of 9.4 per 1,000 inhabitants. There were 102,711 deaths (14.0 per 1,000) and 38,285 marriages (5.2 per 1,000). Population growth rate, 2005–10, –0.6%. Life expectancy in 2013 was 71.3 years for men and 76.9 for women. Infant mortality was 6 per 1,000 live births in 2010.

CLIMATE

Most parts have a central European type of climate, with cold winters and hot summers. Belgrade, Jan. 1-4°C, July 23-0°C. Annual rainfall 687 mm.

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

A new constitution was approved in a referendum held on 28–29 Oct. 2006, with 53.0% of the electorate (and 96.6% of those voting) supporting the proposed constitution. It declares the province of Kosovo and Metohija an integral part of Serbia and grants Vojvodina financial autonomy. Kosovo Albanians were not able to vote. Turnout was 54.9%. The President is elected by universal suffrage for not more than two five-year terms. There is a 250-member single-chamber National Assembly.

National Anthem

‘Bože pravde’ (‘God of Justice’); words by Jovan Đorđević, tune by Davorin Jenko.

RECENT ELECTIONS

Parliamentary elections were held on 24 April 2016. The coalition led by the Serbian Progressive Party (SNS) won 131 seats (48.3% of the vote); the Socialist Party of Serbia–United Serbia–Greens–Communist Party (SPS–JS–ZS–KP) coalition, 29 (11.0%); the Serbian Radical Party (SRS), 22 (8.1%); Enough is Enough, 16 (6.1%); the coalition led by the Democratic Party (DS), 16 (6.1%). The remaining seats went to smaller parties. Turnout was 56.3%.

First round of presidential elections were held on 6 May 2012. Boris Tadić (DS) took 25.3% of the vote, followed by Tomislav Nikolić (SNS) with 25.0%, Ivica Dačić (SPS) with 14.2% and Vojislav Koštunica (DSS) with 7.4%. There were eight other candidates. In the run-off held on 20 May 2012, Nikolić won with 49.5% of the vote against 47.3% for Tadić. Turnout was 57.8% in the first round and 46.3% in the second.

CURRENT LEADERS

Tomislav Nikolić

Position

President

Introduction

Tomislav Nikolić was elected president in May 2012. Once an ultra-nationalist, he reinvented himself as a moderate supporting Serbian EU membership while maintaining Serbian claims over Kosovo.

Early Life

Born on 15 Dec. 1952 in Kragujevac, Nikolić was educated there and in Novi Sad. He worked in building construction from 1971–78 before taking up an investment and management role with a company in Kragujevac.

A member of the National Radical Party, in Feb. 1991 he oversaw its merger with the Serb National Renewal Party to form the ultra-nationalist Serb Radical Party (SRS). In the same year he became party vice-president under the leadership of Vojislav Šešelj and was elected to the National Assembly.

The SRS formed periodic alliances with the governments of Slobodan Milošević in the 1990s, endorsing military action in Bosnia and Kosovo and advocating the formation of a ‘Greater Serbia’. Nikolić served as deputy prime minister of Serbia from March 1998–Nov. 1999 and deputy premier of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia from 1999–2000. In 2000, 2003 and 2004 he launched unsuccessful bids for the national presidency, each time unsuccessfully.

In Feb. 2003 Nikolić took over the leadership of the SRS after Šešelj was indicted for war crimes by the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia (ICTY). In 2007 he was briefly speaker of the National Assembly and in 2008 again stood for the presidency, losing narrowly to the incumbent Boris Tadić. In Sept. 2008 Nikolić broke with the SRS and formed the Serbian Progressive Party (SNS) following Šešelj’s accusations that he had betrayed SRS ideology by expressing support for EU accession rather than looking towards Russia as Šešelj advocated. Nonetheless, Nikolić did not abandon the nationalist agenda, arguing that Kosovo remained an integral part of Serbia and rejecting its declaration of independence in Feb. 2008.

In April 2011 Nikolić led an unsuccessful bid to bring about early elections amid growing public frustration at rampant corruption and the country’s grave economic situation. He contested his fifth presidential election in 2012 and won despite controversy over his political and educational track records. He defeated Tadić in a second round of voting on 20 May 2012 and resigned the leadership of the SNS.

Career in Office

Nikolić was sworn into office on 31 May 2012 and had to contend with a struggling economy and high unemployment. He also faced opposition to Serbia’s EU membership application, notably over the refusal to recognize Kosovo’s independence. However, in April 2013 an EU-brokered agreement was reached whereby Serbia recognized Kosovan government authority over the province in return for a measure of autonomy for Serbs living in the territory. Consequently, formal talks on Serbia’s EU accession bid were able to begin in Brussels in Jan. 2014.

Aleksandar Vučić

Position

Prime Minister

Introduction

Aleksandar Vučić became prime minister in April 2014. Formerly a nationalist who served as minister of information in the Milošević government of the 1990s, Vučić leads the centrist Serbian Progressive Party (SNS) and promotes Serbian accession to the European Union.

Early Life

Born on 5 March 1970, Vučić graduated in law from the University of Belgrade and spent a further year studying in the UK. In 1993 he joined the nationalist Serbian Radical Party (SRS) and was elected to parliament, becoming a vocal supporter of ethnic Serb leaders during the war in Bosnia that ran from 1992 until 1995. In 1994 he became secretary general of the SRS, and in 1996 was appointed director of the publicly-funded Pinki centre for sports and business in Belgrade.

From 1998–2000 he served as minister of information under President Milošević, introducing controversial curbs on press freedom and foreign media. Following the SRS' defeat at the 2000 general election and the departure of its leader Vojislav Šešelj in 2003 to face war crimes charges, Vučić worked with deputy leader Tomislav Nikolić to steer the party away from its extreme nationalist position. In 2008 Vučić joined Nikolić's newly-founded SNS, becoming its deputy leader. Following victory for the SNS-led coalition in the 2012 general election, Nikolić won the presidency in May 2012. Vučić took over the party leadership in Sept. 2012, having been elected to the post unopposed.

From July 2012–Aug. 2013 Vučić was defence minister and first deputy prime minister under Prime Minister Ivica Dačić of the Socialist Party. Vučić also had responsibility for tackling corruption and crime. During this period, he led negotiations to normalize Serbian–Kosovan relations, agreement on which was a prerequisite for Serbia's accession to the EU. Shortly after formal accession talks began, Nikolić called a snap election with a view to winning the SNS a greater mandate. Vučić campaigned on pledges to combat corruption and boost the economy and won a landslide victory in March 2014.

Career in Office

Vučić renewed the SNS–Socialist coalition and was sworn in as prime minister on 27 April 2014. Domestically, he has faced the challenges of implementing austerity measures at a time of hardship, while also tackling corruption and meeting EU requirements on civil rights issues. Internationally, relations with neighbouring states remain delicate, with additional tensions in the traditionally close ties with Russia caused by Serbia's desire for EU membership. In Nov. 2014 the International Monetary Fund agreed a standby arrangement to bolster economic reform in Serbia. In the same month, against the backdrop of continuing bilateral tensions over the status of Kosovo, Edi Rama made the first visit by an Albanian prime minister to Serbia in nearly 70 years.

Like several other regional neighbours, Serbia was confronted in 2015 with an influx of foreign migrants—many from war-torn Syria—heading for the more prosperous northern EU countries. In Aug. Vučić maintained that he would not close Serbia's borders to refugees but called on EU leaders to frame a plan for dealing with the tide.

Seeking an early mandate to continue reforms, Vučić and the SNS claimed victory in parliamentary elections in April 2016.

DEFENCE

Conscription was abolished with effect from 1 Jan. 2011. In 2013 defence expenditure totalled US$681m. (US$94 per capita), representing 1.6% of GDP.

Army

Strength (2011) 12,260 including 1,800 conscripts. Equipment in 2011 included 212 main battle tanks and 323 armoured infantry fighting vehicles.

Air Force

The Air Force and Air Defence had a strength in 2011 of 4,262 including 477 conscripts. There were 84 combat-capable aircraft in 2011.

ECONOMY

Agriculture accounted for 9% of GDP in 2012, industry 30% and services 61%.

Overview

The Serbian economy contracted by over 3% in 2009 as a result of the global financial crisis, having enjoyed 5%+ annual growth between 2005 and 2008. Unemployment rose from 11% in 2008 to 24% in 2011. 9.2% of the population was living under the poverty line in 2010. With 90% of exports sold to Europe and 55% into the eurozone, the ongoing eurozone crisis is an impediment to mid- to long-term economic health.

Foreign debt stands at 55% of GDP. In light of a balance of payments crisis, in 2009 Serbia replaced a US$250m. IMF standby loan with a €3bn. 27-month loan agreement. The government aims to secure membership of the EU, with candidate status agreed on 1 March 2013.

Currency

The unit of currency of Serbia is the dinar (RSD) of 100 paras. On 1 Jan. 2001 Yugoslavia adopted a managed float regime. The National Bank of Yugoslavia began setting the exchange rate of the dinar daily in the foreign exchange market on the previous day. In Kosovo both the dinar and the euro are legal tender. Inflation was 7.7% in 2013 and 2.1% in 2014.

Budget

(Excluding Kosovo and Metohija). Revenues in 2011 totalled 1,323bn. dinars (of which tax revenue, 87.0%) and expenditures 1,466bn. dinars (of which current expenditure, 90.0%).

VAT is 20% (reduced rate 8%).

Performance

The economy contracted by 1.0% in 2012 but recovered to grow by 2.6% in 2013. It then shrank again in 2014, by 1.8%. Total GDP was US$43.9bn. in 2014.

Banking and Finance

The National Bank is the bank of issue responsible for the monetary policy, stability of the currency of Serbia, the dinar, control of the money supply and prescribing the method of maintaining internal and external liquidity. The dinar became fully convertible in May 2002. The present Governor of the National Bank of Serbia is Jorgovanka Tabaković.

Foreign debt amounted to US$32,222m. in 2010, representing 84.3% of GNI.

There is a stock exchange in Belgrade.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Electricity

In 2011 installed capacity was an estimated 8.5m. kW. Production in 2011 was 38.60bn. kWh and consumption per capita 3,993 kWh.

Minerals

(Excluding Kosovo and Metohija, in 1,000 tonnes). 2012: brown coal and lignite, 38,587; copper ore, 14,346 tonnes.

Agriculture

(Excluding Kosovo and Metohija). In 2007 the sown area was 3,095,006 ha. Yields in 2008 (in 1,000 tonnes): maize, 6,158; sugar beets, 2,300; wheat (2007), 1,864; potatoes, 844; plums, 607; sunflower seeds, 454; grapes, 373; soybeans, 351; barley (2007), 259; apples, 236. Kosovo and Metohija

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Kosovo has a large ethnic Albanian majority. Following Albanian-Serb conflicts, the Kosovo and Serbian parliaments adopted constitutional amendments in March 1989 surrendering much of Kosovo's autonomy to Serbia. Renewed Albanian rioting broke out in 1990. The Prime Minister and six other ministers resigned in April 1990 over ethnic conflicts. In July 1990, 114 of the 130 Albanian members of the National Assembly voted for full republican status for Kosovo but the Serbian National Assembly declared this vote invalid and unanimously voted to dissolve the Kosovo Assembly. Direct Serbian rule was imposed causing widespread violence. Western demands for negotiations in granting Kosovo some kind of special status were rejected. Ibrahim Rugova, the leader of the main Albanian party, the Democratic League of Kosovo (LDK), declared himself 'president' demanding talks on independence. In 1998 armed conflict between Yugoslavia and the Kosovo Liberation Army led 200,000 people, or a tenth of the population of the province, to flee the fighting. Further repression by Serbian forces led to the threat of NATO direct action. Air strikes against Yugoslavian military targets began on 24 March 1999. Retaliation against Albanian Kosovars led to a massive exodus of refugees. On 9 June after 78 days of air attacks NATO and Yugoslavia signed an accord on the Serb withdrawal from Kosovo, and on 11 June NATO's peacekeeping force, KFOR, entered Kosovo. In Nov. 2001 the Organization for Security and Co-operation in Europe mounted elections for a provincial assembly that were deemed fair and democratic.

The worst fighting between Serbs and Albanians since the end of the war claimed 19 lives in March 2004. The following March President Ramush Haradinaj resigned when he was indicted to face charges of war crimes at the UN tribunal in The Hague. In 2006 the UN sponsored talks on the future status of Kosovo and ethnic Serbian and Kosovan leaders met for the first time since 1999. In Oct. 2006 Serbia held a referendum that approved a new constitution keeping Kosovo as an integral part of the country. However, the Kosovan Albanian majority rejected the poll. In Feb. 2007 the UN announced plans for Kosovo's eventual independence that were immediately rejected by Serbia and heavily revised in July 2007 after Russian protests.

In Nov. 2007 Hashim Thaçi's Democratic Party of Kosovo won elections that were boycotted by the Serb minority. On 17 Feb. 2008 Kosovo made a unilateral declaration of independence though international recognition was patchy. Independence was recognized by the USA and EU member countries including Germany, France and the UK. However, Serbia rejected the declaration as did Russia, while Spain refused to support it and China expressed 'grave concern'. As such, Kosovo lacks recognition as a sovereign country by the UN and the EU although on 22 July 2010 the UN International Court of Justice gave an advisory ruling that the independence declaration was legal.

In April 2013 Serbia and Kosovo reached an EU-brokered agreement. While not recognizing Kosovo as an independent state, Serbia conceded its legal authority over the territory. In return, four Serb-majority areas in the north of Kosovo were to be granted limited autonomy. Both Serbia and Kosovo agreed that 'neither side will block, or encourage others to block, the other side's progress in their respective EU paths'.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Area: 10,887 sq. km. The capital is Priština. Censuses carried out in Serbia in 1991 and 2002 were not taken in Kosovo. The 1991 and 2002 censuses were not taken. According to the census of March 2011 the population was 1,780,021; density, 163 per sq. km. About 4% of the population are Serbs, mostly in the north of the country. Population of Priština, 2011, 145,149. Other major towns are Prizren, Gjiłan, Peć and Kosovska Mitrovica. Dec. 2014 population estimate: 1,804,944.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

Statistics for 2011: live births, 34,262; deaths, 7,556; marriages, 17,343; divorces, 1,469.

The constitution of Serbia defines the autonomous province of Kosovo and Metohija as an 'integral part' of the territory of Serbia with 'substantial autonomy'.

In April 2008 Kosovo's 120-member multi-ethnic parliamentary assembly (first convened on 10 Dec. 2001) approved a new constitution, which came into force on 15 June 2008. Its promulgation followed Kosovo's unilateral declaration of independence from Serbia in Feb. 2008 as the Republic of Kosovo. The constitution envisages a handover of executive power from the UN, which has been responsible for administration in the region since 1999, to the majority ethnic Albanian parliament, under the supervision of an EU team. It also specifies that Kosovo will 'have no territorial claim against, and shall seek no union with' any other state. However, the constitution was rejected by Serbia as it considers Kosovo to be part of its sovereign territory, while Russia claimed any EU involvement would be illegal as it had yet to be approved by the UN Security Council. In June 2008 an ethnic Serb assembly set up a rival administration in Mitrovica. The UN referred the declaration of independence to the International Court of Justice in Oct. 2008.

Kosovo came under interim international administration on 10 June 1999, in accordance with the terms of UN Security Council resolution 1244. The United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo (UNMIK) administered Kosovo following the arrival of KFOR (NATO-led peacekeeping force) and remained in place even after the Feb. 2008 declaration of independence. The unilateral declaration received a mixed response from the international community, with Serbia, Russia and Spain prominent among those nations who refused to recognize it. In Dec. 2008 EULEX, the European Union Rule of Law Mission in Kosovo, took over responsibility from the UN for policing, justice and customs services, with the agreement of Serbia.

There is a 120-member multi-ethnic parliamentary assembly, which first convened on 10 Dec. 2001. The new assembly brought together representatives of Kosovo's ethnic Albanian majority and its Serbian minority for the first time in more than a decade. Of the 120 members, 100 are directly elected with ten seats reserved for ethnic Serbs and ten for other ethnic minorities.

RECENT ELECTIONS

Parliamentary elections were held on 8 June 2014; turnout was 42.6%. An alliance of parties led by the Democratic Party of Kosovo won 37 seats with 30.4% of the vote, the Democratic League of Kosovo 30 with 25.2%, Self-Determination 16 with 13-6%, the Alliance for the Future of Kosovo 11 with 9-5%, the Serb List 9 and the Initiative for Kosovo 6. Nine other parties won two seats or fewer.

Vojvodina

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

After the Battle of Kosovo in 1389 Turkish attacks on the Balkans led to a mass migration of Serbians to Vojvodina. Turkish rule ended after their 1716–18 war with Austria and the Požarevac peace agreement. In exchange for acting as frontier protectors, the Austrians granted the people of Vojvodina religious autonomy. However, in 1848 a short-lived revolution led to a Serbian alliance with the Croats. Vojvodina was briefly declared an independent dukedom. After the First World War Vojvodina became part of the first Yugoslav state. In 1974 President Tito granted autonomy to Vojvodina, but this status was brought into question after Vojvodina's largely anti-Milošević provincial assembly resigned in 1988. In 1989 the Serbian government, led by Slobodan Milošević, stripped Vojvodina of most of its autonomous rights and secured Serbian control. After the fall of Milošević in 2000 there was a growing demand for autonomy, which was granted by statute in Dec. 2009.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Area: 21,506 sq. km. The capital is Novi Sad. Population of Vojvodina at the 2002 census, 2,031,992 (1,321,807 Serbs; 290,207 Hungarians); density, 94.5 per sq. km. Population of Novi Sad, 2002, 191,405. There are six official languages: Serbian, Hungarian, Slovak, Romanian, Croatian and Rusyn.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

In 2003 there were a total of 20,381 live births in Vojvodina, a rate of 9.9 per 1,000 inhabitants. There were 29,741 deaths (14.4 per 1,000) and 11,127 marriages (5.4 per 1,000). Rate of natural increase in 2003: -4.5 per 1,000.

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

Vojvodina's autonomous status, rescinded by the Yugoslav government in 1990, was restored by statute in Dec. 2009. Novi Sad was defined as the province's chief administrative centre and Vojvodina is permitted to establish representative offices in Europe with the consent of the Serbian government.

RECENT ELECTIONS

Parliamentary elections were held on 6 and 20 May 2012. Choice for a Better Vojvodina won 58 seats (48.3% of the vote), ahead of Let's Get Vojvodina Moving with 22 seats and 18.3%, the coalition of the Socialist Party of Serbia, the Party of United Pensioners of Serbia, United Serbia and the Social Democratic Party of Serbia with 13 seats and 10.8%, the League of Social Democrats of Vojvodina with 10 and 8.3%, the Alliance of Vojvodina Hungarians with 7 and 5.8%, the Serbian Radical Party with 5 and 4.2%, the Democratic Party of Serbia with 4 and 3.3% and Vojvodina U-Turn with 1 and 0.8%.

CURRENT GOVERNMENT

President of the Assembly: István Pásztor; b. 1956 (in office since 22 June 2012).

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

The Seychelles were colonized by the French in 1756 to establish spice plantations to compete with the Dutch monopoly. The islands were captured by the English in 1794. Subsequently, Britain offered to return Mauritius and its dependencies (which included the Seychelles) to France if that country would renounce all claims in India. France refused and the Seychelles were formally ceded to Britain as a dependency of Mauritius. In Nov. 1903 the Seychelles archipelago became a separate British Crown Colony. Internal self-government was achieved on 1 Oct. 1975 and independence as a republic within the British Commonwealth on 29 June 1976.

The first president, James Mancham, was deposed in a coup on 5 June 1977. Under the new constitution, the Seychelles People's Progressive Front became the sole legal party. There were several attempts to overthrow the regime but in 1979 and 1984 Albert René was the only candidate in the presidential elections. Under the new constitution approved in June 1993, President René was re-elected against two opponents. He stood down in 2004 and was succeeded by James Michel.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

The Seychelles consist of 115 islands in the Indian Ocean, north of Madagascar, with a combined area of 455 sq. km (175 sq. miles) in two distinct groups and a 2010 census population of 90,945. The Granitic group of 40 islands cover 244 sq. km (94 sq. miles); the principal island is Mahé, with 160 sq. km (62 sq. miles) and 78,539 inhabitants (2010 census), the other inhabited islands of the group being Praslin, La Digue, Silhouette, Fregate, North and Denis, which together had 12,406 inhabitants in 2010.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 96,000.

The Outer or Coralline group comprises 75 islands spread over a wide area of ocean between the Mahé group and Madagascar, with a total land area of 211 sq. km (81 sq. miles). The main islands are the Amirante Isles (including Desroches, Poivre, Daros and Alphonse), Coetivy Island and Platte Island, all lying south of the Mahé group; the Farquhar, St Pierre and Providence Islands, north of Madagascar; and Aldabra, Astove, Assumption and the Cosmoledo Islands, about 1,000 km southwest of the Mahé group. Aldabra (whose lagoon covers 142 sq. km), Farquhar and Desroches were transferred to the new British Indian Ocean Territory in 1965, but were returned by Britain to the Seychelles on the latter's independence in 1976.

Victoria, the chief town, had a census population of 26,450 in 2010. In 2011, 55.9% of the population were urban.

The official languages are Creole, English and French but 91% of the population speak Creole.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2012 births, 1,645; deaths, 651. 2012 rates per 1,000 population, birth, 18.6; death, 7.4; infant mortality (2010), 12 per 1,000 births. Annual population growth rate, 2005–10, 0.9%. Life expectancy at birth in the period 2005–10 was 68.1 years for males and 77.3 years for females. Fertility rate, 2013, 2.2 births per woman.

CLIMATE

Though close to the equator, the climate is tropical. The hot, wet season is from Dec. to May, when conditions are humid, but southeast trades bring cooler conditions from June to Nov. Temperatures are high throughout the year, but the islands lie outside the cyclone belt. Victoria, Jan. 80°F (26.7°C), July 78°F (25.6°C). Annual rainfall 95" (2,287 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

Under the 1979 constitution the Seychelles People's Progressive Front (SPPF) was the sole legal Party. There is a unicameral People's Assembly consisting of 34 seats, of which 25 are directly elected by simple majority vote and nine are allocated on a proportional basis, and an executive President directly elected for a five-year term (with a maximum of three successive terms). A constitutional amendment of Dec. 1991 legalized other parties. A commission was elected in July 1992 to draft a new constitution. The electorate was some 50,000; turnout was 90%. The SPPF gained 14 seats on the commission, the Democratic Party, eight; the latter, however, eventually withdrew. At a referendum in Nov. 1992 the new draft constitution failed to obtain the necessary 60% approval votes. The commission was reconvened in Jan. 1993. At a further referendum on 18 June 1993 the constitution was approved by 73.6% of votes cast. The elections of 1993 were the first multiparty ones since 1974.

RECENT ELECTIONS

In parliamentary elections held on 29 Sept.–1 Oct. 2011 the ruling Seychelles People's Progressive Front (SPPF) won all 31 available seats with 88.6% of the vote. The Popular Democratic received 10.9% of the vote but failed to win any seats. The main opposition party, the Seychelles National Party, boycotted the election. Turnout was 74.3%; 31.9% of the votes cast were spoiled.

In presidential elections held on 3–5 Dec. 2015 incumbent James Michel (People's Party) won 47.8% of the vote against Wavel Ramkalawan (Seychelles National Party) with 33.9%, Patrick Pillay (Lalyans Seselwa) with 14.2%, David Pierre (Popular Democratic Movement) 2.1%, Alexcia Amesbury (Seychelles Party for Social Justice and Democracy) 1.3% and Philippe Boullé (ind.) with 0.7%. Turnout was 87.4%. Michel won the second round run-off on 16–18 Dec. 2015 with 50.2% of the vote against Ramkalawan with 49.8%. Turnout in the second round was 90.1%.

CURRENT LEADERS

James Michel

Position

President

Introduction

Former Vice-President James Michel came to power in April 2004, handpicked by then President France-Albert René to succeed to the presidency on René's retirement after 27 years in power. Michel had been vice-president since 1996 and had previously held a variety of ministerial positions. He was elected to the post in July 2006 and re-elected in May 2011 and Dec. 2015.

Early Life

James Alix Michel was born in the Seychelles on 18 Aug. 1944. He was a teacher before deciding to pursue a career in politics. His profile rose in the mid-1970s because of his involvement in the country's booming tourism industry.

In 1976, just before independence, he joined René's left-of-centre Seychelles People's United Party (SPUP)—renamed the Seychelles People's Progressive Front (SPPF) in 1978. He was a member of the SPUP's central committee when the party staged a bloodless coup in 1977, overthrowing the country's first president, James Mancham, and replacing him with René. There followed a 16-year one-party socialist dictatorship, during which time Michel held a series of important ruling party and ministerial positions. For several periods he was in charge of the highly-regulated Seychellois economy. On René's retirement in April 2004, Michel was sworn in as president.

Career in Office

Despite his allegiance to René, Michel was under pressure to speed up the country's democratization process, which had begun with multi-party elections in 1993. He also pledged to introduce more open political dialogue, particularly over matters concerning the Seychellois economy, and to develop the private sector. In Jan. 2005 Michel granted the Emirates Group the rights to operate non-stop flights three times a week between the Seychelles and Dubai in order to enhance the tourism industry and to increase trade for the business and cargo communities.

In March 2005 Michel detailed his foreign policy, underpinned by a desire to cement stronger regional ties in the Indian Ocean region—particularly in light of the Seychelles' exit in July 2004 from the Southern African Development Community, ostensibly because of high membership fees. He particularly focused on strengthening relations with Mauritius, working alongside the then Mauritian prime minister, Paul Béranger, to strengthen the Indian Ocean Commission. Michel has favoured increased promotion of the Seychelles as a high-quality and safe tourist resort, and sought to make the country a leader in environmental issues.

In June 2005 Michel announced plans for a new national pension fund and a scheme to set-up a savings account of R1,000 for every Seychellois child, both of which came into effect in Jan. 2006.

After a close electoral contest in July 2006 he retained the presidency, defeating his Seychelles National Party rival. In the May 2007 parliamentary elections the SPPF retained its majority. Michel brought the poll forward after opposition MPs had boycotted parliamentary proceedings over moves to ban political parties (and also religious groups) from owning radio stations.

Confronted by a balance of payments and public debt crisis in 2008, Michel launched an economic reform programme with the help of the International Monetary Fund, which approved a two-year US$26m. support arrangement in Nov. As part of the programme, the government floated the currency and lifted foreign exchange controls. In Jan. 2009 he appealed for debt relief from international creditors as the Seychelles economy was hit by reduced tourist traffic and the effects of the global financial crisis. In Nov. that year the World Bank agreed a US$9m. loan to help restore economic stability.

In response to the expansion of Somali piracy in the Indian Ocean, the Seychelles government entered into agreements with European Union countries and the USA to enhance naval and air patrol and surveillance to deter attacks on international shipping.

In Aug. 2010 the Seychelles ratified the statute establishing the International Criminal Court.

Michel was re-elected for a further term in May 2011 and his party won all 31 seats in parliamentary polling in Sept.–Oct. following an opposition boycott. He was re-elected again in Dec. 2015, with opposition figures claiming multiple irregularities in the polling.

DEFENCE

The Seychelles People's Defence Force comprises all services. Personnel (2011) Army, 200; paramilitary national guard, 250; paramilitary coastguard, 200 including 80 marines.

Defence expenditure totalled US$12m. in 2013 (US$127 per capita), representing 1.0% of GDP.

Coastguard

The Seychelles Coast Guard superseded the former navy and air force in 1992. Based at Port Victoria it operates nine patrol and coastal combatants.

ECONOMY

Trade and hotels contributed 24.6% to GDP in 2008; followed by transport and communications, 16.7%; finance and real estate, 12.0%; public administration and defence, 9.7%; and manufacturing, 8.6%.

Overview

Tourism and fisheries are the main pillars of the economy. The Seychelles has access to one of the world's largest tuna fishing grounds, and tuna fishing and processing accounts for 5% of GDP, 7% of employment and 35% of exports annually. A further 25% of GDP comes from tourism, although this sector is dependent on an economic resurgence in Europe (the primary source of visitors to the Seychelles) for its mid- to long-term prospects.

The economy lacks diversification and relies on imports for its raw materials, consumer products and many professional services. The lack of land, capital and human resources restricts the potential of the economy.

After the fiscal deficit reached 8% of GDP and public debt reached 131% of GDP in 2007, the government embarked on a process of reform and fiscal consolidation. Generous debt relief and tighter fiscal policy produced a reduction in debt and an acceleration in growth. The government also sought to boost the private sector by limiting the role of the state in economic activities. However, infrastructure needs further investment, as does the education system where standards are low. In addition, climate change will likely have a dramatic future impact, with rising sea levels increasing the threat of major flooding.

Currency

The unit of currency is the Seychelles rupee (SCR) divided into 100 cents. In July 2005 foreign exchange reserves were US$44m. and total money supply was 1,220m. rupees. Inflation reached 37.0% in 2008, but has since fallen to 4.3% in 2013 and 1.4% in 2014.

Budget

In 2010 budgetary central government revenues totalled 3,945.9m. rupees (of which taxes 3,260.0m. rupees) and expenditures 3,352.4m. rupees. Main items of expenditure by economic type in 2010: use of goods and services, 1,330.2m. rupees; compensation of employees, 864.6m. rupees; interest, 624.9m. rupees.

VAT at 15% was introduced on 1 Jan. 2013.

Performance

There was a recession in both 2003 and 2004, with the economy contracting by 5.9% and 2.9% respectively. A significant economic recovery occurred between 2005 and 2007, but real GDP growth was negative again in both 2008 and 2009. The economy has expanded every year since, with growth of 6.6% in 2012, 6.0% in 2013 and 3.3% in 2014. Total GDP was US$1.4bn. in 2014.

Banking and Finance

The Central Bank of Seychelles (established in 1983; Governor, Caroline Abel), which is the bank of issue, and the Development Bank of Seychelles provide long-term lending for development purposes. There are also six commercial banks, including two local banks (the Seychelles Savings Bank and the Seychelles International Mercantile Banking Co-operation or NOUVOBANQ), and four branches of foreign banks (Barclays Bank, Banque Française Commerciale, Habib Bank and Bank of Baroda).

External debt totalled US$1,510m. in 2010 and represented 176.7% of GNI.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy were the equivalent of 13.9 tonnes per capita in 2011.

Electricity

Installed capacity on Mahé and Praslin combined was 89,000 kW in 2011. Production in 2011 was 324m. kWh and consumption per capita 3,528 kWh.

Water

There are two raw water reservoirs, the Rochon Dam and La Gogue Dam, which have a combined holding capacity of 1.05bn. litres.

Agriculture

Since the rise of the tourism industry in the 1970s there has been a general decline in the production of traditional cash crops, notably cinnamon bark, of which 158 tonnes were exported in 2002 (down from 289 tonnes in 1998). 261 tonnes of tea (green leaf) were produced in 2003. Other crops grown for local consumption include bananas, oranges, cassava, sweet potatoes, paw-paw, yams and vegetables. The staple food crop, rice, is imported from Asia. Livestock, 2003 estimates: 18,000 pigs, 5,000 goats, 1,000 cattle and 1m. chickens. In 2002 there were approximately 1,000 ha. of arable land and 6,000 ha. of permanent crop land.

Forestry

In 2010 forests covered 41,000 ha., or 88% of the total land area. The Ministry of Environment has a number of ongoing forestry projects that aim at preserving and upgrading the local system. There are also a number of terrestrial nature reserves including three national parks, four special reserves and an 'area of outstanding natural beauty'.

Fisheries

The fisheries sector is the Seychelles' largest foreign exchange earner. In 2006 it accounted for 52% of export revenue. Total catch in 2010 was 87,108 tonnes, exclusively from sea fishing. 2006 fish production (in tonnes) included: canned tuna, 40,222; fish landed, 4,050; crustaceans, 606. Fisheries exports in 2006 amounted to 1,096.8m. rupees, of which: canned tuna, 1,030.4m.; fish meal 25.1m.; frozen prawns, 23.7m.

INDUSTRY

Local industry is expanding, the major development in recent years being in tuna canning; in 2003 output totalled 36,436 tonnes, up from 7,500 tonnes in 1995. This is followed by brewing, with 7.1m. litres in 2003. Other main activities include production of cigarettes (50m. in 2003), dairy production, prawn production, paints and processing of cinnamon barks.

Labour

Some 41% of employed persons work in the services sector. In 2003, 7,195 people worked in trade, restaurants and hotels. In 2003, 17,425 were formally employed in the private sector, 11,973 in the public sector and 5,463 in the parastatal sector.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

In 2005 imports (c.i.f.) totalled 3,712.2m. rupees (2,731.8m. rupees in 2004); exports (f.o.b.), 1,868.6m. rupees (1,599.9m. rupees in 2004). Domestic exports constitute around two-thirds of exports and re-exports a third. Principal imports: mineral fuel; food and live animals; machinery and transport equipment; manufactured goods; chemicals. Principal origins of imports, 2005: Saudi Arabia (23.0%), Spain (7.8%), Singapore (7.6%), France (6.5%). Principal exports: canned tuna; petroleum products; medicaments and medical appliances; fish meal (animal feed); frozen prawns. Main export markets (for domestic exports), 2005: UK (45.4%), France (23.1%), Italy (12.4%), Germany (10.2%).

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

In 2006 there were 502 km of roads, of which 96.0% were surfaced. There were 6,800 private cars in 2006 (80 per 1,000 inhabitants), 2,600 commercial vehicles, 300 taxis and 215 buses.

Rail

There are no railways in the Seychelles.

Civil Aviation

Seychelles International airport is on Mahé. In 2010 Air Seychelles flew on domestic routes and to Cape Town, Doha, Dubai, Frankfurt, Johannesburg, London, Mauritius, Milan, Nairobi, Paris, Réunion, Rome, Singapore and Zürich. In 2013 it carried 356,000 passengers (188,000 on international flights). Seychelles International handled 650,928 passengers (517,542 on international flights) in 2012 and 4,500 tonnes of freight.

Shipping

The main port is Victoria, which is also a tuna-fishing and fuel and services supply centre. In Jan. 2009 there were 12 ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 165,000 GT.

Telecommunications

There were 110,700 mobile phone subscriptions (equivalent to 1,313.6 per 1,000 inhabitants) in Jan. 2010 and 26,100 fixed telephone lines. In 2013 an estimated 50.4% of the population were internet users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The death penalty was abolished for all crimes in 1993. The population in penal institutions in June 2014 was 786, including 59 foreigners (giving a rate of 826 per 100,000 of national population, the highest of any country).

Education

Adult literacy was an estimated 91.8% in 2009 (91.4% among males and 92.3% among females). Education is free from five to 12 years in primary schools, and 13 to 17 in secondary schools. There are three private schools providing primary and secondary education and one dealing only with secondary learning. Education beyond 18 years of age is funded jointly by the government and parents. The University of Seychelles opened in Sept. 2009. In 2007 there were 8,864 pupils and 711 teaching staff in primary schools, 7,816 pupils and 588 teaching staff in secondary schools and (2003) 1,652 students and 193 teaching staff at polytechnic level.

Public expenditure on education came to 6.6% of GNI in 2006 or 12.6% of total government spending.

Health

In 2003 there were 107 doctors, 16 dentists and 422 nurses. In 2003 there were seven hospitals with 419 beds. The health service is free.

Welfare

Social security is provided for people of 63 years and over, for the disabled and for families needing financial assistance. There is also assistance via means testing for those medically unfit to work and for mothers who remain out of work for longer than their designated maternity leave. Orphanages are also subsidized by the government.

RELIGION

82% of the inhabitants are Roman Catholic, the remainder of the population being followers of other religions (mainly Anglicans, with some Seventh-day Adventists, Bahá'is, Muslims, Hindus, Pentecostals and Jehovah's Witnesses) or religiously unaffiliated.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

Entered on the UNESCO World Heritage List in 1982, the four coral islands of Aldabra Atoll protect a shallow lagoon. A heritage site since 1983, the Vallée de Mai Nature Reserve is a natural palm forest on the small island of Praslin.

Press

In 2008 there was one daily newspaper (circulation of 3,000), as well as three weekly papers.

Tourism

Tourism is the main foreign exchange earner. Visitor numbers were a record 208,034 in 2012, up from 194,753 in 2011.

Festivals

There are numerous religious festivals including Kavadi, an annual procession organized by the Hindu Association of Seychelles. Secular festivals include the annual Youth Festival, Jazz Festival, Creole Festival, Kite Festival and the Subios Festival, a celebration of the underwater world.

SIERRA LEONE

forge the 'Krio' culture. British administrators and Krio traders led expeditions inland in the late 19th century and on 21 Aug. 1896 the hinterland was declared a British protectorate, governed by Frederic Cardew. The early years of the 20th century saw the development of the country's interior while Lebanese merchants increasingly dominated business and trade.

Milton Margai became the prime minister in 1960 and led the country to independence on 27 April 1961. In 1967 Dr Siaka Stevens' All People's Congress (APC) came to power via the ballot box, despite an attempted military coup. Sierra Leone became a republic on 19 April 1971 with Stevens as executive president. Following a referendum in June 1978 a new constitution was instituted under which the ruling APC became the sole legal party.

On 28 Nov. 1985 Joseph Saidu Momoh succeeded Stevens as president. He presided over an economic collapse and the rise of the Revolutionary United Front (RUF). Under the leadership of Foday Sankoh (and with alleged links to the Liberian president, Charles Taylor), the RUF began taking control of diamond mines in the east of the country. President Momoh was overthrown in a military coup led by Valentine Strasser on 29 April 1992 and a National Provisional Ruling Council (NPRC) was set up, although it was unable to prevent the country's slide into civil war. By 1995 the RUF controlled much of the countryside and the NPRC sought assistance from foreign mercenaries.

The NPRC agreed to presidential and parliamentary elections in April 1996 to establish a civilian government. Ahmad Tejan Kabbah became president but was ousted in May 1997 by the Armed Forces Revolutionary Council, led by Maj. Johnny Paul Koroma. In Feb. 1998 a Nigerian-led intervention force (ECOMOG) launched an offensive against the military junta. On 10 March President Kabbah returned from exile in Guinea promising a 'new beginning' but in Jan. 1999 the country again erupted into civil war.

In July 1999 the government reached an agreement with the rebel movement to bring the civil war to an end. Under the terms of the accord, the RUF was to gain four key government posts along with control of the country's mineral resources in return for surrendering its weapons. However, civil war resumed in early 2000 and, responding to a government appeal, British forces were sent to back up the UN peacekeeping force (UNAMSIL). Foday Sankoh was captured and handed over to UN forces in May 2000. In July 2001 the RUF formally recognized the civil government of President Kabbah. In Jan. 2002 Kabbah declared the war over. Re-elected in May 2002, he has been at the forefront of reconstruction efforts although corruption remains an obstacle to progress. The last UN peacekeeping troops left Sierra Leone in Dec. 2005.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Sierra Leone is bounded on the northwest, north and northeast by Guinea, on the southeast by Liberia and on the southwest by the Atlantic Ocean. The area is 71,740 sq. km (27,699 sq. miles). Population (census 2004), 4,976,871; density, 69.4 per sq. km. In 2011, 38.8% of the population were urban.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 6.45m.

The capital is Freetown, with a 2004 census population of 772,873.

Sierra Leone is divided into three provinces and one area:

	Sq. km	Census 2004	Capital	Census 2004
Eastern Province	15,553	1,191,539	Kenema	128,402
Northern Province	35,936	1,745,553	Makeni	82,840
Southern Province	19,694	1,092,657	Bo	149,957

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

The ancestors of the Bulom, Nalou, Baga and Krim people are thought to have been the earliest settlers in coastal Sierra Leone. The Kissi and Gola lived inland to the east and the Limba inhabited the foothills of the Wara Wara mountains from at least the 10th century AD. Following the break-up of the Malian empire in the late 14th century much of Sierra Leone was settled by the Mande whose domination and interaction with the original inhabitants gave rise to new ethnic groups, including the Vai and Loko.

The Portuguese mariner Alvaro Fernandez sailed into the Rokel estuary near present-day Freetown in 1447 and located a source of fresh water. The inlet became a trading post for Portuguese, Dutch, French and British explorers on their way to and from India. Having established plantations in America and the Caribbean, European colonists sought labour from the Atlantic slave trade, much of it centred on Sierra Leone. In 1672 British traders from the Royal African Company established trading forts along the coast, although they repeatedly came under attack from European rivals.

When Britain outlawed slavery in 1772 the government established Granville Town (later Freetown) as a home for freed slaves. In 1791 the Sierra Leone Company was founded as a trading concession, with Sierra Leone becoming a British crown colony in 1808. By 1850 more than 40,000 freed slaves, many of them from Nova Scotia and Jamaica, had settled in Freetown and surrounding areas, intermarrying with natives and Europeans to

The provinces are divided into districts as follows: Bo, Bonthe, Moyamba, Pujehun (Southern Province); Kailahun, Kenema, Kono (Eastern Province); Bombali, Kambia, Koinaduga, Port Loko, Toukolili (Northern Province).

The principal peoples are the Mendes (26% of the total) in the south, the Temnes (25%) in the north and centre, the Konos, Fulanis, Bulloms, Korankos, Limbas and Kissis. English is the official language; a Creole (Krio) is spoken.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2008 estimates: births, 224,000; deaths, 88,000. Estimated birth rate in 2008 was 40.3 per 1,000 population; estimated death rate, 15.8. Annual population growth rate, 2000–08, 3.4%. Expectation of life at birth in 2013 was 45.8 years for females and 45.3 years for males (giving Sierra Leone the lowest life expectancy for females, for males and overall). The World Health Organization's World Health Statistics 2014 put Sierra Leone in last place in a 'healthy life expectancy' list, with an expected 39 years of healthy life for babies born in 2012. Infant mortality was 114 per 1,000 live births in 2010 (the highest in the world). Fertility rate, 2008, 5.2 births per woman.

CLIMATE

A tropical climate, with marked wet and dry seasons and high temperatures throughout the year. The rainy season lasts from about April to Nov., when humidity can be very high. Thunderstorms are common from April to June and in Sept. and Oct. Rainfall is particularly heavy in Freetown because of the effect of neighbouring relief. Freetown, Jan. 80°F (26.7°C), July 78°F (25.6°C). Annual rainfall 135" (3,434 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

In a referendum in Sept. 1991 some 60% of the 2.5m. electorate voted for the introduction of a new constitution instituting multi-party democracy. The constitution has been amended several times since. The president, who is both head of state and head of government, is elected by popular vote for not more than two terms of five years. There is a 124-seat National Assembly (112 members elected by popular vote and 12 filled by paramount chiefs).

There is a Supreme Council of State (SCS) and a Council of State Secretaries.

National Anthem

'High We Exalt Thee, Realm of the Free'; words by C. Nelson Fyle, tune by J. J. Akar.

RECENT ELECTIONS

Presidential and parliamentary elections were held on 17 Nov. 2012.

In the presidential elections, Ernest Bai Koroma of the All People's Congress (APC) received 58.7% of the vote, Julius Maada Bio of the Sierra Leone People's Party (SLPP) 37.4%, Charles Margai of the People's Movement for Democratic Change (PMDC) 1.3%, Joshua Albert Carew of the Citizens Democratic Party 1.0%, Eldred Collins of the Revolutionary United Front 0.6%, Gibrilla Kamara of the People's Democratic Party 0.4%, Kandeh Baba Conteh of the Peace and Liberation Party 0.3%, Mohamed Bangura of the United Democratic Movement 0.2% and James Obai Fullah of the United National People's Party 0.2%. As Ernest Bai Komora received the 55% required to win outright a potential second round run-off was not needed. Turnout was 87.3%.

In the parliamentary elections, the All People's Congress won 67 of 124 seats with 53.7% of the vote and the Sierra Leone People's Party 42 with 38.3%; 12 seats were allocated for elected chiefs and three remained vacant.

CURRENT LEADERS

Ernest Bai Koroma

Position
President

Introduction

Ernest Bai Koroma became president in Sept. 2007 following victory in the second round of elections. He won re-election outright in the first round of voting in Nov. 2012. He had previously run unsuccessfully for the presidency in 2002.

Early Life

Koroma was born in 1953 in Bombali, northern Sierra Leone. Though the region is predominantly Muslim, Koroma is a Christian. After primary and secondary schooling, he graduated in 1976 from Fourah Bay College, part of the University of Sierra Leone, in Freetown. He then worked as a teacher before joining the National Insurance Company in 1978. In 1985 he moved to the Reliance Insurance Trust Corporation (Ritcorps), becoming managing director in 1988 and holding the post for 14 years.

A latecomer to politics, Koroma was chosen as the APC's presidential candidate in March 2002 but was beaten into second place by Ahmad Tejan Kabbah of the SLPP. Under Koroma's leadership the APC grew in popularity and won a landslide victory in the 2004 local government elections, winning almost all seats in the densely-populated Western Area (which includes Freetown). In June 2005 Koroma was briefly stripped of his party leadership after the Supreme Court found him guilty of illegally altering his party's constitution. However, he was unanimously re-elected leader in Sept. 2005. Having spent most of his life in Freetown, his support base was strongest in the north though he also made inroads in the south ahead of the 2007 presidential election. In a run-off in Sept. 2007 Koroma won against Solomon Berewa and was sworn in on 17 Sept.

Career in Office

Koroma took over an almost bankrupt country, at the time ranked last out of 177 in the Human Development Index world rankings. He had to maintain the peace process that followed ten years of civil war that ended in 2001, and also faced major challenges to promote economic development and rejuvenate energy and public services. He pledged a zero tolerance approach to corruption and in Nov. 2007 his government published a report detailing inadequacies in tax collection, health care and security services, as well as suspect loans.

Also in Nov. 2007 Koroma signed a commercial investment deal to double the country's rutile (titanium ore) production capacity and secured China's cancellation of US$22m. worth of debt. A large offshore oil discovery was reported in 2009 and in 2010 large iron ore extraction leases were granted to two British companies.

Koroma was re-elected president for a second term in Nov. 2012, with the APC securing a majority in parliamentary polling held at the same time. From 2014 his presidency was increasingly dominated by efforts to contain the spread of the ebola virus epidemic in West Africa, which was classified by the World Health Organization (WHO) in Aug. that year as an international public health emergency. Sierra Leone was declared free of the disease by the WHO in Nov. 2015, although a further case was confirmed in Jan. 2016.

In March 2015 Koroma had dismissed Samuel Sam-Sumana as vice-president, accusing him of fomenting political violence and anti-APC activity, and replaced him with Victor Foh.

DEFENCE

In 2013 military expenditure totalled US$14m. (US$3 per capita), representing 0.3% of GDP.

The UN peacekeeping force (UNAMSIL) left Sierra Leone in Dec. 2005 after monitoring the ceasefire for six years. It was replaced in Jan. 2006 by the United Nations Integrated Office (UNIOSIL), and this in turn was replaced by the United Nations Integrated Peacebuilding Office in Sierra Leone (UNIPSIL) in Aug. 2008. UNIPSIL was appointed to help support the continuing peace process; its last mandate ran until March 2014, when it completed its operations and transferred its responsibility to the UN Country Team.

Army

Following the civil war, the Army has disbanded and a new National Army has been formed with a strength of 10,500.

Navy

Based in Freetown there is a small naval force of around 200 operating one patrol boat.

ECONOMY

Agriculture, forestry and fishing contributed 57.4% to GDP in 2010; followed by services, 10.1%; trade and hotels, 8.0%; and transport and communications, 6.6%.

Overview

The economy has made substantial progress since the end of civil war in 2002. Real GDP grew by just over 7% on average between 2004 and 2007, aided by remittances and investments from citizens working abroad. Agriculture, mining, construction and the services sectors make up the bulk of the economy. External assistance and foreign aid have helped finance the current account deficit, while programmes such as the Poverty Reduction and Growth Facility (2001-04) have improved public finance management.

However, growth decelerated in 2008 and 2009 as a result of the global economic downturn. In June 2010, the IMF approved a three-year Extended Credit Facility to spur growth in the medium-term. Structural reform priorities include improving tax administration, broadening the tax base, developing deeper financial services and strengthening public financial management. Social indicators remain poor, with the country ranked 181st of 188 countries in the Human Development Index. Poverty is widespread, particularly in rural areas where 79% are estimated to live below the poverty line.

Currency

The unit of currency is the leone (SLL) of 100 cents. Inflation was 9.8% in 2013 and 8.3% in 2014. Exchange controls were liberalized in 1993. Total money supply in July 2005 was 346,027m. leones and foreign exchange reserves were US$94m.

Budget

In 2010 total revenue was 1,475bn. leones (35.9% grants and 14.6% import duties) and total expenditures 2,389bn. leones (74.1% current expenditures).

Performance

GDP per capita was US$154 in 2000 compared to US$389 in 1982, although it has since risen back up to US$590 in 2012. There was positive growth in 2000 for the first time since 1994, with a rate of 3.8%, rising to 18.2% in 2001 and further to 27.4% in 2002. Real GDP growth was 6.0% in 2011, 15.2% in 2012 and 20.1% in 2013 (the second highest rate in the world for both of these last two years, mainly thanks to the commencement of iron ore production). Growth slowed to 7.1% in 2014, but this was still above the average for sub-Saharan Africa that year. Total GDP in 2014 was US$4.8bn.

Banking and Finance

The bank of issue is the Bank of Sierra Leone which was established in 1964 (Governor, Kaifala Marah). There are four commercial banks (two foreign).

Foreign debt totalled US$778m. in 2010, representing 40.8% of GNI.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2011 were the equivalent of 0.3 tonnes per capita.

The Climate Change and Environmental Risk Atlas 2014 produced by Maplecroft, a risk analytics company, ranked Sierra Leone as the country facing the third highest economic and social risk from climate change by 2025.

Electricity

Installed capacity was 77,000 kW in 2011. Production in 2011 was 176m. kWh; consumption per capita in 2011 was 30 kWh.

Minerals

The chief minerals mined are diamonds (estimated at 438,000 carats in 2010) and rutile (68,200 tonnes in 2010). There are also deposits of gold, iron ore and bauxite. The presence of rich diamond deposits partly explains the close interest of neighbouring countries in the politics of Sierra Leone.

Agriculture

In 2007 the agricultural population was an estimated 3.34m., of which approximately 1.26m. were economically active. Cattle production is important in the north. Production (2003 estimates, in 1,000 tonnes): cassava, 377; rice, 250; palm oil, 36; bananas and plantains, 30; sweet potatoes, 25; sugarcane, 24. In 2007 there were an estimated 900,000 ha. of arable land and 80,000 ha. of permanent crops.

Livestock (2003 estimates): cattle, 400,000; sheep, 375,000; goats, 220,000; pigs, 52,000; chickens, 8m.

Forestry

In 2010 forests covered 2.73m. ha., or 38% of the total land area. Timber production in 2011 was 5.74m. cu. metres.

Fisheries

In 2010 an estimated 200,000 tonnes of fish were caught, mainly marine fish.

INDUSTRY

There are palm oil and rice mills; sawn timber, joinery products and furniture are produced.

Labour

The labour force in 2013 was 2,373,000 (1,672,000 in 2003). 68.8% of the population aged 15–64 was economically active in 2013. In the same year 3.4% of the population was unemployed.

Sierra Leone had 45,000 people living in slavery according to the Walk Free Foundation's 2013 Global Slavery Index.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

Total trade for 2012: imports, 5,113,562m. leones; exports (f.o.b.), 4,871,105m. leones. Main imports are crude materials and manufactured articles; main exports are iron ore, rutile, diamonds, cocoa and bauxite. A UN-mandated diamond export certification scheme is in force. The Security Council has commended Sierra Leone's government for its efforts in monitoring trade to prevent diamonds from becoming a future source of conflict. The main import suppliers in 2012 were Benin (13.3%), UAE (12.2%), Senegal (9.2%) and Côte d'Ivoire (8.1%). Principal export markets in 2012 were China (33.3%), UK (15.0%), Swaziland (2.7%) and Belgium (2.1%).

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

There were 11,300 km of roads in 2007 (8% paved). Much of the damage to the road network as a result of the civil war has now been repaired. In 2007 there were 16,400 passenger cars in use and 14,100 vans and lorries. There were 71 deaths as a result of road accidents in 2007.

Civil Aviation

Freetown Airport (Lungi) is the international airport. The national carrier is Leone Airways, operated by Arik Air (a Nigerian airline) under a joint venture agreement. In 2003 scheduled airline traffic of Sierra Leone-based carriers flew 1m. km, carrying 14,000 passengers (all on international flights).

Shipping

The port of Freetown has one of the largest natural harbours in the world. Iron ore is exported through Pepel, and there is a small port at Bonthe. In Jan. 2009 there were 248 ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 547,000 GT.

Telecommunications

In 2009 Sierra Leone had an estimated 1,160,000 mobile phone subscriptions and 32,800 main (fixed) telephone lines. The country's telecommunications network was virtually destroyed during the civil war, but since then the sector has been one of Sierra Leone's main successes. In 2009 there were an estimated 2.6 internet users per 1,000 inhabitants.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The High Court has jurisdiction in civil and criminal matters. Subordinate courts are held by magistrates in the various districts. Native Courts, headed by court Chairmen, apply native law and custom under a criminal and civil jurisdiction. Appeals from the decisions of magistrates' courts are heard by the High Court. Appeals from the decisions of the High Court are heard by the Sierra Leone Court of Appeal. Appeal lies from the Sierra Leone Court of Appeal to the Supreme Court, which is the highest court.

The death penalty is in force, but has not been used since Oct. 1998 when 24 soldiers were executed for their part in the May 1997 coup. 59.0% of prisoners had yet to receive a trial according to 2014 estimates by the International Centre for Prison Studies. Sierra Leone was ranked 85th of 102 countries for both criminal justice and civil justice in the 2015 World Justice Project Rule of Law Index, which provides data on how the rule of law is experienced by the general public across eight categories.

The population in penal institutions in Sept. 2013 was 3,281 (52 per 100,000 of national population).

Education

The adult literacy rate in 2008 was 40%. Primary education is partially free but not compulsory. In 2004–05 there were 4,295 primary schools with 1,286,074 pupils and 19,316 teachers, and 282 secondary schools with 198,827 pupils and 6,622 teachers. There were also 196 technical/vocational establishments with 18,686 pupils and 918 staff. As a result of the 2005 Universities Act there are now two universities. The University of Sierra Leone comprises Fourah Bay College, the College of Medicine and Allied Health Sciences, and the Institute of Public Administration and Management. Njala University, until 2005 a constituent college of the University of Sierra Leone, is now an autonomous institution.

In 2005 public expenditure on education came to 3.9% of GNI.

Health

Sierra Leone had 136 doctors, 1,017 nurses and midwives, and 114 pharmacists in 2014; and six dentists in 2010. There were four hospital beds per 10,000 population in 2006. The ebola outbreak of 2014–15 resulted in 3,956 deaths.

RELIGION

According to estimates by the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life, 78.0% of the population in 2010 were Muslims (mostly Sunnis) and 20.9% were Christians (mainly Protestants). Sierra Leone has traditionally been regarded as one of the most religiously tolerant nations in the world.

CULTURE

Press

In 2008 there were ten paid-for dailies with an average circulation of 22,000, plus 40 non-dailies.

Tourism

Tourism is in the initial stages of development. In 2012 there were 60,000 non-resident tourist arrivals by air (32,000 in 2007).

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

The first known written account of the island of Singapore was by a Chinese explorer in the 3rd century AD. In a strategic location at the tip of the Malay peninsula, the island is likely to have been a port of call for sailors navigating the Melaka straits, although there is no evidence of settlement until the town of Temasek was described in the 13th century. Temasek was controlled by the Srivijaya Empire, centred on Palembang in Sumatra, during the 14th century, before falling to the Javanese Majapahit Empire. When Sultan Iksander Shah founded the Melaka Sultanate in the 1390s, he established a trading post on Singapore Island. After Portuguese forces sacked Melaka in 1511 the island came under the influence of the newly created Johor Sultanate. In 1613 Singapore's main settlement was burnt down by Portuguese raiders and the island slipped into obscurity, with the ports of Melaka and Johor dominating the lucrative shipping routes that linked Europe and India with China and the East Indies.

In 1819 Sir Thomas Stamford Raffles, an administrator of the British East India Company based at the garrison of Benckulen (Benkulu) in southwest Sumatra, established a trading settlement on Singapore Island to challenge Dutch supremacy of the region's ports. Raffles negotiated a deal with the ruling Sultan of Johor and left Col. William Farquhar in charge of the new settlement which was designated a free port. It grew rapidly, attracting Chinese, Malay, Bugis and Arab merchants who wanted to avoid the trade restrictions imposed at Dutch-controlled ports. In Aug. 1824 claims to Singapore by Britain and the East India Company were confirmed in treaties with the Dutch government and the Sultanate of Johor. Two years later Penang, Melaka and Singapore were combined as the Straits Settlements. With the opening of the Suez Canal in 1869 and the advent of ocean-going steamships, an era of prosperity began for Singapore. Growth was fuelled by the export of tin and rubber from the Malay peninsula, facilitated by the construction of a railway linking Singapore with Bangkok.

On 15 Feb. 1942, after capturing Malaya from the British in less than two months, Singapore was occupied by Japanese troops. Britain's return after Japan's surrender in 1945 was accompanied by growing nationalist sentiment. Britain formed the Federation of Malaya, administered by a high commissioner in Kuala Lumpur, and a separate Crown Colony of Singapore with a civil administration. Elections in both states in March 1948 were followed by outbreaks of anti-British violence, with the ethnic Chinese-dominated Malayan Communist Party demanding immediate independence and equality for all races. The British responded to 'the Emergency' by imposing hard-line restrictions on left-wing groups. Nevertheless, there was a gradual move towards self-government in Singapore in the 1950s and in June 1959, following the victory of the People's Action Party in the first legislative elections, Lee Kuan Yew became Singapore's first prime minister.

Singapore joined the Federation of Malaysia when it was formed in Sept. 1963 but tensions soon rose and in Aug. 1965 the Malaysian prime minister, Tunku Abdul Rahman, expelled Singapore from the Federation. It became an independent republic, which, under the authoritarian leadership of Lee Kuan Yew, saw rapid and sustained export-driven growth. Lee's resignation in Nov. 1990 saw Goh Chok Tong become prime minister. He served until Aug. 2004, when Lee Hsien Loong succeeded him.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

The Republic of Singapore consists of Singapore Island and some 63 smaller islands. Singapore Island is situated off the southern extremity of the Malay peninsula, to which it is joined by a 1-1-km causeway carrying a road, railway and water pipeline across the Strait of Johor and by a 1-9-km bridge at Tuas, opened in Jan. 1998. The Straits of Johor between the island and the mainland are 914 metres wide. The island is 719-1 sq. km in area, including the offshore islands. At the time of Singapore's independence in 1965 the area was 581-5 sq. km, but ongoing land reclamation has seen the area grow by over 20% since then.

Census of population (2010): Chinese residents 2,793,980 (74-1%), Malays 503,868 (13-4%), Indians 348,119 (9-2%) and others 125,754 (3-3%); resident population, 3,771,721. Estimated total population in June 2014 was 5,469,724. The population is 100% urban. Population density, 7,540 per sq. km.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 5-60m.

Malay, Chinese (Mandarin), Tamil and English are the official languages; Malay is the national language and English is the language of administration.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2013 births, 39,720; deaths, 18,938. Birth rate per 1,000 resident population, 2013, 9-3; death rate per 1,000 resident population, 4-6. Population growth rate in the year ended 30 June 2014, 1-3%; infant mortality, 2010, two per 1,000 live births (one of the lowest in the world); life expectancy, 2013, 79-8 years for males and 84-7 years for females. The World Health Organization's World Health Statistics 2014 put Singapore in first place in a 'healthy life expectancy' list, with an expected 76 years of healthy life for babies born in 2012. Fertility rate, 2013, 1-3 births per woman (the joint lowest in the world). In 2010 the most popular age range for marrying was 25-29 years for both males and females.

CLIMATE

The climate is equatorial, with relatively uniform temperature, abundant rainfall and high humidity. Rain falls throughout the year but tends to be heaviest from Nov. to Jan. Average daily temperature is 26.8°C with a maximum daily average of 30.9°C and a minimum daily average of 23.9°C. Mean annual rainfall is 2,345 mm.

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

Singapore is a republic with a parliamentary system of government. The organs of state—the executive, the legislature and the judiciary—are provided for by a written constitution. The Constitution is the supreme law of Singapore and any law enacted after the date of its commencement, which is inconsistent with its provisions, is void. The present constitution came into force on 3 June 1959 and was amended in 1965.

The Head of State is the President. The administration of the government is vested in the Cabinet headed by the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister and the other Cabinet Members are appointed by the President from among the Members of Parliament (MPs). The Cabinet is collectively responsible to Parliament.

Parliament is unicameral consisting of 87 elected members and three Non-Constituency MPs (NCMPs), elected by secret ballot from single-member and group representation constituencies, as well as nine Nominated Members of Parliament (NMPs) who are appointed for a term of two and a half years on the recommendation of a Special Select Committee of Parliament. With the customary exception of those serving criminal sentences, all citizens over 21 are eligible to vote. Voting in an election is compulsory. Group representation constituencies may return up to six Members of Parliament (four before 1996), one of whom must be from the Malay community, the Indian or other minority communities. To ensure representation of parties not in the government, provision is made for the appointment of three (or up to a maximum of six) NCMPs. The number of NCMPs is reduced by one for each opposition candidate returned. There is a common roll without communal electorates.

A Presidential Council to consider and report on minorities' rights was established in 1970. The particular function of this council is to draw attention to any Bill or to any subsidiary legislation which, in its opinion, discriminates against any racial or religious community.

Salaries for leading Singaporean politicians are the highest in the world. In 2015 the prime minister's salary was S$2.2m. (US$1.6m.)—four times that of President Barack Obama.

CURRENT LEADERS

Lee Hsien Loong

Position

Prime Minister

Introduction

When Lee Hsien Loong was sworn in as prime minister of Singapore on 12 Aug. 2004, it was only the second time the southeast Asian city-state had changed its leader since independence in the 1960s. His father, Lee Kuan Yew, was the country's charismatic leader for 31 years and oversaw a transformation from a third-world colony to a prosperous export-driven economy. Lee Hsien Loong, a former military strategist-turned-politician, pledged to sustain the vibrant economy while maintaining a cohesive society. In Sept. 2015 his People's Action Party won parliamentary elections for the 12th successive time since independence.

Early Life

Lee Hsien Loong was born in Singapore on 10 Feb. 1952, the eldest son of a wealthy and well-connected Hakka-Chinese family. His father, Lee Kuan Yew, was Singapore's first prime minister, and led the former British colony as head of the People's Action Party (PAP) from its first period of self-governance in 1959, through independence in 1965, until 1990. Lee Hsien Loong attended state primary and secondary schools in Singapore, and was awarded a president's scholarship to study mathematics and computer science at Cambridge University in England. He graduated in 1974 with first class honours and returned to serve in the Singapore Armed Forces, rising through the ranks to become a Brig.-Gen. He gained a reputation for his analytical and problem-solving skills. He entered politics as an MP representing the PAP in the general election of Sept. 1984. The election was the first occasion since 1963 that two opposition parties—the Workers' Party and the Singapore Democratic Party—were able to win seats from the ruling PAP. Lee was elected to the Central Executive Committee of the PAP in 1986.

Lee Kuan Yew resigned in Nov. 1990 after 31 years in power and Goh Chok Tong became prime minister, appointing Lee Hsien Loong his deputy with responsibility for economic and civil service affairs. After three decades of authoritarian rule, Singapore underwent a cautious liberalization. Lee held his parliamentary seat in the 1991 and 1997 general elections, which were landslide victories for the PAP. In Jan. 1998 he was appointed chairman of the Monetary Authority of Singapore. When, in line with other southeast Asian economies, Singapore faced an economic downturn in 1998, the government responded by cutting wages, allowing its currency to adjust downward and positioning the country as a leading international financial centre. Despite continued economic pressures, the PAP won the 2001 general election by a large majority. Lee was re-elected, and was appointed minister of finance in Nov. 2001. He pursued a tax-cutting agenda and brought in pension reforms and policies to liberalize the financial sector.

Career in Office

On 12 Aug. 2004 Lee was sworn in as prime minister, handing the chairmanship of the Monetary Authority to Goh Chok Tong who became senior minister in the cabinet. Lee said his goal was to build a vibrant and competitive economy and he pledged to maintain the open, consultative style of the Goh Chok Tong era. He also signalled that social liberalization would continue, reflecting the demands of a highly-educated and increasingly less tractable population, as well as the government's realization that Singapore must move beyond manufacturing into 'knowledge-based' industries that depend more on individual creativity and entrepreneurship.

In April 2005 Lee announced his government's controversial decision to legalize gambling, paving the way for the building of two large casino resorts and perhaps hinting at a more permissive atmosphere within the country. Nevertheless, in 2007 parliament voted against a proposal to decriminalize sex between men, and international appeals for clemency failed to prevent the execution of two Nigerians for drug smuggling.

Singapore's usually fraught relations with neighbouring Malaysia improved in Jan. 2005 when the two countries settled a dispute over land reclamation work in their border waters.

In the first electoral test since his appointment in 2004, Lee's party won the May 2006 parliamentary elections overwhelmingly. In 2008 his government's budget included tax incentives to enhance business competition, but Singapore's export-led economy was one of the first in Asia to feel the impact of the global financial downturn. In Jan. 2009 the government announced a S$20.5bn. stimulus package to bolster the economy and by July that year the country was emerging from its deepest recession on record.

In May 2011 the PAP was re-elected with a large majority but with a lower share of the popular vote, which opposition parties portrayed as a significant shift in the political landscape. The first ethnic rioting in the country in decades broke out in Dec. 2013, sparked by the death of an immigrant Indian worker in a traffic incident. Lee was re-elected as prime minister in Sept. 2015 following the success of the PAP with another unassailable majority in parliamentary elections held the same month.

Singapore's relations with Indonesia have meanwhile been strained as dense smog from Indonesian forest fires caused record-breaking air pollution in the city state.

DEFENCE

Compulsory military service in peacetime for all male citizens and permanent residents was introduced in 1967. The period of service is 24 months. Reserve liability continues to age 50 for officers, 40 for other ranks. In 2011 the SAF (Singapore Armed Forces) comprised 312,500 Operationally Ready National Servicemen and an estimated 72,500 regulars and Full-Time National Servicemen.

An agreement with the USA in Nov. 1990 provided for an increase in US use of naval and air force facilities.

Singapore is a member of the Five Powers Defence Arrangement, with Australia, New Zealand, Malaysia and the UK.

In 2013 defence expenditure totalled US$9,864m. (US$1,807 per capita—the highest of any Asian country), representing 3.4% of GDP.

Army

Strength (2011) 50,000 (including 35,000 conscripts) plus 300,000 reserves. Paramilitary forces consist of a Civil Defence Force (61,300 active personnel in 2011 including approximately 54,000 volunteers, plus 23,000 reservists), a Singapore Police Force (12,000 active personnel in 2011, plus 21,000 reservists) and a Singapore Gurkha Contingent (1,800 personnel in 2011).

Navy

The Republic of Singapore Navy comprises five commands: Fleet, Maritime Security Task Force, Maritime Training and Doctrine Command, Naval Logistics Command and Naval Diving Unit.

The fleet includes five diesel submarines. The Navy numbers an estimated 9,000 personnel (1,800 conscripts, 2,200 regulars and 5,000 active reservists). There are two naval bases: Tuas Naval Base and Changi Naval Base.

Air Force

The Republic of Singapore Air Force (RSAF) has fighter squadrons comprising the F-16 Fighting Falcon, the F-15 Strike Eagle and the F5S/T Tiger.

Personnel strength (2011) about 13,500 (3,000 conscripts). Equipment includes 148 combat-capable aircraft and 19 attack helicopters.

ECONOMY

Services accounted for 73% of GDP in 2012 and industry 27%.

According to the anti-corruption organization Transparency International, Singapore ranked eighth in the world in a 2015 survey of the countries with the least corruption in business and government. It received 85 out of 100 in the annual index.

Overview

Singapore has the second most competitive economy in the world according to the World Economic Forum. A booming free-market and strong macro-economic policy resulted in growth averaging 8.6% between 2004 and 2007, before the global financial crisis prompted a contraction of 0.6% in 2009. This represented the biggest output decline in 20 years. However, growth rebounded strongly in 2010, with electronics exports boosted by consumer demand in China and corporate IT investment in the USA.

Singapore is also the busiest port in the world. The workforce is highly skilled and educated, although foreign labour has been encouraged because of the low indigenous birth rate. Electronic manufacturing and financial services are the main drivers of growth; 30% of the population is employed in manufacturing and 69% in services. The government has encouraged business creation via a favourable tax regime and a regulatory system that sees the average start-up taking three days. The trade to GDP ratio was the highest in the world in 2012 at 407.9% and the economy has one of the highest per capita gross national incomes, measuring US$64,310.

Currency

The unit of currency is the rial (SAR) of 100 halalah. Foreign exchange reserves totalled US$27,637m. in Sept. 2009 and gold reserves were 4.60m. troy oz. Total money supply in June 2009 was SAR474,307m. Inflation rates (based on IMF statistics):

2005	2006	2007	2008	2009	2010	2011	2012	2013	2014
0.5%	1.0%	2.1%	6.6%	0.6%	2.8%	5.2%	4.6%	2.4%	1.0%

The fiscal year begins on 1 April. In 2011–12 budgetary central government revenue totalled S$58,454m. (S$53,451m. in 2010–11) and expenditure S$48,050m. (S$43,959m. in 2010–11).

Principal sources of revenue in 2011–12 were: taxes on income, profits and capital gains, S$20,579m.; taxes on goods and services S$15,113m.; taxes on property, S$3,902m. Main items of expenditure by economic type in 2011–12: use of goods and services, S$11,012m.; compensation of employees, S$9,963m.; grants, S$9,065m.

There is a Goods and Services Tax (GST) of 7%.

Performance

Real GDP growth rates (based on IMF statistics):

2006	2007	2008	2009	2010	2011	2012	2013	2014
8.9%	9.1%	1.8%	-0.6%	15.2%	6.2%	3.4%	4.4%	2.9%

Total GDP was US$307.9bn. in 2014. Singapore was ranked second in the Global Competitiveness Index in the World Economic Forum's Global Competitiveness Report 2014–2015. The index analyses 12 areas of competitiveness for over 100 countries including macroeconomy, higher education and training, institutions, innovation and infrastructure. In the 2014 World Competitiveness Yearbook, compiled by the International Institute for Management Development, Singapore came third in the world ranking. This annual publication ranks and analyses how a nation's business environment creates and sustains the competitiveness of enterprises.

Banking and Finance

The Monetary Authority of Singapore (Chairman, Tharman Shanmugaratnam) performs the functions of a central bank, except the issuing of currency which is the responsibility of the Board of the Commissioners of Currency.

The Development Bank of Singapore and POSB (formerly the Post Office Savings Bank) were merged in 1998 to become the largest bank in southeast Asia and one of the leading banks in Asia. In 2003 the company was rebranded as DBS Bank although POSB still operates as a recognizable brand within the enterprise with a customer base of over 3.2m. in Singapore in 2009. Customer deposits at DBS Bank totalled S$183.9bn. in the second quarter of 2010 and total assets S$276.3bn.

In Oct. 2010 there were 120 commercial banks in Singapore, of which seven were local. There were 31 representative offices, 26 foreign banks with full licences, 49 with 'wholesale' licences and 38 with 'offshore' licences. The total assets/liabilities amounted to S$749,703.1m. in July 2010. Total deposits of non-bank customers in July 2010 amounted to S$408,837.5m. and loans and advances including bills financing totalled S$298,693.2m. There were 46 merchant banks in Oct. 2010.

Gross external debt amounted to US$1,113,298m. in June 2012.

In 2014 Singapore received a record US$67.5bn. worth of foreign direct investment, up from US$64.8bn. in 2013.

The Singapore Exchange (SGX), a merger of the Stock Exchange of Singapore and the Singapore International Monetary Exchange, was officially launched on 1 Dec. 1999.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Singapore's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption and flaring of fossil fuels in 2011 were the equivalent of 39.2 tonnes per capita.

Electricity

Installed capacity was an estimated 10.2m. kW in 2011. Production (2011) 45,994m. kWh. Consumption per capita (2011) 8,858 kWh.

Oil and Gas

Replacing the Kallang Gasworks, the Senoko Gasworks started operations in Oct. 1996. It had a total gas production capacity of 1.6m. cu. metres per day. In Jan. 2001 a 640-km gas pipeline linking Indonesia's West Natuna field with Singapore came on stream. It is expected to provide Singapore with US$8bn. worth of natural gas over a 20-year period.

Water

Singapore uses an average of 1.25m. cu. metres of water per day. Singapore's water supply comes from local sources and sources in Johor, Malaysia. The total water supply system comprises 19 raw water reservoirs, nine treatment works, 15 storage or service reservoirs and 5,150 km of pipelines.

Agriculture

Only about 0.9% of the total area is used for farming. Most of the food consumed has to be imported. 21,785 tonnes of vegetables, 6,775 tonnes of seafood and 438m. hen's eggs were produced in 2013. In the same year Singapore imported 182,123 tonnes of chicken, 104,554 tonnes of pork, 140,348 tonnes of fish and other seafood, 514,574 tonnes of vegetables, 414,774 tonnes of fruit and 1.25bn. hen's eggs.

Agro-technology parks house large-scale intensive farms to improve production of fresh food. A total of 1,465 ha. of land in Murai, Sungei Tengah, Nee Soon, Loyang, Mandai and Lim Chu Kang had been developed into Agro-technology Parks. As at Sept. 2010, 704 ha. had been allocated to 227 farms for the production of livestock, eggs, milk, aquarium and food fish, vegetables, fruits, orchids, ornamental and aquatic plants, as well as for the breeding of birds and dogs.

Forestry

In 2010 forests covered 2,000 ha., or 3% of the total land area.

Fisheries

The total catch in 2010 amounted to 1,732 tonnes. Imports of fishery commodities were valued at US$807.0m. in 2009.

INDUSTRY

The leading companies by market capitalization in Singapore in March 2015 were: Singapore Telecommunications (US$50.9bn.); DBS Group Holdings, a banking group (US$36.8bn.); and United Overseas Bank (US$27.1bn.).

The largest industrial area is at Jurong. In 2007 there were an estimated 160,000 enterprises of which 99% were small and medium enterprises (SMEs). Only about 5% of SMEs are in the manufacturing sector but they generated 17% of SMEs' value-added in 2007.

Output, 2009 (in S$1m.), totalled 213,699.8: including electronic products and components, 67,226.1; refined petroleum products, 31,860.3; chemicals and chemical products, 25,873.3; machinery and equipment, 18,922.7; pharmaceutical products, 18,093.9; transport equipment, 16,431.7; fabricated metal products, 8,185.8; food, beverages and tobacco, 6,637.2.

According to the World Bank's Doing Business 2015 Singapore is the easiest country in which to do business and the sixth easiest in which to start a business.

Labour

The labour force in 2013 was 3,067,000 (2,105,000 in 2003). 73.7% of the population aged 15–64 was economically active in 2013. In the same year 2.8% of the population was unemployed. Of those in employment in 2013, 80.1% worked in services and 18.6% in industry. In that year 44.2% of the labour force was female. 30.3% of the labour force had a secondary education as the highest level and 49.9% had a tertiary education.

Legislation regulates the principal terms and conditions of employment such as hours of work, sick leave and other fringe benefits. Young people of 14–16 years may work in industrial establishments, and children of 12–14 years may be employed in approved apprenticeship schemes. A trade dispute may be referred to the Industrial Arbitration Court. Singapore does not have a minimum wage.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Foreign investment of up to 40% of the equity of domestic banks is permitted.

Imports and Exports

Total imports were S$333,191m. in 2005; and total exports S$382,532m. in 2005. Exports in 2005 were worth 244% of GDP.

Imports and exports (in S$1m.), by country, 2005:

	Imports (c.i.f.)	Exports (f.o.b.)
Australia	4,850	14,045
China	34,170	32,909
Germany	9,915	10,504
Hong Kong	7,009	35,849
India	6,788	9,817

Thailand	12,516	15,662
UK	6,554	10,525
USA	38,793	39,024

Main imports (2005, in S$1m.): machinery and equipment, 185,980; mineral fuels, 59,145; manufactured goods, 25,040; chemicals and chemical products, 20,744; food, 6,680; beverages and tobacco, 2,190; crude materials, 2,190; animal and vegetable oils, 479; miscellaneous manufactures, 26,526.

Main exports (2005, in S$1m.): machinery and transport equipment, 224,980; mineral fuels, 57,414; chemicals and chemical products, 43,611; manufactured goods, 17,498; food, 3,865; crude materials, 2,257; beverages and tobacco, 2,053; animal and vegetable oils, 422; miscellaneous manufactures, 26,049.

In May 2003 the USA and Singapore signed a free trade agreement removing tariffs on trade worth an estimated US$33bn. per annum.

Trade Fairs

Singapore ranked as the world's most important convention city in 2012 according to the Union des Associations Internationales (UAI). Singapore hosted 952 meetings recognized by UAI (9.5% of all meetings).

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

In 2007 there were 3,297 km of public roads (100% asphalt-paved). Singapore has one of the densest road networks in the world. In 2007 there were 517,000 passenger cars, 14,500 buses and coaches, 151,000 vans and lorries, and 144,300 motorcycles and scooters.

Singapore was the top ranked nation for road infrastructure in the World Economic Forum's Global Competitiveness Report 2009–2010.

Rail

Woodlands Train Checkpoint is the southern terminus of the Malaysian Keretapi Tanah Melayu (KTM) rail network. A main line used to run on through Singapore but ceased operating in 2011. Branch lines serve the port of Singapore and the industrial estates at Jurong. The total rail length of the Mass Rapid Transit (SMRT) metro is 93.2 km. The 20 km North-East Line (operated by SBS Transit), the world's first fully automated heavy metro, became operational in 2003. In late 1999 the Light Rapid Transit System (LRT) began operations, linking the Bukit Panjang Estate with Choa Chu Kang in the North West region.

Civil Aviation

As of Sept. 2010, Singapore Changi Airport was served by 96 airlines with more than 5,100 weekly flights to and from some 200 cities in 60 countries and territories worldwide. A total of 37,203,978 passengers and 1,633,791 tonnes of freight were handled in 2009. The national airline is Singapore Airlines, which carried 16,480,000 passengers in 2009–10. Its subsidiary, Silk Air, serves Asian destinations. Other Singapore-based carriers include Jetstar Asia and Tiger Airways.

In the World Economic Forum's Global Competitiveness Report 2009–2010, Singapore ranked first for quality of air transport infrastructure.

Shipping

Singapore has a large container port, the world's second busiest in terms of containers handled and shipping tonnage in 2012, second only to Shanghai. The economy is dependent on shipping and entrepôt trade. A total of 134,883 vessels of 2.4bn. gross tonnes (GT) entered Singapore during 2014. In 2014, 4,595 vessels with a total of 82.2m. GT were registered in Singapore.

The Singapore merchant fleet ranked fifth among the principal merchant fleets of the world in 2014. Total cargo handled in 2014 was 581.3m. freight tons, and total container throughput was 33,869,300 TEUs (twenty-foot equivalent units).

Singapore was ranked first in the World Economic Forum's Global Competitiveness Report 2009–2010 for the quality of its port facilities.

Telecommunications

In 2013 there were 1,967,000 main (fixed) telephone lines. In the same year mobile phone subscriptions numbered 8,438,000 (1,559.2 per 1,000 persons). In 1997 Singapore Telecom, one of the largest companies in Asia, lost its monopoly with the entry of a new mobile phone operator. Singapore had three mobile phone operators in 2009—SingTel Mobile (owned by Singapore Telecom), M1 and StarHub Mobile. In 2013 there were 1,493.3 mobile broadband subscriptions per 1,000 inhabitants and 260.3 fixed broadband subscriptions for every 1,000 inhabitants. In March 2012 there were 2.6m. Facebook users. The Infocomm Development Authority of Singapore (IDA) is the national communications regulator.

According to the World Economic Forum's Global Information Technology Report 2010–11 Singapore is ranked second in the world in exploiting global information technology developments.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

There is a Supreme Court in Singapore which consists of the High Court and the Court of Appeal. The Supreme Court is composed of a Chief Justice and 11 Judges. The High Court has unlimited original jurisdiction in both civil and criminal cases. The Court of Appeal is the final appellate court. It hears appeals from any judgement or order of the High Court in any civil matter. The Subordinate Courts consist of a total of 47 District and Magistrates' Courts, the Civil, the Family and Crime Registries, the Primary Dispute Resolution Centre, and the Small Claims Tribunal. The right of appeal to the UK Privy Council was abolished in 1994.

Penalties for drug trafficking and abuse are severe, including a mandatory death penalty. In 1994 there were 76 executions, although since then the average annual number has generally been declining. No executions took place in 2012 or 2013, but there were two in 2014 and then four in 2015. Crime rates are very low, with the homicide rate just 0.2 per 100,000 inhabitants in 2012—the lowest of any country apart from those with extremely small populations.

The Technology Court was introduced in 1995 where documents were filed electronically. This process was implemented in Aug. 1998 in the Magistrates appeal and the Court of Appeal.

The population in penal institutions as at 31 Dec. 2012 was 12,504 (230 per 100,000 of national population). In 2015 the World Justice Project Rule of Law Index, which provides data on how the rule of law is experienced by the general public across eight categories, ranked Singapore third of 102 countries for both criminal justice and civil justice.

Education

The general literacy rate rose from 84% in 1980 to an estimated 94.7% in 2009 (male 97.5%; female 92.0%). Kindergartens are private and fee-paying. Compulsory primary state education starts at six years and culminates at 11 or 12 years with an examination which influences choice of secondary schooling. There are 17 autonomous and eight private fee-paying secondary schools. Tertiary education at 16 years is divided into three branches: junior colleges leading to university; four polytechnics; and ten technical institutes.

In 2007 there were 301,101 pupils with 14,743 teaching staff in primary schools, 232,100 pupils with 13,686 teaching staff in secondary schools and 183,627 students with 14,209 academic staff in tertiary education.

There are three universities: the National University of Singapore (established 1905) with 32,028 students in 2001–02, the Nanyang Technological University (established 1991) with 28,949 in 2007–08, and the Singapore Management University (established in 2000).

In 2009 public expenditure on education came to 3.1% of GDP and accounted for 11.6% of total government expenditure.

According to the OECD's 2012 PISA (Programme for International Student Assessment) study, 15-year-olds in Singapore rank second among OECD and other major countries and cities in mathematics, and third in both reading and science. The three-yearly study compares educational achievement of pupils in over 60 countries.

Health

There were 26 hospitals and speciality centres in 2014 with 11,230 beds. In 2014 there were 11,733 doctors, 1,905 dentists, and 37,618 registered nurses and midwives. Private practitioners provide 80% of primary healthcare services.

Of the 18,938 deaths in 2013 the leading causes were cancer (30.5%), pneumonia (18.5%) and coronary heart disease (15.5%).

Welfare

The Central Provident Fund (CPF) was set up in 1955 to provide financial security for workers upon retirement or when they are no longer able to work. In 2013 there were 3,507,645 members with total balances of S$252,969m.

RELIGION

According to the 2010 census, 33.3% of the population were Buddhists, 18.3% Christians, 14.7% Muslims, 10.9% Taoists and 5.1% Hindus; 0.7% belonged to other religions and 17.0% had no religion. A report published in April 2014 by the Pew Research Center ranked Singapore as the world's most religiously diverse country.

CULTURE

The National Arts Council (NAC) was established in 1991 to spearhead the development of the arts.

Press

In 2014 there were ten daily newspapers, with a total daily circulation of 1,355,000 copies. The most popular paid-for daily is The Straits Times, with an average daily circulation of 309,000 in 2014. Its online edition had 667,000 unique monthly visitors in 2014.

Tourism

International visitor arrivals totalled 15.6m. in 2013, up from 14.5m. in 2012. Tourism receipts rose from S$23.1bn. in 2012 to S$23.5bn. in 2013. In Dec. 2013 there were 196 gazetted hotels, providing 47,113 rooms.

Festivals

Every Jan. or Feb. the Lunar New Year is celebrated. Other Chinese festivals include Qing Ming (a time for the remembrance of ancestors), Yu Lan Jie (Feast of the Hungry Ghosts) and the Mid-Autumn Festival (Mooncake or Lantern festival).

Muslims in Singapore celebrate Hari Raya Puasa (to celebrate the end of a month-long fast) and Hari Raya Haji (a day of prayer and commemoration of the annual Mecca pilgrimage). There are also Muharram (a New Year celebration) and Maulud (Prophet Muhammad's birthday).

Hindus celebrate the Tamil New Year in mid-April. Thaipusam is a penitential Hindu festival popular with Tamils; and Diwali, the Festival of Lights, is celebrated by Hindus and Sikhs. Other festivals include Thimithi (a fire-walking ceremony) and Navarathiri (nine nights' prayer).

Buddhists observe Vesak Day, which commemorates the birth, enlightenment and Nirvana of the Buddha, and falls on the full moon day in May.

Christmas, Good Friday and Easter Sunday are also recognized.

World Heritage Sites

Singapore has one site on the UNESCO World Heritage List: Singapore Botanical Gardens (2015), a site created in 1859 that includes a variety of historic features, plantings and buildings.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

There is evidence of human habitation from 270,000 BC. In the Bronze Age the region was a centre for copper manufacture and was ruled by Carpathian, Celtic and Germanic tribes. The date of the Slavic arrival is contested but there is evidence of their presence from the sixth century under the Roman Empire. Waves of invasion and migration followed Roman withdrawal and control fell variously to the Avars, Franks and Magyars.

The first brief period of Slavic rule was the Samo Empire (623–658) followed by the Moravian Empire from 833–907. The region subsequently became part of the Kingdom of Hungary. In 1241 the region was invaded by Mongols and was stricken with famine but grew in prosperity through the medieval period. From the 16th–19th centuries Slovakia was at the centre of Hungary under the Habsburg dynasty. After 1867 it became part of the Austro-Hungarian Empire and underwent ‘Magyarization’, a repressive attempt to impose Magyar culture. In response, a nationalist movement at home and among immigrants in America gained momentum in the First World War.

On 28 Oct. 1918, after the dissolution of Austria-Hungary, the Czechoslovak State was founded. Two days later the Slovak National Council voted to unite with the Czechs. The Treaty of St Germain-en-Laye (1919) recognized the Czechoslovak Republic, consisting of the Czech lands (Bohemia, Moravia, part of Silesia) and Slovakia. The new state was numerically dominated by Czechs, giving rise to some tensions and calls for Slovakian independence. In 1939 negotiations between European powers resulted in Germany incorporating the Czech lands into the Reich as the ‘Protectorate of Bohemia and Moravia’. Meanwhile the German-sponsored Slovak government declared independence. A government-in-exile, headed by Dr Edvard Beneš, was set up in London during the war. In 1944 Slovak resistance fighters began an uprising; liberation was completed by Soviet and US forces in May 1945. Territories taken by Germans, Poles and Hungarians were restored to Czech sovereignty.

Elections in May 1946 returned a coalition government, under communist prime minister Klement Gottwald. On 20 Feb. 1948, 12 non-communist ministers resigned in protest at the infiltration of communists into the police. Gottwald formed a predominantly communist government and in May 1948, after the government won an 89% majority in rigged parliamentary elections, President Beneš resigned. During the next two decades the government banned other parties and followed Stalinist policies. On 14 May 1955 Czechoslovakia signed the Warsaw Pact, allying itself with the Soviet Union and other Eastern Bloc countries.

In 1968 pressure for liberalization culminated in the overthrow of the Stalinist leadership and under Alexander Dubček, new first secretary of the communist party, the ‘Prague Spring’ saw sweeping reforms including the abolition of censorship. Between May and Aug. 1968 the USSR put pressure on the government to abandon reforms. Finally, Warsaw Pact troops occupied Czechoslovakia on 21 Aug. The government was forced to reverse reforms and accept the stationing of Soviet troops. In April 1969, with Soviet support, Dubček was replaced by Gustáv Husák.

Demands for reform persisted and mass demonstrations began in Nov. 1989. When authorities used violence to break up a demonstration on 17 Nov., the communist leadership resigned. On 30 Nov. the federal assembly abolished the communists’ sole right to govern. A new government was formed on 3 Dec. and another followed a week later as the protest movement grew. Gustáv Husák resigned as president and was replaced by Václav Havel by the unanimous vote of 323 members of the federal assembly on 29 Dec. This bloodless overthrow of communist rule became known as the ‘Velvet Revolution’.

At the June 1992 elections the Movement for Democratic Slovakia, led by Vladimír Mečiar, campaigned for Slovak independence. On 17 July the Slovak National Council adopted a declaration of sovereignty by 113 to 24 votes, the ‘Velvet Divorce’. Havel resigned as federal president on 20 July. A constitution ratified on 1 Sept. 1992 paved the way for independent Slovakia to come into being on 1 Jan. 1993. Economic property was divided between Slovakia and the Czech Republic, with government real estate remaining with the republic in which it was located. Other property was divided by special commissions in the proportion of two (Czech Republic) to one (Slovakia), on the basis of population size. Military equipment was also divided on the two-to-one principle and military personnel were invited to choose in which army to serve.

In the 1990s Slovakia resisted calls for economic reforms and closer ties with Western Europe. However, following the election of a coalition government under Mikuláš Dzurinda in Oct. 1998, the country implemented reforms and attracted foreign investment. It responded to criticism about its human rights record by improving conditions for its Romany and Hungarian minorities. Slovakia joined NATO in March 2004 and the European Union in May 2004. It elected a new coalition government under Prime Minister Robert Fico in June 2006. Fico was succeeded by Iveta Radičová in 2010 before reclaiming the premiership in March 2012.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Slovakia is bounded in the northwest by the Czech Republic, north by Poland, east by Ukraine, south by Hungary and southwest by Austria. Its area is 49,034 sq. km (18,932 sq. miles). Census population in 2011 was 5,397,036 (2,769,264 females and 2,627,772 males); density, 110.1 per sq. km. In Dec. 2013 the population was estimated at 5,415,949.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 5.43m.

In 2011, 54.9% of the population lived in urban areas. There are eight administrative regions (Kraj), one of which is the capital, Bratislava. They have the same name as the main city of the region.

Region	Area in sq. km	2013 estimated population
Banská Bystrica	9,455	656,813
Bratislava	2,053	618,380

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

The constitution became effective on 1 Jan. 1993, creating a parliamentary democracy with universal suffrage from the age of 18. Parliament is the unicameral National Council. It has 150 members elected by proportional representation to serve four-year terms. The constitution was amended in Sept. 1998 to allow for the direct election of the President, who serves for a five-year term. The President may serve a maximum of two consecutive terms.

The Judicial Branch consists of a Supreme Court, whose judges are elected by the National Council, and a Constitutional Court, whose judges are appointed by the President from a group of nominees approved by the National Council.

Citizenship belongs to all citizens of the former federal Slovak Republic; other residents of five years standing may apply for citizenship. Slovakia grants dual citizenship.

CURRENT LEADERS

Andrej Kiska

Position

President

Introduction

Andrej Kiska became president in June 2014. It is his first major political position, following a successful career as a businessman and philanthropist.

Early Life

Kiska was born in Poprad, northern Slovakia on 2 Feb. 1963. He graduated in electrical engineering in 1986 from the Slovak Technical University in Bratislava. He moved to the USA following the Velvet Revolution in 1990, returning to Slovakia 18 months later. Having set up two successful hire-purchase companies in 1996, he sold his stake in both in 2005 and co-founded the charitable organization Dobrý anděl (Good Angel) the following year. It became the most successful non-corporate charity in Slovakia, providing financial aid to families in which a member had a life-threatening illness.

Career in Office

In 2014 Kiska ran for president as an independent candidate on an anti-corruption platform. He beat the leftist prime minister, Robert Fico, after a second round of voting in March 2014 and was inaugurated on 15 June, becoming the first president since independence to be unaffiliated with the Communist Party. Kiska's stance as a non-partisan candidate won popularity following several scandals involving the political elite in recent years.

He nominated just one out of the six candidates proposed by parliament as constitutional court judges, arguing that the other candidates were not suitably qualified. He also announced plans for a referendum on gay rights following a constitutional amendment in 2014 that excluded homosexual couples from marriage.

Kiska has indicated support for granting Kosovo official recognition as a sovereign state independent from Serbia and, unlike Fico, backed US sanctions against Russia following the crisis in Ukraine.

Robert Fico

Position

Prime Minister

Introduction

Robert Fico became prime minister for a second time after his Direction-Social Democracy (Smer-SD) party achieved outright victory in legislative elections held in March 2012. He pledged to lead Slovakia into closer fiscal co-operation with the European Union.

Early Life

Robert Fico was born in Topoľčany, Czechoslovakia on 15 Sept. 1964. After studying law at Comenius University in Bratislava, he obtained a PhD in criminal law from the Slovak Academy of Sciences. On finishing military service in 1986 he worked for the law institute of the ministry of justice until 1995, holding the post of deputy director from 1992.

From 1994-2000 he represented the Slovak Republic at the European Court of Human Rights and the European Commission of Human Rights. He entered the Slovak parliament in 1992, serving on the parliamentary constitutional committee from 1992-2002, as chairman of the prison commission from 1995-2003 and on the parliamentary committee on human rights, national minorities and women's rights from 2002-06. From 1999 he was chair of Smer and has served as its parliamentary leader since 2002.

Fico took office as prime minister for the first time in July 2006, at the head of a coalition with the centre-left People's Party-Movement for a Democratic Slovakia and the right-wing Slovak National Party. As premier, he withdrew Slovakian troops from Iraq and refused to deploy forces in southern Afghanistan. Scheduled visits to Libya and Venezuela in 2007 attracted criticism from opponents, and in Oct. 2006 the Alliance of European Socialists expelled Smer for going into coalition with the National Party.

On 1 Jan. 2009 Fico took Slovakia into the single European currency. Tensions with neighbouring Hungary rose in 2009 when Slovakia passed a law restricting the use of minority languages in government buildings. Relations worsened the following year when Fico fiercely criticized Hungarian legislation allowing dual citizenship, claiming it constituted a security threat to Slovakia.

Despite Smer winning the largest number of seats in the June 2010 election, it was unable to form a government. Fico went into opposition, against Prime Minister Iveta Radičová's centre-right coalition. In Oct. 2011, with the government divided over Slovakia's participation in the European Financial Stability Facility, Fico agreed to support the measure in return for early parliamentary elections. Initially expected to win, the ruling coalition was hit by allegations of ministerial corruption and in March 2012 Smer won 83 of 150 seats to claim an outright majority.

Career in Office

Fico was sworn in on 4 April 2012, promising to deliver on EU-agreed fiscal targets. He pledged to protect social benefits while reducing the budget deficit and reaffirmed his intention to raise tax rates for the wealthy. His main challenges have included guiding the economy towards growth, meeting the expectations of unemployed and low-paid workers and building relations with Hungary.

In 2013 Fico declared his candidacy for the presidential election scheduled for March 2014. Although he received the highest share of the vote in the first round, he was defeated in the run-off by Andrej Kiska.

Later in 2014 Fico implied that there were political reasons for reductions in Russian gas supplies to Slovakia amid broader EU-Russian tensions over the separatist conflict in eastern Ukraine.

In response to the escalating refugee influx into the EU in 2015, Fico expressed his strong opposition to proposed mandatory quotas for distributing asylum-seekers across member countries. In Nov. he pointed to Muslim migrants into Slovakia as a potential threat to national security and said that he was prepared to build border fences to protect Slovak citizens.

Smer-SD (as Smer is now known) won the parliamentary election of March 2016 but lost its former overall majority. Fico was nevertheless able to secure a further term as prime minister by forming a coalition with the Slovak National Party and two smaller parties.

DEFENCE

Since 1 Jan. 2006 Slovakia has had an all-volunteer professional army. In 2013 defence spending totalled US$995m. (US$181 per capita), representing 1.0% of GDP.

Army

Strength (2011), 6,230. In addition there were 2,545 central staff personnel in 2011 and 3,080 support and training personnel. Equipment in 2011 included 69 main battle tanks and 253 armoured infantry fighting vehicles.

Air Force

Personnel (2011), 3,944. Equipment in 2011 included 22 combat-capable aircraft (MiG-29 fighters).

INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

A referendum held on 16–17 May 2003 approved accession to the EU, with 92.5% of votes cast for membership and 7.5% against. Turnout was 52.2%. Slovakia became a member of NATO on 29 March 2004 and the EU on 1 May 2004.

Slovakia has had a long-standing dispute with Hungary over the Gabčíkovo-Nagymaros Project, involving the building of dam structures in both countries for the production of electric power, flood control and improvement of navigation on the Danube as agreed in a treaty signed in 1977 between Czechoslovakia and Hungary. In late 1998 Slovakia and Hungary signed a protocol easing tensions between the two nations and settling differences over the dam.

ECONOMY

Agriculture accounted for 4.4% of GDP in 2014, industry 33.6% and services 62.0%.

Overview

Slovakia has undergone almost constant restructuring since 1998 when policy shifted from state intervention towards pro-market reforms. Following economic transition, the heavy industry and agriculture sectors shrank while the service sector increased its share of GDP (reaching 61% in 2010).

From 1998–2008 the economy enjoyed rapid growth, driven by strong exports and foreign direct investment, particularly in the automotive industry. GDP grew at approximately 4% per annum and peaked in 2007 at 10.5% on the back of strong domestic demand and buoyant exports. Slovakia entered the European exchange rate mechanism in 2005 and adopted the euro in Jan. 2009. However, the global financial crisis resulted in a 5.3% contraction in GDP that year. In early 2009 the government introduced a range of measures to counteract the effects of the downturn, which, combined with the recovery in global demand for manufactured goods, saw robust growth return in the second half of 2009.

The government managed to reduce the budget deficit by nearly five percentage points to 2.6% between 2010 and 2013, facilitating the country's exit from the European Union's Excessive Deficit Procedure. Nonetheless, growth declined from 2.7% in 2011 to 1.4% in 2013 owing to a weak external environment. Unemployment remains high at around 13% in 2014, with youth unemployment registering 33%. Other challenges to growth include instability within the Europe-wide economy and geopolitical tensions to the east that endanger a steady supply of fuel.

Currency

On 1 Jan. 2009 the euro (EUR) replaced the Slovak koruna (SKK) as the legal currency of Slovakia at the irrevocable conversion rate of 30.126 koruny to one euro. Foreign exchange reserves in Sept. 2009 were US$54m. (US$17,493m. in Sept. 2008) and gold reserves 1.02m. troy oz. There was inflation of 1.5% in 2013 but deflation of 0.1% in 2014.

Total money supply in Dec. 2008 was €545,969m.

Budget

In 2011 budgetary central government revenue totalled €11,726m. (€10,677m. in 2010) and expenditure €15,650m. (€15,407m. in 2010).

Slovakia's budget deficit in 2014 was 2.8% of GDP (2013, 2.6%; 2012, 4.2%). The required target set by the EU is a budget deficit of no more than 3%.

VAT, personal and company income tax, real estate taxes and inheritance taxes came into force in Jan. 1993. VAT is 20% (reduced rate, 10%).

Performance

Real GDP growth was 1.6% in 2012, 1.4% in 2013 and 2.4% in 2014.

Slovakia's total GDP in 2014 was US$100.2bn.

Banking and Finance

The central bank and bank of issue is the Slovak National Bank, founded in 1993 (Governor, Jozef Makúch). It has an autonomous statute modelled on the German Bundesbank, with the duties of maintaining control over monetary policy and inflation, ensuring the stability of the currency, and supervising commercial banks. However, it is now proposed to amend the central bank law to allow the government to appoint half the members of the board and force the bank to increase its financing of the budget deficit.

In Oct. 1998 the Slovak National Bank abandoned its fixed exchange rate system, whereby the crown's value was fixed within a fluctuation band against a number of currencies, and chose to float the currency.

Decentralization of the banking system began in 1991, and private banks began to operate. The two largest Slovak banks were both privatized in 2001. The Austrian bank Erste Bank bought an 87.18% stake in Slovenská Sporiteľňa (Slovak Savings Bank) and the Italian bank IntesaBci bought a 94.47% stake in Všeobecná úverová banka (General Credit Bank). In 2011 Slovenská Sporiteľňa had assets of €11.3bn. and Všeobecná úverová banka €10.8bn. In 2013 there were 29 commercial banks including three building savings banks.

Gross external debt amounted to US$65,592m. in June 2012.

Foreign direct investment in Slovakia in 2012 amounted to US$2,826m.

There is a stock exchange in Bratislava.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

In 2011, 9.7% of energy consumption came from renewables (wind power, solar power, hydro-electric power, tidal power, geothermal energy and biomass), compared to the European Union average of 13.0%. A target of 14% has been set by the EU for 2020.

Environment

Slovakia's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2011 were the equivalent of 6.4 tonnes per capita.

Electricity

Installed capacity in 2011 was 8.1m. kW, of which 2.5m. kW was hydro-electric and 1.9m. kW nuclear. Production in 2011 was 28.66bn. kWh, with consumption per capita 5,401 kWh. There were four nuclear reactors in use in 2011. In 2011 about 54% of electricity was nuclear-generated, making Slovakia one of the most nuclear-dependent nations in the world.

Oil and Gas

In 2013 natural gas reserves were 14bn. cu. metres; oil reserves were 9m. bbls in 2011. Natural gas production in 2009 amounted to 105m. cu. metres. Slovakia relies on Russia for almost all of its oil and gas.

Minerals

Output in 2014 (in 1,000 tonnes): limestone, 4,333; gravel, 3,863; lignite, 2,188; dolomite, 857. There are also reserves of copper, lead, zinc, iron, rock salt and others.

Agriculture

In 2006 there were 1.34m. ha. of arable land and 25,260 ha. of permanent crops. In 2006 agriculture employed 4.4% of the economically active population.

Production, 2006 (in 1,000 tonnes): sugar beets, 1,371; wheat, 1,343; maize, 838; barley, 642; potatoes, 263; rapeseed, 260; sunflower seeds, 229; grapes, 52; apples, 41, tomatoes, 36.

Livestock, 2006: pigs, 1.11m.; cattle, 508,000; sheep, 333,000; chickens, 13m. Livestock products (in 1,000 tonnes): meat (2006), 196; milk (2003), 1,166; cheese (2006), 72; eggs (2003), 68.

Forestry

The area under forests in 2010 was 1.93m. ha., or 40% of the total land area. In 2011 timber production was 9.21m. cu. metres.

Fisheries

In 2010 the total catch was 1,608 tonnes, exclusively freshwater fish.

INDUSTRY

The main industries in Slovakia are machine engineering, chemical products, electrical apparatus, textiles, clothing and footwear, metallurgy, food and beverages, paper, wood and woodworking. Output (2014 unless otherwise indicated, in 1,000 tonnes) included: cement, 5,070; crude steel, 4,705; pig iron (2013), 3,617; distillate fuel oil (2012), 2,732; coke (2012), 1,560; petrol (2012), 1,348; residual fuel oil (2012), 616; flour, 343; ferroalloys, 103; toilet paper, 85; malt beer, 265m. litres. Motor vehicle production reached (2014) 908,074 units. Slovakia has the highest per capita car production of any country.

Labour

Out of 2,351,400 people in employment in 2011, 568,000 were in manufacturing, 304,000 in wholesale and retail trade/repair of motor vehicles, motorcycles and personal and household goods, 243,700 in construction and 164,200 in education. The average monthly salary in 2011 was €855. In Jan. 2011 the monthly minimum wage was €317. Unemployment stood at 19.2% in 2001, but then fell to 16.2% in 2005 and still further to 9.6% in 2008. It rose again to 14.5% in 2010 and had dropped to 10.6% by Dec. 2015. Youth unemployment was 33.2% in 2011. Long-term unemployment is also very high, with 63.9% of jobless Slovaks in 2011 having been out of work for more than a year (although the rate has fallen from 73.1% in 2006). In 2011 part-time work accounted for around 4% of all employment in Slovakia.

Slovakia had 19,000 people living in slavery according to the Walk Free Foundation's 2013 Global Slavery Index.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

In 2008 imports (c.i.f.) totalled US$74,034m. (US$62,102m. in 2007); exports (f.o.b.), US$70,982m. (US$57,766m. in 2007). Principal import sources in 2004 were: Germany, 23.8%; Czech Republic, 13.2%; Russia, 9.4%; Italy, 5.6%; Austria, 4.3%. The leading export markets in 2004 were: Germany, 28.6%; Czech Republic, 13.3%; Austria, 7.8%; Italy, 6.4%; Poland, 5.5%. In 2004 machinery and transport equipment accounted for 39.6% of Slovakia's imports and 45.9% of exports; chemicals, manufactured goods classified chiefly by material and miscellaneous manufactured articles 39.3% of imports and 41.4% of exports; mineral fuels, lubricants and related materials 12.5% of imports and 6.7% of exports.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

In 2014 there were 54,801 km of roads, including 420 km of motorways. There were 1,949,055 passenger cars in use in 2014, plus 265,424 vans and lorries, 8,876 buses and coaches and 80,791 motorcycles and mopeds. In 2014 there were 13,307 road accidents resulting in 229 fatalities.

Rail

In 2011 the length of railway routes was 3,624 km. Most of the network is 1,435 mm gauge with short sections on three other gauges. In 2011, 47.5m. passengers were carried and 43.7m. tonnes of freight. There are tram/light rail networks in Bratislava, Košice and Trenčianske Teplice.

Civil Aviation

The main international airport is at Bratislava (M. R. Štefánik), which handled 1,413,193 passengers in 2012 and 22,565 tonnes of freight. There are also some international flights from Košice. Slovak Airlines (formerly the Slovak flag carrier) ceased operations in Feb. 2007, as did Air Slovakia in March 2010. SkyEurope (central Europe's first low-cost airline), which operated domestic services and also flew to a number of destinations in Europe, ceased operations in Sept. 2009. Danube Wings, launched in 2008, ceased operations in Dec. 2013.

Shipping

In 2012 vessels registered by Slovak enterprises numbered 218. Transport of goods on inland waterways in 2012 totalled 8.2m. tonnes, of which 5.3m. tonnes were transit goods and 2.9m. tonnes international.

Telecommunications

In 2013 there were 6,208,000 mobile phone subscriptions (1,139.1 per 1,000 inhabitants) and 967,000 fixed telephone lines. In 2000 Deutsche Telekom bought a 51% stake in the state-owned Slovak Telekom, with the Slovakian government retaining 49% of shares in the company. In 2015 Deutsche Telekom acquired these shares, resulting in Slovak Telekom now being fully owned by Deutsche Telekom. In 2013 an estimated 77.9% of the population aged 16–74 were internet users. In March 2012 there were 1.9m. Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The post-Communist judicial system was established by a federal law of July 1991. This provided for a unified system of four types of court: civil, criminal, commercial and administrative. Commercial courts arbitrate in disputes arising from business activities. Administrative courts examine the legality of the decisions of state institutions when appealed by citizens. In addition, there are military courts which operate under the jurisdiction of the Ministry of Defence. There is a Supreme Court, and a hierarchy of courts under the Ministry of Justice at republic, region and district level. District courts are courts of first instance. Cases are usually decided by Senates comprising a judge and two associate judges, although occasionally by a single judge. (Associate judges are citizens in good standing over the age of 25 who are elected for four-year terms). Regional courts are courts of first instance in more serious cases and also courts of appeal for district courts. Cases are usually decided by a Senate of two judges and three associate judges, although again occasionally by a single judge. The Supreme Court interprets law as a guide to other courts and functions also as a court of appeal. Decisions are made by Senates of three judges. The judges of the Supreme Court are nominated by the President; other judges are appointed by the National Council.

The population in penal institutions in Aug. 2013 was 10,152 (187 per 100,000 of national population).

Education

In 2014–15 there were 2,896 pre-school institutions with 156,402 children and 15,175 teachers, 2,133 primary schools with 425,731 pupils and 29,646 teachers, 242 grammar schools with 75,512 students and 5,598 teachers, 448 vocational schools with 151,757 pupils and 11,183 teachers, and 425 special schools with 35,796 children and 4,917 teachers. There were 36 universities or university-type institutions with 173,320 students.

In 2012 spending on education was 9.8% of total government expenditure.

The adult literacy rate in 2015 was 99.6% (99.6% among both males and females).

Health

In 2013 there were 18,355 physicians, 2,586 dentists, 32,903 nurses and midwives, and 3,333 pharmacists. There were 42,245 beds in health establishments in total in 2013, of which 24,413 were in general hospitals. In 2013 Slovakia spent 7.5% of its GDP on health.

Welfare

The age of retirement is 62 for men and is rising for women, to be 62 by 2024. Pensions rose by 6.95% on 1 Jan. 2009. The average monthly old-age pension at Feb. 2009 was €335.50 with approximately 925,700 beneficiaries. Maternity benefit is paid for a total of 28 weeks or 37 weeks for a single mother and for multiple births. State unemployment benefit is 50% of previous earnings during the first three months, thereafter 45% of previous earnings.

RELIGION

A federal Czechoslovakian law of July 1991 provides the basis for church-state relations and guarantees the religious and civic rights of citizens and churches. Churches must register to become legal entities but operate independently of the state. In 2011, 62.0% of the population were Roman Catholic, 5.9% members of the Evangelical Church of the Augsburg Confession, 5.8% Greek Catholic and 1.8% Calvinist. In Feb. 2016 there was one cardinal.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

There are seven UNESCO sites in Slovakia: Vlkolínec (inscribed on the list in 1993), a group of 45 traditional log houses; Banská Štiavnica (1993), a medieval mining town; Levoča, Spišský and the Associated Cultural Monuments (1993 and 2009)—13th century Spiš Castle is one of the largest castle complexes in central Europe; Bardejov Town Conservation Reserve (2000), a medieval fortified town; and Wooden Churches of the Slovak part of the Carpathian Mountain Area (2008).

Slovakia shares two UNESCO sites with other countries: the Caves of Aggtelek and Slovak Karst (1995, 2000 and 2008) with Hungary and the primeval beech forests of the Carpathians (2007) with Ukraine.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

The region was settled by Celts and Illyrians in pre-Roman times and fell to Rome in the 1st century AD. In the 6th century Slavic tribes arrived and part of the territory came under the Slavic Duchy of Karantania in the 7th century. In 745 Karantania became part of the Frankish Empire as an independent country with its own laws and language. After passing under the rule of Bavarian dukes and the Republic of Venice, it joined its neighbouring Slovene-inhabited areas to become part of the Habsburg dynasty in the 14th century.

The Slovenes retained a strong national identity, aided by the printing of the first Slovenian books in 1550 and the translation of the Protestant Bible into Slovenian in 1584. A 12-day peasant revolt in 1573 was bloodily suppressed. In the 19th century a nationalist movement developed, demanding Slovenian autonomy within the Habsburg monarchy. Administrative autonomy was granted in the province of Carinthia while Slovenes in other areas gained some cultural rights. With the demise of the Habsburg monarchy, Slovenia became part of Austria-Hungary. Following Germany's defeat in the First World War, the Slovenes joined their Slav neighbours in the Kingdom of the Serbs, Croats and Slovenes on 1 Dec. 1918. The country was renamed Yugoslavia in 1929. During the Second World War Slovenian territory was divided and annexed by the Axis powers. In 1945 Slovenia became a constituent republic of the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia under Josip Tito.

In the 1980s nationalism grew stronger throughout Yugoslavia, spearheaded by the Serbs' call for Serbian unity. In Oct. 1989 the Slovene Assembly passed a constitutional amendment giving it the right to secede from Yugoslavia and in a referendum on 23 Dec. 1990, 88.5% voted for independence. Slovenia declared independence on 25 June 1991 but, at EU-sponsored peace talks, suspended the claim for three months. Fighting between Slovenia and federal troops ended with a federal withdrawal and on 8 Oct. 1991 Slovenia again declared its independence.

In 1992 Slovenia removed more than 18,000 non-Slovene residents from its records and cancelled their rights. Under pressure from the EU, which Slovenia joined in May 2004, partial restoration of citizenship was granted to about 12,000 people, though a 2004 referendum rejected proposals to restore full retrospective rights. Slovenia joined NATO in March 2004 and became the first former communist bloc country to adopt the euro in Jan. 2007.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Slovenia is bounded in the north by Austria, in the northeast by Hungary, in the southeast and south by Croatia and in the west by Italy. The length of coastline is 47 km. Its area is 20,273 sq. km. In Jan. 2011 the population at the register-based census was 2,050,189 (1,035,626 females); density per sq. km, 101.1. The capital is Ljubljana: 2011 census population, 272,220. Maribor (population of 95,171 in 2011) is the other major city. In 2011, 49.5% of the population lived in urban areas. In Jan. 2014 the population was estimated at 2,061,085.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 2.07m.

The official language is Slovene.

In April 2004 voters rejected plans to restore the civil rights of Slovenia's ethnic minorities, mainly nationals of other former Yugoslav republics, which were 'erased' in 1992.

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

The constitution became effective on 23 Dec. 1991. Slovenia is a parliamentary democratic republic with an executive that consists of a directly-elected president and a prime minister, aided by a council of ministers. It has a bicameral parliament (Skupščina Slovenije), consisting of a 90-member National Assembly (Državni Zbor), 88 members elected for four-year terms by proportional representation with a 4% threshold and two members elected by ethnic minorities; and a 40-member, advisory State Council (Državni Svet), elected for five-year terms by interest groups and regions. It has veto powers over the National Assembly. Administratively the country is divided into 199 municipalities and 11 urban municipalities.

The Judicial branch consists of a Supreme Court, whose judges are elected by the National Assembly, and a Constitutional Court, whose judges are elected for nine-year terms by the National Assembly and nominated by the president.

CURRENT LEADERS

Borut Pahor

Position
President

Introduction

Borut Pahor of the Social Democrats was elected president (the youngest to hold the office) in the second round of voting in Dec. 2012, defeating the incumbent Danilo Türk. He had previously served as prime minister at the head of a centre-left coalition from Nov. 2008 until Jan. 2012 when he was succeeded by Janez Janša of the Slovenian Democratic Party.

Early Life

Pahor was born in 1963 in Postojna, southeast of Ljubljana. He studied political science at the University of Ljubljana and, at the age of 26, became the youngest-ever member of the central committee of the Slovenian branch of the Communist Party, gaining a reputation as a reformist. In 1992, after the collapse of communism in eastern Europe and the fragmentation of Yugoslavia, he was elected a deputy in the National Assembly of the newly independent Slovenia.

A year later Pahor became deputy leader of the newly formed United List of Social Democrats (ZLSD). At the third ZLSD conference in March 1997 he was elected party leader on a centrist, 'third way' platform. At the 2000 elections, having led his party into a coalition with Janez Drnovšek's Liberal Democracy of Slovenia, Pahor won a third term in the National Assembly and became its president. In 2004 he was elected to the European Parliament, where he joined the Socialist Group. In the same year the centre-left coalition of which he was a member lost to the centre-right alliance led by the Slovenian Democratic Party. In 2005, on his initiative, the ZLSD was renamed the Social Democrats.

Parliamentary elections held on 21 Sept. 2008 saw the Social Democrats gain 29 of the 90 available seats to become the country's largest party. It formed a coalition government with Zares, Liberal Democracy of Slovenia and the Democratic Party of Pensioners of Slovenia. Pahor was sworn in as premier on 21 Nov. 2008.

Pahor promised to cut taxes, reform the national health and pension systems and increase investment incentives, but was forced to redraft the 2009 national budget in the wake of the global financial crisis, allowing for a significant increase in the budget deficit.

In Dec. 2008, owing to an unresolved border dispute, Slovenia obstructed Croatia's accession to the European Union and, in March 2009, was the last member of NATO to ratify Croatia's accession to the alliance. However, in Sept. 2009 Pahor said that the dispute would no longer prejudice Croatia's EU accession negotiations and in Nov. Slovenia lifted its embargo. In March 2010 he agreed to opposition demands for a referendum on allowing the border issue to go to international arbitration, and in June that year voters narrowly backed the plan.

Following a gas dispute between Russia and Ukraine in 2009, Pahor moved to diversify Slovenia's energy supply, so reducing dependence on Russia, and established the Strategic Energy Council to advise the government. He has also stated his commitment to the fight against climate change.

On 20 Sept. 2011, amid internal coalition disputes and an inability to implement economic reforms, parliament voted 51–36 against a motion of confidence. Pahor's government fell and assumed a caretaker role. Following inconclusive elections in Dec. 2011 he was succeeded as premier by former prime minister, Janez Janša.

Pahor nevertheless continued in politics and announced his candidacy for the presidential elections held in Nov. and Dec. 2012, in which he won a second round victory with 67% of the vote.

Following parliamentary elections in July 2014, in which the newly-formed Party of Miro Cerar emerged as the largest party, Pahor appointed its leader, Miro Cerar, as prime minister in Aug. at the head of a centre-left coalition.

Miro Cerar

Position

Prime Minister

Introduction

Formerly a lawyer, academic and parliamentary legal adviser, Miroslav Cerar, Jr—known as Miro Cerar—became prime minister in Sept. 2014. He had earlier established Stranka Mira Cerarja (SMC; Party of Miro Cerar) in June 2014, following the resignation of Alenka Bratušek's government the previous month. The party won 36 of 90 seats at elections in July 2014 to become the largest grouping in parliament.

Early Life

Cerar was born on 25 Aug. 1963 in the capital, Ljubljana. He is the son of Miroslav Cerar, Sr, an Olympic gymnast and lawyer, and Zdenka Cerar, the first female Slovenian minister of justice and chief prosecutor.

After studying law at the University of Ljubljana, Cerar became the faculty's assistant professor and in 1990 joined the team drafting a new national constitution. In 2008 he was a Fulbright visiting professor at Golden Gate University in San Francisco, USA.

When the government of Janez Janša collapsed in 2013, Alenka Bratušek mooted the idea of an interim government of technocrats with Cerar as premier. However, Cerar turned down the offer, believing that his power would be compromised without the backing of a political party. Nonetheless, he served as a legal advisor to the administration subsequently formed by Bratušek.

When Bratušek and her cabinet resigned in May 2014, Cerar announced that he would enter frontline politics. On 2 June 2014 he formed the centre-left SMC, claiming that his party would promote change in the prevailing political culture, including greater co-operation and respect between political opponents. His agenda resonated with large sections of the Slovene electorate who had lost faith in their politicians and the political system. At the general election in July 2014 the SMC emerged the largest party, despite having been formed only six weeks earlier.

The SMC formed a coalition government with the Democratic Party of Pensioners and the Social Democrats. On 25 Aug. 2014, after month-long negotiations, Cerar was designated prime minister and took office on 18 Sept.

Career in Office

Cerar inherited a country weary of austerity measures imposed since 2011 and faced the tough task of revitalizing the country's finances. He was expected to reduce the government's role in the economy by selling some state-owned companies and putting large enterprises under private management in a bid to tackle the national debt. However, he had previously stated that he was against privatizing assets of strategic importance, including Slovenia's main airport and a state telecommunications firm.

In response to the escalating refugee influx into the EU in 2015, Slovenia began erecting a razor-wire fence along its border with Croatia in Nov. in an effort to stem the flow of foreign migrants heading for the more prosperous northern European countries. The previous month Cerar had warned that the very existence of the EU might be imperilled by the migrant crisis unless a long-term solution could be found.

DEFENCE

Compulsory military service for seven months ended in Sept. 2003. The army became fully professional in 2010 when the compulsory reserve was replaced by a new system of voluntary reserve service.

In 2013 defence spending totalled US$474m. (US$238 per capita), representing 1.0% of GDP.

Army

Personnel (2011), 7,600 and an army reserve of 1,600. There is a paramilitary police force of 4,500 with 5,000 reserves.

Navy

There is an Army Maritime element numbering 47 personnel in 2011.

Air Force

The Army Air element numbers 530 with nine combat-capable aircraft.

INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

Slovenia held a referendum on EU membership on 23 March 2003, in which 89.6% of votes cast were in favour of accession. It became a member of NATO on 29 March 2004 and the EU on 1 May 2004.

ECONOMY

Agriculture accounted for 2% of GDP in 2012, industry 32% and services 66%.

Overview

Slovenia was among the most developed economies of the ten countries that joined the EU in 2004. However, the global financial crisis resulted in a prolonged, deep recession resulting from poor bank balance sheets and weak domestic demand.

Sound monetary and fiscal policies in the years prior to the financial crisis contributed to a small fiscal deficit and single-digit inflation but there was heavy dependence on exports, 69% of which went to EU markets in 2008. This has left the country exposed as the eurozone has struggled for stability. Despite its pre-2008 success, Slovenia has also been criticized for an inefficient business environment and overly high numbers of state-owned enterprises.

The economy contracted by 8.0% in 2009 and, after recording modest GDP growth from 2010–11, shrunk in 2012 by 2.6%. A government stimulus package introduced in 2009 included subsidies for shorter working hours as well as guarantee schemes in the financial sector. A raft of austerity measures prompted mass protests which, along with a corruption scandal, led to the fall of Janez Janša's government in Feb. 2013.

In Dec. 2013 Slovenia narrowly avoided an EU bailout after it was announced that the ailing banking sector required funding of €4.8bn. to meet capital targets. A fire sale of national assets is planned, with majority state-owned brewing giant, Lasko, among the businesses likely to be made available.

Slovenia offers generous welfare protection and the European Commission warns of the heavy future cost of the pension system, which is expected to reach 13% of GDP by 2050. Reforms are urgently required to recapitalize the banking sector, tackle rising unemployment and spur export growth.

Currency

On 1 Jan. 2007 the euro (EUR) replaced the tolar (SLT) as the legal currency of Slovenia at the irrevocable conversion rate of 239.64 tolar to one euro. Inflation was 1.8% in 2013 and 0.2% in 2014. Foreign exchange reserves were US$552m. and gold reserves 103,000 troy oz in Aug. 2010. Total money supply in July 2005 was 1,032.3bn. tolar.

Budget

In 2011 central government revenues totalled €14.09bn. and expenditures €15.66bn. Taxes accounted for 45.3% of revenue in 2011 and social security contributions 41.0%; social benefits accounted for 44.4% of expenditure and compensation of employees 18.8%.

Slovenia's budget deficit in 2014 was 5.0% of GDP (2013, 15.0%; 2012, 4.1%). The required target set by the EU is a budget deficit of no more than 3%.

VAT is 22.0% (reduced rate, 9.5%).

Performance

The economy shrank by 2.7% in 2012 and 1.1% in 2013 but recovered in 2014 with growth of 3.0%. Of all the central and eastern European countries that joined the European Union in May 2004, Slovenia has the highest per capita GDP at 85% of the EU average in 2010 (higher than in Portugal and only marginally lower than in Greece). Total GDP in 2014 was US$49.5bn.

Banking and Finance

The central bank and bank of issue, the Bank of Slovenia, was founded on 25 June 1991 upon independence. The Governor is Boštjan Jazbec, appointed in July 2013 for a term of six years. In 2009 there were 20 commercial banks (five subsidiaries of foreign banks and one branch office of a foreign bank) and three savings banks. The largest bank is Nova Ljubljanska banka (NLB), which has a market share of around a third and had assets in 2009 of US$22.0bn. Other large banks are Nova Kreditna Banka Maribor (NKBM) and Abanka Vipava.

In Dec. 2013 Slovenia avoided the need for a potential EU-IMF bailout after the government announced that it could meet the costs of a €4.8bn. rescue of the country's three largest banks, which had accumulated billions of euros of bad loans.

In June 2012 gross external debt amounted to US$52,416m.

Foreign debt amounted to €41,616m. at Aug. 2010. In 1997 Slovenia accepted 18% of the US$4,400m. commercial bank debt of the former Yugoslavia, thus gaining access to international capital markets.

There is a stock exchange in Ljubljana (LjSE).

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

In 2011, 18.8% of energy consumption came from renewables (wind power, solar power, hydro-electric power, tidal power, geothermal energy and biomass), compared to the European Union average of 13.0%. A target of 25% has been set by the EU for 2020.

Environment

Slovenia's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy were the equivalent of 8.0 tonnes per capita in 2011. An Environmental Performance Index compiled in 2016 ranked Slovenia 5th of 180 countries, with 89.0%. The index examined various factors in nine areas—agriculture, air quality, biodiversity and habitat, climate and energy, fisheries, forests, health impacts, water and sanitation, and water resources.

Electricity

Installed capacity was 3.3m. kW in 2011. There was one nuclear power station in operation. The total amount of electricity produced in 2011 was 16,057m. kWh (6,215m. kWh nuclear, 6,074m. kWh thermal and 3,703m. kWh hydro-electric). Consumption per capita in 2011 was 7,175 kWh.

Minerals

Brown coal production was 4,430,000 tonnes in 2010.

Agriculture

Only around 1.9% of the population worked in agriculture, forestry and fisheries in 2011. Output (in 1,000 tonnes) in 2011: maize, 349; wheat, 153; grapes, 121; apples, 105; potatoes, 96.

Livestock in 2011: cattle, 462,300; pigs, 347,310; sheep, 119,976; poultry, 4,006,718. Livestock products, 2010 (unless otherwise indicated): poultry meat, 60,700 tonnes; pork and pork products, 44,100 tonnes; beef and veal, 35,800 tonnes; milk (2011), 584.1m. litres.

In 2011 there were 168,744 ha. of arable land and 26,867 ha. of permanent crops.

Forestry

In 2010 the area under forests was 1.25m. ha., or 62% of the total land area. Timber production in 2011 was 3.39m. cu. metres.

Fisheries

Total fish catch in 2010 was 932 tonnes. Freshwater farming produced 931 tonnes in 2009.

INDUSTRY

Industry contributed 21.9% of GDP in 2012. Traditional industries are metallurgy, furniture-making and textiles. The manufacture of electric goods and transport equipment is being developed.

Output of main products in 2012 (in 1,000 tonnes): basic iron and steel and ferro alloys, 1,528; ready mixed concrete, 984; cement, (confidential); paper and paperboard, 672; aluminium and aluminium products, 452; plastics in primary form, 163; passenger cars, 126,836 units.

Labour

The registered labour force was 920,184 in 2012, with 110,183 registered unemployed. The unemployment rate in Dec. 2015 was 8.8% (compared to 9.7% in 2014 as a whole). In 2012 the average monthly gross wage per employee was €1,525.47.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

Imports of goods (c.i.f.) in 2011 were worth US$31,253.8m. and exports of goods (f.o.b.) US$28,984.5m. Exports of goods accounted for 58.8% of GDP in 2011.

Major imports of goods in 2011 were petroleum and petroleum products (10.9%), road vehicles (9.6%), electrical machinery, apparatus and appliances (6.4%), and iron and steel (4.7%). Major exports of goods in 2011 were road vehicles (12.4%), electrical machinery, apparatus and appliances (10.4%), and medical and pharmaceutical products (9.2%).

Share of imports from principal markets in 2011: Germany, 18.7%; Italy, 17.8%; Austria, 11.6%; France, 4.7%; Hungary, 4.2%. Exports: Germany, 21.1%; Italy, 11.9%; Austria, 7.8%; France, 6.8%; Croatia, 6.7%. About 74% of trade is with fellow EU countries.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

In 2012 there were 38,985 km of road including 676 km of motorways. There were in Dec. 2013: 1,063,795 passenger cars; 2,465 buses; 90,560 goods motor vehicles; and 92,986 motorcycles and mopeds. 533m. passenger-km were travelled by road in 2012. There were 18,904 road traffic accidents with material damage in 2013 in which 125 persons were killed. In 2013 there were 6.1 road deaths per 100,000 population.

Rail

There were 1,209 km of 1,435 mm gauge in 2014, of which 500 km were electrified. In 2014, 14.8m. passengers and 18.0m. tonnes of freight were carried. In Sept. 2010 the state-owned railway companies of Slovenia, Croatia and Serbia announced the creation of a joint venture called Cargo 10 to improve the management of freight trains along the route known as Corridor 10 that passes through all three countries.

Civil Aviation

There is an international airport at Ljubljana (Brnik), which handled 1,433,855 passengers (all on international flights) and 14,333 tonnes of freight in 2009. The national carrier, Adria Airways, has flights to most major European cities and Tel Aviv. In 2006 scheduled airline traffic of Slovenia-based carriers flew 15m. km, carrying 850,000 passengers.

Shipping

A total of 4,177 vessels arrived at or departed from Slovenia's ports in 2014 (3,739 cargo-carrying vessels and 438 passenger vessels), including 3,831 at Koper. Goods traffic at Koper, the country's only cargo port, totalled 18.0m. tonnes in 2014.

Telecommunications

In 2009 there were 2,100,000 mobile phone subscriptions (1,039.8 per 1,000 inhabitants) and 1,034,000 fixed telephone lines. The leading telecommunications operator is the state-owned Telekom Slovenije. In 2009 there were 577,000 mobile broadband subscriptions and 479,000 fixed broadband internet subscriptions. In March 2012 there were 671,000 Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

There are 44 district courts, 11 regional courts, four higher courts, an administrative court and a supreme court. There are also four labour and social courts, and a higher labour and social court. The population in penal institutions in Sept. 2013 was 1,357 (66 per 100,000 of national population). In 2015 the World Justice Project Rule of Law Index, which provides data on how the rule of law is experienced by the general public across eight categories, ranked Slovenia 24th of 102 countries for criminal justice and 25th for civil justice.

Education

In the school year 2012–13 there were 109,218 pupils (full- and part-time) and 6,468 classroom teachers (full- and part-time) in primary education; and 54,565 pupils and 7,498 classroom teachers in lower secondary education. In upper secondary education there were 92,998 students (full- and part-time) and 7,159 classroom teachers (full- and part-time). There were 97,706 students and 7,189 academic staff in tertiary education in the academic year 2012–13. There are three public universities—at Koper (University of Primorska), Ljubljana and Maribor—and one private university, the University of Nova Gorica.

In 2012 public expenditure on education came to 6.3% of GNI and 13.1% of total government spending.

Health

In 2014 there were 29 hospitals with 9,356 beds. In 2014 there were 5,760 doctors, 1,370 dentists, 17,809 nurses and 1,352 pharmacists. Slovenia spent 9.1% of its GDP on health in 2013.

Welfare

There were 551,258 people receiving pensions in 2008, of which 342,992 were old-age pensioners. The average retirement ages in 2008 were 61 years 11 months for men and 57 years 7 months for women. Plans to speed up the process of increasing the retirement age to 65 for both men and women, a move highlighted as key to long-term fiscal sustainability by the EU and the IMF, were put to the vote in a referendum in June 2011 but received only 28.0% backing. In 2013 spending on social protection accounted for 24.9% of GDP.

RELIGION

A study by the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life estimated that 78.4% of the population in 2010 were Christians and 3.6% Muslims, with 18.0% having no religious affiliation. Of the Christians in 2010, 94% were Catholics. In Feb. 2016 there was one cardinal.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

Slovenia has three sites on the UNESCO World Heritage List: Škocjan Caves (inscribed on the list in 1986), consisting of limestone caves, passages and waterfalls more than 200 metres deep; the Prehistoric Pile dwellings around the Alps (2011), shared with Austria, France, Germany, Italy and Switzerland; and Heritage of Mercury: Almadén and Idrija (2012), shared with Spain.

Press

In 2013 there were nine daily newspapers with a combined circulation of 251,000 and 135 non-dailies. The most popular paid-for daily is Slovenske novice, with an average daily readership in 2013 of 278,000.

Tourism

In 2010, 1,869,000 non-resident tourists stayed in holiday accommodation (1,824,000 in 2009) including: 412,000 from Italy; 202,000 from Austria; 194,000 from Germany; 103,000 from Croatia.

Festivals

Kurentovanje is a ten-day carnival to chase away the winter, which ends on Mardi Gras—the biggest celebrations occur in the town of Ptuj. Lent Festival in Maribor is a major performing arts festival held in late June to early July and similar summer festivals take place in Ljubljana and in the region of Primorska throughout July and Aug. Two of the biggest music festivals are the Druga Godba world music festival in Ljubljana in May–June and Rock Otočec at Novo Mesto in July.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

The Solomon Islands were discovered by Europeans in 1568 but 200 years passed before contact was made again. The southern Solomon Islands were placed under British protection in 1893; the eastern and southern outliers were added in 1898 and 1899. Santa Isabel and the other islands to the north were ceded by Germany in 1900. Full internal self-government was achieved on 2 Jan. 1976 and independence on 7 July 1978.

In 1997 Bartholomew Ulufa'alu, a Malaitan, was elected prime minister. The following year, fighting broke out between the Isatubu Freedom Movement, which claimed to be representative of the native peoples of the island of Guadalcanal, and the Malaitan Eagle Force. In 2000 the Malaita Eagles led a coup which deposed Ulufa'alu, who was held at gunpoint for two days. After the failure of a 2001 peace accord, conflict between the Malaita Eagles and the Isatubu Freedom Movement escalated in 2003 and an Australian-led peacekeeping force landed to restore order. After some initial success the force was scaled back towards the end of the year.

In 2006 Manasseh Sogavare became prime minister, having previously held the office following the 2000 coup. His appointment was marked by rioting in Honiara and the destruction of the city's Chinatown as tensions rose over the political and business influence of the local Chinese population. After losing a vote of confidence in Dec. 2007, Sogavare was replaced by Derek Sikua, who held office until Danny Philip was elected premier in Aug. 2010. He in turn was replaced by Gordon Darcy Lilo in Nov. the following year. However, when Lilo lost his parliamentary seat at the Nov. 2014 general election, Sogavare returned to head a new coalition.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

The Solomon Islands lie within the area 5° to 12° 30' S. lat. and 155° 30' to 169° 45' E. long. The group includes the main islands of Guadalcanal, Malaita, New Georgia, San Cristobal (now Makira), Santa Isabel and Choiseul; the smaller Florida and Russell groups; the Shortland, Mono (or Treasury), Vella La Vella, Kolombangara, Ranongga, Gizo and Rendova Islands; to the east, Santa Cruz, Tikopia, the Reef and Duff groups; Rennell and Bellona in the south; Ontong Java or Lord Howe to the north; and many smaller islands. The land area is estimated at 28,370 sq. km (10,954 sq. miles). The larger islands are mountainous and forest clad, with flood-prone rivers of considerable energy potential.

Guadalcanal has the largest land area and the greatest amount of flat coastal plain. Population at the census of Nov. 2009, 515,870 (251,415 females); density, 18.2 per sq. km. In 2011, 18.9% of the population lived in urban areas.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 584,000.

The islands are administratively divided into nine provinces plus a Capital Territory. Area, population and capital:

Province	Sq. km	2009 census	Capital
Capital Territory	22	64,602	—
Central Islands	615	26,051	Tulagi
Choiseul	3,837	26,379	Taro
Guadalcanal	5,336	93,613	Honiara
Isabel	4,136	26,158	Buala
Makira and Ulawa	3,188	40,419	Kirakira
Malaita	4,225	137,596	Auki
Rennell and Bellona	671	3,041	Tigoa
Temotu	895	21,362	Lata (Santa Cruz)
Western	5,475	76,649	Gizo

The capital, Honiara, on Guadalcanal, is the largest urban area, with a population in 2009 of 64,602. 93% of the population are Melanesian; other ethnic groups include Polynesian, Micronesian, European and Chinese.

English is the official language, and is spoken by 1–2% of the population. In all 120 indigenous languages are spoken; Melanesian languages are spoken by 85% of the population.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2008 estimates: births, 16,000; deaths, 3,000. Estimated birth rate in 2008 was 30.4 per 1,000 population; estimated death rate, 6.2. Life expectancy, 2013, 69.2 years for women and 66.3 for men. Annual population growth rate, 2000–08, 2.6%. Infant mortality, 2010, 23 per 1,000 live births; fertility rate, 2008, 3.9 births per woman.

CLIMATE

An equatorial climate with only small seasonal variations. Southeast winds cause cooler conditions from April to Nov., but northwest winds for the rest of the year bring higher temperatures and greater rainfall, with annual totals ranging between 80" (2,000 mm) and 120" (3,000 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

The Solomon Islands are a constitutional monarchy with the British Sovereign (represented locally by a Governor-General, who must be a Solomon Island citizen) as Head of State. Legislative power is vested in the single-chamber National Parliament composed of 50 members, elected by universal adult suffrage for four years. Parliamentary democracy is based on a multi-party system. Executive authority is effectively held by the Cabinet, led by the Prime Minister.

The Governor-General is appointed for up to five years, on the advice of Parliament, and acts in almost all matters on the advice of the Cabinet. The Prime Minister is elected by and from members of Parliament. Other Ministers are appointed by the Governor-General on the Prime Minister's recommendation, from members of Parliament. The Cabinet is responsible to Parliament. Emphasis is laid on the devolution of power to provincial governments, and traditional chiefs and leaders have a special role within the arrangement.

National Anthem

'God save our Solomon Islands from shore to shore'; words and tune by P. Balekana.

RECENT ELECTIONS

National elections were held on 19 Nov. 2014. The Democratic Alliance Party won 7 seats, United Democratic Party 5, People's Alliance Party 3, Kadare Party of Solomon Islands 1, Solomon Islands Party for Rural Advancement 1 and Solomon Islands People First Party 1. Independent candidates took 32 seats. Manasseh Sogavare was elected prime minister on 9 Dec. 2014, defeating Jeremiah Manele by 31 votes to 19 in the parliamentary vote.

Sir Frank Kabui was re-elected to a second term as governor-general by parliament on 6 May 2014. He defeated David Vunagi and Andrew Mua.

CURRENT LEADERS

Manasseh Sogavare

Position

Prime Minister

Introduction

Manasseh Sogavare's first premiership (2000–01) began in the wake of a coup and ended after a controversial attempt to postpone elections. He took office for the second time in May 2006 after the brief tenure of Snyder Rini, when the capital, Honiara, suffered rioting with attacks on the Chinese community. However, Sogavare was ousted again in a parliamentary vote of no confidence on 13 Dec. 2007. He was elected to a third term as prime minister in Nov. 2014 and sworn in the following month.

Early Life

Manasseh Damukana Sogavare was born in 1955 at Gauraisa, northern Papua New Guinea, the son of missionaries from the island of Choiseul in the western Solomons. He was initially educated in Madang Province (PNG) before moving to Honiara in 1965, where he attended high school. He later graduated from the University of the South Pacific at Suva and from New Zealand's Waikato University.

Sogavare pursued a civil service career, becoming chief tax collector. In 1997 he became MP for East Choiseul. Prime Minister Bartholomew Ulufa'alu appointed him finance minister after the Aug. election that year but dismissed him in July 1998. Tensions grew in 1998 between the indigenous peoples of Guadalcanal island (site of the capital) and long-term residents from Malaita island, who were seen to dominate the civil service. In 2000 Sogavare became leader of the People's Progressive Party (PPP). Ulufa'alu resigned after Malaitan militias seized parliament and Sogavare was chosen to succeed him by MPs.

Sogavare took office on 30 June 2000, forming the Coalition for National Unity, Reconciliation and Peace. Snyder Rini, leader of the Association of Independents, was finance minister. In Oct. 2000 a peace treaty was signed with the militias, followed by a further treaty in Feb. 2001. Parliament was dissolved in Aug. 2001 ahead of scheduled elections but the government attempted to push through a constitutional amendment to extend its mandate by another year. Amid corruption allegations, widespread unrest and trade union pressure for a general strike, Sogavare called elections for 5 Dec. 2001. The PPP won only three seats and Sogavare was succeeded by Sir Allan Kemakeza.

The Social Credit Party, a new party led by Sogavare, ran in the elections of 5 April 2006 on a platform of monetary and financial reform (based on New Zealand's Social Credit Party). Sogavare and his allies attempted to oust Kemakeza's successor, Rini, on 18 April 2006 but, having come third in a parliamentary vote for premier, he switched his allegiance to Rini, in exchange for control of the commerce ministry. Rioting broke out in Honiara in protest at perceived Taiwanese and local Chinese political interference, and much of the city's Chinatown area was destroyed. Following a no-confidence motion, Rini resigned on 26 April and Sogavare was elected prime minister on 4 May. On 5 May he appointed a five-party unity cabinet.

In Oct. 2006 Sogavare survived a parliamentary no-confidence vote following a serious diplomatic dispute with Australia. This related to his claims about the role of Australian security personnel in the April rioting and to Australia's efforts to effect the extradition of Sogavare's controversial attorney-general for an alleged criminal offence. Government leaders attending a meeting of the Pacific Islands Forum in Fiji in Oct. agreed to an independent review of the Australian-led regional peacekeeping force in the Solomon Islands.

On 13 Dec. 2007 Sogavare was defeated in a parliamentary vote after facing criticism for his abrasive style and accusations of damaging the nation's international image. He remained in office in a caretaker capacity until 20 Dec. In 2010, together with other opposition representatives, he launched Our Party, which contested the general elections that year but won only four seats, including his own East Choiseul constituency.

Career in Office

Sogavare was elected to a third term as prime minister in a secret ballot of MPs following a general election held in Nov. 2014 in which the majority of the elected MPs were returned as independents and the then prime minister, Gordon Darcy Lilo, who had taken office in Nov. 2011, unexpectedly lost his seat. Sogavare pledged to rebuild the country's economy with increased foreign investment, to improve public services and to tackle corruption.

In Oct. 2015 seven of Sogavare's senior ministers resigned citing issues with the prime minister's style of leadership.

DEFENCE

The marine wing of the Royal Solomon Islands Police operates three patrol boats and a number of fast crafts for surveillance of fisheries and maritime boundaries. There is also an RSI Police Field Force stationed at the border with Papua New Guinea.

In July 2003 an Australian-led peacekeeping force, the Regional Assistance Mission to Solomon Islands (RAMSI), landed to restore stability after years of ethnic fighting and high-level corruption. The force included troops from Fiji, New Zealand, Papua New Guinea and Tonga. With the security situation having become more stable, the military component ended in July 2013.

ECONOMY

Agriculture accounted for 39% of GDP in 2009, industry 6% and services 55%.

Overview

The Solomon Islands has a small, open economy vulnerable to external shocks. Food production accounts for over 50% of GDP. Timber is the main export, and gold-mining operations re-launched in March 2010 with production beginning a year later. Tourism accounts for less than 2% of GDP.

Following Australian intervention in 2003 to restore political stability after years of civil strife, economic performance proved robust with average annual growth of 7% until 2008. However, the global financial crisis led to a decline in commodity exports that brought about a contraction in growth of nearly 5% in 2009, as well as the depletion of international currency reserves. An 18-month credit arrangement with the IMF was approved in June 2010 and extended for three years in Dec. 2012, helping to restore economic stability. Logging production surged in 2010 owing to strong demand from Asia, with GDP growth rebounding to nearly 7% that year and 12.9% in 2011, although it has fallen back since then.

In mid-2011 the trade balance shifted from deficit to surplus for the first time since 2004. China accounted for almost 40% of the country's exports in 2012. Severe flooding in April 2014 caused damage worth an estimated US$108m. (equivalent to 9% of GDP). The floods forced the closure of a gold mine responsible for 20% of net exports, with expectations that it would remain closed for the foreseeable future. Nonetheless, economic growth was expected to reach 3% in 2015 owing to an increase in agricultural production, tuna processing and construction. Despite sustained growth, almost 23% of the population lived in poverty in 2014.

Currency

The Solomon Island dollar (SBD) of 100 cents was introduced in 1977. It was devalued by 20% in Dec. 1997 and 25% in March 2002. Inflation was 5.4% in 2013 and 5.2% in 2014. In July 2005 foreign exchange reserves were US$83m. and total money supply was SI$447m.

Budget

In 2009 revenues totalled SI$1,704.8m. and expenditures were SI$1,701.6m. Tax revenue accounted for 76.7% of revenues in 2009; current expenditure accounted for 83.9% of expenditures.

Performance

The economy grew by 4.7% in 2012, 3.0% in 2013 and 1.5% in 2014. Total GDP in 2014 was US$1.2bn.

Banking and Finance

The Central Bank of Solomon Islands is the bank of issue; its Governor is Denton Rarawa. There are three commercial banks and a development bank.

External debt totalled US$215m. in 2010 and represented 38.8% of GNI.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2011 were the equivalent of 0.4 tonnes per capita.

Electricity

Installed capacity in 2011 was an estimated 36,000 kW. Production in 2011 was 83m. kWh and consumption per capita 154 kWh.

Oil and Gas

The potential for oil, petroleum and gas production has yet to be tapped.

Minerals

In 1999 gold output from mining totalled 3,456 kg and silver output 2,138 kg. The only mine in the Solomon Islands closed in 2000 owing to civil unrest. However, in March 2010 the mine was revived and production began again in March 2011. Gold output in 2012 totalled 2,180 kg and silver output 932 kg.

Agriculture

Land is held either as customary land (88% of holdings) or registered land. Customary land rights depend on clan membership or kinship. Only Solomon Islanders own customary land; only Islanders or government members may hold perpetual estates of registered land. Coconuts, cocoa, rice and other minor crops are grown. Production, 2003 estimates (in 1,000 tonnes): coconuts, 330; sweet potatoes, 83; taro, 38; palm oil, 34; yams, 28; copra, 30; palm kernels, 8. In 2007 there were an estimated 16,000 ha. of arable land and 60,000 ha. of permanent crops.

Livestock (2003 estimates): pigs, 68,000; cattle, 13,000.

Forestry

Forests covered 2.21m. ha. in 2010 (79% of the land area). Of the total area under forests 50% was primary forest in 2010, 49% other naturally regenerated forest and 1% planted forest. Timber production was 2.10m. cu. metres in 2011.

Fisheries

The Solomon Islands' waters are among the richest in tuna. The total catch in 2010 was an estimated 35,200 tonnes.

INDUSTRY

Industries include palm oil manufacture, processed fish production, rice milling, fish canning, fish freezing, saw milling, food, tobacco and soft drinks. Other products include wood and rattan furniture, fibreglass articles, boats, clothing and spices.

Labour

The estimated economically active population in 2010 was 123,000 (69% males), up from 105,000 in 2005.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

Imports 2007, US$285.0m.; exports, US$158.5m. Main imports, 2007: machinery and transport equipment, 28.4%; mineral fuels and lubricants, 24.9%; food and live animals, 17.6%. Main exports, 2007: timber, 66.6%; fish products, 13.0%; palm oil, 8.8%. Principal import suppliers (2007): Australia, 31.5%; Singapore, 27.0%; Japan, 8.2%. Principal export markets (2007): China, 46.5%; Thailand, 7.2%; South Korea, 6.1%.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

In 2002 there was estimated to be a total of 1,360 km of roads, of which 34 km were paved. The unpaved roads included 800 km of private plantation roads.

Civil Aviation

A new terminal has been opened at Henderson International Airport in Honiara. The national carrier is Solomon Airlines. In 2006 scheduled airline traffic of Solomon Islands-based carriers flew 3m. km, carrying 101,000 passengers (32,000 on international flights).

Shipping

There are international ports at Honiara, Yandina in the Russell Islands and Noro in New Georgia, Western Province. In Jan. 2009 there were three ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 2,000 GT.

Telecommunications

Telecommunications are operated by Solomon Telekom, a joint venture between the government of Solomon Islands and Cable & Wireless (UK). Telecommunications between Honiara and provincial centres are facilitated by modern satellite communication systems. In 2014 there were 7,500 main (fixed) telephone lines; mobile phone subscriptions numbered 376,700 (658 per 1,000 persons). In 2011 an estimated 6% of the population were internet users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

Civil and criminal jurisdiction is exercised by the High Court of the Solomon Islands, constituted 1975. A Solomon Islands Court of Appeal was established in 1982. Jurisdiction is based on the principles of English law (as applying on 1 Jan. 1981). Magistrates' courts can try civil cases on claims not exceeding SI$6,000, and criminal cases with penalties not exceeding 14 years' imprisonment. Certain crimes, such as burglary and arson, where the maximum sentence is for life, may also be tried by magistrates. There are also local courts, which decide matters concerning customary titles to land; decisions may be put to the Customary Land Appeal Court. There is no capital punishment.

The population in penal institutions in Sept. 2013 was 321 (55 per 100,000 of national population).

Education

In 2011 there were 121,720 pupils at primary and 42,783 pupils at secondary level (27,258 at junior secondary and 15,525 at senior secondary). The adult literacy rate in 2009 was 89% among males and 79% among females.

Training of teachers and trade and vocational training is carried out at the College of Higher Education. The University of the South Pacific Centre is at Honiara. Other rural training centres run by churches are also involved in vocational training.

In 2009 total expenditure on education came to 9.0% of GDP and accounted for 16.8% of total government spending.

Health

A free medical service is supplemented by the private sector. An international standard immunization programme is conducted in conjunction with the WHO for infants. Tuberculosis has been eradicated but malaria remains a problem. In 2003 there were 60 physicians and 653 nursing and midwifery personnel. There were 15 hospital beds per 10,000 inhabitants in 2005.

RELIGION

According to estimates by the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life, 97.4% of the population in 2010 were Christians (mainly Protestants).

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

The Solomon Islands has one site on the UNESCO World Heritage List: East Rennell (inscribed on the list in 1998), the largest raised coral atoll in the world.

Press

There are three main newspapers in circulation. The Solomon Star (circulation: 5,000) is daily and the Solomon Express and The Island Sun are weekly. The Government Information Service publishes a monthly issue of the Solomon Nius that exclusively disseminates news of government activities. Non-government organizations such as the Solomon Islands Development Trust (SIDT) also publish monthly papers on environmental issues.

Tourism

Tourism in the Solomon Islands is still in a development stage. The emphasis is on establishing major hotels in the capital and provincial centres, to be supplemented by satellite eco-tourism projects in the rural areas. In 2011 there were 22,941 foreign tourists.

Festivals

Festivities and parades in the capital and provincial centres normally mark the National Day of Independence. The highlight is the annual National Trade and Cultural Show.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

The origins of the Somali people can be traced back 2,000 years when they displaced an earlier Arabic people. They converted to Islam in the 10th century and were organized in loose Islamic states by the 19th century. The northern part of Somaliland was created a British protectorate in 1884. The southern part belonged to two local rulers who, in 1889, accepted Italian protection for their lands. The Italian invasion of Ethiopia in 1935 was launched from Somaliland and in 1936 Somaliland was incorporated with Eritrea and Ethiopia to become Italian East Africa. In 1940 Italian forces invaded British Somaliland but in 1941 the British, with South African and Indian troops, recaptured this territory as well as occupying Italian Somaliland. After the Second World War British Somaliland reverted to its colonial status and ex-Italian Somaliland became the UN Trust Territory of Somaliland, administered by Italy.

The independent Somali Republic came into being on 1 July 1960 as a result of the merger of the British Somaliland Protectorate, which first became independent on 26 June 1960, and the Italian Trusteeship Territory of Somaliland. On 21 Oct. 1969 Maj.-Gen. Mohammed Siyad Barre took power in a coup. Various insurgent forces combined to oppose the Barre regime in a bloody civil war. Barre fled on 27 Jan. 1991 but interfactional fighting continued. In Aug. 1992 a new coalition government agreed a UN military presence to back up relief efforts to help the estimated 1.5–2m. victims of famine. On 11 Dec. 1992 the leaders of the two most prominent of the warring factions, Ali Mahdi Muhammad and Muhammad Farah Aidid, agreed to a peace plan under the aegis of the UN and a pact was signed on 15 Jan. 1993. At the end of March, the warring factions agreed to disarm and form a 74-member National Transitional Council. On 4 Nov. 1994 the UN Security Council unanimously decided to withdraw UN forces; the last of these left on 2 March 1995.

The principal insurgent group in the north of the country, the Somali National Movement, declared the secession of an independent ‘Somaliland Republic’ on 17 May 1991. The Somali government rejected the secession and Muhammad Aidid’s forces launched a campaign to reoccupy the ‘Republic’ in Jan. 1996. Muhammad Farah Aidid was assassinated in July 1996 and succeeded by his son Hussein Aidid. In July 1998 leaders in the northeast of Somalia proclaimed an ‘autonomous state’ named Puntland.

Peace efforts in neighbouring Djibouti culminated in July 2000 in the establishment of a power-sharing agreement and a national constitution to see Somalia through a three-year transitional period. The election of members of parliament and a civilian government followed in Aug. 2000, and in Oct. the new government moved from Djibouti back to Somalia. In April 2002 ‘Southwestern Somalia’ broke away from Mogadishu, thereby creating a third autonomous Somali state.

In June 2006 after months of fighting an Islamic militia, the Islamic Courts Union, took control of the capital, Mogadishu, and a large part of southern Somalia. In Dec. 2006, following a sustained assault by government forces backed by Ethiopian troops, the Islamist militias withdrew from Mogadishu. The southern city of Kismayo, the Islamists’ last stronghold, was recaptured in Jan. 2007.

In June 2012 separatist leaders from Somaliland agreed to hold talks with the Somali government in London. In Aug. 2012 a Somali-elected parliament formally convened in Mogadishu for the first time in 20 years. It elected Hassan Sheikh Mohamud as president the following month, the first such vote undertaken on Somali territory since 1967. In Oct. 2012 a mix of government and African Union troops defeated the Al-Shabab militant Islamist group, ejecting them from Kismayo, the organization’s last major urban stronghold.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Somalia is bounded north by the Gulf of Aden, east and south by the Indian Ocean, and west by Kenya, Ethiopia and Djibouti. Total area 637,657 sq. km (246,201 sq. miles). A census has not been held since 1987, when the population was 7,114,431. The United Nations gave an estimated population for 2012 of 10-03m.; density, 15-7 per sq. km. Population counting is complicated owing to large numbers of nomads and refugee movements as a result of famine and clan warfare. Over 1-1m. Somalis are displaced within the country and in 2015 there were 1-1m. Somali refugees living abroad, mainly in Kenya.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 10-79m.

In 2011, 37-9% of the population were urban.

The country is administratively divided into 18 regions (with chief cities): Awdal (Baki), Bakol (Xuddur), Bay (Baydhabo), Benadir (Mogadishu), Bari (Bosaso), Galgudug (Duusa Marreeb), Gedo (Garbahaarrey), Hiran (Beledweyne), Jubbada Dexe (Jilib), Jubbada Hoose (Kismayo), Mudug (Gaalkacyo), Nogal (Garowe), Woqooyi Galbeed (Hargeisa), Sanaag (Ceerigabo), Shabeellaha Dhexe (Jawhar), Shabeellaha Hoose (Marka), Sol (Las Anod), Togder (Buraq). Somaliland comprises the regions of Awdal, Woqooyi Galbeed, Togder, Sanaag and Sol. Puntland consists of Bari, Nugal and northern Mudug. Southwestern Somalia consists of Bay, Bakol, Gedo, Jubbada Hoose and Shabeellaha Dhexe.

The capital is Mogadishu (2014 population estimate, 2,014,000). Other large towns are Baidoa, Bosaso, Gaalkacyo and Hargeisa.

The official language is Somali. Arabic, English and Italian are widely spoken.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

Births, 2008 estimate, 394,000; deaths, 140,000. Rates, 2008 estimate (per 1,000 population): birth, 44.1; death, 15.7. Infant mortality, 2010, 108 per 1,000 live births. Annual population growth rate, 2000–08, 2.4%. Life expectancy at birth, 2013, was 53.4 years for men and 56.7 years for women. Fertility rate, 2008, 6.4 births per woman.

CLIMATE

Much of the country is arid, although rainfall is more adequate towards the south. Temperatures are very high on the northern coasts. Mogadishu, Jan. 79°F (26.1°C), July 78°F (25.6°C). Annual rainfall 17" (429 mm). Berbera, Jan. 76°F (24.4°C), July 97°F (36.1°C). Annual rainfall 2" (51 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

A new constitution was promulgated on 1 Aug. 2012 after over 20 years of non-functioning government. It replaced the constitution of 1979 that itself had lost authority after the ousting of President Siyad Barre in 1991. The 2012 constitution was adopted by the National Constitutional Assembly with 96% backing from the 645 community leaders present at the vote (from a total of 825).

The constitution includes a bill of rights enshrining the equality of all citizens regardless of clan or religion. Islam is the single recognized state religion, with Sharia law serving as the foundation of the legal system. The right to education up to the secondary level is guaranteed for all, while female circumcision and the deployment of children in armed conflict are proscribed. Provision is included for the establishment of a Truth and Reconciliation Commission and for the implementation of a federal system of government (although details of how power and resources are to be split remains to be decided).

There is a unicameral parliament with 275 members. Parliament elects the President, who in turn appoints a Prime Minister.

Puntland. Puntland, in the northeast region of Somalia, declared itself an 'autonomous state' in July 1998 under the leadership of Abdullahi Yusuf. Since its creation, Puntland has been locked in dispute with Somaliland over control of the Sanaag and Sol areas. Abdiweli Mohamed Ali became President in Jan. 2014.

Puntland covers 300,000 sq. km and had an estimated population in 2009 of 3.9m. The capital is Garowe. Somali is the official language and the Somali shilling is the official currency. Puntland has not received international recognition.

Somaliland. An independent 'Somaliland Republic', based on the territory of the former British protectorate which ran from 1884 until Somali independence in 1960, was established on 17 May 1991 by the principal insurgent group in the north of the country, the Somali National Movement. The Somali government rejected the secession and an unsuccessful campaign to reoccupy Somaliland was launched in Jan. 1996. In 2001 over 97% of voters in a referendum in the Republic (which saw turnout of approximately two-thirds) supported a new constitution including clauses formalizing the break with Mogadishu. Nonetheless, the Republic has failed to secure international recognition although it has in effect seceded from Somalia. Somaliland is also engaged in a long-running dispute with Puntland over control of the Sanaag and Sol regions.

Somaliland covers 137,600 sq. km. The capital is Hargeisa and there is a port at Berbera. There is a population of around 3.5m.

Somali is the official language and Arabic and English are also widely used.

There is a bicameral government with a house of representatives and one of elected elders. Ahmed Mohamed Silanyo became President in July 2010. The judiciary is independent. The official currency is the Somaliland shilling. The Bank of Somaliland, the central bank, was founded in 1994. The economy is reliant on livestock farming.

Southwestern Somalia. In April 2002 Southwestern Somalia broke away from Mogadishu and was declared an autonomous state by the Rahanwein Resistance Army. Hassan Muhammad Nur 'Shatigadud' was named president but fighting between Shatigadud and several of his deputies ensued, notably around the capital, Baydhabo.

National Anthem

'Qolobaa Calankeed' ('Every nation has its own flag'); words and tune by Abdullahi Qarshe.

RECENT ELECTIONS

Somalia's parliament elected Hassan Sheikh Mohamud president on 10 Sept. 2012. In the first round Sharif Sheikh Ahmed, who had been president from Jan. 2009 until Aug. 2012, won 64 votes, followed by Hassan Sheikh Mohamud with 60 votes. Prime Minister Abdiweli Mohamed Ali placed third with 32 votes. There were 19 other candidates. All candidates apart from Sharif Ahmed and Mohamud withdrew after the first round. A subsequent run-off was held in which Mohamud won 190 votes against 79 for Sharif Ahmed.

CURRENT LEADERS

Hassan Sheikh Mohamud

Position
President

Introduction

Elected president by parliament in Sept. 2012, Hassan Sheikh Mohamud was a relative newcomer to frontline politics but experienced in building civil institutions. He is a vocal critic of corruption and clan factionalism.

Early Life

Born on 29 Nov. 1955 in Jalalaqsi, Mohamud graduated in technology from Somalia National University in Mogadishu in 1981. From 1981–84 he worked as a secondary school teacher and from 1984–86 as a lecturer in teacher training. In 1988 he completed a master's degree in technical education at Bhopal University in India. Returning to Somalia the same year, he worked with UNESCO on a project to expand technical and vocational training.

Following the toppling of the Siyad Barre regime, Mohamud became an education officer for UNICEF in 1993, focusing on rebuilding educational services. From 1995–97 he worked with civic organizations to establish communication between rival factions and was subsequently key to negotiating the dismantling of the 'Green Line' that had divided Mogadishu since the outbreak of fighting in the early 1990s.

Mohamud co-founded the Somali Institute of Management and Administration Development in 1999 and worked for the Center for Research and Development from 2001, where he oversaw the establishment of the Somalia Civil Society Forum, an umbrella group of activists and organizations engaged in rebuilding civil society. From 2007 he was consultant to a number of international and local NGOs, working on projects to rebuild Somali society.

From 2007–09, in the period of Somalia's Transitional Federal Government (TFG), he was a consultant at the ministry of planning and international co-operation, overseeing aid management. In 2011 he co-founded the Peace and Development Party (PDP) and was elected its leader in April that year. In Sept. 2012 a presidential vote was held by parliament, with Mohamud achieving a surprise victory. He defeated the former president, Sharif Sheikh Ahmed, in a run-off, claiming 190 votes to 79.

Career in Office

Mohamud took office on 10 Sept. 2012 facing major challenges—a continuing insurgency, clan rivalries, widespread poverty and piracy. He pledged to tackle corruption and combat the radical Islamic al-Shabab militia, and also promised to develop education and provide jobs for young people. In Jan. 2013 the USA recognized the Mogadishu government for the first time in over 20 years and the EU agreed to negotiate a support agreement. In Sept. 2013 international donors pledged US$2.4bn. in reconstruction aid.

In April 2013 the UN Security Council approved a partial lifting of its arms embargo, allowing the Somali government to strengthen its security forces against continuing al-Shabab attacks, particularly in Mogadishu. In Sept. that year al-Shabab claimed responsibility for a major assault on a shopping mall in neighbouring Kenya in apparent retaliation for Kenyan military assistance to the Somali government, and there were further such attacks in Somalia and Kenya in 2014 and 2015.

In Dec. 2013 the prime minister, Abdi Farah Shirdon, who had been sworn in in Oct. 2012, lost a confidence vote in parliament following disagreements with the president. He was replaced by Abdiweli Sheikh Ahmed, who announced his cabinet in Jan. 2014. However, he was similarly ousted by parliament in Dec. that year following a political power struggle with Mohamud, who replaced him with Omar Abdirashid Ali Sharmarke, a former premier. In July 2015 Mohamud ruled out the possibility of holding national elections in 2016 because of the lack of security stemming from the al-Shabab insurgency.

DEFENCE

Army

Following the 1991 revolution there were no national armed forces for many years. However, in 2013 a first national army division was reinstated in a major step towards reviving the Somali Armed Forces. The Somali National Army reportedly comprised an estimated 20,000 personnel in mid-2014.

ECONOMY

Agriculture accounts for approximately 59% of GDP, industry 10% and services 31%.

Somalia was rated the joint most corrupt country in the world in a 2015 survey of 168 countries carried out by the anti-corruption organization Transparency International.

Overview

Somalia has experienced decades of civil conflict, which saw the collapse of central government in 1991 and parliament only reconvening in the capital 21 years later. A large private sector, trading locally and with Asian partners, has compensated for a weak public sector. Remittances, amounting to around US$1.3bn. in 2014, have helped stimulate private investment in a number of commercial ventures, as well as partially offsetting a decline in per capita income. Social conditions have deteriorated since the onset of civil war, with an estimated 73% of the population living in poverty in 2012.

Somalia is one of three member states to remain in protracted arrears to the International Monetary Fund (IMF), accounting for 17% of total arrears to the Fund. Reviews of its overdue financial obligations have been postponed since Oct. 1990, owing to the absence of a functioning government and ongoing political and security problems, although the IMF resumed relations with the country in April 2013 after a 22-year gap. The formation of a new government in Oct. 2012 has offered hope of a long-term return to political and economic stability. Real GDP growth was put at 3.7% in 2014, largely down to gains in the agriculture, construction and telecommunications sectors.

Currency

The unit of currency is the Somali shilling (SOS) of 100 cents.

Budget

A budget for 2012 of US$126m. was reportedly approved in Dec. 2011.

Performance

Real GDP growth was an estimated 3.7% in 2014. Total GDP in 2014 was US$5.7bn.

Banking and Finance

The bank of issue is the Central Bank of Somalia (Governor, Bashir Isse Ali). The separatist Somaliland Republic has its own functioning central bank in Hargeisa, the Bank of Somaliland (Governor, Abdi Dirir Abdib). Remittance companies (hawala) took the place of banks in the 1990s, channelling approximately US$800m. a year. Al-Barakaat, the largest hawala, was shut down in Nov. 2001. All national banks were bankrupted by 1990. The Universal Bank of Somalia, the first commercial bank in Mogadishu since 1990, opened with European backing in Jan. 2002.

In 2010 external debt totalled US$2,942m.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2011 were the equivalent of 0.1 tonnes per capita. An Environmental Performance Index compiled in 2016 ranked Somalia last of 180 countries, with 27.7%. The index examined various factors in nine areas—agriculture, air quality, biodiversity and habitat, climate and energy, fisheries, forests, health impacts, water and sanitation, and water resources.

Electricity

In 2011 installed capacity was 80,000 kW. Production (2011): 330m. kWh.

Oil and Gas

Proven natural gas reserves were 5-7bn. cu. metres in 2013.

Minerals

There are deposits of chromium, coal, copper, gold, gypsum, lead, limestone, manganese, nickel, sepiolite, silver, titanium, tungsten, uranium and zinc.

Agriculture

Somalia is essentially a pastoral country, and about 80% of the inhabitants depend on livestock-rearing. Half the population is nomadic. In 2002 there were about 1-05m. ha. of arable land and 26,000 ha. of permanent crops. Around 200,000 ha. were irrigated in 2002. There were about 1,700 tractors in 2002. Output, 2003 estimates (in 1,000 tonnes): sugarcane, 200; maize, 164; sorghum, 121; cassava, 85; bananas, 35. Livestock (2003 estimates): 13-1m. sheep; 12-7m. goats; 7-0m. camels; 5-1m. cattle. Somalia has the greatest number of camels of any country in the world.

Forestry

In 2010 the area under forests was 6-75m. ha., or 11% of the total land area. In 2011, 14-07m. cu. metres of roundwood were cut. Wood and charcoal are the main energy sources. Frankincense and myrrh are produced.

Fisheries

An estimated 30,000 tonnes of fish were caught in 2010, almost entirely from marine waters.

INDUSTRY

A few small industries exist including sugar refining, food processing and textiles. Raw sugar production was an estimated 15,000 tonnes in 2005.

Labour

The estimated economically active population in 2010 was 3,627,000 (59% males), up from 3,267,000 in 2005.

Somalia had 73,000 people living in slavery according to the Walk Free Foundation's 2013 Global Slavery Index.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

Imports in 2003 were estimated at US$397m. and exports at US$95m. Main imports: manufactures, petroleum, foodstuffs. Main exports: livestock, hides and skins, bananas. Leading import suppliers, 2003: Djibouti, 32%; Kenya, 15%; Brazil, 11%; United Arab Emirates, 5%. Leading export markets, 2003: United Arab Emirates, 39%; Yemen, 24%; Oman, 11%; China, 6%.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

In 2002 there were an estimated 22,100 km of roads, of which 2,600 km were paved. Passenger cars numbered 12,700 in 2002, and there were 10,400 trucks and vans.

Civil Aviation

There are international airports at Mogadishu and Hargeisa. In 2010 there were flights to Aden, Djibouti, Dubai, Jeddah, Nairobi, Sharjah and Wajir in addition to internal services.

Shipping

The main ports are at Berbera, Bosaso, Kismayo, Marka and Mogadishu. In Jan. 2009 there were three ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 2,000 GT.

Piracy off the coast of Somalia was intensifying for several years with 215 attacks in the waters off Somalia recorded in 2009, 219 in 2010 and 236 in 2011. In 2012 there were only 75 recorded attacks, largely thanks to more patrolling of the waters off East Africa by international navies. In 2013 this fell to 15 attacks, and in 2014 further to 11. There were 14 actual hijacks in 2012, down from 28 in 2011 and 49 in 2010. In 2013 there were then only two hijacks, with both ships being released within a day as a result of naval intervention, and in 2014 and 2015 there were none at all.

Telecommunications

Somalia had 70,000 fixed telephone lines in 2012 (6-9 per 1,000 persons); mobile phone subscriptions numbered 1-8m. in 2011 (181-7 per 1,000 persons). In 2013 an estimated 1-5% of the population were internet users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

There are 84 district courts, each with a civil and a criminal section. There are eight regional courts and two Courts of Appeal (at Mogadishu and Hargeisa), each with a general section and an assize section. The Supreme Court is in Mogadishu. The death penalty is in force; according to Amnesty International there were at least 25 executions in 2015.

Education

The nomadic life of a large percentage of the population inhibits educational progress. Adult literacy was estimated at 38% in the period 2000-06 (50% among males and 26% among females). In 2004 there were an estimated 1,172 primary schools with over 285,500 children in attendance. In 2006, 23-5% of primary age children and 26-2% of secondary age children were attending school. The longest-established university was for many years the Somali National University in Mogadishu (founded 1954), but it was extensively damaged in the civil war and classes have been suspended indefinitely. A private university, Mogadishu University, was opened in 1997.

Health

In 2006 there were 300 physicians (3-5 per 100,000 population) and 965 nursing and midwifery personnel.

Somalia has among the highest percentages of undernourished people of any country, at 62% in the period 2005-07.

RELIGION

The population is almost entirely Sunni Muslims.

CULTURE

Press

The Somali press collapsed in 1991, with most of its facilities destroyed. Since 2000 several independent newspapers have emerged, including the daily Wartire in Hargeisa (Somaliland) and the weeklies Yamayska and Bulsho in Puntland. There were seven daily newspapers in 2008. Average daily circulation of newspapers in 2008 totalled 21,000. In the 2013 World Press Freedom Index compiled by Reporters Without Borders, Somalia was ranked 175th out of 179 countries.

Tourism

Tourism was unknown for many years during the worst of the civil war, but visitor numbers have been increasing slowly as some sense of normality returns to the country. Somaliland's relative safety compared to the rest of Somalia has allowed a slightly more advanced tourism industry to develop there.

DIPLOMATIC REPRESENTATIVES

Of the United Kingdom in Somalia
Ambassador: Harriet Mathews, OBE.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

The San and the Khoikhoi were the indigenous peoples of southern Africa. The San were nomadic hunter-gatherers who had lived from the land at the edge of the Kalahari desert for thousands of years. The Khoikhoi shared customs with the San and spoke related languages but also herded cattle and lived in more settled communities. The Khoikhoi settlements were most numerous in the Orange River valley and around the Cape. From the 4th century AD the eastern part of southern Africa was settled by Bantu-speaking groups, moving south from the continent's drier interior.

They were mixed farmers: herding sheep and cattle, hunting game, cultivating sorghum and making tools and weapons from iron.

The hunting and herding communities of southern Africa came into contact with the wider world at the end of the fifteenth century. Portuguese mariners first rounded the Cape peninsula in 1487 and opened a trade route into the Indian Ocean. A century later the route was used by Spanish, English, Dutch and French seafarers. They landed occasionally on the Cape peninsula and bartered sheep and cattle with Khoikhoi pastoralists in return for iron and copper goods. In 1649 the Dutch East India Company, the world's most powerful trading corporation, established a trading post at the Cape. Three years later Jan van Riebeeck arrived with orders to establish a fort at Table Bay and supply passing ships with meat, fruit and vegetables. Within a decade slaves were brought in to work on building and maintaining the infrastructure, and settlers began to arrive from the Netherlands. Relations between the Dutch and the Khoikhoi soon deteriorated: quarrels over rights to graze cattle escalated into warfare as early as 1659.

Over the next century the population of the Cape Colony reached 10,000. It was a diverse community, where traders from Europe and Asia converged and exchanged goods and news.

Large farms, cultivating vines and grain, were established in the fertile valleys to the east of Cape Town. Devastated by smallpox in 1713, the Khoikhoi population was unable to prevent trekboers (Dutch pastoral farmers) from moving to the north and east of the Cape colony. By 1770 trekboers were grazing their cattle as far east as the Fish river, where they came into contact with Xhosa farmers. More numerous and powerful than the Khoikhoi, and with greater resistance to European diseases, the Xhosa fought the Dutch settlers in a series of 'Frontier Wars'.

By the late 18th century Dutch sea power was on the wane. Vying with France for control of the main trade routes to Asia and the Americas, the British first seized Cape Town in 1795. Following the peace treaties of 1814, which ended the Napoleonic Wars, British sovereignty over the colony was confirmed. For the British, the main purpose of their acquisition was to provide a stepping-stone to their increasingly important colonies in Asia.

In the first two decades of the 19th century the Zulu people of the northeastern region (Natal) strengthened their power-base under their leader, Shaka. In response to a prolonged drought the Zulus conquered lands from rival Nguni groups, which culminated in widespread havoc and destruction, known as the Mfecane. From the chaos new kingdoms emerged, notably Gaza and Swaziland, while the Sotho, under King Moshosho, formed the mountain territory now known as Lesotho.

The Mfecane led to the migration of thousands of Basotho and Batswana from the High Veld and Xhosa from the coastal plains into the Cape Colony. In the 1830s Boer settlers, increasingly dissatisfied with British rule and, realising that the Mfecane had caused the depopulation of land to the north and east, began to move there. In the 'Great Trek' that began in 1836, the Afrikaners were seeking a free and independent state which they achieved in the establishment of the Orange Free State and Transvaal in 1854.

Meanwhile, the British strengthened their hold over the Cape Colony and Natal by bringing in new settlers. Between 1860 and 1866, 6,000 Indians arrived in Natal from Madras and Calcutta to work as indentured labourers on the new sugar plantations. The population of the Cape Colony included many Afrikaners as well as the 'coloured' community (descendants of Khoikhoi, white settlers and Malay slaves). Most Coloureds spoke Afrikaans, an offshoot of Dutch.

Britain annexed the Transvaal in 1877, and in 1879 fought the Zulus. Under King Ketshwayo the Zulus were victorious at Isandhlwana but were then defeated at Ulundi. Britain restored independence to the Transvaal (the South African Republic) in 1884 and annexed Zululand in 1887. Both the British and the Boers fought African resistance for many years, the last major rising being in Natal in 1906. However, the British and Boers continued to be rivals, especially after the discovery of diamonds at Kimberley in 1867 and of gold in the Transvaal in 1884. This led to an economic boom. Cecil Rhodes, owner of the De Beers company and for a time prime minister of the Cape, was the dominant entrepreneurial figure.

Boer War

In the 1890s the British, under Rhodes, sought control over the Transvaal goldfields. Despite being thwarted in their attempts to spark off rebellion amongst the Afrikaners of the South African Republic, the British continued to press for control. The Afrikaners, led by Paul Kruger, decided they would have to fight to keep their independence and declared war on Britain in late 1899. The contest appeared unequal, with the might of the British army against only 35,000 Boer soldiers. The Boers suffered a heavy defeat at Paardeberg in 1900, but then switched to guerrilla warfare. The British army, led by Gen. Kitchener, responded by setting up concentration camps and destroying crops and farmsteads. The 'scorched earth' policy was strongly criticized in Europe, but had the desired effect—in 1902 the Boer republics signed the Treaty of Vereeniging and came under British rule. They were given self-government in 1907 and on 31 May 1910 the Cape Colony, Natal, the Transvaal and the Orange Free State combined to form the Union of South Africa, a self-governing dominion under the British Crown.

The first general election in 1910 demonstrated the power of the Afrikaners within the new union—the South African party won 67 seats compared with 39 seats for the mainly English-speaking Unionist Party. Louis Botha became prime minister and Jan Smuts was made Minister of the Interior, Mines and Defence. The Union's economy was based on gold and diamond mining, for which there was organized recruitment of migrant African labourers from Union territory and other parts of Africa. Pass Laws were in operation, controlling Africans' movements in the towns and industrial areas, where they were regarded officially as temporary residents and segregated in 'townships'. Following the Land Act of 1913, 87% of the land was reserved for white ownership while Africans farmed as tenants or squatters. White miners' annual earnings were 12 times those of their black counterparts in 1911. African protests at segregation and absence of political rights were led by the South African Native National Congress (SANNC), founded in 1912 and renamed the African National Congress (ANC) in 1923.

African rights were further suppressed after the coming to power in 1924 of the Afrikaner Nationalist Party, led by J. B. Hertzog. The government secured recognition of full independence for South Africa by the Statute of Westminster on 11 Dec. 1931. It also promoted the status of the Afrikaans language and introduced new segregation measures such as the Native Laws Amendment Act of 1937, which set limits on the numbers of blacks who could live in urban areas. Jan Smuts came to power in 1939 heading a coalition government broadly in favour of the war against Nazi Germany.

Apartheid

In 1948 Smuts' Unionist Party was sensationally defeated by the right-wing National Party which had campaigned for apartheid, a new policy for dealing with the 'racial problem'. After 1948 the term apartheid soon developed from a political slogan into a systematic programme of social engineering championed by Hendrik Verwoerd, who became prime minister in 1958. A plethora of new laws from the Group Areas Act to the Prohibition of Mixed Marriages Act strengthened existing segregation and increased racial inequality. Blacks were divided into one of ten tribal groups, and forced to move to so-called Homelands, which were intended to become self-sufficient, self-governing states. Chief Buthelezi was pivotal in the Inkatha movement which attempted, but ultimately failed, to unite Homeland leaders. The massacre by police of 69 protesters against the Pass Laws at Sharpeville on 21 March 1960 led to a major crisis from which, however, the government emerged even stronger. The ANC and the Pan African Congress were banned and the leaders, including Nelson Mandela, were jailed in 1964. After withdrawing from the British Commonwealth in 1961, South Africa became increasingly isolated. To the north, former European colonies were becoming independent, often socialist, republics.

On 16 June 1976 thousands of students demonstrated in Soweto, an African township outside Johannesburg, against mandatory schooling in Afrikaans. Many died when police broke up the demonstration and rioting spread throughout the country. When P. W. Botha became prime minister in 1978, elements of the apartheid system were modified. Africans were allowed to form legal trade unions and the acts banning marriage and sexual relations between people of different races were repealed.

A new constitution, approved in a referendum of white voters on 2 Nov. 1983 and in force from 3 Sept. 1984, created a three-part parliament, with a House of Assembly for the Whites, a House of Representatives for the Coloureds and a House of Delegates for the Indians; Africans remained without representation. From late 1984 blacks in the cities and industrial areas staged large-scale protests. In June 1986 a state of emergency was imposed. Foreign condemnation led to the first economic sanctions against South Africa, imposed by a number of countries including the USA and Britain.

By 1989 a start had been made on dismantling apartheid and the government, led by F. W. de Klerk, announced its willingness to consider the extension of black South Africans' political rights. In Feb. 1990 a 30-year ban on the ANC was lifted and Nelson Mandela was released from prison on 11 Feb. 1990. In the Whites-only referendum on 17 March 1992, on the granting of constitutional equality to all races, 1,924,186 (68.7%) votes were in favour; 875,619 against.

On 22 Dec. 1993 parliament approved (by 237 votes to 45) a transitional constitution paving the way for a new multi-racial parliament which was elected on 29 April 1994. There was a decisive victory for the ANC and on 9 May 1994 Nelson Mandela was elected president. The new government included six ministers from the National Party and three from the Inkatha Freedom Party.

In 1997 the Truth and Reconciliation Commission, chaired by Archbishop Desmond Tutu, began hearings on human rights violations between 1960 and 1993. The commission promised amnesty to those who confessed their crimes under the apartheid system. Nelson Mandela, whose term as president cemented his reputation as a world statesman, retired in 1999. His deputy, Thabo Mbeki, elected president in a landslide vote, had already assumed many of Mandela's governing responsibilities. Wrestling with a developing economy, continuing inequality and a high crime rate, Mbeki received widespread criticism for his slowness in addressing the nation's AIDS epidemic. He stood down from the presidency in Sept. 2008 amid claims he had interfered in a corruption case against ANC leader Jacob Zuma.

The ANC dominated the general election of April 2009 and the following month parliament appointed Zuma president. Nelson Mandela's death in Dec. 2013 focused national and international attention on South Africa's post-apartheid progress. Zuma began a new term as president after the ANC won elections in May 2014.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

South Africa is bounded in the north by Namibia, Botswana and Zimbabwe, northeast by Mozambique and Swaziland, east by the Indian Ocean, and south and west by the South Atlantic, with Lesotho forming an enclave. Land area: 1,220,813 sq. km. This includes the uninhabited Prince Edward Island (41 sq. km) and Marion Island (388 sq. km), lying 1,900 km southeast of Cape Town. The islands were handed over to South Africa in Dec. 1947 to prevent their falling into hostile hands. In 1994 Walvis Bay was ceded to Namibia, and Transkei, Bophuthatswana, Venda and Ciskei were reintegrated into South Africa.

At the census of 2011 the population was 51,770,560 (26,581,769 females), consisting of: Black African, 41,000,938 (79.2% of total population); Coloured, 4,615,401 (8.9%); White, 4,586,838 (8.9%); Indian/Asian, 1,286,930 (2.5%). The population has increased more than would have been expected since 2001 as huge numbers of migrants have entered South Africa from Zimbabwe, many of them undocumented. According to the 2011 census there were 2.2m. foreign-born people living in South Africa. In July 2015 the population was estimated at 54,957,000.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 54.49m.

62.2% of the population were urban in 2011. In 2010 cities with the largest populations were (estimate in 1,000): Johannesburg (Gauteng), 3,763; Cape Town (Western Cape), 3,492; Durban (KwaZulu-Natal), 2,954; Pretoria/Tshwane (Gauteng), 1,468; Vereeniging (Gauteng), 1,174; Port Elizabeth (Eastern Cape), 1,097. Ekurhuleni Metropolitan Municipality had an estimated population of 3,284,000 in 2010.

There were 1,283 permanent residence permits issued in 2012 and 141,550 temporary residence permits. Zimbabwe was the source country of the highest number of both permanent and temporary residence permits in 2012.

Population by province, according to the 2011 census:

Province	Total (including unspecified)	Black African	White	Coloured	Indian/ Asian
Eastern Cape	6,562,053	5,660,230	310,450	541,850	27,929

Western Cape	5,822,734	1,912,547	915,053	2,840,404	60,761

There are 11 official languages. Numbers of mother-tongue speakers at the 2011 census: isiZulu, 11,587,374 (22.7% of population); isiXhosa, 8,154,258 (16.0%); Afrikaans, 6,855,082 (13.5%); English, 4,892,623 (9.6%); Sepedi, 4,618,576 (9.1%); Setswana, 4,067,248 (8.0%); Sesotho, 3,849,563 (7.6%); Xitsonga, 2,277,148 (4.5%); SiSwati, 1,297,046 (2.5%); Tshivenda, 1,209,388 (2.4%); isiNdebele, 1,090,223 (2.1%). The use of any of these languages is a constitutional right 'wherever practicable'. Each province may adopt any of these as its official language. English is the sole language of command and instruction in the armed forces.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

Births: total number of registered live births in 2014 was 1,161,159 (down from a high of 1,677,415 in 2003).

Deaths: the number of registered deaths increased from 317,236 in 1997 to 613,198 in 2006, with AIDS as the factor underlying much of the increase. Since then the increasing use of antiretroviral drugs has caused the number of registered deaths to fall to 480,476 in 2012. In 2012, 17.9% of all adults between 15 and 64 were infected with HIV. Estimated population growth rate, 2011–12, 1.3%. Fertility rate, 2009, 2.5 births per woman. Life expectancy at birth in 2013 was 58.2 years for males and 62.1 for females. It had been 59 years for males and 66 for females in the early 1990s but fell in the late 1990s and in the early part of the 21st century as a consequence of the AIDS epidemic. It was just 50.2 years for males and 53.9 for females in 2005 but has now risen again thanks to the development and improved availability of medical treatments for HIV.

Infant mortality, 2010, 41 per 1,000 live births.

From 1998, under a new bill, customary and traditional marriages are recognized in law as registered by the civil registration system. Same-sex marriage was legalized in Nov. 2006. Marriages in 2010 totalled 170,826 (186,522 in 2008). Gauteng had the highest percentage of marriages in 2010 (24.2%), Western Cape the second highest (15.7%) followed by KwaZulu-Natal (15.1%). Of the total marriages officially recorded in 2010, 52,817 (30.9%) were solemnized in religious ceremonies and 91,250 by civil rites. 26,759 were classed under 'unspecified'. In 2010 the most popular age range for marrying was 30–34 for males and 25–29 for females. Divorces granted in 2010 totalled 22,936 (37,098 in 1999).

CLIMATE

There is abundant sunshine and relatively low rainfall. The southwest has a Mediterranean climate, with rain mainly in winter, but most of the country has a summer maximum, although quantities show a decrease from east to west. Pretoria, Jan. 73.4°F (23.0°C), July 53.6°F (12.0°C). Annual rainfall 26.5" (674 mm). Bloemfontein, Jan. 73.4°F (23.0°C), July 45.9°F (7.7°C). Annual rainfall 22" (559 mm). Cape Town, Jan. 69.6°F (20.9°C), July 54.0°F (12.2°C). Annual rainfall 20.3" (515 mm). Johannesburg, Jan. 68.2°F (20.1°C), July 50.7°F (10.4°C). Annual rainfall 28.1" (713 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

An Interim Constitution came into effect on 27 April 1994 and was in force until 3 Feb. 1997. Under it, the National Assembly and Senate formed a Constitutional Assembly, which had the task of drafting a definitive constitution. This was signed into law in Dec. 1996 and took effect on 4 Feb. 1997. The 1996 constitution defines the powers of the President, Parliament (consisting of the National Assembly and the National Council of Provinces—NCOP), the national executive, the judiciary, public administration, the security services and the relationship between the three spheres of government. It incorporates a Bill of Rights pertaining to, inter alia, education, housing, food and water supply, and security, in addition to political rights. All legislation must conform to the Constitution and the Bill of Rights. The Constitution was amended in 2001 to provide that Constitutional Court judges are appointed for a non-renewable 12-year term of office, or until they reach the age of 70 years, except where an Act of Parliament extends the term of office of a Constitutional Court judge. This Constitution Amendment Act also made the head of the Constitutional Court the Chief Justice. The head of the Supreme Court of Appeal is now the President of that Court.

A Constitutional Court, consisting of a president, a deputy president and nine other judges, was inaugurated in Feb. 1995. The Court's judges are appointed by the President of the Republic from a list provided by the Judicial Service Commission, after consulting the President of the Constitutional Court (now the Chief Justice) and the leaders of parties represented in the National Assembly.

Parliament is the legislative authority and has the power to make laws for the country in accordance with the Constitution. It consists of the National Assembly and the NCOP. Parliamentary sittings are open to the public.

The National Assembly consists of no fewer than 350 and no more than 400 members directly elected for five years, 200 from a national list and 200 from provincial lists in the following proportions: Eastern Cape, 28; Free State, 14; Gauteng, 44; KwaZulu-Natal, 42; Limpopo, 25; Mpumalanga, 11; Northern Cape, 4; North-West, 12; Western Cape, 20. In terms of the 1993 Constitution, which still regulated the 1999 elections, the nine provincial legislatures are elected at the same time and candidates may stand for both. If elected to both, they have to choose between sitting in the national or provincial assembly. In the former case, the runner-up is elected to the Provincial Assembly.

The National Council of Provinces (NCOP) consists of 54 permanent members and 36 special delegates and aims to represent provincial interests in the national sphere of government. Delegations from each province consist of ten representatives. Bills (except finance bills) may be introduced in either house but must be passed by both. A finance bill may only be introduced in the National Assembly. If a bill is rejected by one house it is referred back to both after consideration by a joint National Assembly-NCOP committee called the Mediation Committee. Bills relating to the provinces must be passed by the NCOP.

The Constitution mandates the establishment of Traditional Leaders by means of either provincial or national legislation. The National House of Traditional Leaders was established in April 1997. Each provincial House of Traditional Leaders nominated three members to be represented in the National House. The National House advises national government on the role of traditional leaders and on customary law. Following a six-year study by the Commission on Traditional Leadership Disputes and Claims, in July 2010 President Jacob Zuma announced that only seven of the 13 kingships would be officially recognized and six would be abolished. Five of the seven kingships and their kings were confirmed by the commission. The remaining two were awaiting the commission's recommendation on the rightful incumbent. In terms of the commission's findings, existing kings who were found not to qualify for the status of kingship were to be allocated a principal traditional leadership.

National Anthem

A combination of shortened forms of 'Die Stem van Suid-Afrika'/'The Call of South Africa' (words by C. J. Langenhoven; tune by M. L. de Villiers) and the ANC anthem 'Nkosi sikelel' iAfrika'/'God bless Africa' (words and tune by Enos Santonga).

CURRENT LEADERS

Jacob Gedleyihlekisa Zuma

Position

President

Introduction

Jacob Zuma became president of the ANC on 18 Dec. 2007 after defeating incumbent Thabo Mbeki in a leadership election. He was elected national president after the ANC won the general election of 22 April 2009 and was re-elected for a second term in May 2014.

Early Life

Zuma was born in what is now the KwaZulu-Natal Province on 12 April 1942. Influenced by his family's trade unionist background, he became involved in politics at the age of 17.

Zuma joined the ANC in 1959. With the party banned by the apartheid government the following year, by 1962 he was an active member of Umkhonto we Sizwe (the military wing of the ANC), which was subsequently classified as a terrorist organization. In 1963 Zuma was arrested and convicted of conspiring to overthrow the government. He was jailed for ten years, serving part of the sentence on Robben Island alongside Nelson Mandela.

After his release Zuma helped re-establish the ANC as an underground movement in Natal. In 1975 he left South Africa, living in Swaziland and then Mozambique. He was then appointed to the ANC national executive committee in 1977 and served as its deputy chief representative in Mozambique until the signing of the Nkomati Accord between South Africa and Mozambique in 1984, when he became chief representative. Forced to leave Mozambique in 1987, Zuma was appointed head of underground structures and chief of the intelligence department, serving on the ANC's political and military council.

When the ban on the ANC was lifted in 1990 Zuma returned to South Africa and was elected ANC chairperson for the Southern Natal region. In 1991 he was elected the party's deputy secretary general, and at the 1994 general election he agreed to Thabo Mbeki running unopposed for the deputy presidency. Zuma was appointed to the executive committee of economic affairs and tourism for the ANC in the KwaZulu-Natal provincial government. In 1997 he became the ANC's deputy president and two years later was chosen as South Africa's executive deputy president.

In 2005, following the conviction of Zuma's financial adviser Schabir Shaik on charges of corruption and fraud, Zuma was dismissed as deputy president by Mbeki. However, in Dec. 2007 he was elected ANC party president standing against Mbeki. His rhetoric found favour with many disadvantaged South Africans who felt marginalized by Mbeki's business-friendly policies. Zuma was thus clear favourite to become the next president of South Africa.

Career in Office

Mbeki resigned as president of South Africa on 21 Sept. 2008 after losing the support of the ANC over claims that he had interfered in the case against Zuma and in April 2009 the National Prosecuting Authority dismissed all charges. The ANC triumphed at the general election on 22 April 2009 and Zuma was elected president by parliament. He was sworn into office on 9 May 2009, succeeding Kgalema Motlanthe, who stepped aside after having replaced Mbeki.

Also in May 2009, the South African economy officially went into recession following a sharp downturn in the manufacturing and mining sectors. Unemployment accelerated and strikes and violent protests in July–Aug. were roundly condemned by Zuma. In a speech to the ANC in Jan. 2010 he warned that recovery from the economic crisis would be slow and that there would be a lag in job creation. A national strike by public sector workers over pay, which began in Aug. and paralysed hospitals, education and other services for three weeks before the action was suspended, undermined relations between the ANC and the Congress of South African Trade Unions.

In Oct. 2010 Zuma announced major changes to the composition of his cabinet, appointing a host of new ministers and deputy ministers. However, allegations of high-level corruption continued to blight his administration and in Oct. 2011 he sacked two senior ministers and suspended the chief of police. Local elections earlier in May had maintained the ANC's political dominance, but the opposition Democratic Alliance increased its vote share to about 24%. In Nov. the ANC suspended Julius Malema, its militant youth wing leader and a prominent Zuma critic, for five years for bringing the party into disrepute.

In Jan. 2012 Zuma addressed a rally in Bloemfontein in celebration of the ANC's 100th anniversary. In Aug. 2012, 34 platinum miners in the town of Marikana were killed and around 80 more were wounded by police during an industrial dispute over wages. Public condemnation of the treatment of the miners led to Zuma establishing a judicial commission of inquiry in Oct.

In Dec. 2012 Zuma was re-elected leader of the ANC at the party's five-yearly conference and in July 2013 he carried out the fourth cabinet reshuffle of his term, dismissing three ministers. The rest of the year was dominated by the declining health and ultimate death in Dec. of Nelson Mandela, the revered anti-apartheid campaigner and South Africa's first majority democratically elected president. Zuma's waning popularity was apparent at the subsequent memorial service for Mandela in Johannesburg, when he was barracked by many in the attending crowd, and also by the decision of the National Union of Metalworkers in the same month to withdraw its support for the ANC ahead of pending parliamentary elections. These took place in May 2014 and were comfortably won by the ANC, guaranteeing Zuma a second term in office.

In Feb. 2015 Zuma announced land reform proposals, long promised by the ANC, to redistribute farmland to black farmers and to ban foreign ownership. Later in the year, however, he attracted increasing criticism over further allegations of corruption, particularly in relation to South Africa's successful bid to host the 2010 football World Cup, and also for allowing Sudan's President Bashir to visit South Africa in defiance of his International Criminal Court arrest warrant on charges of genocide and war crimes. Zuma's controversial appointments to the post of finance minister in Dec. also incurred negative reaction from the currency markets and from within his own party.

In March 2016 Zuma survived a parliamentary vote of no confidence over alleged corruption by 225 votes to 99 and in April he survived an impeachment vote against him in parliament by 233 votes to 143.

DEFENCE

The South African National Defence Force (SANDF) comprises four services, namely the SA Army, the SA Air Force, the SA Navy and the SA Military Health Service (SAMHS). In 2012 the SANDF consisted of 62,082 active members (excluding 12,382 civilian employees). SAMHS personnel totalled 9,159 (including around 1,115 reservists) in 2011. South Africa ended conscription in 1994.

Defence expenditure totalled US$4,848m. in 2013 (equivalent to US$100 per capita), and represented 1.3% of GDP. Defence expenditure in 1985 had represented 3.8% of GDP. In 2013 South Africa was responsible for 21% of Africa's total defence expenditure.

Army

Army personnel totalled 37,141 in 2011. Reserves numbered 12,264 in 2011. The army territorial reserve was disbanded in 2009.

Navy

Navy personnel in 2011 totalled 6,244, with 861 reserves. The fleet is based at the naval bases at Simon's Town on the west coast, Port Elizabeth on the south and Durban on the east and includes three submarines and four frigates.

Air Force

Strength (2011) 10,653, with 831 reserves. In 2011 the Air Force had 42 combat-capable aircraft (Saab Gripens and British Aerospace Hawks) and 11 combat-capable helicopters.

ECONOMY

Agriculture accounted for 3.0% of GDP in 2009, industry 31.1% and services 65.8%.

Overview

South Africa is an upper-middle income country with an average gross per capita income in 2014 of US$6,800. Although it no longer has Sub-Saharan Africa's largest economy—having been overtaken by Nigeria in 2014—South Africa continues to be an important regional economic leader. It has a well-capitalized banking system, abundant natural resources and established regulatory systems, as well as good research and development capabilities and a solid manufacturing base.

Average annual GDP growth was 5.2% between 2004 and 2007, although the ten-year mean to 2014 was only 3%. Growth in 2015 was estimated at 2.0%, the result of a combination of lower domestic and export demand, decreasing commodity prices and a slowdown in the Chinese economy—the country's largest trade partner. However, the World Bank has predicted a modest upturn once new electricity supplies come on line in 2017.

In 2015, against the backdrop of a weak mid-term fiscal outlook, the government announced expenditure savings and tax increases (each equivalent to 0.6% of GDP) to reduce the budget deficit from 4.0% of GDP in 2014–15 to 2.5% in 2017–18. The government also aimed to stabilize the gross debt burden at about 50% of GDP, helping to minimize pressure on the sovereign rating.

The pro-poor orientation of public spending has seen significant social development since 1994. Around 3.5% of GDP has been spent annually on social welfare—twice the median spent by other developing economies. Life expectancy, after falling dramatically from 62 years in 1992 to 53 years in 2010, recovered to 62 years in 2014. This has largely reflected the rapid expansion of the antiretroviral treatment programmes to fight HIV/AIDS, supported by declines in both adult and infant mortality. Nonetheless, South Africa has one of the highest rates of income inequality in the world.

Currency

The unit of currency is the rand (ZAR) of 100 cents. A single free-floating exchange rate replaced the former two-tier system on 13 March 1995. Inflation rates (based on IMF statistics):

2005	2006	2007	2008	2009	2010	2011	2012	2013	2014
3.4%	4.7%	7.1%	11.5%	7.1%	4.3%	5.0%	5.7%	5.8%	6.1%

Foreign exchange reserves were US$32,251m. in Sept. 2009 (US$4,171m. in 1998) and gold reserves 4.01m. troy oz. Total money supply was R419,506m. in Aug. 2009.

Budget

Consolidated national budget in R1bn.:

	2007–08	2008–09 ¹	2009–10 ¹	2010–11 ¹
Revenue	580.4	650.0	720.1	789.0

¹Budgeted figures.

Income tax is the Government's main source of income. As of 2001, South Africa's source-based income tax system was replaced with a residence-based system. With effect from the years of assessment commencing on or after 1 Jan. 2001, residents are (subject to certain exclusions) taxed on their worldwide income, irrespective of where their income is earned. Foreign taxes are credited against South African tax payable on foreign income. Foreign income and taxes are translated into the South African monetary unit, the Rand.

Value-added Tax (VAT) has remained at 14% since 1993. Corporate taxes were reduced to 28% in 2008. A tiered corporate tax was introduced in 2000 with taxes for small businesses reduced by half. Individual income tax rates range from 18% to 40%. A capital gains tax was introduced from 1 April 2001 and became effective on 1 Oct. 2001.

South Africa's fiscal year runs from 1 April to 31 March.

Performance

Real GDP growth rates (based on IMF statistics):

2005	2006	2007	2008	2009	2010	2011	2012	2013	2014
5.3%	5.6%	5.4%	3.2%	-1.5%	3.0%	3.2%	2.2%	2.2%	1.5%

In 2009 South Africa experienced its first recession in 17 years. Total GDP in 2014 was US$350.1bn.

Banking and Finance

The central bank and bank of issue is the South African Reserve Bank (SARB; established 1920), which functions independently. Its Governor is Lesetja Kganyago. The Banks Act, 1990 governs the operations and prudential requirements of banks.

At the end of Dec. 2008, 33 banks (excluding two mutual banks) were registered with the Office of the Registrar of Banks. Furthermore, 43 foreign banks had authorized representative offices in South Africa. The combined assets of the banking institutions amounted to R3,170bn. (31 Dec. 2008), total liabilities to R2,989bn. and total equity to R181bn. Total assets of the four largest commercial banks (Standard Bank, FirstRand, Absa and Nedbank) came to R2,676bn.

Foreign debt totalled US$45,165m. in 2010, representing 12.7% of GNI.

The stock exchange, the JSE Securities Exchange, is based in Johannesburg. Foreign nationals have been eligible for membership since Nov. 1995.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

South Africa's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2011 were the equivalent of 9.6 tonnes per capita.

Electricity

South African households use over 25% of the country's energy. Coal supplies 75% of primary energy requirements, followed by oil (21%), nuclear (3%) and natural gas (1%). There is one nuclear power station (Koeberg) with two reactors, two gas turbine generators, two conventional hydro-electric plants and two pumped storage stations. The two nuclear reactors are projected to close in 2024 and 2025. Eskom, a public utility, generates 95% of the country's electricity (as well as two-thirds of the electricity for the African continent) and owns and operates the national transmission system. In 2011, 222,710 GWh of electricity were delivered throughout South Africa by Eskom.

Eskom electrified 149,914 homes in 2011, bringing the total number of homes connected since the start of the electrification programme in 1991 to 3,901,054. The Government aims to achieve universal access to electricity by 2025. Capacity shortages from late 2007 forced Eskom into emergency reductions to protect the power system from potential failure and a national electricity crisis was declared in Jan. 2008. South Africa continues to suffer from frequent power cuts. In 2011, 84.7% of households used electricity for lighting.

The energy sector contributes about 15% to GDP and employs about 250,000 people. Because of South Africa's large coal deposits, the country is one of the cheapest electricity suppliers in the world.

The first wind-energy farm in Africa was opened at Klipheuwel in the Western Cape in Feb. 2003.

Oil and Gas

South Africa has limited oil reserves and relies on coal for much of its oil production. It has a highly developed synthetic fuels industry. Sasol and PetroSA are the two major players in the synthetic fuel market. Synfuels meet approximately 40% of local demand. Natural gas production in 2009 amounted to 1.0bn. cu. metres.

PetroSA is responsible for exploration of both offshore natural gas and onshore coal-bed methane. The EM gas field complex off Mossel Bay in the Western Cape started production in 2000, and was to ensure sufficient feedstock to PetroSA to maintain current liquid fuel production levels at 36,000 bbls of petroleum products a day until 2009 although 2008 saw a decline in production levels. Planning is under way for the construction of a new refinery near Port Elizabeth that is expected to come online in 2020. The oilfield, Sable, situated about 150 km south off the coast of Mossel Bay, is expected to produce 17% of South Africa's oil needs. Coming into operation in Aug. 2003, it was initially projected to produce 30,000 to 40,000 bbls of crude oil a day. PetroSA's gas-to-liquid plant supplies about 7% of South Africa's liquid fuel needs.

South Africa is one of the major oil refining nations in Africa with a crude refining capacity of 543,000 bbls per day.

Minerals

Total sales of primary minerals increased to R370.6bn. in 2011; the value of exports of primary minerals increased to a record R282.0bn. Mining contributed 8.6% of GDP in 2010, up from 7.6% in 2001.

In 2011 employment in the mining sector rose by 2.9% from 498,906 in 2010 to 513,211. Some 53 different minerals were produced in 2011 from 1,592 mines and quarries.

Mineral production (in tonnes), 2010: coal, 254.5m.; iron ore, 58.7m.; limestone and dolomite, 17.9m.; chromium ore, 10.8m.; manganese ore, 7.2m.; aluminium (2009), 1.0m.; copper, 83,600; nickel, 40,000; zinc, 36,100; and (in kg) platinum-group metals, 287,300 (of which platinum, 147,800); gold, 188,700; silver, 79,300. Diamond production, 2010: 8,868,400 carats. Gold production in 2010 was at its lowest level in over a century although sales revenue rose to a record high of R53.1bn. Production in 2010 was less than half than that of 2002. South Africa is the world's leading producer of platinum and also has the largest reserves.

Agriculture

South Africa has a dual agricultural economy, comprising a well-developed commercial sector and a predominantly subsistence-orientated sector. Much of the land suitable for mechanized farming has unreliable rainfall. Of the total farming area, natural pasture occupies 81% (69.6m. ha.) and planted pasture 2% (2m. ha.). About 12% of South Africa's surface area can be used for crop production. High potential arable land comprises only 22% of the total arable land. Annual crops and orchards are cultivated on 9.9m. ha. of dry land and 1.3m. ha. under irrigation. In 2011 gross farming income totalled R131.4bn. and the number of paid farm workers was 821,967.

Production:

(Field crops, 2010-11 unless otherwise indicated, in 1,000 tonnes): sugarcane, 16,016; maize, 10,924; lucerne hay, 1,586; wheat (2010), 1,436; sunflower seeds, 894; soybeans, 710; grain sorghum, 178; groundnuts, 73; seed cotton, 46; cotton seed, 28; tobacco, 15.

Gross value of field crops in 2010-11 (R1,000), 34,022,400; horticulture, 36,284,500; animal products, 67,852,600.

Agricultural exports contribute about 4% of total imports and 5% of total exports. In 2010 the estimated value of agricultural imports was R34.6bn. and exports R46.1bn.

Forestry

South Africa has developed one of the largest man-made forestry resources in the world with plantations covering an area of 1.3m. ha. Production from these plantations in 2011 amounted to 18.5m. cu. metres, valued at R7.0bn., the most important products by value being pulpwood (R4.9bn.) and sawlogs (R1.7bn.). In terms of volume, 12.6m. cu. metres and 4.2m. cu. metres of the aforementioned products were produced respectively. About 92,700 staff were employed in the primary sector in 2011 (growing and harvesting) and a further 73,200 in the processing industries (sawmilling, pulp and paper, mining timber and poles, and board products). In 2011 the forestry and forest products industry contributed 1.2% to South Africa's GDP.

In 2011 the area under all types of forests was 9.2m. ha. Of this, planted forest covered 1.8m. ha., primary forest 0.9m. ha. and other naturally regenerated forest the remaining 6.5m. ha. The private sector owned or controlled 1,057,279 ha. (83%) of the plantation area of 1,273,357 ha. as well as (in 2010-11) 188 of the 192 primary processing plants in the country. The remaining 17% (216,078 ha.) were owned by the state.

The industry was a net exporter to the value of R4.5bn. in 2011, more than 99% of which was in the form of converted value-added products. The forest products industry contributed 2.1% of total exports and 1.5% of total imports in 2011. In that year pulp product exports were the most important (R7.06bn. or 47% of the total), followed by paper (R4.62bn. or 31% of the total), solid wood products (R2.74bn. or 18% of the total) and other products (R0.55bn. or 4% of the total). Woodchip exports, mainly to Japan, accounted for 62% (R1.70bn.) of the total solid wood products exports.

Fisheries

The commercial marine fishing industry is valued at approximately R6bn. annually and employs 27,000 people directly.

In 2012 there were over 2,900 fishing rights allocated to 1,788 vessels in 21 different fisheries, a decrease in the size of the fleet since 2002 in line with the international trend to reduce pressure on resources. The total catch in 2010 was 623,920 tonnes, over 99% of which came from marine fishing.

INDUSTRY

The leading companies by market capitalization in South Africa in March 2015 were: Naspers, a multinational media company (US$64.7bn.); MTN Group, a mobile telecommunications company (US$31.3bn.); and FirstRand, a financial services provider (US$25.9bn.).

Actual value of sales of the principal groups of industries (in R1m.) in 2010: petroleum, chemical products, rubber and plastic products, 281.2; basic iron and steel, non-ferrous metal products, metal products and machinery, 267.4; food and beverages, 247.9; motor vehicles, parts and accessories and other transport equipment, 162.4; wood, paper, publishing and printing, 108.3; textiles, clothing, leather and footwear, 37.4. Total actual value including other groups, R1,253.0m. In 2009 industry accounted for 31.1% of GDP, with manufacturing contributing 15.1%.

Labour

The Employment Equity Act, 1998 signalled the beginning of the final phase of transformation in the job market, which began with the implementation of the Labour Relations Act. It aims to avoid all discrimination in employment. The Basic Conditions of Employment Act, 1997 applies to all workers except for the South African National Defence Force (SANDF), the South African Secret Service (SASS) and the National Intelligence Agency (NIA). The new provisions include a reduction in the maximum hours of work from 46 to 45 hours per week (however, the Act allows for the progressive reduction of working hours to 40 per week).

The labour force in South Africa numbered 20.2m. in the fourth quarter of 2014, of which 4.9m. were unemployed. In the fourth quarter of 2014 the official unemployment rate was 24.3%, compared to 24.1% in the fourth quarter of 2009.

The Unemployment Insurance Fund (UIF) provides benefits to workers who become unemployed. All employees who work for more than 24 hours a month contribute to the Fund. In the year ending March 2009 there were 7.6m. contributors (7.3m. in 2008). In the same period the UIF paid benefits to 627,244 beneficiaries, a total amount of R3.8bn.

South Africa had 45,000 people living in slavery according to the Walk Free Foundation's 2013 Global Slavery Index.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

South Africa's four main trading partners in 2012 were China, USA, Germany and Japan. China was South Africa's number one trading partner in terms of total trade (the sum of exports and imports) recorded in 2012. Exports to China rose from R58.6bn. in 2010 to R85.3bn. in 2011 (although they fell to R81.1bn. in 2012). Imports from China increased from R84.1bn. in 2010 to R103.1bn. in 2011 and further to R120.1bn. in 2012.

In 2011 the European Union accounted for 24.9% (R152.3bn.) of South Africa's total exports and 30.8% (R222.8bn.) of total imports. A trade, development and co-operation agreement (TDCA) came into force on May 2004, under the terms of which South Africa grants duty-free access to 86% of EU imports over a period of 12 years, while the EU liberalizes 95% of South Africa's imports over a ten-year period. The Agreement provides for ongoing EU financial assistance in grants and loans for development co-operation, which amounts to some R900m. per annum.

In 2010 the total value of South Africa's exports destined for Africa was R85.0bn. and imports R45.9bn. Within the Southern African Development Community (SADC), a smaller group of countries including South Africa, Botswana, Lesotho, Namibia and Swaziland have organized themselves into the Southern African Customs Union (SACU), sharing a common tariff regime without any internal barriers. Exports to SADC countries increased to R60.8bn. in 2010. Imports from within the region in 2010 totalled R23.7bn.

COMMUNICATIONS

The public company Transnet SOC Ltd (formerly Transnet Limited) was established on 1 April 1990. In the financial year ended 31 March 2012 it handled 201m. tonnes of rail freight and 4,352,000 TEUs through the harbours, while 16.7m. litres were pumped through its petrol pipelines. In the same year, Transnet reported a profit of R4,113m. (R4,119m. for 2010–11). In March 2012 it had assets totalling R178.0bn.

Roads

In 2011 the South African road network comprised some 747,000 km of roads and streets. Toll roads cover around 3,120 km of the national network. South Africa has the longest road network in Africa. As at 31 Oct. 2010 there were 9,797,413 registered motor vehicles. In 2009 a total of 13,768 people were killed in traffic accidents (14,920 in 2007 and 13,875 in 2008).

Rail

The Passenger Rail Agency of South Africa (PRASA) was formed in March 2009 as an umbrella organization to oversee the day-to-day running of rail services in South Africa. PRASA operates Metrorail, offering commuter rail services in urban areas and transporting 1.7m. passengers on weekdays to 478 stations over 2,400 km of track; and Shosholoz Meyl, providing regional and long-distance rail transport. South Africa's first high-speed rail service, Gautrain, was inaugurated in June 2010. It links Johannesburg's O. R. Tambo International Airport and the centre of the city with Pretoria.

Freight train services are provided by Transnet Freight Rail (formerly Spoornet), a public company owned solely by the South African government. Transnet transports 17% of the nation's freight annually and employs over 25,000 people.

Civil Aviation

Responsibility for civil aviation safety and security lies with the South African Civil Aviation Authority (SACAA). The Airports Company South Africa (ACSA) owns and operates South Africa's principal airports. The main international airports are: Johannesburg, Cape Town, Durban, Bloemfontein, Port Elizabeth, Pilanesberg, Lanseria and Upington. In April 2003 the Cabinet approved the status of the Kruger Mpumalanga Airport, near Nelspruit, as an international airport. ACSA also has a 35-year concession to operate Pilanesberg International Airport near Sun City in North-West Province.

The flag carrier South African Airways (SAA), along with Airlink, Comair, Interair and SA Express, operate scheduled international air services. Several other operators provide internal flights and cargo services.

In 2010–11 O. R. Tambo International Airport (formerly Johannesburg International) handled 18,643,145 passengers (9,732,250 on domestic flights), Cape Town handled 8,200,547 passengers (6,781,143 on domestic flights) and Durban (King Shaka) handled 4,873,571 passengers (4,672,960 on domestic flights). O. R. Tambo Airport is also the busiest airport for freight, handling 252,063 tonnes of cargo in 2009.

Shipping

The South African Maritime Safety Authority (SAMSA) was established on 1 April 1998 as the authority responsible for ensuring the safety of life at sea and the prevention of sea pollution from ships. Approximately 98% of South Africa's exports are conveyed by sea.

The National Ports Authority supervises South Africa's major ports. The largest ports include the deep water ports of Richards Bay, with its multi-product dry bulk handling facilities, multi-purpose terminal and the world's largest bulk coal terminal, and Saldanha featuring a bulk ore terminal adjacent to a bulk oil jetty with extensive storage facilities. Durban, Cape Town and Port Elizabeth provide large container terminals for deep-sea and coastal container traffic. The Port of Durban handles 2.5m. containers per annum. East London, the only river port, has a multi-purpose terminal and dry dock facilities. Mossel Bay is a specialized port serving the south coast fishing industry and offshore gas fields. During 2008–09 the seven major ports handled a total of 184,628,480 tonnes of cargo (Richards Bay, 82,621,766 tonnes; Saldanha, 50,282,909 tonnes; Durban, 40,118,656 tonnes).

In Jan. 2009 there were four ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 32,000 GT.

Telecommunications

In 2013 there were 3.9m. main (fixed) telephone lines. In the same year mobile phone subscriptions numbered 76.9m. (1,456.4 per 1,000 persons). The largest mobile phone networks are Vodacom and MTN. In 2011, 88.9% of households had a mobile phone; landline telephone, 14.5%.

Between 1997 and 2002 Telkom SA, for many years the national operator, concentrated on replacing analogue lines with digital technology, under the terms of its final exclusive licence; the transmission network is now almost wholly digital. Under the Telecommunications Acts of 1996 and 2001, South Africa has liberalized its telecommunications industry. Telkom lost its monopoly on the fixed-line market in 2006 with the launch of Neotel, the country's second national operator. Telkom was offered on the Johannesburg Securities Exchange and the New York Stock Exchange in March 2003, realizing R3.9bn. on the first day.

A new 14,000-km submarine cable, the West Africa Cable System, became operational in May 2012, allowing South Africa to greatly increase the capacity of its mobile phone and internet networks.

In 2013 an estimated 48.9% of the population were internet users. In June 2012 there were 5.0m. Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

All law must be consistent with the Constitution and its Bill of Rights. Judgments of courts declaring legislation, executive action, or conduct to be invalid are binding on all organs of state and all persons. The common law of the Republic is based on Roman-Dutch law—that is the uncodified law of Holland as it was at the date of the cession of the Cape to the United Kingdom in 1806. South African law has, however, developed its own unique characteristics.

Judges hold office until they attain the age of 70 or, if they have not served for 15 years, until they have completed 15 years of service or have reached the age of 75, when they are discharged from active service. A judge discharged from active service must be ready to perform service for an aggregate of three months a year until the age of 75. The Chief Justice of South Africa, the Deputy Chief Justice, the President of the Supreme Court of Appeal and the Deputy President of the Supreme Court of Appeal are appointed by the President after consulting the Judicial Service Commission. In the case of the Chief Justice and Deputy Chief Justice, the President must also consult the leaders of parties represented in the National Assembly. The President on the advice of the Judicial Service Commission (JSC) appoints all other judges.

The higher courts include: 1) The Constitutional Court (CC), which consists of the Chief Justice of South Africa, the Deputy Chief Justice of South Africa and nine other judges. It is the highest court in all matters in which the interpretation of the Constitution or its application to any law, including the common law, is relevant; 2) The Supreme Court of Appeal, consisting of a President, a Deputy President and the number of judges of appeal determined by an Act of Parliament. It is the highest court of appeal in all other matters; 3) The High Courts, which may decide constitutional matters other than those which are within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Constitutional Court, and any other matter other than one assigned by Parliament to a court of a status similar to that of a High Court. Each High Court is presided over by a Judge President who may divide the area under his jurisdiction into circuit districts. In each such district there shall be held at least twice in every year and at such times and places determined by the Judge President, a court which shall be presided over by a judge of the High Court. Such a court is known as the circuit court for the district in question; 4) The Land Claims Court, established under the Restitution of Land Rights Act of 1994 deals with claims for restitution of rights in land to persons or communities dispossessed of such rights after 1913 as a result of past racially discriminatory laws or practices. It has jurisdiction throughout the Republic and the power to determine such claims and related matters such as compensation and rights of occupation; 5) The Labour Court, established under the Labour Relations Act, 1995 deals with labour disputes. It is a superior court that has authority, inherent powers and standing in relation to matters under its jurisdiction, equal to that the High Court has in relation to matters under its jurisdiction. Appeals from decisions of the Labour Court lie to the Labour Appeal Court which has authority in labour matters equivalent to that of the Supreme Court of Appeal in other matters.

The lower courts are called Magistrates' Courts. Magisterial districts have been grouped into 13 clusters headed by chief magistrates. From the magistrates court there is an appeal to the High Court having jurisdiction in that area, and then to the Supreme Court of Appeal.

In a departure from the Roman-Dutch legal system, jury trials were introduced in 1831 and continued until 1969. However, in practice trial by jury was rarely used after 1954 following amendments to the criminal code. They were officially abolished in 1969, partly owing to fears of potential racial prejudice among jurors—a concern that was compounded by the country's apartheid system.

The death penalty was abolished in June 1995, with the last execution carried out by the South African government having taken place in 1989. In 2013–14 there were 17,068 murders (down from a peak of 26,877 murders in 1995–96 although up from 15,609 in 2011–12). South Africa's murder rate has steadily declined accordingly and is now less than half the rate of 1995–96, at 32 per 100,000 in 2013–14. Budgeted spending on police, prisons and justice services for 2012–13 was R95.7bn. The population in penal institutions in Aug. 2013 was 156,370 (294 per 100,000 of national population). In 2015 the World Justice Project Rule of Law Index, which provides data on how the rule of law is experienced by the general public across eight categories, ranked South Africa 38th of 102 countries for criminal justice and 39th for civil justice.

Education

The South African Schools Act, 1996 became effective on 1 Jan. 1997 and provides for: compulsory education for students between the ages of seven and 15 years of age, or students reaching the ninth grade, whichever occurs first. Pupils normally enrol for Grade 1 education at the beginning of the year in which they turn seven years of age although earlier entry at the age of six is allowed if the child meets specified criteria indicating that they have reached a stage of school readiness.

In 2008 the South African public education system accommodated 11.9m. school pupils, 799,387 university students

(of which 140,330 at universities of technology) and 2.5m. further education and training college students. There were 25,875 primary, secondary, combined and intermediate schools with 400,953 educators.

In the 2010–11 financial year R165bn. was allocated to education. In 2011 public expenditure on education came to 6.1% of GDP and 18.9% of total government spending.

As a result of a major restructure of South African higher education during 2002–04, 36 universities and technikons (non-university higher education institutions) were reduced by means of mergers and incorporations to 17 universities and six universities of technology. The University of South Africa (UNISA) is the oldest and largest university in South Africa and one of the largest distance education institutions in the world. In 2009 UNISA had a total of 263,559 students and 9,344 staff (4,286 permanent). In 2009 the University of Pretoria had 55,734 students, Tshwane University of Technology 52,688, North West University 50,589, University of Johannesburg 49,315, University of KwaZulu-Natal 38,864 and Cape Peninsula University of Technology 30,958.

The adult literacy rate in 2012 was 93.7% (95.0% for males and 92.6% for females).

Health

Some 40% of South Africans live in poverty and 75% of these live in rural areas with limited access to health services. There is an extensive network of public health clinics providing free public health services, plus mobile clinics run by the government to provide primary and preventive health care.

36,912 doctors were registered with the Health Profession Council of South Africa (HPCSA) in 2010. These include doctors working for the state, doctors in private practice and specialists. Doctors train at the medical schools of eight universities and the majority go on to practise privately. In 2010, 110,518 enrolled nurses and enrolled nursing auxiliaries were registered with the South African Nursing Council (SANC); there were 5,320 dental practitioners registered with the HPCSA. In 2010, 12,218 pharmacists were registered with the South African Pharmacy Council. Chris Hani Baragwanath Hospital, situated to the southwest of Johannesburg, with its 3,200 beds, is the largest hospital in the world.

In Oct. 1998 the first traditional hospital was opened in Mpumalanga—the Samuel Traditional Hospital. There are about 200,000 traditional healers in South Africa providing services to between 60% and 80% of their communities.

Approximately 5.5m. South Africans are HIV-infected, the highest number in the world (equivalent to nearly 12% of the population of South Africa and some 17% of global HIV/AIDS cases). Government expenditure on HIV and AIDS increased substantially from R3bn. in 2005–06 to R11bn. in 2013–14. In Aug. 2003 the government announced plans to roll out the provision of anti-retrovirals (ARVs) in the public health sector that would see 1.4m. people on treatment. By 2008 a further target of having at least one service point in every local municipality across the country had been achieved. South Africa now runs the world's largest treatment programme and in 2014 over 2.7m. people were receiving ARVs.

Welfare

In 2008–09 the department of social development was disbursing grants through its provincial offices to 13.0m. beneficiaries. Recipients are means-tested to determine their eligibility. 8.8m. people received the child support grant (CSG) of R240 per month. The age of children eligible for the CSG has been progressively increased to cover children up to and including the age of 17 years since 1 Jan. 2012. In 2008–09, 2.4m. received old-age grants of R1,010 per month. The age for male eligibility was lowered in phases over a two-year period from 65 to 60 in April 2010, the same as for women.

Other benefits paid are the disability, foster child, care dependency and war veterans' grants as well as institutional grants and grants in aid.

The total budget allocation for the payment of social assistance was R80.4bn. in 2009–10.

RELIGION

South Africa is a secular state and freedom of worship is guaranteed by the Constitution. According to estimates by the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life, 81.2% of the population in 2010 were Christians but 14.9% did not have any religious affiliation. There are small numbers of Hindus and Muslims. Among the Christians, 90% in 2010 were Protestants and 9% Catholics. In 1992 the Anglican Church of Southern Africa voted by 79% of votes cast for the ordination of women. In Feb. 2016 there was one cardinal.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

UNESCO World Heritage sites under South African jurisdiction (with year entered on list) are: Greater St Lucia Wetland Park (1999), encompassing marine, wetland and savannah environments; Robben Island (1999), used since the 17th century as a prison, hospital and military base—it was the location for Nelson Mandela's incarceration; fossil hominid sites of Sterkfontein, Swartkrans, Kromdraai and environs (1999 and 2005), offering evidence of human evolution over 3.5m. years; uKhahlamba/Drakensberg Park (2000), including caves with 4,000-year old paintings; Mapungubwe Cultural Landscape (2003), a savannah landscape at the confluence of the Limpopo and Shashe rivers and the site of the largest kingdom in Africa in the 14th century; Cape Floral Region Protected Areas (2004 and 2015); Vredefort Dome (2005), part of a meteorite impact structure; Richtersveld cultural and botanical landscape (2007), covering 160,000 ha. of mountainous desert; and Maloti-Drakensberg Park (2013) shared with Lesotho, a transboundary site composed of the uKhahlamba Drakensberg National Park and the Sehlathebe National Park in Lesotho.

Press

In 2013 there were 21 paid-for dailies, 12 paid-for Sunday newspapers, 67 paid-for non-daily newspapers and 226 free non-dailies. The newspapers with the highest circulation figures are Sunday Times, Soccer Laduma and Daily Sun. There were 92 newspaper online editions in 2013.

Tourism

In 2013 there were a record 9.62m. international tourist arrivals (excluding same-day visitors), up from 9.19m. in 2012. Most visitors in 2012 came from Zimbabwe, Lesotho, Mozambique, Swaziland and Botswana. International tourist receipts in 2012 totalled US$10.0bn., up from US$9.5bn. in 2011. The number of people employed directly in tourism rose to 598,000 in 2011 from 567,000 in 2010.

Festivals

Best-known arts festivals: the Klein Karoo Festival (Oudtshoorn, Western Cape), which has a strong Afrikaans component, is held in April; the Grahamstown Arts Festival in the Eastern Cape is held in June/July; the Mangaung African Cultural Festival (Macufe) is held in Sept. in Bloemfontein; and the Aardklop Arts Festival, in Potchefstroom in the North-West province, is held in Sept. The Encounters South African International Documentary Festival has been held since 1999.

SOUTH AFRICAN PROVINCES

In 1994 the former provinces of the Cape of Good Hope, Natal, the Orange Free State and the Transvaal, together with the former 'homelands' or 'TBVC countries' of Transkei, Bophuthatswana, Venda and Ciskei, were replaced by nine new provinces. Transkei and Ciskei were integrated into Eastern Cape, Venda into Northern Province (now Limpopo), and Bophuthatswana into Free State, Mpumalanga and North-West.

Total road network in 2008 was around 78,000 km. The province has four airports: Port Elizabeth, East London, Umtata and Bulembu (Bhisho). There are three deep-water ports: Port Elizabeth, East London and Coega. In 2011, 81-9% of households had a mobile phone; landline telephone, 9-8%; and computer, 11-9%.

In 2009 there were 2,076,400 children enrolled in schools and 69,620 teaching staff. The Province has four universities: Walter Sisulu University for Technology and Science, Rhodes University, the University of Fort Hare and Nelson Mandela Metropolitan University. In 2009 there were 90 hospitals in the public sector with 14,456 beds.

Eastern Cape

The area is 169,580 sq. km. The population in 2011 was 6,562,053 (3,472,353 female), the third largest population in South Africa. Of that number: Black African, 5,660,230 (86% of the population); Coloured, 541,850 (8%); White, 310,450 (5%). Density (2011), 39 per sq. km. In 2011, 78-8% spoke isiXhosa as their first language, 10-6% Afrikaans and 5-6% English. The provincial capital is Bhisho.

At the provincial elections held on 7 May 2014, 45 of 63 seats were won by the African National Congress, ten by the Democratic Alliance, four by the United Democratic Movement, two by the Economic Freedom Fighters, and one each by the Congress of the People and the African Independent Congress.

Premier: Phumulo Masualle (took office on 21 May 2014).

In 2011, 75-0% of households used electricity for lighting (the lowest percentage of any South African province). There were 596,573 agricultural households in total in 2011; 35-4% of households in the province were engaged in agriculture. Manufacturing is based mainly in Port Elizabeth and East London with motor manufacturing as the prime industry. In the fourth quarter of 2009 the labour force numbered 1,732,000, of whom 468,000 were unemployed (27-0%—the joint highest along with North-West).

Free State

The area is 129,480 sq. km. The province is the third largest in South Africa but has the second smallest population and the second lowest population density. The population in 2011 was 2,745,590 (1,416,623 female). Of that number: Black African, 2,405,533 (87-6% of the population); White, 239,026 (8-7%); Coloured, 83,844 (3-1%). Density (2011), 21 per sq. km. In 2011, 64-2% (1,717,881) of the population spoke Sesotho as their first language, 12-7% (340,490) Afrikaans, 7-5% (201,145) isiXhosa and 5-2% (140,228) Setswana. The provincial capital is Bloemfontein.

The Klein Karoo region is the centre of the South African ostrich-farming industry. In the fourth quarter of 2009 the labour force numbered 2,413,000, of whom 518,000 were unemployed (21.5%).

Total road network in 2008 was around 92,000 km. Cape Town International Airport is the main airport in the province. In 2011, 88.9% of households had a mobile phone; landline telephone, 30.8% (the highest percentage of any province); and computer, 34.4% (also the highest percentage of any province).

In 2009 there were 980,694 children enrolled in schools with 34,382 teaching staff. The Province has four universities: the University of the Western Cape, the University of Cape Town, Stellenbosch University and the Cape Peninsula University of Technology. In 2009 there were 58 public hospitals with 9,858 beds.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

South Sudan was administered separately from the north under Egyptian and British rule until 1946 when the British unified the regions. When independence as a single state was granted in 1956 and southern autonomy was compromised, tensions between the predominantly Muslim, Arabic north and the Christian and animist south escalated into civil war. An agreement between the government and the Southern Sudan Liberation Front signed in Addis Ababa in 1972 brought a brief respite from the fighting but in 1983 hostilities recommenced. They lasted 19 years and resulted in 1.9m. civilian deaths in the south of Sudan before a ceasefire was declared in Jan. 2002. A comprehensive peace agreement was signed between the Khartoum government and the southern rebels led by the Sudan People's Liberation Movement in Jan. 2005. They entered a unity government, despite ongoing arguments over disputed areas, and a southern autonomous government was formed. In a referendum on independence for the south on 9–15 Jan. 2011, 98.8% of votes cast were in favour. South Sudan became an independent country on 9 July 2011. On 14 July 2011 it became the 193rd member of the United Nations.

Tensions with Sudan over oil fees and sovereignty in the oil-rich Abyei territory led to the creation of a demilitarized buffer zone in March 2013. In July 2013 President Kiir dismissed his cabinet but fighting within the governing Sudan People's Liberation Movement continued. From Dec. 2013 fighting between rival army factions exacerbated existing inter-ethnic friction, resulting in the deaths of thousands of people and displacement of over a million more by April. In July 2014 the UN Security Council highlighted the country's food crisis as the worst in the world. The following month new peace talks began in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

South Sudan is bounded in the north by Sudan, east by Ethiopia, southeast by Kenya, south by Uganda, southwest by the Democratic Republic of the Congo and west by the Central African Republic. Its area is 644,329 sq. km. In 2008 the census population was 8,260,490 (disputed). More than half (51%) of the population is below the age of 18. 83% of the population is rural.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 12:34m.

The country is composed of 28 states (with capitals): Amadi (Munri), Aweil (Aweil), Aweil East (Wanyjok), Boma (Pibor), Eastern Bieh (Akobo), Eastern Lakes (Yirol), Eastern Nile (Malakal), Gbudwe (Yambio), Gogrial (Kuacjok), Gok (Cueibet), Imatong (Torit), Jonglei (Bor), Jubek (Juba), Latjoor (Nasir), Lol (Raja), Maridi (Maridi), Namorunyang (Kapoeta), Northern Liech (Bentiu), Ruweng (Pariang), Southern Liech (Leer), Terekeka (Terekeka), Tonj (Tanj), Twic (Mayen Abun), Wau (Wau), Western Bieh (Ayod), Western Lakes (Rumbek), Western Nile (Kodok), Yei River (Yei).

The capital, Juba, had a population of 230,000 in 2008. Other major cities are Wau (118,000), Malakal (115,000), Yei (111,000) and Yambio (106,000).

The official language is English.

CLIMATE

South Sudan's climate is tropical with wet and dry seasons. The winter is relatively cool and dry while the rainy season usually takes place from April to Dec. with most rain falling in the summer months. Juba, Jan. 81°F (27.3°C), July 76°F (24.5°C). Annual rainfall 38" (965 mm). Wau, Jan. 79°F (25.9°C), July 78°F (25.3°C). Annual rainfall 44" (1,118 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

An interim constitution was ratified shortly before independence and came into force on 7 July 2011. Under the constitution the President is the Head of State, Head of Government and Commander-in-Chief of the armed forces and serves a four-year term. The National Legislature consists of two Houses: the National Legislative Assembly, comprising members of the former Southern Sudan Legislative Assembly and all South Sudanese who were members of the National Assembly of Sudan; and the Council of States, which consists of South Sudanese who had seats in the Council of States of Sudan plus 20 members appointed by the President. Members of both houses serve four-year terms.

National Anthem

'South Sudan Oyee'; words and tune by students and teachers of Juba University.

CURRENT LEADERS

Salva Kiir Mayardit

Position
President

Introduction

Salva Kiir Mayardit became president of the newly independent Republic of South Sudan in July 2011. A veteran of Sudan's long civil war, he helped establish the dominant Marxist rebel movement in southern Sudan in the 1980s, leading its military wing. In 2013 a power struggle between Kiir and Vice President Riek Machar led to the latter's dismissal in July, followed by bitter fighting between their rival military supporters from Dec. that year until a tentative peace agreement was signed in Aug. 2015.

Early Life

Salva Kiir Mayardit was born into the Dinka ethnic group in Bahr Al Ghazal state in southern Sudan in 1951. He became active in the Anya-Nya southern rebel movement in the civil war in the late 1960s. Following a settlement on regional autonomy in 1972, Kiir joined the Sudanese Army, graduating from its Military College at Omdurman.

The southern rebellion reignited in 1983 after President Nimeiry imposed Sharia law. Kiir joined John Garang in defecting from the Army and co-founded the Sudanese People's Liberation Movement (SPLM) that year. The Marxist-Leninist organization became the dominant southern rebel force.

Peace talks between the SPLM and Sudan's president, Omar al-Bashir, began in 2002. They culminated in a peace agreement of 2005, ending the war that had claimed 2m. lives and recognizing southern autonomy. Kiir became vice president of the Government of Southern Sudan (GOSS) in Juba. He became president following Garang's death in a helicopter accident in July 2005. His ability to unite rival factions was underlined when he was re-elected president of the GOSS in April 2010 with 93% support. Nearly 99% of voters in the Jan. 2011 referendum then elected to separate from Sudan and, following approval from Khartoum, the Republic of South Sudan was formally established on 9 July that year, with Kiir as head of state.

Career in Office

In his inaugural address Kiir said the South Sudanese would forgive but not forget past injustices. He made conciliatory gestures to southern rebel groups previously opposed to the SPLM, and asked the United Nations for help to lift South Sudan from the 'abyss of poverty and deprivation'.

However, following deepening tensions with the Bashir regime in Sudan over oil transit fees (for South Sudan's only export route north to the Red Sea) and revenue-sharing, South Sudan shut down oil exports in early 2012, seriously undermining the economies of both countries until an agreement to resume oil pumping was reached in March 2013. Meanwhile, in April 2012 Sudan's air force had raided its neighbour after South Sudanese troops occupied the disputed border region of Abyei and the Heglig oilfields. The UN threatened sanctions against both countries if they did not stop the escalating violence and return to negotiations. Kiir met President Bashir in Ethiopia in Sept. in an attempt to resolve the crisis. In March 2013 they agreed to a troop withdrawal and demilitarization of the border area.

In July 2013 Kiir dismissed his cabinet, including Vice President Machar, and made a series of new appointments. This controversial move provoked an apparent coup attempt in Dec. by military forces loyal to Machar, prompting a wave of ethnic violence, atrocities against civilians, mass displacements and increasing famine. Conflict continued throughout 2014 and into 2015. Despite reservations, in Aug. Kiir accepted under threat of UN sanctions an internationally-mediated peace deal with the rebels in which Machar would return as vice president. However, there were further tensions and sporadic ceasefire violations following Kiir's unilateral decision in Oct. to increase the number of states in the country from ten to 28, potentially undermining the power-sharing basis of the peace agreement.

Earlier in 2015 general elections expected in June had been called off owing to the security situation and a constitutional amendment had been passed by parliament extending Kiir's presidential mandate by three years.

DEFENCE

On independence in 2011 the former rebel Sudan People's Liberation Army changed its name to the South Sudan Armed Forces. The United Nations Mission in the Republic of South Sudan (UNMISS) has been in South Sudan since independence to consolidate peace and security and to help establish conditions for development. It had 12,523 uniformed personnel at 29 Feb. 2016.

In 2013 defence expenditure totalled US$714m. (US$64 per capita), representing 5.3% of GDP.

ECONOMY

South Sudan featured among the ten most corrupt countries in the world in a 2015 survey of 168 countries carried out by the anti-corruption organization Transparency International.

Overview

Oil exports began in 1999 and have been essential to the fortunes of what is now South Sudan, accounting for almost all exports and 70% of government revenues. About 75% of what was formerly Sudan's oil production is located in the territory of the South.

Despite a 2005 agreement to share oil revenues equally, there have been clashes between North and South over oil-rich border regions, such as Abyei. Oil production was consequently shut down in Jan. 2012, creating a large fiscal deficit. Against a backdrop of austerity measures and despite reforms designed to increase non-oil revenues, the economy contracted by over 47% in 2012.

Oil production had been expected to resume in 2013 and lead to significant growth, but civil war, which began in Dec. 2013, put prospects for economic recovery in doubt. Despite its oil wealth, South Sudan is among Africa's least developed economies, conflict and instability having left the country impoverished. The infrastructure is poor, with few paved roads. Corruption is also a problem, and social indicators are weak.

Currency

The official unit of currency is the South Sudan pound (SSP) of 100 piastres, introduced on 18 July 2011. Inflation was 45.1% in 2012, but then 0.0% in 2013 and 1.7% in 2014.

Performance

Following a halt in oil production in the wake of a dispute with neighbouring Sudan over transit fees, the economy shrank by 52.4% in 2012 (South Sudan's first full year as an independent country). However, it made a significant recovery in 2013, growing by 29.3%. Growth then slowed to 2.9% in 2014. Total GDP in 2014 was US$13.3bn.

Banking and Finance

The Bank of South Sudan (BOSS) serves as the country's central bank. Its Governor is Kornelio Koriom Mayiek.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

The Climate Change and Environmental Risk Atlas 2014 produced by Maplecroft, a risk analytics company, ranked South Sudan as the country facing the fifth highest economic and social risk from climate change by 2025.

Electricity

Less than 1% of the population has access to electricity.

Oil and Gas

Oil production was 1.5m. tonnes in 2012. South Sudan currently exports all of its crude oil via a pipeline through Sudan, although flows have been disrupted because of continuing disputes between the two countries. However, plans to construct a pipeline through Uganda, Kenya and Rwanda announced in 2014 would provide South Sudan with an alternative means of export.

Agriculture

South Sudan has some 31m. head of livestock, more than three times the number of humans.

Forestry

Timber cut in 2012: 4.38m. cu. metres.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

Only a small proportion of South Sudan's road network is paved, but in Sept. 2012 a 192-km highway linking Juba, the capital, with Nimule, on the Ugandan border, was inaugurated.

Rail

Total length of railway is 248 km, running from the Sudanese border to Wau.

Civil Aviation

There is an international airport at Juba with connections to Addis Ababa, Cairo, Entebbe, Khartoum and Nairobi. Other major airports include those at Malakal, Rumbek and Wau. South Supreme Airlines operates both domestic and international flights.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The Judiciary of Southern Sudan (JOSS) oversees the court systems of South Sudan. The highest court is the Supreme Court.

The second tier of justice consists of three Courts of Appeal. Each state has a High Court, as well as county, town and city courts.

The death penalty is in force. No executions were reported in 2014, but there were at least five in 2015.

The population in penal institutions in April 2013 was approximately 7,000 (65 per 100,000 of national population).

Education

Primary school enrolment in 2009 was 1,380,580. Secondary school enrolment (ages 14–17) was 44,027 in 2009. Higher education institutions include the University of Juba (founded in 1977), the University of Bahr el Ghazal (1991) in Wau and Upper Nile University (1991) in Malakal. The literacy rate for people aged 15 and above was 27% in 2009.

RELIGION

A large percentage of South Sudan's population are Christian—primarily Roman Catholic, Anglican and Presbyterian. There are also followers of African traditional animist religions as well as Muslims.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

A bridge between Europe and Africa, the Iberian peninsula has absorbed influences from both regions. The original inhabitants were Iberians, who spoke a non Indo-European language, and Celtic peoples, who were mainly to the north and west of the peninsula. From the 8th century BC the Phoenicians established trading colonies such as Gades (Cádiz), importing metalworking skills, music and literacy in the form of a semi-syllabic script. The Greeks established a trading settlement in Catalonia named Empirion (now Ampurias) around 575 BC, and there is evidence of other Greek and Phoenician settlements along the Mediterranean coast.

From 241 BC the Iberian peninsula came under the influence of Carthage in North Africa. The Carthaginians, led by Hamilcar Barca, landed at Cádiz and moved north and east. They eventually founded a new capital at Cartagena: the city grew rapidly and had a population of around 30,000 by 215 BC. A Roman presence began at this time, further north in Catalonia. The first legionnaires established their base at Tarragona, from where they waged war on the Carthaginians. Fighting between the two powers ebbed and flowed for years, until the Carthaginians were forced off the peninsula in 206 BC. Roman laws and customs were gradually adopted over the following six centuries, but there were frequent rebellions among the native peoples.

Roman rule was on the wane throughout Europe by AD 400, and Roman Hispania was no exception. In 409 Visigoths, Suevi and Vandals crossed the Pyrenees and began to establish themselves as the new rulers. By 470 most of the leading families were of Germanic origin. Toledo became the capital and seat of successive Visigothic monarchs until the early 700s. At this time, the Romans were defeated in North Africa by Muslim armies, who began to turn their attention to the Iberian peninsula. Toledo fell to Arab and Berber forces and the death of King Roderic in 711 marked the end of Visigothic hegemony.

The Muslim conquerors brought a new language, religion and culture, which dominated large parts of the Iberian peninsula for the next five hundred years, though there were sizeable Jewish communities in the southern and eastern towns and some Christian principalities in the north. The Umayyad dynasty used Córdoba as the administrative centre of al-Andalus ('Land of the Vandals') until 1031. New trade links were established, connecting Córdoba with Egypt and Persia and most of the Islamic world. People and ideas flooded in and the great cities of Córdoba and Seville became beacons of modernity and creativity in fields ranging from architecture to botany, medicine, poetry and techniques for irrigation.

While al-Andalus prospered, the Christian principalities to the north in places such as Asturias, the Basque territories and northern Catalonia remained relatively poor and agrarian. However, from about 900 there was a gradual expansion southwards towards al-Andalus, described as the start of the Reconquista, or reconquest of Spain by the Christians. By 1000 there was considerable contact between the Christian principalities and France: Norman knights fought in Catalonia and French settlers arrived in towns along the pilgrimage route to Santiago de Compostela, bringing with them new ideas and skills.

From the 1120s the Muslim governors of al-Andalus found themselves under threat from both northern Christian rulers and native Andalusí. Alfonso VII of Leon-Castile eventually conquered Córdoba in 1146 and the strategically important Almería, on the Mediterranean coast, in 1147. Following these victories, the three most powerful Christian kingdoms of Aragon, Castile and Portugal pushed south and east and by 1300 the last remaining Islamic dominion was the amirate of Granada. Muslim inhabitants were expelled from many towns and cities, though in rural areas the Islamic faith and the Arabic language survived for centuries. While Córdoba declined, Barcelona blossomed: it emerged as a great economic success story on a par with Genoa and Venice.

Castile and Aragon were the dominant kingdoms by the early 1300s, but they were both characterized by infighting and rebellion. King Pedro the Cruel of Castile was challenged by a coalition of nobles led by his half brother Enrique de Trastámara. The English supported Pedro (Peter) and his heirs and the French backed Enrique (Henry) and his supporters. Enrique eventually prevailed, and was crowned Enrique II in 1369.

The Modern State

The Spanish monarchy was founded in 1469 following the marriage of Isabel (Isabella), princess of Castile and Fernando (Ferdinand), heir to the throne of Aragon. Under their joint reign, they laid the foundations for a unified Spain. In 1478 they established the notorious Spanish Inquisition, expelling and executing tens of thousands of Jews and other non-Christians. Four years later the last Islamic territory of Granada was besieged. It surrendered in 1492, the year in which Christopher Columbus reached the New World.

When Fernando and Isabel's son Juan died in 1497, the succession to the Spanish crowns passed to his sister, Juana la loca (the Mad). Juana married Philip (Felipe) the Handsome, heir through his father, Emperor Maximilian I, to the Habsburg domains in Germany and Flanders. When Fernando died in 1516, Juana and Felipe's son, Charles of Ghent, inherited Spain, its colonies in the New World, Naples and, following the death of Maximilian I in 1519, the Habsburg territories. Shortly afterwards he was elected Holy Roman Emperor, a title he held as Charles V

Columbus paved the way for the Spanish colonies in the New World but for 30 years after his discoveries attention focused solely on the Caribbean. It was only in 1521 that Hernando Cortés overthrew the Aztecs, with help from native Indian allies. After 1540 gold and silver began pouring into Spanish coffers from mines in Peru and Mexico. Sugar plantations were established in the Caribbean and the indigenous populations were gradually wiped out. Maintaining control of the new empire was a serious challenge and Charles V relied heavily on co-operation from Italians, Flemings and Germans. The rise of Spain as a military power began in the 1560s in the reign of Felipe II. He built a powerful navy and annexed Portugal in 1580. The new fleet patrolled the American supply routes, fended off attacks from the English and set up new colonies in the Philippines and at Buenos Aires.

Spain's Golden Age began to lose its lustre in the late 16th century, following a popular uprising in the Netherlands under William of Orange. The Dutch were beginning to establish their own colonies in Asia and started making inroads in Brazil. Spain was weakened by the cost of defending its empire against France and England and in 1640 the unity of the Iberian peninsula itself came under threat by rebellions in Catalonia and Portugal. The crowning of Carlos II, a disabled child, in 1665 symbolized Spain's growing vulnerability and isolation from the rest of Europe.

Carlos II died without issue in 1700 and left the throne to Philippe, duke of Anjou and grandson of King Louis XIV of France. Felipe (Philippe) V was the first in a line of five Bourbon monarchs, who reigned in Spain until 1833. Under Felipe V, and his successor Fernando VI, Spain restored some of its influence in Europe, particularly in Italy, where Naples and Sicily were recovered from Austria in 1734. Educational reforms led to a period of Enlightenment in the 1760s, with many universities replacing conservative Jesuit doctrines with modern physics, astronomy and political theory. The 1780s, when Spain was ruled by Carlos III, were a period of stability and prosperity. Catalonia became a centre of the early industrial revolution with its booming textile trade and Madrid saw a flowering of artistic expression encapsulated by the work of Goya.

When Louis XVI was guillotined in 1793, the new French Republic turned its attention to neighbouring Spain and Britain. In 1794–95 French forces invaded Catalonia and the Basque provinces. Following these defeats, King Carlos IV of Spain formed an alliance with France under its new emperor, Napoleon. Hostilities with Britain were resumed, though defeat for the Franco-Spanish naval forces at the Battle of Trafalgar further undermined links with the Spanish colonies and damaged the economy.

In 1808 the weak and unpopular Carlos IV abdicated and the Spanish crown passed to Fernando VII, though his right to the throne was ceded to Napoleon later that year. However, Napoleon misjudged the mood of the Spanish public who rioted in Madrid and began a five-year war of independence. In 1813 the French forces were finally expelled but ideas from revolutionary France were beginning to take root. The medieval Cortes (parliament) was revived and a Liberal reformist group secured Spain's first constitution. The following year, Fernando VII was restored to the Spanish throne, a move generally welcomed by a war-ravaged public. But Fernando's first act was to abolish the constitution, and his 20 year reign was characterized by a return to the old regime: the Inquisition was re-established, the Liberals were persecuted, free speech was repressed and Spain entered a severe economic recession.

End of Empire

Queen Isabel II inherited the Spanish throne as a child in 1833. During her reign there were various attempts by the Liberals and progressives to reinstate a constitution. Her support for neo-catholic reactionaries in her governments of the 1860s fanned the flames of revolution. In 1868 Isabel was deposed and the Cortes approved a new constitution. Amadeo I of Savoy was chosen as monarch but he was unable to adapt to Spanish politics and abdicated in 1873. The Cortes immediately proclaimed a republic but in less than a year a coup restored the Bourbon monarchy, with Alfonso XII, the son of exiled Isabel II, as king.

The disastrous Spanish-American War of 1898 marked the end of the Spanish Empire. Spain was defeated by the USA in a series of one-sided naval battles, resulting in the loss of Cuba, Puerto Rico, Guam and the Philippines. Neutral in the First World War, Spain enjoyed a trade and industry boom. Barcelona's Hispano-Suiza factories produced aircraft engines for the French air force and luxury cars. However, prosperity did not filter through society and workers demonstrated against high food prices. In 1923 Gen. Miguel Primo de Rivera, marquis of Estella, led a coup, abolished the 1876 constitution and closed down the Cortes. Primo de Rivera was determined to clear out what he saw as corrupt, self-serving politicians. His alternative to the constitutional monarchy was the National Political Union but it attracted only opportunists and right-wing enthusiasts. There were improvements in the nation's infrastructure, but de Rivera's public works programmes were hit by financial difficulties in 1929, and the dictator resigned the following year.

1931 marked the beginning of a new genuinely democratic era for Spain. Municipal elections were held and won by a republican-socialist coalition. King Alfonso XIII went into exile and the Second Republic was declared. The 1936 elections saw the country split in two, with the Republican government and its supporters on one side (an uneasy alliance of communists, socialists and anarchists) and the Nationalists (the army, the Catholic church, monarchists and the fascist-style Falange Party) on the other.

Civil War

The assassination of the opposition leader José Calvo Sotelo by Republican police officers in July 1936 gave the army, led by Gen. Francisco Franco, an excuse to stage a coup. The failure of the military to overthrow the government led to a protracted civil war. The Nationalists received extensive military and financial support from fascist Germany and Italy, while the Republican government received support from the Soviet Union and, to a lesser degree, from the International Brigades, made up of foreign volunteers.

By 1939 the Nationalists, led by Franco, had prevailed. More than 350,000 Spaniards died in the fighting, but more bloodletting ensued. An estimated 100,000 Republicans were executed or died in prison after the civil war. Franco's cure for Spain's 'sick' economy was withdrawal from world markets and the establishment of a self-sufficient autarky which remained neutral in World War Two. But by the late 1940s inflation was rising steeply and Spain was losing ground to other European countries. Franco allowed a gradual liberalization of the economy, but despite this and the readmission of Spain to the UN in 1955 the economy remained in deep trouble. The desperate conditions endured by hundreds of thousands of workers led to nationwide strikes and growing opposition to the Franco regime among university students and intellectuals. In the 1960s the regime faced demands for independence in Catalonia and the Basque Country.

Franco died in 1975, having earlier named Juan Carlos, the grandson of Alfonso XIII, his successor. Under King Juan Carlos, Spain made the transition back to democracy. The first elections were held in 1977 and a new constitution was approved by referendum in 1978. In Feb. 1981 there was an attempted fascist coup, when for 18 hours the deputies of the lower house of parliament and the Cabinet were held hostage. The episode is now seen as the final, futile attempt to turn back the clock. The following year saw a spectacular victory for the socialist party which presided over a rapid expansion in the economy during its 14 years in power. In 1986 Spain joined the European Economic Community, cementing the nation's status as a popular location for foreign investors and tourists, though its international reputation suffered from the ongoing violent campaign waged by ETA, the separatist terrorist group attempting to secure an independent Basque homeland.

In 1996 Spaniards voted in a conservative party under the leadership of José María Aznar. In March 2000 he was re-elected with an absolute majority; his success was attributed to the buoyant state of the Spanish economy, which averaged in excess of 4% annual growth during Aznar's first term of office.

Madrid suffered Spain's worst terrorist attack on 11 March 2004 when four commuter trains were bombed, killing 191 and injuring over 1,800 people. The government initially blamed ETA but suspicion quickly moved to al-Qaeda and North African operatives. On 14 March the Socialists, led by José Luis Rodríguez Zapatero, defeated the People's Party in general elections. The last Spanish troops left Iraq in May 2004.

In March 2006 ETA announced a permanent ceasefire but the truce ended in Dec. that year when the group carried out a car bomb attack at Madrid's Barajas airport. ETA agreed to a further ceasefire in Sept. 2010 and in Nov. 2012 offered to hold talks with the governments of France and Spain.

In Nov. 2007 parliament passed legislation formally denouncing the rule of Franco. Zapatero won a further term in office in parliamentary elections in March 2008. The following year Spain entered a deep economic recession, ushering in a period of austerity that met with large-scale popular protests. Mariano Rajoy, head of the Popular Party, became premier in Dec. 2011.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Spain is bounded in the north by the Bay of Biscay, France and Andorra, east and south by the Mediterranean and the Straits of Gibraltar, southwest by the Atlantic and west by Portugal and the Atlantic. Continental Spain has an area of 493,491 sq. km, and including the Balearic and Canary Islands and the towns of Ceuta and Melilla on the northern coast of Africa, 505,693 sq. km (195,249 sq. miles). Population (census, 2011), 46,815,916 (23,711,613 females). By the beginning of 2014 the resident population had fallen to 46,771,341, mainly owing to immigrants who had come to Spain in earlier years leaving as a result of the economic crisis and spiralling unemployment. The number of migrants coming from Latin America to Spain in 2012 was less than a third of the 2007 total, whereas the number of migrants going from Spain to Latin America in 2012 was nearly three times the 2007 figure. In 2011, 77.6% of the population lived in urban areas; population density in 2011 was 93 per sq. km. In 2011 foreigners resident in Spain numbered 5,252,473 (up from 3,730,610 in 2005), including 798,104 from Romania, 773,966 from Morocco, 316,756 from Ecuador, 312,098 from the UK and 250,087 from Colombia. Foreigners constituted 11.2% of the population in 2011 (8.5% in 2005 and 2.3% in 2000). The estimated population on 1 Jan. 2015 was 46,624,382.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 46.12m.

The growth of the population has been as follows:

Census year	Population	Rate of annual increase	Census year	Population	Rate of annual increase
1860	15,655,467	0.34	1960	30,903,137	1.05

¹Ceuta and Melilla gained limited autonomous status in 1994.

The capitals of the autonomous communities are: Andalucía: Seville (Sevilla); Aragón: Zaragoza (Saragossa); Asturias: Oviedo; Baleares: Palma de Mallorca; Basque Country: Vitoria-Gasteiz; Canary Islands: dual capitals, Las Palmas de Gran Canaria and Santa Cruz de Tenerife; Cantabria: Santander; Castilla-La Mancha: Toledo; Castilla y León: de facto capital, Valladolid; Catalonia: Barcelona; Extremadura: Mérida; Galicia: Santiago de Compostela; Madrid: Madrid; Murcia: Murcia (but regional parliament in Cartagena); Navarra: Pamplona (Iruña); La Rioja: Logroño; Valencian Community: Valencia (València).

The capitals of the provinces are the towns from which they take the name, except in the cases of Álava/Araba-Álava (capital, Vitoria-Gasteiz), Guipúzcoa/Gipuzkoa (San Sebastián) and Vizcaya/Bizkaia (Bilbao/Bilbo).

The islands that form the Balearics include Majorca (Mallorca), Minorca (Menorca), Ibiza and Formentera. Those which form the Canary Archipelago are divided into two provinces, under the name of their respective capitals: Santa Cruz de Tenerife and Las Palmas de Gran Canaria. The province of Santa Cruz de Tenerife is constituted by the islands of Tenerife, La Palma, Gomera and Hierro; that of Las Palmas by Gran Canaria, Lanzarote and Fuerteventura, with the small barren islands of Alegranza, Roque del Este, Roque del Oeste, Graciosa, Montaña Clara and Lobos.

Places under Spanish sovereignty in Africa (Alhucemas, Ceuta, Chafarinas, Melilla and Peñón de Vélez) constitute the two provinces of Ceuta and Melilla.

Languages

The Constitution states that 'Castilian is the Spanish official language of the State', but also that 'All other Spanish languages will also be official in the corresponding Autonomous Communities'. At the last linguistic census (2011) Catalan (an official EU language since 1990) was spoken in Catalonia by 73.2% of people and understood by 95.1%. It is also spoken in Balearics, Valencian Community (where it is frequently called Valencian) and in parts of Aragón, a narrow strip close to the Catalanian and Valencian Community boundaries, and Murcia, to the south of the Valencian Community. Galician, a language very close to Portuguese, was understood in 2007 by 98.0% of people in Galicia aged 15 and over and spoken to a high or moderate standard by 89.4%; Basque by a significant and increasing minority in the Basque Country, and by a small minority in northwest Navarra. It is estimated that one-third of all Spaniards speaks one of the other three official languages as well as standard Castilian. In bilingual communities, both Castilian and the regional language are taught in schools and universities.

Rate per 1,000 population, 2008: births, 11.7; deaths, 8.7; marriages, 4.3; divorces, 2.5. In 2005 the most popular age range for marrying was 25–29 for both males and females. Annual population growth rate, 2000–05, 1.5%. Suicide rate (per 100,000 population), 2005: 7.8. Expectation of life, 2007, was 77.5 years for males and 84.0 for females. Infant mortality, 2010, four per 1,000 live births; fertility rate, 2008, 1.4 births per woman. In 2009 Spain received 3,007 asylum applications, down from 7,662 in 2007.

A UNICEF report published in 2010 showed that 17.1% of children in Spain live in relative poverty (living in a household in which disposable income—when adjusted for family size and composition—is less than 50% of the national median income), compared to just 4.7% in Iceland.

In 2007–08, 19.6% of 15 to 34-year-olds used cannabis and 5.1% cocaine. A 2009 report found that use of cocaine in Spain was the highest in the European Union.

CLIMATE

Most of Spain has a form of Mediterranean climate with mild, moist winters and hot, dry summers, but the northern coastal region has a moist, equable climate, with rainfall well distributed throughout the year, mild winters and warm summers, and less sunshine than the rest of Spain. The south, in particular Andalucía, is dry and prone to drought.

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

Following the death of General Franco in 1975 and the transition to a democracy, the first democratic elections were held on 15 June 1977. A new constitution was approved by referendum on 6 Dec. 1978, and came into force 29 Dec. 1978. It has been amended twice since, in 1992 and 2011. It established a parliamentary monarchy.

The reigning King is Felipe VI (Don Felipe de Borbón y Grecia), born 30 Jan. 1968, who succeeded his father, Juan Carlos I (Juan Carlos de Borbón), on 19 June 2014. Felipe was married on 22 May 2004 to Letizia Ortiz Rocasolano. Offspring: Leonor, b. 8 Nov. 2005 (heiress presumptive); Sofia, b. 29 April 2007. Juan Carlos married Princess Sophia of Greece on 14 May 1962. The two retained their respective titles of King and Queen even after Juan Carlos' abdication on 18 June 2014. Besides Felipe, the couple have two other offspring: Elena, born 20 Dec. 1963, married 18 March 1995 Jaime de Marichalar, divorced 25 Nov. 2009 (offspring: Felipe, b. 17 July 1998; Victoria, b. 9 Sept. 2000); Cristina, born 13 June 1965, married 4 Oct. 1997 Iñaki Urdangarín (offspring: Juan, b. 29 Sept. 1999; Pablo, b. 6 Dec. 2000; Miguel, b. 30 April 2002; Irene, b. 5 June 2005).

The King receives an allowance, part of which is taxable, approved by parliament each year. For 2016 this is €7.9m. There is no formal court; the (private) Diputación de la Grandeza represents the interests of the aristocracy.

Legislative power is vested in the Cortes Generales, a bicameral parliament composed of the Congress of Deputies (lower house) and the Senate (upper house). The Congress of Deputies has not less than 300 nor more than 400 members (350 in the general election of 2011) elected in a proportional system under which electors choose between party lists of candidates in multi-member constituencies.

The Senate has 266 members of whom 208 are elected by a majority system: the 47 mainland provinces elect four senators each, regardless of population; the larger islands (Gran Canaria, Majorca and Tenerife) elect three senators and each of the smaller islands or groups of islands (Ibiza-Formentera, Minorca, Fuerteventura, Gomera, Hierro, Lanzarote and La Palma) elect one senator. To these each self-governing community appoints one senator, and an additional senator for every million inhabitants in their respective territories. Currently 58 senators are appointed by the self-governing communities. Deputies and senators are elected by universal secret suffrage for four-year terms. The Prime Minister is elected by the Congress of Deputies.

The Constitutional Court is empowered to solve conflicts between the State and the Autonomous Communities; to determine if legislation passed by the Cortes is contrary to the Constitution; and to protect the constitutional rights of individuals violated by any authority. Its 12 members are appointed by the monarch. It has a nine-year term, with a third of the membership being renewed every three years.

In 2006 a revised Statute of Autonomy of Catalonia (one of the nation's 17 autonomous communities) received 73.9% support in a referendum of the Catalan electorate, giving the regional parliament increased powers over taxation and judicial matters. In late 2013 the Catalan government announced a referendum on independence from Spain. However, after such a referendum was declared illegal by the Spanish Constitutional Court, Catalonia held a non-binding informal vote in Nov. 2014 on separation from Spain. Turnout was around 39%, with 81% of votes cast in favour of independence.

Mariano Rajoy

Position

Prime Minister

Introduction

A veteran of the conservative Popular Party (PP), Mariano Rajoy became prime minister in 2011 during a period of financial crisis. He advocated sweeping economic reforms and committed his government to accepting austere deficit reduction targets set by the European Union.

Early Life

Mariano Rajoy was born on 27 March 1955 in Santiago de Compostela, Galicia, into a political family. In 1978 he graduated in law from Santiago de Compostela University before working in the civil service as a property registrar from 1979–81. His political career began in 1981 when he won a seat in the newly inaugurated Galician parliament, representing the conservative People's Alliance (AP).

He served as regional minister of institutional relations from 1982–86 and as president of Pontevedra council from 1986–91. He was elected to Spain's national parliament in June 1986, serving briefly as a deputy before resigning to return to the Galician parliament in Nov. 1986, where he served as vice-president until Sept. 1987. In 1989 the AP merged with other parties to form the PP, with Rajoy appointed to its national executive committee.

He won re-election to parliament in 1993 and was minister of public administration in José María Aznar's government from 1996–99, before serving as minister of culture until 2000. After the PP retained power at the 2000 election, Rajoy was appointed deputy prime minister. From 2001–02 he served as minister of the interior and in 2004 fought the general election as party leader-designate. However, the PP unexpectedly lost to the Spanish Socialist Workers' Party (PSOE) in the aftermath of the train bombings in Madrid that the PP government had wrongly blamed on the Basque separatist group ETA.

Rajoy took over as party leader in Oct. 2004 and fought the 2008 election on a platform of liberal economic policies and social conservatism, including restrictions on immigration and opposition to further regional devolution. Although the DP gained seats, it narrowly failed to secure a majority.

As Spain struggled with recession and high unemployment, Rajoy adopted more moderate positions on social and cultural matters while calling for budget cuts. In the 2011 election campaign he committed his party to the ambitious deficit reduction targets set by the EU, balanced against promises to boost growth. In Nov. 2011 the PP won a decisive election victory, claiming 45% of the vote and 186 of 350 parliamentary seats.

Career in Office

Rajoy took office on 21 Dec. 2011 and in an effort to meet deficit reduction targets applied swingeing spending cuts, along with increases in income and property taxes and tax breaks for companies hiring staff. While his parliamentary majority allowed him to pass his reforms, maintaining public support for austerity proved a major challenge. In June 2012 his administration had to seek approval from its eurozone partners to access emergency financial assistance in order to bail out the ailing banking sector, while a number of heavily-indebted regional governments applied for rescue funds from the central government. However, Spain emerged from recession in the third quarter of 2013 amid signs of returning investor confidence, and in mid-2014 recorded the first annual rise in employment in six years.

Rajoy has also faced sustained pressure from Catalan separatists, although the government refused to acknowledge a majority referendum vote in favour of secession in Nov. 2014. In Nov. 2012 the government had rejected an offer from the Basque separatist group ETA to enter talks with Spain and France on a definitive end to its operations, stating that it would not negotiate with a terrorist organization.

There has meanwhile been simmering diplomatic friction with the United Kingdom over the issue of sovereignty over Gibraltar.

Despite winning the Dec. 2015 election Rajoy's PP fell far short of securing a parliamentary majority. After lengthy attempts by all the main parties failed to render a workable coalition, King Felipe formally acknowledged that the negotiating process was deadlocked by late April 2016. Rajoy consequently remained in office in a caretaker capacity, with new elections scheduled for 26 June 2016.

DEFENCE

Conscription was abolished in 2001. The government had begun the phased abolition of conscription in 1996. In 2002 the armed forces became fully professional. However, a shortfall in recruitment in Spain meant that descendants of Spanish migrants, many of whom had never been to Europe, began to join. Since 1989 women have been accepted in all sections of the armed forces.

In 2013 defence expenditure totalled US$11,593m. (US$245 per capita), representing 0.8% of GDP.

Army

A Rapid Reaction Force is formed from the Spanish Legion and the airborne and air-portable brigades. There is also an Army Aviation Brigade consisting of 153 helicopters (28 attack).

Strength (2004) 95,600. There were 265,000 army reservists in 2004.

Guardia Civil

The paramilitary Guardia Civil numbers 72,600.

Navy

The principal ships of the Navy is the light vertical/short take-off and landing aircraft carrier Juan Carlos I, commissioned in 2010. It carries AV-8B Harrier combat aircraft. There are also eight French-designed submarines and 16 frigates.

The Naval Air Service operates 17 combat aircraft and 37 armed helicopters. Personnel numbered 700 in 2004. There are 5,600 marines.

Main naval bases are at Ferrol, Rota, Cádiz, Cartagena, Palma de Mallorca, Mahón and Las Palmas de Gran Canaria (Canary Islands).

In 2004 personnel totalled 22,900 including the marines and naval air arm. There were 18,500 naval reservists in 2004.

Air Force

The Air Force is organized as an independent service, dating from 1939. It is administered through four operational commands. These are geographically oriented following a reorganization in 1991 and comprise Central Air Command, Strait Air Command, Eastern Air Command and Air Command of the Canaries.

There were 177 combat aircraft in 2004 including 91 EF/A-18s, 23 F-5Bs and 52 Mirage F-1s.

Strength (2004) 22,750. There were 45,000 air force reservists in 2004.

ECONOMY

Agriculture accounted for 2% of GDP in 2012, industry 24% and services 74%.

Spain's 'shadow' (black market) economy is estimated to constitute approximately 22% of the country's official GDP.

In 2014 Spain gave US$1.9bn. in international aid, compared to US$4.2bn. in 2011. This represented 0.13% of GNI (compared to the UN target of 0.7%).

Overview

Spain joined the European Community (forerunner of the European Union) in 1986. The country made significant economic progress through the 1980s and performed well during the Europe-wide recession of the early 1990s, growing consistently for 16 years until 2009 when the global financial crisis prompted a contraction. Before the crash Spain was considered to have one of the most dynamic economies in the eurozone, with the service sector's share of total GDP expanding at the expense of the traditionally strong agriculture, forestry and fishing industries.

Tourism is the main component of the service sector, although banking, retailing and telecommunications also make significant contributions. Agricultural activity is focused on wine, olive oil, fruit and vegetable production. Vehicle production for export is the leading manufacturing industry, and exports have continued to perform relatively well despite the post-2009 economic slowdown.

Strong demand for tourist-related facilities, foreign demand for property and high levels of investment in infrastructure combined to make the pre-crisis construction sector twice as large as in other major European economies in terms of share of GDP. Consequently, the bursting of the housing bubble was a major contributory factor in the downturn in 2009. The economy contracted by 3.6% that year, with public finances recording a deficit of over 11% of GDP. GDP contracted further until 2013, by which time unemployment measured 27.3%. Meanwhile, public debt increased from 70.4% of GDP in 2010 to 99.3% in 2014.

In response to the economic crisis, the government recapitalized the banking sector through EU funding equivalent to 40% of GDP and implemented long-term austerity policies, resulting in widespread protests across the country. Recovery has been faltering, although exports have remained robust, helping to offset declining domestic consumption, and the labour market has seen rising productivity. GDP growth was 1.4% in 2014 and averaged 3.0% in the first three quarters of 2015, while unemployment fell to such an extent that by late 2015 it was more than five percentage points lower than in 2013. The public deficit declined to 6.0% of GDP in 2014. In addition, low inflation has boosted foreign investor confidence. Further recovery, however, remains a challenge, particularly in light of political uncertainty following the inconclusive general election of Dec. 2015.

Currency

On 1 Jan. 1999 the euro (EUR) became the legal currency in Spain at the irrevocable conversion rate of 166.386 pesetas to one euro. The euro, which consists of 100 cents, has been in circulation since 1 Jan. 2002. On the introduction of the euro there was a 'dual circulation' period before the peseta ceased to be legal tender on 28 Feb. 2002. Euro banknotes in circulation on 1 Jan. 2002 had a total value of €68.6bn.

Foreign exchange reserves were US$12,657m. in Sept. 2009 (US$52,490m. in 1998) and gold reserves 9.05m. troy oz. Inflation rates (based on OECD statistics):

2005	2006	2007	2008	2009	2010	2011	2012	2013	2014
3.4%	3.6%	2.8%	4.1%	-0.2%	2.0%	3.1%	2.4%	1.5%	-0.2%

Total money supply was €506,714m. in Aug. 2009.

Budget

In 2009 central government revenues totalled €240,420m. and expenditures €323,253m. Principal sources of revenue in 2009: social security contributions, €126,983m.; taxes on income, profits and capital gains, €58,150m.; taxes on goods and services, €31,907m. Main items of expenditure by economic type in 2009: social benefits, €151,189m.; grants, €96,956m.; compensation of employees, €27,149m.

Spain's budget deficit in 2014 was 5.9% of GDP (2013, 6.9%; 2012, 10.4%). The required target set by the EU is a budget deficit of no more than 3%.

VAT is 21% (since 1 Sept. 2012), with a rate of 10% on certain services (catering and hospitality) and 4% on basic foodstuffs.

Performance

Real GDP growth rates (based on OECD statistics):

2005	2006	2007	2008	2009	2010	2011	2012	2013	2014
3.7%	4.2%	3.8%	1.1%	-3.6%	0.0%	-1.0%	-2.6%	-1.7%	1.4%

The provisional real GDP growth rate in 2015 according to Spain's National Statistics Institute was 3.2%. Total GDP (2014): US$1,381.3bn.

Banking and Finance

The central bank is the Bank of Spain (Governor, Luis María Linde) which gained autonomy under an ordinance of 1994. Its Governor is appointed for a six-year term. The Banking Corporation of Spain, Argentaria, groups together the shares of all state-owned banks, and competes in the financial market with private banks. In 1993 the government sold 49.9% of the capital of Argentaria; the remainder in two flotations ending on 13 Feb. 1998.

Spanish banking is dominated by two main banks—Santander and BBVA (Banco Bilbao Vizcaya Argentaria). Santander had assets of US$1,533.2bn. in 2013 and BBVA assets of US$823.9bn.

Gross external debt amounted to US$2,264,614m. in June 2012.

Total foreign direct investment in 2014 was US$22.9bn.

There are stock exchanges in Madrid, Barcelona, Bilbao and Valencia.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

In 2011, 15.1% of energy consumption came from renewables (wind power, solar power, hydro-electric power, tidal power, geothermal energy and biomass), compared to the European Union average of 13.0%. A target of 20% has been set by the EU for 2020.

Environment

In 2011 Spain's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy were the equivalent of 6.8 tonnes per capita.

Electricity

Installed capacity was 110.1m. kW in 2011. The total electricity output in 2011 amounted to 291.2bn. kWh, of which 51.3% was thermal, 19.8% nuclear, 11.3% hydro-electric and 17.6% other (notably wind). In 2010 there were eight nuclear reactors in operation. Consumption per capita in 2011 was 6,133 kWh.

Spain is heavily dependent on imported oil; Mexico is its largest supplier. Crude oil production (2009), 0.8m. bbls.

The government sold its remaining stake in the oil, gas and chemicals group Repsol in 1997. Natural gas production (2009) totalled 14m. cu. metres. Ever increasing consumption means that Spain has to import large quantities of natural gas, primarily from Algeria.

Wind

Spain is one of the world's largest wind-power producers, with an installed capacity of 20,676 MW in 2010 (the fourth highest after China, the USA and Germany). Production of wind-generated electricity in 2010 totalled 42.7bn. kWh, a figure exceeded only by the USA.

Minerals

Coal production (2011), 6.62m. tonnes; other principal minerals (in 1,000 tonnes): limestone (2008 estimate), 270,000; dolomite (2008 estimate), 15,000; gypsum and anhydrite (2008 estimate), 15,000; marl (2008 estimate), 10,000; salt (2008), 4,141; feldspar (2008), 690; potash (2008), 435; aluminium (2008), 408; fluorspar (2008), 149; nickel (2008), 8. Gold production, 2008, 3,400 kg; silver production, 2008, 3,400 kg.

Agriculture

There were 965,000 farms in Spain in 2013. Agriculture employed 4.5% of the workforce in 2013. Food and live animals accounted for 12.2% of exports and 8.1% of imports in 2010.

There were an estimated 12.57m. ha. of arable land in 2012 and 4.97m. ha. of permanent crops. In 2009 there were 1,321,000 tractors and 52,000 combine harvesters-threshers in use.

Principal crops	Area (in 1,000 ha.)			Yield (in 1,000 tonnes)
	2010	2011	2012	2010	2011	2012
Barley	2,886	2,701	2,691	8,154	8,287	5,956

Production of wine in 2012 totalled 31,122,560 hectolitres (12.1% of the world total), ranking Spain third behind France and Italy; production of grapes (2012), 5,332,163 tonnes.

The area planted with tomatoes in 2002 was 60,000 ha., yielding 3,878,000 tonnes; with onions, 23,000 ha., yielding 992,000 tonnes; peppers, 23,000 ha., yielding 980,000 tonnes.

Fruit production (2002, in tonnes): oranges, 2,867,000; tangerines, 1,952,000; peaches, 1,247,000; lemons, 920,000; apples, 653,000; pears, 603,000.

Production of olives, 2001–02, 6,983,000 tonnes; olive oil, 1,422,000 tonnes. Spain is the world's leading producer both of olives and olive oil.

Livestock (2003): cattle, 6.48m.; sheep, 23.81m.; goats, 3.05m.; pigs, 23.52m.; chickens, 128.0m.; asses and mules, 0.26m.; horses, 0.24m. Livestock products (2003, in 1,000 tonnes): pork and pork products, 3,322; beef and veal, 700; mutton and lamb, 237; poultry meat, 1,042; milk, 6,917; cheese, 198; eggs, 686.

Forestry

In 2010 the area under forests was 18.17m. ha., or 36% of the total land area. In 2011 timber production was 15.43m. cu. metres.

Fisheries

Spain is one of the leading fishing nations in the EU; it is also the EU's leading importer of fishery commodities. Fishing vessels had a total tonnage of 387,503 GT in 2012, the highest in the EU and representing nearly a quarter of the total tonnage; fleets have been gradually reduced from 18,385 boats in 1995 to 10,143 in 2012. Total catch in 2010 amounted to 968,662 tonnes (the highest since 2001), almost exclusively sea fish. Imports of fishery commodities were valued at US$7,309m. in 2011 (the fourth highest in the world) and exports at US$4,186m. (the ninth highest).

INDUSTRY

The leading companies by market capitalization in Spain in March 2015 were: Banco Santander (US$106.0bn.); Intidex, a fashion distributor (US$100.0bn.); and Telefónica SA (US$70.3bn.).

In 2007 industry accounted for 30% of GDP, with manufacturing contributing 15%.

Industrial products, 2007 unless otherwise indicated (in tonnes): cement (2008), 43.1m.; distillate fuel oil, 23.9m.; crude steel (2006), 18.4m.; residual fuel oil, 9.3m.; petrol, 9.2m.; paper and paperboard, 6.7m.; pig iron (2005), 4.2m.; jet fuel, 2.6m.; lime (2005), 1.8m.; nitrogenous fertilizers, 836,270; cigarettes, 41.91bn. units.

Output of other products, 2007: passenger cars, 2,385,210 units; TV receivers, 3.01m. units; washing and drying machines; 2.48m. units; fridge-freezers, 1.15m. units. In 2007, 6,765.6m. litres of mineral water, 5,888.0m. litres of soft drinks and 3,350.2m. litres of beer were produced.

Labour

The labour force in 2013 was 23,420,000 (19,689,000 in 2003). 74.2% of the population aged 15–64 was economically active in 2013. Of those in employment in 2013, 75.9% worked in services, 19.8% in industry and 4.2% in agriculture. In that year 45.5% of the labour force was female. 23.4% of the labour force had a secondary education as the highest level and 36.3% had a tertiary education. The retirement age was traditionally 65 years but in July 2011 the government agreed to raise the age to 67. The change, which is being phased in gradually, started on 1 Jan. 2013 in a process that is set to continue through to 2027.

Spain's unemployment rate reached a peak of nearly 25% in 1994 but then fell steadily, declining to 8.3% in 2007. However, as a result of the global economic crisis Spain's unemployment rate rose by more than seven percentage points in the space of 12 months from March 2008. In the period Jan.–March 2009 an average of 8,600 jobs were lost every day. In Dec. 2015 the rate stood at 20.8%, down from 24.5% in 2014 and 26.1% in 2013. Spain had the second highest unemployment rate in the EU in Dec. 2015 (only below that of Greece). Youth unemployment—those under 25—is particularly high, at 47.5% in Nov. 2015 (although it was 55.8% in July 2013).

Spain had 6,000 people living in slavery according to the Walk Free Foundation's 2013 Global Slavery Index.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

Trade in US$1m.:

	2004	2005	2006	2007	2008
Imports c.i.f.	257,672	287,610	326,046	382,651	417,049
Exports f.o.b.	182,156	191,021	213,350	246,752	277,695

In 2004 chemicals, manufactured goods classified chiefly by material and miscellaneous manufactured articles accounted for 41.7% of imports and 43.4% of exports; machinery and transport equipment 37.7% of imports and 40.3% of exports; food, live animals, beverages and tobacco 8.4% of imports and 12.2% of exports; mineral fuels, lubricants and related materials 8.8% of imports and 1.1% of exports; inedible crude materials (except fuels), and animal and vegetable oil and fats 3.4% of imports and 3.0% of exports.

Leading import sources in 2004 were Germany (16.1%), France (15.2%), Italy (9.1%), United Kingdom (6.1%), Netherlands (4.1%); leading export markets in 2004 were: France (19.3%), Germany (11.7%), Portugal (9.4%), Italy (9.0%), United Kingdom (9.0%). In 2004 the EU accounted for 62.2% of Spain's imports and 70.0% of exports.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

In 2007 the total length of roads was 667,064; the network included 13,014 km of motorways, 12,832 km of highways/national roads and 140,165 km of secondary roads. In 2003 road transport totalled 397,117m. passenger-km; freight transport totalled 132,868m. tonne-km in 2003. Number of passenger cars in use (2007), 21,760,200; lorries and vans, 5,140,600; buses and coaches, 61,000; motorcycles and mopeds, 2,311,300. In 2007, 3,823 persons were killed in road accidents (5,604 in 1997).

Rail

The total length of the state railways in 2011 was 15,680 km, mostly broad (1,668 mm) gauge (9,488 km electrified). The state railway system was divided in two in 2005; Administrador de Infraestructuras Ferroviarias (ADIF) now manages the infrastructure and Renfe Operadora runs train operations. There is an ever-expanding high-speed standard gauge (1,435 mm) network, totalling 3,100 km in 2013. Only China has a longer high-speed rail network. The first high-speed line, from Madrid to Seville, opened in 1992. It was extended northwards from Madrid initially to Lleida, with passenger services beginning in 2003, and further to Tarragona (2006), Barcelona (2008) and the border with France (2013). High-speed lines linking Madrid with Toledo and Valladolid were opened in 2005 and 2007 respectively, and linking Madrid with Albacete and Valencia in 2010. A high-speed link from Córdoba (on the Madrid to Seville line) to Málaga was also opened in 2007, as was one linking La Coruña with Ourense in 2011. Passenger-km travelled in 2011 came to 22.7bn. and freight tonne-km to 8.0bn. There are metros in Madrid (287 km), Valencia (152 km), Barcelona (105 km), Bilbao (38 km), Seville (18 km) and Palma de Mallorca (7 km).

In 2003 the construction of two 38 km-long rail tunnels under the Straits of Gibraltar was agreed in principle with Morocco. However, as of 2015 there were still no firm plans to begin the project.

Civil Aviation

Spain's 15 busiest airports by passenger traffic in 2013 were: Madrid (Barajas), Barcelona (El Prat), Palma de Mallorca, Málaga, Gran Canaria, Alicante, Tenerife (South), Ibiza, Lanzarote, Valencia, Fuerteventura, Bilbao, Seville, Tenerife (North) and Girona. A small airport in Seo de Urgel serves Andorra and is 12 km from the border. Madrid (Barajas) handled 39,735,618 passengers in 2013, Barcelona (El Prat) 35,216,828 and Palma de Mallorca 22,768,032. Madrid (Barajas) is the busiest airport by cargo traffic, handling 366,969 tonnes of freight and mail in 2013, ahead of Barcelona (El Prat) with 98,087 tonnes and Zaragoza with 71,565 tonnes. The former national carrier Iberia Airlines completed its privatization process in April 2001, when shares were listed for the first time on the stock exchange. In April 2010 it signed a deal with British Airways to merge and create a new company called International Airlines Group, which was founded in Jan. 2011. However, both carriers still operate under their own brands. Of other airlines, the largest are the low-cost carrier

Vueling Airlines and Air Europa. Services are also provided by about 70 foreign airlines. In 2005 Iberia carried 27.4m. passengers (12.0m. on international flights); passenger-km totalled 49.0bn.

Shipping

In Jan. 2009 there were 184 ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 2.39m. GT. Of the 184 vessels registered, 63 were passenger ships, 49 general cargo ships, 29 oil tankers, 20 container ships, 11 liquid gas tankers, nine bulk carriers and three chemical tankers. The Spanish-controlled fleet comprised 259 vessels of 1,000 GT or over in Jan. 2009, of which 128 were under the Spanish flag and 131 under foreign flags. The leading ports are Algeciras (76,884,000 tonnes of cargo in 2011), Barcelona, Bilbao, Cartagena, Las Palmas de Gran Canaria, Santa Cruz de Tenerife, Tarragona and Valencia.

Telecommunications

In 2013 there were 19,384,000 main (fixed) telephone lines. In the same year mobile phone subscriptions numbered 50,159,000 (1,068.9 per 1,000 persons). The government disposed of its remaining 21% stake in Telefónica in 1997, bringing 1.4m. shareholders into the company's equity base. A second operator, Retevisión, accounts for 3% of the domestic market, which was wholly deregulated in 1998. The mobile phone business was deregulated in 1995; the leading mobile network operators are Movistar, Vodafone, Orange and Yoigo.

In 2013 an estimated 76.2% of the population were internet users. The fixed broadband penetration rate stood at 23.4 subscribers per 100 inhabitants in Dec. 2010. In March 2012 there were 15.7m. Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

Justice is administered by Tribunals and Courts, which jointly form the Judicial Power. Judges and magistrates cannot be removed, suspended or transferred except as set forth by law. The constitution of 1978 established the General Council of the Judicial Power, consisting of a President and 20 magistrates, judges, attorneys and lawyers, governing the Judicial Power in full independence from the state's legislative and executive organs. Its members are appointed by the Cortes Generales. Its President is that of the Supreme Court (Tribunal Supremo), who is appointed by the monarch on the proposal of the General Council of the Judicial.

The Judicature is composed of the Supreme Court; 17 Higher Courts of Justice, one for each autonomous community; 52 Provincial High Courts; Courts of First Instance; Courts of Judicial Proceedings, not passing sentences; and Penal Courts, passing sentences.

The Supreme Court consists of a President, and various judges distributed among seven chambers: one for civil matters, three for administrative purposes, one for criminal trials, one for social matters and one for military cases. The Supreme Court has disciplinary faculties; is court of appeal in all criminal trials; for administrative purposes decides in first and second instance disputes arising between private individuals and the State; and in social matters makes final decisions.

A new penal code came into force in May 1996, replacing the code of 1848. It provides for a maximum of 30 years imprisonment in specified exceptional cases, with a normal maximum of 20 years. Sanctions with a rehabilitative intent include fines adjusted to means, community service and weekend imprisonment. The death penalty was abolished by the 1978 constitution. The prison population in Aug. 2013 was 68,220 (147 per 100,000 of national population). In 2012, 2,268,900 crimes were recorded by the police (2,285,500 in 2011). A jury system commenced operating in Nov. 1995 in criminal cases (first trials in May 1996). Juries consist of nine members. In 2015 the World Justice Project Rule of Law Index, which provides data on how the rule of law is experienced by the general public across eight categories, ranked Spain 26th of 102 countries for criminal justice and 24th for civil justice.

A juvenile criminal law of 1995 lays emphasis on rehabilitation. It raised the age of responsibility from 12 to 14 years. Criminal conduct on the part of children under 14 is a matter for legal protection and custody. 14- and 15-year-olds are classified as 'minors'; 16- and 17-year-olds as 'young persons'; and the legal majority for criminal offences is set at 18 years. Persons up to the age of 21 may, at the courts' discretion, be dealt with as juveniles.

The Audiencia Nacional deals with terrorism, monetary offences and drug-trafficking where more than one province is involved. Its president is appointed by the General Council of the Judicial Power.

There is an Ombudsman (Defensor del Pueblo), who is elected for a five-year term (currently Soledad Becerril; b. 1944).

Education

In 1991 the General Regulation of the Educational System Act came into force. This Act gradually extends the school-leaving age to 16 years and determines the following levels of education: infants (3–5 years of age), primary (6–11), secondary (12–15) and baccalaureate or vocational and technical (16–17). Primary and secondary levels of education are now compulsory and free. Religious instruction is optional.

In Sept. 1997 a joint declaration with trade unions, parents' and schools' associations was signed in support of a new finance law guaranteeing that spending on education will reach 6% of GDP within five years, thus protecting it from changes in the political sphere. In 2006 public expenditure on education came to 4.4% of GNI and 11.1% of total government spending.

A new compulsory secondary education programme has replaced the Basic General Education programme which was in force since 1970. In addition, university entrance exams underwent reform in 1997, resulting in greater emphasis now being placed on the teaching of Humanities at secondary level.

In 2004–05 pre-primary education (under six years) was undertaken by 1,419,000 pupils; primary or basic education (6–14 years): 2,495,000 pupils. In 2008–09 there were 153,000 teaching staff in pre-primary and 213,000 teachers in primary schools. Secondary education (14–17 years), including high schools and technical schools, was conducted at 6,276 schools, with 3,054,000 pupils and 167,000 teachers in 2004–05.

In 2011 there were 76 universities: 50 public state universities and 26 private universities (including Catholic establishments). In 2004–05 there were 1,331,000 students at state universities; 132,000 at private universities.

The adult literacy rate is at least 99%.

Health

In 2009 there were 219,031 doctors, 63,337 pharmacists, 26,725 dentists and stomatologists, and 255,445 graduate nurses. Number of hospitals (2009), 770, with 146,310 beds. In 2012 Spain spent 8.9% of its GDP on health, with public spending accounting for 71.7% of total expenditure on health and private spending 28.3%.

Welfare

The social security budget was €82,425,871,000 in 2004, including €66.1bn. for pensions, €5.3bn. for temporary incapacity, €1.4bn. for health and €620m. for social services. The minimum retirement pension in 2015 was €7,851.20 per year, made in 14 payments.

In 2003 the system of contributions to the social security and employment scheme was: for pensions, sickness, invalidity, maternity and children, a contribution of 28.3% of the basic wage (23.6% paid by the employer, 4.7% by the employee); for unemployment benefit, a contribution of 7.55% (6.0% paid by the employer, 1.55% by the employee). There are also minor contributions for a Fund of Guaranteed Salaries, working accidents and professional sicknesses, and for vocational training.

RELIGION

There is no official religion. In 2010 Roman Catholicism was the religion of 75·2% of the population according to estimates by the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life. In Feb. 2016 there were 11 cardinals. There are 70 dioceses and archdioceses including the archdiocese of Toledo, where the Primate resides. The Pew Research Center estimated that 2·1% of the population were Muslims, 2·0% were Orthodox Christians and 19·0% did not have any religious affiliation. While Spain is not traditionally an Orthodox country, numbers began to grow in the early 1990s when there was an influx of migrant workers from Eastern Europe (particularly from Romania).

CULTURE

San Sebastián is one of two European Capitals of Culture for 2016. The title attracts large European Union grants.

World Heritage Sites

There are 44 UNESCO sites in Spain: the works of Antoni Gaudí in and around Barcelona (inscribed in 1984 and 2005), Burgos Cathedral (1984), Historic Centre of Córdoba (1984 and 1994), Alhambra, Generalife and Albayzín, Granada (1984 and 1994), Monastery and site of the Escorial, Madrid (1984), Altamira Cave (1985 and 2008), Old Town of Segovia and its Aqueduct (1985), Monuments of Oviedo and the Kingdom of the Asturias (1985 and 1998), Santiago de Compostela (Old Town) (1985), Old Town of Ávila, with its Extra-Muros churches (1985 and 2007), Mudéjar Architecture of Aragón (1986 and 2001), Historic City of Toledo (1986), Garajonay National Park (1986), Old Town of Cáceres (1986), Cathedral, Alcazar and Archivo de Indias in Seville (1987), Old City of Salamanca (1988), Poblet Monastery (1991), Archaeological Ensemble of Mérida (1993), Royal Monastery of Santa María de Guadalupe (1993), Route of Santiago de Compostela (1993 and 2015), Doñana National Park (1994 and 2005), Historic Walled Town of Cuenca (1996), La Lonja de la Seda de Valencia (1996), Las Médulas (1997), the Palau de la Música Catalana and the Hospital de Sant Pau, Barcelona (1997 and 2008), San Millán Yuso and Suso Monasteries (1997), University and Historic Precinct of Alcalá de Henares (1998), Rock-Art of the Mediterranean Basin on the Iberian Peninsula (1998), Ibiza, Biodiversity and Culture (1999), San Cristóbal de La Laguna (1999), the Archaeological Ensemble of Tàrraco (2000), the Palmeral of Elche (2000), the Roman Walls of Lugo (2000), Catalan Romanesque Churches of the Vall de Boí (2000), Archaeological Site of Atapuerca (2000), Aranjuez Cultural Landscape (2001), Renaissance monumental ensembles of Úbeda and Baeza (2003), Vizcaya Bridge (2006), Teide National Park, Tenerife (2007), the Tower of Hercules, La Coruña (2009) and the Cultural Landscape of the Serra de Tramuntana (2011).

Spain shares the Pyrénées—Mount Perdu (1997 and 1999) with France, the Prehistoric Rock Art Sites in the Côa Valley and Siega Verde (1998) with Portugal and Heritage of Mercury: Almadén and Idríja (2012) with Slovenia.

Press

In 2014 there were 110 paid-for daily newspapers with a total daily circulation of 2·35m. copies. The main paid-for titles are El País (average daily circulation 260,000 in 2014) and El Mundo (150,000), along with the dedicated sports papers Marca (172,000) and As (149,000). The leading free paper, 20 Minutos, has a much larger circulation than the leading paid-for dailies. All of the paid-for dailies had online editions in 2014.

In 2009, 96,955 printed books were published.

Tourism

In 2013 Spain was behind only France and the USA in the number of international tourist arrivals, and behind only the USA for tourism receipts. In 2013, 60·7m. tourists visited Spain; receipts for 2013 amounted to US$62·6bn. In 2013 most tourists were from the UK (14·3m.), followed by Germany (9·9m.), France (9·5m.) and Italy (3·2m.). The main destinations within Spain were Catalonia (15·6m.), the Balearics (11·1m.), the Canary Islands (10·6m.) and Andalucía (7·9m.).

Festivals

Religious Festivals: Epiphany (6 Jan.), the Feast of the Assumption (15 Aug.), All Saints Day (1 Nov.) and Immaculate Conception (8 Dec.) are all public holidays. Cultural Festivals: Day of Andalucía (28 Feb.), the Feast of San José in Valencia (19 March) is the culmination of a 13-day festival; the Festival of the Sardine in Murcia is an end of Easter parade in which a huge papier mâché sardine is burned; Feria de Abril is a major festival in Seville at the end of April featuring flamenco dancing and bull-fighting; the San Fermín Festival, which takes place in mid-July, is most famous for the running of the bulls in the streets of Pamplona; La Tomatina, a battle of revellers armed with 50 tonnes of tomatoes, takes place on the last Wednesday in Aug. and is the highlight of the annual fiesta in Buñol, Valencia; National Day of Catalonia (11 Sept.); Spanish National Day (12 Oct.). The largest rock and pop music festivals are Festival Arte-Nativo Viña Rock in Villarrobledo (April), Primavera Sound in Barcelona (May), Sónar in Barcelona (June), Bilbao BBK Live (July) and Benicàssim International Festival (July).

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Archaeological evidence suggests Sri Lanka has been inhabited since at least the Mesolithic era 34,000 years ago. Its recorded history begins in 483 BC, when, according to the Sinhalese chronicle Mahavamsa, several hundred men led by Vijaya, a prince from Bengal, reached the island. Anuradhapura was founded in 377 BC, becoming the principal settlement. Introduced in 250 BC by the Indian Emperor, Ashoka, Buddhism was gradually adopted, becoming central to the developing Sinhalese culture even while its influence in India declined. South Indian Chola kings controlled Anuradhapura in the second century BC until King Dutugemunu wrested control in 161 BC.

A spate of attacks from south India in the 8th century AD prompted King Aggabodhi IV to move Sri Lanka's seat of government to Polonnaruwa. A Chola army under Rajarja I then destroyed Anuradhapura in 993, although Sinhalese control was re-established in 1070. Trade with southeast Asia flourished in the 12th century under Parakramabahu I and Sinhalese civilization reached its height under Nissanka Mala (1187-96), the last Polonnaruwa king to rule the whole island. During the 13th century a Tamil kingdom was established in the northeast, centred on Jaffna. The seat of Sinhalese power gradually shifted to the southwest, where coastal provinces thrived on the spice trade with Arab merchants.

The arrival of Portuguese mariners in 1505 heralded a new era of European influence, initially centred in the southwest before other coastal provinces, including Jaffna, came under Portuguese rule from 1600. Dutch seafarers had meanwhile established a presence from the 1590s, and gradually took control of Portuguese forts and Sri Lanka's maritime regions from 1658. In 1670 the Dutch East Indian Company (VOC) declared a monopoly over exports including elephants and pearls and imports such as cotton. Dutch power in Asia subsequently waned as its possessions came under attack from British and French forces. In 1796 Colombo, Trincomalee, Jaffna and Kalpitya surrendered to British rule, with control initially routed through Madras in India. In 1802 a separate colony (Ceylon) under the British Crown was constituted. Although an attempt to capture Kandy in 1803 failed, the province was later annexed to British Ceylon under the Kandyan Convention of 1815.

Ceylon was then unified under a single administration for the first time in 400 years. As in other British colonies, the education system created an English-speaking elite as ethnic and caste rivalries continued. Nationalist sentiment gained ground after the First World War and internal self-government under a directly elected State Council was granted in 1931. Ceylon's economy was hit hard in the 1930s, prompting demands for full independence. This followed on 4 Feb. 1948 with dominion status in the British Commonwealth.

In 1956 Solomon Bandaranaike became prime minister at the head of the People's United Front, advocating neutrality and the promotion of Sinhalese national culture. Tamil demands for official recognition of their language and a separate state under a federal system caused riots in 1958. Bandaranaike was assassinated in Sept. 1959. His widow, Sirimavo Bandaranaike, succeeded him at the head of an increasingly left-wing government. In May 1972 Ceylon became a republic and adopted the name Sri Lanka.

In July 1977 the United National Party (dominant from 1948 until 1956) returned to power and in 1978 a new constitution set up a presidential system. The problem of communal unrest remained unsolved and Tamil separatists were active. In 1983 Tamil United Liberation Front members of parliament were asked to renounce their objective for a separate Tamil state in the north and the east of the country. They refused and withdrew from parliament. Militant Tamils then began armed action that developed into civil war. President Ranasinghe Premadasa was assassinated on 1 May 1993.

A ceasefire was signed on 3 Jan. 1995 but fighting broke out again in April. The Tamil stronghold of Jaffna in the far north of the country was captured by government forces in Dec. 1995 and by mid-1997 was under government control. In April 2000 the Tamil Tigers captured a military garrison at Elephant Pass, the isthmus that links Jaffna to the rest of Sri Lanka, threatening a recapture of the Jaffna peninsula. On 22 Feb. 2002 the government and Tamil Tiger leaders agreed to an internationally-monitored ceasefire, paving the way to the first full-scale peace talks for seven years. An estimated 61,000 people had died during the previous 19 years of conflict. In late 2002 the Tamil Tigers abandoned their ambitions for a separate state, settling instead for regional autonomy.

On 26 Dec. 2004 Sri Lanka, along with a number of other south Asian countries, was hit by a devastating tsunami. The death toll in Sri Lanka was put at 35,000.

A series of incidents in early 2006 brought the country back to the brink of civil war. Fighting intensified throughout the year, with the government claiming success in the east of the country. After failed peace talks in Geneva in Oct. 2006, the government withdrew from the 2002 ceasefire agreement in Jan. 2008. In early 2009 Sri Lankan military forces launched a major offensive on the Tamil Tigers and on 19 May 2009 President Mahinda Rajapaksa formally declared an end to hostilities. The UN estimated that around 7,000 Tamil civilians were killed in the 2009 military action, with some 135,000 displaced.

After a period of relative stability, in Aug. 2011 the government lifted a state of emergency in place since Aug. 2005.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Sri Lanka is an island in the Indian Ocean, south of the Indian peninsula from which it is separated by the Palk Strait. On 28 June 1974 the frontier between India and Sri Lanka in the Palk Strait was redefined, giving to Sri Lanka the island of Kachchativu.

Sri Lanka has the third oldest population in Asia, after Japan and Singapore, thanks largely to relatively good health and a low fertility rate.

CLIMATE

Sri Lanka, which has an equatorial climate, is affected by the North-east Monsoon (Dec. to Feb.), the South-west Monsoon (May to July) and two inter-monsoons (March to April and Aug. to Nov.). Rainfall is heaviest in the southwest highlands while the northwest and southeast are relatively dry. Colombo, Jan. 79–9°F (26–6°C), July 81–7°F (27–6°C). Annual rainfall 95.4" (2,424 mm). Trincomalee, Jan. 78–8°F (26°C), July 86–2°F (30–1°C). Annual rainfall 62.2" (1,580 mm). Kandy, Jan. 73–9°F (23–3°C), July 76–1°F (24–5°C). Annual rainfall 72.4" (1,840 mm). Nuwara Eliya, Jan. 58–5°F (14–7°C), July 60–3°F (15–7°C). Annual rainfall 75" (1,905 mm).

On 26 Dec. 2004 an undersea earthquake centred off the Indonesian island of Sumatra caused a huge tsunami that flooded large areas along the southern and eastern coasts of Sri Lanka resulting in 35,000 deaths. In total there were more than 225,000 deaths in 14 countries.

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

A new constitution for the Democratic Socialist Republic of Sri Lanka was promulgated on 7 Sept. 1978.

The executive President is directly elected for a six-year term renewable once.

Parliament consists of one chamber, composed of 225 members (196 elected and 29 from the National List). Election is by proportional representation by universal suffrage at 18 years. The term of Parliament is six years. The Prime Minister and other Ministers, who must be members of Parliament, are appointed by the President.

National Anthem

'Sri Lanka Matha, Apa Sri Lanka' ('Mother Sri Lanka, thee Sri Lanka'); words and tune by A. Samarakone. There is a Tamil version, 'Sri Lanka thaaya, nam Sri Lanka'; words anonymous.

CURRENT LEADERS

Maithripala Sirisena

Position

President

Introduction

Maithripala Sirisena became president on 9 Jan. 2015 after defeating incumbent Mahinda Rajapaksa. Sirisena won the support of voters disillusioned by ongoing sectarian strife and lack of economic progress. He has vowed to serve only a single term in office.

Early Life

Sirisena was born on 3 Sept. 1951 and grew up in Polonnaruwa. In 1967 he joined the youth wing of the Sri Lanka Freedom Party (SLFP). Four years later he received a 15-month prison sentence for alleged involvement in a Marxist insurrection.

In 1978 he entered professional politics, and became SLFP secretary in Polonnaruwa a year later. Also in 1979 he received another prison term for his political activities. In 1980 he graduated in political science from Russia's Maxim Gorky Academy. Sirisena entered Sri Lanka's parliament as member for the Polonnaruwa District in 1989.

He became a minister in 1997, in charge of Mahaweli development and parliamentary affairs, and in 2001 was named SLFP general secretary. Three years later he joined with Janatha Vimukthi Peramuna to form the United People's Freedom Alliance (UPFA), which subsequently formed the government. Sirisena was minister of Mahaweli, River Basin and Rajarata development, and also leader of the house. He later served variously as minister of agriculture, irrigation, environment and health. He also had five spells as acting minister of defence, including during the final days of the civil war in 2009.

He announced he would contest the presidential election of Jan. 2015 in opposition to the authoritarian incumbent SLFP president, Mahinda Rajapaksa. Sirisena claimed he 'could not stay any more with a leader who had plundered the country, government, and national wealth', and fought the election for the New Democratic Front. In a run-off on 8 Jan. 2015 he received 51.3% of the vote to 47.6% for Rajapaksa.

Career in Office

Sirisena was sworn in a day later and appointed Ranil Wickremesinghe as premier. Pledging to serve only a single term, Sirisena promised to investigate alleged crimes during the civil war, rein in presidential powers, fight corruption and guarantee press freedom. He also had to maintain his disparate coalition and distance himself from the failings of the previous regime, of which he had been a part.

In May 2015 he secured the introduction of constitutional changes curtailing presidential powers and reimposing a two-term limit. Also, despite opposition from legislators loyal to Rajapaksa, he dissolved parliament in June in preparation for fresh elections in Aug., which were won by the United National Front for Good Governance. In Jan. 2016 he underlined the need for further constitutional reforms aimed at achieving reconciliation with the minority Tamil community.

Ranil Wickremesinghe

Position

Prime Minister

Introduction

Ranil Wickremesinghe, the leader of the United National Party (UNP), was returned to office as prime minister for a third term in Jan. 2015, having served two previous terms from May 1993–Aug. 1994 and from Dec. 2001–April 2004. He had also been narrowly defeated by Mahinda Rajapaksa of the Sri Lanka Freedom Party in presidential elections in Nov. 2005.

Early Life

Ranil Wickremesinghe was born on 24 March 1949 in Colombo, the son of a press magnate. His paternal grandfather was a high-ranking government official and his uncle, J. R. Jayawardene, became Sri Lanka's first executive president in 1978.

After secondary education, Wickremesinghe studied law and qualified as an attorney of the Supreme Court of Sri Lanka in 1972. In 1977 he entered parliament after successfully contesting a constituency in the Gampaha District. Despite his youth and political inexperience he was appointed deputy minister for foreign affairs in Jayawardene's government. In 1978 he joined the cabinet as minister of youth affairs and employment and took on additional responsibility as minister of education in 1980.

In 1989, following the election of Ranasinghe Premadasa to the presidency, Wickremesinghe became the leader of the house in parliament and minister of industries. After the assassination of Premadasa in May 1993, a new UNP government was formed with Dingiri Wijetunge as president and Wickremesinghe, aged 44, as the country's youngest ever prime minister.

Career in Office

Although his first period in office was only to last for 16 months, he advanced export-oriented trade liberalization and kick-started economic growth for the ensuing decade. Ousted from power in Aug. 1994 with the UNP's electoral defeat, he became party leader in Nov. after the assassination of former leaders Premadasa and Gamini Dissanayake by the Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam (LTTE). Wickremesinghe fought off challengers while reining in dissident factions and also sought to improve the party's image by appointing a disciplinary commission to combat corruption.

His early co-operation with the newly-formed People's Alliance government won him credit as a statesman, although his stance hardened after what he saw as a series of political witch-hunts and he opposed the government's plans for devolution to the northeastern Tamil-occupied areas. Talks launched in 2000 with President Chandrika Kumaratunga to agree a new constitution also fell through when Wickremesinghe withdrew support at a late stage. One year earlier, he had lost out in presidential elections to Kumaratunga, and from that time the balance of presidential and parliamentary powers became a contentious political issue.

Wickremesinghe returned to office as premier when the UNF won the general elections in Dec. 2001 as the largest parliamentary group. The elections were undermined by violence and the alleged prevention by the army of 80,000 people in the LTTE-held northeast from accessing balloting posts in government-held areas. International observers nevertheless approved the polls and Wickremesinghe was sworn in as prime minister, maintaining his role as leader of the UNP. Although the constitution previously allowed the president jurisdiction over the formation of the government, Wickremesinghe successfully pressured Kumaratunga to allow him to name his own cabinet. Kumaratunga abrogated control over the ministries of defence and finance but remained commander-in-chief of defence forces.

Wickremesinghe's second term focused on establishing a workable peace deal with the LTTE and revitalizing Sri Lanka's economy. In Feb. 2002 an internationally-monitored ceasefire was agreed with the LTTE, whose leader announced in April an end to suicide bombings in return for the lifting of the ban on the Tamil Tigers. Defying Kumaratunga, Wickremesinghe agreed to this, culminating in Dec. 2002 in a deal granting Tamil autonomy in return for peace. In Nov. 2003 Kumaratunga dismissed three ministers from key portfolios—defence, interior and information—without consultation. Wickremesinghe accused her of attempting to undermine the peace process with the LTTE, rejecting her offer later that month to share defence responsibilities and also attacking her extension of her term of office by a year.

Relations between the two remained frosty and in Feb. 2004 Kumaratunga dissolved parliament. In the April elections the UPFA won 105 seats to the UNP's 82. Although the polls produced a hung parliament, Kumaratunga appointed Mahinda Rajapaksa, her own party's parliamentary leader, as prime minister. Wickremesinghe remained leader of the opposition UNP and contested the 2005 presidential election, losing to the then incumbent prime minister Rajapaksa.

In 2015 Wickremesinghe regained the premiership following presidential elections that were won by Maithripala Sirisena of the UNP-led coalition. He also assumed the policy planning, economic affairs, child, youth and cultural affairs portfolios, while pledging to promote employment, health and education and to investigate past fraud and corruption. In Jan. 2016 he presented a resolution in parliament to establish a new Constitutional Assembly and steering committee to seek public input and make recommendations for a revised constitution.

DEFENCE

Defence expenditure in 2013 totalled US$1,793m. (US$83 per capita), representing 2.8% of GDP.

As at July 2010, 1,139 personnel (including 1,035 troops and 94 police) were deployed in UN peacekeeping operations.

Army

Strength (2011), 117,900 (including 39,900 recalled reservists). In addition there were 1,100 reserves. Paramilitary forces consist of the Ministry of Defence Police (31,200, plus 30,400 reservists), the Home Guard (13,000), the National Guard (some 15,000) and an anti-guerrilla Special Task Force (3,000).

Navy

The main naval bases are at Colombo and Trincomalee. Personnel in 2011 numbered 15,000, including a reserve of about 2,400.

Air Force

The Air Force has four zonal commands: Eastern, Northern, Southern and Western. Total strength (2011) 18,000 with 31 combat-capable aircraft and 11 attack helicopters. Main attack aircraft types included Kfirs, F-7s and MiG-27s.

ECONOMY

Agriculture accounted for 12.8% of GDP in 2010, industry 29.4% and services 57.8%.

The conflict with the minority separatists, the Tamil Tigers, which lasted some 25 years, is estimated to have cost the country between 1–1.5% in growth per year.

Overview

Three decades of civil war disrupted inter-regional commerce, damaged infrastructure and weakened public finances. Nonetheless, the economy maintained growth, generating higher per capita income than neighbouring India.

In 2001 the economy contracted for the first time since independence as a result of the global slowdown, power shortages, and security and budgetary problems. With the start of the peace process in Feb. 2002, the government embarked on reforms to revive the economy, including exchange rate and trade liberalization, privatization and the introduction of VAT. In May 2009 the civil war ended, boosting economic prospects and providing renewed opportunity for reform.

The main sources of growth are domestic consumption, tourism, and textile and garment exports. Tourism arrivals increased by 46.1% year-on-year in 2010. With the exception of 2009, growth exceeded 5% every year between 2003 and 2014. The poverty rate also fell, although the economy is strained by the costs of post-conflict relief and reconstruction. In July 2009 the IMF approved a US$2.6bn. loan to help the economy weather the effects of the global financial crisis and to rebuild war-torn regions. Economic activity then picked up in 2010, recording real growth of 8.0%, and in 2014 the rate measured 7.4%.

Annual inflation was 3.3% in 2014 and at the end of that year public debt stood at 75.5% of GDP. About 44% of Sri Lankan exports go to Europe and the USA, making the economy vulnerable to declines in demand from these regions.

Currency

The unit of currency is the Sri Lankan rupee (LKR) of 100 cents. Foreign exchange reserves were US$2,236m. and gold reserves 167,000 troy oz in June 2005. Inflation was 22.4% in 2008, but more recently 6.9% in 2013 and 3.3% in 2014. Total money supply in March 2005 was Rs 208,095m.

Budget

Budgetary central government revenue and expenditure (in Rs 1bn.):

	2009	2010	2011
Revenue	725.6	834.2	949.9
Expenditure	1,013.4	1,080.7	1,167.0

Principal sources of revenue in 2011 were: taxes on goods and services, Rs 407.7bn.; taxes on international trade and transactions, Rs 158.1bn.; taxes on income, profits and capital gains, Rs 157.3bn. Main items of expenditure by economic type in 2011 were: interest, Rs 356.9bn.; compensation of employees, Rs 319.6bn.; social benefits, Rs 169.6bn.

VAT is 12%.

Performance

Real GDP growth was 6.3% in 2012, 7.3% in 2013 and 7.4% in 2014. Total GDP in 2014 was US$78.8bn.

Banking and Finance

The Central Bank of Sri Lanka is the bank of issue (Governor, Arjuna Mahendran). There are 23 commercial banks with a total asset base of Rs 1,774bn. This includes two state-owned banks, the Bank of Ceylon and People's Bank, which account for about 40% of assets, and 12 foreign banks. There are 14 specialized banks including the National Savings Bank, which in total have an asset base of Rs 356bn.

Sri Lanka's foreign debt amounted to US$20,452m. in 2010, up from US$11,372m. in 2005 and US$9,087m. in 2000. However, as a proportion of GNI it declined from 56.7% in 2000 to 47.2% in 2005 and further to 41.8% in 2010.

There is a stock exchange in Colombo.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2011 were the equivalent of 0.7 tonnes per capita.

Electricity

Installed capacity (2011), 3.1m. kW. Production, 2011, 11.6bn. kWh (40% hydro-electric). Consumption per capita in 2011 was 554 kWh.

Oil and Gas

There are plans for a huge oil refinery as part of the Hambantota port development. It is expected to be completed by 2023.

Minerals

Gems are among the chief minerals mined and exported (particularly sapphires). Output of principal products: sapphires (2003), 773,547 carats; phosphate rock (2003), 41,357 tonnes; quartzite (2004), 18,139 tonnes; ilmenite (2004), 8,115 tonnes. Salt extraction is the oldest industry; the method is the solar evaporation of sea-water. Production, 2003, 78,713 tonnes.

Agriculture

There were approximately 970,000 ha. of arable land and 950,000 ha. of permanent crops in 2007. In 2006, 32.2% of the economically active population were engaged in agriculture. Main crops in 2003 (in 1,000 tonnes): rice, 3,071; coconuts, 1,850; sugarcane, 956; bananas and plantains, 610; tea, 303; cassava, 228; pumpkins and squash, 170. Sri Lanka ranks third in the world for tea production, behind India and China.

Livestock in 2003: 1,139,000 cattle; 635,000 buffaloes; 490,000 goats; 10m. chickens.

Forestry

The area under forests in 2010 was 1.86m. ha., or 29% of the land area. Of the total area under forests 9% was primary forest in 2010, 81% other naturally regenerated forest and 10% planted forest. In 2011, 5.75m. cu. metres of roundwood were cut.

Fisheries

Total catch in 2010 was 436,355 tonnes (of which 383,945 tonnes were from marine waters and 52,410 tonnes from inland waters).

INDUSTRY

The main industries are the processing of rubber, tea, coconuts and other agricultural commodities, tobacco, textiles, clothing and leather goods, chemicals, plastics, cement and petroleum refining. Industrial production rose by 10.3% in 2011.

Labour

The labour force in 2013 was 8,451,000 (7,914,000 in 2003). 59.4% of the population aged 15–64 was economically active in 2013. In the same year 4.4% of the population was unemployed.

Sri Lanka had 19,000 people living in slavery according to the Walk Free Foundation's 2013 Global Slavery Index.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

Trade in US$1m.:

	2005	2006	2007	2008	2009
Imports c.i.f.	8,307	9,773	11,386	13,629	9,432
Exports f.o.b.	6,160	6,760	7,661	8,177	7,122

Principal imports in 2009: petroleum and petroleum products, 18.5%; machinery and transport equipment, 16.6%; textile yarn, fabrics and finished articles, 15.2%; food and livestock, 14.2%. Principal exports in 2009: clothing and apparel, 45.9%; tea, 16.5%; diamonds and other precious and semi-precious stones, 5.1%; machinery and transport equipment, 4.3%;

In 2009 the leading import suppliers were India (18.0%), Singapore (11.7%), China (9.3%), Iran (9.0%) and Hong Kong (5.5%). The leading export markets in 2009 were the USA (22.3%), UK (14.4%), Italy (6.1%), Belgium (5.2%) and Germany (4.9%).

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

In 2006 the road network totalled 91,907 km in length, including 11,716 km of national roads and 15,532 km of secondary roads. Number of motor vehicles, 2006, 2,269,575, comprising 338,608 passenger cars, 77,233 buses and coaches, 431,594 trucks and vans and 1,422,140 motorcycles and mopeds. There were 2,239 fatalities in road accidents in 2006.

Rail

In 2007 there were 1,463 km of railway (1,676 mm gauge). Passenger-km travelled in 2007 came to 4.77bn. and freight tonne-km to 135m.

Civil Aviation

There is an international airport at Colombo (Bandaranaike). The national carrier is SriLankan Airlines, which has been part-owned and managed by Emirates since 1998. Mihin Lanka, a low-cost airline fully owned and funded by the government, was launched in 2007. In 2006 SriLankan Airlines carried 2,900,068 passengers (all on international flights). Colombo handled 4,740,187 passengers and 169,038 tonnes of freight in 2006.

Shipping

In Jan. 2009 there were 36 ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 143,000 GT. Colombo is a modern container port; Galle and Trincomalee are natural harbours. The first of three phases of a new port at Hambantota was inaugurated in Nov. 2010. On completion it is set to be Sri Lanka's largest port.

Telecommunications

In Dec. 2012 there were 3,449,000 main (fixed) telephone lines; mobile phone subscriptions numbered 20,315,000 in 2013 (95.5 per 100 persons). In 2013 an estimated 21.9% of the population were internet users. In March 2012 there were 1.2m. Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The systems of law which are valid are Roman-Dutch, English, Tesawalamai, Islamic and Kandyan.

Kandyan law applies in matters relating to inheritance, matrimonial rights and donations; Tesawalamai law applies in Jaffna as above and in sales of land. Islamic law is applied to all Muslims in respect of succession, donations, marriage, divorce and maintenance. These customary and religious laws have been modified by local enactments.

The courts of original jurisdiction are the High Court, Provincial Courts, District Courts, Magistrates' Courts and Primary Courts. District Courts have unlimited civil jurisdiction. The Magistrates' Courts exercise criminal jurisdiction. The Primary Courts exercise civil jurisdiction in petty disputes and criminal jurisdiction in respect of certain offences.

The Constitution of 1978 provided for the establishment of two superior courts, the Supreme Court and the Court of Appeal.

The Supreme Court is the highest and final superior court of record and exercises jurisdiction in respect of constitutional matters, jurisdiction for the protection of fundamental rights, final appellate jurisdiction in election petitions and jurisdiction in respect of any breach of the privileges of Parliament. The Court of Appeal has appellate jurisdiction to correct all errors in fact or law committed by any court, tribunal or institution.

The population in penal institutions in Sept. 2013 was 27,000 (132 per 100,000 of national population). The death penalty, last used in 1976, was reactivated in Nov. 2004 after a 28-year moratorium. In 2015 the World Justice Project Rule of Law Index, which provides data on how the rule of law is experienced by the general public across eight categories, ranked Sri Lanka 46th of 102 countries for criminal justice and 69th for civil justice.

Education

Education is free and is compulsory from age five to 14 years. The literacy rate in 2008 was 91%. Sri Lanka's rate compares very favourably with the rates of 65% in India and 54% in Pakistan.

In 2008 there were 9,335 schools with primary classes and 69,499 primary teachers for 1,626,285 pupils. The number of pupils in secondary classes in 2008 was 1,897,350, with 98,582 teachers. There were 401,666 students and 21,715 teachers in advanced level classes in 2008. There are 16 universities, including the Open University (distance) and the Buddhist and Pali University. In 2008, excluding at the two aforementioned universities, there were 66,675 undergraduates enrolled.

Health

In 2005 there were 609 hospitals and 413 central dispensaries. The hospitals had 60,237 beds. There were 9,290 physicians and 16,517 nurses in 2002; and 954 dentists, 907 pharmacists and 7,267 midwives in 2005. Total state budget expenditure on health, 2005, Rs 29,805m.

Welfare

To qualify for an old-age pension an individual must be above the age of 55 for men or 50 for women. However, a grant is payable at any age if the person is emigrating permanently. Old-age benefits are made up of a lump sum equal to total employee and employer contributions, plus interest.

The family allowances programme is being implemented in stages. Families earning below Rs 1,000 a month are entitled to Rs 100–Rs 1,000 a month benefit, depending on family size and income.

RELIGION

In 2012 the population was 70% Buddhist, 13% Hindu, 10% Muslim and 6% Roman Catholic. In Feb. 2016 there was one Roman Catholic cardinal.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

Sri Lanka has eight sites on the UNESCO World Heritage List: Sacred City of Anuradhapura (inscribed on the list in 1982); Ancient City of Polonnaruwa (1982); Ancient City of Sigiriya (1982); Sinharaja Forest Reserve (1988); Sacred City of Kandy (1988); Old Town of Galle and its Fortifications (1988); the Golden Temple of Dambulla (1991); and the Central Highlands (2010).

Press

In 2011 there were 17 paid-for daily newspapers with a combined circulation of 590,000. There were five newspaper online editions in 2011.

Tourism

In 2010 there were a record 654,000 foreign tourists, bringing revenue of US$1,044m. The previous best year for tourist arrivals was 2004, the year of the Asian tsunami.

Festivals

Sri Lanka has an array of festivals principally centred on the Buddhist, Hindu, Muslim and Christian cultures. These include: Buddhist full moon celebrations (Poya Day), with the main festivals occurring in Jan., May, June, July/Aug. and Dec.; Diwali (the Hindu Festival of Lights, held in Oct./Nov.); Milad-un-Nabi (Dec.); and Christmas. New Year is also widely celebrated by both the Sinhalese and Tamil ethnic groups.

SUDAN

Kush: Nobatia in the north and Maqurrah and 'Alwah in the south, near modern Khartoum. Egypt was invaded by Arabs in 639 and came under Muslim rule. Raiding parties moved up the Nile and absorbed Nobatia. The king of Maqurrah engineered a truce at Dunqulah with an Arab military expedition, commanded by 'Abd Allah ibn Sa'd, preserving the kingdom for a further six centuries.

In 1250 Egypt came under the control of Mamluk sultans, supported by a caste of warrior slaves. They pushed south into Nubia, bringing chaos and devastation to Maqurrah and opening it up to waves of Arab immigrants, particularly the Juhaynah people. They intermarried with the Nubians and introduced Arab Muslim culture. Alwah, to the south, retained its Christian traditions until 1500 when, weakened by Bedouin raids, it collapsed under an Arab confederation led by Abd Allah Jamma. The Arabs themselves came under attack in the region around modern Khartoum from warriors of the Funj dynasty, a kingdom that had its origins in the Blue Nile's upper reaches. The Funj established their supremacy in the Al Jazirah region by 1607 and expanded northwards under Badi II Abu Daqn later in the 17th century. It was a relatively peaceful and stable period and the teaching of Islam flourished in schools and mosques along the Nile. The Funj themselves adopted Islam but retained a number of traditional African customs and beliefs.

Egyptian Ascendancy

In 1820 Muhammad Ali, viceroy of Egypt under the Ottoman Turks, sent an army southward to conquer Sudan. The Funj kingdom collapsed and within a year Ali's forces had taken control of the Nile valley from Nubia to the Ethiopian foothills. There was initial resistance but the appointment of Ali Kurshid Agha as governor general in 1826 led to the establishment of Khartoum as the administrative capital, improvements to agriculture and the development of the trade in slaves and ivory. Ismail Pasha became viceroy of Egypt in 1863 and announced a grand scheme to modernize and control the entire Nile river system from the Mediterranean to the Great Lakes of East Africa. Ismail needed the financial help of the European powers who, in return, demanded an end to the slave trade. The British had a particular interest in Egyptian affairs following the opening of the Suez Canal in 1869. Ismail commissioned the Englishmen Samuel Baker and, later, Charles Gordon to establish Egyptian control in southern Sudan and Central Africa and to crush slavery. The controllers of the slave trade were powerful and proved hard to defeat, especially away from the Nile. In addition, there was unease among Muslims over the crusading style of the English anti-slavers. In 1879, amid rising discontent, Ismail's financial backing collapsed and his grand project was abandoned. Ismail was exiled and Gordon resigned.

Rise of the Mahdi

The power vacuum was filled by Muhammad Ahmad in 1881; he declared himself the Mahdi ('divinely guided one') and led a movement that sought an end to Egyptian (Ottoman) influence and a return to the simplicity of early Islam. By 1882 the Mahdi had garnered the support of a least 30,000 armed followers (the Ansar). They captured the town of Al Abayyid, which led to a British order for the evacuation of Egyptians and foreigners from Khartoum, where the military commander was Charles Gordon. The campaign failed disastrously: Gordon was killed by Mahdists in early 1885. The Mahdi died in the same year, but his successor, the Khalifa Abdallahi, continued to build up the Mahdist state.

In the 1890s the European powers were vying for control of Africa and the British made plans for the control of the Nile valley and the reconquest of Sudan. In a series of attacks between 1896

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

The earliest inhabitants of Sudan were Mesolithic hunter-gatherers, who lived and travelled in the region around Khartoum from as early as 30,000 BC. They had domesticated animals by 4000 BC. Cultural influences from Egypt rippled through to Nubia in north-eastern Sudan from around 3000 BC as Egypt's first dynasty moved south along the river Nile in search of construction materials and slaves. By 2000 BC it had reached as far south as the river Nile's fourth cataract, more than 700 km beyond Aswan. Egyptian-controlled Nubia was divided into Wawat in the north (centred on Aswan) and Kush in the south (based at Nepata, or the modern Marawi). When Egypt's power waned in the 11th century BC (the end of the New Kingdom) Kush, with its Egyptian and African influences, mineral resources and its position on trade routes linking the Nile to the Red Sea, became a powerful kingdom. At its height, under King Piantkhi in 750 BC, the whole of Egypt was brought under Kushite control. However, the invasion of Egypt by Assyrian forces in 671 BC forced a retreat to Nepata. From there, the kingdom of Kush continued to exert control over the middle Nile for much of the next millennium, developing a distinctive culture and language. By AD 200 Kush was in decline and was finally overthrown in 350 by the king of Aksum from the Ethiopian highlands.

Sudan was brought back into contact with the Mediterranean world in the 6th century by the arrival of Coptic Christian missionaries. They travelled south along the Nile and established churches in the three middle-Nile kingdoms that had superseded and 1898, an Anglo-Egyptian force of 25,800 men under Herbert (later Lord) Kitchener destroyed the Mahdist state. Anglo-Egyptian agreements in 1899 established a joint (condominium) government of Sudan: in theory it was administered by a governor-general, appointed by Egypt with the consent of Great Britain. In practice the governor-general, Sir Reginald Wingate, controlled the condominium government from Khartoum. Sudanese resentment over colonial rule erupted in various Mahdist uprisings but with insufficient support to pose a threat to the government. In 1911 the Sudan Plantations syndicate launched a scheme to irrigate the Al Jazirah region and establish a large cotton plantation for Britain's textile industry. The cotton crop became the mainstay of the economy.

Sudanese nationalist sentiment grew in the early 1920s when 'Ali 'Abd al Latif, inspired by Egyptian nationalists, founded the White Flag League. When Governor-General Sir Lee Stack was assassinated in 1924 in Cairo (capital of newly independent Egypt), the British ordered all Egyptian troops out of Sudan. British rule continued unchallenged until after the Second World War. The broad policy was to treat Sudan as two countries with the aim of integrating the southern provinces with their largely Christian and animist peoples with British East Africa. However, in 1948 a predominantly elective Legislative Assembly was convened for the whole territory. In the 1948 elections the Independence Front, which favoured the creation of an independent republic, gained a majority over the National Front, which aimed for union with Egypt.

Independence

Following the 1952 revolution in Egypt, Sudan became a parliamentary republic in 1956.

Sudan's democracy proved to be short-lived as the political parties became mired in internecine fighting. At the same time, a revolt raged in the south over Islamic domination. In 1958 Gen. Ibrahim Abboud led a military coup that ended the parliamentary system. In 1964, unable to improve Sudan's poor economic performance or to end the southern revolt, Abboud agreed to the re-establishment of civilian government. A coalition, headed by Muhammad Ahmad Mahjub, was weakened by factional disputes and little progress was made in solving the country's economic and social problems.

In 1969 Col. Gaafur Muhammad al-Nimeiry staged a successful coup. He banned all political parties and nationalized banks and numerous industries. The civil war was ended by an agreement between the government and the Southern Sudan Liberation Front signed in Addis Ababa in 1972. In the same year the Sudanese Socialist Union, the country's only political organization, elected a 'people's assembly' to draw up a new constitution, adopted in 1973. Nimeiry's regime was blamed for worsening economic conditions and came under Islamist attack for its support for Egypt's role in the Camp David Accords with Israel; in the late 1970s Nimeiry dismissed his cabinet and closed universities in an attempt to quell opposition.

Accelerating Violence

From the early 1980s political instability in southern Sudan worsened. Nimeiry responded by imposing Sharia law in 1983, inflaming a renewed civil war with the largely Christian and animist Sudan People's Liberation Movement (SPLM) led by John Garang. Having survived numerous earlier coup attempts, Nimeiry was overthrown in 1985. Following elections in 1986 a civilian government led by Sadiq al-Mahdi ruled until he was ousted three years later in a bloodless military coup. The new regime of Lieut.-Gen. Omar Ahmed al-Bashir strengthened ties with Libya, Iran, and Iraq, reinforced Islamic law, banned opposition parties and continued to pursue the war with the south against the backdrop of a stagnant economy and a catastrophic famine. Bashir officially became president in 1993 but significant political power was held by the National Islamic Front, a fundamentalist political organization led by Hassan al-Turabi, who became speaker of parliament. In 1999 Bashir declared a state of emergency during a power struggle with Turabi, who was eventually toppled and parliament dissolved. Turabi subsequently formed his own opposition party, the Popular National Congress, although he and other party members were arrested in early 2001. He was released in Oct. 2003, only to be rearrested in March 2004 over an alleged coup plot. He was freed again in June 2005.

In Jan. 2002 a ceasefire was declared to allow relief aid to be distributed in the drought-stricken south-central region. In July 2002 the government and the SPLM agreed to a framework for peace providing for autonomy for the south and a referendum on independence after six years. Nevertheless, hostilities continued, particularly in the Darfur region of western Sudan where conflict between local African rebels and the army and government-backed Arab militias intensified from early 2003.

Having agreed on the division of oil wealth in post-war Sudan and on further power-sharing protocols, the government and the SPLM finally signed a comprehensive peace agreement on 9 Jan. 2005. It provided for a government of national unity (headed by Bashir but including northern and southern political groups) during a six-year transition period; self-determination for the South, with a referendum on secession at the end of the transition period; a permanent ceasefire; and the disengagement of forces. In more than 20 years of civil war, over 2m. people were thought to have died and more than 4m. made refugees. The agreement was briefly undermined in July 2005 when John Garang, SPLM leader and first vice-president in the power-sharing government, was killed in an air crash, provoking clashes between southern Sudanese and northern Arabs in Khartoum. His SPLM deputy, Salva Kiir Mayardit, took over as first vice-president in Aug. The power-sharing government was formed officially in Sept. 2005 and a devolved government of southern Sudan was established in Oct.

Although the comprehensive peace agreement focused mainly on the north-south civil war, some of its provisions for power-sharing and decentralization are applicable to Darfur. However, despite ongoing peace talks and UN and other international intervention to stop the violence, the conflict has continued. The government and Arab militias have been accused of systematic abuses of human rights, crimes that the UN Security Council referred to the International Criminal Court in March 2005. The targeting of civilians in the conflict has resulted in up to 300,000 deaths and the displacement of some 2.7m. people since 2003.

A referendum on full independence for the South took place on 9–15 Jan. 2011; 98.8% of votes were cast in favour of secession. South Sudan became an independent country on 9 July 2011.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Sudan is bounded in the north by Egypt, northeast by the Red Sea, east by Eritrea and Ethiopia, south by South Sudan, southwest by the Central African Republic, west by Chad and northwest by Libya. Its area is 1,881,000 sq. km. In 2008—when present-day South Sudan was still part of Sudan—the census population was 39,154,490. In 2011, 40.8% of the population were urban.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 40.24m.

The country is administratively divided into 18 states (with capitals): Al Qadarif (Al Qadarif), Blue Nile (Al Damazin), Central Darfur (Zalingei), East Darfur (Ed Daein), Gezira (Wadi Medani), Kassala (Kassala), Khartoum (Khartoum), North Darfur (Al Fashir), North Kordufan (Al Obeid), Northern (Dongula), Red Sea (Port Sudan), River Nile (Al Damar), Sennar (Singa), South Darfur (Nyala), South Kordufan (Kadugli), West Darfur (Geneina), West Kordufan (Al Fula), White Nile (Rabak).

The capital, Khartoum, had a provisional census population of 1,410,858 in 2008. Other major cities, with 2008 provisional population, are Omdurman (1,849,659), Khartoum North (1,012,211), Nyala (492,984), Port Sudan (394,561), Al Obeid (345,126), Kassala (298,529), Wadi Medani (289,482) and Al Qadarif (269,395).

The country is mainly populated by Arab and Nubian peoples. Arabic and English are both official languages.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2009 estimates: births, 1,402,000; deaths, 382,000. Rates, 2009 estimates (per 1,000 population): birth, 9; death, 33. Infant mortality, 2010 (per 1,000 live births), 66. Expectation of life in 2013 was 63.9 years for females and 60.3 for males. Annual population growth rate, 2005–10, 2.4%. Fertility rate, 2013, 4.4 births per woman.

CLIMATE

Lying wholly within the tropics, the country has a continental climate and only the Red Sea coast experiences maritime influences. Temperatures are generally high for most of the year, with May and June the hottest months. Winters are virtually cloudless and night temperatures are consequently cool. Summer is the rainy season inland, with amounts increasing from north to south, but the northern areas are virtually a desert region. On the Red Sea coast, most rain falls in winter. Khartoum, Jan. 64°F (18.0°C), July 89°F (31.7°C). Annual rainfall 6" (157 mm). Annual rainfall 39" (968 mm). Port Sudan, Jan. 74°F (23.3°C), July 94°F (34.4°C). Annual rainfall 4" (94 mm). Wadi Halfa, Jan. 50°F (10.0°C), July 90°F (32.2°C). Annual rainfall 0.1" (2.5 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

The constitution was suspended after the 1989 coup and a 12-member Revolutionary Council then ruled. A 300-member Provisional National Assembly was appointed in Feb. 1992 as a transitional legislature pending elections. These were held in March 1996. On 26 May 1998 President Omar Hassan Ahmed al-Bashir approved a new constitution. Notably this lifted the ban on opposition political parties, although the government continued to monitor and control criticism until the constitution came legally into effect. The constitution was partially suspended in Dec. 1999.

Sudan has a bicameral legislature. There is a lower house, the 426-seat National Assembly with members directly elected, and an upper house, the Council of States, consisting of a maximum of 56 members of whom 54 are indirectly elected. Before South Sudan became independent in 2011 the National Assembly had comprised 450 members.

RECENT ELECTIONS

The first elections since the secession of South Sudan were held from 13–16 April 2015. However, they were boycotted by several of the main opposition parties who cited the government's repressive measures against civil society and the media. In presidential elections, incumbent Omar Hassan Ahmed al-Bashir was re-elected with 94.0% of votes cast against 15 other candidates.

In concurrent National Assembly elections the National Congress Party (NCP) of President Bashir won 323 of 426 seats, the original Democratic Unionist Party (DUP) 25, the DUP (led by Jalal al-Digair) 15 and other smaller parties 44. 19 seats went to independents.

CURRENT LEADERS

Field Marshal Omar Hassan Ahmed al-Bashir

Position

President

Introduction

Omar al-Bashir is one of Africa's longest-serving presidents, having seized power in 1989. He has since been re-elected four times—in 1996, 2000, 2010 and 2015—although the polls were boycotted by the main opposition groups. His rule has been characterized by civil war and genocide, particularly in the western province of Darfur. He nevertheless signed a significant peace agreement in Jan. 2005 to end the long-running insurrection in South Sudan, which heralded the territory's drive to national independence in 2011.

Early Life

Bashir was born to a family of Sudanese peasants in 1944. He went to primary school in his home village before his family moved to Khartoum, where he completed secondary education. Having joined the Sudanese air force as a teenager, he soon made the grade as an officer and was sent to a military college in Egypt. He later served with a Sudanese unit that fought against Israel alongside Egyptian forces in the 1973 war. Promotions followed quickly and by the early 1980s he was a general. His political life began with the military coup of 1989 when, together with a group of middle-ranking officers, he overthrew the elected government of Sadiq al-Mahdi and installed a Revolutionary Command Council.

Career in Office

The National Islamic Front (later renamed the National Congress Party; NCP), led by Hassan al-Turabi, supported Bashir's new regime. Influenced by Turabi, and by the campaigns in South Sudan against animist and Christian secessionist rebels, Bashir began the Islamization of Sudan and introduced Sharia law. He moved Sudan into the radical Arab camp, inviting political and economic isolation and aggravating the distress caused by instability and civil war.

In 1993 Bashir declared himself president. Long-promised elections were held in March 1996, when Bashir was elected head of state in a poll that was regarded internationally as deeply flawed. For a time Sudan provided a haven for radical Islamic refugees who included al-Qaeda's Osama bin Laden. By 1998 Sudan was regarded as a pariah state by the USA. In that year, US missiles destroyed a pharmaceutical factory in Khartoum that was suspected, wrongly as it turned out, of producing chemical weapons.

In 1999 Bashir declared a state of emergency during a power struggle with Turabi, then the speaker of parliament, who had moved to reduce the president's powers. Turabi was toppled and parliament dissolved. In Dec. 2000 Bashir was re-elected as president, although the main opposition parties again boycotted the poll.

In the wake of the 11 Sept. 2001 attacks in the USA, Bashir made an effort to gain international acceptability. However, Sudan continued to be regarded by many in the West as a rogue state, crippled by poverty and conflict, and was also cited by the United Nations for gross human rights violations.

Meanwhile, the civil war in the South continued, by this time having claimed over 2m. lives and displaced more than 4m. refugees. In Jan. 2005, after three years of talks, Bashir's government and the Sudan People's Liberation Movement (SPLM) finally signed a comprehensive peace agreement. It provided for a government of national unity (headed by Bashir but also comprising members of the NCP, the SPLM and other northern and southern political forces), self-determination for the South, a permanent ceasefire and the disengagement of forces. In July 2005 the agreement was briefly threatened when John Garang, the leader of the SPLM and first vice-president in the power-sharing government, was killed in a helicopter accident, provoking clashes between Sudanese in the south and Arab northerners. Garang was replaced as first vice-president by his deputy, Salva Kiir Mayardit, in Aug.

The formation of the national unity government was announced in Sept. 2005 and a devolved government in south Sudan was established in Oct. In Oct. 2007 the SPLM suspended its participation in the national unity administration, accusing the northern Sudanese of failing to honour the 2005 accord, but rejoined in Dec. In Jan. 2011 the results of a referendum in South Sudan on secession from the North showed an overwhelming vote in favour of self-determination. Bashir had earlier confirmed that he would accept the result, but the countdown to actual independence in July that year was marred by mutual recriminations between the North and South and violent clashes between their respective forces, particularly around the disputed oil-rich border area of Abyei. Post-independence, both sides agreed in Oct. to establish joint committees in an attempt to resolve outstanding flashpoints. However, in April 2012 Sudan's air force raided its neighbour after South Sudanese troops occupied the Abyei region and the Heglig oilfields. The United Nations threatened sanctions against both countries if they did not stop the escalating violence and return to negotiations. Bashir met the South Sudan president in Ethiopia in Sept. in an attempt to resolve the crisis, and although they concluded agreements on trade, security and a resumption of oil exports, they failed to resolve contested border issues. In Oct. 2013 the residents of Abyei voted overwhelmingly in an unofficial referendum to join South Sudan.

In addition to the civil war in the South, Bashir's regime has overseen fierce fighting in the western province of Darfur between government-backed Arab militias and local black rebel forces. The conflict escalated from 2003 despite international attempts to stop the violence, provoking a refugee and humanitarian crisis. A UN report in March 2007 accused the government of orchestrating 'gross and systematic' human rights abuses in Darfur and complained that the response of the international community had been 'inadequate and ineffective'. After months of negotiations Bashir finally agreed on 31 Dec. 2007 to the deployment of a hybrid African Union-UN peacekeeping force (UNAMID, under UN control) in Darfur to replace an existing smaller African Union mission. The Darfur conflict also undermined Sudan's already fractious relations with neighbouring Chad until Jan. 2010, when both sides stated their readiness to normalize relations.

The International Criminal Court (ICC) had indicted Bashir for alleged genocide and war crimes in Darfur committed in and after 2003—accusations that the Sudanese government has rejected—but in Dec. 2014 the ICC chief prosecutor suspended further investigations, citing a lack of support from the UN Security Council. Violence across the region has meanwhile continued to generate further casualties and internal displacement.

In April 2010 Bashir won another presidential term and the National Congress Party won a comfortable parliamentary majority in the country's first multi-party elections in 24 years, but the poll was criticized by international monitors. Popular discontent over economic austerity measures imposed from 2011 in response to falling oil revenues, together with allegations of government corruption, undermined Bashir's authority during 2013, and in Oct. that year dissident NCP members broke away to form a new party. His term as president was nevertheless extended again in April 2015 following his victory at the first elections to take place since the secession of South Sudan in 2011.

On the international stage, in Jan. 2014 Bashir had given cautious support to the South Sudan government in the wake of an alleged attempted coup in Dec. 2013 that prompted a wave of violence in that country, while in 2015 he instigated a surprising reversal of three decades of close Sudanese-Iranian relations. In March that year he opted to back military intervention by a Saudi Arabian-led regional coalition of Gulf Arab states against an Iranian-backed insurgency by rebel Shia Houthi forces in Yemen. In Jan. 2016, following the ransacking by protesters of the Saudi embassy in the Iranian capital of Tehran, Sudan broke off diplomatic relations with Iran in support of the Saudi government. Commentators speculated that Bashir's change of policy reflected his need of Saudi aid to rescue Sudan's struggling economy.

DEFENCE

There is conscription for one to two years. Defence expenditure totalled US$1,516m. in 2013 (US$43 per capita), representing 3.0% of GDP.

In Aug. 2007 the Sudanese government agreed to a joint African Union/United Nations peacekeeping force being deployed in Darfur. The mission, known as UNAMID or UN-AU Mission in Darfur, began operations on 31 Dec. 2007 and had 17,453 uniformed personnel in Feb. 2016, making it the second largest UN peacekeeping force in the world (behind MONUSCO in the Democratic Republic of the Congo).

Army

Strength (2011) 105,000 (around 20,000 conscripts). There is a paramilitary People's Defence Force of 17,500 and an additional 85,000 reservists.

Navy

The navy operates in the Red Sea and also on the River Nile. The flotilla suffers from lack of maintenance and spares. Personnel in 2011 numbered 1,300. The major base is at Port Sudan.

Air Force

Personnel totalled (2011) 3,000, with 61 combat-capable aircraft, including A-5s (Chinese-built versions of MiG-19s), Su-25s and MiG-29s, and 29 attack helicopters.

ECONOMY

Agriculture accounted for 24.9% of GDP, industry 28.3% and services 46.8% in 2010.

Sudan featured among the ten most corrupt countries in the world in a 2015 survey of 168 countries carried out by the anti-corruption organization Transparency International.

Overview

Sudan is rich in natural resource but its economy lags behind many of its neighbours, owing to imbalances and disruptions caused by conflict. The economy was almost entirely agrarian until 1999, when an oil pipeline from the Muglad Basin to a Red Sea export terminal was opened. Sudan was able to begin exporting crude oil and recorded its first trade surplus. It has since become dependent on oil production, with agriculture and mining playing secondary roles, and prospered on the back of high oil prices and significant foreign direct investment.

However, with the secession of South Sudan in 2011 Sudan lost almost three-quarters of its oil revenues, half of its fiscal revenues and two-thirds of its foreign exchange earnings. The situation was compounded by a weak policy response and ongoing disputes with the South over territorial rights and the division of oil revenues and debt responsibilities. In 2012 the economy contracted by 3.4%, inflation rose to high double-digit levels and fuel prices increased, triggering countrywide protests.

In June 2012 a three-year economic adjustment programme was introduced in an effort to diversify the economy. The authorities have focused investment in the agricultural and gold mining sectors, committing 20% of public expenditure to agricultural infrastructure and technology alone. A programme of fiscal consolidation was also initiated to control the large national deficit.

The country suffers from high levels of poverty and income inequality—problems aggravated by vulnerability to fluctuations in the oil price and in remittances from expatriates working in Gulf countries. Meanwhile, the conflict in Darfur and tense relations with South Sudan remain long-term obstacles to economic development.

Currency

The unit of currency is the Sudanese pound (SDG) of 100 piastres, introduced in Jan. 2007 to replace the Sudanese dinar (SDD) at a rate of 1 Sudanese pound = 100 Sudanese dinars. The dinar ceased to be legal tender on 30 June 2007. Inflation was 36.5% in 2013 and 36.9% in 2014—the second highest rate in the world for both years. There has been double-digit inflation every year since 2008. Foreign exchange reserves were US$2,107m. in July 2005 and total money supply was 705,505m. dinars.

Budget

In 2008 revenues totalled 26,424m. Sudanese pounds and expenditures 24,331m. Sudanese pounds.

VAT is 10%.

Performance

The economy contracted by 3.4% in 2012 but then grew by 3.9% in 2013 and 3.6% in 2014. Sudan's total GDP in 2014 was US$73.8bn.

Banking and Finance

The Bank of Sudan (Governor, Abdelrahman Hassan Abdelrahman Hashim) opened in Feb. 1960 with an authorized capital of £S1.5m. as the central bank and bank of issue. Banks were nationalized in 1970 but in 1974 foreign banks were allowed to open branches. The application of Islamic law from 1 Jan. 1991 put an end to the charging of interest in official banking transactions, and seven banks are run on Islamic principles. Mergers of seven local banks in 1993 resulted in the formation of the Khartoum Bank, the Industrial Development Bank and the Savings Bank.

Sudan's external debt totalled US$21,846m. in 2010, up from US$17,474m. in 2005 and US$15,983m. in 2000. However, as a share of GNI it fell from 141.4% in 2000 to 67.1% in 2005 and further to 39.1% in 2010.

A stock exchange opened in Khartoum in 1995.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Sudan's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2010 were the equivalent of 0.4 tonnes per capita.

Electricity

Installed capacity was 3.0m. kW in 2011. Production in 2011 was 8.60bn. kWh, with consumption per capita 184 kWh.

Oil and Gas

In 2012 oil reserves totalled 1.5bn. bbls. In June 1998 Sudan began exploiting its reserves and on 31 Aug. 1999 it officially became an oil producing country; production in 2012 totalled 4.1m. tonnes. An oil refinery at Al-Jayli, with a capacity of 2.5m. tonnes, opened in 2000. Natural gas reserves in 2010 were 85bn. cu. metres.

Minerals

Mineral deposits include graphite, sulphur, chromium, iron, manganese, copper, zinc, fluorspar, natron, gypsum and anhydrite, magnesite, asbestos, talc, halite, kaolin, white mica, coal, diatomite (kieselguhr), limestone and dolomite, pumice, lead, wollastonite, black sands and vermiculite pyrites. Chromite and gold are mined. Production of salt, 2009: 35,793 tonnes; chromite, 2005: 21,654 tonnes; gold, 2005: 3,625 kg.

Agriculture

80% of the population depends on agriculture. Land tenure is based on customary rights; land is ultimately owned by the government. There were about 19.32m. ha. of arable land in 2007 and 225,000 ha. of permanent crops. 1.15m. ha. were irrigated in 2007. There were ten tractors and one harvester-thresher per 10,000 ha. in 2006.

Production (2003 estimates) in 1,000 tonnes: sugarcane, 5,500; sorghum, 5,188; groundnuts, 1,200; millet, 784; tomatoes, 700; wheat, 363; dates, 330; seed cotton, 315; cottonseed, 200.

Livestock (2003 estimates): sheep, 47.0m.; goats, 40.0m.; cattle, 38.3m.; camels, 3.2m.; chickens, 38m.

Livestock products (2003 estimates) in 1,000 tonnes: beef and veal, 325; lamb and mutton, 144; goat meat, 119; poultry meat, 30; cow's milk, 3,264; goat's milk, 1,295; sheep's milk, 463; cheese, 152; eggs, 47.

Forestry

Forests covered 69.95m. ha. in 2010, or 29% of the total land area. The annual loss of 589,000 ha. of forests between 1990 and 2000 was exceeded only in Brazil and Indonesia, although between 2000 and 2010 the pace of deforestation decreased significantly to 54,000 ha. annually. Of the total area under forests 20% was primary forest in 2010, 71% other naturally regenerated forest and 9% planted forest. In 2012, 15.55m. cu. metres of roundwood were cut.

Fisheries

In 2009 the total catch was 71,690 tonnes, of which approximately 92% were freshwater fish.

INDUSTRY

Production figures (2007 unless otherwise indicated, in 1,000 tonnes): distillate fuel oil, 1,873; petrol, 1,639; wheat and blended flour (2006), 1,200; raw sugar, 743; residual fuel oil, 677; cement, 326; jet fuel, 303; soap, 80. In 2000 an industrial complex assembling 12,000 vehicles a year opened.

Labour

The estimated total workforce in 2010 was 13,885,000 (70% males), up from 11,997,000 in 2005.

Sudan had 0.26m. people living in slavery according to the Walk Free Foundation's 2013 Global Slavery Index.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

In 2009 imports (c.i.f.) amounted to US$8,589.9m. and exports (f.o.b.) to US$9,079.5m. The main imports are petroleum products, machinery and equipment, foodstuffs, manufactured goods, medicines and chemicals. Main exports are oil (which accounts for about 87% of export revenues), cotton, gum arabic, oil seeds, sorghum, livestock, sesame, gold and sugar. The main import sources in 2006 were China (18.8%), Saudi Arabia (8.9%), Japan (8.1%), India (6.7%) and United Arab Emirates (5.6%). Principal export markets in 2006 were China (78.9%), Japan (5.5%), United Arab Emirates (5.1%), Saudi Arabia (2.8%) and Egypt (1.3%).

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

In 2002 there were estimated to be 11,900 km of roads, of which 4,320 km were paved. There were an estimated 768,000 passenger cars and 300,000 trucks and vans in 2007.

Rail

Total length in 2005 was 4,578 km. In 2008 the railways carried 100,000 passengers and 1.1m. tonnes of freight.

Civil Aviation

There is an international airport at Khartoum, which handled 2,178,097 passengers and 59,299 tonnes of freight in 2009. The national carrier is the government-owned Sudan Airways, which operates domestic and international services. In 2006 scheduled airline traffic of Sudan-based carriers flew 9m. km, carrying 563,000 passengers (365,000 on international flights).

Shipping

Supplementing the railways are regular steamer services of the Sudan Railways. Port Sudan is the major seaport; Suakin port opened in 1991. In Jan. 2009 there were five ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 23,000 GT.

Telecommunications

In 2013 there were 416,000 fixed telephone subscriptions; mobile phone subscriptions numbered 27,658,000 that year (728.5 per 1,000 persons). There were 34,200 fixed broadband subscriptions in 2012 and 10.2m. wireless broadband subscriptions in 2013. 21.0% of the population aged 15 and over were internet users in 2012.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The judiciary is a separate independent department of state, directly and solely responsible to the President of the Republic. The general administrative supervision and control of the judiciary is vested in the High Judicial Council.

Civil Justice is administered by the courts constituted under the Civil Justice Ordinance, namely the High Court of Justice—consisting of the Court of Appeal and Judges of the High Court, sitting as courts of original jurisdiction—and Province Courts—consisting of the Courts of Province and District Judges. The law administered is 'justice, equity and good conscience' in all cases where there is no special enactment. Procedure is governed by the Civil Justice Ordinance.

Justice for the Muslim population is administered by the Islamic law courts, which form the Sharia Divisions of the Court of Appeal, High Courts and Kadis Courts; President of the Sharia Division is the Grand Kadi. In Dec. 1990 the government announced that Sharia would be applied in the non-Muslim southern parts of the country as well.

Criminal Justice is administered by the courts constituted under the Code of Criminal Procedure, namely major courts, minor courts and magistrates' courts. Serious crimes are tried by major courts, which are composed of a President and two members and have the power to pass the death sentence. Amnesty International reported that there were at least 23 executions in 2014 and three confirmed executions in 2015. Major Courts are, as a rule, presided over by a Judge of the High Court appointed to a Provincial Circuit or a Province Judge. There is a right of appeal to the Chief Justice against any decision or order of a Major Court, and all its findings and sentences are subject to confirmation by him.

Lesser crimes are tried by Minor Courts consisting of three Magistrates and presided over by a Second Class Magistrate, and by Magistrates' Courts.

The population in penal institutions in 2011 was 20,000 (56 per 100,000 of national population).

Education

In 2007 there were 28,185 teaching staff for 490,808 pupils at pre-primary schools; 107,933 teaching staff for 3.96m. pupils at primary schools; and 79,122 secondary school teaching staff for 1.46m. pupils. In 2006 there were 29 public higher education institutions (including two Islamic universities, one university of science and technology, and an institute of advanced banking) and eight private higher education institutions. Adult literacy rate was 69% in 2008.

Health

In 2006 there were 11,083 physicians, 944 dentists, 33,354 nurses and midwives and 1,531 pharmacists. Hospital bed provision in 2006 was seven per 10,000 population.

RELIGION

Islam is the state religion. A study by the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life estimated that there were 30.49m. Muslims in 2010 (mostly Sunnis), 1.81m. Christians and 950,000 followers of folk religions. A further 350,000 people had no religious affiliation. Catholics account for around 55% of Christians and Protestants 40%. In Feb. 2016 the Roman Catholic church had one cardinal.

CULTUREWorld Heritage Sites

Sudan has two sites on the UNESCO World Heritage List: Gebel Barkal and the Sites of the Napatan Region (inscribed on the list in 2003), a collection of tombs, pyramids and palaces of the Second Kingdom of Kush (900 BC to AD 350); and the Archaeological Sites of the Island of Meroe (2011), once the heartland of the Kingdom of Kush that includes the royal city of the Kushite kings at Meroe.

Press

In 2008 there were 29 paid-for daily newspapers with a combined circulation of 90,000. Opposition newspapers are permitted although they are vetted by an official censor.

Tourism

In 2011 there were 536,000 international tourist arrivals (excluding same-day visitors), spending a total of US$185m.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Arawak and Carib groups lived in coastal areas of present-day Suriname and along the Marowijne River from at least 3,000 BC. The forested interior was home to other Amerindians including the Acurio, Trio and Warau. Christopher Columbus explored the coast in 1498, followed by Amerigo Vespucci and Alonso de Ojeda the following year. Spanish and Dutch seafarers attempted to establish settlements, but the first documented community was at Marshall's Creek, founded by British puritans in 1630.

In 1650 the British governor of Barbados, Lord Willoughby, sent three ships to Suriname to build a new colony, which was briefly known as Willoughbyland. By the early 1660s tobacco, sugar and cotton plantations extended across some 120 sq. km, supporting several thousand settlers, including Jews from Brazil. In Feb. 1667 the colony was captured by Dutch forces, led by Abraham Crijnssen, and renamed Fort Zeelandia. The Treaty of Breda, signed in July 1667, gave the Dutch control of the colony in exchange for British rule in New Amsterdam (subsequently New York in the United States).

Suriname was administered by the States of Zeeland until 1683, when it was supervised by the Society of Suriname—itsself divided between three participants: the city of Amsterdam, the van Sommelsdijk family and the Dutch West India Company.

The town of Paramaribo was laid out on a grid pattern from 1683, close to Fort Zeelandia. During the late 17th and early 18th centuries thousands of slaves were shipped from West Africa to work on the plantations. In 1795 Suriname was united with the three Dutch colonies of Berbice, Essequibo and Demerara to the east.

Having vied for control of the region for several years, British forces were able to take Suriname during the Napoleonic Wars of 1799–1802 and 1804–16. Following the defeat of Napoleon, the Anglo–Dutch Treaty of 1816 returned Suriname to the Netherlands, while the other three Dutch colonies were merged to form British Guiana in 1830. Slavery was finally abolished by the Dutch authorities in 1863, after which thousands of people were brought from the Dutch East Indies (notably Java), southern China (via Macau) and British India to work on the plantations.

Mineral extraction gathered pace in Suriname during the first part of the 20th century. A brief gold rush in 1905 was followed by exploration for bauxite by the US firm Alcoa. Mining began in 1916, with Suriname becoming one of the world's leading bauxite producers. During the Second World War the colony was briefly occupied by the USA to protect bauxite reserves. In 1954 Suriname was granted regional autonomy, along with Aruba and the Netherlands Antilles. In 1973 the local government began negotiations on full independence, which was gained on 25 Nov. 1975. The former governor, Johan Ferrier, served as the first president and Henck Arron was prime minister.

In Feb. 1980 Arron's government was ousted in a coup and a National Military Council (NMC) established. A further coup in Aug. that year deposed several members of the NMC and the president. More attempted coups took place in 1981 and 1982, with the NMC retaining control under Dési Bouterse. In Oct. 1987 a new constitution was approved by referendum.

Suriname returned to democracy in Jan. 1988 but on 24 Dec. 1990 another military coup deposed the government. Civilian rule was re-established in 1991, which led to a peace agreement with rebel groups in Aug. 1992. Jules Wijdenbosch, an ally of Bouterse, was elected president in May 1996. He was ousted in 2000 by Ronald Venetiaan, who served for ten years before Bouterse was elected president in July 2010.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Suriname is located on the northern coast of South America between 2–6° North latitude and 54–59° West longitude. It is bounded in the north by the Atlantic Ocean, east by French Guiana, west by Guyana, and south by Brazil. Area, 163,820 sq. km. Census population, 2012, 541,638; density, 3.3 per sq. km.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 543,000.

The capital, Paramaribo, had (2012 census) 240,924 inhabitants.

Suriname is divided into ten districts. They are (with 2012 census population and chief town): Brokopondo, population 15,909 (Brokopondo); Commewijne, 31,420 (Nieuw Amsterdam); Coronie, 3,391 (Totness); Marowijne, 18,294 (Albina); Nickerie, 34,233 (Nieuw Nickerie); Para, 24,700 (Onverwacht); Paramaribo, 240,924—representing 44% of Suriname's total population (Paramaribo); Saramacca, 17,480 (Groningen); Sipaliwini, 37,065 (local authority in Paramaribo); Wanica, 118,222 (Lelydorp).

There is an ongoing unresolved dispute between Suriname and Guyana for the return of a triangle of uninhabited rainforest in Guyana between the New River and the Courantyne River, near the Brazilian border. In Sept. 2007 the UN settled a long-standing maritime boundary dispute between the two countries. The coastal area off both countries is believed to hold significant oil and gas deposits.

Major ethnic groups in percentages of the population in 2012: East Indian, 27.4%; Maroon (descendants of African runaway slaves from Dutch plantations in the late 17th and early 18th centuries), 21.7%; Creole, 15.7%; Javanese, 13.7%; Mixed, 13.4%. 93.3% of the population in 2010 were Surinamese, 1.9% Dutch, 1.5% Guyanese and 0.9% Brazilian. 69.8% of the population lived in urban areas in 2011.

The official language is Dutch. English is widely spoken next to Hindi, Javanese and Chinese as inter-group communication. A vernacular, called 'Sranan' or 'Surinamese', is used as a lingua franca. In 1976 it was decided that Spanish was to become the nation's principal working language.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2007: births, 9,769; deaths, 3,374. Rates per 1,000 population: birth rate, 19.2; death rate, 6.6. Expectation of life, 2007, was 65.3 years for males and 72.5 for females. Annual population growth rate, 2000–05, 1.5%. Infant mortality, 2010, 27 per 1,000 live births; fertility rate, 2008, 2.4 births per woman. Abortion is illegal.

CLIMATE

The climate is equatorial, with uniformly high temperatures and rainfall. The temperature is an average of 27°C throughout the year; there are two rainy seasons (May–July and Nov.–Jan.) and two dry seasons (Aug.–Oct. and Feb.–April). Paramaribo, Jan. 21°C, July 32.4°C. Average rainfall 182.3 mm.

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

The current constitution was ratified on 30 Sept. 1987. Parliament is a 51-member National Assembly. The head of state is the President, elected for a five-year term by a two-thirds majority by the National Assembly, or, failing that, by an electoral college, the United People's Assembly, enlarged by the inclusion of regional and local councillors, by a simple majority.

National Anthem

'God zij met ons Suriname' ('God be with our Suriname'); words by C. A. Hoekstra, tune by J. C. de Puy. There is a Sranan version, 'Opo kondreman oen ope'; words by H. de Ziel.

RECENT ELECTIONS

Parliamentary elections were held on 25 May 2015. The National Democratic Party won 26 of the available 51 seats (45.6% of the vote), the V7 alliance won 18 with 37.2%, A-Combination took 5 (10.5%), the Party for Democracy and Development through Unity took 1 (4.3%) and the Progressive Workers' and Farmers' Union took 1 (0.7%). The National Democratic Party's victory marked the first time that a party had achieved an absolute majority since Suriname became independent in 1975.

On 14 July 2015 former dictator and incumbent president Dési Bouterse was re-elected president by the National Assembly. Since he stood unopposed, there was no need for a formal vote.

CURRENT GOVERNMENT

President: Dési Bouterse; b. 1945 (National Democratic Party; sworn in 12 Aug. 2010 and re-elected in July 2015).

CURRENT LEADERS

Desiré Delano 'Dési' Bouterse

Position

President

Introduction

Former military dictator Dési Bouterse was sworn in as president in Aug. 2010 following his election by the National Assembly in July. He had earlier led the National Democratic Party to victory within the Mega Combination coalition at parliamentary elections in May that year. He succeeded Ronald Venetiaan.

Early Life

Bouterse was born on 13 Oct. 1945 in Domburg, Suriname. After attending the Middelbare Handelsschool, he moved to the Netherlands for military training.

On 25 Feb. 1980 a group of Surinamese army sergeants, including Bouterse, led a coup. By Aug. they had forced out President Johan Ferrier, who had overseen the nation's transition to independence from Dutch rule five years earlier. The military took over the government and declared a socialist republic, with Bouterse named chairman of the National Military Council. Over the next seven years he appointed puppet presidents while ruling as de facto leader.

Democratic elections in 1988 stripped Bouterse of much of his power, though a new constitution in 1987 confirmed his control of the military. In Dec. 1990 he dismissed the government, holding power until elections the following year. His position weakened as civil war took hold and a strong ethnic Maroon rebel movement developed under Ronnie Brunswijk, a former bodyguard of Bouterse.

Bouterse gradually entered into mainstream politics as leader of the National Democratic Party, which he had established in 1987. However, he was dogged by allegations of extra judicial murders following the 1980 coup. Convicted in absentia in the Netherlands for drug trafficking offences, he was sentenced in 1999 to 11 years' imprisonment.

Campaigning on a populist platform, he secured the support of several small parties and formed the Mega Combination coalition to contest the general election of May 2010, winning 23 of a possible 51 seats. In the presidential election of July 2010, Bouterse secured 36 parliamentary votes, exceeding the two-thirds majority needed to defeat the minister of justice, Chandrikapersad Santokhi.

Career in Office

Bouterse's election was widely criticized, with claims that his run for the presidency was motivated by a desire to secure immunity from criminal prosecution. In April 2012 the National Assembly passed an amnesty law covering alleged violations under his earlier military rule. He has appealed to the nation's poor, blaming their plight on the austerity measures of previous governments. Having been arrested in Panama in Aug. 2013, Bouterse's son was subsequently detained in the USA and convicted of drug and arms smuggling offences, for which he was sentenced to at least 16 years' imprisonment in March 2015.

Bouterse was reappointed president by parliament in July 2015, following parliamentary elections in May in which the National Democratic Party won a narrow overall majority.

DEFENCE

In 2011 defence expenditure totalled an estimated US$55m. (approximately US$100 per capita), representing 1% of GDP.

Army

Total strength was 1,400 in 2011.

Navy

In 2011 personnel, based at Paramaribo, totalled around 240.

Air Force

Estimated personnel (2011): 200. There were four combat-capable aircraft.

ECONOMY

In 2011 agriculture contributed 10% of GDP, industry 38% and services 52%.

Overview

Suriname is rich in natural resources. Oil, gold and alumina jointly account for around 80% of exports and over 30% of GDP.

After years of economic turmoil, the economy has strengthened since the early 2000s thanks to prolonged political stability and buoyant commodity prices. Growth averaged 4% from 2007–12, driven by the extractive industries, services and the construction sector. However, the fiscal position remains weak, with a deficit of 4% of GDP in 2012. Public debt increased from 18% of GDP in 2008 to 22% in 2012. Fiscal pressures intensified in 2013 following wage hikes and increased capital spending.

The IMF projects a favourable medium-term outlook, given continued investment in the mineral and energy sectors. The planned opening of a major new gold mine during 2016 should further support growth. Nonetheless, heavy reliance on commodity exports leaves Suriname vulnerable to price shocks, and the high poverty rate is a further ongoing concern.

Currency

The unit of currency is the Suriname dollar (SRD) of 100 cents, introduced on 1 Jan. 2004 to replace the Suriname guilder (SRG) at a rate of one Suriname dollar = 1,000 Suriname guilders. Foreign exchange reserves totalled US$140m. and gold reserves were 29,000 troy oz in July 2005. Total money supply in June 2005 was 777m. Suriname dollars. The rate of inflation—which had been 98.7% in 1999—was 14.9% in 2008. In 2009 there was deflation of 0.4%. More recently there was inflation in 2013 of 1.9% and in 2014 of 3.4%.

Budget

In 2011 budgetary central government revenue totalled 3,707m. Suriname dollars and expenditure 3,014m. Suriname dollars. Principal sources of revenue in 2011: taxes on goods and services, 1,134m. Suriname dollars; taxes on income, profits and capital gains, 1,040m. Suriname dollars. Main items of expenditure by economic type in 2011: compensation of employees, 1,209m. Suriname dollars; use of goods and services, 900m. Suriname dollars.

VAT is 10% for goods and 8% for services.

Performance

After two years of recession in 1999 and 2000 the economy has enjoyed steady growth. Real GDP growth was 3.0% in 2009 at the height of the global recession. The economy has continued to grow, expanding by 3.1% in 2012, 2.8% in 2013 and 1.8% in 2014. Suriname's economic stability can be attributed to a number of factors including its creation of a unified foreign exchange market, which helped reduce inflation. In 2014 total GDP was US$5.2bn.

Banking and Finance

The Central Bank of Suriname (Governor, Glenn Gersie) is a bankers' bank and also the bank of issue. There are three commercial banks; the Suriname People's Credit Bank operates under the auspices of the government. There is a post office savings bank, a mortgage bank, an investment bank, a long-term investments agency, a National Development Bank and an Agrarian Bank.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Suriname's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2011 were the equivalent of 4.0 tonnes per capita.

Electricity

Installed capacity in 2011 was 0.4m. kW. Production was an estimated 1.95bn. kWh in 2011 and consumption per capita an estimated 3,683 kWh.

Oil and Gas

Crude oil production (2009), 4.1m. bbls. Reserves in 2011 were 79m. bbls.

Minerals

Bauxite is the most important mineral. Suriname ranks among the ten largest bauxite producers in the world. Production (2011), 3,236,000 tonnes.

Agriculture

Agriculture is restricted to the alluvial coastal zone; in 2002 there were an estimated 57,000 ha. of arable land and 10,000 ha. of permanent crops. The staple food crop is rice: production, 163,000 tonnes in 2003. Other crops (2002 in 1,000 tonnes): sugarcane, 120; oranges, 11; plantains, 11; coconuts, 10; cassava, 4. Livestock in 2003 (estimates): cattle, 137,000; pigs, 24,000; sheep, 8,000; goats, 7,000; chickens, 4m.

Forestry

Forests covered 14.76m. ha. in 2010, or 95% of the land area. In terms of percentage coverage, Suriname was the world's most heavily forested country in 2010. Of the total area under forests 95% in 2010 was primary forest and 5% other naturally regenerated forest. Production of roundwood in 2011 was 413,000 cu. metres.

Fisheries

The catch in 2010 amounted to 34,402 tonnes, almost entirely from marine waters.

INDUSTRY

There is no longer any aluminium smelting, but there are food-processing and wood-using industries. Production: alumina (2007), 2,181,000 tonnes; residual fuel oil (2007), 360,000 tonnes; cement (2008 estimate), 65,000 tonnes; distillate fuel oil (2007), 41,000 tonnes; sawnwood (2007), 57,000 cu. metres.

Labour

The labour force in 2013 was 211,000 (175,000 in 2003). 59.3% of the population aged 15–64 was economically active in 2013. In the same year 4.8% of the population was unemployed.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

Trade in US$1m.:

	2007	2008	2009	2010
Imports c.i.f.	1,044.3	1,304.3	1,390.1	1,397.5
Exports f.o.b.	1,359.1	1,743.4	1,401.8	2,025.6

Principal imports, 2004: nonelectrical machinery, 14.4%; food products, 11.9%; road vehicles, 9.5%. Principal exports, 2004: alumina, 40.8%; gold, 29.3%; crustaceans and molluscs, 3.6%.

In 2004 imports (in US$1m.) were mainly from the USA (165.2), Netherlands (147.8), Trinidad and Tobago (131.4), Japan (96.6) and the Netherlands Antilles (20.8); exports were mainly to Norway (173.0), USA (138.0), Canada (73.3), France (60.0) and the Netherlands (14.5).

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

The road network covered 4,304 km in 2003, of which 26.2% were paved. In 2006 there were 81,778 passenger cars, 25,745 trucks and vans, 3,029 buses and coaches and 40,889 motorcycles and mopeds. There were 69 fatalities in road accidents in 2004.

Rail

There are two single-track railways.

Civil Aviation

There is an international airport at Paramaribo (Johan Adolf Pengel). The national carrier is Surinam Airways, which in 2003 had flights to Amsterdam, Belem, Cayenne, Curaçao, Georgetown, Haiti, Miami and Port of Spain. In 2003 scheduled airline traffic of Suriname-based carriers flew 5m. km, carrying 258,000 passengers (253,000 on international flights). In 2004 there were 149,589 passenger arrivals and 148,353 departures.

Shipping

In Jan. 2009 there were four ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 4,000 GT. The main port is Nieuwe Haven.

Telecommunications

In 2013 there were 868,600 mobile phone subscriptions (1,610.7 per 1,000 inhabitants) and 84,900 fixed telephone lines. In the same year an estimated 37.4% of the population were internet users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONSJustice

Members of the court of justice are nominated by the President. There are three cantonal courts. Suriname was one of ten countries to sign an agreement in Feb. 2001 establishing a Caribbean Court of Justice to replace the British Privy Council as the highest civil and criminal court. In the meantime the number of signatories has risen to 12. The court was inaugurated at Port of Spain, Trinidad on 16 April 2005 but it has not yet been accepted as Suriname's final court of appeal.

The population in penal institutions in 2012 was 994 (186 per 100,000 of national population). 50.0% of prisoners had yet to receive a trial according to 2014 estimates by the International Centre for Prison Studies. The death penalty, which was last used in 1982, was abolished in March 2015.

Education

Adult literacy was 94.6% in 2008 (95.5% among males and 93.8% among females). In 2003–04, 298 primary schools out of a total of 312 had 3,096 teachers and 62,086 pupils; 124 secondary schools had 41,904 pupils. In 2000–01 the university had 2,745 students. There is a teacher training college with (2000–01) 1,942 students.

Health

In 2004 there were 1,611 general hospital beds. In 2003 there were 295 physicians.

RELIGION

A study by the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life estimated that in 2010 there were 270,000 Christians (including 150,000 Roman Catholics and 110,000 Protestants), 100,000 Hindus, 80,000 Muslims and 30,000 folk religionists. People with no religious affiliation also numbered 30,000 in 2010.

CULTUREWorld Heritage Sites

Suriname has two sites on the UNESCO World Heritage List: Central Suriname Nature Reserve (inscribed on the list in 2000); and the Historic Inner City of Paramaribo (2002).

Press

There were four daily newspapers in 2008 with a combined circulation of 55,000.

Tourism

In 2010 there were 204,000 international tourist arrivals (excluding same-day visitors), spending a total of US$61m.

Festivals

The people of Suriname celebrate Chinese New Year (Jan.); Phagwa, a Hindu celebration (March–April); Id-Ul-Fitre, the sugar feast at the end of Ramadan (May); Avondvierdaagse, a carnival (during the Easter holidays); Suriflora, a celebration of plants and flowers (April–May); Keti koti, an Afro-Surinamese holiday to commemorate the abolition of slavery (1 July); Suri-pop, a popular music festival (July); Nationale Kunstbeurs, arts and crafts (Oct.–Nov.); Diwali, the Hindu ceremony of light (Nov.); Djaran Kepang, a Javanese dance held on feast days; Winti-prey, a ceremony for the Winti gods.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

The Swazi migrated into the country to which they have given their name in the last half of the 18th century. The independence of the Swazis was guaranteed in the conventions of 1881 and 1884 between the British Government and the Government of the South African Republic. In 1894 the South African Republic was given powers of protection and administration. In 1902, after the conclusion of the Boer War, a special commissioner took charge, and under an order-in-council in 1903 the Governor of the Transvaal administered the territory. Swaziland became independent on 6 Sept. 1968. A state of emergency imposed in 1973 is still in force. On 25 April 1986 King Mswati III was installed as King of Swaziland.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Swaziland is bounded in the north, west and south by South Africa, and in the east by Mozambique. The area is 17,364 sq. km (6,704 sq. miles). Population (2007 census), 1,018,449 (537,021 females); density, 58.7 per sq. km.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 1.29m.

In 2011, 21.3% of the population were urban. The country is divided into four regions: Hhohho, Lubombo, Manzini and Shiselweni.

Main urban areas: Mbabane, the administrative capital (60,281 inhabitants in 2007); Manzini; Big Bend; Mhlume; Nhlanguano.

The population is 84% Swazi and 10% Zulu. The official languages are Swazi and English.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2008 estimates: births, 35,000; deaths, 18,000. Estimated rates, 2008 (per 1,000 population): births, 29.9; deaths, 15.6. As a result of the impact of AIDS, expectation of life declined sharply. It was 59 years in 1990–95, but by 2000–05 was down to 45.9 years for females and 45.6 years for males. However, it has now started to rise again and in 2013 was 48.3 years for females and 49.6 years for males. Swaziland was one of only two countries where life expectancy at birth for males in 2013 was higher than for females (the other being Mali). In 2013, 27.4% of all adults between 15 and 49 were infected with HIV—the highest rate in any country. In 2010, 23% of Swazi children were orphans. In Sept. 2001 King Mswati III told the teenage girls of the country to stop having sex for five years as part of the country's drive to reduce the spread of HIV. Annual population growth rate, 2000–08, 1.0%. Infant mortality, 2010, 55 per 1,000 live births; fertility rate, 2008, 3.5 births per woman.

CLIMATE

A temperate climate with two seasons. Nov. to March is the wet season, when temperatures range from mild to hot, with frequent thunderstorms. The cool, dry season from May to Sept. is characterized by clear, bright sunny days. Mbabane, Jan. 68°F (20°C), July 54°F (12.2°C). Annual rainfall 56" (1,402 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

The reigning King is Mswati III (b. 1968; crowned 25 April 1986), who succeeded his father, King Sobhuza II (reigned 1921–82). The King rules in conjunction with the Queen Mother (his mother, or a senior wife). Critics of the King or his mother run the risk of arrest. Political parties are banned.

A new constitution was signed into law on 26 July 2005 and came into force in Jan. 2006. There is a House of Assembly of 65 members, 55 of whom are elected each from one constituency (inkhundla) and ten appointed by the King; and a House of Senators of 30 members, ten of whom are elected by the House of Assembly and 20 appointed by the King. Elections are held in two rounds, the second being a run-off between the five candidates who come first in each constituency.

There is also a traditional Swazi National Council headed by the King and Queen Mother at which all Swazi men are entitled to be heard.

National Anthem

'Nkulunkulu mnikati wetibusiso temaSwati' ('O Lord our God bestower of blessings upon the Swazi'); words by A. E. Simelane, tune by D. K. Rycroft.

RECENT ELECTIONS

In parliamentary elections held on 20 Sept. 2013, 55 independent candidates were elected with ten more chosen and appointed by King Mswati III. 30 candidates were subsequently assigned to senatorial posts in the Swazi legislature. Of these, ten were elected by parliament and 20 were appointed by the King. Political parties in Swaziland have been banned under the tinkhundla electoral system since 1978.

CURRENT GOVERNMENT

In March 2016 the cabinet comprised:

Prime Minister: Barnabas Sibusiso Dlamini; b. 1942 (sworn in 23 Oct. 2008).

Deputy Prime Minister: Paul Dlamini.

Minister for Agriculture: Moses Vilakati. Commerce, Industry and Trade: Gideon Dlamini. Economic Planning and Development: Prince Hlangusemphi. Education: Phineas Magagula. Finance: Martin Dlamini. Foreign Affairs and International Co-operation: Chief Mgwagwa Gamedze. Health: Sibongile Simelane. Home Affairs: Princess Tsandzile. Housing and Urban Development: Phiyayinkhosi Mabuza. Information, Communications and Technology: Christopher Ndlangamandla. Justice and Constitutional Affairs: Edgar Hillary. Labour and Social Security: Winnie Magagula. Natural Resources and Energy: Jabulile Mashwama. Public Service: Magobetane Mamba. Public Works and Transport: Lindiwe Dlamini. Sports, Culture and Youth: David 'Cruiser' Ngcamphalala. Tinkhundla Administration and Development: Mduduzi Dlamini. Tourism and Environmental Affairs: Jabulani Mabuza.

CURRENT LEADERS

Mswati III

Position
King

Introduction

Mswati came to the throne in 1986. Effectively an absolute monarchy, he has received domestic and international criticism for his suppression of political opposition and for economic mismanagement. Among the greatest challenges of Mswati's reign has been containing the rapid increase in cases of HIV and AIDS in Swaziland.

Early Life

Mswati was born on 19 April 1968 in Manzini to one of the wives of King Sobhuza II and given the name Makhosetive (King of All Nations). Sobhuza's death in 1982 left a power vacuum that led to several years of infighting between various queens regent, crown princes and members of Likoqo (the traditional advisory body which wielded significant power over the crown). In Oct. 1985 Makhosetive's mother dismissed several leading Likoqo figures and recalled her son from his schooling in England. Makhosetive was crowned as Mswati III in April 1986.

Career in Office

Among Mswati's first acts as King was to dissolve the Likoqo. Popular discontent grew at the prohibition on opposition political parties and Mswati's increasingly autocratic rule, leading to the establishment of the illegal People's United Democratic Movement (Pudemo). In 1990 Mswati agreed to open dialogue on the nation's political future. The National Assembly was directly elected for the first time in 1993 and Mswati announced plans for a new constitution the following year.

With little progress having been made by 1996, Mswati established a constitutional commission. Pudemo continued to coordinate opposition, criticizing the King for filling the commission with his conservative supporters and boycotting the National Assembly elections of Oct. 1998. In 2000 Pudemo leader Mario Masuku demanded an end to the state of emergency called 27 years earlier and was arrested for sedition. He was imprisoned pending his trial which collapsed in 2002. On his release he stated his belief that government could only be reformed when the monarchy was 'wiped out'.

In 2001 the constitutional commission reported back, providing the framework for the writing of a new constitution but asserting that the majority of the population did not favour the formation of new parties. In Dec. 2002, amid declining relations with the judiciary, six court of appeal judges resigned in protest at the King's use of rule by decree. The judges claimed that Mswati's repeal of several court decisions was unconstitutional. The crisis gave renewed impetus to the opposition alliance who called for a series of mass strikes. A new draft constitution was presented to the King in 2003, introducing a bill of rights but maintaining the executive role of the monarchy and the ban on political parties. Having been adopted by parliament and signed by the King in 2005, the constitution came into force in Jan. 2006.

Swaziland has one of the highest AIDS rates in the world. In Oct. 2001 Mswati ordered that all virgins should abstain from sex for five years or face a fine. The following month Mswati made a gift of a cow in recompense for taking an 18 year-old bride, Zena Mahlangu. Mahlangu's mother accused aides of the King of kidnapping her daughter and undertook legal proceedings to secure her return. Although the case collapsed, it received international attention and highlighted the growing challenges to Mswati's autocratic style.

Opposition groups boycotted the Sept. 2008 elections and were critical of the lavish celebrations of Mswati's 40th birthday, coupled with the 40th anniversary of Swaziland's independence.

Pudemo leader Masuku, who had again been detained under anti-terror laws in Nov. 2008, was released in Sept. 2009 vowing to continue campaigning for democracy. In Sept. 2010 around 50 pro-democracy activists, including Masuku, were arrested by police as they prepared for a protest march through the capital, Mbabane.

In 2011, despite a rapidly deteriorating economic situation and declining public revenues, the government continued to resist popular and international demands for reforms. In 2012 the International Monetary Fund reiterated its warnings that Swaziland's budget problems were reaching crisis point. Non-party parliamentary elections in Sept. 2013 made little change to the political composition of the House of Assembly.

In June 2014 the USA excluded Swaziland from a preferential trade programme offering duty-free access to the US market for its failure to meet eligibility criteria on human rights.

ECONOMY

Agriculture accounted for 7.4% of GDP in 2010, industry 46.5% and services 46.1%.

At the core of Swazi society is Tibiyo Taka Ngwane. Created in 1968 by Royal Charter, Tibiyo is a national development fund that operates outside the government and falls directly under the King, who holds it in trust for the nation. Its money derives from its stake in virtually every sector of Swazi commerce and industry.

Overview

Despite strong ties with the South African economy—which is by far the leading trading partner—Swaziland's economic growth has lagged behind other members of the South African Customs Union (SACU). Real GDP growth averaged 2.5% per year between 1993 and 2008, owing to slack economic reforms, declining foreign direct investment inflows and repeated drought.

SACU revenues accounted for around 60% of total government income and 25% of GDP in the financial year 2008–09 but collapsed in 2010–11 when the South African economy contracted. This, along with reduced expenditure on essential infrastructure and poverty alleviation plus unbudgeted wage increases for civil servants and politicians in 2010, sparked a serious fiscal crisis. The central bank reported a fall in national reserves to US$666m. and in 2011 the government failed to satisfy the criteria for IMF and African Development Bank loans. In Aug. 2011 South Africa made an emergency loan of R2.4bn. (US$350m.), demanding in return that the Swazi currency be pegged to the rand.

About 70% of the population is employed in subsistence agriculture. In 2013, 63% of the population lived below the poverty line. The country has the world's highest HIV prevalence and one of the highest death rates, while nearly one-third of children are classified as orphans or vulnerable children.

Reducing dependency on SACU transfers is essential to boosting international competitiveness. A preferential market access agreement with the USA for goods exports expired at the end of 2014, and a similar concession for sugar exports to the European Union is due to expire in 2017. Low levels of economic growth, a poor business environment, high income inequality and persistent unemployment are major hurdles to development.

Currency

The unit of currency is the lilangeni (plural emalangeni) (SZL) of 100 cents but Swaziland remains in the Common Monetary Area and the South African rand is legal tender. Inflation was 5.6% in 2013 and 5.7% in 2014. In July 2005 foreign exchange reserves were US$291m. and total money supply was 1,229m. emalangeni.

Budget

The fiscal year begins on 1 April. Total revenue in 2008–09 came to 9,208m. emalangeni and total expenditure to 9,538m. emalangeni.

There is a sales tax of 14%.

Performance

The economy grew by 3.0% in 2012, 2.9% in 2013 and 2.5% in 2014. Total GDP in 2014 was US$4.4bn.

Banking and Finance

The central bank and bank of issue is the Central Bank of Swaziland (Governor, Majozi Sithole), established in 1974. In 2004 there were four banking institutions, three foreign (South African-owned) private banks, Swazibank (state-owned) and a housing bank. In 2003 there were 178 credit and saving unions.

Foreign debt totalled US$616m. in 2010, representing 17.2% of GNI.

In 1990 Swaziland Stock Brokers was established to trade in stocks and shares for institutional and private clients. A fully-fledged stock exchange, the Swaziland Stock Exchange, was inaugurated in 1999.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Swaziland's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy were the equivalent of 0.7 tonnes per capita in 2011.

Electricity

Installed capacity was an estimated 0.2m. kW in 2011. Production was 654m. kWh in 2011; total consumption was 1,460m. kWh. Swaziland imports over half of its electricity needs from South Africa.

Minerals

Output (in tonnes): coal (2010), 146,000; crushed stone (2012), 308,440 cu. metres. Swaziland's diamond mine closed down in 1996 (1996 production, 75,000 carats) and its asbestos mine in 2000 (2000 production, 12,690 tonnes).

The oldest known mine (iron ore) in the world, dating back to 41,000 BC, was located at the Lion Cavern Site on Ngwenya Mountain.

Agriculture

In 2007 the agricultural population was around 354,000, of which about 141,000 were economically active. There were approximately 178,000 ha. of arable land and 14,000 ha. of permanent cropland in 2007. Production of principal crops (2003 estimates, in 1,000 tonnes): sugarcane, 4,000; maize, 70; grapefruit and pomelos, 37; oranges, 36; pineapples, 32; potatoes, 6; seed cotton, 6; cottonseed, 4; groundnuts, 4.

Livestock (2003 estimates): cattle, 580,000; goats, 422,000; pigs, 30,000; sheep, 27,000; chickens, 3m.

Livestock products, 2003 estimates (in 1,000 tonnes): milk, 38; meat, 22.

Forestry

Forests covered 0.56m. ha. in 2010, or 33% of the land area. In 2011 timber production was 1.41m. cu. metres.

Fisheries

Estimated total catch, 2010, 70 tonnes, exclusively from inland waters.

INDUSTRY

Most industries are based on processing agricultural products and timber. Footwear and textiles are also manufactured, and some engineering products.

Labour

The labour force in 2013 was 446,000 (349,000 in 2003). 58.9% of the population aged 15–64 was economically active in 2013. In the same year 22.3% of the population was unemployed.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Swaziland has a customs union with South Africa and receives a pro rata share of the dues collected.

Imports and Exports

Trade in US$1m.:

	2002	2003	2004	2005	2006
Imports f.o.b.	1,027.0	1,540.2	1,715.3	1,949.4	1,960.7
Exports f.o.b.	1,078.5	1,666.8	1,806.2	1,965.5	1,975.7

Main import products are motor vehicles, machinery, transport equipment, foodstuffs, petroleum products and chemicals; main export commodities are soft drink concentrates, sugar, wood pulp and cotton yarn. By far the most significant trading partner is South Africa. In 2005, 88.3% of imports came from South Africa; 74.6% of exports went to South Africa in 2005.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

The total length of roads in 2002 was 3,594 km, of which 1,465 km were main roads. There were 52,200 passenger cars in use in 2007 plus 41,800 lorries and vans and 8,100 buses and coaches. There were 235 fatalities in road accidents in 2007.

Rail

In 2005 the system comprised 301 km of route (1,067 mm gauge). There are north and south connections to South Africa's rail system, and a link in the northeast with Mozambique and the port of Maputo. In 2009, 4m. tonnes of freight were transported.

Civil Aviation

There is an international airport at Manzini (Matsapha). A new airport, King Mswati III International Airport—also at Manzini—was inaugurated in March 2014 and received its first flights in Oct. 2014. The national carrier is Swaziland Airlink, which had direct flights from Manzini to Johannesburg in 2012. The unrelated Airlink also operated on the same route in 2012.

Telecommunications

In 2013 there were an estimated 46,000 main (fixed) telephone lines; mobile phone subscriptions numbered 805,000 in 2012 (65.4 per 100 persons). In 2013 an estimated 24.7% of the population were internet users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The constitutional courts practice Roman-Dutch law. The judiciary is headed by the Chief Justice. There is a High Court and various Magistrates and Courts. A Court of Appeal with a President and three Judges deals with appeals from the High Court. There are 16 courts of first instance. There are also traditional Swazi National Courts.

The population in penal institutions in March 2012 was 3,411 (284 per 100,000 of national population).

Education

In 2007 there were 232,572 primary school pupils with 7,169 teaching staff. The teacher/pupil ratio has decreased from 40/1 in the 1970s to 32/1. About half the children of secondary school age attend school. There are also private schools. In 2007 there were 83,049 pupils in secondary schools with 4,358 teaching staff. Many secondary and high schools teach agricultural activities.

There were 5,692 students in higher education in 2006 with 462 academic staff. The University of Swaziland (UNISWA), with its main campus at Kwaluseni, was founded in 1982 and has an enrolment of over 5,000 students.

Rural education centres offer formal education for children and adult education geared towards vocational training. The adult literacy rate in 2008 was 87%.

In 2006 public expenditure on education came to 7.9% of GNI and 24.4% of total government spending.

Health

In 2005 there were 400 health institutions, of which nine were hospitals and 19 were health centres. In 2009 there were two physicians for every 10,000 population, 160 nurses and midwives per 10,000 and four dentists for every 10,000.

RELIGION

In 2010 the population was an estimated 88.1% Christian (mainly Protestant) according to the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life. Most of the remainder of the population is religiously unaffiliated.

CULTURE

Press

In 2008 there were two daily newspapers: The Times of Swaziland (English-language with a circulation of 22,000 in 2008), founded in 1897, and The Swazi Observer (English, 15,000).

Tourism

In 2011 there were 1,328,000 non-resident visitor arrivals (including tourists and same-day visitors), down slightly from 1,343,000 in 2010.

Festivals

The annual Umhlanga (Reed Dance) takes place in Aug. or early Sept. in honour of the Queen Mother. Bush Fire is a festival of music and performing arts held in the Malkerns Valley south of Mbabane in May.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Sweden was covered by a thick ice cap until 14,000 years ago, when the ice began to retreat. The first human traces, in southern Sweden, date from 10,000 BC. Between 8000 and 6000 BC the country was populated by hunters and fishermen, using simple stone tools. Artefacts found in graves show that the Bronze Age was marked by a relatively advanced culture. From 500 BC to AD 800 agriculture became the basis for society and the economy. The Viking Age (800–1050) took expansion eastwards. Swedish Vikings reached into today's Russia, where they set up trading stations and principalities, such as Novgorod and Rurik. The Vikings also travelled to the Black and Caspian Seas and developed trading links with the Byzantine Empire and the Arabs.

In 830 the Frankish monk Ansgar introduced Christianity to Sweden but made few converts. In the 11th century, English missionaries had greater success and by the end of the century the country was fully Christianized. Olof Skötkonung, who proclaimed himself ruler of Sweden, supported the new religion.

By 1200 Sweden had become a united kingdom with largely the same borders as it has today, except that Skåne, Halland and Blekinge in the south of Sweden formed part of Denmark, and Jämtland, Härjedalen and Bohuslän in the west belonged to Norway. There was a struggle for power between the Sverker and Erik families, who ruled alternately in 1160–1250. However, by the middle of the 13th century with the building of royal castles and introduction of provincial administration, the crown was able to assert the authority of the central government and impose laws valid for the whole kingdom. Among the most important figures of the 13th century was Birger Jarl, who promoted the newly founded city of Stockholm. At a time when Hanseatic merchants traded in Sweden, Stockholm contained a large German population while, on the southeast coast, Kalmar and Gotland were controlled by German immigrants. The Hanseatic trading posts to the east included Finland, which was brought into the Swedish kingdom. A new code of law, for the entire country, was introduced in 1350 by King Magnus Eriksson. In 1340 Valdemar Atterdag, King of Denmark, went to war with Sweden over the southern provinces of Skåne, Halland and Blekinge. He attacked Gotland in 1361 in one of the bloodiest battles in Nordic history, to secure a base for further assaults on Sweden and to overthrow the Hanseatic League.

In the 14th century trade increased and until the mid-16th century the Hanseatic League dominated Sweden's trade. In 1350 the Black Death decimated the population. Inheritance and marriage ties united the crowns of Denmark, Norway and Sweden in 1389, under the rule of Queen Margaret of Denmark. In 1397 the loose association known as the Union of Kalmar confirmed her five-year old nephew, Erik of Pomerania, as ruler of the three countries. The Swedish nationalist Sten Sture, who was made king of Sweden in 1470, defeated the Danes at the Battle of Brunkeberg in Stockholm. Following this success, Sten Sture promoted nationalistic sentiment by the public display of a great wood carving of St George slaying the dragon (now placed in Stockholm cathedral) and the setting up of the first Swedish university at Uppsala. The union period (1397–1521) was characterized by a struggle for power between the king, the nobility and the burghers and peasants. These conflicts culminated in the Stockholm Bloodbath in 1520, when eighty leading men in Sweden were executed on orders of the Danish king, Christian II. In 1521 Christian II was overthrown by Gustav Vasa, a Swedish nobleman, who was elected king in 1523.

Empire Building

Gustav Vasa (ruled 1523–60) laid the foundations of the Swedish national state. With the Reformation, Sweden was converted to Lutheranism and the church became a national institution. At the same time power was concentrated in the hands of the king and in 1544 a hereditary monarchy was established. By the 16th century Scandinavia was divided into two states, Sweden-Finland and Denmark-Norway. Since the dissolution of the union with Denmark and Norway, Swedish foreign policy focused on dominating the Baltic Sea, and this led to wars with Denmark from the 1560s.

In 1611 Gustavus Adolphus (Gustaf II Adolf) consolidated Sweden's position on the Russian side of the Baltic Sea. Sweden defeated Denmark in two wars (1643 and 1657) to take control of the previously Danish provinces of Skåne, Halland, Blekinge and Gotland and the Norwegian provinces of Bohuslän, Jämtland and Härjedalen. Gustavus Adolphus gave his support to the Protestant alliance in the Thirty Years War. This cost him his life but earned Sweden territory in the north of Germany. Finland and the present-day Baltic republics also belonged to Sweden making it a great power in northern Europe.

Following the death of King Karl XII in 1718 the Swedish Parliament (Riksdag) introduced a constitution that abolished royal absolutism. But royal authority was soon reasserted. After defeat in the Great Northern War (1700–21) against Denmark,

Poland and Russia, Sweden lost most of its Baltic territories, including a part of Finland and all its north-German possessions except west Pomerania. During the Napoleonic Wars, Sweden lost Finland to Russia and withdrew from its remaining German provinces. In 1810 Napoleon's marshal Jean-Baptiste Bernadotte assumed power as Karl XIV Johan. He tried to win back Finland from Russia, but had to make do with a union of Sweden and Norway, confirmed by the treaty of Kiel in 1814.

The short war against Norway in 1814 was Sweden's last military adventure. Since then Sweden has favoured neutrality. For this reason, there was no early application to join the EEC (European Economic Community). But in line with a commitment to liberalize trade, Sweden was a founder member of EFTA (European Free Trade Agreement) in 1959. After the Cold War and the collapse of the Soviet Union, the policy of neutrality was seen by many as obsolete. Sweden became a member of the EU (European Union) in 1995.

Following constitutional reforms in 1974 the remaining powers of the king were reduced to purely ceremonial functions. Carl XVI Gustaf, who succeeded the throne in 1973, is the first Swedish king to be bound by the new constitution. In 1980 the order of succession was amended to allow for a female member of the royal family to inherit the crown. Consequently, Princess Victoria is the heir apparent rather than her younger brother Prince Carl Philip.

Modern Economy

After the Napoleonic Wars, Sweden suffered economic stagnation. The country was poor with 90% of the population living off the land. Out of a population of five million, over one million emigrated between 1866 and 1914, mostly to North America. Industry did not start to grow until the 1890s. However, it then developed rapidly and after the Second World War Sweden was transformed into one of the leading industrial nations in Europe. In the six years to 1951 the country's GNP rose by 20%. Economic success was partly thanks to the early utilization of hydro-electric power which supported the pulp and paper industries of the northern forests. Swedish inventors created the ball-bearing, the adjustable spanner, the primus stove and the cream separator, as well as the safety match and dynamite. By 1956 the economy was booming, poverty had almost disappeared and unemployment was at a minimum. Sweden was one of the richest countries in Europe.

Social democracy began as the political offshoot of the trade unions. The working class was supported by intellectuals, such as the scientist Hjalmar Branting, who was the first Scandinavian socialist prime minister. The first representative of social democracy entered the government in 1917. Universal suffrage was introduced for men in 1909 and for women in 1921. In the 1930s, when the Social Democrats had become the governing party, plans for the welfare society were laid. Reforms included restrictions on child and female labour, free elementary education and old-age pensions. A four-party coalition for the duration of the Second World War was succeeded by a Social Democrat government with Per Albin Hansson as prime minister. Following his death in 1946, Tage Erlander became prime minister and stayed in office until 1969. He was succeeded by Olof Palme who was prime minister between 1969 and 1976. Owing to the rise in oil prices in 1973, unemployment increased. From the mid-1970s, improvements in living standards slowed. Economic crisis drove the Social Democrats out of government and in 1976 a non-socialist coalition was formed under Centre Party chairman, Thorbjörn Fälldin. Conflicts over the expansion of nuclear power led to several government reshuffles. In 1982 the Social Democrats resumed office with Olof Palme as prime minister. The assassination of Palme in 1986 shook the country which had been spared political violence for nearly 200 years. Ingvar Carlsson took over as head of government. In the 1990s industrial production fell and unemployment rose, which led to a high budget deficit and increased national debt. Popular dissatisfaction showed in the 1991 election, when a non-socialist coalition government was formed with Carl Bildt as prime minister. Launching a programme of deregulation and privatization, Bildt did much to prepare the economy for closer involvement with Europe. Capital gains taxes were reduced, as too were social benefits. But the government failed to reduce unemployment, the budget deficit or the national debt. Hence, the 1994 election put the Social Democrats back in power, with Ingvar Carlsson again as prime minister. In 1996 he stepped down to be replaced by Göran Persson. Persson led a series of minority governments. His third term, which began in 2002, was marked by the murder of his foreign minister, Anna Lindh, in 2003 and the rejection by referendum of Sweden's entry into the single European currency.

In Sept. 2006 the Social Democrats emerged from elections as the single biggest party but Fredrik Reinfeldt of the Moderate Party was able to form a centre-right 'Alliance for Sweden' coalition to end 12 years of Social Democratic government. No party secured a majority at the parliamentary elections of 2010, polls in which the Sweden Democrats became the first Swedish far-right party to win parliamentary representation. Later that year, the government applied to the UK for the extradition of WikiLeaks founder Julian Assange, who had been accused of sexual offences. In response Assange took refuge in London's Ecuadorian embassy, where he remained as of late 2015. Meanwhile, Reinfeldt formed a minority administration but when no party achieved a majority at the general election of Sept. 2014, he was replaced as premier by Stefan Löfven at the head of a centre-left coalition.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Sweden is bounded in the west and northwest by Norway, east by Finland and the Gulf of Bothnia, southeast by the Baltic Sea and southwest by the Kattegat. The area is 447,420 sq. km, including inland water (96,000 lakes) totalling 40,080 sq. km. The area including territorial waters is 528,447 sq. km. At the last census, in 1990, the population was 8,587,353. Parliament decided in 1995 to change to a register-based method of calculating the population. The recorded population at 31 Dec. 2014 was 9,747,355; density 24 per sq. km. In 2011, 84.8% of the population lived in urban areas.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 9.78m.

Count Sigvard Bernadotte of Wisborg, b. 7 June 1907, died 4 Feb. 2002; Count Carl Johan Bernadotte of Wisborg, b. 31 Oct. 1916, died 5 May 2012.

Under the 1975 constitution Sweden is a representative and parliamentary democracy. The King is Head of State, but does not participate in government. Parliament is the single-chamber Riksdag of 349 members elected for a period of four years in direct, general elections.

The manner of election to the Riksdag is proportional. The country is divided into 29 constituencies. In these constituencies 310 members are elected. The remaining 39 seats constitute a nationwide pool intended to give absolute proportionality to parties that receive at least 4% of the votes. A party receiving less than 4% of the votes in the country is, however, entitled to participate in the distribution of seats in a constituency if it has obtained at least 12% of the votes cast there.

A parliament, the Sameting, was instituted for the Sami (Lapps) in 1993.

Stefan Löfven

Position

Prime Minister

Introduction

Veteran trade unionist and leader of the Swedish Social Democratic Party (SAP) Stefan Löfven became prime minister in Oct. 2014 at the head of a centre-left coalition. Löfven refused to invite the far-right Sweden Democrats (SD) into government, opting instead to form a minority administration.

Early Life

Stefan Löfven was born on 21 July 1957 in Stockholm. After finishing school, he trained for a year as a welder before studying social work at Umeå University. In 1976 he began working in the post office, then at a sawmill, and in 1979 joined a vehicle manufacturer as a welder. He became active in the Swedish Metalworkers' Union from the early 1980s, serving as a local branch president in 1988 and a member of the union's national council the following year.

From 2002–05 he was vice-president of the union, taking over as president in 2006 when it became IF Metall. From 2003 he also served on the executive board of the Swedish Trade Union Confederation. He gained a reputation as a skilled negotiator, particularly in the aftermath of the economic crisis of 2008. In 2005 he was appointed to the executive committee of the SAP, serving until 2012, and from 2007–09 chaired its welfare policy review group. In Jan. 2012 he was elected party leader and entered the 2014 general election campaign pledging to increase spending on health and education and to raise taxes, in contrast to the incumbent government's austerity programme. The SAP emerged as the largest party and formed a coalition with other centre-left parties, having declined to invite the far-right SD to join them.

Career in Office

Löfven took office on 3 Oct. 2014, vowing to reduce unemployment, especially among young people, and to invest in infrastructure. However, the minority government experienced early difficulties when, in Dec. 2014, parliament failed to pass the cabinet's budget. In response, Löfven initially called a further election for March 2015, but later in the month struck a deal in which he agreed to follow a modified version of the centre-right opposition's budget for the following year and to cancel the March polls. The agreement was intended to sideline the SD.

On the international stage, Löfven announced in Oct. 2014 that Sweden would officially recognize the State of Palestine, prompting Israel to recall its ambassador from Stockholm in protest.

In 2015, in response to the escalating foreign migrant influx into Europe towards the more prosperous northern EU member states, the Swedish government introduced tighter border controls and other restrictions in the last quarter of the year to stem the unprecedented flow into the country.

DEFENCE

The Supreme Commander is, under the government, in command of the three services. The Supreme Commander is assisted by the Swedish Armed Forces HQ. There is also a Swedish Armed Forces Logistics Organization.

Conscripted military service has been phased out and ended officially on 1 July 2010. 'Required military service' will only be enacted if the country feels threatened.

In 2013 defence expenditure totalled US$6,633m., with spending per capita US$727. The 2013 expenditure represented 1.2% of GDP. Sweden's national security policy is currently undergoing a shift in emphasis. Beginning with the decommissioning of obsolete units and structures, the main thrust of policy is the creation of contingency forces adaptable to a variety of situations.

When Sweden joined the European Union in 1995 the government stressed that membership did not imply any change in the country's traditional policy of non-participation in military alliances, with the option of staying neutral in the event of war in its vicinity.

Sweden has modern air raid shelters with capacity for some 7m. people. Since this falls short of providing protection for the whole population, evacuation and relocation operations would be necessary in the event of war.

The Swedish Civil Contingencies Agency is responsible for civil protection and emergency preparedness and has a mandate spanning the entire spectrum of threats and risks, including wartime defence.

Army

The Army consists of one division HQ and divisional units and three army brigade command and control elements. Army strength, 2007, 10,200 (4,300 conscripts). The Army can mobilize a reserve of 225,000. Voluntary auxiliary organizations numbered 42,000.

Navy

The Navy has two naval warfare flotillas and one submarine flotilla.

The personnel of the Navy in 2007 totalled 7,900 (active manpower, including 2,000 conscripts, 1,300 coastal defence and 320 naval aviation). Reserve strength, 20,000. In addition there is a paramilitary coast guard numbering 600.

Air Force

The Air Force consists of eight air-base battalions, four fighter squadrons, four air transport squadrons, one fighter control and air surveillance battalion, one anti-submarine warfare squadron, one signal intelligence squadron, one airborne early warning squadron and a training school.

Strength (2007) 5,900 (1,500 conscripts), plus 17,000 reserves. There were 130 combat-capable aircraft in 2007 (JAS 39 *Gripen*s).

In 1998 the helicopter units of the Swedish Army and Navy were merged with those of the Air Force to form a single helicopter wing, consisting of four squadrons and an independent unit, which since 2003 has fallen under the direct authority of the Air Force. Strength (2007), 1,050 (250 conscripts).

INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

In a referendum held on 14 Sept. 2003 Swedish voters rejected their country's entry into the common European currency, 56.1% opposing membership of the euro against 41.8% voting in favour. Turnout was 81.2%.

ECONOMY

Services accounted for 72% of GDP in 2012, industry 27% and agriculture 1%.

According to the anti-corruption organization Transparency International, Sweden ranked third in the world in a 2015 survey of the countries with the least corruption in business and government. It received 89 out of 100 in the annual index.

Sweden gave US$6.2bn. in international aid in 2014, which at 1.09% of GNI made it the world's most generous developed country and one of only five industrialized countries to meet the UN target of 0.7%.

Overview

Sweden is a highly developed post-industrial economy with one of the highest GDP per capita ratios in the world. Tax revenue as a percentage of GDP is also one of the world's highest, which affords Swedes an advanced welfare system and a high standard of living. In Sept. 2003 a referendum rejected adoption of the European single currency (euro).

After the 2001 global 'dotcom' technology crash that damaged Ericsson, one of Sweden's largest companies, the economy experienced an upswing with strong recovery in the telecommunications and automobile sectors fuelling export-led growth from 2003–07. Increased exports combined with rising production and low interest rates prompted a revival in business investment. Growth was further buoyed by increased consumer spending.

The economy weathered the global financial crisis that began in 2008, thanks to strong macroeconomic and fiscal fundamentals and a well-diversified private sector. Sweden is one of the few advanced economies where output had exceeded 2008 levels by 2015. Despite sluggish economic conditions in the eurozone, the economy averaged growth of 2.4% between 2010 and 2014, underpinned by strong domestic demand in the context of a weak export market. In the first three quarters of 2015 growth averaged 3.4%. However, household debt is high and rising, while over-inflated house prices and ease of access to low-amortization mortgages pose risks to consumption should the housing market implode.

Public debt is relatively low, averaging 43.9% of GDP in 2014. Unemployment averaged 8% in 2014 and robust job creation saw this figure fall to 7.2% by the third quarter of 2015. However, the IMF has predicted higher unemployment in the short term in the wake of refugee inflows related to the 2015 European migrant crisis, which saw the Swedish population surge by 1.5%. Youth unemployment remains persistently high, at over 20% for those aged 15–24 in 2014. Approximately two percentage points of the overall unemployment rate reflect full-time students entering the job market.

A number of sectors, including electricity, telecommunications and areas of transport, have been deregulated. However, Sweden is facing pressure from the EU to privatize its state monopolies in the pharmaceutical, construction and alcoholic beverage sectors.

Currency

The unit of currency is the krona (SEK), of 100 öre. Inflation rates (based on OECD statistics):

2005	2006	2007	2008	2009	2010	2011	2012	2013	2014

Foreign exchange reserves were US$38,704m. and gold reserves 4.04m. troy oz in Sept. 2009. Total money supply was 1,486.7bn. kr. in Aug. 2009.

Budget

The fiscal year is the calendar year. In 2010 budgetary central government revenue totalled 990.8bn. kr. (933.1bn. kr. in 2009) and expenditure 983.0bn. kr. (940.4bn. kr. in 2009).

Taxes accounted for 71.8% of total revenues in 2010. Principal sources of revenue in 2010 were: taxes on goods and services, 444.5bn. kr.; social contributions, 186.5bn. kr.; taxes on payroll and workforce, 124.5bn. kr.; taxes on income, profits and capital gains, 121.4bn. kr. Main items of expenditure by economic type in 2010: grants, 337.3bn. kr.; social benefits, 255.9bn. kr.; compensation of employees, 113.0bn. kr.; use of goods and services, 104.5bn. kr.

Sweden's budget deficit in 2014 was 1.7% of GDP (2013, 1.4%; 2012, 0.9%). The required target set by the EU is a budget deficit of no more than 3%.

VAT is 25% (reduced rates, 12% and 6%).

Sweden's total GDP in 2014 was US$571.1bn.

In 2008 the state debt amounted to 1,119bn. kr.

Banking and Finance

The central bank and bank of issue is the Sveriges Riksbank. The bank has 11 trustees, elected by parliament, and is managed by a directorate, including the governor, appointed by the trustees. The Governor is Stefan Ingves, appointed for a six-year term. In 2008 there were 118 banks (30 Swedish commercial banks, 33 foreign banks, 53 savings banks and two co-operative banks). Bank deposits from the public in 2008 amounted to 2,201bn. kr.; lending to the public in 2008 amounted to 3,033bn. kr. The largest banks are Nordea Bank AB (generally known as Nordea; previously MeritaNorbanken, formed in 1997 when Nordbanken of Sweden merged with Merita of Finland), Handelsbanken, Skandinaviska Enskilda Banken (generally known as SEB) and Swedbank (formerly FöreningsSparbanken). In April 2000 MeritaNordbanken acquired Denmark's Unidanmark, thereby becoming the Nordic region's biggest bank in terms of assets.

It became Nordea Bank AB in Dec. 2001. By 2009 approximately 71% of the Swedish population were using online banking.

In June 2012 Sweden's gross external debt totalled US$1,006,665m.

There is a stock exchange in Stockholm.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

In 2007 Sweden obtained 31% of its energy from oil, down from 77% in 1970. It aims to end fossil fuel dependency completely by 2020. In 2011, 46-8% of energy consumption came from renewables (wind power, solar power, hydro-electric power, tidal power, geothermal energy and biomass), compared to the European Union average of 13-0%. Sweden has by some margin the highest proportion of its energy consumption coming from renewables of any EU member country. A target of 49% has been set by the EU for 2020.

Environment

Carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2011 were the equivalent of 5.9 tonnes per capita (compared to the European average of 7.1 tonnes per capita). Sweden's greenhouse gas emissions fell by 34.8% between 1990 and 2012.

An Environmental Performance Index compiled in 2016 ranked Sweden third in the world behind Finland and Iceland, with 90.4%. The index examined various factors in nine areas—agriculture, air quality, biodiversity and habitat, climate and energy, fisheries, forests, health impacts, water and sanitation, and water resources. In 2012, 47% of municipal waste was recycled or composted (compared to the European Union average of 42%) with only 1% going to landfill.

Electricity

Sweden is rich in hydro-power resources. Installed capacity was 35,227 MW in 2011, including 16,577 MW in hydro-electric plants, 9,323 MW in nuclear plants and 6,546 MW in thermal plants. Electricity production in 2011 was 150,376m. kWh; consumption was 143,143 kWh. In 2011 consumption per capita was 15,149 kWh. Renewable sources accounted for 61.8% of electricity consumption in 2013 (up from 53.6% in 2008). A referendum of 1980 called for the phasing out of nuclear power by 2010. In Feb. 1997 the government began denuclearization by designating one of the 12 reactors for decommissioning. However, in Feb. 2009 the government announced an end to the 30-year ban on nuclear plant construction. In 2014 there were ten nuclear reactors in operation.

Minerals

Sweden is a leading producer of iron ore with around 2% of the world's total output. It is the largest iron ore exporter in Europe. There are also deposits of copper, gold, lead, zinc and alum shale containing oil and uranium. Iron ore produced, 2005, 23.3m. tonnes; zinc (mine output, zinc content), 214,600 tonnes; copper (mine output, copper content), 97,800 tonnes.

Agriculture

In 2005 agricultural land totalled 3,216,839 ha. There were 2,703,333 ha. of arable land in 2005 and 513,505 ha. of natural pasture on agricultural holdings of more than 2 ha. Of the land used for arable farming in 2007, 2–5 ha. holdings covered a total area of 49,162 ha.; 5–10 ha. holdings covered 99,272 ha.; 10–1–20 ha., 194,006; 20–1–30 ha., 175,331; 30–1–50 ha., 322,764; 50–1–100 ha., 629,899 and holdings larger than 100 ha. covered 1,177,258 ha. There were 72,609 agricultural enterprises in 2007 compared to 150,014 in 1971 and 282,187 in 1951. Around 37% of the enterprises were between 5 and 20 ha. In 2005 Sweden set aside 222,268 ha. (7.3% of its agricultural land—one of the highest proportions in the world) for the growth of organic crops.

Agriculture accounts for 5.8% of exports and 7.9% of imports. The agricultural sector employs 3% of the workforce.

Production (in 1,000 tonnes) in 2008: milk, 3,019; meat, 406; cheese, 114; butter, 39.

Livestock, 2008: pigs, 1,609,289; cattle, 1,558,381; sheep and lambs, 524,780; poultry, 7,194,759. There were 249,191 reindeer in Sami villages in 2007. Harvest of moose during open season 2008: 83,554.

Forestry

Forests form one of the country's greatest natural assets. The growing stock includes 42% spruce, 39% pine and 16% broad-leaved. In 2010 forests covered 28.20m. ha. (69% of the land area). Sweden's largest forest owner is Sveaskog, with holdings of 4.3m. ha. Since 2001 the company has been completely state-owned after taking over the part-privatized AssiDomän corporation. Public ownership (including the state) accounts for 19% of the forests, limited companies own 25% and the remaining 56% is in private hands. In 2011, 71.90m. cu. metres of roundwood were cut.

Fisheries

Total catch in 2012 was 151,609 tonnes (150,117 tonnes from marine waters and 1,492 tonnes from inland waters). In 2012 the fishing fleet consisted of 1,401 vessels totalling 30,705 GT. Imports of fishery commodities were valued at US$3,633m. in 2011 and exports at US$2,852m.

INDUSTRY

The leading companies by market capitalization in Sweden in March 2015 were: Hennes & Mauritz (H&M), a clothing company (US$59.2bn.); Nordea Bank AB (US$49.4bn.); and Ericsson, a technology hardware and equipment company (US$41.3bn.).

Manufacturing is mainly based on metals and forest resources. Chemicals (especially petrochemicals), building materials and decorative glass and china are also important.

Labour

The labour force in 2013 was 5,118,000 (4,631,000 in 2003). 80.9% of the population aged 15–64 was economically active in 2013. Of those in employment in 2013, 78.3% worked in services, 19.3% in industry and 1.8% in agriculture. In that year 47.4% of the labour force was female. 52.4% of the labour force had a secondary education as the highest level and 35.3% had a tertiary education. The unemployment rate in Dec. 2015 was 7.2%; youth unemployment was 24.0% in the third quarter of 2012.

In 2008 fellow EU member countries accounted for 69.7% of imports and 60.0% of exports.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

In 2009 there were 215,597 km of roads open to the public of which 98,467 km were state-administered roads (main roads, 15,329 km; secondary roads, 83,138 km). There were also 1,855 km of motorway. 79% of all roads in 2005 were surfaced. Motor vehicles in 2008 included 4,279,000 passenger cars, 510,000 lorries, 13,000 buses and 489,000 motorcycles and mopeds. There were 1,015,997 Volvos, 434,757 Saabs, 343,060 Fords and 327,379 Volkswagens registered in 2006. Sweden has the lowest death rate in road accidents of any industrialized country, at 2.7 deaths per 100,000 people in 2013. 260 people were killed in traffic accidents in 2013.

Rail

Total length of railways at 31 Dec. 2012 was 11,136 km (8,194 km electrified). In 2012, 193m. passengers and 66m. tonnes of freight were carried. There is a metro in Stockholm (110 km), and tram/light rail networks in Stockholm (8 km), Gothenburg (118 km) and Norrköping (13 km).

Civil Aviation

The main international airports are at Stockholm (Arlanda), Gothenburg (Landvetter), Stockholm (Skavsta) and Malmö (Sturup). The Scandinavian Airlines System (SAS) resulted from the 1950 merger of the three former Scandinavian airlines. It is now known as Scandinavian Airlines. SAS Sverige AB is the Swedish partner (SAS Denmark A/S and SAS Norge ASA being the other two). The Swedish government is the principal shareholder of SAS with a 21.4% share. The governments of Denmark and Norway each own 14.3%. Since 2001, 50% of SAS shares have been listed on the stock exchanges of Stockholm, Copenhagen and Oslo. SAS had a market capitalization in Oct. 2009 of 11,918m. kr. and an operating revenue in 2008 of 53,195m. kr.

Malmö Aviation, a Sweden-based carrier, operates some international as well as domestic flights.

In 2008 Stockholm (Arlanda) handled 18,136,165 passengers (13,281,466 on international flights) and 187,000 tonnes of freight. Gothenburg (Landvetter) was the second busiest airport, handling 4,303,722 passengers (3,158,822 on international flights) and 100,000 tonnes of freight. Malmö handled 1,882,428 passengers in 2006 (1,181,970 on domestic flights).

Shipping

The mercantile marine consisted on 31 Dec. 2008 of 1,036 vessels of 4.53m. GT. Cargo vessels entering Swedish ports in 2008 numbered 19,396 (125.74m. GT) while there were 75,343 passenger ferries (1,011.83m. GT). The number of cargo vessels leaving Swedish ports in 2008 totalled 19,389 (125.47m. GT) and the number of passenger ferries leaving was 75,636 (1,015.82m. GT).

The busiest port is Gothenburg. In 2007 a total of 42.33m. tonnes of goods were loaded and unloaded there (39.46m. tonnes unloaded from and loaded to foreign ports). Other major ports are Brofjorden, Trelleborg, Malmö and Luleå.

Telecommunications

In 2012 there were 4,169,000 main (fixed) telephone lines. In the same year mobile phone subscriptions numbered 11,848,000 (1,254.7 per 1,000 persons). In June 2000 the state sold off a 30% stake in the Swedish telecommunications operator Telia. In Dec. 2002 Telia and the Finnish telecommunications operator Sonera merged to become TeliaSonera. The Swedish state owns 37.3% and the Finnish state 3.2%. In 2013, 94.8% of the population aged 16–74 were internet users. In the same year there were 110.3 wireless broadband subscriptions per 100 inhabitants and 32.6 fixed broadband subscriptions per 100. In March 2012 there were 4.5m. Facebook users.

According to the World Economic Forum's Global Information Technology Report 2010–11 Sweden is ranked first in the world in exploiting global information technology developments.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

Sweden has two parallel types of courts—general courts that deal with criminal and civil cases and general administrative courts that deal with cases related to public administration. The general courts have three instances: district courts, courts of appeal and the Supreme Court. There are 60 district courts, of which 23 also serve as real estate courts and four courts of appeal. The administrative courts also have three instances: 23 county administrative courts, four administrative courts of appeal and the Supreme Administrative Court. In addition, a number of special courts and tribunals have been established to hear specific kinds of cases and matters.

Every district court, court of appeal, county administrative court and administrative court of appeal has a number of lay judges. These take part in the adjudication of both specific concrete issues and matters of law; each has the right to vote.

Criminal cases are normally tried by one judge and three lay judges. Civil disputes are normally heard by a single judge or three judges. In the courts of appeal, criminal cases are determined by three judges and two lay judges. Civil cases are tried by three or four judges. In the settlement of family cases, lay judges take part in the proceedings in both the district court and in the court of appeal. Proceedings in the general administrative courts are in writing; i.e. the court determines the case on the basis of correspondences between the parties. Nevertheless, it is also possible to hold a hearing. The cases are determined by a single judge or one judge and three lay judges. In the administrative court of appeal, cases are normally heard by three judges or three judges and two lay judges.

Those who lack the means to take advantage of their rights are entitled to legal aid. Everyone suspected of a serious crime or taken into custody has the right to a public counsel (advocate). The title advocate can only be used by accredited members of the Swedish Bar Association. Qualifying as an advocate requires extensive theoretical and practical training. All advocates in Sweden are employed in the private sector.

The control over the way in which public authorities fulfil their commitments is exercised by the Parliamentary Ombudsmen and the Chancellor of Justice. In 2008–09 the Ombudsmen received 6,918 cases altogether, of which 68 were instituted on their own initiative. Sweden has no constitutional court. However, in each particular case the courts do have a certain right to ascertain whether a statute meets the standards set out by superordinate provisions.

The population in penal institutions in Oct. 2012 was 6,364 (67 per 100,000 of national population). There are 56 prisons spread throughout the country. Sweden was ranked seventh of 102 countries for criminal justice and sixth for civil justice in the 2015 World Justice Project Rule of Law Index, which provides data on how the rule of law is experienced by the general public across eight categories.

There were 209 incidents of murder, manslaughter and assault resulting in death in 2008 (121 in 1990 and 258 in 2007).

Education

In 2008–09 there were 906,189 pupils in 4,755 compulsory schools. In secondary education at the higher stage (the integrated upper secondary school) there were 396,336 pupils in Oct. 2008 (excluding pupils in the fourth year of the technical course regarded as third-level education). The folk high schools, 'people's colleges', had 27,508 pupils on courses of more than 15 weeks in the autumn of 2008. Around a fifth of pupils attend independent schools ('free schools'), which are non-fee paying public schools owned and run by a variety of educational providers.

In municipal adult education there were 170,318 students in 2007–08.

There are also special schools for pupils with visual and hearing impairments (516 pupils in 2008) and for those who are intellectually disabled (22,595 pupils).

In 2007–08 there were 384,733 students enrolled for undergraduate studies in integrated institutions for higher education. The number of students enrolled for postgraduate studies in 2008 was 16,922.

In 2010 public expenditure on education came to 7.0% of GDP (and accounted for 13.4% of total government expenditure). The adult literacy rate is at least 99%.

Health

In 2008 there were 29,100 doctors, 4,100 dentists, 71,400 nurses and midwives and 25,899 hospital beds. In 2008 Sweden spent 9.4% of its GDP on health.

In 2010, 14% of Swedes aged 15 and over smoked on a daily basis (males, 13%; females, 15%), among the lowest percentages of any industrialized country.

Welfare

Social insurance benefits are granted mainly according to uniform statutory principles. All persons resident in Sweden are covered, regardless of citizenship. All schemes are compulsory, except for unemployment insurance. Benefits are usually income-related. Most social security schemes are at present undergoing extensive discussion and changes.

Type of social insurance scheme	Payments 2008 (in 1m. kr.)
Old-age pension	219,376
Sickness insurance	96,748
Parental insurance	28,705
Child allowance	23,389
Attendance allowance	19,858
Survivor's pension	16,700
Unemployment insurance	13,592
Housing supplement	11,472
Work injury insurance	5,425

Under a Pension Reform Plan Sweden is one of the world's leaders in the shift to private pension systems. In the new system each worker's future pension will be based on the amount of money accumulated in two separate individual accounts. The bulk of retirement income will come from a notional account maintained by the government on behalf of the individual, but a significant portion of retirement income will come from a private individual account. There are two types of pension—the income pension and the premium pension. The income pension comes under a pay-as-you-go system, with the premium pension based on contributions invested in a fund chosen by the insured person.

There is also a guarantee pension for those aged 65 and resident in Sweden for the last three years but without an earnings-related pension. Its value in 2010 was 90,312 kr. for a single pensioner and 80,560 kr. for a married pensioner.

RELIGION

The Swedish Lutheran Church was disestablished in 2000. It is headed by Archbishop Antje Jackelén (b. 1955) and has its metropolitan see at Uppsala. In 2008 there were 13 bishoprics and 1,802 parishes. The clergy are chiefly supported from the parishes and the proceeds of the church lands. Around 70% of the population, equivalent to 6.6m. people, belong to the Church of Sweden. Other denominations, in 2010: Pentecostal Movement, 82,769 members; The Mission Covenant Church of Sweden, 60,445; InterAct, 32,138; Salvation Army, 5,159 soldiers; The Baptist Union of Sweden, 17,441; Swedish Alliance Mission, 13,687. There were also 96,950 Roman Catholics (under a Bishop resident at Stockholm). The Orthodox and Oriental churches number around 120,000 members.

Although there are no official statistics on the number of Muslims, their numbers were estimated at 450,000–500,000 in 2010. An estimated 20,000 Jews lived in Sweden in 2010.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

There are 15 sites under Swedish jurisdiction that appear on the UNESCO World Heritage List: the royal palace of Drottningholm (1991); the Viking settlements of Birka and Hovgården (1993); the Engelsberg ironworks (1993); the Bronze Age rock carvings in Tanum (1994); Skogskyrkogården cemetery (1994); the Hanseatic town of Visby (1995); the Lapponian area (home of the Sami people in the Arctic circle) (1996); the church town of Gammelstad in Luleå (1996); the naval port of Karlskrona (1998); the Kvarken Archipelago and High Coast (2000 and 2006), shared with Finland; the agricultural landscape of Southern Öland (2000); the Mining Area of the Great Copper Mountain in Falun (2001); the Varberg Radio Station (2004) at Grimeton in southern Sweden; the Struve Geodetic Arc (2005), a chain of survey triangulations spanning from Norway to the Black Sea that helped establish the exact shape and size of the earth and is shared with nine other countries; and the Decorated Farmhouses of Hälsingland (2012), an ensemble of timber buildings in northeastern Sweden, a fusion of local building and folk art traditions.

Press

In 2014 there were 84 daily newspapers (of which 79 were paid-for and five were free) with an average daily circulation of 3,082,000. There were also 186 non-dailies in 2014. The leading paper in terms of circulation in 2014 was the free Lokaltidningen Mitt i, with an average daily circulation of 859,000 copies. The paid-for daily papers with the highest circulation are Dagens Nyheter, with an average daily circulation of 283,000 in 2013, and Göteborgs-Posten, with an average daily circulation of 177,000 in 2014. In 2011 there were 70 newspaper online editions with 10,080,000 unique monthly visitors. In 2010 a total of 21,631 book titles were published.

Tourism

In 2013 Swedes stayed 22,557,815 nights in hotels in Sweden and 11,223,586 at campsites; and foreign visitors stayed 6,874,759 nights in hotels and 3,273,264 at campsites. The leading countries of residence of the foreign visitors in 2013 were Norway (2,961,772 nights in hotels and at campsites), Germany, Denmark and the United Kingdom.

Festivals

Important traditional festivals include Lucia, held in Dec, and Walpurgis Night, a spring celebration held in April. The eight-day Malmö Festival includes live music and other cultural events and is held annually in Aug.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Neolithic settlements from around 3,000 BC have been found. Celtic clans settled in fertile valleys in parts of present-day Switzerland from around 1,500 BC, with the Raetians in the east and the Helveti to the west. A Bronze Age Celtic civilization reached its height around 100 BC. An attempt by the Helveti to spread west into Gaul was quashed by Julius Caesar in 58 BC. As the Roman Empire expanded northward and westward, Switzerland came under its domain, centred on Aventicum (Avenches). The Romans constructed a road network from the strategically important Alpine passes but attempts to conquer Germanic tribes to the north and east of the Rhine were thwarted in 9 AD. Garrisons along the Rhine from Lake Constance to Basle were maintained until Roman forces withdrew in 401.

The Germanic Alemanni tribe became dominant in northern and central Switzerland as Rome's influence declined, while Latin-speaking Burgundians held sway in the Jura mountains. Celtic tribes were gradually subsumed over the following centuries. Frankish rulers established monasteries, enabling the spread of Christianity and feudalism throughout west-central Europe in the seventh and eighth centuries. Following the signing of the Treaty of Verdun in 840 western and southwest Switzerland came under the jurisdiction of the Burgundian king, Lothair I, and the north and east formed part of the domain of Louis the German. The Burgundian lands became part of the Holy Roman Empire in 1033, while various independent dukedoms emerged in the north and east, notably Swabia, Zahringen, Savoy and Kyberg. The Kyberg domains of central Switzerland passed to the Habsburgs in 1264. The expansion of this dynasty led to three mountain-based clans—the Uri, the Schwyz and the Unterwalden—forming a defensive league. Their agreement, renewed in 1291, is considered the founding document of the Swiss nation. The league defeated the Habsburgs at Morgarten in 1315 and by 1353 the confederation had added the cantons of Glarus and Zug and the city states of Lucerne, Zürich and Berne, forming the 'Old Federation' of eight states within the Holy Roman Empire.

Defeat at the hands of French forces at Marignano in 1515 led the Swiss confederation to form a 'perpetual alliance' with France and marked the start of a neutral stance. Relations between the cantons deteriorated in the 16th century and during the Reformation, when the city-states of Zürich, Berne, Basle and St Gallen adopted Protestantism while Catholicism was retained in the four forest cantons. The 1531 Treaty of Kappel ended the civil war and preserved Catholicism in the rural south, though religious tensions continued in the late 16th century with the rural cantons and city states linked only by neutrality in the Thirty Years War. The War's end in 1648 and the subsequent Peace of Westphalia saw Switzerland declared independent of the Holy Roman Empire.

Geneva, Basle, Berne and Zürich grew prosperous in the 18th century, becoming Enlightenment centres of intellectual and cultural achievement. Power remained with the oligarchs until the arrival of French Revolutionary troops in their offensive against Austrian and Russian forces in 1798. Napoleon's Act of Mediation in 1803 partially restored political power to the cantons but it was not until 1815 that the Congress of Vienna re-established Switzerland's independence, its perpetual neutrality guaranteed by Austria, France, Great Britain, Portugal, Prussia, Spain and Sweden.

In 1848 a new constitution was approved following disputes between Protestant and Catholic cantons. The 22 cantons were linked by a federal government (consisting of a bicameral parliament that elected a seven-member governing council) and a federal tribunal to rule on intra-cantonal disputes. This constitution was revised in 1874 to allow for national and local referenda on a range of issues.

Switzerland maintained its status of armed neutrality in the First World War but was unable to avoid mass unemployment, leading to a national strike in 1918 and demands for social security. The 1919 Treaty of Versailles reaffirmed Switzerland's neutrality and a year later it joined the League of Nations (based in Geneva). The Federal Council issued a declaration of neutrality at the start of the Second World War and much effort went in to shoring up defences and remaining self-sufficient while surrounded by the Axis powers. The Swiss government subsequently expressed regrets about the country's behaviour in the Second World War following a report by an independent panel of historians on relations with the Nazis.

In 1959 Switzerland became a founding member of the European Free Trade Association but has remained outside the European Union. It joined the UN by a narrow majority in a referendum in 2002. In 2005 Switzerland signed up to the Schengen accord.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Switzerland is bounded in the west and northwest by France, north by Germany, east by Austria and Liechtenstein and south by Italy. Area and population by canton (with date of establishment):

Switzerland last had a traditional decennial census in 2000; it now has an annual census using a register-based method of calculating the population.

In Dec. 2013 the population was estimated at 8,139,631. In Dec. 2011 there were 4,032,400 females and 1,816,000 resident foreign nationals out of a total population of 7,954,700. In the same year foreign nationals made up 22.8% of the population, one of the highest proportions in western Europe. In 2011, 73.7% of the population lived in urban areas. Population density in 2010 was 198 per sq. km.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 8.30m.

German, French, Italian and Romansch (which is spoken mostly in Graubünden) are the official languages. German is spoken by the majority of inhabitants in 19 of the 26 cantons, French in Fribourg, Vaud, Valais, Neuchâtel, Jura and Geneva, and Italian in Ticino. In 2013, 64.5% of the population aged over 15 gave German as their main language, 22.6% French, 8.3% Italian and 0.5% Romansch.

At the end of 2013 the five largest cities were Zürich (380,800); Geneva (189,000); Basle (165,600); Lausanne (130,400); Berne (127,500). In 2013 the population figures of conurbations were: Zürich, 1,217,800; Geneva, 538,300; Basle, 503,900; Berne, 357,600; Lausanne, 345,300; other towns, 2013 (and their conurbations), Winterthur, 104,500 (145,200); Lucerne, 79,500 (214,300); St Gallen, 74,100 (152,400); Lugano, 61,800 (138,100); Biel, 52,400 (94,000).

SOCIAL STATISTICS

Statistics for calendar years:

	Live births	Marriages	Divorces	Deaths
2004	73,082	39,460	17,949	60,180
2005	72,903	40,139	21,332	61,124

2008	76,691	41,534	19,613	61,233

Rates (2008, per 1,000 population): birth, 10.0; death, 8.0; marriage, 5.4; divorce, 2.6. In 2011 the most popular age range for marrying was 30–34 for males and 25–29 for females. Expectation of life, 2008: males, 79.7 years; females, 84.4. In 2007 the suicide rate per 100,000 population was 15.1 (males, 21.9; females, 9.1). Annual population growth rate, 2000–05, 0.7%. Infant mortality, 2008, four per 1,000 live births; fertility rate, 2008, 1.5 births per woman. In 2008 Switzerland received 16,606 asylum applications, up from 10,844 in 2007.

CLIMATE

The climate is largely dictated by relief and altitude, and includes continental and mountain types. Summers are generally warm, with quite considerable rainfall; winters are fine, with clear, cold air. Berne, Jan. 32°F (0°C), July, 65°F (18.5°C). Annual rainfall 39.4" (986 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

A new constitution was accepted on 18 April 1999 in a popular vote and came into effect on 1 Jan. 2000, replacing the constitution dating from 1874. Switzerland is a republic. The highest authority is vested in the electorate, i.e. all Swiss citizens over 18. This electorate, besides electing its representatives to the Parliament, has the voting power on amendments to, or on the revision of, the Constitution as well as on Switzerland joining international organizations for collective security or supranational communities (mandatory referendum). It also takes decisions on laws and certain international treaties if requested by 50,000 voters or eight cantons (facultative referendum), and it has the right of initiating constitutional amendments, the support required for such demands being 100,000 voters (popular initiative). The Swiss vote in more referendums—three or four a year—than any other nation. A mandatory referendum and a constitutional amendment demanded by popular initiative require a double majority (a majority of the voters and a majority of the cantons voting in favour of the proposal) to be accepted while a facultative referendum is accepted if a majority of the voters vote in favour of the proposal. Between 1848 and March 2016, 203 initiatives were put to the vote but only 22 were adopted. The highest turnout for a popular initiative has been 86.3% and the lowest 26.7%.

The Federal government is responsible for legislating matters of foreign relations, defence (within the framework of its powers), professional education and technical universities, protection of the environment, water, public works, road traffic, nuclear energy, foreign trade, social security, residence and domicile of foreigners, civil law, banking and insurance, monetary policy and economic development. It is also responsible for formulating policy concerning statistics gathering, sport, forests, fishery and hunting, post and telecommunications, radio and television, private economic activity, competition policy, alcohol and gambling.

The legislative authority is vested in a parliament of two chambers: the Council of States (Ständerat/Conseil des États) and the National Council (Nationalrat/Conseil National). The Council of States is composed of 46 members, chosen and paid by the 23 cantons of the Confederation, two for each canton. The mode of their election and the term of membership depend on the canton. Three of the cantons are politically divided—Basle into Town and Country, Appenzell into Outer-Rhoden and Inner-Rhoden, and Unterwalden into Obwalden and Nidwalden. Each of these 'half-cantons' sends one member to the State Council. The Swiss parliament is a militia/semi-professional parliament.

The National Council has 200 members directly elected for four years, in proportion to the population of the cantons, with the proviso that each canton or half-canton is represented by at least one member. The members are paid from federal funds. The parliament sits for at least four ordinary three-week sessions annually. Extraordinary sessions can be held if necessary and if demanded by the Federal Council, 25% of the National Council or five cantons.

The 200 seats are distributed among the cantons according to population size:

Zürich	34	Aargau (Argovie)	15
Berne	26	St Gallen (St Gall)	12
Vaud (Waadt)	18	Geneva	11

Lucerne	10	Schwyz	4
Ticino (Tessin)	8	Zug	3
Basel-Country (Bâle-C.)	7	Jura	2
Fribourg (Freiburg)	7	Schaffhausen (Schaffhouse)	2
Solothurn (Soleure)	7	Appenzell Inner-Rhoden	1
Valais (Wallis)	7	Appenzell Outer-Rhoden	1
Thurgau (Thurgovie)	6	Glarus	1
Basel-Town (Bâle-V.)	5	Nidwalden	1
Graubünden (Grisons)	5	Obwalden	1
Neuchâtel (Neuenburg)	5	Uri	1

A general election takes place by ballot every four years. Every citizen of the republic who has entered on his 18th year is entitled to a vote, and any voter may be elected a deputy. Laws passed by both chambers may be submitted to direct popular vote, when 50,000 citizens or eight cantons demand it; the vote can be only 'Yes' or 'No'. This principle, called the referendum, is frequently acted on.

The chief executive authority is deputed to the Bundesrat, or Federal Council, consisting of seven members, elected for four years by the United Federal Assembly, i.e. joint sessions of both chambers, such as to represent both the different geographical regions and language communities. The members of this council must not hold any other office in the Confederation or cantons, nor engage in any calling or business. In the Federal Parliament legislation may be introduced either by a member, or by either chamber, or by the Federal Council (but not by the people). Every citizen who has a vote for the National Council is eligible to become a member of the executive.

The President of the Federal Council (called President of the Confederation) and the Vice-President are the first magistrates of the Confederation. Both are elected by the United Federal Assembly for one calendar year from among the Federal Councillors, and are not immediately re-eligible to the same offices. The Vice-President, however, may be, and usually is, elected to succeed the outgoing President.

The seven members of the Federal Council act as ministers, or chiefs of the seven administrative departments of the republic. The city of Berne is the seat of the Federal Council and the central administrative authorities.

CURRENT LEADERS

Johann Schneider-Ammann

Position
President

Introduction

Johann Schneider-Ammann, an engineer and businessman, assumed office as president for a one-year term on 1 Jan. 2016.

Early Life

Born Johann Schneider on 18 Feb. 1952 in Sumiswald, Switzerland, he graduated in electrical engineering from the Swiss Federal Institute of Technology in Zurich in 1977 before gaining a master's degree in business administration in 1983 from the INSEAD business school in France.

Having married the daughter of Ulrich Ammann, head of the Ammann Group, and adopted the family name, he helped develop the Ammann business abroad, including in China, where he headed up the business from 1990–2010. In 1999 he became chairman of Swissmem, the Swiss association of mechanical and electrical engineering industries. Also that year he was elected to the National Council as a member of the then Free Democratic Party and twice won re-election, in 2003 and then 2007. While an outspoken critic of excessive executive salaries, he attracted criticism in 2008 when he transferred significant company funds to the tax haven of Jersey.

Schneider-Ammann was elected to the Swiss Federal Council on 22 Sept. 2010, and was appointed minister of commerce in Nov. that year. In Dec. 2014 he was elected federal vice-president for 2015, with Simonetta Sommaruga as president. He was elected president for 2016 on 9 Dec. 2015.

Career in Office

Schneider-Ammann advocates liberal economic policies for Switzerland's long-term business sustainability. He is expected to press the European Union for a pact regulating quotas on immigration from EU nations and has also pledged to continue economic support for humanitarian projects in Syria and its neighbouring states.

DEFENCE

There are fortifications in all entrances to the Alps and on the important passes crossing the Alps and the Jura. Large-scale destruction of bridges, tunnels and defiles are prepared for an emergency.

Conscripts complete 18–21 weeks of basic training and then regular annual refresher training up to a set number of service days. In 2013 defence spending totalled US$5,038m. (US$630 per capita), representing 0.8% of GDP.

Army

There are about 4,000 regular soldiers, but some 220,000 conscripts undergo training annually (18 or 21 weeks recruit training at 20; six or seven refresher courses of 19 days every year between 21 and 30). Proposals ('Army XXI') implemented in 2004 envisaged an Armed Forces based on the three areas of promoting peace, defence and general civil affairs support. Troop levels were cut to 220,000 (120,000 conscripts, 20,000 recruits, 80,000 reservists).

Since 2004 Switzerland has a Chief of the Armed Forces in the rank of a lieutenant-general. In peacetime the Army has no general; in time of war the Federal Assembly in joint session of both Houses appoints a general.

In 1999 for the first time a small Swiss contingent was deployed outside the country, in Kosovo.

Navy

There is no Navy in the Swiss Armed Forces but the Land Forces include a small Marine component with patrol boats.

Air Force

The Air Force has five air base commands. The fighter squadrons are equipped with Swiss-built F-5E Tiger IIs and F/A-18s. Personnel (2011), 22,500 including air defence units and military airfield guard units, with 87 combat-capable aircraft.

INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

In a referendum in 1986 the electorate voted against UN membership, but in a further referendum on 4 March 2002, 54.6% of votes cast were in favour of joining. Switzerland officially became a member at the UN's General Assembly in Sept. 2002. An official application for membership of the EU was made in May 1992, but in Dec. 1992 the electorate voted against joining the European Economic Area. At a referendum in March 2001, 76.7% of voters rejected membership talks with the EU, with just 23.3% in favour; turnout was 55.1%.

ECONOMY

Agriculture accounted for 0.7% of GDP in 2013, industry 26.1% and services 73.2%.

According to the anti-corruption organization Transparency International, Switzerland ranked seventh in the world in a 2015 survey of the countries with the least corruption in business and government. It received 86 out of 100 in the annual index.

Overview

Switzerland is a small economy with one of the highest living standards in the world. Owing to a lack of raw materials, prosperity is built on labour skills, a business-friendly environment and technological expertise. As well as banking and insurance, the economy is focused on micro-technology, hi-tech industry, biotechnology and pharmaceuticals. Small- and medium-sized businesses dominate. The favourable business environment attracted foreign direct investment averaging 2.6% of GDP between 2010 and 2014.

The central government oversees foreign policy, defence, pensions, postal services, telecommunications, railway services and currency management. All other responsibilities are dealt with at the canton level, notably economic regulation, education, health care and the judiciary. This system has led to large income disparities across cantons, with tax revenue per capita differing by as much as a factor of two. In 2004 a referendum approved the New Financial Equalization System, which provided a clearer division between federal and local responsibilities.

In 2000 the National Bank introduced a monetary policy framework aimed at keeping inflation below 2%. Inflation has remained low for many years, contained primarily by strong retail competition and a flexible labour market. In 2004 the authorities launched a reform agenda to open up sheltered sectors (i.e. sectors protected from foreign competition), reduce the role of the state, encourage external economic relations and improve the education system in a bid to boost competition and growth. Following these reforms growth accelerated and became broad-based, benefiting from buoyant global markets and supported by strong investment and private consumption.

Switzerland hosts the world's third largest financial market (with the financial sector accounting for 10.5% of GDP in 2013 and employing 5.7% of the working population at the end of 2014). Consequently, it suffered in the global financial crisis when banks made large losses and the country's largest bank, UBS, had to be rescued by the government in late 2008. The economy went into recession in 2009, but strong growth in emerging markets (notably China, with which Switzerland has a free trade agreement) offset reduced demand from EU countries, which had normally absorbed half of all exports. Economic growth has since remained steady, averaging 1.7% between 2011 and 2014.

Financial regulations adopted in Jan. 2012 demanded that UBS and Credit Suisse bank hold additional capital and liquidity, and a countercyclical capital buffer requiring banks to build capital gradually as imbalances in the credit market develop was implemented in July 2012.

The Swiss National Bank (SNB) implemented a minimum exchange rate floor in Sept. 2011 to contain spillovers from the eurozone sovereign debt crisis. Deflation was initially avoided but in late 2014 inflows of capital forced the SNB to intervene more heavily to defend the floor. In Jan. 2015 the SNB exited the floor and the exchange rate appreciated substantially. The SNB's balance sheet equated to around 80% of GDP in 2015. In the pension and health care sectors pressures are building in the face of a projected 16% increase in the old-age dependency ratio by 2035. Solving long-term fiscal problems is proving highly challenging, despite a VAT increase to finance social security.

Currency

The unit of currency is the Swiss franc (CHF) of 100 centimes or Rappen. Foreign exchange reserves were US$78,864m. in Sept. 2009 and gold reserves were 33.44m. troy oz (77.79m. troy oz in 2000). Inflation rates (based on OECD statistics):

2005	2006	2007	2008	2009	2010	2011	2012	2013	2014
1.2%	1.1%	0.7%	2.4%	-0.5%	0.7%	0.2%	-0.7%	-0.2%	0.0%

Total money supply in July 2009 was 339,809m. Swiss francs. The Swiss franc was pegged to the euro in Sept. 2011 but the Central Bank ended the currency ceiling in Jan. 2015.

Budget

Revenue and expenditure of the Confederation, in 1m. Swiss francs, for calendar years:

	2005	2006	2007	2008	2009
Revenue	52,985	58,506	58,739	64,243	68,082
Expenditure	52,607	53,096	62,178	64,189	58,704

VAT is 8%, with reduced rates of 3.8% and 2.5%.

Performance

Real GDP growth rates (based on OECD statistics):

2005	2006	2007	2008	2009	2010	2011	2012	2013	2014
3.0%	4.0%	4.1%	2.3%	-2.1%	3.0%	1.8%	1.1%	1.8%	1.9%

Total GDP was US$701.0bn. in 2014.

Switzerland was ranked first in the Global Competitiveness Index in the World Economic Forum's Global Competitiveness

Report 2014–2015. The index analyses 12 areas of competitiveness for over 100 countries including macroeconomy, higher education and training, institutions, innovation and infrastructure. In the 2015 World Competitiveness Yearbook, compiled by the International Institute for Management Development, Switzerland came fourth in the world ranking. This annual publication ranks and analyses how a nation's business environment creates and sustains the competitiveness of enterprises.

Banking and Finance

The National Bank, with headquarters divided between Berne and Zürich, opened on 20 June 1907. It has the exclusive right to issue banknotes. The Chairman is Thomas Jordan.

In 2012 there were 297 banks with total assets of 2,778,279m. Swiss francs. Of these 24 were cantonal banks, two big banks, 66 regional and saving banks, one Raiffeisen bank (consisting of 321 member banks) and 204 other banks. The number of banks has come down from 625 in 1990.

In 2012 the largest banks in order of market capitalization were UBS (US$54.2bn.) and Crédit Suisse Groupe (US$36.2bn.). UBS ranks sixth in Europe by market capitalization and is Europe's ninth largest bank by assets, which totalled US$1,509,000m. in 2012. Banking, insurance and other finance activities is one of Switzerland's most successful industries, and contributed 10.3% of the country's GDP in 2011.

Total foreign direct investment in 2014 was US$21.9bn.

In June 2012 Switzerland's gross external debt totalled US$1,440,975m.

The stock exchange system has been reformed under federal legislation of 1990 on securities trading and capital market services. The four smaller exchanges have been closed and activity concentrated on the major exchanges of Zürich, Basle and Geneva, which harmonized their operations with the introduction of the Swiss Electronic Exchange (EBS) in 1995. Zürich is a major international insurance centre.

In Aug. 1998 Crédit Suisse and UBS AG agreed a deal to pay US$1.25bn. (£750m.) to Holocaust survivors over a three-year-period in an out-of-court settlement. The deal brought to an end the issue of money left in Holocaust victims' Swiss Bank accounts that were allowed to remain dormant after the war.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

In 2012 carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption and flaring of fossil fuels were the equivalent of 6.4 tonnes per capita. An Environmental Performance Index compiled in 2016 ranked Switzerland 16th of 180 countries, with 86.9%. The index examined various factors in nine areas—agriculture, air quality, biodiversity and habitat, climate and energy, fisheries, forests, health impacts, water and sanitation, and water resources.

Switzerland is one of the world leaders in recycling. In 2012, 50% of all household waste was recycled, including 96% of glass and 92% of aluminium cans.

Electricity

Installed capacity was 20.0m. kW in 2011. Production was 64.6bn. kWh in 2011. 52.8% of electricity produced in 2011 was hydro-electric, 41.3% nuclear and 5.5% conventional thermal. In 1990, 54% of citizens voted for a ten-year moratorium on the construction of new nuclear plants. A referendum was held in 2003 on proposals to write a commitment to phase out nuclear power altogether into the constitution. However, the proposal was rejected. In May 2011 the government decided to abandon plans to build any further nuclear reactors in the wake of the Fukushima disaster in Japan. There are currently five nuclear reactors in use. Consumption per capita in 2011 was 8,455 kWh.

Minerals

In 2011, 4,700 people were employed in mining and quarrying. Production estimates in 2011 (in 1,000 tonnes): salt, 500; gypsum, 350; lime, 85.

Agriculture

The country is self-sufficient in milk. Agriculture is partly protected by subsidies and imports are regulated according to WTO standards. In 2012 agriculture occupied 3-6% of the total workforce. There were 269,500 ha. of open arable land in 2012, 133,600 ha. of cultivated grassland and 611,200 ha. of natural grassland and pastures. In 2012 there were 13,100 ha. of vineyards. There were 56,600 farms in 2012 (56% in mountain or hill regions), of which 2,400 were under 1 ha., 20,800 over 20 ha. and 16,300 in part-time use. In 2012 there were 403,000 ha. of arable land and 23,700 ha. of permanent crops. Approximately 11-6% of all agricultural land is used for organic farming—one of the highest proportions in the world.

Area harvested, 2012 (in 1,000 ha.): cereals, 147; sugar beets, 19; potatoes, 11. Production, 2012 (in 1,000 tonnes): sugar beets, 1,673; wheat, 502; potatoes, 451; barley, 185; maize, 147; rapeseed, 66; carrots, 46. Fruit production (in 1,000 tonnes) in 2012 was: apples, 232; grapes, 127; pears, 48. Wine is produced in 25 of the cantons. In 2012 vineyards produced 100m. litres of wine.

Livestock on farms, 2012 (in 1,000): cattle, 1,565; pigs, 1,544; sheep, 417; goats, 88; horses, 58; chickens, 9,878. Livestock products, 2012 (in 1,000 tonnes): milk, 4,111; meat, 487; cheese, 181.

Forestry

In 2010 the area under forests was 1.24m. ha., or 31% of the total land area. In 2011, 4.86m. cu. metres of roundwood were cut.

Fisheries

Total catch, 2010, 1,653 tonnes, exclusively freshwater fish.

INDUSTRY

The leading companies by market capitalization in Switzerland in March 2015 were: Novartis AG, a pharmaceuticals company (US$267.9bn.); Nestlé SA, a world leader in food and beverages (US$243.7bn.); and Roche AG, a health care company (US$237.7bn.).

The chief food producing industries, based on Swiss agriculture, are the manufacture of cheese, butter, sugar and meat. Among the other industries, construction, the manufacture of chemicals and pharmaceutical products, the production of machinery (including electrical machinery and scientific and optical instruments) and watch and clock making are the most important. The leading industries in 2012 in terms of value added (in 1m. Swiss francs) were: construction, 31,245 (5.0% of GDP); pharmaceutical products, 23,704 (3.8%); computer, electronic and optical products, 23,651 (3.8%); food and tobacco products, 12,228 (2.0%); machinery and equipment, 11,119 (1.8%); electricity, gas, steam and air conditioning supply, 9,304 (1.5%).

Labour

In 2011 the total working population was 4,366,000, of whom 670,000 people were in manufacturing, 615,000 in trade and 566,000 in health. The unemployment rate in 2014 was 4.5%. In 2011, 85.4% of men and 73.3% of women between the ages of 15 and 64 were in employment. The percentage of men in employment is one of the highest among the major industrialized nations.

The foreign labour force was 1,014,000 in 2011 (410,000 women). Of these 187,000 were German, 158,000 Italian, 143,000 Portuguese and 60,000 French. In 2011 approximately 698,000 EU citizens worked in Switzerland.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Legislation of 1991 increased the possibilities of foreign ownership of domestic companies.

Imports and Exports

Imports and exports, excluding gold (bullion and coins) and silver (coins), were (in 1m. Swiss francs):

	2008	2009	2010	2011	2012
Imports	197,521	168,998	183,436	184,540	185,409
Exports	215,984	187,448	203,484	208,203	211,808

In 2012 the EU accounted for 74.6% of imports (138.3bn. Swiss francs) and 55.7% of exports (118.0bn. Swiss francs). Main import suppliers in 2012 (share of total trade): Germany, 29.6%; Italy, 10.2%; France, 8.4%; USA, 5.7%; China, 5.5%. Main export markets: Germany, 19.8%; USA, 11.1%; Italy, 7.1%; France, 7.0%; UK, 5.4%.

Main imports in 2012 (in 1m. Swiss francs): consumer goods, 78,225; raw materials and semi-manufactures, 40,946; capital goods, 40,165.

Main exports in 2012 (in 1m. Swiss francs): chemicals, 79,012; precision instruments, clocks and watches and jewellery, 44,040; machinery and electronics, 33,307.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

In 2011 there were 71,452 km of roads, comprising 1,415 km of motorways, 18,411 km of highways and national roads and 51,638 km of secondary and local roads. Motor vehicles in 2011 (in 1,000): passenger cars, 4,163; motorcycles and mopeds, 834; vans and lorries, 349; buses and coaches, 16. Freight transported by road in 2010 totalled 17.1bn. tonne-km. Switzerland has one of the lowest death rates in road accidents of any industrialized country, at 4.1 deaths per 100,000 people in 2011. Road accidents injured 23,242 people in 2011 and killed 320 (down from 954 in 1990).

Switzerland was ranked fourth for its road infrastructure in the World Economic Forum's Global Competitiveness Report 2009-2010.

Rail

In 2010 the length of the general traffic railways was 5,105 km. In 2013 Swiss and foreign railway companies carried 477m. passengers and 65m. tonnes of freight. In Oct. 2010 the final breakthrough of the world's longest rail tunnel took place—the 57-km long tunnel under the Gotthard mountain range in the Alps linking Erstfeld and Bodio. The tunnel is scheduled to open in late 2016. There are a number of tram/light rail networks, notably in Basle, Berne, Geneva, Lausanne, Neuchâtel and Zürich. There are many other railway networks, the most important of which are the BLS (436 km) and Rhaetian (384 km) networks.

Switzerland was ranked first for rail infrastructure in the World Economic Forum's Global Competitiveness Report 2009-2010.

Civil Aviation

There are seven airports with international scheduled and charter traffic: Basle (the binational Euroairport, which also serves Mulhouse in France), Berne (Belp), Geneva (Cointrin), Lugano (Agno), Sion, St Gallen (Altenrhein) and Zürich (Kloten). In 2013 these airports handled 45,501,533 passengers and 403,250 tonnes of freight and mail. Swissair, the former national carrier, faced collapse and grounded flights in Oct. 2001. In April 2002 a successor airline, Swiss International Air Lines (Swiss), took over as the national carrier. Services were also provided in 2013 by over 80 foreign airlines. Zürich is the busiest airport, handling 24,853,679 passengers in 2013 and 327,055 tonnes of freight. Geneva handled 14,328,107 passengers and 36,276 tonnes of freight in 2013. Together these two airports accounted for 86% of Swiss passenger traffic in 2013.

In the World Economic Forum's Global Competitiveness Report 2009-2010 Switzerland ranked fifth for quality of air transport infrastructure.

Shipping

In 2010 there were 1,226 km of navigable waterways. 6.0m. tonnes of freight were transported on the Rhine in 2014. A merchant marine was created in 1941, the place of registry of its vessels being Basle. In 2007 it totalled 581,683 GRT.

Telecommunications

In 2012 there were 4.7m. main (fixed) telephone lines. In the same year mobile phone subscriptions numbered 10.6m. (1,320.6 per 1,000 persons). In 2010, 80.7% of households had internet access. The fixed broadband penetration rate in 2013 was 42.5 subscriptions per 100 inhabitants. In March 2012 there were 2.7m. Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The Federal Court, which sits at Lausanne, consists of 30 judges and 30 supplementary judges, elected by the Federal Assembly for six years and eligible for re-election; the President and Vice-President serve for two years and re-election is not practised. The Tribunal has original and final jurisdiction in suits between the Confederation and cantons; between different cantons; between the Confederation or cantons and corporations or individuals; between parties who refer their case to it; or in suits which the constitution or legislation of cantons places within its authority. It is a court of appeal against decisions of other federal authorities, and of cantonal authorities applying federal laws. The Tribunal comprises two courts of public law, two civil courts, a chamber of bankruptcy, a chamber of prosecution, a court of criminal appeal, a court of extraordinary appeal and a Federal Criminal Court.

A Federal Insurance Court sits in Lucerne, and comprises 11 judges and 11 supplementary judges elected for six years by the Federal Assembly.

A federal penal code replaced cantonal codes in 1942. It abolished capital punishment except for offences in wartime; this latter proviso was abolished in 1992.

The population in penal institutions in Sept. 2012 was 6,599 (82 per 100,000 population).

Education

Education is administered by the confederation, cantons and communes. The cantons and their local municipalities finance 90% of public expenditure on education. The total compulsory school period amounts to 11 years. The primary level comprises eight years and the lower secondary level takes three years. In the canton of Ticino, the lower secondary level (scuola media) lasts for four years. Generally, compulsory education sets in for children at the age of four.

After the end of their compulsory school years roughly two-thirds of young people in Switzerland switch to a form of education that combines classroom instruction at a vocational school with an apprenticeship in a training company (dual-track system). This provides them with a VET (vocational education and training) certificate and can also be concluded with a federal vocational baccalaureate. Around one-third opt for continuing school education at a specialized upper secondary or a baccalaureate school, which prepare students for tertiary education at a university.

The tertiary level comprises universities (including universities of applied sciences and universities of teacher education) and, as a second important pillar, institutions providing professional education and training.

In 2013–14 there were 910,285 pupils in compulsory education (162,154 in pre-primary schools, 450,350 at primary, 263,709 at lower secondary and 34,072 at special schools), 361,737 in Stage II secondary education and 289,699 students in higher education, including 142,164 students at universities and 87,291 at universities of applied sciences.

There are ten universities (date of foundation and students in 2014–15): Basle (1460, 13,238), Berne (1528, 16,477), Fribourg (1889, 10,422), Geneva (1559, 15,781), Lausanne (1537, 14,089), Lucerne (16th century, 2,821), Neuchâtel (1866, 4,348), St Gallen (1899, 8,449), Svizzera italiana (1996, 3,016), Zürich (1523, 26,338); two institutions of technology: Federal Institute of Technology Lausanne (1853, 9,710), Federal Institute of Technology Zürich (1854, 18,185); and two institutions of equivalent status recently created: Kurt Bösch Institut in Sion and Fern Studien Schweiz in Brig (combined total of 1,087 students). There are nine universities of applied sciences (date of foundation and enrolment figures for 2014–15): Berne (1997, 6,923); Central Switzerland (1997, 6,739); Eastern Switzerland (1997, 5,449); Kalaidos (2005, 1,798); Les Roches-Gruyère (2008, 226); Northwestern Switzerland (1997, 11,833); Southern Switzerland (1997, 4,581); Western Switzerland (1997, 19,390); Zürich (2007, 20,014). There were 12,703 students enrolled at universities of teacher education in 2014–15.

19% of university students in 2014–15 were foreign (with foreign school education).

In 2011 public expenditure on education came to 5.3% of GDP and accounted for 15.7% of total government expenditure. The adult literacy rate is at least 99%.

Health

There were 34,348 doctors in 2014, and 4,181 dentists and 4,350 pharmacists in 2012. There were 293 hospitals with 37,836 beds in 2013. In 2012, 28.2% of the population were smokers. In 2011 Switzerland spent 8.1% of its GDP on health. Although active euthanasia is illegal in Switzerland, doctors may help patients die if they have given specific consent.

Welfare

The Federal Insurance Law against accident and illness, of 13 June 1911, entitled all citizens to insurance against illness; foreigners could also be admitted to the benefits. Major reform of the law was ratified in 1994 and came into effect in 1996, making it compulsory for all citizens. Subsidies are paid by the Confederation and the Cantons only for insured persons with low incomes. Also compulsory are the Old-Age and Survivors' Insurance (OASI, since 1948), Invalidity Insurance (II, since 1960) and Accident Insurance (1984/1996). Unemployment Insurance (1984) and Occupational benefit plans (Second Pillar, 1985) are compulsory for employees only.

The following amounts (in 1m. Swiss francs) were paid in social security benefits:

	2006	2007
Occupational pension plans	36,944	39,089
Old-age and survivors' insurance	31,559	33,171
Mandatory health insurance	19,095	19,897
Disability insurance	11,292	11,736
Accident insurance for employees	6,514	6,477
Family allowances	4,860	4,973
Unemployment insurance	5,080	4,311
Supplementary benefits (OASI/II)	3,080	3,246
Total (including other benefits)	127,496	132,364

RELIGION

There is liberty of conscience and of creed. The leading religion confessions in 2010 were the Roman Catholic Church (38.6% of the population) and the Swiss Reformed Church (28.0%). Other Christians accounted for 5.5% of the population in 2010 and Muslims 4.5%, while 20.1% did not have any religious affiliation. In Feb. 2016 the Roman Catholic church had four cardinals with Swiss nationality.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

There are 11 sites in Switzerland that appear on the UNESCO World Heritage List. They are (with the year entered on list): the Abbey-Cathedral of St Gallen (1983), the 9th-century Benedictine convent of St John at Münstair (1983), the Old City of Berne (1983), the three castles and city walls of Bellinzona (2000), the Jungfrau-Aletsch-Bietschhorn mountain region (2001 and 2007), Monte San Giorgio (2003), the Lavaux vineyard terraces (2007), the Swiss Tectonic Arena Sardona (2008) and La Chaux-de-Fonds/Le Locle watchmaking town-planning (2009). The Rhaetian Railway in the Albula/Bernina Landscapes (2008) is shared with Italy and the Prehistoric Pile dwellings around the Alps (2011) is shared with Austria, France, Germany, Italy and Slovenia.

Press

There were 79 daily newspapers in 2013 and 93 paid-for non-daily papers. The average circulation of paid-for daily papers in 2013 was 1,810,000 and of free dailies 1,039,000. There were 52 newspaper online editions in 2013. The number of newspaper online unique monthly visitors rose from 89,099,000 in 2010 to 195,105,000 in 2013.

Tourism

Tourism is an important industry. In 2013 there were 8.97m. non-resident tourists staying at hotels and similar establishments, bringing revenue of US$20,440m. Overnight stays by tourists in hotels and health establishments totalled 35,624,000 in 2013 (19,735,000 by foreigners). The main countries of origin of foreign tourists were Germany (4,573,000 overnight stays in 2013), the UK (1,640,000) and the USA (1,585,000). 13.60m. Swiss citizens travelled abroad in 2013.

Festivals

The Lucerne Festival is one of Europe's leading cultural events and since 2001 has been split into three festivals: Ostern during Lent, Sommer in Aug.–Sept. and Piano in Nov. The 2013 summer festival was attended by 85,000 people. The Montreux Jazz Festival is held annually in July. It attracts over 250,000 people per year. The biggest rock and pop festivals are OpenAir St Gallen (June), Paléo Festival in Nyon (July), Gurtenfestival in Berne (July) and Rock Oz'Arènes in Avenches (Aug.).

SYRIA

Syria prospered under Byzantium until the Persian invasions of the 6th century. In the 620s Emperor Heraclius briefly regained the region for Byzantium, before ceding it to Muslim Arab forces at the Battle of the Yarmuk River in 636. Syria was at the heart, geographically and politically, of the Umayyad empires for the next 100 years. From 661 Damascus was capital of the Umayyad Caliphate, though its influence declined after 750 when the Abbasid Caliphate moved the capital to Baghdad.

From 969 the resurgent Byzantine Empire challenged for control of the region, twice conquering its principal cities. In 1085 Syria was conquered by the Seljid Turks. With the beginning of the Crusades Muslim-held strongholds were repeatedly attacked by Christian invaders. Antioch and Edessa fell to the crusaders in 1098 and Jerusalem in 1099. In the 12th century Muslim tribes won back much land under the successive leaderships of Zengi of Mosul, Nur-ad Din and Salah ad-Din (Saladin). Salah ad-Din founded the Ayyubid dynasty and in 1187 his forces recaptured Jerusalem from the Christians.

In 1260 a series of Mongol invasions began from the east, destroying cities and agriculture before being repelled by the Egyptian Mamluks. The Mamluks also drove the last crusaders from the Holy Land in 1302. The area remained under Mamluk rule until it fell to the Ottoman Turks in 1516. In the 1830s Egyptian forces invaded Syria as part of a wider war against the Ottomans. European powers became involved, brokering several agreements and finally forcing Egypt to withdraw in 1840.

During the First World War, in which Turkey joined the Central Powers, the French and British drew up the Sykes-Picot agreement, which planned the division of the Middle East into areas of French and British control. After the end of the war, the Ottoman Empire was dissolved and Lebanon, Palestine and Transjordan were made separate territories, reducing Syria to its modern borders.

In March 1920 Faisal ibn Husayn of Mecca became king of Syria but was deposed by the French, who were awarded the Syrian mandate by the League of Nations later that year. A widespread revolt against French rule was suppressed in 1925, with French troops bombarding Damascus. An abortive attempt to negotiate independence in 1936 was followed by more fruitful discussions in 1941, when British and Free French forces occupied the country. Syria held elections in 1943, electing the nationalist Shukri al-Kuwatli as president. Syrian independence was recognized on 1 Jan. 1944 and European forces withdrew in 1946.

A series of military coups from 1949–54 interrupted civilian government. The 1948 Arab–Israeli War, in which Syria fought for the Palestinians, ushered in decades of mutual hostility with neighbouring Israel. In 1956 the Suez Crisis prompted a period of martial law. In the same year Syria signed a pact with the Soviet Union which ensured supplies of military equipment in return for Communist influence. Popular enthusiasm for the Pan-Arabist movement led Syria to unite with Egypt in 1958, creating the United Arab Republic. However, Syria seceded in Sept. 1961 and a series of military coups ensued, culminating in the Ba'ath Party taking power in 1963. After the Syrian Ba'athists split from the Iraqi Ba'athists in 1966, long-term tensions arose between the two countries and led to Syrian support for Iran.

The 1967 war with Israel resulted in the loss of the Golan Heights. In 1970 Hafez al-Assad (of the minority Alawite sect) seized power. He was elected president in 1971 and embarked on a 'corrective' movement to end corruption. Domestic opposition was suppressed and the Sunni fundamentalist Muslim Brotherhood was destroyed along with the city of Hamah in 1982. Syrian forces invaded Lebanon in 1976 to prevent a Palestinian victory over the Maronite Christians, with whom Syria had political ties.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Ancient Syria, a region encompassing modern Israel, Palestine, Lebanon and Jordan, was home to some of the world's earliest civilizations. From the city of Ebla, founded around 3000 BC, the Semitic empire developed. This was succeeded around 2260 BC by the Akkadian empire, then by the Amorites whose cities fell to the Hittites in the mid-2nd millennium BC. During the next 500 years Canaanites, Phoenicians, Aryans, Aramaeans and Hebrews settled different parts of the region. From the 9th–7th centuries BC the Assyrian empire dominated until, weakened by Cimmerian and Scythian immigration, it gave way to Babylonian rule.

The Babylonian empire, which saw the enslavement of the Jews, was defeated in 539 BC by the Persian King Cyrus. In the 4th century BC Alexander the Great overthrew the Persians and Syria came under Greek rule until the expansion of Rome in the early 2nd century BC. Syria became a Roman province in 64 BC. The Greek cities of the interior (the Decapolis) were rebuilt, including Damascus. Palmyra, a key city on the trade routes to the Euphrates, rose against Rome under Queen Zenobia but was defeated in AD 272.

Syria became an important frontier zone under Diocletian, who established lines of defence (limes) against eastern invaders. Syrian cities such as Edessa had contained the earliest Christian communities, and Antioch, where St Peter preached, grew in significance when Emperor Constantine moved the seat of the Empire east to Byzantium in 303. In 451 it was made a patriarchate.

Assad joined the international coalition against the Iraqi occupation of Kuwait in 1991 and engaged in unsuccessful talks with Israel in the 1990s. His son, Bashar, took over on Assad's death in 2000. In 2003 Syria refused to back the US-led invasion of Iraq and relations with Washington were further strained over US accusations of Syrian support for terrorism. Though Syrian influence in Lebanon remained strong, it withdrew its last troops from the country in 2005, after involvement in the assassination of the former Lebanese prime minister, Rafiq al-Hariri. Following French-brokered talks, in Oct. 2008 Syria established diplomatic relations with Lebanon for the first time.

Beginning in March 2011 there were popular anti-government protests throughout the country, echoing similar demonstrations across the Middle East and North Africa. Assad's dismissal of the government and lifting in April of the state of emergency in place since 1963 failed to stem dissent, and his regime adopted an increasingly repressive response to the opposition. This prompted the USA and the EU to impose sanctions from May 2011 and in Nov. that year Syria was suspended from the Arab League. At the end of 2012 the USA joined other nations including France, Turkey, the UK and several Gulf states in recognizing the rebel National Coalition as the legitimate Syrian government, and in March 2013 the UK and USA agreed to provide rebel forces with non-military aid. However, the Assad regime has proved resilient and by May 2014 government forces had successfully retaken the strategically and symbolically important city of Homs after a three-year occupation by insurgents.

The escalating conflict has resulted in some 200,000 deaths since 2011 while around 4m. people have left the country as refugees. The crisis has also prompted an upsurge in activity by international militant organizations, including al-Qaeda and the jihadist Islamic State of Iraq and Syria (since renamed Islamic State). In June 2014 Islamic State declared that it was incorporating territory in Syria and Iraq over which it had taken control into a new caliphate. In Aug. 2014 the UN accused the organization of 'mass atrocities' and in Sept. US led-forces began air strikes against jihadist targets in the cities of Aleppo and Raqqah.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Syria is bounded by the Mediterranean and Lebanon in the west, by Israel and Jordan in the south, by Iraq in the east and by Turkey in the north. The frontier between Syria and Turkey was settled by the Franco-Turkish agreement of 22 June 1929. The area is 185,180 sq. km (71,498 sq. miles). The census of 2004 gave a population of 17,921,000; density, 97 per sq. km. Estimate, 2011, 21,377,000. In 2011, 56.2% of the population lived in urban areas. An estimated 7.6m. Syrians are displaced within the country as a consequence of the civil conflict that began in 2011.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 18.50m.

Area and population (2011 estimate, in 1,000) of the 14 districts (mohafaza):

	Sq. km	Population
Aleppo (Halab)	18,500	4,868
Damascus City	105	1,754
Damascus District	18,032	2,836
Dará	3,730	1,027
Deir Ez-Zor	33,060	1,239
Hamah	8,883	1,628
Hasakah	23,334	1,512
Homs (Hims)	42,223	1,803
Idlib	6,097	1,501
Lattakia (Ladhiqiyah)	2,297	1,008
Qunaytirah	1,861	90
Raqqah	19,616	944
Suwaydá	5,550	370
Tartous	1,892	797

The capital is Damascus (Dimashq), with a 2004 population of 1,414,913. Other principal towns (population, 2004 in 1,000):

Aleppo, 2,132-1; Homs, 652-6; Lattakia, 383-8; Hamah, 313-0; Raqqah, 220-5; Deir Ez-Zor, 211-9; Hasakah, 188-2; Al-Kamishli, 184-2.

Over 1m. Iraqi refugees entered Syria between 2003 and 2007, although many started to return in late 2007. There were an estimated 149,000 refugees in Syria in 2015, down from 755,000 in 2011, with most having left in the wake of the civil war.

Arabic is the official language, spoken by 90% of the population, while 9% speak Kurdish (chiefly in Hasakah in the northeast of the country) and 1% other languages.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2008 births, estimate, 594,000; deaths, 72,000. Rates, 2008 estimate (per 1,000 population): birth, 28-0; death, 3-4. Infant mortality, 2010 (per 1,000 live births), 14. Expectation of life, 2013, was 71-8 years for males and 77-8 for females. Annual population growth rate, 2000-08, 3-1%. Fertility rate, 2008, 3-2 births per woman.

CLIMATE

The climate is Mediterranean in type, with mild wet winters and dry, hot summers, though there are variations in temperatures and rainfall between the coastal regions and the interior, which even includes desert conditions. The more mountainous parts are subject to snowfall. Damascus, Jan. 38-1°F (3-4°C), July 77-4°F (25-2°C). Annual rainfall 8-8" (217 mm). Aleppo, Jan. 36-7°F (2-6°C), July 80-4°F (26-9°C). Annual rainfall 10-2" (258 mm). Homs, Jan. 38-7°F (3-7°C), July 82-4°F (28°C). Annual rainfall 3-4" (86-7 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

A new constitution was adopted on 27 Feb. 2012, after receiving 89.4% support in a referendum with a turnout of 57.4%. It replaced the previous constitution promulgated in 1973. Among the new constitution's provisions is the removal of a previous clause confirming the Arab Socialist Renaissance (Ba'ath) Party, in power since 1963, as the 'leading party in the State and society'. The constitution proceeds to outlaw parties established on a 'religious, sectarian, tribal [or] regional' basis. The President is limited to two seven-year terms, although this clause may not be retroactively applied, allowing the incumbent, President Bashar al-Assad, to remain in office for potentially four terms. At a referendum on 27 May 2007 Bashar al-Assad (b. 1965) was confirmed as President for a second term, receiving 97.6% of the vote. Presidential elections may be contested, though any candidate must be a Muslim. The description of Syria as a 'planned socialist economy' in the 1973 constitution has been replaced by an assertion that the economy 'shall be based on the principle of developing public and private economic activity through economic and social plans'.

The amended constitution was widely perceived as an attempt by President Assad to appease the opposition movement that emerged during the 2011 Arab Spring and placate international opinion against him. Nonetheless, the referendum was boycotted by leading opposition groups and received little support from the international community. Legislative power is held by a 250-member People's Assembly (Majlis al-Sha'ab), renewed every four years in 15 multi-seat constituencies.

RECENT ELECTIONS

Elections were held on 13 April 2016. The ruling National Progressive Front (led by the Ba'ath Party) won 200 of 250 seats. Turnout was 57.6%. Opposition parties boycotted the election. It was reported that over 140,000 refugees crossed the border from Lebanon to vote.

In presidential elections held on 3 June 2014, incumbent president Bashar al-Assad (Ba'ath Party) won 88.7% of the vote, against Hassan al-Nouri (National Initiative for Administration and Change in Syria) with 4.3% and Maher Hajjar (ind.) with 3.2%. Turnout was 73.4%. Despite being Syria's first multi-candidate presidential election in more than four decades it was widely criticized by the international community, with the European Union describing Assad's victory as illegitimate.

CURRENT GOVERNMENT

Following the death of Lieut.-Gen. Hafez al-Assad on 10 June 2000, a presidential referendum was held on 10 July 2000. The former president's son Bashar al-Assad won 97.3% of the vote.

CURRENT LEADERS

Bashar al-Assad

Position
President

Introduction

Bashar al-Assad was confirmed as president in a national referendum in July 2000 following the death of his father the previous month. He had not been groomed for a political career, pursuing instead a medical education in England. However, on the death of his elder brother Basil—their father's chosen successor—in an accident in 1994, Assad was recalled to Damascus. Thereafter he rose through the senior ranks of the armed forces, consolidating his influence and authority within his father's regime to achieve the first-ever father-to-son succession to the highest office in an Arab republic. From March 2011 his repressive rule was dogged by street protests, echoing those in several other Arab states. By early 2012 the discontent had descended into open civil war between the security forces and disparate opposition groups across the country. Despite mounting pressure on Assad from the international community—with the notable exceptions of Russia, China and Iran—to accept political reform or stand down, there has since been little prospect of a lasting resolution to the conflict. By Aug. 2015 the United Nations estimated that some 250,000 Syrians had died, while more than 4m. had fled the country as refugees.

Early Life

Assad was born in Damascus on 11 Sept. 1965. After attending high school in the capital, he went to London, England, to study ophthalmology. Having returned to Syria upon the death of his brother, he became commander of the Syrian army's armoured division. Assad reportedly used this position to install his own supporters and remove ageing senior figures and potential rivals from the army and security services. He was appointed to the rank of colonel in 1999.

When President Hafez al-Assad died suddenly on 10 June 2000, Syria's political establishment was quick to demonstrate support for his son. The People's Assembly voted to change the constitution to lower the minimum age for a president from 40 to 34—Assad's age at that time. The Assembly and the dominant Ba'ath Party approved his nomination for the presidency (as the only candidate) and the party elected him as its secretary-general. He was also declared commander-in-chief of the armed forces, his military rank having been elevated to lieutenant-general. In a national referendum held on 10 July 2000, Assad was endorsed as president with 97.3% of the votes cast.

Career in Office

In his inaugural address to the People's Assembly, Assad spoke of the need for economic reform. He called for the restructuring of the state-dominated economy and improved competitiveness, the dismantling of bureaucracy and the ending of corruption. Private investment has since been encouraged. However, initial signs of political liberalization—a partial lifting of censorship, the release of some political prisoners, tolerance of criticism of the government and party, and the limited introduction of the Internet—faded in 2001 as dissidents were again arrested and detained. On the international stage, peace with Israel remained elusive, given Syria's stipulation that the Israelis give up the whole of the Golan Heights seized in the Six-Day War of 1967. Also, the renewed Palestinian intifada against Israeli occupation polarized the already volatile politics of the Middle East and made a Syrian-Israeli accord increasingly unlikely.

In 2002–03 Syria opposed US military threats against Iraq, fearing the consequences of another war in the Middle East, and claimed that the UN Security Council did not endorse an invasion. US-led forces nevertheless invaded Iraq in March 2003 and Saddam Hussein was toppled the following month. The USA subsequently threatened Assad with economic, diplomatic or other undefined sanctions, suggesting that Syria was harbouring members of Saddam Hussein's regime and had been involved in the development of chemical weapons.

In Jan. 2004 Assad visited Turkey, the first Syrian leader to do so, improving several decades of cool relations between the two countries. The following May the USA imposed economic sanctions on Syria for alleged support for terrorism and failure to stop militants entering Iraq. A UN Security Council resolution adopted in Sept. 2004 and the subsequent assassination of former Lebanese prime minister Rafiq al-Hariri in Beirut in Feb. 2005 (allegedly with Syrian involvement) increased the international pressure on Assad to remove Syria's forces from Lebanon completely. Although the withdrawal was completed in April that year, the UN continued to probe al-Hariri's murder, implicating senior Syrian officials and chiding Assad's government for its perceived lack of co-operation with UN investigators. Syria's frosty diplomatic relationship with the USA was aggravated by Assad's support for Hizbollah during the radical Lebanese militia's war against the Israeli military in July–Aug. 2006.

Following the restoration of Iraqi-Syrian diplomatic ties in Nov. 2006, President Jalal Talabani became the first Iraqi head of state to visit Damascus for 30 years in Jan. 2007. In March the European Union reopened a dialogue with the Syrian government, and in May the US Secretary of State met the Syrian foreign minister in Egypt for the first high-level bilateral contact in two years. Relations with Israel, however, deteriorated further after an Israeli air strike against an undefined site in northern Syria in Sept. (which US intelligence sources claimed in April 2008 to have been a covert nuclear reactor plant).

Despite the ruling National Progressive Front's overwhelming victory in parliamentary elections in April 2007 and Assad's endorsement as president for a further term in a national referendum in May, a crackdown on dissent remained in force. During that year several government critics and human rights campaigners were sentenced to terms of imprisonment, and in Jan. 2008 Syria's leading dissident, Riyad Seif, was detained by security services.

In Oct. 2008 Syria and Lebanon signed an accord establishing diplomatic relations for the first time in their turbulent post-independence history. After several postponements, the Damascus stock exchange was launched in March 2009, marking a further step in the liberalization of Syria's state-controlled economy.

From March 2011 Assad faced popular protests against his rule, echoing similar demonstrations in countries throughout North Africa and the Middle East. The initial release of several dozen political prisoners failed to quell discontent, which spread rapidly from Damascus to other major cities. In April 2011 he lifted the state of emergency in place for 48 years, but violent repression of the uprising by government forces continued in defiance of international opinion. The USA and EU imposed sanctions, including asset freezing and travel bans, and the Arab League suspended Syria's membership. However, China and particularly Russia vetoed UN Security Council resolutions critical of Syria, lending apparent support to Assad's assertion that his opponents were terrorists under foreign direction and did not reflect Syrian public opinion. In late 2012 anti-Assad groups united to form the Syrian National Coalition for Revolutionary and Opposition Forces, which promptly gained diplomatic recognition from the major Western nations, the Gulf states and also from Turkey (the Assad regime's relations with which had by then been further soured by a number of violent border incidents and the tide of Syrian refugees).

In 2013, as the civil war intensified, Syrian government forces were accused of deploying chemical weapons against rebel-held areas in contravention of international law. These reports prompted investigations by UN inspectors and threats of Western military reprisals against the Assad regime. In Sept. that year the UN Security Council unanimously agreed a schedule for the verifiable elimination of Syria's chemical arsenal. International efforts to forge peace negotiations between the Syrian government and rebel representatives made little progress in early 2014. The crisis meanwhile prompted an upsurge in activity by international militant organizations, including al-Qaeda and the jihadist Islamic State (IS). In June 2014 IS declared that it was incorporating territory in Syria and Iraq over which it had taken control into a new caliphate. In Aug. the UN accused the organization of 'mass atrocities' and from Sept. that year US led-international forces, including several Arab states, began air strikes against IS positions. The civil war persisted through 2015 and from Sept. the Russian military joined the hostilities with air strikes ostensibly against IS targets, although Western countries suspected they were directed more widely against moderate Syrian opponents of the Assad regime. In addition, in the wake of jihadist terror attacks in Paris, France in Nov., the UK parliament voted in Dec. to extend British air strikes against IS to Syrian territory (reversing an earlier vote in 2013). At the end of Jan. 2016 UN officials attempted to initiate indirect contacts between Assad's government and Syrian rebel representatives in Geneva, Switzerland amid fragile hopes of a breakthrough to end the five-year conflict and its humanitarian consequences.

Meanwhile, in June 2014 Assad had been returned for another seven-year presidential term by voters in government-controlled areas of the country in the first multi-candidate elections for over 40 years. However, the poll was dismissed by the rebel opposition and Western powers as illegitimate.

DEFENCE

Military service is compulsory for a period of 18 months. Defence expenditure in 2010 totalled US$2,296m. (US$103 per capita), representing 3.9% of GDP. Syria had 14,000 troops based in Lebanon in early 2005, but in March 2005 the two countries agreed that Syria would begin to redeploy the troops to the Bekaa Valley in the east of the country. They were subsequently all withdrawn from Lebanon.

In Sept. 2007 an Israeli air strike destroyed a suspected nuclear reactor in the Deir Ez-Zor region.

Army

At the time of the start of Syria's civil war in 2011, personnel numbered about 220,000 (including conscripts) with a further 280,000 available reservists. In addition there was a gendarmerie of 8,000 and a Workers Militia of approximately 100,000.

Navy

The Navy included 32 patrol and coastal combatants in 2011. A small naval aviation branch of the Air Force operated 13 anti-submarine warfare helicopters. Personnel in 2011 numbered 5,000.

Air Force

The Air Force, including Air Defence Command, had (2011) 70,000 personnel plus 30,000 reservists. Air Defence Command numbered 60,000 in 2011 (including 20,000 reservists). There were 365 combat-capable aircraft (including MiG-21, MiG-23, MiG-25 and MiG-29 supersonic interceptors and Su-22 and Su-24 fighter-bombers), and 33 attack helicopters.

ECONOMY

In 2009 manufacturing, mining and public utilities contributed 31.4% to GDP; followed by agriculture, 21.1%; trade, restaurants and hotels, 17.0%; transport and communications, 10.1%; and public administration, 9.8%.

Overview

The civil war in Syria that began in 2011 has significantly damaged the economy, with ongoing instability and violence hampering prospects for reconstruction. Before the conflict, reforms had spurred growth in the state-dominated economy by just under 5% per year between 2005 and 2010. However, the growth was not socially inclusive, with little job creation or poverty reduction. Rural society became increasingly marginalized and susceptible to external shocks such as drought, despite contributing some 20% to overall GDP. Expansion was largely dependent on oil revenues, but exports have collapsed since violence erupted in 2011.

With some 200,000 people killed, 6.5m. people internally displaced and another 3m. leaving the country because of the conflict, an economic recovery faces major obstacles. The rate of extreme poverty has increased to 54% and welfare services have been drastically cut. Should peace be restored, short- and medium-term economic challenges would include improving output, stabilizing the currency, reducing unemployment and rebuilding infrastructure and homes. The government would also have to focus on developing the non-oil sector in order to create a diversified economy and reforming public services.

Currency

The monetary unit is the Syrian pound (SYP) of 100 piastres. Inflation was 15.2% in 2008, falling to 2.8% in 2009 and rising to 4.4% in 2010. Since the onset of the civil war in 2011 data has been unavailable. Gold reserves were 833,000 troy oz in July 2004. Total money supply in March 2004 was £Syr.642,259m.

Budget

The fiscal year is the calendar year. In 2009 revenues were £Syr.533.0bn. and expenditures £Syr.666.4bn.

Performance

The economy had experienced a growth of 5.9% in 2009 and 3.4% in 2010 before the onset of the Syrian civil war, but subsequent data for real GDP is unavailable. Total GDP in 2012 was US$73.7bn.

Banking and Finance

The Central Bank is the bank of issue. Commercial banks were nationalized in 1963. The Governor of the Central Bank is Adib Mayaleh. In 2007 there were nine private banks.

In Aug. 2000 it was announced that private banks were to be established for the first time in nearly 40 years. Syria's first private banks since 1961 opened in 2004.

Foreign debt totalled US$4,729m. in 2010, equivalent to 8.2% of GNI.

A stock exchange opened in Damascus in March 2009 with six listed companies.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Syria's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2011 were the equivalent of 2.8 tonnes per capita.

Electricity

Installed capacity was 8.2m. kW in 2011. Production in 2011 was 41.08bn. kWh and consumption per capita 1,871 kWh.

Oil and Gas

Oil reserves in 2012 were 2.5bn. bbls; production in 2012 (8.2m. tonnes) fell by 49.9% from the 2011 total of 16.3m. tonnes as a result of Syria's civil war. Natural gas reserves (2012), 300bn. cu. metres; production, 7.6bn. cu. metres.

Minerals

Phosphate production, 2004, 2,883,000 tonnes; other minerals are gypsum (432,000 tonnes in 2004) and salt (141,000 tonnes in 2004). There are indications of lead, copper, antimony, nickel, chrome and other minerals widely distributed. Sodium chloride and bitumen deposits are being worked.

Agriculture

The arable area in 2013 was 4.66m. ha. and there were 1.07m. ha. of permanent cropland. 1.31m. ha. were irrigated in 2013. Production of principal crops, 2013 (in 1,000 tonnes): wheat, 3,182; olives, 842; oranges, 792; tomatoes, 500; potatoes, 442; sugar beets, 317; seed cotton, 169; cottonseed, 110. Livestock (2013, in 1,000): sheep, 18,019; goats, 2,294; cattle, 1,113; asses, 835; chickens, 26,984. Livestock products, 2013 (in 1,000 tonnes): milk, 2,364; meat, 359; eggs, 123.

Forestry

In 2010 there were 0.49m. ha. of forest (3% of the land area). Timber production in 2011 was 68,000 cu. metres.

Fisheries

The total catch in 2010 was 6,635 tonnes (55% freshwater fish).

INDUSTRY

Production (in tonnes): cement (2009), 5,497,000; residual fuel oil (2007), 4,862,000; distillate fuel oil (2007), 3,824,000; petrol (2007), 1,278,000; fertilizers (2003), 304,000; virgin olive oil (2011), 208,000; cotton yarn (2008), 137,000; refrigerators (2002), 113,000 units; washing machines (2002), 85,000 units; woollen carpets (2002), 2.2m. sq. metres.

Labour

The labour force in 2013 was 6,025,000 (5,147,000 in 2003). 45.7% of the population aged 15–64 was economically active in 2013. In the same year 11.3% of the population was unemployed.

Syria had 19,000 people living in slavery according to the Walk Free Foundation's 2013 Global Slavery Index.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

Imports (c.i.f.) in 2008 totalled US$18,104.7m. (US$14,655.1m. in 2007) and exports (f.o.b.) US$14,380.0m. (US$11,545.7m. in 2007). Main imports, 2003, included: machinery and equipment, 18.3%; foodstuffs, 17.7%; chemicals and chemical products, 14.9%; base and fabricated metals, 14.6%. Main exports in 2003 included: crude petroleum, 62.5%; refined petroleum, 8.8%; live animals and meat, 4.2%; textiles, 4.2%. In 2003 imports came mainly from China (5.9%), Ukraine (5.8%), Turkey (5.7%) and USA (5.0%). Exports in 2003 went mainly to Italy (33.2%), France (14.4%), Turkey (7.5%) and Saudi Arabia (5.9%).

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

In 2006 there were 40,032 km of roads, including 1,103 km of motorways, 5,971 km of main roads and 31,849 km of secondary roads; 95.8% of roads were paved. There were in 2007 a total of 446,100 passenger cars in use (22 per 1,000 inhabitants), 50,800 buses and coaches and 528,300 vans and lorries. In 2007 there were 13,465 road accidents involving injury resulting in 2,818 deaths.

Rail

In 2008 the Syrian Railways operated 1,801 km of 1,435 mm gauge; in 2010 the smaller Hedjaz-Syrian Railway operated 338 km of 1,050 mm gauge. Passenger-km travelled on the Syrian Railways in 2008 came to 1.1bn. and freight tonne-km to 2.4bn.; passenger-km travelled on the Hedjaz-Syrian Railway in 2009 came to 665,000 and freight tonne-km to 0.2m.

Civil Aviation

Damascus airport has ceased operations on several occasions amid fierce fighting since the outbreak of the civil war in 2011. No major international air carriers currently fly to Damascus.

Shipping

In Jan. 2009 there were 102 ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 314,000 GT. The main port is Lattakia.

Telecommunications

In 2014 there were 14,039,000 mobile phone subscriptions (638-6 per 1,000 inhabitants). Syria had 3,629,000 fixed telephone lines in 2014. In the same year 28-1% of the population were internet users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

Syrian law is based on both Islamic and French jurisprudence. There are two courts of first instance in each district, one for civil and one for criminal cases. There is also a Summary Court in each sub-district, under Justices of the Peace. There is a Court of Appeal in the capital of each governorate, with a Court of Cassation in Damascus. The death penalty is still in force, but owing to the ongoing conflict it is not known if judicial executions are still taking place.

The population in penal institutions in 2004 was 10,599 (57 per 100,000 of national population). 50-5% of prisoners had yet to receive a trial according to 2014 estimates by the International Centre for Prison Studies.

Education

In 2007 there were 145,781 pre-primary school children, 2,310,168 primary school pupils and 2,549,444 secondary school pupils. In 2001, 17 teacher colleges had 791 teachers and 8,204 students; 593 schools for technical education had 16,849 teachers and 139,551 students. Adult literacy in 2009 was an estimated 84-2% (male, 90-4%; female, 78-0%).

In 2005-06 there were five universities: Al-Baath University, the Syrian Virtual University, Tishreen University, the University of Aleppo and the University of Damascus. The establishment of private universities has been permitted since 2001.

In 2007 total expenditure on education came to 4-9% of GDP and accounted for 16-7% of total government expenditure.

Health

In the period 2005-11 Syria had 15 hospital beds per 10,000 population. There were 30,702 physicians, 16,169 dentists, 38,070 nurses and midwives and 16,579 pharmacists in 2008.

RELIGION

According to the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life, in 2010 the population was an estimated 92-8% Muslim and 5-2% Christian. Most Muslims in 2010 were Sunnis but there were also significant numbers of Alawites (an offshoot of Shia Islam), including President Assad. Sunnis make up nearly three-quarters of the total population.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

There are six UNESCO sites in Syria: the old city of Damascus, dating from the 3rd millennium BC and including the Umayyid Mosque (inscribed in 1979); the old city of Bosra, once the capital of the Roman province of Arabia and an important stopover on the ancient caravan routes (1980); Palmyra (Tadmur), a desert oasis northeast of Damascus, containing the ruins of a city that was one of the most prosperous centres of the ancient world (1980—partly demolished by Islamic State forces in 2015); the old city of Aleppo, located at the crossroads of various trade routes since the 2nd millennium BC (1986); the two castles of Crac des Chevaliers and Qal'at Salah El-Din (2006); and the Ancient Villages of Northern Syria (2011), which date from the 1st to the 7th centuries AD.

Press

In 2008 there were four national daily newspapers with a combined circulation of 130,000 plus five regional and local dailies. In the 2013 World Press Freedom Index compiled by Reporters Without Borders, Syria ranked 176th out of 179 countries.

Tourism

In 2010 there were a record 8,546,000 international tourist arrivals (excluding same-day visitors), spending a total of US$6-19bn. Tourist numbers have, however, declined considerably since 2010 as a result of the civil war.

TAJIKISTAN

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Tajikistan is bordered in the north and west by Uzbekistan and Kyrgyzstan, in the east by China and in the south by Afghanistan. Area, 143,100 sq. km (55,200 sq. miles). It includes two regions (Sughd and Khatlon), one autonomous region (Gorno-Badakhshan Autonomous Region), the city of Dushanbe and regions of republican subordination. 2010 census population, 7,564,502; density, 53 per sq. km. 84.3% of the population in 2010 were Tajiks, 12.2% Uzbeks, 0.8% Kyrgyz and 0.5% Russians. In Jan. 2014 the population was estimated at 8,161,100.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 8.48m.

In 2011 only 26.4% of the population lived in urban areas, making it the most rural of the former Soviet republics.

The capital is Dushanbe (2010 population, 724,844). Other large towns are Khujand (formerly Leninabad), Kulyab (Kūlob) and Kurgan-Tyube.

The official language is Tajik, written in Arabic script until 1930 and after 1992 (the Roman alphabet was used 1930–40; the Cyrillic, 1940–92).

SOCIAL STATISTICS

Estimates, 2008: births, 192,000; deaths, 44,000. Rates, 2008 estimate (per 1,000 population): births, 28.1; deaths, 6.4. Life expectancy, 2013, 64.1 years for men and 70.8 for women. Annual growth, 2000–08, 1.3%. Infant mortality, 2010, 52 per 1,000 live births; fertility rate, 2008, 3.4 births per woman.

CLIMATE

Considering its altitude, Tajikistan is a comparatively dry country. July to Sept. are particularly dry months. Winters are cold but spring comes earlier than farther north. Dushanbe, Jan. -10°C , July 25°C . Annual rainfall 375 mm.

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

In Nov. 1994 a new constitution was approved by a 90% favourable vote by the electorate, which enhanced the President's powers. The head of state is the President, elected by universal suffrage. When the 1994 constitution took effect the term of office was five years. However, an amendment to the Constitution prior to the 1999 election extended the presidential term to seven years, although a president could only serve one term. A further referendum approved in June 2003 allowed President Rakhmonov (now Rakhmon) to serve two additional terms after the expiry of the one that he was serving at the time, in Nov. 2006, theoretically enabling him to remain in office until 2020. The Organization for Security and Co-operation in Europe and the USA expressed concerns at the result. Tajikistan has a bicameral legislature. The lower chamber is the 63-seat Majlisi Namoyandagon (Assembly of Representatives), with 41 members elected in single-seat constituencies and 22 by proportional representation for five-year terms. The upper chamber is the 34-seat Majlisi Milliy (National Assembly), with 25 members chosen for five-year terms by local deputies, eight appointed by the president and one reserved for the former president.

National Anthem

'Zinda bosh, ey Vatan, Tochikistoni ozodi man' ('Live long, O Nation, my free Tajikistan'); words by Gulnazar Keldi, tune by Suleiman Yudakov.

RECENT ELECTIONS

At presidential elections on 6 Nov. 2013 President Rakhmon was re-elected with 83.9% of votes cast. The main opposition party boycotted the vote after potentially the most significant rival

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

The Tajik Soviet Socialist Republic was formed from those regions of Bokhara and Turkestan where the population consisted mainly of Tajiks. It was admitted as a constituent republic of the Soviet Union on 5 Dec. 1929. In Aug. 1990 the Tajik Supreme Soviet adopted a declaration of republican sovereignty and in Sept. 1991 Tajikistan declared independence. In Dec. 1991 the republic became a member of the CIS. After demonstrations and fighting, the Communist government was replaced by a Revolutionary Coalition Council on 7 May 1992. Following further demonstrations, President Nabyev was ousted on 7 Sept. Civil war broke out, and the government resigned on 10 Nov. On 30 Nov. it was announced that a CIS peacekeeping force would be sent to Tajikistan. A state of emergency was imposed in Jan. 1993. On 23 Dec. 1996 a ceasefire was signed. A further agreement on 8 March 1997 provided for the disarmament of the Islamic-led insurgents, the United Tajik Opposition, and their eventual integration into the regular armed forces. A peace agreement brokered by Iran and Russia was signed in Moscow on 27 June 1997 stipulating that the opposition should have 30% of ministerial posts in a Commission of National Reconciliation. President Rakhmon (formerly Rakhmonov), first elected in 1994, won a second term in 1999. The country's first multi-party parliamentary election was held in Feb. 2000, although it was criticized by observers for failing to meet democratic standards. Rakhmon won further terms in 2006 and 2013.

Ethnic conflict and Islamist militancy have plagued Tajikistan in the post-Soviet era, with the Rasht Valley and the Fergana Valleys—a region disputed by ethnic Tajiks, Uzbeks and Kyrgyz groups—being areas of particular concern.

candidate, female rights lawyer Oinikhol Bobonazarova, was barred from standing.

In elections to the Assembly of Representatives held on 1 March 2015 the People's Democratic Party of Tajikistan (PDPT) won 51 of 63 seats (65.4% of the vote), Agrarian Party 5 (11.7%), the Party of Economic Reforms 3 (7.5%), the Communist Party (CP) 2 (2.2%), the Socialist Party 1 (5.5%) and the Democratic Party 1 (1.7%). Turnout was 87.7%. Elections to the National Assembly were held on 27 March 2015. 25 of the 33 seats were voted for by local majlisi deputies and eight were appointed by the president.

CURRENT LEADERS

Emomalii Rakhmon

Position

President

Introduction

Emomalii Rakhmon (formerly Rakhmonov), a former cotton-farm administrator, became Tajikistan's head of state in Nov. 1992, after the country's first post-Soviet leader, Rakhmon Nabiyev, was forced to resign. Rakhmon has survived civil war and an assassination attempt, but reforming institutions and raising living standards in one of the region's poorest countries has proved a hard challenge. In March 2007 he announced that he was dropping the Russian suffix (-ov) from his surname. He was re-elected for a further seven-year term in Nov. 2013.

Early Life

Emomalii Sharipovich Rakhmon was born on 5 Oct. 1952 in the Danghara district of the Kulob province of the Tajik Soviet Socialist Republic (SSR). He studied electronics and from 1969 worked at a vegetable-oil extraction factory in Qurghontepa. After three years in the Soviet navy, Rakhmon became an administrator at Lenin Kholkov (collective farm) in Danghara, constructing a power base as chairman of the farm's trade union committee.

He studied economics by correspondence and in 1982 graduated from the Tajik State University. He was elected people's deputy of the supreme council of the Tajik SSR in 1990. Tajikistan declared independence in Sept. 1991 but hopes of an economically viable state were undermined by civil war. On 19 Nov. 1992, following Nabiev's forced resignation and the annulment of the office of president, Rakhmon was elected chairman of the supreme council and head of state. On 6 Nov. 1994, following inter-Tajik peace talks, he won presidential elections, claiming 58.3% of the vote.

Career in Office

Civil war continued through the early years of Rakhmon's presidency and by the time hostilities between the Islamist-led opposition and his Moscow-backed administration ended in June 1997, at least 50,000 people had died. In March 1998 he joined the centrist People's Democratic Party of Tajikistan (PDPT). He was re-elected president on 6 Nov. 1999 with 97% of the vote, and on 22 June 2003 won a referendum to allow him to run for two further seven-year terms. Rakhmon's grip on power was underlined in the general elections of Feb. 2005 and Feb. 2010 when his PDPT won landslide parliamentary victories. The opposition Islamic and communist parties alleged fraud in both polls and observers said the vote failed to meet international standards. Meanwhile, Rakhmon was again re-elected overwhelmingly to the presidency in Nov. 2006 as the opposition boycotted the vote.

Tajikistan suffered a particularly severe winter in 2007–08 and also faced an energy crisis. Many industries were forced to shut down, some rural areas had no electricity and even the capital faced food shortages. In April 2008 the International Monetary Fund ordered the Tajik authorities to repay IMF disbursements that had been obtained on the basis of false data and misreporting. Rakhmon subsequently removed some senior National Bank officials from their positions.

In April 2009 the government finalized an agreement allowing the USA to transport non-military equipment to Afghanistan across Tajik territory.

Tensions increased between Tajikistan and Uzbekistan through 2012 as the Tajik government accused its neighbour of disrupting gas and electricity deliveries, while the Uzbek government objected to Tajik plans for a large dam project that it claimed would restrict access to regional water resources.

In Oct. 2012 Tajikistan agreed to extend Russia's lease on a Soviet-era army base, scheduled to expire in 2014, for 30 more years.

Rakhmon's re-election in Nov. 2013 was criticized by observers from the Organization for Security and Co-operation in Europe, who highlighted a lack of pluralism and genuine electoral choice. Following the poll he dismissed Akil Akilov, the prime minister since 1999, and replaced him with Qohir Rasulzoda. In parliamentary elections in March 2015 the PDPT again won an overwhelming majority of seats.

DEFENCE

Conscription is compulsory for two years. In 2011 the active armed forces had a strength of 8,800. Paramilitary forces totalled 7,500 including 3,800 interior troops and 2,500 emergencies ministry troops. 5,000 Russian Army personnel were stationed in the country in 2011.

Defence expenditure in 2013 totalled US$189m. (US$24 per capita), representing 2.2% of GDP.

Army

Personnel strength (2011) 7,300.

Air Force

Air Force/Air Defence strength (2011) 1,500.

ECONOMY

Agriculture accounted for 26.6% of GDP in 2012, industry 22.5% and services 50.9%.

Overview

Although arable land accounts for only 10% of its total area, Tajikistan is primarily an agrarian economy, with the sector employing almost half of the labour force and contributing 27% of GDP in 2012. As a result of war and unstable government in the 1990s, the economy deteriorated faster than in other former Soviet satellite states. In 1996 a reform programme was launched, supported by the IMF and the World Bank. Despite a slow start and the Russian financial crisis of 1998, the focus on reconstruction stimulated a market-driven economy.

Economic growth, which averaged 8.6% from 2000–08, has depended on cotton and aluminium exports, as well as rising remittances (principally from Russia). Sound macroeconomic management has enabled inflation to be brought under control, having reached levels between 30% and 40% in the period 1998–2001. Other achievements include the halving of foreign debt, stabilization of the exchange rate and a reduction in the poverty level from 83% in 1999 to 42% in 2011.

The global financial crisis saw growth slow to 3.9% in 2009, caused by a sharp reduction in remittances (down 31% from the previous year) and lower prices and demand for aluminium and cotton. Larger remittance in flows led to GDP growth of 7.5% in 2012 and reached a record high of US$4.1bn. in 2013, fuelling investment and private consumption.

In March 2013 Tajikistan joined the World Trade Organization. Faced with a young and rapidly growing population and a weak business climate, the government must in the long-term address the shortage of jobs. Other priorities include improving the social welfare system and developing the private sector.

Currency

The unit of currency is the somoni (TJS) of 100 dirams, which replaced the Tajik rouble on 30 Oct. 2000 at 1 somoni = 1,000 Tajik roubles. The introduction of the new currency was intended to strengthen the national banking system. The IMF voiced its support for the new currency, which it believed would contribute to macroeconomic stability and expedite the transition to a market economy. Inflation in 1993 was 2,195%, declining to 418% in 1996 and still further to 7.2% in 2004, the reduction being helped by a US$22m. IMF loan in 1996 and maintenance of a tighter monetary regime. Although the rate had risen back up to 20.4% in 2008, more recently it was 5.0% in 2013 and 6.1% in 2014. Total money supply was 241m. somoni in Dec. 2004. Gold reserves stood at 47,000 troy oz in July 2005.

Budget

Revenues in 2009 totalled 4,175m. somoni and expenditure 5,643m. somoni.

VAT is 20%.

Performance

Annual real GDP growth was negative for four consecutive years in the mid-1990s. Since then the economy has recovered—more recently there has been growth of 7.5% in 2012, 7.4% in 2013 and 6.7% in 2014. Total GDP in 2014 was US$9.2bn. Tajikistan is more reliant than any other country on remittances from abroad (in particular from Russia), which accounted for 42% of total GDP in 2014.

Banking and Finance

The central bank and bank of issue is the National Bank (Chairman, Jamshed Nurmahmadzoda). In 1998 there were 27 commercial and private banks but the number had fallen to 14 by 2002 after a process of consolidation.

Foreign debt totalled US$2,955m. in 2010, representing 53.1% of GNI.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

In 2011 Tajikistan's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy accounted for 0.4 tonnes per capita.

Electricity

Installed capacity in 2011 was 5.1m. kW. Production was 16.4bn. kWh in 2011 and consumption per capita 2,081 kWh.

Oil and Gas

Natural gas output in 2009 was 37m. cu. metres; reserves were 5.7bn. cu. metres in 2013.

Minerals

There are deposits of coal, lead, zinc, iron ore, antimony, mercury, gold, silver, tungsten and uranium. Production, 2010, in 1,000 tonnes: aluminium, 349; hard coal, 177.

Agriculture

In 2007 there were approximately 710,000 ha. of arable land and 101,000 ha. of permanent crops. Cotton is the major cash crop, with various fruits, sugarcane, jute, silk, rice and millet also being grown.

Output of main agricultural products (in 1,000 tonnes) in 2003: wheat, 660; seed cotton, 537; potatoes, 473; cottonseed, 215; tomatoes, 170; onions, 153. Livestock, 2003: 1.59m. sheep; 1.14m. cattle; 842,000 goats; 2m. chickens. Livestock products, 2003 (in 1,000 tonnes): meat, 30; milk, 412.

Forestry

Forests covered 0.41m. ha. in 2010, or 3% of the land area. Timber production in 2011 was 90,000 cu. metres.

Fisheries

The total catch in 2012 was 923 tonnes, exclusively from inland waters.

INDUSTRY

Major industries: aluminium, electro-chemical plants, textile machinery, carpet weaving, silk mills, refrigerators, hydro-electric power. Output in 2007 (unless otherwise specified): cement (2011), 299,400 tonnes; multi-nutrient fertilizer, 24,500 tonnes; cotton woven fabrics, 30.5m. sq. metres; woven carpets and other floor coverings, 941,700 sq. metres; woven silk fabrics, 40,900 sq. metres; footwear, 172,400 pairs.

Labour

The labour force in 2013 was 3,578,000 (2,585,000 in 2003). 70.7% of the population aged 15–64 was economically active in 2013. In the same year 11.2% of the population was unemployed.

Tajikistan had 24,000 people living in slavery according to the Walk Free Foundation's 2013 Global Slavery Index.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

In 2014 imports were valued at US$4,297.4m. (US$4,150.7m. in 2013) and exports at US$977.3m. (US$1,161.8m. in 2013). Main imports are petroleum products, wheat and cars; main exports are aluminium, cotton fibre and electricity. Principal import suppliers are China, Kazakhstan, Russia and Uzbekistan. Principal export markets are Kazakhstan, Switzerland, Turkey and Uzbekistan.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

The road network covers an estimated 30,000 km, nearly all of which was built in the Soviet era. There were 357,869 registered vehicles in use in 2010 (297,341 cars, 37,395 heavy trucks, 14,653 buses, and 8,480 motorcycles and mopeds). In 2010 there were 411 fatalities as a result of road accidents.

Rail

Length of railways, 2011, 621 km. Passenger-km travelled in 2011 came to 32m. and freight tonne-km in 2009 to 1.3bn.

Civil Aviation

There are international airports at Dushanbe and Khujand. The national carrier is Tajik Air, which has flights to 12 international destinations as well as operating domestic services. In 2003 Tajik Air flew 10m. km, carrying 413,000 passengers (291,000 on international flights).

Telecommunications

In 2013 there were an estimated 425,000 fixed telephone subscriptions in Tajikistan and mobile phone subscriptions numbered an estimated 7,537,000 (918 per 1,000 persons). In the same year an estimated 16.0% of the population were internet users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

In 2012, 16,593 crimes were reported (12,754 in 2002). The population in penal institutions in Dec. 2010 was 9,317 (130 per 100,000 of national population). The death penalty is retained but has been subject to a moratorium since July 2004.

Education

The adult literacy rate in 2008 was over 99%. In 2007 there were 680,308 pupils and 31,482 teaching staff at primary schools; 1,012,275 pupils and 61,186 teaching staff at secondary schools; and 147,294 students and 7,761 academic staff at higher education institutions. There were 32 higher education institutions in total in 2007.

In 2007 public expenditure on education came to 3.5% of GNI and 18.2% of total government spending.

Health

In 2006 there were 61 hospital beds per 10,000 inhabitants. There were 13,267 physicians in 2006, 1,003 dentistry personnel and 33,165 nursing and midwifery personnel.

Welfare

At the beginning of 2009 there were 537,700 pensioners; average monthly pension was 87.36 somoni.

RELIGION

The Tajiks are predominantly Sunni Muslims (80%); Shia Muslims, 5%.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

Tajikistan has two sites on the UNESCO World Heritage List: the Proto-urban site of Sarazm (inscribed on the list in 2010), an archaeological site displaying some of the early human settlements in Central Asia; and Tajik National Park (2013), which covers over 2.5m. ha. and offers the opportunity for the study of plate tectonics and subduction phenomena.

Press

Media freedom suffered during the civil war between 1992 and 1997 when around 60 journalists were killed and many others fled the country. Imruz News, the first daily newspaper since 1992, was launched in Aug. 2010.

Tourism

There were 244,000 non-resident visitors in 2012 (183,000 in 2011).

Gorno-Badakhshan Autonomous Region

Comprising the Pamir massif along the borders of Afghanistan and China, the province was set up on 2 Jan. 1925, initially as the Special Pamir Province. Area, 63,700 sq. km (24,590 sq. miles). The population in 2007 was 218,000 (mainly Tajiks with a Kirghiz minority). Capital, Khorog (2007: 29,000). The inhabitants are predominantly Ismaili Muslims.

Mining industries are developed (gold, rock crystal, mica, coal, salt). Wheat, fruit and fodder crops are grown, and cattle and sheep are bred in the western parts. Total area under cultivation, 16,236 ha. In 2004 the region was 69% self-sufficient in food; humanitarian aid had comprised 85% of all food consumed in 1993.

The area is the most impoverished in Tajikistan, with 84% of the population falling below the poverty line in 2003, compared to a national average of 64%. Around 20% of the population of working age is employed abroad, mainly in the Russian Federation. Unemployment is approximately 70%.

The Khorog State University was founded in 1992. The private University of Central Asia has a campus located in Khorog (the other two being in Tekeli, Kazakhstan and Naryn, Kyrgyzstan). In 2004 there was one doctor per 476 inhabitants and 91 hospital beds per 10,000 inhabitants.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Archaeological evidence suggests that present-day Tanzania was inhabited by Khoisan-speaking hunter-gatherers from at least 10,000 BC. The Sandawe and Hadze of north-central Tanzania are descendants of these groups. Cushitic-speaking cattle herders migrated south from Ethiopia and Sudan from around 1000 BC. Beginning in the first millennium AD, Tanzania was settled by Bantu-speaking iron-working farmers, whose origins are considered to be in the borderlands of present-day Nigeria and Cameroon.

Seafarers from Arabia established a trading settlement on the coast at Kilwa around AD 800, and Persian merchants settled on the islands of Zanzibar and Pemba. Nilotic-speaking pastoralists (including the Maasai and Luo) moved south into Tanzania between AD 900 and AD 1700. Sultan Hassan bin Sulaiman I established control of Kilwa around 1270. Islam spread and a thriving Afro-Arab 'Swahili' culture took hold in coastal areas.

Portuguese explorers arrived off Kilwa in 1500, heralding two centuries of Portuguese control over various East African trading ports. Zanzibar came under Omani control in the 1650s and prospered as a centre of the slave trade, extending its influence over the coastal hinterland and into the mainland interior. Britain attempted to end the slave trade by signing the Treaty of Moresby with the Sultan of Zanzibar in 1822. During the 1880s the German imperialist, Dr Carl Peters, founded German East Africa by signing agreements with local rulers. A series of agreements between Britain and Germany and the Sultan of Zanzibar saw

Germany become the dominant influence over most of mainland Tanzania, while the Sultan of Zanzibar retained control of a strip of coastal territories and Britain ruled Zanzibar as a protectorate.

German East Africa was conquered by the Allies in the First World War and subsequently divided between the Belgians, the Portuguese and the British. The country was administered as a League of Nations mandate until 1946, and then as a UN trusteeship territory until 9 Dec. 1961. Tanganyika achieved responsible government in Sept. 1960 and full self-government on 1 May 1961. On 9 Dec. 1961 Tanganyika became a sovereign independent member state of the Commonwealth of Nations. On 9 Dec. 1962 the country adopted a republican form of government (still within the British Commonwealth) and Dr Nyerere was elected as the first president.

Zanzibar gained internal self-government on 24 June 1963, followed by full independence on 9 Dec. 1963. On 12 Jan. 1964 the sultanate was overthrown by a revolt of the Afro-Shirazi Party leaders who established the People's Republic of Zanzibar. Also in Jan. 1964 there was an attempted coup against Nyerere who had to seek British military help. On 26 April 1964 Tanganyika, Zanzibar and Pemba combined to form the United Republic of Tanzania. The first multi-party elections were held in 1995.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Tanzania is bounded in the northeast by Kenya, north by Lake Victoria and Uganda, northwest by Rwanda and Burundi, west by Lake Tanganyika, southwest by Zambia and Malawi, and south by Mozambique. Total area 942,799 sq. km (364,017 sq. miles), including the offshore islands of Zanzibar (1,554 sq. km) and Pemba (906 sq. km) and inland waters. 2012 census population, 44,928,923, giving a density of 50.8 per sq. km.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 53.47m.

In 2011, 26.9% of the population lived in urban areas. In 2000 Tanzania hosted the highest number of refugees in Africa (mainly from Burundi), with a population of over 680,000. By 2012 repatriation programmes had allowed the number of refugees to drop to only just over 100,000.

The chief towns (2012 census populations) are Dar es Salaam, the chief port and former capital (4,364,541), Mwanza (706,453), Zanzibar (501,459), Arusha (416,442), Mbeya (385,279). Dodoma, the capital, had a population of 213,636 in 2012.

The United Republic is divided into 30 administrative regions of which 25 are in mainland Tanzania, three in Zanzibar and two in Pemba. Land areas and populations of the regions:

Region	Land area (sq. km)	Population (2012 census)
Arusha	37,576	1,694,310

The official languages are Swahili (spoken as a mother tongue by only 8-8% of the population, but used as a lingua franca by 91%) and English.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2008 estimates: births, 1,765,000; deaths, 482,000. Rates, 2008 estimates (per 1,000 population): births, 41.5; deaths, 11.4. Annual population growth rate, 2000–08, 2.7%. Life expectancy in 2013 was 60.2 years for men and 62.9 for women. 45% of the population was below 15 years old in 2008. Infant mortality, 2010, 50 per 1,000 live births; fertility rate, 2008, 5.6 births per woman.

CLIMATE

The climate is very varied and is controlled largely by altitude and distance from the sea. There are three climatic zones: the hot and humid coast, the drier central plateau with seasonal variations of temperature, and the semi-temperate mountains. Dodoma, Jan. 75°F (23.9°C), July 67°F (19.4°C). Annual rainfall 23" (572 mm). Dar es Salaam, Jan. 82°F (27.8°C), July 74°F (23.3°C). Annual rainfall 43" (1,064 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

The current constitution dates from 25 April 1977 but underwent major revisions in Oct. 1984. The President is head of state, chairman of the party and commander-in-chief of the armed forces. The Prime Minister is also the leader of government business in the National Assembly.

The 357-member Bunge (National Assembly) is composed of 239 constituency representatives, 102 appointed women, ten Union presidential nominees (five of whom must be women), five representatives of the Zanzibar House of Representatives (two women), and one ex officio member (the Attorney General). In Dec. 1979 a separate constitution for Zanzibar was approved. Although at present under the same Constitution as Tanzania, Zanzibar has, in fact, been ruled by decree since 1964. The formation of a government of national unity was approved by 66.4% of voters in a referendum in July 2010. Following elections on 21 Oct. 2010 the new government was inaugurated in Nov. 2010.

CURRENT LEADERS

John Magufuli

Position
President

Introduction

A teacher and chemist, John Magufuli is a member of Tanzania's dominant party, Chama Cha Mapinduzi (CCM, or Revolutionary State Party). Having won the Oct. 2015 presidential election, he was sworn in the following month.

Early Life

John Pombe Joseph Magufuli was born on 29 Oct. 1959 in the northwestern district of Chato. Between 1982 and 1983 he worked as a teacher of chemistry and mathematics at a secondary school. He then studied science and education at the the University of Dar es Salaam, graduating in 1988. A year later he joined the Nyanza Co-operative Union Ltd as an industrial chemist, remaining there until 1995. He earned a master's degree and then a doctorate in chemistry from the University of Dar es Salaam in 1994 and 2009 respectively.

Magufuli was first elected to parliament as the representative for Chato in 1995. In 2000 he retained his seat and was promoted from deputy minister of works to minister. In 2006, under President Jakaya Kikwete, he was named minister of lands and human settlement. From 2008–10 he was minister of livestock and fisheries, and then served a second term at the ministry of works until 2015. He earned the nickname "The Bulldozer" for leading a road-building programme across the country.

On 12 July 2015 Magufuli was nominated CCM candidate for that year's presidential election, ahead of justice minister and former UN deputy secretary-general Asha-Rose Migiro and African Union ambassador to the USA Amina Salum Ali. Despite the strong challenge from opposition candidate Edward Lowassa in the election held on 25 Oct. 2015, Magufuli received 58% of the vote to Lowassa's 40% and was declared the winner four days later. He was sworn in to office on 5 Nov 2015.

Career in Office

Magufuli pledged to implement a range of cost-cutting measures to combat wasteful public spending. He banned unnecessary foreign travel by government officials and cancelled Independence Day celebrations, freeing up funds for sanitation projects designed to prevent the spread of cholera. On 10 Dec. 2015 he announced his cabinet which, with 19 ministries, had 11 fewer posts than the previous government. Magufuli also promised to impose anti-corruption measures and to exploit Tanzania's gas resources to tackle power shortages across the country.

DEFENCE

Defence expenditure totalled US$327m. in 2013 (US$7 per capita), representing 1.0% of GDP.

Army

Strength in 2011 was an estimated 23,000. There is a paramilitary Police Field Force of 1,400.

Navy

Personnel in 2011 totalled about 1,000, with eight patrol and coastal combatants.

Air Force

Tanzania Air Force Command personnel totalled around 3,000 in 2011. Although there were a reported 22 combat-capable aircraft in 2011 virtually no air defence assets were serviceable.

INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

In Nov. 1999 a treaty was signed between Tanzania, Kenya and Uganda to create a new East African Community as a means of developing East African trade, tourism and industry and laying the foundations for a future common market and political federation.

ECONOMY

Agriculture accounted for 28.8% of GDP in 2009, industry 24.3% and services 46.9%.

Overview

Real GDP grew by an average 7.1% per year from 2010–14, driven by mining and construction, the two fastest-growing sectors of the economy. Flourishing tourism and manufacturing sectors, along with the implementation of economic reforms, further contributed to growth. Per capita income was US$1,760 in 2013. An estimated 15% of the state budget is financed by aid. Agriculture employs over 76% of the workforce and accounts for the majority of exports. In 2015, 6.2% of the government budget went to the agricultural sector.

From the late 1960s to the mid-1980s the economy stagnated under corrupt state control. From 1985 popular discontent encouraged the government of Ali Hassan Mwinyi to loosen control over prices and trade. Subsequent banking reforms and a stronger private sector have spurred investment.

Tanzania's exports of goods and services remain buoyant, increasing 9.2% year-on-year in the final quarter of 2015. Gold and traditional agricultural produce made a significant contribution, alongside manufactured goods. However, although Tanzania remains the fourth largest producer of gold in Africa, the value of gold exports has been in steady decline since 2013. Coffee and cashew nuts are both notably important agricultural products.

Currency

The monetary unit is the Tanzanian shilling (TZS) of 100 cents. Foreign exchange reserves were US$3,533m. in Sept. 2009. Inflation, which had been 26.5% in 1995, was down to 4.1% in 2004, the lowest rate for more than 20 years. It has gone up since then and was 16.0% in 2012, 7.9% in 2013 and 6.1% in 2014. Total money supply in Aug. 2009 was Sh. 3,429.5bn.

Budget

The fiscal year ends 30 June. Budgetary central government revenues in 2010–11 (provisional) were Sh. 10,194.1bn. and expenditures Sh. 8,738.5bn. Taxes contributed 63.6% of revenues in 2010–11 and grants 31.1%; grants represented 48.0% of expenditures in 2010–11 with use of goods and services accounting for 22.5%.

VAT is 18%.

Performance

Real GDP growth was 5.1% in 2012, 7.3% in 2013 and 7.0% in 2014. Total GDP in 2014 was US$48.1bn. (mainland Tanzania only).

Banking and Finance

The central bank is the Bank of Tanzania (Governor, Prof. Benno Ndulu).

On 6 Feb. 1967 all commercial banks with the exception of National Co-operative Banks were nationalized, and their interests vested in the National Bank of Commerce on the mainland and the Peoples' Bank in Zanzibar. However, in 1993 private-sector commercial banks were allowed to open. In 1997 the National Bank of Commerce (NBC) was split into a trade bank, a regional rural bank and a micro-finance bank. It was privatized in 2000, with the South African concern Absa Group Limited purchasing a 55% stake. The government retained 30% with the International Finance Corporation holding 15%. In 2010 it had 53 branches; total assets at 31 Dec. 2009, Sh. 1,294,606m. The NBC's market dominance has severely declined since 1997. In Dec. 2008 the Co-operatives Rural and Development Bank (CRDB) held 17% of the banking sector's total assets, making it the market leader (the National Microfinance Bank held 16% and the NBC 13%). In Oct. 2010 there were 28 commercial banks registered in Tanzania.

Foreign debt totalled US$8,664m. in 2010, representing 37.7% of GNI.

A stock exchange opened in Dar es Salaam in 1996.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Tanzania's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2011 were the equivalent of 0.2 tonnes per capita.

Electricity

Installed capacity was 1.0m. kW in 2011. Only 15% of the population has access to electricity. Production in 2011 was 5.30bn. kWh, with consumption per capita 116 kWh.

Oil and Gas

A number of international companies are exploring for both gas and oil. In 2013 proven natural gas reserves were 6.5bn. cu. metres.

Minerals

Tanzania's mineral resources include gold, nickel, cobalt, silver and diamonds. International funds injected to improve Tanzania's economy have resulted in notable increases, particularly in gold production. The first commercial gold mine began operating in Mwanza in 1998. By 2005 the value of gold exports had reached US$642m., up from US$121m. in 2000. Gold production in 2005 totalled 52,236 kg. Large deposits of coal and tin exist but mining is on a small scale. Estimated diamond production in 2005 was 205,000 carats; exports totalled US$33.7m. in 2004.

Agriculture

About 80% of the workforce are engaged in agriculture, chiefly in subsistence farming. Agricultural produce contributes around 85% of exports. There were an estimated 4.0m. ha. of arable land in 2002 and 1.1m. ha. of permanent crops. Approximately 170,000 ha. were irrigated in 2002. There were about 7,600 tractors in 2002.

Production of main agricultural crops in 2002 (in 1,000 tonnes) was: cassava, 6,888; maize, 2,705; sugarcane, 1,600; sweet potatoes, 950; sorghum, 834; rice, 640; plantains, 602; coconuts, 370; millet, 300; dry beans, 270; potatoes, 240; seed cotton, 222. Zanzibar is a major producer of cloves.

Livestock (2003 estimates): 17.70m. cattle; 12.56m. goats; 3.52m. sheep; 30m. chickens.

Livestock products (2003 estimates, in 1,000 tonnes): beef and veal, 246; goat meat, 31; pork and pork products, 13; lamb and mutton, 10; poultry meat, 45; goat's milk, 835; cow's milk, 100; eggs, 34; honey, 26.

Forestry

Forests covered 33.43m. ha. in 2010 (38% of the total land area). In 2011, 25.38m. cu. metres of roundwood were cut.

Fisheries

Catch (2012) 327,257 tonnes, of which 314,945 tonnes were from inland waters.

INDUSTRY

Industry is limited, and is mainly textiles, petroleum and chemical products, food processing, tobacco, brewing and paper manufacturing.

Labour

Tanzania had 0.33m. people living in slavery according to the Walk Free Foundation's 2013 Global Slavery Index.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

In 2010 imports (c.i.f.) amounted to US$8,012.9m. (US$6,530.8m. in 2009); exports (f.o.b.) US$4,050.5m. (US$2,982.4m. in 2009).

Principal imports, 2002: consumer goods, 31.0%; machinery and apparatus, 22.2%; transport equipment, 13.2%; crude and refined petroleum, 11.8%. Principal exports, 2002: minerals (notably gold), 42.4%; cashew nuts, 5.8%; tobacco, 5.6%; coffee, 4.0%; tea, 3.4%.

Main import suppliers, 2002: South Africa, 11.4%; Japan, 8.4%; India, 6.5%; Russia, 6.1%; UAE, 5.9%. Main export markets, 2002: UK, 18.5%; France, 17.4%; Japan, 11.0%; India, 7.3%; Netherlands, 6.2%.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

In 2008 there were 87,524 km of roads, including 10,042 km of highways or national roads. Passenger cars in use in 2007 numbered 80,900; there were also 369,900 lorries and vans, 23,100 buses and coaches, and 52,000 motorcycles and mopeds.

Rail

In 1977 the independent Tanzanian Railway Corporation was formed. The network totalled 2,707 km (metre gauge) in 2005, excluding the joint Tanzania-Zambia (Tazara) railway's 961 km in Tanzania (1,067 mm gauge) operated by a separate administration. In 2008 the state railway carried 0.5m. passengers and 0.5m. tonnes of freight, and in 2005 the Tazara carried 0.9m. passengers and 0.6m. tonnes of freight.

In Oct. 1998 a transshipment facility for containers opened at Kidatu, southwest of Dar es Salaam, providing a link between the 1,067 mm gauge railways of the southern part of Africa and the 1,000 mm gauge lines of the north.

Civil Aviation

There are three international airports: Dar es Salaam, Zanzibar and Kilimanjaro (Moshi/Arusha). Although Air Tanzania is the national carrier, Precision Air carries far more passengers (743,000 in 2013) and serves more destinations (ten in 2013).

Dar es Salaam is the busiest airport, handling 2,088,282 passengers in 2012 (1,100,666 on international flights), followed by Zanzibar with 787,813 (388,231 on domestic flights).

Shipping

In Jan. 2009 there were 20 ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 31,000 GT. The main seaports are Dar es Salaam, Mtwara, Tanga and Zanzibar. There are also ports on the lakes.

Telecommunications

In 2013 there were 165,000 main (fixed) telephone lines; mobile phone subscriptions numbered 27,443,000 that year (557.2 per 1,000 persons). In 2013 an estimated 4.4% of the population were internet users. In June 2012 there were 518,000 Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The Judiciary is independent in both judicial and administrative matters and is composed of a four-tier system of Courts: Primary Courts; District and Resident Magistrates' Courts; the High Court; and the Court of Appeal. The Chief Justice is head of the Court of Appeal and the Judiciary Department. The Court's main registry is at Dar es Salaam; its jurisdiction includes Zanzibar. The Principal Judge is head of the High Court, also headquartered at Dar es Salaam, which has resident judges at seven regional centres.

The population in penal institutions in Jan. 2013 was 36,552 (178 per 100,000 of national population). The International Centre for Prison Studies estimated in 2014 that 50.1% of prisoners had yet to receive a trial. Tanzania was ranked 67th of 102 countries for criminal justice and 57th for civil justice in the 2015 World Justice Project Rule of Law Index, which provides data on how the rule of law is experienced by the general public across eight categories.

Education

Primary education is compulsory and lasts seven years. The official entry age is seven. In 2012 there were 1,034,729 children in pre-primary education with (2010) 16,349 teachers, 8,247,172 pupils in primary education with 180,987 teaching staff and 2,118,067 pupils in secondary education with 80,250 teaching staff. There were 166,014 students in tertiary education in 2012.

There were 16 public and ten private universities in 2012. The University of Dar es Salaam, which gained university status in 1970, is the oldest and largest university.

Adult literacy rate in 2010 was an estimated 67.8% (male, 75.5%; female, 60.8%). In 2010 total expenditure on education came to 6.2% of GDP and 21.2% of total government spending.

Health

In 2006 there were 1,807 doctors and dentists and 39,432 nurses and midwives. In 2005 there were 219 hospitals, 481 health centres and 4,679 dispensaries.

RELIGION

In 2010 an estimated 61.4% of the population was Christian and 35.2% Muslim according to the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life. Of the Christians in 2010, an estimated 53% were Catholics and 46% Protestants. Most Muslims are Sunnis but there are significant Shia and Ahmadi minorities. In Feb. 2016 the Roman Catholic church had one cardinal.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Excavations at Ban Chiang on the Khorat plateau in northeast Thailand suggest rice farming was under way by as early as 2500 BC. From around 300 BC the Indianized Funan kingdom held sway across much of southeast Asia, including eastern and central Thailand. Artifacts discovered at the Funan capital of Ba Phnom, in modern Cambodia, point to trading links with China and India and as far as the Middle East and Rome. At its height in the 6th century AD, Funan control included part of the Malay peninsula.

Mon, Tai and Khmer peoples first entered northern and eastern Thailand from southern China in the 5th century AD. Taking advantage of Funan's decline after the 6th century, the Mon began to establish independent kingdoms. Among them was Dvaravarti, which in the 10th century was absorbed by the Indian-influenced Khmer empire, centred on Angkor. Mongol incursions into Yunnan in southern China in the mid-13th century forced a new wave of Tai migration that culminated in the Sukhothai kingdom of north-central Thailand. Under Ramkhamhaeng (1279–98), its influence stretched southward to the Malay peninsula. Trade with India and China flourished and the Siamese language developed in written form.

The Tai kingdom of Lan Na emerged as the dominant power in northern Thailand in the 14th century while further south the declining Sukhothai came under the influence of Rama Tibodi, prince of U Tong, who, around 1350, established a Buddhist dynasty centred on Ayutthaya. Rice cultivation and trade brought prosperity and power to Siam over the next four centuries, though tempered by frequent warfare with the Khmer empire and the Lao state of Chiang Mai. Trade with Europe, the Middle East, China and Japan expanded considerably in the 16th and 17th centuries, notably under King Narai (1656–88). Relations with France developed in the 1680s but soured amid attempts to convert Narai to Christianity: French troops were expelled in 1688 and most foreigners were barred from Siam over the next century.

Ayutthaya suffered a series of attacks from Burma in the mid-1700s and fell in 1767 although Thai forces, led by Gen. Phya Tak (King Taksin), re-established control with the help of Chinese merchants within a decade. His successor, Chao Phraya Chakri (Rama I), established Bangkok as his capital and restored the Buddhist religion during his reign (1782–1809). Subsequent Chakri kings resumed relations with the West but, through skilful diplomacy, managed to preserve Siam's independence. The nation remained an absolute monarchy until 24 June 1932 when a group of rebels calling themselves the People's Party precipitated a bloodless coup. After King Prajadhipok tried to dissolve the newly appointed general assembly the army moved against him to become the dominant political force, a position it has held ever since. In 1939 Field Marshal Pibul Songgram became premier and embarked on a pro-Japanese policy that brought Thailand into the Second World War on Japan's side.

After 1945 periods of military rule were interspersed with attempts at democratic, civilian government. Democratic government was reintroduced for a short time after 1963 and again from 1969–71, until a military coup was staged aimed at checking crime and the communist insurgency. A moderately democratic constitution was introduced in 1978. On 23 Feb. 1991 a military junta seized power in Thailand's 17th coup since 1932. Following the appointment of Gen. Suchinda Kraprayoon as prime minister on 17 April 1992 there were violent anti-government demonstrations. Gen. Suchinda resigned and in May the Legislative Assembly voted that future prime ministers should be elected by its members rather than appointed by the military. The 1995 election was fought against a background of political and financial corruption. After the 1996 election a new constitution was drafted allowing for the separation of the executive, legislative and judicial branches of government.

On 26 Dec. 2004 Thailand, along with a number of other south Asian countries, was hit by a devastating tsunami. The death toll in Thailand was put at 8,000. The government of Thaksin Shinawatra was overthrown in a bloodless military coup on 19 Sept. 2006. Elections held in Dec. 2007 were won by the People's Power Party (PPP), the successor to Thaksin's banned Thai Rak Thai. Samak Sundaravej became prime minister in Feb. 2008, marking a return to civilian rule. When a Constitutional Court ruling removed him from office in Sept. 2008 he was replaced by Somchai Wongsawat. Wongsawat in turn had to step down in Dec. 2008 when the Constitutional Court disbanded the ruling PPP following accusations of electoral fraud. Opposition leader Abhisit Vejjajiva formed a parliamentary coalition and was elected to the premiership.

The pro-Thaksin United Front for Democracy against Dictatorship ('red-shirts') held anti-government protests in April 2009 and again in March–May 2010, prompting the government to impose a state of emergency. In July 2011 the Pheu Thai Party triumphed in elections and its leader—and Thaksin's sister—Yingluck Shinawatra was sworn in as premier. In 2012 anti-government 'yellow-shirt' protesters called for the overthrow of Yingluck. In Nov. 2013 an amnesty bill that opponents claimed would allow Thaksin to return from exile without facing further punishment prompted a new wave of protests. The following month, Yingluck announced that elections would be brought forward to Feb. 2014. A two-month state of emergency was declared in Jan. 2014 and the leading opposition group, the Democrat Party, boycotted the election, which was severely disrupted by anti-government protesters and subsequently invalidated by the Constitutional Court in March. On 7 May 2014 Yingluck was dismissed from office by the Constitutional Court following investigations into the mishandling of a national rice pledging scheme and unconstitutional political appointments made during her time as premier.

Thailand returned to military rule on 22 May 2014 when army chief Gen. Prayuth Chan-ocha launched a coup d'état against the acting government in place since Yingluck's impeachment. An interim constitution was presented to King Bhumibol Adulyadej by the military junta, and signed into law two months later.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Thailand is bounded in the west by Myanmar, north and east by Laos and southeast by Cambodia. In the south it becomes a peninsula bounded in the west by the Indian Ocean, south by Malaysia and east by the Gulf of Thailand. The area is 513,120 sq. km (198,117 sq. miles).

At the 2010 census the population was 65,479,453; density, 127.6 per sq. km. In 2011, 34.4% of the population lived in urban areas.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 67.96m.

Thailand is divided into six regions, 76 provinces and Bangkok, the capital. Population of Bangkok (2010 estimate), 8,213,000. Other towns (2010 estimates): Samut Prakan (1,093,000), Udorn Thani (399,000), Chonburi (371,000), Nonthaburi (368,000), Nakhon Ratchasima (305,000), Lampang (282,000), Hat Yai (269,000), Rayong (230,000).

Thai is the official language, spoken by 53% of the population as their mother tongue. 27% speak Lao (mainly in the northeast), 12% Chinese (mainly in urban areas), 3.7% Malay (mainly in the south) and 2.7% Khmer (along the Cambodian border). There are more Lao speakers in Thailand than in Laos.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2005–06 births, 705,639; deaths, 440,024; marriages (2005), 345,234; divorces (2005), 90,688. Rates (per 1,000 population, 2005–06): birth, 10.9; death, 6.8; marriage (2005), 5.2; divorce (2005), 1.4. Annual population growth rate, 2000–05, 1.0%. Expectation of life (2007): 65.4 years for men; 72.1 years for women. Infant mortality, 2010, 11 per 1,000 live births; fertility rate, 2008, 1.8 births per woman.

CLIMATE

The climate is tropical, with high temperatures and humidity. Over most of the country, three seasons may be recognized. The rainy season is June to Oct., the cool season from Nov. to Feb. and the hot season is March to May. Rainfall is generally heaviest in the south and lightest in the northeast. Bangkok, Jan. 78°F (25.6°C), July 83°F (28.3°C). Annual rainfall 56" (1,400 mm).

On 26 Dec. 2004 an undersea earthquake centred off the Indonesian island of Sumatra caused a huge tsunami that flooded coastal areas in western Thailand resulting in 8,000 deaths. In total there were more than 225,000 deaths in 14 countries.

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

The reigning King is Bhumibol Adulyadej, born 5 Dec. 1927. King Bhumibol married on 28 April 1950 Princess Sirikit (born 12 Aug. 1932), and was crowned 5 May 1950 (making him currently the world's longest-reigning monarch). Offspring: Princess Ubol Ratana (born 5 April 1951, married Aug. 1972 Peter Ladd Jensen, divorced 1998); Crown Prince Vajiralongkorn (born 28 July 1952, married Jan. 1977 Soamsawali Kitiyakra, divorced 1993; married Feb. 1994 Yuvadhida Polprasert, divorced 1997; married Feb. 2001 Srirasmee Akharaphongpreecha, divorced 2014); Princess Maha Chakri Sirindhorn (born 2 April 1955); Princess Chulabhorn (born 4 July 1957, married Jan. 1982 Virayudh Didiyasarin, divorced 1984).

Following the coup of May 2014, the existing constitution was superseded on 22 July by an interim replacement drafted by the military junta and signed into law by the King without public consultation. The interim constitution (the 19th since the overthrow of absolute monarchy in 1932) recognizes the status of the junta—the National Council for Peace and Order (NCPO)—as Thailand's legitimate executive authority, whilst granting it powers to recommend appointments to a new committee drafting a permanent constitution. A new parliament, a National Legislative Assembly of up to 220 members appointed by the NCPO, was established to replace the previous 150-seat Senate and 500-seat House of Representatives.

In Sept. 2015 the military-appointed National Reform Council rejected the draft of a new constitution. A Constitution Drafting Commission presented a new draft to the public in March 2016 and a referendum on its adoption was scheduled to be held in Aug. 2016.

RECENT ELECTIONS

At the elections to the House of Representatives on 3 July 2011 the Pheu Thai Party (PTP) won a majority with 265 seats out of 500 and 53.0% of the vote, ahead of the ruling Democrat Party with 159 seats (31.8%), Bhumjaithai with 34 seats (6.8%), Chartthaipattana with 19 (3.8%), the Chart Pattana Puea Pandin Party with 7 (1.4%) and the Phalang Chon Party also with 7 and 1.4%. Five other parties won four seats or fewer. Turnout was 66%. In a special session of the House of Representatives held on 5 Aug. 2011 the Thai parliament elected Yingluck Shinawatra prime minister by 296 to 3 with 197 abstentions.

Early elections to the House of Representatives were called after Yingluck Shinawatra dissolved parliament in Dec. 2013. They were held on 2 Feb. 2014, but were declared invalid on 21 March by Thailand's Constitutional Court after it emerged that voting did not take place on the same day across the country, in violation of the constitution.

There were elections to the 150-seat Senate on 30 March 2014. 77 members were directly elected with the remaining 73 appointed by a selection committee.

CURRENT GOVERNMENT

Army chief Gen. Prayuth Chan-ocha seized power from the caretaker government on 22 May 2014. Prayuth leads the military government known as the National Council for Peace and Order (NCPO) and was expected to rule until the appointment of a new interim government. However, in Aug. 2014 he was named as interim prime minister pending the holding of fresh elections.

In March 2016 the government comprised:

Prime Minister: Prayuth Chan-ocha; b. 1954 (since 25 Aug. 2014—also Leader of National Council for Peace and Order since 22 May 2014).

Deputy Prime Ministers: Gen. Prawit Wongsuwan (also Minister of Defence); Tanasak Patimapragnorn; Somkid Jatusripitak; Prajin Juntong; Wissanu Kruea-Ngam; Narong Pipatanasai.

Position

Prime Minister

Introduction

Prayuth Chan-ocha, leader of the May 2014 coup in Thailand, was designated prime minister by the National Legislative Assembly (NLA) the following Aug. He is expected to stay in office until fresh elections can be held.

Early Life

Prayuth was born on 21 March 1954 in Nakhon Ratchasima province. In 1976 he graduated from the Chulachomkhalo Royal Military Academy and joined the 21st Infantry Regiment, also known as the Queen's Guard, where he spent most of his military career. In 2006 he was appointed Commanding General of 1st Army Area and was chosen to participate in the military-backed NLA following the removal of Thaksin Shinawatra from office that year. In 2008 Prayuth became Army Chief of Staff and in 2009 was named its Deputy Commander in Chief. Considered a hardliner, he supported the military's tough stance against the Thaksin-supporting 'Red Shirt' protesters in April 2009 and April–May 2010.

In Oct. 2010 Prayuth was appointed Commander in Chief of the Army. Despite his opposition to Thaksin Shinawatra, Prayuth was seen as co-operative towards his sister, Yingluck Shinawatra, after she won the July 2011 parliamentary polls. When political tensions began to rise in Nov. 2013, Prayuth was initially reluctant to order army involvement. However, after Yingluck was removed from office by the Constitutional Court, Prayuth launched a coup on 22 May 2014. Heading the newly-established National Council for Peace and Order, he ordered a clampdown on dissent, declared a nationwide curfew and issued an interim constitution granting the military sweeping powers. On 31 July 2014 a new NLA was established, with many of its legislators handpicked by Prayuth from military and police backgrounds. On 24 Aug. 2014 he was designated prime minister by the NLA.

Career in Office

Prayuth retired from the army on 30 Sept. 2014. He promised to deliver a new constitution and reforms designed to prevent a return to the political instability that has undermined the nation for years. The holding of further legislative elections has since been deferred, reinforcing military control and delaying the restoration of democracy.

In Aug. 2015 a terrorist bomb, seemingly targeting tourists, killed 20 people at a Hindu shrine in Bangkok.

DEFENCE

Conscription is for two years; if there are not enough volunteers a conscription lottery is held to fill the quota. In 2013 defence expenditure totalled US$6,213m. (US$92 per capita), representing 1.5% of GDP.

Army

Strength (2011) 190,000 (including around 70,000 conscripts). In addition there were 45,000 National Security Volunteer Corps, around 20,000 Thahan Phran ('Hunter Soldiers', a volunteer irregular force), 41,000 Border Police and a 50,000 strong paramilitary provincial police force (including an estimated 500-strong special action force).

Navy

The Royal Thai Navy is, next to the Chinese, the most significant naval force in the South China Sea. The fleet includes a small Spanish-built vertical/short-take-off-and-land carrier Chakri Naruebet, which entered service in 1997 and operates nine ex-Spanish AV-8A Harrier aircraft (although their serviceability is in doubt) and helicopters, and ten frigates. Manpower was 69,900 (2011) including 25,800 conscripts and 1,200 naval aviation personnel.

The main bases are at Ban Pak Nam, Bangkok, Sattahip, Songkla and Phang Nga, with the riverine forces based at Nakhon Phanom.

Air Force

The Royal Thai Air Force had a strength (2011) of an estimated 46,000 personnel and 163 combat-capable aircraft, including F-16s and F-5Es. The RTAF is made up of four air divisions.

ECONOMY

Agriculture accounted for 11.3% of GDP in 2013, industry 37.0% and services 51.7%.

Thailand's 'shadow' (black market) economy is estimated to constitute approximately 48% of the country's official GDP.

Overview

Thailand began its transformation into a diverse, industrialized economy in the 1980s. An export-oriented, labour-intensive manufacturing sector developed largely owing to foreign investment, which in 2013 reached US$13bn. Exports accounted for 73.3% of national income in 2013, with the major trading partners being the USA (12.6%), Japan (11.9%) and China (9.7%). The services sector is dominated by tourism, which accounts for around 8% of GDP.

The Asian financial crisis of the late 1990s saw GDP contract by 10.5% in 1998 against a backdrop of high inflation and rising unemployment and poverty. A prudent macroeconomic policy, low public debt and falling inflation then helped Thailand to recover, with GDP growth averaging 5% annually from 2002 to 2007. However, the global financial crisis saw the economy contract again, and at one of the steepest rates in southeast Asia in 2009. Growth has since been erratic, supported by a boost in tourism and demand for electronics and automobiles, but hampered by floods in 2011 and the impact of political tensions in 2010 and again in 2013. Thailand has consequently lagged behind many of its regional neighbours.

The World Bank raised Thailand's economic status to an upper-middle income nation in 2011 and the country is set to reach most of its UN Millennium Development targets. However, poverty remains high in rural areas and there is a large wage disparity between Bangkok and the rest of the country. In 2013 the government raised the minimum wage to US$10 per hour and cut corporation tax from 23% to 20%.

Risks to long-term prosperity include a slowdown in emerging market growth. Meanwhile, a military coup in May 2014 also undermined economic stability.

Currency

The unit of currency is the baht (THB) of 100 satang. After being pegged to the US dollar, the baht was devalued and allowed to float on 2 July 1997. It was the devaluation of the baht that sparked the financial turmoil that spread throughout the world over the next year. Foreign exchange reserves were US$127,165m. in Sept. 2009 (US$28,434m. in 1998) and gold reserves 2.70m. troy oz. Total money supply in Aug. 2009 was 1,022.2bn. baht. Inflation rates (based on IMF statistics):

2005	2006	2007	2008	2009	2010	2011	2012	2013	2014
4.5%	4.6%	2.2%	5.5%	-0.9%	3.3%	3.8%	3.0%	2.2%	1.9%

Budget

The fiscal year runs from 1 Oct.–30 Sept. In 2009–10 budgetary central government revenue was 1,804.0bn. baht and expenditure 1,826.2bn. baht. Main sources of revenue in 2009–10: taxes on goods and services, 780.7bn. baht; taxes on income, profits and capital gains, 682.9bn. baht; taxes on international trade and transactions, 92.8bn. baht. Main items of expenditure by economic type in 2009–10: compensation of employees, 752.8bn. baht; use of goods and services, 488.4bn. baht; grants, 357.5bn. baht.

VAT is 7%.

Performance

Real GDP growth rates (based on IMF statistics):

2005	2006	2007	2008	2009	2010	2011	2012	2013	2014
4.2%	5.0%	5.4%	1.7%	-0.7%	7.5%	0.8%	7.3%	2.8%	0.9%

Thailand's total GDP in 2014 was US$404.8bn.

Banking and Finance

The Bank of Thailand (founded in 1942) is the central bank and bank of issue, an independent body although its capital is government-owned. Its assets in 2014 were 3,527,289m. baht and its liabilities 4,227,783m. baht. Its Governor is Veerathai Santiprabhob. In 2013 there were 15 commercial banks. There are four major banks: Bangkok Bank (with assets in Dec. 2013 of US$79,340m.), KASIKORNBANK, Krung Thai Bank (which is state-owned) and Siam Commercial Bank.

Thailand received US$12.9bn. worth of foreign direct investment in 2013 (US$10.7bn. in 2012).

External debt amounted to US$71,263m. in 2010, up from US$46,342m. in 2005 although down from US$79,720m. in 2000. As a share of GNI foreign debt declined from 66.0% in 2000 to 27.6% in 2005 and further to 23.4% in 2010.

There is a stock exchange (SET) in Bangkok.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Thailand's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2011 were the equivalent of 4.4 tonnes per capita.

Electricity

Installed capacity, 2011, was an estimated 47.5m. kW. Output, 2011, 151.60bn. kWh, with consumption per capita 2,420 kWh.

Oil and Gas

Proven oil reserves in 2012 were 0.4bn. bbls. Production of oil in 2012 was a record 16.2m. tonnes. Thailand and Vietnam settled an offshore dispute in 1997 that stretched back to 1973. Demarcation allowed for petroleum exploration in the Gulf of Thailand, with each side required to give the other some revenue if an underground reservoir is discovered that straddles the border.

Production of natural gas in 2012 reached a record 41.4bn. cu. metres. Reserves, 2012, 300bn. cu. metres. In April 1998 Thailand and Malaysia agreed to share equally the natural gas jointly produced in an offshore area (the Malaysian-Thailand Joint Development Area) that both countries claim as their own territory.

Minerals

The mineral resources include antimony, cassiterite (tin ore), copper, diatomite, dolomite, gold, gypsum, kaolin, lignite, limestone, manganese, marl, potash, rubies, sapphires, silica sand, silver and zinc. Production, 2005 unless otherwise indicated (in tonnes): limestone (2008), 142.12m.; lignite, 21.43m.; gypsum, 7.11m.; salt, 1.17m.; feldspar, 1.15m.; kaolin, 746,000; iron ore (metal content), 116,000 (estimate); zinc ore (metal content), 31,000 (estimate).

Agriculture

In 2002 there were an estimated 15.9m. ha. of arable land and 3.5m. ha. of permanent cropland. About 4.96m. ha. were irrigated in 2002. The chief produce is rice, a staple of the national diet. Output of the major crops in 2002 was (in 1,000 tonnes): sugarcane, 74,258; rice, 26,057; cassava, 16,868; maize, 4,230; natural rubber, 2,456; bananas, 1,800; pineapples, 1,739; mangoes, 1,750; coconuts, 1,418. Thailand is the world's leading producer of natural rubber. Livestock, 2003: pigs, 7,059,000; cattle, 5,048,000; buffaloes, 1,613,000; chickens, 177m.; ducks, 20m.

Forestry

Forests covered 18.97m. ha. in 2010, or 37% of the land area. Of the total area under forests 35% was primary forest in 2010, 44% other naturally regenerated forest and 21% planted forest. Teak and other hardwoods grow in the deciduous forests of the north; elsewhere tropical evergreen forests are found, with the timber yang the main crop (a source of yang oil). In 2011, 33.79m. cu. metres of roundwood were cut.

Fisheries

In 2012 the total catch came to 1,834,573 tonnes with marine fishing accounting for 88% of all fish caught. Thailand is the third largest exporter of fishery commodities in the world (after China and Norway), with exports in 2011 totalling US$9.46bn. Imports of fishery commodities in 2011 totalled US$2.72bn. Aquaculture production in 2010 was the sixth highest in the world, at 1,286,122 tonnes.

INDUSTRY

The leading companies by market capitalization in Thailand in March 2015 were: PTT PCL, an oil and gas company (US$28.4bn.); Advanced Info Service, a mobile telecommunications company (US$21.7bn.); and Siam Cement, a construction and materials company (US$18.9bn.).

Production (2008 unless otherwise indicated): 31.65m. tonnes of cement, 18.38m. tonnes of distillate fuel oil (2007), 7.33m. tonnes of residual fuel oil (2007), 6.31m. tonnes of petrol (2007), 5.95m. tonnes of sugar (2002), 5.21m. tonnes of crude steel, 768,098 tonnes of synthetic fibre (2002), 519,006 tonnes of galvanized iron sheets (2002), 174,000 tonnes of tin plate (2012), 2,192.7m. litres of soft drinks, 2,160.0m. litres of beer, 30.5bn. cigarettes, 945,100 passenger cars and 1,484,000 commercial vehicles (2012), and 5,881,000 televisions.

Labour

The labour force in 2013 was 39,873,000 (36,471,000 in 2003). 78.3% of the population aged 15–64 was economically active in 2013. In the same year 0.7% of the population was unemployed. There is no nationwide minimum wage but a minimum wage is set at different levels at the provincial level. It varied between 159 baht and 221 baht per day in July 2011.

Thailand had 0.47m. people living in slavery according to the Walk Free Foundation's 2013 Global Slavery Index, the seventh highest total of any country.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

In 2010 imports (c.i.f.) totalled US$182,393.4m. (US$133,769.6m. in 2009); exports (f.o.b.), US$195,311.5m. (US$152,497.2m. in 2009). Main imports in 2003: machinery and transport equipment, 43.5%; chemicals and related products, 11.2%; petroleum and petroleum products, 10.6%; iron and steel, 5.4%.

Exports: machinery and transport equipment, 43.8%; chemicals and related products, 6.5%; fish and seafood, 4.9%; clothing and apparel, 4.5%. Main import sources in 2003: Japan (24.1%), USA (9.5%), China (8.0%), Malaysia (6.0%), South Korea (3.8%). Principal export destinations (2003): USA (17.0%), Japan (14.2%), Singapore (7.3%), China (7.1%), Hong Kong (5.4%). In the meantime China has become Thailand's largest trading partner.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

In 2006 there were 180,053 km of roads, of which 450 km were motorways. Vehicles in use in 2006 included: 3.80m. passenger cars, 4.99m. lorries and vans and 15.67m. motorcycles and mopeds. Thailand has among the world's highest road death rates, at an estimated 38.1 per 100,000 population in 2010.

Rail

The State Railway totalled 4,041 km in 2012. Passenger-km travelled in 2011 came to 7.5bn.; freight tonne-km transported in 2011 totalled 2.5bn. A metro ('Skytrain'), or elevated transit system, was opened in Bangkok in 1999. A second (underground) mass transit system in Bangkok, the Bangkok Subway, was opened in 2004.

Civil Aviation

The main international airports are at Bangkok (Suvarnabhumi and Don Muang), Chiang Mai, Phuket and Hat Yai. The national carrier, Thai Airways International, is 51.03% state-owned. In 2005 scheduled airline traffic of Thai-based carriers flew 213.8m. km, carrying 21,507,900 passengers. Suvarnabhumi, which only opened in 2006, handled 53,002,328 passengers in 2012 (39,358,339 on international flights) and 1,345,490 tonnes of freight. Phuket is the second busiest airport, with 9,541,552 passengers in 2012 (5,052,218 on international flights) and 34,055 tonnes of freight.

Shipping

In Jan. 2009 there were 612 ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 2,738,000 GT. Of the 612 vessels registered, 209 were oil tankers, 205 general cargo ships, 72 liquid gas tankers, 52 bulk carriers, 26 chemical tankers, 26 passenger ships and 22 container ships. The busiest ports are Laem Chabang and Bangkok.

Telecommunications

In 2013 there were 6.1m. main (fixed) telephone lines. In the same year mobile phone subscriptions numbered 93.8m. (1,400.5 per 1,000 persons). In 2013 an estimated 28.9% of the population aged six years and over were internet users. In March 2012 there were 14.2m. Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The judicial power is exercised in the name of the King, by (a) courts of first instance, (b) the court of appeal (Uthorn) and (c) the Supreme Court (Dika). The King appoints, transfers and dismisses judges, who are independent in conducting trials and giving judgment in accordance with the law.

Courts of first instance are subdivided into 20 magistrates' courts (Kwaeng) with limited civil and minor criminal jurisdiction; 85 provincial courts (Changwad) with unlimited civil and criminal jurisdiction; the criminal and civil courts with exclusive jurisdiction in Bangkok; the central juvenile courts for persons under 18 years of age in Bangkok.

The court of appeal exercises appellate jurisdiction in civil and criminal cases from all courts of first instance. From it appeals lie to Dika Court on any point of law and, in certain cases, on questions of fact.

The Supreme Court is the supreme tribunal of the land. Besides its normal appellate jurisdiction in civil and criminal matters, it has semi-original jurisdiction over general election petitions. The decisions of Dika Court are final. Every person has the right to present a petition to the government who will deal with all matters of grievance.

The death penalty is still in force; there were two confirmed executions in 2009 (the first since 2003), but none since. The population in penal institutions in March 2011 was 224,292 (328 per 100,000 of national population). Thailand was ranked 53rd of 102 countries for criminal justice and 74th for civil justice in the 2015 World Justice Project Rule of Law Index, which provides data on how the rule of law is experienced by the general public across eight categories.

Education

Education is compulsory for children for nine years and is free in local municipal schools. In 2007 there were 5,703,756 primary school pupils with 321,930 teaching staff. There were 4,789,339 secondary school pupils in 2007 with 227,929 teaching staff. There were 1,005,481 students in vocational education in 2005. In higher education there were 2,503,572 students in 2007 with 66,431 academic staff. In 2005 there were 78 public and 61 private institutions of higher education, 146 industry and community colleges, 110 technical colleges, 54 polytechnic colleges and 44 agricultural and technology colleges.

The adult literacy rate in 2005 was 94%.

In 2007 public expenditure on education came to 4.0% of GNI and 20.9% of total government spending.

Health

Thailand had 21 hospital beds per 10,000 population in 2010; there were 26,244 doctors in the same year plus 11,847 dentists, 8,700 pharmacists and 138,710 registered nurses (most of whom were nurse-midwives). Thailand is considered to be the most successful country in the world in preventing the spread of HIV/AIDS. The number of annual new HIV cases has fallen to under 10,000 from a high of 140,000 in the mid-1990s.

RELIGION

According to the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life, 93.2% of the population in 2010 was Buddhist, 5.5% Muslim and 0.9% Christian. Only Cambodia has a higher percentage of Buddhists in its population, and only China has more Buddhists. Most Muslims are Sunnis and among Christians there are more Protestants than Catholics. In Feb. 2016 the Roman Catholic church had two cardinals.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

There are five UNESCO sites in Thailand. They are: the Thung Yai-Huai Kha Khaeng wildlife sanctuaries (inscribed in 1991); the palace, temples, Buddhas, etc. of the historic town of Sukhothai (1991); the 15th–18th century historic town of Ayutthaya (1991); the Bronze Age Ba Chiang archaeological site (1992); and the mountainous Dong Phrayayen-Khao Yai forest complex (2005).

Press

In 2008 there were 46 daily newspapers (45 paid-for and one free), with a combined circulation of 7.4m. The newspapers with the highest circulation figures are Thai Rath, Daily News and Kom Chad Luek.

Tourism

In 2010 there were 15,936,000 tourist arrivals, up from 14,150,000 in 2009. Tourist numbers have doubled since 1998. The leading nationalities of tourists in 2010 were Malaysia (2,059,000), China (1,122,000), Japan (994,000) and the United Kingdom (811,000).

Festivals

Songkran, celebrated on 13 April each year, is the traditional Thai New Year festival, although 1 Jan. was made the official New Year in 1940. Other notable festivals include: the colourful Bosang Umbrella Fair in Jan. and a Flower Carnival in Feb., both in Chiang Mai; a Candle Festival held in Ubon Ratchathani on Khao Phansa Day in July (the day after the full moon of the eighth lunar month, marking the start of Buddhist Lent); Buffalo Races, held during Oct. at Chonburi; and an annual Elephant Round-up in the third week of Nov. at Surin.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Portugal abandoned its former colony, with its largely Roman Catholic population, in 1975, when it was occupied by Indonesia and claimed as the province of Timor Timur. The United Nations did not recognize Indonesian sovereignty over the territory. An independence movement, the Revolutionary Front for an Independent East Timor (FRETILIN), maintained a guerrilla resistance to the Indonesian government which resulted in large-scale casualties and alleged atrocities. On 24 July 1998 Indonesia announced a withdrawal of troops from Timor-Leste and an amnesty for some political prisoners, although no indication was given of how many of the estimated 12,000 troops and police would pull out. On 5 Aug. 1998 Indonesia and Portugal reached agreement on the outlines of an autonomy plan which would give the Timorese the right to self-government except in foreign affairs and defence.

In a referendum on the future of Timor-Leste held on 30 Aug. 1999 the electorate was some 450,000 and turnout was nearly 99%. 78.5% of voters opted for independence, but pro-Indonesian militia gangs wreaked havoc both before and after the referendum. The militias accused the UN of rigging the poll. There was widespread violence in and around Dili, the provincial capital, with heavy loss of life, and thousands of people were forced to take to the hills after intimidation. Timor-Leste's first democratic election took place on 30 Aug. 2001 in a ballot run by the UN, with FRETILIN winning 57% of the vote and 55 of the 88 seats in the new constituent assembly. Timor-Leste became an independent country on 20 May 2002.

In 2006 the UN established a non-military peacekeeping mission (UNMIT) in the country. A report presented to the UN in the same year found that the Indonesian occupation had directly resulted in the deaths of 100,000 East Timorese. In Feb. 2008 President Ramos-Horta survived an assassination attempt at his official residence by disaffected soldiers. With Timor-Leste by now relatively peaceful, in Dec. 2012 UNMIT was withdrawn from the country.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Timor-Leste (East Timor) has a total land area of 14,954 sq. km (5,774 sq. miles), consisting of the mainland (13,987 sq. km), the enclave of Oecussi-Ambeno in West Timor (817 sq. km), and the islands of Ataúro to the north (140 sq. km) and Jaco to the east (10 sq. km). The mainland area incorporates the eastern half of the island of Timor. Oecussi-Ambeno lies westwards, separated from the main portion of Timor-Leste by a distance of some 100 km. The island is bound to the south by the Timor Sea and lies approximately 500 km from the Australian coast.

Provisional population at the census of July 2015, 1,167,242 (588,561 males); density, 78 per sq. km. The largest city is Dili, Timor-Leste's capital. In 2015 its population (provisional) was 222,323. In 2011, 28.6% of the population were urban.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 1-19m.

The ethnic East Timorese form the majority of the population. Non-East Timorese, comprising Portuguese and West Timorese as well as persons from Sumatra, Java, Sulawesi and other parts of Indonesia, are estimated to constitute approximately 20% of the total population.

During Indonesian occupation the official language was Indonesian (Bahasa Indonesia). Timor-Leste's constitution designates Portuguese and Tetum (an Austronesian language influenced by Portuguese) as the official languages, and English and Indonesian as working languages.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2008 estimates: births, 44,000; deaths, 9,500. Rates, 2008 estimates (per 1,000 population): births, 40.0; deaths, 8.7. Annual population growth rate in 2000–08, 3.7%. Fertility rate, 2008, 6.5 children per woman. In 2013 life expectancy at birth was 66.0 years for males and 69.1 years for females.

From having the world's highest rate of infant mortality in the early 1980s, Timor-Leste's infant mortality rate dropped to 46 per 1,000 live births in 2010, although the figure varies widely between urban and rural areas.

CLIMATE

In the north there is an average annual temperature of over 24°C (75°F), weak precipitation—below 1,500 mm (59") annually—and a dry period lasting five months. The mountainous zone, between the northern and southern parts of the island, has high precipitation—above 1,500 mm (59")—and a dry period of four months. The southern zone has precipitation reaching 2,000 mm (79") and is permanently humid. The monsoon season extends from Nov. to May.

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

The constitution promulgated in 2002 created a unicameral system with a National Parliament with a minimum requirement of 52 directly-elected seats and a maximum of 65. For the first term after independence the parliament had 88 members but this was reduced after the June 2007 legislative elections.

The President is directly elected for a period of five years and may not serve more than two terms.

National Anthem

'Pátria, Pátria, Timor-Leste, nossa Nação' ('Fatherland, fatherland, East Timor our Nation'); words by F. Borja da Costa, tune by A. Araujo.

RECENT ELECTIONS

Presidential elections were held on 17 March and 16 April 2012. In the first round Francisco Guterres of the ruling FRETILIN (Revolutionary Front for an Independent East Timor) party received 28.8% of votes cast against Taur Matan Ruak (ind.) with 25.7%, José Ramos-Horta (ind.) with 17.5% and Fernando de Araújo of the Democratic Party with 17.3%. Eight other candidates received less than 4% each. In the second round Ruak was elected president with 61.2% of the vote against 38.8% for Guterres. Turnout was 78.2% in the first round and 73.1% in the second.

Elections to the 65-member National Parliament took place on 7 July 2012. The Congresso Nacional de Reconstrução de Timor-Leste (CNRT; National Congress for Timorese Reconstruction) won 36.7% of votes cast and 30 seats, ahead of the Frente Revolucionária de Timor-Leste Independente (FRETILIN) with 29.9% of the votes and 25 seats, the Partido Democrático (PD; Democratic Party) 10.3% and 8 seats and the Frente de Reconstrução Nacional de Timor-Leste-Mudança (Front for National Reconstruction of Timor-Leste-Change) 3.1% and 2 seats. 17 other parties failed to win a seat. Turnout was 74.8%.

CURRENT LEADERS

Taur Matan Ruak

Position

President

Introduction

Taur Matan Ruak became president in May 2012, taking the largely ceremonial role as UN peacekeepers stationed in the country since 1999 prepared to withdraw.

Early Life

Born José Maria de Vasconcelhos on 10 Oct. 1956 in Baucau District, the president is popularly known by his nom de guerre, Taur Matan Ruak, meaning 'two sharp eyes' in the local Tetun language.

During the Indonesian invasion in Dec. 1975, Ruak joined FALINTIL (Forças Armadas da Libertação Nacional de Timor-Leste)—the military wing of FRETILIN (Frente Revolucionária de Timor-Leste Independente). On 13 March 1979 he was captured by Indonesian troops but escaped after 23 days to re-join FALINTIL. Rising through the ranks, he became chief-of-staff in 1992, commander in 1998 and commander-in-chief in 2000.

With the dissolution of FALINTIL, Ruak became a brigadier general in the newly established national armed force (F-FDTL) on 1 Feb. 2001. In 2006 he faced criticism over the military's transfer of weapons to civilians during unrest that year, with a UN commission of inquiry recommending his prosecution. However, a Timorese inquiry cleared him of all charges and Ruak was promoted to major general in 2009.

He resigned from the F-FDTL on 1 Sept. 2011 and announced his presidential candidacy a month later. Running as an independent, he was backed by Prime Minister Xanana Gusmão and the Conselho Nacional de Reconstrução de Timor (CNRT) party. After coming second with 26% in the first round of voting, Ruak won the second round with 61% of votes cast.

Career in Office

Ruak was sworn in on 20 May 2012, the tenth anniversary of Timor-Leste's independence. Despite having no executive powers, he sought co-operation with the government (initially led by Gusmão and, from Feb. 2015, by Rui Maria de Araújo) on issues including the diversification of the economy, national defence strategy and forging closer ties with regional partners.

Rui Maria de Araújo

Position

Prime Minister

Introduction

Rui Maria de Araújo was sworn in as prime minister on 16 Feb. 2015. A member of the Revolutionary Front for an Independent East Timor (FRETILIN), he heads a national unity government. He succeeded Xanana Gusmão, who nominated Araújo for the post in the interests of cross-party co-operation.

Early Life

Rui Maria de Araújo was born on 21 May 1964 in the village of Mape, part of the Zumulai district in what was then Portuguese Timor. Following the invasion by Indonesian troops in Dec. 1975, his family took sanctuary with the resistance movement for three years. After resuming his schooling, he graduated in medicine from the Satya Wacana University in Central Java. He joined RENETIL, an underground pro-independence student association, in 1989.

In 1994 Araújo resumed working at a hospital in Dili, during which time he secretly provided medical attention to guerrilla fighters. He then moved to New Zealand to complete a postgraduate course in public health. After the referendum in 1999 that secured East Timor's independence, Araújo joined the United Nations Transitional Administration. He was appointed minister for health in Sept. 2001, a position he retained when independence was formalized on 20 May 2002. Having been deputy prime minister from June 2006, he left government in the wake of the parliamentary election of 2007, although he continued to serve as an adviser to President José Ramos-Horta. It was not until 2010 that he officially joined the left-wing FRETILIN party.

Xanana Gusmão, the leader of the rival National Congress for Timorese Reconstruction and a founding father of the nation, offered his resignation as premier in Feb. 2015. Suggesting that a new generation of leaders should come forward, he proposed Araújo as his successor.

Career in Office

Araújo took office with a significantly smaller cabinet than his predecessor, pledging to reduce inefficiency. Leading a unity government that includes Gusmão, Araújo's challenge is to lift half of the population out of poverty.

DEFENCE

The Timor-Leste Defence Force comprises an army and a small naval element. In 2013 the army had 1,250 personnel and the naval element around 80. Defence spending totalled US$67m. in 2013 (US$57 per capita), representing 1.6% of GDP.

In 2006 the UN initiated the 'Integrated Mission in East Timor' (UNMIT) in a bid to bring stability to the country. Totalling 2,745 personnel in mid-2012, it was withdrawn at the end of Dec. 2012.

The Australian-led International Stabilisation Force, also deployed in 2006, left in March 2013.

ECONOMY

Overview

Oil resources in the Timor Sea have transformed the economy's prospects. Following a referendum in 1999 in which the population voted overwhelmingly in favour of independence from Indonesia, militia groups led a campaign of violence that ravaged the infrastructure. After achieving independence in May 2002, authorities relied on the UN and other development agencies to help rebuild the economy.

Expansionary fiscal policy driven by a boom in oil revenues since 2005 resulted in strong growth, although this was interrupted in 2006 with an outbreak of violence leading to military and humanitarian assistance from neighbouring economies and the UN. Non-oil GDP growth averaged almost 12% per year from 2008–12 thanks to a rapid increase in government spending, boosting the public administration and construction sectors. The government's Strategic Development Plan aims to transform the country into an upper-middle income economy by 2030. Shifting the economy from public to private sector-led growth, and more effectively channelling petroleum revenues to build infrastructure and reduce poverty while sustaining the Petroleum Fund, are crucial to long-term prospects.

Currency

The official currency is the US dollar. The Australian dollar and the Indonesian rupiah, both previously used, no longer serve as legal tender. Inflation was 9.5% in 2013 but dropped dramatically to 0.7% in 2014.

Budget

Central government revenues in 2010 were US$2,737.0m. (US$2,064.9m. in 2009) and expenditures US$1,137.2m. (US$1,032.6m. in 2009).

Performance

Total GDP in 2014 was US$1.4bn. Real GDP growth rates from 2007–12 consistently rank above the average for developing economies in Asia. Timor-Leste's economy grew by 6.4% in 2012, 2.8% in 2013 and 4.5% in 2014.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Timor-Leste's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy were the equivalent of 0.3 tonnes per capita in 2011.

Electricity

Electricity produced in 2011 totalled of 140m. kWh; consumption per capita was 128 kWh.

Oil and Gas

Although current production is small, the Timor Gap, an area of offshore territory between Timor-Leste and Australia, is one of the richest oilfields in the world outside the Middle East. Potential revenue from the area is estimated at US$11bn. The area is split into three zones with a central 'zone of occupation' (occupying 61,000 sq. km). Royalties on oil discovered within the central zone were split equally between Indonesia and Australia following the Timor Gap Treaty which came into force on 9 Feb. 1991. Questions over Timor-Leste's rights to oil revenue from the area have arisen following the 1999 independence referendum. There are also extensive offshore gas fields, but the region generally remains underexplored.

Minerals

Gold, iron sands, copper and chromium are present.

Agriculture

Although the presence of sandalwood was one of the principal reasons behind Portuguese colonization, its production has declined in recent years. In 2012 there were an estimated 160,000 ha. of arable land and 74,000 ha. of permanent crops. Principal crops are rice, maize, cassava, sweet potatoes, dry beans, coconuts and coffee.

Forestry

Forests covered 0.74m. ha. in 2010, representing 50% of the total land area. Timber production in 2011 was 115,000 cu. metres.

Fisheries

The total fish catch in 2011 was an estimated 3,200 tonnes.

INDUSTRY

Labour

In 2010 unemployment was officially 9.8% of the labour force between 15 and 64.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

Imports totalled US$268.5m. in 2008 and exports US$49.2m. Major imports are mineral fuels, motor vehicles and cereals. Coffee and cattle are important exports. Leading import suppliers are Indonesia, Singapore, Australia and Vietnam. Leading export destinations are Germany, the USA, Indonesia and Singapore.

COMMUNICATIONS

Civil Aviation

There is an international airport at Dili (Presidente Nicolau Lobato International Airport).

Telecommunications

In 2010 there were 2,907 landline telephone subscriptions (2,334 in 2005) and 350,891 mobile phone subscriptions (33,072 in 2005).

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

Timor-Leste's judiciary currently conforms to a UN-drafted legal system based on Indonesian law. This is scheduled to be replaced by a civil and penal judiciary system which will be based on Portuguese law. The Supreme Court of Justice is the highest court of law. There are four District Courts and a Court of Appeal.

Health

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Eleventh century records relate Togo's settlement by a succession of tribes. The Kwa people from the Volta region were joined by the Ewe people from the Niger Valley, while later migrations included the Ana, Mina and Guin people from Ghana and the Ivory Coast, and the Nawdba from the east, who settled in northern Togo.

During 1471–72 Portuguese explorers and traders began trading along the coast in gold, silver and pepper. In the 16th century Britain, Denmark, Holland, France, Germany, Sweden and Portugal all shipped slaves from the region in co-operation with tribal leaders. The 18th century saw conflicts with the Akwamu Confederacy and the Ashanti Kingdom in the west, and the Kingdom of Dahomey in the east, as tribal rulers tried to consolidate their territory. Meanwhile, Britain, France and Germany became the dominant European powers in the region.

Following the abolition of slavery in the 19th century, British, French and German traders built up a flourishing palm oil export trade from Anecho, Agoue and Porto Seguro. As a result several Togolese families of partly Brazilian or Portuguese origin came to prominence, some retaining considerable influence to the present day.

Despite competition from Britain and France, Germany signed a treaty with chief Mlapa III on 5 July 1884 in the village of Togo (modern Togoville) to establish colonial rule on the coast. German control was then extended inland and, following agreement with Britain and France, the borders of German Togoland were defined. Using slave labour, the German administration developed the agricultural sector, focusing on cacao, coffee and cotton.

In 1914 the Allies overran German Togoland and in 1922 it was partitioned into a western British Mandated Territory and an eastern French Mandated Territory under the League of Nations. In 1946, following the Second World War, British Togoland and French Togoland became Trust territories under the United Nations. On 9 May 1956 a UN-sponsored referendum in British Togoland resulted in a majority vote for union with the neighbouring colony of Gold Coast. The territory soon merged with Gold Coast to become Ghana, despite objections from the southern Togolese, most of whom had voted for union with French Togo. In 1956 French Togo was granted partial self-government to become the Republic of Togo. It gained full independence on 27 April 1960.

Sylvanus Olympio was elected president in 1958. In 1961 a new constitution established a seven-year-term and broad executive powers for the presidency, alongside an elected National Assembly. Olympio won the 1961 election and his party, Unité Togolaise (UT), took all 51 National Assembly seats. In 1962 Olympio disbanded the main opposition parties, alleging they had plotted against his government. On 13 Jan. 1963 Olympio was assassinated by soldiers and the army voted in Nicolas Grunitzky as head of state. A military coup ousted Grunitzky in Jan. 1967 and on 14 April 1967 Gen. (then Col.) Etienne Gnassingbé Eyadéma took the presidency.

Eyadéma developed the country's investment banking sector and its phosphates exports, prompting economic growth until recession in the 1980s caused a price collapse. Eyadéma ruled as head of Togo's only officially recognized political party, the Rassemblement du Peuple Togolais (RPT), and survived several attempted coups. In Aug. 1991 a national conference of Togo's leading political movements led to a reduction in Eyadéma's executive powers. A transitional administration, the High Council of the Republic, was installed, led by Kokou Koffigoh.

In Nov. 1991 the new government banned the RPT and the army, which backed Eyadéma, attempted a coup. Eyadéma negotiated the return of some of his powers and won an election in Aug. 1992, though its validity was disputed and the main opposition parties boycotted it. In 1994 a coalition of the Comité d'Action pour le Renouveau and the Union Togolaise pour la Démocratie won a majority in the National Assembly elections. The RPT returned to power in the election of June 1998 and Eyadéma retained the presidency throughout the entire period until his death in Feb. 2005.

On Eyadéma's death the military installed his son, Faure Gnassingbé, as president and the following day the constitution was amended to legalize his succession. Under domestic and international pressure he stepped down on 25 Feb. 2005 and parliament speaker Abbas Bonfoh became interim president. Faure Gnassingbé won the presidential election held in April 2005 but the opposition alleged vote rigging and 400–500 people died in riots. Gnassingbé was subsequently confirmed as president.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Togo is bounded in the west by Ghana, north by Burkina Faso, east by Benin and south by the Gulf of Guinea. The area is 56,600 sq. km. 2010 census population, 6,191,155 (3,182,060 females); density, 109 per sq. km.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 7.31m.

In 2011, 44.1% of the population lived in urban areas. In 2010, 42% were below the age of 15. The capital is Lomé (2010 census population, 837,437), other towns being Sokodé (95,070), Kara (94,878), Kpalimé (75,084), Atakpamé (69,261), Dapaong (58,071) and Tsévié (54,474).

Area, 2010 census population and chief town of the five regions:

Region	Area in sq. km	Population	Chief town
Centrale	13,317	617,871	Sokodé
De La Kara	11,738	769,940	Kara
Des Plateaux	16,975	1,375,165	Atakpamé
Des Savanes	8,470	828,224	Dapaong
Maritime	6,100	2,599,955	Lomé

There are 37 ethnic groups. The south is largely populated by Ewe-speaking peoples (forming 23% of the population), Watyi (10%) and other related groups, while the north is mainly inhabited by Hamitic groups speaking Kabre (14%), Tem (6%) and Gurma (3%). The official language is French but Ewe and Kabre are also taught in schools.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2008 estimates: births, 212,000; deaths, 53,000. Estimated rates, 2008 (per 1,000 population): births, 32.9; deaths, 8.2. Expectation of life (2013) was 55.6 years for males and 57.4 for females. Annual population growth rate, 2005–10, 2.6%. Infant mortality, 2010, 66 per 1,000 live births; fertility rate, 2008, 4.3 births per woman.

CLIMATE

The tropical climate produces wet seasons from March to July and from Oct. to Nov. in the south. The north has one wet season, from April to July. The heaviest rainfall occurs in the mountains of the west, southwest and centre. Lomé, Jan. 81°F (27.2°C), July 76°F (24.4°C). Annual rainfall 35" (875 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

A referendum on 27 Sept. 1992 approved a new constitution by 98.1% of votes cast. Under this the President and the National Assembly were directly elected for five-year terms. Initially the president was allowed to be re-elected only once. However, on 30 Dec. 2002 parliament approved an amendment to the constitution lifting the restriction on the number of times that the president may be re-elected. The National Assembly has 91 seats and is elected for a five-year term.

National Anthem

'Terre de nos aïeux' ('Land of our forefathers').

RECENT ELECTIONS

In presidential elections held on 25 April 2015 Faure Gnassingbé was re-elected with 58.8% of the vote, ahead of Jean-Pierre Fabre of the National Alliance for Change (Alliance Nationale pour le Changement) with 35.2% and Tchaboure Gogue of the Alliance of Democrats for Integral Development (Alliance des Démocrates pour le Développement Intégral) with 4.0%. There were two other candidates. Turnout was 60.9%.

At the parliamentary elections on 25 July 2013 the ruling Union for the Republic (UNIR) won 62 of 91 seats, the Save Togo Collective 19, the Rainbow Alliance 6 and the Union of Forces for Change 3. One seat went to an independent candidate. Turnout was 46.9%.

CURRENT LEADERS

Faure Gnassingbé

Position

President

Introduction

Faure Gnassingbé was installed as president after the death of his father, one of Africa's longest-serving leaders. The appointment led to violent protests and international condemnation. Forced to step down, he contested a presidential election and emerged victorious in April 2005 with just over 60% of the vote. Faure then pursued a policy of political reconciliation, paving the way for peaceful parliamentary elections in Oct. 2007. He was re-elected to the presidency in March 2010 and again in April 2015.

Early Life

Faure Essozimna Gnassingbé was born in Afagnan, Togo on 6 June 1966. He is the son of Gnassingbé Eyadéma, a general who led a coup in 1963, declared himself president in 1967 and remained head of state until his death in Feb. 2005. Faure attended school in the capital, Lomé, followed by the Sorbonne University in Paris and the George Washington University in the USA. Returning to an unstable and economically crippled Togo in the mid-1990s, Faure began work as a civil servant.

He entered politics in 2002, when he was elected the representative of the ruling Togolese People's Assembly (RPT; since reconfigured as the UNIR) for Blitta constituency in central Togo, and in June 2003 he took office as minister of public works, mines and telecommunications.

On 6 Feb. 2005, the day after his father's death, Faure was proclaimed as his successor by the Togolese army, sparking widespread protest. Amid mounting international criticism and threats of sanctions, Faure announced that a presidential election would be held on 24 April 2005 and stepped down from office. Official results gave Faure over 60% of the vote at the subsequent elections and, despite violence erupting in Lomé amid claims of electoral fraud, he was sworn in as president on 4 May 2005.

Career in Office

Faure promised to push for economic growth, to reform institutions and to improve Togo's image abroad. Although most of the key government posts went to members of the ruling party, Edem Kodjo, the leader of a moderate opposition party, was named prime minister in June 2005. In Sept. 2006 Faure appointed another veteran opposition leader,Yawovi Madji Agboyibo of the Action Committee for Renewal, as prime minister with the task of forming a unity government. In Oct. 2007 the ruling RPT won parliamentary elections in which opposition parties took part for the first time in almost two decades and which were declared by international observers to be free and fair. Faure then appointed Komlan Mally prime minister and a new government was formed in Dec. When Mally resigned in Sept. 2008, Faure appointed Gilbert Houngbo, an independent, as the new premier. In April 2009 the government claimed that there had been a foiled coup plot against Faure involving his half-brother and former defence minister Kpatcha Gnassingbé. Faure was returned to office in presidential elections on 4 March 2010 that were deemed relatively fair by international observers. In May veteran opposition leader Gilchrist Olympio agreed to join a government of national unity, ending years of hostility towards the then RPT but causing a deep split within his Union of Forces for Change which had alleged widespread fraud in the election.

Parliamentary elections scheduled for Oct. 2012 were postponed after violent protests in June that year against electoral law amendments that demonstrators claimed favoured the ruling UNIR. The following month Faure appointed Kwesi Ahoomey-Zunu as prime minister following the resignation of Gilbert Houngbo. The delayed elections were finally held in July 2013, returning the UNIR with a majority of parliamentary seats. There were opposition claims of polling irregularities, but international observers deemed the elections fair.

Faure was re-elected for a further presidential term in elections in April 2015, following which in June he named Komi Sélom Klassou as the new premier at the head of a largely unchanged cabinet.

DEFENCE

There is selective conscription that lasts for two years. Defence expenditure totalled US$72m. in 2013 (US$10 per capita), representing 1.8% of GDP.

Army

Strength (2011) around 8,100, with a further 750 in a paramilitary gendarmerie.

Navy

In 2011 the Naval wing of the armed forces numbered about 200 and was based at Lomé.

Air Force

The Air Force—established with French assistance—numbered (2011) 250, with ten combat aircraft although their serviceability is in doubt.

ECONOMY

Agriculture contributed 31% of GDP in 2011, industry 16% and services 53%.

Overview

Togo's economic performance is among the weakest in Sub-Saharan Africa, with poverty increasing significantly since the early 1980s. Social indicators are low, with the country ranked 162nd out of 188 on the Human Development Index. In the World Bank's Doing Business 2010 report, Togo ranked 160th of 183 countries. The main economic activities are mining, agriculture and re-exporting. The primary sector, port activities and public investment have been the drivers of growth in recent years.

After civil and economic turmoil in the early 1990s, a structural redevelopment programme launched in 1994 supported growth. Following a downturn in 2005, the government acted to restore fiscal discipline and strengthen governance. The surge in global food and fuel prices in 2008, as well as heavy flooding, hurt the economy. Further flooding in large parts of the country between Sept. and Oct. 2010 caused more damage to infrastructure and crops.

In Dec. 2010 Togo completed the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries (HIPC) process, leading to a cancellation of around 82% of its external debt. As a result, total government debt fell from 67% of GDP to about 30%.

Currency

The unit of currency is the franc CFA (XOF) with a parity of 655.957 francs CFA to one euro. Foreign exchange reserves were US$270m. in June 2005 and total money supply was 177,138m. francs CFA. Inflation was 1.8% in 2013 and 0.2% in 2014.

Budget

In 2011 budgetary central government budget revenues were 401.2bn. francs CFA and expenditures 276.2bn. francs CFA. Taxes accounted for 72.6% of revenues in 2011; compensation of employees accounted for 37.9% of expenditures and grants 32.9%.

VAT is 18%.

Performance

Real GDP growth was 5.9% in 2012, 5.4% in 2013 and 5.0% in 2014. Total GDP in 2014 was US$4.5bn.

Banking and Finance

The bank of issue is the Central Bank of West African States (BCEAO). The Governor is Tiémoko Meyliet Koné. In 2003 there were six commercial banks, three development banks, a savings bank and a credit institution. Foreign debt totalled US$1,728m. in 2010, representing 61.1% of GNI.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Togo's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2011 were the equivalent of 0.2 tonnes per capita.

Electricity

Installed capacity in 2011 was an estimated 85,000 kW. In 2011 production totalled 139m. kWh. Over 80% of the electricity consumed is imported, mainly from Ghana. Consumption per capita in 2011 was 138 kWh.

Minerals

Output of phosphate rock in 2011 was 866,000 tonnes. Other minerals are limestone, iron ore and marble.

Agriculture

Agriculture supports about 80% of the population. Most food production comes from individual holdings under 3 ha. There were an estimated 2.46m. ha. of arable land in 2007 and 0.17m. ha. of permanent crops. There are considerable plantations of oil and cocoa palms, coffee, cacao, kola, cassava and cotton. Production, 2003 (in 1,000 tonnes): cassava, 724; yams, 569; maize, 516; sorghum, 177; seed cotton, 159; cotton lint, 76; cottonseed, 75; rice, 68; millet, 50; dry beans, 44; groundnuts, 37.

Livestock (2003 estimates, in 1,000): sheep, 1,800; goats, 1,470; pigs, 310; cattle, 279; chickens, 8,000.

Forestry

Forests covered 0.29m. ha. in 2010, or 5% of the land area. Teak plantations covered 8,600 ha. In 2011, 4.59m. cu. metres of roundwood were cut.

Fisheries

The catch in 2010 totalled an estimated 27,500 tonnes (82% from marine waters).

INDUSTRY

Industry is small-scale. Cement and textiles are produced and food processed. In 2011 industry accounted for 16% of GDP, with manufacturing contributing 8%.

Labour

In 2010 the estimated labour force was 3,059,000 (56% males), up from 2,182,000 in 2000. In Aug. 2008 the statutory monthly minimum wage was raised to 28,000 francs CFA.

Togo had 49,000 people living in slavery according to the Walk Free Foundation's 2013 Global Slavery Index.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

A free trade zone was established in 1990.

Imports and Exports

In 2008 imports (c.i.f.) amounted to US$1,540m. (US$1,483m. in 2007); exports (f.o.b.) US$790m. (US$705m. in 2007). The main import suppliers in 2005 were France (17.6%), China (13.2%), Côte d'Ivoire (6.5%), Italy (4.5%) and Spain (4.2%). Principal export destinations in 2005 were Ghana (20.3%), Burkina Faso (18.4%), Benin (11.6%), Mali (7.4%) and India (5.9%). Leading imports are food, refined petroleum, and chemicals and chemical products; main exports are cement, phosphates and cotton.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

There were 11,652 km of roads in 2007, including 3,067 km of highways or national roads. In 2007 there were 10,600 passenger cars in use, 2,200 lorries and vans and 34,200 motorcycles and mopeds.

Rail

There are four railways (metre gauge) connecting Lomé, with Aného (continuing to Cotonou in Benin), Kpalimé, Tabligbo and (via Atakpamé) Blitta; total length in 2005, 532 km. In 2005 the railways carried 1.1m. tonnes of freight. There has been no passenger rail service since 1996.

Civil Aviation

In 2003 Trans African Airlines flew from Tokoin airport, near Lomé, to Abidjan, Bamako, Brazzaville, Cotonou, Dakar and Pointe-Noire. There were also international flights with other airlines to Addis Ababa, Brussels, Douala, Kinshasa, Lagos, Libreville, Ouagadougou and Paris. In 2012 Tokoin handled 472,313 passengers (417,672 on international flights) and 7,256 tonnes of freight. In 2003 scheduled airline traffic of Togo-based carriers flew 1m. km, carrying 46,000 passengers (all on international flights).

Shipping

In Jan. 2009 there were 18 ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 33,000 GT.

Telecommunications

In 2013 there were 62,500 main (fixed) telephone lines in Togo; mobile phone subscriptions numbered 4,263,000 that year (625.3 per 1,000 persons). In 2013 an estimated 4.5% of the population were internet users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The Supreme Court and two Appeal Courts are in Lomé, one for criminal cases and one for civil and commercial cases. Each receives appeal from a series of local tribunals.

The death penalty was abolished in June 2009. The population in penal institutions in Oct. 2010 was 4,116 (59 per 100,000 of

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

The Tongatapu group of islands in the south western Pacific Ocean were discovered by Tasman in 1643. The Kingdom of Tonga attained unity under Taufa'ahau Tupou (George I) who became ruler of his native Ha'apai in 1820, of Vava'u in 1833 and of Tongatapu in 1845. By 1860 the kingdom had converted to Christianity. In 1862 the king granted freedom from arbitrary rule of minor chiefs and extended land rights. These institutional changes, together with the establishment of a parliament of chiefs, paved the way towards a democratic constitution. By the Anglo-German Agreement of 14 Nov. 1899, the Tonga Islands became a British protectorate. The protectorate was dissolved on 4 June 1970 when Tonga, the only ancient kingdom surviving from the pre-European period in Polynesia, achieved independence within the Commonwealth.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

The Kingdom consists of some 169 islands and islets with a total area, including 30 sq. km of inland waters plus uninhabited islands, of 748 sq. km (289 sq. miles), and lies between 15° and 23° 30' S. lat and 173° and 177° W. long, its western boundary being the eastern boundary of Fiji. The islands are split up into the following groups (reading from north to south): the Niuas, Vava'u, Ha'apai, Tongatapu and 'Eua. The three main groups, both from historical and administrative significance, are Tongatapu in the south, Ha'apai in the centre and Vava'u in the north. Census population (2011) 103,252; density, 138 per sq. km. In 2011, 23.5% of the population lived in urban areas.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 106,000.

The capital is Nuku'alofa on Tongatapu; population (2011), 36,045 (urban population, 24,229).

There are five divisions comprising 23 districts:

Division	Sq. km	Census 2011	Capital
Niuas	72	1,282	Hihifo
Vava'u	119	14,922	Neiafu
Ha'apai	110	6,616	Pangai
Tongatapu	261	75,416	Nuku'alofa
'Eua	87	5,016	Ohonua

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

The reigning King is Tupou VI ('Aho'eitu 'Unuaki'otonga Tuku'aho Tupou VI), born 12 July 1959, succeeded on 18 March 2012 on the death of his brother, George Tupou V.

The current Constitution is based on the one granted in 1875. It was last amended in 2010 in order to enact electoral reforms, to provide parliament with greater constitutional powers and to reduce monarchical influence on executive matters. There is a Privy Council, Cabinet, Legislative Assembly and Judiciary. The Legislative Assembly, of a maximum of 30 members, is composed of 17 elected representatives of the people, nine nobles elected by their peers and up to four ex officio members. Prior to the Nov. 2010 election there were 32 members, of which only nine were elected representatives of the people (plus the nine nobles elected by their peers and also 14 appointed ministers).

National Anthem

'E 'Otua, Mafimafi, ko ho mau 'eiki Koe' ('Oh Almighty God above, thou art our Lord and sure defence'); words by Prince Uelingtoni Ngu Tupoumalohi, tune by K. G. Schmitt.

CURRENT LEADERS

Samiuela 'Akilisi Pohiva

Position

Prime Minister

Introduction

'Akilisi Pohiva became Tonga's first democratically-elected prime minister on 30 Dec. 2014. The former teacher has campaigned for democracy and restraints on monarchical power for decades.

Early Life

'Akilisi Pohiva was born on 7 April 1941 in Fakakakai, a village in Tonga's Ha'apai archipelago. Having earned a certificate from Tupou College in 1961, he began a teaching career. He graduated in education from the University of the South Pacific in 1978 and taught in various institutions until 1982, when he took a job at the National Office for Disaster Relief and Reconstruction. At this time Pohiva became active in Tonga's pro-democracy movement. He became known as a whistleblower against official corruption, leaving him a target for the ruling elite, particularly King Taufa'ahau Tupou IV.

Elected to Tonga's legislature in 1987, Pohiva co-founded the Friendly Islands Human Rights & Democracy Movement. In 1996 he and the editor of the Tonga Times were arrested and imprisoned after publishing an article alleging that the king had a secret fortune. Charged with sedition, Pohiva was subsequently acquitted but was arrested again in 2007 for an alleged role in riots in the capital, Nuku'alofa, the previous year that claimed eight lives.

Pohiva's demands for democratic reform became more potent after the global financial crisis in 2008–09, which hit Tonga hard. Rates of unemployment and poverty spiralled and there were frequent breakdowns in law and order amid corruption scandals. Having narrowly lost the 2010 parliamentary election to Lord Tu'ivakano, Pohiva took on the incumbent deputy prime minister, Samiu Vaipulu, in legislative polls on 27 Nov. 2014. After almost five weeks of political wrangling, he emerged victorious, collecting 15 of 26 parliamentarians' votes to become the country's first democratically-elected prime minister.

Career in Office

Pohiva has said that his priority is to 'create a political framework in which every Tongan is held in equal value, and justice is served for everyone'. He vowed to boost the ailing economy, which is largely dependent on foreign aid and remittances from overseas. He was also expected to focus on increasing productivity in agriculture, fisheries and tourism, and promised to reduce spending on official travel and diplomatic missions.

DEFENCE

Army

The Tonga Defence Services number around 450 troops.

Navy

A coastal naval force operating several small patrol boats is based at Touliki, in Nuku'alofa.

Air Force

An Air Force was created in 1996. There is also a small naval aviation unit.

ECONOMY

In 2010 agriculture accounted for 19% of GDP, industry 20% and services 61%.

Overview

Tonga is heavily reliant on remittances, averaging around 18% of GDP per year from 2011–13. The main source of remittances is Australia, followed by New Zealand and Japan. Tourism is the second largest source of foreign exchange and a key growth sector, accounting for 15.6% of GDP in 2013.

The global downturn saw growth fall to 0.9% in 2009 as a result of a fall in remittances, as well as the increased cost of food and fuel imports. Domestic economic activity recovered with growth of 1.5% in 2011, driven by donor-funded construction and infrastructure projects as well as increased tourism. Having then contracted in 2013 as loan-financed construction projects ended, the economy again rebounded in 2014, reflecting high agricultural output and reconstruction activity in the wake of Cyclone Ian in Jan. that year.

Heavily reliant on imports, particularly of food and fuel, the economy is vulnerable to commodity price fluctuations. High labour costs, limited export diversification and lack of long-term investment to improve productivity and efficiency also impede efforts towards sustainable growth.

Currency

The unit of currency is the pa'anga (TOP) of 100 seniti. There was inflation of 1.5% in 2013 and 1.4% in 2014. In July 2005 foreign exchange reserves were US$49m. and total money supply was T$65m.

Budget

Revenues were T$200.3m. in 2008–09, with expenditures T$185.3m.

There is a consumption tax of 15%.

Performance

The economy shrank by 1.1% in 2012 and 0.3% in 2013, but then grew by 2.3% in 2014. Total GDP in 2014 was US$0.4bn. Tonga ranks among the countries most reliant on remittances from abroad, which accounted for 28% of total GDP in 2009.

Banking and Finance

The National Reserve Bank of Tonga (Governor, Sione Ngongo Kioa) was established in 1989 as a bank of issue and to manage foreign reserves. The Bank of Tonga and the Tonga Development Bank are both situated in Nuku'alofa with branches in the main islands. Other commercial banks in Nuku'alofa are ANZ Banking Group Ltd, the MBF Bank Ltd, the National Reserve Bank of Tonga and the Westpac Banking Corp.

External debt totalled US$144m. in 2010 and represented 39.7% of GNI.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Tonga's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2011 were the equivalent of 1.7 tonnes per capita.

Electricity

Production (2011) 53m. kWh. Installed capacity (2011 estimate) 14,000 kW.

Agriculture

In 2007 there were approximately 15,000 ha. of arable land and 12,000 ha. of permanent crops. Production (2003 estimates, in 1,000 tonnes): coconuts, 58; pumpkins and squash, 20; cassava, 9; sweet potatoes, 6; taro, 4; yams, 4; plantains, 3.

Livestock (2003 estimates): pigs, 81,000; goats, 12,000; cattle, 11,000; horses, 11,000.

Forestry

Forests covered 9,000 ha. in 2010, or 13% of the land area.

Fisheries

In 2010 the estimated total catch was 2,150 tonnes.

INDUSTRY

The main industries produce food and beverages, paper, chemicals, metals and textiles.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

In 2010 imports (c.i.f.) were valued at US$158.8m. and exports (f.o.b.) at US$8.3m. Main imports are food and live animals, basic manufactures, machinery and transport equipment, and mineral fuels and lubricants; main exports are coconut oil, vanilla beans, root crops, desiccated coconut and watermelons. The leading import suppliers in 2006 were New Zealand (33.1%), Fiji (28.2%), Australia (12.5%) and the USA (9.8%); principal export markets were Japan (40.6%), USA (25.0%), Australia (14.6%) and South Korea (8.3%).

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

In 2002 there were 680 km of roads (184 km paved). Registered vehicles in 2010 numbered 5,806, including 4,411 cars and four-wheeled light vehicles, 1,285 heavy trucks and 62 motorized two- and three-wheelers.

Civil Aviation

There is an international airport at Nuku'alofa on Tongatapu. The national carrier was the state-owned Royal Tongan Airlines, but it ceased operations in May 2004 owing to financial difficulties. In 2009 Nuku'alofa (Fua'Amotu International) handled 222,612 passengers and 1,417 tonnes of freight.

Shipping

In Jan. 2009 there were 29 ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 62,000 GT. The main port is Nuku'alofa.

Telecommunications

The operation of the National Telecommunication Network and Services is the responsibility of the Tonga Telecommunication Commission (TCC). In 2011 there were 30,000 main (fixed) telephone lines; mobile phone subscriptions numbered 55,000 that year (52.6 per 100 persons). In 2013 an estimated 35.0% of the population were internet users. Ucall mobile GSM digital has been in operation in Tonga since Dec. 2001.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The judiciary is presided over by the Chief Justice. The enforcement of justice is the responsibility of the Attorney-General and the Minister of Police. In 1994 the UK ceased appointing Tongan judges and subsidizing their salaries.

The population in penal institutions in Dec. 2012 was 158 (150 per 100,000 of national population).

Education

In 2002 there were a total of 17,105 pupils with 773 teachers in primary schools and 14,567 pupils with 1,012 teachers in secondary schools. There is an extension centre of the University of the South Pacific at Nuku'alofa, a teacher training college and three technical institutes.

Adult literacy in 2006 was 99.0%. In 2004 public expenditure on education came to 5.0% of GDP.

Health

In 2004 there were four hospitals and 29 hospital beds per 10,000 inhabitants. There were 41 physicians in 2004, 29 dentists, 316 nurses and 20 health officers.

RELIGION

Christianity is the main religion, with the Free Wesleyan Church being the largest denomination. There are also significant numbers of Later-day Saints and Catholics as well as followers of other religions. In Feb. 2016 there was one Roman Catholic cardinal.

CULTURE

Press

There are no daily newspapers. There were three paid-for non-daily newspapers in 2008: the Tonga Chronicle (a government-owned weekly), the Times of Tonga and Matangi Tonga.

Tourism

There were 46,040 tourist arrivals by air in 2011. Tourism receipts in 2011 totalled US$32m.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

When Columbus visited Trinidad in 1498 the island was inhabited by Arawak Indians. Tobago was occupied by the Caribs. Trinidad remained a neglected Spanish possession for almost 300 years until it was surrendered to a British naval expedition in 1797. The British first attempted to settle Tobago in 1721 but the French captured the island in 1781 and transformed it into a sugar-producing colony. In 1802 the British acquired Tobago and in 1899 it was administratively combined with Trinidad. When slavery was abolished in the late 1830s, the British subsidized immigration from India to replace plantation labourers. Sugar and cocoa declined towards the end of the 19th century. Oil and asphalt became the main sources of income. On 31 Aug. 1962 Trinidad and Tobago became an independent member of the Commonwealth. A Republican Constitution was adopted on 1 Aug. 1976.

The government shut down the sugar industry after the 2007 harvest. The industry underpinned the economy for centuries but had become unsustainable after the withdrawal of EU subsidies. In Aug. 2011 Prime Minister Kamla Persad-Bissessar declared a state of emergency in a bid to confront the increasingly violent threat posed by the illegal drugs and weapons trade. Lasting until Dec. 2011, it was the first state of emergency since 1990, when the Jamaat al Muslimeen group unsuccessfully attempted a coup.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

The island of Trinidad is situated in the Caribbean Sea, about 12 km off the northeast coast of Venezuela; several islets, the largest being Chacachacare, Huevos, Monos and Gaspar Grande, lie in the Gulf of Paria which separates Trinidad from Venezuela. The smaller island of Tobago lies 30.7 km further to the northeast. Altogether, the islands cover 5,128 sq. km (1,980 sq. miles), of which Trinidad (including the islets) has 4,828 sq. km (1,864 sq. miles) and Tobago 300 sq. km (116 sq. miles). In 2011 the census population was 1,328,019 (Trinidad, 1,267,145; Tobago, 60,874); density, 259 per sq. km.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 1.36m.

In 2011, 14.2% of the population lived in urban areas. Capital, Port of Spain (2011 census, 37,074); other important towns, Chaguanas (83,516), San Fernando (48,838), Arima (33,606) and Point Fortin (20,235). The main towns on Tobago are Scarborough and Plymouth. Distribution of population by ethnic group (2011): East Indian, 35.4%; African, 34.2%; mixed races, 22.8%; others, 7.6%.

The official language is English.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2008 births, 19,888; deaths, 10,463. 2008 birth rate (per 1,000 population), 15.2; death rate, 8.0. Expectation of life, 2013, was 66.4 years for males and 73.6 for females. Annual population growth rate, 1998–2008, 0.4%. Infant mortality, 2010, 24 per 1,000 live births; fertility rate, 2008, 1.6 births per woman.

CLIMATE

A tropical climate cooled by the northeast trade winds. The dry season runs from Jan. to June, with a wet season for the rest of the year. Temperatures are uniformly high the year round. Port of Spain, Jan. 76.3°F (24.6°C), July 79.2°F (26.2°C). Annual rainfall 1,870 mm.

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

The 1976 constitution provides for a bicameral legislature of a Senate and a House of Representatives, who elect the President, who is head of state. The Senate consists of 31 members, 16 being appointed by the President on the advice of the Prime Minister, six on the advice of the Leader of the Opposition and nine at the discretion of the President.

The House of Representatives consists of 41 (39 for Trinidad and two for Tobago) elected members and a Speaker elected from within or outside the House.

Executive power is vested in the Prime Minister, who is appointed by the President, and the Cabinet.

National Anthem

'Forged from the love of liberty'; words and music by P. Castagne.

CURRENT LEADERS

Anthony Carmona

Position

President

Introduction

Anthony Carmona became president in March 2013. Previously a high court judge, he had served on the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia (ICTY) and resigned from the International Criminal Court (ICC) following his election. He is regarded as a political independent.

Early Life

Carmona was born on 7 March 1953 in Fyzabad and educated at Presentation College, San Fernando. After studying English and political science at the University of the West Indies (UWI) in Jamaica, he studied law, first at the UWI in Barbados, then at the Sir Hugh Wooding Law School in Trinidad and Tobago, graduating in 1983. In this period he also taught in schools and at the UWI.

Carmona served as deputy director of public prosecutions from 1995–99, when he was appointed acting director. He was legal adviser to President A. N. R. Robinson on matters of criminal law relating to the establishment of the ICC, and was a member of the Trinidad and Tobago legislative review committee. He also advised the ministry of foreign affairs and the attorney general on international treaties and conventions.

From 2001–04 he served on the ICTY, dealing with the appeals of those convicted of war crimes, crimes against humanity and genocide. From 2004–13 he was a high court judge in Trinidad and Tobago. Elected one of six ICC judges in 2012, he was scheduled to take up his post in The Hague in March 2013. However, on 4 Feb. 2013 the then prime minister, Kamla Persad-Bissessar, nominated him for the presidency. Carmona was elected to the post by the Electoral College of parliament on 15 Feb. 2013, resigning from the ICC in order to take up the role.

Career in Office

Carmona took office on 18 March 2013. He pledged to champion a more open style of government.

Keith Rowley

Position

Prime Minister

Introduction

A veteran member of the People's National Movement (PNM), Keith Rowley became prime minister in Sept. 2015 after defeating the incumbent People's Partnership coalition.

Early Life

Keith Rowley was born on 24 Oct. 1949 in Mason Hall. After studying geology and geography at the University of the West Indies (UWI) in Jamaica, he returned to the university's campus in Trinidad and Tobago, where he attained a PhD in geochemistry. He worked in volcanology research at UWI, rising to be head of the seismic research unit, and also served as manager of the state-owned National Quarries Company Ltd.

After unsuccessfully contesting the seat of Tobago West in 1981, Rowley served in parliament as an opposition senator from 1987–90 before being elected as MP for Diego Martin West in 1991. He served as minister of agriculture, land and marine sources from 1992–95. After a period in opposition, he was then minister of planning and development from 2001–03, minister of housing from 2003–07, and minister of trade and industry from 2007–08. He was fired from this last post by Prime Minister Patrick Manning amid disagreements about the oversight of a state-owned development corporation.

Following the PNM's defeat at elections in 2010 and Manning's subsequent resignation, Rowley was elected party leader. He led the party to victory in the Sept. 2015 general election, pledging to reform public administration.

Career in Office

Rowley took office on 9 Sept. 2015, with the PNM having won 23 out of 41 seats. His early months saw him steer his budget through parliament against a backdrop of worsening economic conditions that prompted the Central Bank to declare a recession. His main challenges include addressing the impact of falling oil prices on the national economy, as well as delivering on his promises to make government more accountable.

DEFENCE

The Trinidad and Tobago Defence Force consists of the Trinidad and Tobago Regiment, the Coast Guard, the Air Guard and the Defence Force Reserves. Personnel in 2011 totalled around 4,100.

In 2013 defence expenditure totalled US$400m. (US$326 per capita), representing 1.5% of GDP.

Army

The Trinidad and Tobago Regiment (the Army) is part of the Trinidad and Tobago Defence Force. It has approximately 2,000 personnel organized into a Regiment Headquarters and four battalions.

Navy

In 2011 there was a Coast Guard of 1,063.

Air Force

The Air Guard, formerly part of the Coast Guard, had 50 personnel, three aircraft and one helicopter in 2011.

ECONOMY

Industry accounted for 57% of GDP in 2012, services 42% and agriculture 1%.

Overview

Trinidad and Tobago has one of the highest per capita incomes in the Latin American and Caribbean region. The country is a major regional financial centre and leader in economic integration, playing a key role in the CARICOM Single Market Economy since its establishment in 2006. Tourism is also an important source of national revenue.

The islands are rich in natural resources, with oil and gas exploitation accounting for 42% of GDP, 84% of merchandise exports and 51% of government revenue in 2014. However, the country is vulnerable to international market fluctuations. Additionally, only a minority have benefited from the wealth created by oil and gas sector, which employs just 3% of the labour force, while an estimated 19% of the population still lives in poverty.

The global financial crisis from 2008 caused a sharp decline in the prices of major exports, including crude oil, resulting in a lengthy recession. The largest privately-held conglomerate in the country, the CL Financial Group, received a government bailout in 2009. The debt-to-GDP ratio also increased sharply from 2008, with public sector debt standing at 40% of GDP in the last quarter of 2014.

Currency

The unit of currency is the Trinidad and Tobago dollar (TTD) of 100 cents. Inflation was 5.2% in 2013 and 7.0% in 2014. In April 1994 the TT dollar was floated and managed by the Central Bank at TT$6.06 to US$1.00. Foreign exchange reserves in July 2005 were US$3,918m. and gold reserves 61,000 troy oz. Total money supply in May 2005 was TT$9,438m.

Budget

The fiscal year for the budget is 1 Oct. to 30 Sept. In 2009–10 central government revenue was TT$41,983m. and expenditure was TT$45,805m. Energy accounted for 52.5% of revenues; current expenditure accounted for 83.7% of expenditures.

VAT is 15%.

Performance

The economy grew by 1.4% in 2012, 1.7% in 2013 and 0.8% in 2014. Total GDP in 2014 was US$28.9bn.

Banking and Finance

The Central Bank of Trinidad and Tobago began operations in 1964 (Governor, Alvin Hilaire). In Sept. 2012 its assets totalled TT$76,152m., liabilities TT$74,649m. and equity TT$1,503m. There are eight commercial banks. The stock exchange in Port of Spain participates in the regional Caribbean exchange.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy were the equivalent of 42.5 tonnes per capita in 2011.

Electricity

In 2011 the installed capacity was 2.30m. kW, electricity production was 8.87bn. kWh and consumption per capita 6,652 kWh.

Oil and Gas

Oil production is one of Trinidad's leading industries. Commercial production began in 1908; production of oil in 2012 was 6.0m. tonnes. Reserves in 2012 totalled 0.8bn. bbls. Crude oil is also imported for refining.

In 2012 production of natural gas was 42.2bn. cu. metres; proven reserves of natural gas were 400bn. cu. metres. A major discovery of approximately 50bn. cu. metres was made by BP in 2000, followed by a further discovery of approximately 30bn. cu. metres in 2002.

Agriculture

In 2007 the agricultural population was an estimated 94,000, of which some 49,000 were economically active. Production of main crops (2003 estimates, in 1,000 tonnes): sugarcane, 873; coconuts, 16; bananas, 7; pumpkins and squash, 6; oranges, 5; cucumbers and gherkins, 4; pineapples, 4; plantains, 4. There were around 25,000 ha. of arable land and 22,000 ha. of permanent cropland in 2007. Livestock (2003 estimates): pigs, 76,000; goats, 23,000; cattle, 29,000; chickens, 28m. Livestock products, 2003: meat, 60,000 tonnes (including poultry, 57,000 tonnes); milk, 9,000 tonnes.

Forestry

Forests covered 0.23m. ha. in 2010, or 44% of the land area. Timber production for 2011 was 80,000 cu. metres.

Fisheries

The catch in 2010 totalled 13,931 tonnes.

INDUSTRY

Major industries include petroleum and petroleum products, liquefied natural gas, methanol, ammonia, urea, steel products, beverages, food processing and cement. Trinidad and Tobago ranks among the world's largest producers of ammonia and methanol. The petroleum industry contributed 38.9% of GDP in 2012; in the same year industry as a whole accounted for 57% of GDP, with manufacturing contributing 6%.

Labour

The labour force in 2013 was 685,000 (617,000 in 2003). 71.0% of the population aged 15–64 was economically active in 2013. In the same year 3.6% of the population was unemployed.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

External debt was US$2,652m. in 2005.

Imports and Exports

In 2010 imports (c.i.f.) totalled US$6,479.6m. and exports (f.o.b.) US$10,981.7m. In 2005 crude petroleum accounted for 19% of imports, and refined petroleum 29% of exports. Trinidad and Tobago is the world's leading exporter of ammonia and methanol. The principal import sources in 2005 were the USA (29.2%), Brazil (13.5%), Venezuela (6.0%) and Colombia (5.6%). The main export markets in 2005 were the USA (58.6%), Jamaica (7.5%), France (4.4%) and Barbados (4.3%).

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

In 2002 there were about 8,320 km of roads, of which 51.1% were paved. There were 468,255 vehicles in use in 2007.

Civil Aviation

There is an international airport at Port of Spain (Piarco) and in Tobago (A. N. R. Robinson International Airport). In 2012 Piarco handled 2,724,888 passengers (1,723,835 on international flights) and 53,935 tonnes of freight. The national carrier is Caribbean Airlines, which has flights to 11 international destinations as well as operating domestic services. In 2003 scheduled airline traffic of Trinidad and Tobago-based carriers flew 31m. km, carrying 1,084,000 passengers (972,000 on international flights).

Shipping

In Jan. 2009 there were 11 ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 29,000 GT. The largest port is Port of Spain. The other main harbour is Point Lisas. There is a deep-water harbour at Scarborough (Tobago). A ferry service links Port of Spain with Scarborough.

Telecommunications

International and domestic communications are provided by Telecommunications Services of Trinidad and Tobago (TSTT). In 2013 there were 291,300 main (fixed) telephone lines; mobile phone subscriptions numbered 1,944,000 that year (1,449.4 per 1,000 persons). In 2013 an estimated 63.8% of the population were internet users. In Dec. 2011 there were 441,000 Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The High Court consists of the Chief Justice and 11 puisne judges. In criminal cases a judge of the High Court sits with a jury of 12 in cases of treason and murder, and with nine jurors in other cases. The Court of Appeal consists of the Chief Justice and seven Justices of Appeal. In hearing appeals, the Court is comprised of three judges sitting together except when the appeal is from a Summary Court or from a decision of a High Court judge in chambers. In such cases two judges would comprise the Court. There is a limited right of appeal from it to the British Privy Council. There are three High Courts and 12 magistrates' courts. There is an Ombudsman. Trinidad and Tobago was one of ten countries to sign an agreement in Feb. 2001 establishing a Caribbean Court of Justice (CCJ) to replace the British Privy Council as the highest civil and criminal court. In the meantime the number of signatories has risen to 12. The court was inaugurated at Port of Spain on 16 April 2005. However, despite its location Trinidad and Tobago has yet to accept the CCJ as its final court of appeal.

The death penalty is authorized. There were ten executions in 1999, although none since. There were 407 murders in 2013, down from 550 in 2008 although up from just 98 in 1998.

The average daily population in penal institutions in 2012 was 3,800 (281 per 100,000 of national population). 59.0% of prisoners had yet to receive a trial according to 2014 estimates by the International Centre for Prison Studies.

Education

In 2007 there were 130,242 pupils enrolled in primary schools with 8,171 teaching staff and 98,490 pupils in secondary schools with 7,041 teaching staff. In 2005 there were 16,920 students in higher education and 1,800 academic staff. The University of the West Indies campus in St Augustine (2006–07) had 13,629 students and 572 academic staff. 1,358 of the students were from other countries.

Adult literacy was estimated at 98.7% in 2009.

In 2001 public spending on education came to 4.2% of GDP and accounted for 13.4% of total government expenditure.

Health

In 2009 there were 1,543 physicians (11.7 per 10,000 population) and 4,677 nursing and midwifery personnel (35.5 per 10,000); there were 641 licensed pharmacists in 2007. In 2011 there were 21 hospitals (11 public and ten private).

RELIGION

An estimated 65.9% of the population in 2010 were Christians (mainly Protestants), 22.7% Hindus and 5.5% Muslims according to the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life.

CULTURE

Press

There were three daily newspapers in 2008—Trinidad and Tobago Express, Trinidad and Tobago Guardian and Trinidad and Tobago

Newsday—with a total circulation of 140,000. There were also nine paid-for non-dailies in 2008.

Tourism

In 2008 there were 432,551 tourist arrivals by air (of which 187,515 were from the USA), down from 449,453 in 2007. There were a record 119,600 cruise passenger arrivals in 2009.

Festivals

Religious festivals: the Feast of La Divina Pastora, or Sipari Mai, a Catholic and Hindu celebration of the Holy Mother Mary; Saint Peter's Day Celebration, the Patron Saint of Fishermen; Hosein, or Hosay, a Shia Muslim festival; Phagwah, a Hindu spring festival; Santa Rosa, a Caribbean Amerindian festival; Eid-al-Fitr, the Muslim festival at the end of Ramadan; Diwali, the Hindu festival of light; Christmas. Cultural festivals: Carnival (on 27 and 28 Feb. in 2017); Spiritual Baptist Shouter Liberation Day, a recognition of the Baptist religion; Indian Arrival Day, commemorating the arrival of the first East Indian labourers; Sugar and Energy Festival; Pan Ramajay, a music festival of all types; Emancipation, a recognition of the period of slavery; Tobago Heritage Festival, celebrating Tobago's traditions and customs; Parang Festival, traditional folk music of Christmas; Pan Jazz Festival; Music Festival, predominantly classical music but Indian and Calypso are included.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Tunisia's earliest inhabitants included the semi-nomadic Berbers, whose descendants still live in North Africa's Atlas Mountains. Phoenician merchants established trading settlements throughout the central and western Mediterranean from the 10th century BC and founded the port of Carthage in 814 BC. By the 5th century Carthage had become the most powerful city in the western Mediterranean with an empire extending from present-day Morocco to Egypt and controlling Sardinia, the Balearic Islands, Malta and much of Sicily. A rival to the Roman Empire, the city was eventually destroyed in the Third Punic War. From 146 BC Tunisia was absorbed into the Roman Empire and its people sold into slavery.

Emperor Augustus supervised the reconstruction of Carthage in the 2nd century AD, although frequent revolts broke out as the Roman Empire waned. In 429 Tunisia was captured by the Vandals who ruled until ousted by the Byzantines in 534. Uqba ibn Nafa led an Arab Muslim army into Tunisia in 670 and founded the city of Kairouan. Most of the indigenous Berber population converted to Islam and the region, known as Ifriqiya, became part of the powerful caliphate centred on Baghdad where it reached its apotheosis under Harun al Rashid (786–809). Tunisia subsequently came under the control of the local Aghlabid dynasty and then under the Fatimids from 909. Bedouin Arabs from the Nile Valley (the Banu Hilal) entered the region around 1000 and from the 12th century Tunisia came under the orbit of the al-Muwahhid empire. The Berber general Abd al-Wahid ibn Abi Hafs wrested control in 1207, heralding three centuries of rule by the Hafsid dynasties. The port of Tunis was made capital and the term 'Tunisia' gradually replaced 'Ifriqiya'.

Ottoman troops advanced from the east in the early 16th century, forcing the Hafsids into an alliance with the Spanish Habsburgs in 1534. However, the Ottomans seized Tunis in 1574. Direct control from Istanbul was superseded by rule through local governors known as beys, such as the Muradid beys who made powerful alliances in the Tunisian hinterland and held sway from the 1640s to 1705. Al-Husayn ibn Ali (ruled 1705–40) founded the Husaynid dynasty and oversaw a period of prosperity through trade and piracy.

As the Ottoman Empire declined Tunisia became increasingly autonomous but attempts to establish a republic in the mid-19th century failed owing to a weak economy and political unrest. In 1869 Tunisia declared itself bankrupt and an international commission from France, Great Britain and Italy took over the country's finances. In 1881 Tunisia was invaded by France which alleged that Tunisian troops had been threatening the French colony of Algeria. Tunisia became a French protectorate despite Italian opposition.

Nationalist sentiment increased after the First World War and the Destour (Constitutional) Party was set up in 1920. Its more radical successor, the Neo-Destour Party, was established by Habib Bourguiba in 1934. Seen as a threat to colonial rule, Bourguiba was imprisoned in 1938. After the Second World War France offered increased autonomy. Nationalists, dismayed at the slow pace of reform, staged mass strikes and demonstrations in 1950. Violent protest increased until France granted internal self-government in 1955, with full independence on 20 March 1956. A constitutional assembly was established and Bourguiba became prime minister. The monarchy was abolished and a republic established the following year, with Bourguiba as president.

Taking a socialist secular line, Bourguiba promoted social and economic development. In 1975 the constitution was amended so that Bourguiba could be president-for-life. The late 1970s saw hardship and growing discontent. A general strike in Jan. 1978 erupted into riots and violence flared again in 1980 and 1984. Islamist groups became increasingly influential and Bourguiba was overthrown in a bloodless coup in 1987. His successor, Zine El Abidine Ben Ali, introduced democratic reforms, eased restrictive press laws and opened negotiations with Islamic groups, although he refused to recognize the prominent al-Nahda party. He was re-elected president in 1994, 1999, 2004 and 2009. However, widespread anti-government protests in Dec. 2010 and Jan. 2011—often referred to as the Jasmine Revolution—led to Ben Ali going into exile. A national unity government took power in his place. A state of emergency declared in Jan. 2011 was lifted in March 2014.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Tunisia is bounded in the north and east by the Mediterranean Sea, west by Algeria and south by Libya. The area is 163,610 sq. km, including 8,350 sq. km of inland waters. Census population, 2014: 10,982,754, giving a density of 70.7 per sq. km. In 2011, 67.7% of the population were urban.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 11.25m.

Tunis, the capital, had 638,845 inhabitants at the 2014 census. Other main cities (2014 census in 1,000): Sfax, 272.8; Sousse, 221.5; Ettadhamen, 143.0; Kairouan, a holy city of the Muslims, 139.1; Bizerte, 136.9; Gabès, 131.0; La Soukra, 129.7.

The official language is Arabic but French is the main language in the media, commercial enterprise and government departments. Berber-speaking people form less than 1% of the population.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2008 estimates: births, 183,000; deaths, 61,000; marriages (2005), 74,000. Rates (2008 estimates): birth, 18 per 1,000 population; death, 6. Annual population growth rate, 2000–05, 1.0%. In 2005 the most popular age range for marrying was 30–34 for males and 25–29 for females. Expectation of life, 2007, was 71.8 years for males and 76.0 for females. Infant mortality, 2010, 14 per 1,000 live births; fertility rate, 2008, 1.8 births per woman.

CLIMATE

The climate ranges from warm temperate in the north, where winters are mild and wet and the summers hot and dry, to desert in the south. Tunis, Jan. 48°F (8.9°C), July 78°F (25.6°C). Annual rainfall 16" (400 mm). Bizerta, Jan. 52°F (11.1°C), July 77°F (25°C). Annual rainfall 25" (622 mm). Sfax, Jan. 52°F (11.1°C), July 78°F (25.6°C). Annual rainfall 8" (196 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

Following the revolution of Jan. 2011 and the ousting of President Zine El Abidine Ben Ali, elections were held in Oct. that year for a Constituent Assembly with a mandate to draft and approve a new constitution. On 26 Jan. 2014 parliament approved the new constitution, achieving the required majority of two-thirds support from the Assembly with 200 of 216 votes cast. The constitution states that elections are to be held every five years. While Islam is acknowledged as the state religion, there is no reference to Islamic law as a source of legislation. Freedom of worship is guaranteed, as are the equal rights of men and women before the law. Executive power is divided between the Prime Minister and the President. There is a unicameral parliament—the Assembly of the Representatives of the People—consisting of 217 members.

CURRENT LEADERS

Beji Caid Essebsi

Position
President

Introduction

Beji Caid Essebsi became Tunisia's first democratically-elected president on 21 Dec. 2014. A lawyer, he has been an influential figure throughout Tunisia's history as an independent nation.

Early Life

Beji Caid Essebsi was born on 29 Nov. 1926 in the port of Sidi Bouzid in the French Protectorate of Tunisia. Graduating in law from the University of Paris in 1950, he went on to start a legal practice in Tunis. Following Tunisian independence in 1956, he became an adviser to the new president, Habib Bourguiba.

Appointed legal director of the ministry of the interior, he went on to head the department for national security and, in 1965, became interior minister. During this period, the Bourguiba administration became notorious for the harsh repression of dissenting voices. In the early 1970s Essebsi pushed, largely unsuccessfully, for economic and democratic reforms. He served as secretary to the prime minister, Mohamed Mzali, from 1980 until Mzali's dismissal in 1986 amid rioting sparked by government-mandated price rises.

Elected to parliament in 1989, Essebsi served as Speaker from 1990–91. He continued to argue the case for democratic and economic reforms but made little progress under President Zine El Abidine Ben Ali. When frustration boiled over into riots that toppled Ben Ali and swept across much of the Arab world in Jan. 2011, Essebsi was appointed premier and charged with forming an interim government.

Following elections for the Constituent Assembly in Oct. 2011, which were won by the moderate Islamist Ennahda party, Essebsi founded Nidaa Tounes (Call of Tunisia), a secular grouping representing a wide political spectrum as well as trade unionists and businessmen. Critics complained that it was dominated by former members of Ben Ali's Constitutional Democratic Rally (RCD), but Nidaa Tounes gained ground amid mounting disappointment with stalled reforms and against a backdrop of simmering insecurity. Essebsi announced that he would contest the 2014 presidential elections and in the second round of voting on 21 Dec. he defeated the incumbent, Moncef Marzouki, taking 55.7% of the vote on a 60% turnout.

Career in Office

Essebsi promised to restore stability and strengthen Tunisia's institutions after several years of political and economic turmoil under a moderate Islamist government. The peaceful handover of power won international approval, but tackling the high unemployment rate is posing a considerable challenge for the administration. When Essebsi raised concerns about a change to the law requiring that past human rights abuses be investigated, critics accused him of attempting to avoid scrutiny of his role as interior minister in the 1960s.

In March 2015 Essebsi admitted to shortcomings in the country's security system while urging national unity following an attack by Islamist militants on a museum in Tunis that saw 21 foreign tourists and one policeman killed. In another attack in June extremists killed a further 38 people, again mainly tourists, at a beach resort in Sousse, while in Nov. a bus carrying presidential guards in the capital was blown up by a suicide bomber.

Habib EssidPosition

Prime Minister

Introduction

Habib Essid was nominated as prime minister on 5 Jan. 2015 and charged with forming a new government. An agricultural economist by profession, he had been a leading security official in the administration of deposed President Zine El Abidine Ben Ali.

Early Life

Habib Essid was born on 1 June 1949 in Sousse in the French Protectorate of Tunisia. He studied economics at the University of Tunis and graduated with a master's degree in agronomy from the University of Minnesota, USA in 1974. He became an irrigation specialist within Tunisia's ministry of agriculture, working in the Gafsa region for much of the 1980s.

In 1989 Essid was appointed chief of agricultural development for the northern city of Bizerte. He held senior positions in the government under President Ben Ali at the ministry of agriculture and, from 1997, the ministry of the interior. From 2001 he was secretary of state to the minister of agriculture, initially with responsibility for fisheries and subsequently for water resources. He also headed the Pipeline across the Sahara (TRAPSA) project from 2003–04. Between 2004 and 2010 he was director of the Madrid-based International Olive Oil Council.

Following the revolution that toppled Ben Ali in Jan. 2011 and sparked the Arab Spring, Essid was appointed interior minister in the interim government. After the Constituent Assembly elections on 23 Oct. 2011 he was named security adviser to Hamed Jebali, the interim prime minister and leader of the moderate Islamist Ennahda movement. When Beji Caid Essebsi was elected president on 21 Dec. 2014, he appointed Essid as premier.

Career in Office

Essid was ostensibly chosen as prime minister for his considerable experience in economic affairs and security, as well as his reputation for independence and competence. However, his critics have pointed to his close ties to the autocratic Ben Ali administration, especially during his time in the interior ministry.

Having taken office, Essid attracted controversy by appointing a cabinet dominated by members of Nidaa Tounes (Call of Tunisia), a secular party founded by President Essebsi. He subsequently agreed to include members of other parties, including Ennahda and the leftist Popular Front, and on 5 Feb. 2015 his new cabinet won parliamentary approval.

Security was a major concern throughout 2015. In the wake of three major terror attacks by Islamist extremists in March, June and Nov.—on the country's leading museum, a tourist beach resort and the presidential guard respectively—Essid carried out a cabinet reshuffle in Jan. 2016 in an effort to improve government effectiveness. He replaced the interior and foreign ministers among a series of changes and also abolished a number of posts. Also in Jan. the government imposed a night-time curfew as violent protests against rising unemployment spread across the country.

DEFENCE

Selective conscription is for one year. Defence expenditure in 2013 totalled US$769m. (US$71 per capita), representing 1.6% of GDP.

Army

Strength (2011) 27,000 (22,000 conscripts). There is also a National Guard numbering 12,000.

Navy

In 2011 naval personnel totalled around 4,800. Forces are based at Bizerte, Sfax and Kelibia.

Air Force

The Air Force operated 24 combat-capable aircraft in 2011, including ten F-5E/F Tiger II fighters and nine Aero L-59s. Personnel (2011) 4,000.

ECONOMY

In 2011 services accounted for 59.8% of GDP, industry 31.3% and agriculture 8.9%.

Overview

Tunisia's economic record compares favourably with other developing nations, particularly those on the African continent. After a balance of payments crisis in the mid-1980s, steps were taken to improve macroeconomic policy, foster the private sector and liberalize prices and controls. In the 1990s the economy grew steadily at an average annual rate of 5%.

The economy has suffered instability since the Jasmine Revolution in 2011, with foreign investment falling sharply. After a contraction of 1.9% in 2011, GDP grew by 3.7% the following year. However, declining output in the agricultural and coal and oil sectors, combined with stagnation in manufacturing and a decline in tourism, have stifled growth.

The expansionist monetary and fiscal policies pursued by the interim government installed in 2011 increased the deficit to 6%. Foreign direct investment fell from US$1.7bn. to US$1.0bn. between 2012 and 2013, and foreign exchange reserves also declined. Restoring political stability is key to the long-term health of the economy.

Currency

The unit of currency is the Tunisian dinar (TND) of 1,000 millimes. The currency was made convertible on 6 Jan. 1993. Foreign exchange reserves were US$4,069m. and gold reserves 218,000 troy oz in July 2005. Inflation was 5.8% in 2013 and 4.9% in 2014. Total money supply was 8,339m. dinars in June 2005.

Budget

The fiscal year is the calendar year. Budgetary central government revenue totalled 16,051m. dinars in 2011 and expenditure 16,286m. dinars. Taxes accounted for 85.2% of total revenues in 2011. Principal sources of revenue in 2011: taxes on income, profits and capital gains, 5,936m. dinars; taxes on goods and services, 5,827m. dinars; taxes on international trade and transactions, 1,077m. dinars. Main items of expenditure by economic type in 2011: compensation of employees, 6,799m. dinars; subsidies, 3,508m. dinars; interest, 1,190m. dinars.

VAT is 18% (reduced rates, 12% and 6%).

Performance

Real GDP expanded by 3.7% in 2012 and 2.3% in both 2013 and 2014. Tunisia's total GDP in 2014 was US$48.6bn.

Banking and Finance

The Central Bank of Tunisia (Governor, Chedly Ayari) is the bank of issue. In 2003 there were 12 commercial banks, six development banks, two merchant banks and five 'offshore' banks.

In 2010 external debt totalled US$21,584m., equivalent to 51.1% of GNI.

There is a small stock exchange (51 companies trading in 2007).

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Tunisia's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2011 were the equivalent of 1.9 tonnes per capita.

Electricity

Installed capacity was an estimated 4.0m. kW in 2011. Production in 2011 was 16.50bn. kWh; consumption per capita was 1,531 kWh.

Oil and Gas

Oil production (2012) was 3.1m. tonnes with 0.4bn. bbls in proven reserves. Natural gas production (2009), 2.2bn. cu. metres; proven reserves were 65bn. cu. metres in 2013.

Minerals

Mineral production (in 1,000 tonnes) in 2004: phosphate rock, 8,051; salt, 1,117; iron ore, 256; zinc ore (concentrated), 53; lead, 5.

Agriculture

There are five agricultural regions: the north, mountainous with large fertile valleys; the northeast, with the peninsula of Cap Bon, suited for the cultivation of oranges, lemons and tangerines; the Sahel, where olive trees abound; the centre, a region of high tablelands and pastures; and the desert of the south, where dates are grown.

In 2007 the economically active agricultural population was an estimated 787,000. Large estates predominate; smallholdings are tending to fragment, partly owing to inheritance laws. In 2006 356,000 ha. were irrigated. There were 2.76m. ha. of arable land in 2007 and 2.17m. ha. of permanent crops. There were 140 tractors and ten harvester-threshers per 10,000 ha. of arable land in 2006. The main crops are cereals, citrus fruits, tomatoes, melons, olives, dates, grapes and olive oil. Production, 2003 estimates (in 1,000 tonnes): wheat, 1,150; tomatoes, 800; melons and watermelons, 520; olives, 500; barley, 345; potatoes, 345; chillies and green peppers, 206; onions, 120; dates, 115; grapes, 115; oranges, 106; apples, 100; peaches and nectarines, 82; olive oil, 73; grapefruit and pomelos, 72; pears, 68.

Livestock, 2003 estimates (in 1,000): sheep, 6,850; goats, 1,400; cattle, 760; camels, 231; asses, 230; mules, 81; horses, 57. Livestock products, 2003 estimates (in 1,000 tonnes): meat, 250; milk, 989; eggs, 83.

Forestry

In 2010 there were 1.01m. ha. of forests (6% of the land area). Timber production in 2011 was 2.41m. cu. metres.

Fisheries

In 2010 the catch amounted to 97,743 tonnes, almost exclusively from marine waters.

INDUSTRY

Production (2011, in 1,000 tonnes): cement, 7,055; phosphoric acid, 568; lime, 282; distillate fuel oil, 254; residual fuel oil, 236; crude steel, 119. There were 5,837 industrial enterprises of ten employees or more in 2010 employing a total of 498,929 people. In 2011 manufacturing accounted for 18.1% of GDP.

Labour

The labour force in 2013 was 3,978,000 (3,355,000 in 2003). 51.2% of the population aged 15–64 was economically active in 2013. In the same year 13.3% of the population was unemployed. In 2013, 26.9% of the labour force was female.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

In Feb. 1989 Tunisia signed a treaty of economic co-operation with the other countries of Maghreb: Algeria, Libya, Mauritania and Morocco. Tunisia was the first country to sign a partnership agreement with the European Union, becoming fully integrated in its free trade zone in Jan. 2008.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

The road network covered 19,371 km in 2008, including 359 km of motorways and 4,738 km of national roads. In 2007 there were 746,700 passenger cars, 300,500 lorries and vans, 10,100 buses and coaches, and 5,300 motorcycles and mopeds. There were 10,681 road accidents in 2007 resulting in 1,497 fatalities.

Rail

In 2007 there were 2,165 km of railways on metre and 1,435 mm gauge track. Passenger-km travelled in 2007 came to 1,487m. and freight tonne-km to 2,197m. There is a tramway in Tunis (32 km).

Civil Aviation

The national carrier, Tunisair, is 64.9% state-owned and in 2013 carried 3,710,000 passengers. There are eight international airports. In 2012 Tunis-Carthage handled 5,249,411 passengers (4,903,506 on international flights) and 16,666 tonnes of freight. Enfidha-Hammamet, which opened in 2009, handled 2,087,122 passengers in 2012 and Djerba 1,969,043.

Shipping

There are ports at Tunis, its outer port Tunis-Goulette, Sfax, Sousse and Bizerte, all of which are directly accessible to ocean-going vessels. The ports of La Skhirra and Gabès are used for the shipping of Algerian and Tunisian oil. In Jan. 2009 there were 17 ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 125,000 GT.

Telecommunications

In 2009 there were 9,797,000 mobile phone subscriptions (953.8 per 1,000 inhabitants) and 1,279,000 fixed telephone lines. There were 340.7 internet users for every 1,000 inhabitants in 2009. In June 2012 there were 3.1m. Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

There are 51 magistrates' courts, 13 courts of first instance, three courts of appeal (in Tunis, Sfax and Sousse) and the High Court in Tunis.

A Personal Status Code was promulgated on 13 Aug. 1956 and applied to Tunisians from 1 Jan. 1957. This raised the status of women, made divorce subject to a court decision, abolished polygamy and decreed a minimum marriage age.

The population in penal institutions in 2012 was 21,300 (199 per 100,000 of national population). 54.0% of prisoners had yet to receive a trial according to 2014 estimates by the International Centre for Prison Studies. Tunisia was ranked 41st of 102 countries for criminal justice and 49th for civil justice in the 2015 World Justice Project Rule of Law Index, which provides data on how the rule of law is experienced by the general public across eight categories.

Education

The adult literacy rate in 2008 was 78%. All education is free from primary schools to university. Attendance at school is compulsory between the ages of six and 16. In 2007 there were 1,068,822 pupils in primary schools with 58,879 teaching staff and 1,268,219 pupils in secondary schools with 79,735 teaching staff.

In 2007 there were 13 public universities including the Virtual University of Tunis. There are a number of other public and private higher education institutions. There were 326,185 students in higher education in 2007 with 18,117 academic staff.

In 2005 public expenditure on education came to 7.2% of GDP and accounted for 20.8% of total government expenditure.

Health

There were 172 hospitals and 2,079 basic health centres in 2007 with a capacity of 17,998 beds. In 2006 there were 9,653 doctors, 1,858 dentists, 30,812 paramedical staff and 2,255 pharmacists.

RELIGION

The constitution recognizes Islam as the state religion. According to estimates by the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life, more than 99% of the population are Muslims (mostly Sunnis).

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

Tunisia has eight sites on the UNESCO World Heritage List: the Amphitheatre of El Jem (inscribed on the list in 1979); the Site of Carthage (1979); the Medina of Tunis (1979); Ichkeul National Park (1980); the Punic Town of Kerkuane and its Necropolis (1985 and 1986); the Medina of Sousse (1988); Kairouan (1988); and Dougga/Thugga (1997).

Press

In 2009 there were nine paid-for daily newspapers (four in Arabic and five in French).

Tourism

Tourism accounts for 15% of GDP. In 2011 there were 4,785,000 international tourist arrivals, excluding same-day visitors (down from 6,903,000 in 2010 in the wake of the revolution of early 2011). Numbers have fallen since 2008, when a record 7,050,000 tourists visited the country. Spending by tourists in 2011 totalled US$1,914m. Visitor numbers fell again in 2015 in the wake of two attacks on foreign tourists during the year.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

There is evidence of human habitation in Anatolia (Asia Minor) from around 7500 BC. Catal Huyuk (on the Konya Plain) flourished between 6500 and 5800 BC to become one of the world's largest and most important Neolithic sites. Between 1800 and 1200 BC much of Anatolia came under Hittite rule, initially centred on Cappadocia. The artistic work of the Hittites shows a high level of culture with Babylonian and Assyrian influence. Greek colonies were established around the Anatolian coast from around 700 BC including Byzantium, which was founded by Greeks from Megara in 667 BC. Anatolia was conquered by Persians in the 6th century BC.

Alexander the Great defeated the Persians around 330 BC. After his death there was a long civil war between the Seleucids and the Ptolemies, while the kingdoms of Galatia, Armenia, Pergamum, Cappadocia, Bithynia and Pontus all established footholds in the region. Rome gained dominance around the 2nd century BC and brought stability and prosperity. Turkey was home to some of the earliest centres of Christianity, such as Antioch (modern Antalya) and Ephesus. In AD 324 the Emperor Constantine began the construction of a new capital at Byzantium. Constantinople became the centre of the Byzantine (Eastern Roman) Empire, which peaked under Justinian in the mid-6th century.

Muslim Arab forces attacked Constantinople in the 670s and besieged the city again in 716 but were repelled, thwarting the expansion of the Umayyad Caliphate ruled by Umar II. Constantine V (741–75) led Christian Byzantine forces eastward to recover lands in Anatolia. The Seljuk Turks, whose origins were in central Asia, established dominance over much of Anatolia during the 11th century, led by Alp Arslan. They came under threat during the Crusades and were overrun by the Mongol hordes from 1243. The Ottoman principality was one of a number of small Turkish states that emerged in Anatolia amid the retreat of the Mongols and the waning of the Seljuk and Byzantine empires. Osman I led the early phase of Ottoman expansion, conquering Byzantine towns in northwest Anatolia in the early 14th century. Sultan Mehmed II seized Constantinople in 1453 and went on to establish Ottoman dominance in the Balkans and the Aegean. The empire expanded to its fullest extent under Suleiman the Magnificent (1494–1566), taking in North Africa, the Levant, Persia, Anatolia, the Balkans and the Caucasus.

From the early 17th century the Ottoman empire fell into a long decline, its power weakening rapidly in the 19th century. The Kingdom of Greece broke away from Ottoman rule in 1832, with Serbs, Romanians, Armenians, Albanians, Bulgarians and Arabs demanding independence soon afterwards. Attempts by Turkey to redefine itself were further hindered in the 20th century by the First World War, during which it sided with Germany. In fighting with Greece over disputed territory from 1920–22, the Turkish National Movement was led by Mustafa Kemal (Atatürk: 'Father of the Turks'), who wanted a republic based on a modern secular society. Turkey became a republic on 29 Oct. 1923, with Ankara its capital. Islam ceased to be the official state religion in 1928 and women were given the same rights to employment and education as men, although they were not able to vote in national elections until 1934. İsmet İnönü became president following Kemal's death in 1938 and steered a neutral course through the Second World War. The 1950s were marked by a policy of firm alignment with the West, and Turkey joined NATO in 1952.

On 27 May 1960 the Turkish army overthrew the government and party activities were suspended. A new constitution was approved in a referendum held on 9 July 1961. On 20 July 1974 Turkish forces invaded Cyprus, leading to the unilateral establishment of the 'Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus' in 1983. The question of Cypriot governance has been a source of tension with Greece ever since. (See CYPRUS: Key Historical Events for further information.)

On 12 Sept. 1980 the Turkish armed forces again drove the government in Ankara from office. A new constitution was enforced after a national referendum on 7 Nov. 1982. In the face of mounting Islamization of government policy, the Supreme National Security Council reaffirmed its commitment to the secular state. On 6 March 1997 Prime Minister Necmettin Erbakan, leader of the pro-Islamist Welfare Party, promised to combat Muslim fundamentalism but in June he was forced to resign by a campaign led by the army.

His successor, Ahmet Mesut Yılmaz, was in office until 1999 when he was replaced by Mustafa Bülent Ecevit of the Democratic Left Party. Ecevit had previously served three spells as premier in the 1970s. The Justice and Development Party (AKP) came to power in 2002, with Abdullah Gül heading the government until Recep Tayyip Erdoğan took over the premiership in 2003.

In Feb. 2000 the Kurdish Workers' Party (PKK) formally abandoned its 15-year rebellion and adopted the democratic programme urged by its imprisoned leader, Abdullah Öcalan. Despite being a long-term ally of the USA, the Turkish parliament voted against allowing US troops to attack Iraq from its southeastern border in 2003, with the incumbent AKP government harbouring concerns about the possibility of an independent Kurdish state arising from a divided Iraq.

An associate member of the European Union since 1964, Turkey has aspired to accession pending the completion of negotiations. However, significant hurdles remain, including the status of Northern Cyprus, the issue of human rights in Turkey and lukewarm support for its full membership in some EU states.

In Aug. 2007 Abdullah Gül became president, following several months of political wrangling over concerns, particularly in the military, that his Islamist background might compromise Turkey's constitutional secularism. In 2011 the AKP was returned to power, with Erdoğan claiming a third term as premier. Relations with Syria were subsequently strained as Erdoğan became an outspoken critic of Syrian President Assad's regime. Turkey has taken in over 1.8m. refugees from its civil war-ravaged neighbour against a backdrop of sporadic border skirmishes.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Turkey is bounded in the west by the Aegean Sea and Greece, north by Bulgaria and the Black Sea, east by Georgia, Armenia and Iran, and south by Iraq, Syria and the Mediterranean. The area (including lakes) is 783,562 sq. km (302,535 sq. miles). The last traditional census was in 2000. In 2007 an address-based population registration system was established to replace ten-yearly censuses. The population at the census of 31 Dec. 2012 using this method was 75,627,384, giving a density of 98.3 per sq. km. In 2011, 70.1% of the population lived in urban areas.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 78.67m.

Turkish is the official language. Kurdish and Arabic are also spoken.

Some 14m. Kurds live in Turkey. In Feb. 1991 limited use of the Kurdish language was sanctioned, and in Aug. 2002 parliament legalized Kurdish radio and television broadcasts. There were 1.84m. Syrian refugees in 2015—the highest number in any country and 13% of the global total—many of whom had fled from Islamic State fighters over the border.

CLIMATE

Coastal regions have a Mediterranean climate, with mild, moist winters and hot, dry summers. The interior plateau has more extreme conditions, with low and irregular rainfall, cold and snowy winters, and hot, almost rainless summers. Ankara, Jan. 32.5°F (0.3°C), July 73°F (23°C). Annual rainfall 14.7" (367 mm). İstanbul, Jan. 41°F (5°C), July 73°F (23°C). Annual rainfall 28.9" (723 mm). İzmir, Jan. 46°F (8°C), July 81°F (27°C). Annual rainfall 28" (700 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

On 7 Nov. 1982 a new constitution was adopted, which has subsequently undergone several revisions. Following a referendum on 21 Oct. 2007, it was amended so that the President would be directly elected by the people, instead of by Parliament, as had been the case. Furthermore, the president is now able to serve for up to two five-year terms, rather than being limited to a single seven-year term. This reform came into force at the presidential election of Aug. 2014. Further amendments were introduced after acceptance in a referendum on 12 Sept. 2010. Under their terms, military officers accused of crimes against the state may be tried in civilian courts. Legal protection previously granted to participants in the 1980 coup was removed. Government workers are granted the right to collective bargaining and restrictions on striking were loosened. The Constitutional Court was expanded, with the president and parliament having a greater say in judicial appointments.

According to the constitution the presidency is not an executive position and the president may not be linked to a political party but can veto laws and official appointments. There is a 550-member Turkish Grand National Assembly, elected by universal suffrage (at 18 years and over) for four-year terms by proportional representation.

RECENT ELECTIONS

Snip parliamentary elections were held on 1 Nov. 2015 after the 7 June 2015 elections produced a hung parliament. The ruling Justice and Development Party (AKP) regained its parliamentary majority by winning 317 of the 550 seats with 49.5% of votes cast, against 134 seats and 25.3% for the Republican People's Party (CHP), 59 seats and 10.8% for the People's Democratic Party (HDP), and 40 seats and 11.9% for the Nationalist Movement Party (MHP). There were 13 parties that failed to secure the 10% of votes needed to gain parliamentary representation. Turnout was 85.8%.

The country's first direct presidential elections took place on 10 Aug. 2014. Legislation passed in 2012 meant that Turkey's head of state would be elected by the public, rather than members of parliament. Incumbent prime minister Recep Tayyip Erdoğan (AKP) won in a single round of voting with 51.8% of votes, against Ekmeleddin İhsanoğlu (ind.) with 38.4% and Selahattin Demirtaş of the People's Democratic Party (HDP) with 9.8%. Turnout was 74.1%.

CURRENT LEADERS

Recep Tayyip Erdoğan

Position
President

Introduction

Recep Tayyip Erdoğan won the country's first direct presidential elections in Aug. 2014. Earlier, he had led the AKP to victory at the general elections of Nov. 2002 but, because of a previous criminal conviction, he was initially banned from standing for parliament, making him ineligible for office. However, a constitutional amendment allowed him to stand soon afterwards and he replaced his party deputy as prime minister. For many years a prominent Islamist, Erdoğan has since sought to remould himself as a pro-European moderate. However, he has continued to cause unease among secularists and has been viewed as increasingly authoritarian. He identified Turkey's admission to the European Union as his government's top priority, but negotiations have been hampered by Turkey's refusal to recognize the government of Greek Cyprus. Erdoğan was returned as premier in 2007 and 2011 as the AKP won consecutive parliamentary elections. The AKP then briefly lost ground in elections in June 2015 before further polling in Nov. restored the party's parliamentary majority. Also in 2015 Erdoğan oversaw a further deterioration in relations with Syria and particularly Russia, while continuing to confront Kurdish separatists.

Early Life

Erdoğan was born in 1954 in Rize. He attended a Koranic college before graduating in economics in 1981 from Marmara University in İstanbul. From the mid-1980s he became active in the pro-Islamist Welfare Party and in 1994 he was made mayor of İstanbul.

The Welfare Party was outlawed in 1998 for contravening Turkey's secularist constitution. In the same year Erdoğan was imprisoned for four months for reading a pro-Islamist poem at a political rally. Following the banning of the Virtue Party (the successor to Welfare) in June 2001, he established the AKP, espousing pro-Western and democratic policies, and the party won an outright victory at the Nov. 2002 elections. Erdoğan remained AKP leader with Abdullah Gül, his deputy, as prime minister until he won a by-election in Feb. 2003, following constitutional changes, and replaced Gül as premier.

Career in Office

Erdoğan's early tenure was dominated by the US-led invasion of neighbouring Iraq from March 2003. Mirroring popular opinion, the government refused to allow the deployment of US ground troops on its territory, endangering aid and loans from the USA and IMF until the Turkish parliament agreed to the use of its airspace by the US air force.

Turkey's wish for EU accession has been undermined by the failure of the Greek and Turkish sectors of Cyprus to agree on the divided island's reunification. To fulfil the criteria for EU membership, Erdoğan pushed legislative and constitutional reforms through parliament and also made a deal accepting Cyprus as an EU member. The European Council consequently agreed to open accession negotiations that began in Oct. 2005. However, in 2006 the EU partially suspended them because of the Turkish government's failure to open its ports and airports to Cypriot traffic.

In early 2007 Erdoğan decided not to stand for election to the state presidency and instead put forward foreign minister Abdullah Gül as the AKP candidate. However, Gül was equally unpalatable to secular and particularly military opinion, leading to a political stand-off in the National Assembly. Erdoğan consequently called an early general election for July that year, which returned the AKP to power, and in Aug. the new parliament endorsed Gül as president. Tensions between the AKP and the secular opposition have since continued. In Sept. 2010 Erdoğan's government won a referendum on constitutional reforms increasing parliamentary control over the army and judiciary, and in Aug. 2013 former military chief of staff Gen. İlker Başbuğ and several other generals were sentenced to life imprisonment for allegedly plotting to overthrow the AKP administration, although the convictions were overturned in March 2015.

Erdoğan has adopted a hard line towards Kurdish separatist insurgents based in northern Iraq. In July 2010 the PKK indicated its willingness to consider a truce in return for greater political and cultural rights, but the offer met with no official response. There was instead an escalation of Turkish military and penal measures against the PKK and pro-Kurdish activists in 2011 and 2012. In March 2013 the imprisoned PKK leader, Abdullah Öcalan, called for a ceasefire and ordered a withdrawal of PKK fighters from Turkey to advance peace negotiations with the government. Turkish military operations against the PKK nevertheless intensified.

In foreign affairs, Erdoğan clashed publicly in 2009 with the president of Israel over Israeli military action in the Palestinian Gaza Strip, and relations were damaged further in 2010 as nine Turkish activists were killed in an Israeli commando raid on a flotilla of ships carrying aid and supplies to Gaza. Turkey's diplomatic ties with the USA and France have also come under strain over US congressional and French parliamentary recognition of the mass killing of Armenians in 1915 during Ottoman rule as genocide. In 2011, while critical of NATO's military action against the Gaddafi regime in Libya, Erdoğan was supportive of the 'Arab Spring' protest movements that erupted against established regimes across much of the Middle East and North Africa.

The escalation of civil war in Syria since 2011 has led to a serious deterioration in Turkey's relations with the neighbouring regime of President Assad and more recently with Russia. In Nov. 2012 the Turkish government formally requested the deployment of NATO Patriot missiles on its territory as a defensive deterrent to Syrian attack. Turkey has meanwhile been faced with a surge of Syrian refugees. Moreover, Turkey's reluctance to aid Syria's Kurds against the military advance of Islamic State Sunni jihadists has fuelled resentment among the restive Kurdish population in Turkey towards the government in Ankara. Terror attacks in Turkey in July and Oct. 2015 and Jan. 2016 by suspected Islamic State extremists have prompted Turkish military retaliation, while Russia's aerial involvement over Syria in support of the Assad regime from Sept. 2015 led to the shooting down of a Russian warplane in Oct. for allegedly violating Turkish airspace. Russia, as Turkey's second largest trading partner, retaliated with economic sanctions.

In May and June 2013 there were violent clashes in İstanbul and several other cities between environmental demonstrators and riot police, prompting accusations of heavy-handedness by Erdoğan's government and criticism from the EU. In Dec. that year a political crisis was triggered by a corruption scandal allegedly involving senior political and business figures and an apparent government attempt to suppress police investigations.

On 1 July 2014 Erdoğan was named the AKP's candidate in Turkey's first ever direct presidential elections. He was elected on 10 Aug. with 51.8% of the vote and sworn in on 28 Aug. with Ahmet Davutoğlu, also of the AKP, replacing him as prime minister. However, in Dec. 2014 a wave of arrests of journalists on charges of establishing a terrorist group was described by the opposition CHP as a coup against democracy, which further undermined EU confidence in the Turkish government's respect for the rule of law and fuelled concerns over a concentration of political power in Erdoğan's hands. Parliamentary elections in June 2015 deprived the AKP of a majority but, after governing as an interim administration until Nov., the party won an unexpected and decisive victory in further polling marred by violence and media restrictions.

Ahmet Davutoğlu

Position

Prime Minister

Introduction

Ahmet Davutoğlu was sworn in as prime minister on 29 Aug. 2014 and also confirmed as leader of the ruling Justice and Development Party (AKP). He succeeded Recep Tayyip Erdoğan, the long-time party leader and prime minister, who became president of Turkey on the same date. A foreign policy specialist and proponent of pan-Islamic co-operation, Davutoğlu was instrumental in shaping Turkey's regional and international strategy after the AKP came to power in 2002.

Early Life

Davutoğlu was born on 26 Feb. 1959 in Taşkent. He graduated in economics and political science from Boğaziçi University, subsequently gaining a PhD in international relations from the same institution in 1983. He then embarked on an academic career, founding the political science department at the International Islamic University of Malaysia and becoming a professor at Marmara and Beykent Universities, both in İstanbul.

In the mid-1990s he was a regular columnist for the conservative, Islamist newspaper Yeni Şafak.

After the AKP swept to power in 2002 Davutoğlu was appointed ambassador-at-large and chief adviser to the prime minister. In May 2009 he was named foreign minister in Erdoğan's cabinet despite not being a member of parliament, although he successfully ran as an AKP candidate in the general election of June 2011. The architect of Turkish policy in the Middle East, Davutoğlu was among those to press for the removal of Syria's president, Bashar al-Assad, in the wake of the Syrian civil war, which began in 2011.

The election of Erdoğan as president in Aug. 2014 necessitated the election of a new leader of the AKP party, who would by extension become prime minister, and a meeting of the party's executive committee nominated Davutoğlu as the only candidate.

Career in Office

In his first cabinet Davutoğlu appointed Mevlüt Çavuşoğlu as foreign minister but left other key posts unchanged, feeding speculation that Erdoğan would continue to control the political agenda despite the traditionally ceremonial role of Turkey's presidents.

In the first months of his tenure Davutoğlu was criticized for Turkey's failure to intervene against the rise of Islamic State jihadist insurgents in the Middle East. The passage of fighters through Turkey's borders incited tensions with the restive domestic Kurdish community and strained relations with international partners, but Davutoğlu said that Turkey would only become involved militarily if operations included action against President Assad's regime.

Davutoğlu's AKP party lost its parliamentary majority at the June 2015 elections, with the prime minister leading an interim government that was formed in order to preside over new elections. The party then regained its majority at the Nov. 2015 pollings and the prime minister was able to form a new government. However, subsequent tensions in relations between Davutoğlu and Erdoğan led the former to announce that he would leave office towards the end of May.

DEFENCE

The President of the Republic is C.-in-C. of the armed forces. The National Security Council, chaired by the president and comprising military leaders and the ministers of defence and the economy, also functions as a de facto constitutional watchdog. Reforms passed in July 2003 in preparation for EU membership aimed to reduce the influence of the military in the political system.

Conscription is 15 months for privates, 12 months for reserve officers and six months for privates who have completed a university degree.

In 2013 defence expenditure totalled US$10,742m., with spending per capita US$133. The 2013 expenditure represented 1.3% of GDP.

Army

Strength (2011) 660,700 (including around 325,000 conscripts and 258,700 reservists). There is also a paramilitary gendarmerie-cum-national guard of 150,000. In addition around 36,000 Turkish troops are stationed in Northern Cyprus.

Navy

The fleet in 2011 included 14 diesel submarines, 18 frigates and six corvettes. The main naval base is at Gölçük in the Gulf of İzmit.

There is a naval air component with ten anti-submarine warfare helicopters and seven light aircraft in 2011. There is a 3,100-strong Marine Regiment. The Coast Guard numbers 3,250 (including 1,400 conscripts).

Personnel in 2011 totalled 48,600 (34,500 conscripts) including marines and coast guard.

Air Force

The Air Force is being restructured, with the former 1st and 2nd Tactical Air Force Commands being merged into a new Combat Air Force and Air Missile Defence Command controlled from Eskişehir in central Turkey. There were around 338 combat-capable aircraft in operation in 2011 including F-5A/Bs, F-4E Phantoms and F-16C/Ds.

Personnel strength (2011), 60,000.

INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

Relations between Turkey and Iraq have long been strained over activity in the borderlands of northern Iraq by Kurdish separatist movements including the PKK. In Dec. 2007 Turkey launched air strikes on Iraqi territory against the PKK and in Feb. 2008 Turkish troops made a week-long incursion into northern Iraq to fight rebels.

There is an ongoing dispute with Greece over the division of Cyprus, oil rights under the Aegean Sea and ownership of uninhabited islands close to the Turkish coast.

Turkey has applied to join the EU and was awarded candidate status in 1999. Talks on membership began in Oct. 2005 but Turkey is unlikely to achieve full membership in the foreseeable future.

After civil war broke out in Syria in 2011, Turkey's relations with its neighbour came under renewed strain, with tensions spilling over into sporadic border skirmishes.

ECONOMY

In 2009 finance and real estate contributed 22.0% to GDP; followed by manufacturing, 15.0%; transport and communications, 13.3%; and trade and hotels, 13.2%.

Overview

Turkey was ranked 51st in the World Economic Forum's Global Competitiveness Report for 2015–16, down from 43rd in 2012–13 but up 15 places on a decade earlier. Over that ten-year period, per capita income nearly tripled to break the US$10,000 barrier. Tourism, agriculture and manufacturing are key economic sectors.

In 2000 Turkey committed to a three-year exchange rate-based stabilization programme, including wide-ranging structural reforms and strong fiscal adjustment. However, a financial and currency crisis the following year caused its collapse and brought the country to the brink of debt default.

A strengthened programme was introduced in May 2001 with IMF support. Key structural reforms emphasized public sector standards, the liberalization of markets and a strong banking sector. Tight fiscal policies and central bank independence brought Turkey improved macroeconomic health; from 2003–07 annual growth averaged nearly 7% and public debt fell from 74% to 39% of GDP. However, the global financial crisis, combined with domestic political tensions, saw growth in 2008 drop to 0.7%, and in 2009 the economy contracted by nearly 5%. It then recovered in 2010 and unemployment fell back to its pre-crisis level of around 10%. GDP growth was around 9% in both 2010 and 2011 but slowed again to 2% in 2012. In 2014 it rose to 3%, while inflation measured 8.9% and public debt stood at 33.6% of GDP (down from 42.3% in 2010).

Agriculture accounted for roughly 20% of total employment in 2014. The largest industrial sector is textiles, although the automotive and electronics industries have grown strongly. The financial sector withstood the global crisis well and Turkey was the only country in the OECD not to provide state support to the banking sector. The country also has a successful tourism industry.

In 1996 a customs union was established with the European Union and in 2005 Turkey began the EU accession process, providing a further incentive to maintain macroeconomic and structural reforms. For the long term, the IMF has emphasized the need to improve the business climate, diversify energy sources and boost domestic saving. However, growing political and regional instability poses a threat to Turkey's economic aspirations.

Currency

The unit of currency is the Turkish lira (TRY) of 100 kuruş. It was introduced on 1 Jan. 2005 as the new Turkish lira—officially abbreviated as YTL—replacing the Turkish lira (TRL) at 1 new Turkish lira = 1m. Turkish lira. On 1 Jan. 2009 the 'new' was removed and its official name is again just 'Turkish lira' (since 2012 indicated by the symbol ₺). Gold reserves were 3.73m. troy oz in Sept. 2009 and foreign exchange reserves US$69,387m. Inflation rates (based on OECD statistics):

2005	2006	2007	2008	2009	2010	2011	2012	2013	2014
8.2%	9.6%	8.8%	10.4%	6.3%	8.6%	6.5%	8.9%	7.5%	8.9%

Total money supply in July 2009 was ₺88,267m.

Budget

The fiscal year is the calendar year. Budgetary central government revenue totalled ₺299,164m. in 2011 (₺261,994m. in 2010) and expenditure ₺303,465m. (₺280,409m. in 2010). Tax revenues were ₺260,320m. in 2011. The leading items of expenditure in 2011 were wages and salaries (₺68,770m.), followed by grants (₺55,474m.).

VAT is 18%, with reduced rates of 8% and 1%.

Performance

Real GDP growth rates (based on OECD statistics):

2005	2006	2007	2008	2009	2010	2011	2012	2013	2014
8.4%	6.9%	4.7%	0.7%	-4.8%	9.2%	8.8%	2.1%	4.2%	2.9%

Total GDP was US$798.4bn. in 2014. GDP per capita nearly trebled in the space of eight years, rising from US$3,492 in 2002 to US$10,440 in 2008.

Banking and Finance

The Central Bank (Merkez Bankası; Governor, Erdem Başçı) is the bank of issue. In 2003 there were 36 commercial banks (three state-owned, two under the Deposit Insurance Fund, 18 private, 13 foreign), and 14 development and investment banks. The Central Bank's assets were US$51.66bn. in 2003. The assets and liabilities of deposit money banks were US$25.8bn. Turkey's two state-owned banks, Ziraat Bankası (the Agricultural Bank, with a public mission to lend to farmers) and Halk Bankası (with a public mission to lend to small and medium sized enterprises), together accounted for 27% of total assets in the Turkish banking sector in Dec. 2002. Ziraat Bankası is Turkey's largest bank, with 18.1% of total assets as of March 2003.

In 2010 external debt totalled US$293,872m., equivalent to 40.4% of GNI.

Foreign direct investment in 2013 was US$12,866m., down from US$13,224m. in 2012.

In Dec. 2000 the IMF gave Turkey an emergency loan of US$7.5bn. as the country experienced a financial crisis after ten banks were placed in receivership. The economic crisis continued as the lira was floated on the international market and lost 30% of its value against the US dollar in the space of 12 hours in Feb. 2001. Within a week the lira had been devalued by approximately 40%. In April 2001 Turkey secured a further US$10bn. loan from the IMF and the World Bank. This was followed in Feb. 2002 with a three-year US$16bn. loan from the IMF, taking total loans paid or pledged to US$31bn.

There is a stock exchange in İstanbul (ISE).

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

In 2011 Turkey's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy were the equivalent of 3.7 tonnes per capita. Turkey's greenhouse gas emissions rose by 163.3% between 1990 and 2012.

Electricity

In 2011 installed capacity was 52.91m. kW (17.14m. kW hydro-electric); production in 2011 was 229.4bn. kWh and consumption per capita 3,152 kWh. There are plans to build three nuclear plants to meet the country's growing energy needs, with the first projected to become operational in 2023.

Oil and Gas

Crude oil production (2009) was 17m. bbls. Reserves in 2011 were 270m. bbls. In 2012, net imports of crude petroleum totalled 230.6m. bbls. Natural gas output was 704m. cu. metres in 2009.

Accords for the construction of an oil pipeline from Azerbaijan through Georgia to the Mediterranean port of Ceyhan in southern Turkey (the BTC pipeline) were signed in Nov. 1999. Work on the pipeline began in Sept. 2002 and it was officially opened in May 2005.

A gas pipeline from Baku in Azerbaijan (the South Caucasus pipeline) through Georgia to Erzurum was commissioned in June 2006.

Minerals

Turkey is rich in minerals, and is a major producer of chrome.

Production of principal minerals (in 1,000 tonnes, in 2007 unless otherwise indicated) was: lignite, 72,902; iron, 4,849; copper (gross weight), 4,806; boron, 4,407; coal, 2,462; salt, 2,366; magnesite (2006), 2,088; chrome, 1,679.

Agriculture

In 2002 there were 6,745,000 households engaged in farming, of which 148,190 were engaged purely in animal farming. Agriculture accounts for 45% of the workforce but only 11.5% of GDP. In 2002 Turkey had 25.94m. ha. of arable land and 2.59m. ha. of permanent crops. 5.2m. ha. were irrigated in 2002. Vineyards, orchards and olive groves occupied 2,776,000 ha. in 2005.

Production (2005, in 1,000 tonnes) of principal crops: wheat, 21,500; sugar beets, 15,181; tomatoes, 10,050; barley, 9,500; melons and watermelons, 5,795; maize, 4,200; potatoes, 4,090; grapes, 3,850; apples, 2,570; dry onions, 2,070; peppers, 1,829; cucumbers, 1,745; cottonseed (2004), 1,426; oranges, 1,202; sunflower seeds, 975; cotton lint (2004), 936; aubergines, 930; apricots, 860; olives, 800; cabbage, 675; chick-peas, 600; lemons, 600; hazelnuts, 530. Turkey is the largest producer of apricots and hazelnuts.

Livestock, 2002 (in 1,000): sheep, 26,972; cattle, 10,548; goats, 7,022; asses, 462; horses, 271; buffaloes, 138; mules, 97; chickens, 218,000. Livestock products, 2002 (in 1,000 tonnes): milk, 8,409; meat, 1,376; eggs, 543; cheese, 113; honey, 75.

Forestry

There were 11.33m. ha. of forests in 2010, or 15% of the total land area. Timber production was 21.04m. cu. metres in 2011.

Fisheries

The catch in 2010 totalled 485,939 tonnes (445,680 tonnes from marine waters). Aquaculture production in 2010 came to 167,721 tonnes.

INDUSTRY

The leading companies by market capitalization in March 2015 were: Garanti Bankası (US$13.8bn.); Akbank (US$11.8bn.); and Koç Holding, an industrial conglomerate with varied interests, notably oil and gas (US$11.6bn.).

Production in 2005 (in 1,000 tonnes unless otherwise stated): cement, 41,100; crude steel, 20,965; iron and steel bars, 11,854; distillate fuel oil (2007), 7,016; residual fuel oil (2007), 6,399; petrol (2007), 4,098; coke (2007), 3,335; sugar, 1,928; nitrogenous fertilizers, 1,525; paper and paperboard, 1,005; cotton yarn, 459; olive oil, 301; polyethylene, 274; pig iron, 178; cotton woven fabrics, 609m. metres; woollen woven fabrics, 32m. metres; carpets, 58,034,681 sq. metres; TV sets, 20,790,123 units; refrigerators, 5,098,866 units; cars, 635,137 units; lorries, 39,324 assembled units; tractors, 38,800 units; cigarettes, 104,170 tonnes.

Labour

The labour force in 2013 was 27,355,000 (21,910,000 in 2003). 53.5% of the population aged 15–64 was economically active in 2013. In that year 30.7% of the labour force was female. Of those in employment in 2012, 51.2% worked in services, 26.6% in industry and 22.2% in agriculture. The unemployment rate in Oct. 2015 was 10.6%. The gross monthly minimum wage was ₺1,071 in Jan. 2014.

Turkey had 0.12m. people living in slavery according to the Walk Free Foundation's 2013 Global Slavery Index.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

A customs union with the EU came into force on 1 Jan. 1996.

Imports and Exports

Imports (c.i.f.) in 2010 totalled US$185,541m. (US$140,869m. in 2009) and exports (f.o.b.) US$113,980m. (US$102,139m. in 2009). Chief imports (2005) in US$1m.: machinery and transport equipment, 37,809; manufactured goods, 19,990; chemicals and related products, 16,167; petroleum and petroleum products, 12,413; crude materials excluding fuels, 7,661. Chief exports: machinery and transport equipment, 21,509; apparel and clothing accessories, 11,833; textile yarn, fabrics and finished articles, 7,076; food and live animals, 6,512; iron and steel, 5,827.

The main import suppliers in 2006 (in US$1m.) were: Russia, 17,645; Germany, 14,653; China, 9,601; Italy, 8,597; France, 7,212; USA, 6,221. Main export markets, 2006: Germany, 9,684; UK, 6,813; Italy, 6,753; USA, 5,061; France, 4,604; Spain, 3,721. In the meantime trade with Iraq has increased to such an extent that it is now Turkey's second largest export market. The EU accounted for 40.7% of imports and 54.3% of exports in 2006.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

In 2006 there were 427,099 km of roads, including 1,987 km of motorway. In 2007 road vehicles in use included 6,472,200 passenger cars, 2,619,700 lorries and vans, 561,700 buses and coaches and 2,003,500 motorcycles and mopeds. There were 5,002 fatalities from road accidents in 2007.

Rail

Total length of railway lines in 2011 was 9,642 km (1,435 mm gauge), of which 2,789 km were electrified. Turkey's first high-speed line was opened in 2009 between Ankara and Eskişehir. The first phase of construction of an undersea rail tunnel linking European and Asian Turkey, named Marmaray, was completed in Oct. 2013; the entire project was expected to be completed in mid-2015 but has since been delayed to late 2017. Passenger-km travelled in 2011 came to 5.82bn. and freight tonne-km to 11.30bn. There are metro systems operating in Adana, Ankara, Bursa, İstanbul and İzmir.

Civil Aviation

There are international airports at İstanbul (Atatürk and Sabiha Gökçen), Dalaman (Muğla), Ankara (Esenboga), İzmir (Adnan Menderes), Adana and Antalya. The national carrier is Turkish Airlines, which is 49.1% state-owned. In 2014 it carried 54,675,000 passengers (31,967,000 on international flights) and flew 106,787m. revenue passenger-km. In 2015 it served 110 countries, more than any other airline. In 2009 İstanbul's Atatürk Airport handled 29,854,119 passengers (18,396,050 on international flights) and 381,174 tonnes of freight. Antalya was the second busiest airport for passenger traffic, with 18,403,617 passengers (15,210,554 on international flights) and İstanbul's Sabiha Gökçen Airport third with 6,640,230 passengers (4,510,895 on domestic flights). A third airport serving İstanbul is currently under construction and is scheduled to open in 2018. Atatürk Airport will close when the new airport becomes operational.

Shipping

In Jan. 2009 there were 912 ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 5.05m. GT. Of the 912 vessels registered, 469 were general cargo ships, 148 passenger ships, 123 oil tankers, 100 bulk carriers, 37 container ships, 27 chemical tankers and eight liquid gas tankers. The Turkish-controlled fleet comprised 1,156 vessels of 1,000 GT or over in Jan. 2009, of which 520 were under the Turkish flag and 636 under foreign flags. In 2007 Turkish ports handled 288.1m. tonnes of cargo (114.6m. tonnes loaded and 173.5m. tonnes unloaded), more than double the 140.2m. tonnes handled in 2003.

Telecommunications

In 2013 there were 13,552,000 main (fixed) telephone lines. In the same year mobile phone subscriptions numbered 69,661,000 (929.6 per 1,000 persons). In Nov. 2005 the government sold a 55% stake in Türk Telekom to a consortium led by Saudi Arabia's Oger Telecom and Telecom Italia. The government's stake fell to 30% in May 2008 through a public offering. In 2013 an estimated 46.3% of the population aged 16–74 were internet users. In March 2012 there were 31.0m. Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The unified legal system consists of: (1) justices of the peace (single judges with limited but summary penal and civil jurisdiction); (2) courts of first instance (single judges, dealing with cases outside the jurisdiction of (3) and (4)); (3) central criminal courts (a president and two judges, dealing with cases where the crime is punishable by imprisonment over five years); (4) commercial courts (three judges); (5) state security courts, to prosecute offences against the integrity of the state (a president and two judges).

The civil and military High Courts of Appeal sit at Ankara. The Council of State is the highest administrative tribunal; it consists of five chambers. Its 31 judges are nominated from among high-ranking personalities in politics, economy, law, the army, etc. The Military Administrative Court deals with the judicial control of administrative acts and deeds concerning military personnel. The Court of Jurisdictional Disputes is empowered to resolve disputes between civil, administrative and military courts. The Supreme Council of Judges and Public Prosecutors appoints judges and prosecutors to the profession and has disciplinary powers.

The Civil Code and the Code of Obligations have been adapted from the corresponding Swiss codes. The Penal Code is largely based upon the Italian Penal Code, and the Code of Civil Procedure closely resembles that of the Canton of Neuchâtel. The Commercial Code is based on the German.

The population in penal institutions in Sept. 2013 was 137,133 (179 per 100,000 of national population). In 2015 the World Justice Project Rule of Law Index, which provides data on how the rule of law is experienced by the general public across eight categories, ranked Turkey 76th of 102 countries for criminal justice and 63rd for civil justice.

The death penalty, not used since 1984, was abolished in peacetime in Aug. 2002. The government signed a European Convention protocol abolishing the death penalty entirely in Jan. 2004.

Education

Adult literacy in 2009 was 90.8% (male, 96.4%; female, 85.3%). Compulsory primary and secondary education is free of charge in state schools between the ages of six and 18. In Aug. 2002 parliament legalized education in Kurdish. In 2003–04 there were 583 religious schools with 84,898 pupils.

Statistics for 2005–06	Number	Teachers	Students
Pre-school institutions	18,539	20,910	550,146
Primary schools	34,990	389,859	10,673,935
High schools	3,406	102,581	2,075,617
Vocational and technical high schools	4,029	82,736	1,182,637

In 2007–08 there were 53 state universities, including two higher institutes of technology, and 24 private universities. In 2002–03 a total of 1,894,000 students enrolled at 1,379 establishments of higher education (including the universities); teaching staff numbered 74,134. In 2010, 49,116 students were studying abroad.

In 2006 public expenditure on education came to 2.9% of GDP.

Health

In 2006 there were 116,014 physicians, 23,798 dentists, 217,685 nurses and midwives and 24,740 pharmacists. There were 1,347 hospitals with 179,649 beds in 2009.

Welfare

Distribution of main non-means tested social protection benefits in 2012 was as follows: old age, ₺90,622m.; sickness/health care, ₺55,562m.; survivors, ₺21,841m.; unemployment, ₺2,263m. Total (including others): ₺173,627m. Total social protection expenditure amounted to ₺195,419m. in 2012.

RELIGION

Islam ceased to be the official religion in 1928. The Constitution guarantees freedom of religion but forbids its political exploitation or any impairment of the secular character of the republic.

In 2010 the population was an estimated 98.0% Muslim (around 85–90% Sunni and 10–15% Shia) according to the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life. There are small numbers of Orthodox Christians and other Christians.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

UNESCO World Heritage sites under Turkish jurisdiction (with year entered on list) are: Historic Areas of İstanbul (1985), including the ancient Hippodrome of Constantine, the 6th-century Hagia Sophia and the 16th-century Suleymaniye Mosque; Göreme National Park and the Rock Sites of Cappadocia (1985); Great Mosque and Hospital of Divriği (1985), founded in the early 13th century; Hattusha (1986), the former capital of the Hittite Empire; Nemrut Dağ (1987), including the 1st century BC mausoleum of Antiochus I; Xanthos-Letoon (1988), the capital of Lycia; Hierapolis-Pamukkale (1988), including mineral forests, petrified waterfalls and the ruins of ancient baths, temples and other Greek monuments; City of Safranbolu (1994), a caravan station from the 13th century; Archaeological Site of Troy (1998); the Selimiye Mosque and its Social Complex (2011) in Edirne, the former capital of the Ottoman Empire; the Neolithic Site of Çatalhöyük (2012), vast archaeological remains of Neolithic occupation dating from 7400–6200 BC, a unique illustration of the evolution of social organization and cultural practices as humans adapted to a sedentary life; Bursa and Cumalıkızık: the birth of the Ottoman Empire (2014), a site that illustrates the creation of an urban and rural system establishing the Ottoman Empire in the early 14th century; Pergamon and its Multi-Layered Cultural Landscape (2014), a site that rises high above the Bakırçay Plain in the Aegean Region; Diyarbakır Fortress and Hevsel Gardens Cultural Landscape (2015), a site that encompasses the inner castle, the Amida Mound and the city walls of Diyarbakır; and Ephesus (2015), which is composed of Hellenistic and Roman settlements founded on new locations.

Press

In 2014 there were 80 daily newspapers with a combined average daily circulation of 4.9m. In the 2013 World Press Freedom Index compiled by Reporters Without Borders, Turkey ranked 154th out of 179 countries. In March 2011, 57 journalists were in prison—more than in any other country.

Tourism

In 2009, 25.5m. international tourists visited Turkey, making it the seventh most popular tourist destination; receipts from tourism in 2009 totalled US$21.3bn.

Festivals

Republic Day is on 29 Oct. The most important Islamic festivals are Şeker Bayramı ('sugar festival', Eid al-Fitr) at the end of Ramadan and Kurban Bayramı (Eid al-Adha). Their dates vary depending on the Islamic calendar. İstanbul hosts a variety of festivals including International İstanbul Film Festival (April), the One Love music festival (June), the International İstanbul Music Festival (June), International İstanbul Jazz Festival (July) and the Rock'n Coke music festival (July). Aspendos International Opera and Ballet Festival takes place in Antalya in June–July.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Until 1917 Russian Central Asia was divided politically into the Khanate of Khiva, the Emirate of Bokhara and the Governor-Generalship of Turkestan. The Khan of Khiva was deposed in Feb. 1920 and a People's Soviet Republic was set up. In Aug. 1920 the Amir of Bokhara suffered the same fate. The former Governor-Generalship of Turkestan was constituted an Autonomous Soviet Socialist Republic within the RSFSR on 11 April 1921. In the autumn of 1924 the Soviets of the Turkestan, Bokhara and Khiva Republics decided to redistribute their territories on a nationality basis. The redistribution was completed in May 1925 when the new states of Uzbekistan, Turkmenistan and Tadzhikistan were accepted into the USSR as Union Republics. Following the break-up of the Soviet Union, Turkmenistan declared independence in Oct. 1991. Saparmurad Niyazov was elected president and founded the Democratic Party of Turkmenistan, the country's only legal party. Also prime minister and supreme commander of the armed forces, parliament proclaimed Niyazov head of state for life in Dec. 1999. He held the official title of 'Turkmenbashi', leader of all Turkmen. In July 2000 Niyazov introduced a law requiring all officials to speak Turkmen. He died of a heart attack in Dec. 2006. Gurbanguly Berdimukhammedov succeeded him.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Turkmenistan is bounded in the north by Kazakhstan, in the north and northeast by Uzbekistan, in the southeast by Afghanistan, in the southwest by Iran and in the west by the Caspian Sea. Area, 448,100 sq. km (186,400 sq. miles). The 1995 census population was 4,483,251; density 10.0 per sq. km. Estimate, 2010, 5-04m. A census was carried out in 2012 but as at March 2016 the results had yet to be officially released, although some data was unofficially published online in Feb. 2015. The vast majority of citizens are Turkmen, but there are some Russians and Uzbeks. A dual-citizenship treaty between Turkmenistan and Russia has been rescinded. In 2011, 50.0% of the population lived in rural areas.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 5-37m.

There are five administrative regions (velayaty): Ahal, Balkan, Dashoguz, Lebap and Mary, comprising 42 rural districts, 15 towns and 74 urban settlements. The capital is Ashgabat (formerly Ashkhabad; 2012 estimated population, 701,000); other large towns are Turkmenabat (formerly Chardzhou), Mary (Merv), Balkanabad (Nebit-Dag) and Dashoguz.

The official language is Turkmen, spoken by 77% of the population; Uzbek is spoken by 9% and Russian by 7%.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2008 estimates: births, 111,000; deaths, 39,000. Estimated rates, 2008 (per 1,000 population): births, 21.9; deaths, 7.7. Annual population growth rate, 2000-08, 1.4%. Life expectancy, 2013: 61.4 years for males and 69.8 for females. Infant mortality, 2010, 47 per 1,000 live births; fertility rate, 2008, 2.5 births per woman.

CLIMATE

The summers are warm to hot but the humidity is relatively low. The winters are cold but generally dry and sunny over most of the country. Ashgabat, Jan. -1°C, July 25°C. Annual rainfall 375 mm.

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

A new constitution was adopted on 26 Sept. 2008. It provided for a head of state who is elected by popular vote for a five-year term and abolished the 2,500-member Khalk Maslakhaty (People's Council), formerly the highest representative body. The Majlis (Assembly), which now serves as the sole legislative body, was increased from 65 to 125 members. The constitution also allows for a multiparty system.

At a referendum on 16 Jan. 1994, 99.99% of votes cast were in favour of prolonging President Niyazov's term of office to 2002. In 1999 the Khalk Maslakhaty declared him president for life.

National Anthem

'Turkmenbasyn guran beyik binasy' ('The country which Turkmenbashi has built'); composed by Veli Muhatov.

RECENT ELECTIONS

In the presidential election of 12 Feb. 2012 incumbent Gurbanguly Berdimukhammedov was re-elected with 97.0% of the vote (89.2% in 2007), ahead of Yarmukhammet Orazgulyev with 1.2%. Turnout was 96.3%.

Majlis elections were held on 15 Dec. 2013. Despite being the first multi-party elections to take place in the country's history, all participating parties pledged loyalty to President Gurbanguly Berdimukhammedov before the polls, with opponents of the regime remaining in exile. The Democratic Party won 47 of 125 seats, the Organization of Trade Unions of Turkmenistan 33, Women's Union of Turkmenistan 16, Party of Industrialists and Entrepreneurs 14 and Magtymguly Youth Organisation 8; groups of citizens took seven seats.

CURRENT LEADERS

Gurbanguly Berdymukhammedov

Position

President

Introduction

Gurbanguly Berdymukhammedov came to power in 2006 following the death of President Saparmurad Niyazov, known as Turkmenbashi. Berdymukhammedov had served as minister of health in Niyazov's government since 1997, implementing the closure of rural hospitals. Though not initially regarded as a frontrunner for the presidency, he became acting president when Niyazov's constitutional successor, Ovezgeldi Atayev, was charged with criminal offences. Having won the Feb. 2007 presidential election, Berdymukhammedov began to strengthen ties with the outside world and introduced some constitutional reforms, although critics questioned their democratic validity. He was re-elected in Feb. 2012.

Early Life

Berdymukhammedov was born in Babaarap village in the region of Ashgabat in 1957. He graduated in dentistry from the Turkmen state medical institute in 1979 and later completed a PhD in medical sciences in Moscow. In 1995 he was appointed head of the dentistry centre of the ministry of health and became associate professor and dean of the dentistry faculty of the state medical institute. He was Niyazov's personal dentist and in 1997 entered political life as the minister for health and the medical industry.

In April 2001 Berdymukhammedov was appointed deputy chairman of the council of ministers. Under Niyazov's autocratic regime the health service suffered acute financial problems. In April 2004 Niyazov announced that since state healthcare workers were not being paid, Berdymukhammedov would also forfeit his pay for three months. In the same year Berdymukhammedov implemented drastic cuts, closing all rural hospitals and sacking 15,000 healthcare workers, replacing them with untrained army conscripts.

When Niyazov died of a heart attack on 21 Dec. 2006, the Turkmen constitution provided for Ovezgeldi Atayev, chairman of the Khalk Maslakhaty (People's Council), to become acting president. However, Berdymukhammedov assumed the role and announced that Atayev was the subject of criminal investigation. On 26 Dec. an extraordinary session of the Khalk Maslakhaty amended the constitution to allow the acting president to stand in presidential elections. It also blocked the candidacy of leading opposition figures based abroad.

Berdymukhammedov was said to have the backing of Akmurad Rejepov, head of the presidential security service, and although five other candidates stood in the elections, his victory was widely predicted. During his campaign Berdymukhammedov promised to reform the agricultural sector and to improve living conditions. He pledged that the government would continue to provide free natural gas, electricity, salt and water, and that salaries and pensions would be increased regularly.

Career in Office

On 11 Feb. 2007 Berdymukhammedov was elected president with nearly 90% of the vote. While making no decisive break with Niyazov's isolationist policies, there were early indications of a more outward-looking stance. Representatives of many foreign governments attended his inauguration and he subsequently received delegations from China, Russia and the USA. He confirmed that Turkmenistan would honour its gas contracts with Russia and moved towards stronger relations with neighbouring Afghanistan. The government also announced that it was reinforcing commercial ties with Iran.

Berdymukhammedov extended the period of formal schooling, reintroduced foreign languages to the curriculum and lifted restrictions on travel within Turkmenistan. He raised the prospect of reopening rural hospitals and promised to widen Internet access (available to only 1% of the population when he came to power). However, these reforms would be dependent on an economic upturn. A new constitution was adopted in Sept. 2008 that increased the number of parliamentary seats to 125 and increased the influence of the Majlis. Nevertheless, Berdymukhammedov's hold on power was reinforced as parliamentary elections in Dec. that year returned an overwhelming number of candidates from his dominant Democratic Party.

The cult of personality around the presidency has lessened under Berdymukhammedov, but the government retains tight control over political organizations. It also continues to attract criticism for human rights and a lack of transparency in the electoral system, under which the president was returned for a second term in Feb. 2012.

The government has sought to diversify its gas markets and break free of Russian dominance of the export routes. An export pipeline to China was inaugurated in Dec. 2009 and in Jan. 2010 a second pipeline to Iran opened.

In Aug. 2013 Berdymukhammedov announced that he was stepping down as leader of the ruling DP while in office, stating that he wanted to be above partisan politics while promoting a multiparty political system. Parliamentary elections in Dec. 2013 were won by the DP and parties sympathetic to the president, although human rights campaigners were critical of the results. In Jan. 2015, amid a slump in oil and gas prices, the central bank devalued the currency by 19% against the US dollar (the first such change since May 2008) which was expected to prompt an increase in inflation and constrain consumer demand.

DEFENCE

Conscription is compulsory for two years. Defence expenditure in 2012 totalled US$539m. (US$107 per capita), representing 1.6% of GDP.

Army

In 2011 the Army was 18,500-strong.

Navy

In 2011 the Navy numbered 500 and operated from a minor base at Turkmenbashi on the Caspian Sea with six patrol and coastal combatants. The Caspian Sea Flotilla is operating as a joint Russian, Kazakhstani and Turkmenistani flotilla under Russian command. It is based at Astrakhan.

Air Force

The Air Force, with 3,000 personnel (including Air Defence), had 94 combat-capable aircraft in 2011 including Su-17s and MiG-29s.

ECONOMY

In 2009 agriculture accounted for 12.3% of GDP, industry 53.5% and services 34.2%.

Overview

Turkmenistan is home to the world's fourth largest oil and gas reserves. Hydrocarbons comprise 80% of exports and are the chief factor in the country's recent economic upturn. Other major exports include textiles and raw cotton. Despite a privatization programme launched in 1994, most businesses remain state-run and foreign investment levels are low.

Turkmenistan agreed to supply natural gas to Russia in 2003 and to China and Iran in 2005. However, exports were held back by a lack of export routes and a reliance on Russian pipelines. To moderate Russia's influence, a pipeline to China opened in 2009 and one to Iran came the following year.

Official figures show growth averaged 17% annually in the first decade of the century but research by international organizations suggest these figures have been inflated. Nevertheless, GDP growth approximately tripled, driven by state investment in oil refineries, food processing, transportation and textiles. In 2006 the Galkynysh gas field (the world's second largest) was discovered and is expected to raise gas exports by the equivalent of 2-6% of GDP once fully operational.

Despite historically high poverty rates, social indicators have improved. The State Statistics Committee reported an 11-2% increase in wages from 2011 to 2012. In 2010 the government announced a national social economic development programme for 2011-30 aimed at modernizing infrastructure, encouraging privatization and foreign direct investment, and promoting more inclusive growth.

Currency

The unit of currency is the new manat (TMT) of 100 tenge, introduced on 1 Jan. 2009 to replace the manat (TMM) at a rate of 1 TMT = 5,000 TMM. The manat was devalued by 18% in Jan. 2015. There was inflation of 6-8% in 2013 and 6-0% in 2014.

Budget

Revenues were 10-1bn. manat in 2008 and expenditures 5-4bn. manat.

VAT is 20%.

Performance

Total GDP in 2014 was US$47.9bn. Real GDP contracted by an average of 10-5% every year between 1993 and 1997. However, a spectacular revival led to double-digit growth every year between 1999 and 2008, with the economy growing by an average of 15-3% annually. Real GDP growth was 11-1% in 2012, 10-2% in 2013 and 10-3% in 2014. The rapid growth of recent years is largely down to large-scale gas exports to Russia.

Banking and Finance

There are two types of bank in Turkmenistan—state commercial banks and joint stock open-end commercial banks. The central bank is the State Central Bank of Turkmenistan (Chairman, Merdan Annadurdyev). A government-led restructuring of the banking sector in 1999 saw the total number of banks reduced from 67 to 12 by 2002. In 2010 foreign debt totalled US$422m., equivalent to just 2-1% of GNI.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2011 accounted for 11-0 tonnes per capita.

Electricity

Installed capacity in 2011 was an estimated 3-2m. kW. Production was 17-22bn. kWh in 2011, with consumption per capita 2,873 kWh.

Oil and Gas

Turkmenistan possesses the world's fourth largest reserves of natural gas and substantial oil resources. The Galkynysh gas field, in the southeast of the country, was discovered in 2006 and is the second largest in the world. The 1,833-km Turkmenistan-China gas pipeline, taking natural gas to Xinjiang in China via Kazakhstan and Uzbekistan, was inaugurated in Dec. 2009. Oil production in 2012 was 11-0m. tonnes.

In 2014 natural gas reserves were estimated at 17-5trn. cu. metres and oil reserves (2012) at 0-6bn. bbls. In 2012 natural gas production was 64-4bn. cu. metres.

Minerals

There are reserves of coal, sulphur, magnesium, potassium, lead, barite, viterite, bromine, iodine and salt.

Agriculture

Cotton and wheat account for two-thirds of agricultural production. Barley, maize, corn, rice, wool, silk and fruit are also produced. Production of main crops (2003, in 1,000 tonnes): wheat, 2,534; seed cotton, 714; cottonseed, 480; sugar beets, 255; watermelons, 230; tomatoes, 150; cotton lint, 140; grapes, 130; rice, 110. There were approximately 1-85m. ha. of arable land in 2007 and 63,000 ha. of permanent crops.

Livestock, 2003 estimates: sheep, 6-0m.; cattle, 860,000; goats, 370,000; pigs, 45,000; chickens, 5m.

Forestry

There were 4-13m. ha. of forests (9% of the land area) in 2010.

Fisheries

There are fisheries in the Caspian Sea. The estimated total catch in 2011 was 15,000 tonnes, exclusively freshwater fish.

INDUSTRY

Main industries: oil refining, gas extraction, chemicals, manufacture of machinery, fertilizers, textiles and clothing. Output, 2007 (in tonnes): distillate fuel oil, 2,908,000; residual fuel oil, 2,020,000; petrol, 1,464,000; cement, 941,000; cotton woven fabrics (2002), 78-0m. sq. metres.

Labour

The estimated labour force in 2010 totalled 2,509,000 (53% males), up from 1,826,000 in 2000.

Turkmenistan had 15,000 people living in slavery according to the Walk Free Foundation's 2013 Global Slavery Index.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

Imports, 2013, US$16,090m.; exports, US$18,854m. Main imports: machinery and mechanical appliances, base metals and articles of base metal, transport equipment and products of the chemical or allied industries. Main exports: natural gas, petroleum products, crude oil and cotton fibre. The main import suppliers in 2010 were: Turkey (30-1%); China, including Hong Kong and Taiwan (11-5%); Russia (9-3%); United Arab Emirates (9-0%); Iran (8-5%). In 2010 the leading export markets were: Iran (32-9%); Russia (25-4%); China, including Hong Kong and Taiwan (10-1%); Georgia (6-7%); Italy (5-3%).

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

Length of roads in 2002, 58,592 km (of which 81-2% were paved). In 2006 there were 650 fatalities as a result of road accidents.

Rail

Length of railways in 2011, 3,115 km of 1,520 mm gauge. A rail link to Iran was opened in 1996. In 2008, 6-2m. passengers and 25-4m. tonnes of freight were carried.

Civil Aviation

Turkmenistan Airlines, founded in 1992, is the flag carrier. In 2005 scheduled airline traffic of Turkmenistan-based carriers flew 9-5m. km, carrying 1,899,800 passengers.

Shipping

In Jan. 2009 there were ten ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 23,000 GT. The main port is Turkmenbashi, on the Caspian Sea.

Telecommunications

In 2013 there were an estimated 6,125,000 mobile phone subscriptions (1,168.9 per 1,000 inhabitants) and an estimated 602,000 fixed telephone lines. There were an estimated 9.6 internet users for every 100 inhabitants in 2013. Internet usage was banned under the former president, Saparmurad Niyazov, and has only been available since 2007.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The population in penal institutions in 2006 was 10,953 (224 per 100,000 of national population). The death penalty was abolished in 1999 (there were over 100 executions in 1996).

Education

Free compulsory education from age seven was extended from nine years' duration to ten in 2007. The duration of higher education programmes is generally five years (longer in the case of medicine and some other disciplines). In 2003 there were 1,705 general secondary schools, 116 professional schools and 15 secondary vocational training schools. About 1,018,600 students were enrolled in general secondary education. In the same year there were approximately 65,100 teachers. In 2003, 129,000 children (24% of those eligible) were enrolled in 944 pre-schools.

In 2009 adult literacy was estimated at 99.6%.

Health

In 2006 there were 43 hospital beds per 10,000 inhabitants. There were 12,210 physicians, 703 dentistry personnel and 23,026 nursing and midwifery personnel in 2006.

Welfare

A Social Security Code was adopted in 2007. In 2010 there were 274,171 pensioners; in Jan. 2010 the minimum pension was 121 new manat a month and the maximum pension 532 new manat.

RELIGION

In 2010 an estimated 93.0% of the population were Muslims (mainly Sunnis) according to the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life, with 6.4% Christians (mainly Orthodox).

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

Turkmenistan has three sites on the UNESCO World Heritage List: the State Historical and Cultural Park 'Ancient Merv'

(inscribed on the list in 1999), the oldest and best-preserved Central Asian Silk Route city, dominated by Seljuk architecture; Kunya-Urgench (2005), the ancient capital of the Khorezem region; and the Parthian Fortresses of Nisa (2007), the site of one of the earliest and most important cities of the Parthian Empire.

Press

In 2008 there were two daily newspapers with a combined average circulation of 56,000. Approval is required from the president's office before publication. In the 2013 World Press Freedom Index compiled by Reporters Without Borders, Turkmenistan ranked 177th out of 179 countries.

Tourism

In 2005 there were 12,000 non-resident tourists.

Calendar

In Aug. 2002 then President Saparmurad Niyazov renamed the days of the week and the months, for example with Jan. becoming 'Turkmenbashi' after the president's official name, meaning 'head of all the Turkmen'. April was renamed in honour of the president's mother. Tuesday was renamed 'Young Day' and Saturday 'Spiritual Day'. However, in April 2008 President Gurbanguly Berdimukhammedov reversed his predecessor's decisions.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Formerly known as the Ellice Islands, Tuvalu is a group of nine islands in the western central Pacific. Joining the British controlled Gilbert Islands Protectorate in 1916, they became the Gilbert and Ellice Islands colony.

After the Japanese occupied the Gilbert Islands in 1942, US forces occupied the Ellice Islands. A referendum held in 1974 produced a large majority in favour of separation from the Gilbert Islands. In 1975 the Ellice Islands were renamed Tuvalu. Independence was achieved on 1 Oct. 1978. Early in 1979 the USA signed a treaty of friendship with Tuvalu and relinquished its claim to the four southern islands in return for the right to veto any other nation's request to use any of Tuvalu's islands for military purposes. In 2011 a state of emergency was declared on two occasions; the first in Jan. as a result of protests and the second in Oct. owing to a shortage of clean drinking water.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Tuvalu lies between 5° 30' and 11° S. lat. and 176° and 180° E. long. and comprises Nanumea, Nanumaga, Niutao, Nui, Vaitupu, Nukufetau, Funafuti (administrative centre; 2012 census population, 5,879), Nukulaelae and Niulakita. Population (census 2012) 10,640, excluding an estimated 1,500 who were working abroad, mainly in Nauru and Kiribati. Area approximately 26 sq. km (10 sq. miles). Density, 2012, 409 per sq. km.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 10,000.

In 2011, 50.9% of the population lived in urban areas. The population is of a Polynesian race.

The official languages are Tuvaluan and English.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2005 births (est.), 230; deaths (est.), 60. Infant mortality, 2010, 27 per 1,000 live births. Expectation of life, 2008: males, 64 years; females, 63. Annual population growth rate, 1998–2008, 0.5%; fertility rate, 2008, 3.2 births per woman.

CLIMATE

A pleasant but monotonous climate with temperatures averaging 86°F (30°C), though trade winds from the east moderate conditions for much of the year. Rainfall ranges from 120" (3,000 mm) to over 160" (4,000 mm). Funafuti, Jan. 84°F (28.9°C), July 81°F (27.2°C). Annual rainfall 160" (4,003 mm). Although the islands are north of the recognized hurricane belt they were badly hit by hurricanes in the 1990s, raising fears for the long-term future of Tuvalu as the sea level continues to rise.

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

The Head of State is the British sovereign, represented by an appointed Governor-General. The Constitution provides for a Prime Minister and the cabinet ministers to be elected from among the 15 members of the Fale I Fono (Parliament).

National Anthem

'Tuvalu mote Atua' ('Tuvalu for the Almighty'); words and tune by A. Manoa.

RECENT ELECTIONS

Parliamentary elections were held on 31 March 2015. Only non-partisans were elected as there are no political parties. On 10 April 2015 incumbent Enele Sopoaga was sworn in again as prime minister.

CURRENT GOVERNMENT

Governor-General: Sir Iakoba Taeia Italeli (sworn in 16 April 2010 and re-elected 31 March 2015).

In March 2016 the cabinet comprised:

Prime Minister, and Minister of Public Utilities and Infrastructure: Enele Sopoaga; b. 1956 (took office on 5 Aug. 2013).

Deputy Prime Minister, and Minister of Finance and Economic Development: Maatia Toafa.

Minister of Communications and Transport: Monise Laafai. Education, Youth and Sports: Fauoa Maani. Foreign Affairs, Trade, Tourism, Environment and Labour: Taukelina Finikaso. Health: Satini Tulaga Manuella. Home Affairs and Rural Development: Namoliki Sualiki Neemia. Natural Resources: Elisala Pita.

Speaker: Otinielu Tausi.

CURRENT LEADERS

Enele Sopoaga

Position

Prime Minister

Introduction

Enele Sopoaga was sworn in as prime minister on 5 Aug. 2013, ending a constitutional crisis in which his predecessor, Willy Telavi, was dismissed from office by the governor-general. Sopoaga's elder brother, Saufatu, had served as prime minister between 2002 and 2004. Enele was returned for a second term of office following parliamentary elections in March 2015.

Early Life

Born on 10 Feb. 1956, Sopoaga began his civil service career in 1980 in the ministry of social services. Awarded a post-graduate certificate in diplomatic studies by Oxford University in the UK in 1990, he moved to the ministry of foreign affairs in 1992 and became its head. In addition, he served as Tuvalu's ambassador to the UN and as vice chairman of the Alliance of Small Island States (which he represented at the 2009 UN Climate Change Conference in Copenhagen). His reputation as a climate change spokesman was reinforced when he headed the Tuvaluan delegation to the Cancún climate change conference in 2010.

He first stood for election to the non-partisan national parliament at the 2010 general election and was appointed minister of foreign affairs, environment and labour in the government of Maatia Toafa. On 21 Dec. 2010, after Toafa was brought down by a motion of no confidence, Sopoaga challenged for the premiership but was narrowly defeated by Willy Telavi. Installed as leader of the opposition, Sopoaga protested that a culture of censorship existed in the Tuvaluan media, prompting him to set up the Tala o Matagi newspaper in 2011.

A political crisis was sparked by the death of the finance minister, Lotoala Metia, in Dec. 2012. Prime Minister Telavi, who no longer commanded a majority, declined to recall parliament on the grounds that he was only legally obliged to convene the house once a year. Responding to calls from the opposition, Governor-General Jakoba Italeli (who represents Queen Elizabeth II, the country's head of state) exercised his reserve powers in forcing parliament to meet and debate a no-confidence motion. Telavi reacted by writing to Queen Elizabeth to inform her that he was dismissing Italeli.

The vote of no confidence nonetheless went ahead on 2 Aug. 2013, with Telavi's government defeated by eight votes to four. On 4 Aug. parliament elected Sopoaga as prime minister and he was sworn in the following day.

Career in Office

At the Sept. 2013 Pacific Islands Forum summit in Majuro in the Marshall Islands, Sopoaga urged the international community to co-ordinate an effective response to climate change and the threat it poses to low-lying countries including Tuvalu. He was sworn in as prime minister again in April 2015 following elections in March at the head of a cabinet unchanged in key positions.

ECONOMY

Agriculture, forestry and fishing contributed 23.8% to GDP in 2012; followed by finance and real estate, 19.4%; services, 17.2%; public administration and defence, 15.1%; trade, hotels and restaurants, 11.3%.

Currency

The unit of currency is the Australian dollar although Tuvaluan coins up to $A1 are in local circulation. Inflation was 2.0% in 2013 and 3.3% in 2014.

Budget

In 2008 revenues totalled $A45.4m. and expenditures $A42.9m.

Performance

The economy grew by 0.2% in 2012, 1.3% in 2013 and 2.2% in 2014. In 2014 total GDP was US$38m.

Banking and Finance

The Tuvalu National Bank was established at Funafuti in 1980, and is a joint venture between the Tuvalu government and Westpac International. There is also a development bank.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Electricity

Installed capacity was an estimated 2,000 kW in 2011; production was around 5m. kWh.

Agriculture

Coconut palms are the main crop. Production of coconuts (2009 estimate), 1,700 tonnes. Fruit and vegetables are grown for local consumption. Livestock, 2009 estimate: pigs, 13,600; chickens, 45,000.

Fisheries

Total catch, 2009, 5,097 tonnes. A seamount was discovered in Tuvaluan waters in 1991 and is a good location for deep-sea fish. The sale of fishing licences to American, Japanese, New Zealand, South Korean and Taiwanese fleets provides a significant source of income, in some years contributing up to 50% of total government revenue.

INDUSTRY

Small amounts of copra, handicrafts and garments are produced.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

Main sources of income are copra, stamps, handicrafts and remittances from Tuvaluans abroad. 2007 imports, $A18.5m.; 2007 exports, $A0.1m. Leading import suppliers are Australia, China and Japan. Significant export destinations are Australia, India and Indonesia.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

In 2002 there were 20 km of roads.

Civil Aviation

In 2010 Air Pacific operated two flights a week from Funafuti International to Suva in Fiji.

Shipping

Funafuti is the only port and a deep-water wharf was opened in 1980. In Jan. 2009 there were 96 ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 1.03m. GT. Of the 96 vessels registered, 40 were oil tankers, 36 general cargo ships, nine chemical tankers, five bulk carriers, four passenger ships and two container ships. Tuvalu is a 'flag of convenience' country.

Telecommunications

In 2013 there were approximately 1,450 main telephone lines in operation. There were an estimated 3,400 mobile phone subscriptions, and some 37.0% of the population used the internet that year.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

There is a High Court presided over by the Chief Justice of Fiji. A Court of Appeal is constituted if required. There are also eight Island Courts with limited jurisdiction.

Education

There were 1,872 pupils at ten primary schools in 2014 and 750 pupils at two secondary schools. Education is free and compulsory from the ages of six to 15. There is a Maritime Training School at Funafuti, and the University of the South Pacific, based in Fiji, has an extension centre at Funafuti.

In 2012 the education budget represented 1.2% of GDP.

Health

In 2002 there was one central hospital situated at Funafuti and clinics on each of the other eight islands; there were seven doctors and 34 nurses.

RELIGION

The majority of the population are Protestants who are members of the Congregational Christian Church of Tuvalu (also known as the Church of Tuvalu). There are also small numbers of Roman Catholics, Seventh-day Adventists, Jehovah's Witnesses, Bahá'ís, Muslims and Latter-day Saints (Mormons).

CULTURE

Press

The Government Broadcasting and Information Division produces Tuvalu Echoes, a fortnightly publication, and Te Lama, a monthly religious publication.

Tourism

There were 1,232 visitor arrivals in 2011.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Bantu-speaking mixed farmers first migrated into southwest Uganda from the west around 500 BC. There is evidence that they smelted iron for tools and weapons. In the following centuries Nilotic-speaking pastoralists entered northern Uganda from the upper Nile valley (now southern Sudan). By AD 1300 several kingdoms (the Chwezi states) had been established in southern Uganda. In 1500 Nilotic-speaking Luo people invaded the Chwezi states and established the kingdoms of Buganda, Bunyoro and Ankole. At this time, northern Uganda became home to the Alur and Acholi ethnic groups. During the 17th century Bunyoro was southern Uganda's most powerful state, controlling an area that stretched into present-day Rwanda and Tanzania. From about 1700 the kingdom of Buganda expanded (largely at the expense of Bunyoro), and a century later it dominated a large territory bordering Lake Victoria from the Victoria Nile to the Kagera River. The kabaka (king) maintained a large court and a powerful army and traded in cattle, ivory and slaves.

Arab traders from Zanzibar on Africa's east coast reached Lake Victoria by 1844. A prominent trader, Ahmad bin Ibrahim, introduced the kabaka to foreign trade; imported cloth and firearms were exchanged for ivory and slaves. Ibrahim also introduced Islam to the region. In 1862 John Speke, a British explorer who was attempting to find the source of the Nile, became the first European to visit Buganda, by then a highly developed state supported by an army of more than 150,000 and a navy.

He met with Kabaka Mutesa I; as did Henry Stanley, who reached Buganda in 1875. Mutesa, fearful of attacks from Egypt, agreed to Stanley's proposal to allow Christian missionaries to enter his realm. Members of the British Protestant Church Missionary Society arrived in 1877 and were followed two years later by representatives of the French Roman Catholic White Fathers. Both were successful in attracting converts but by the 1880s they were in fierce competition. Trade with the Indian Ocean ports continued, bringing with it greater Islamic influence.

Mutesa was succeeded by Mwanga in 1884. He was wary of the new foreign ideologies and attempted to halt their spread but was deposed by Christian and Muslim converts in 1888. He was later reinstated but with considerably reduced power and influence. In 1889 Mwanga was visited by Carl Peters, a German doctor, and the kabaka subsequently signed a treaty of friendship with Germany. Britain was concerned by the growth of German influence and the potential threat to its position on the Nile. In 1890 the two European powers signed a treaty giving Britain rights to what was to become Uganda and giving Germany control over land to the southeast (now Tanzania). Frederick Lugard, acting as an agent of the Imperial British East Africa Company (IBEAC), arrived in Buganda with a detachment of troops and in 1892 he backed Protestant converts in an attack on the French Catholic mission.

British Rule

In 1894 Britain made Uganda a protectorate. Allying with the Protestant Baganda chiefs, the British set about conquering the rest of the country, assisted by Nubian mercenary troops, formerly in the service of the khedive of Egypt. The British deposed Mwanga and replaced him with his infant son Daudi Chwa. Bunyoro had been spared the religious civil wars of Buganda and was firmly united by its king, Kabarega. Following five years of conflict, the British occupied Bunyoro and conquered Acholi and the northern region. Other African chiefdoms, such as Ankole in the southwest, signed treaties with the British, as did the chiefdoms of Busoga. In 1900 an agreement was signed between the British administration under Sir Harry Johnston and Buganda, giving the kingdom considerable autonomy and transforming it into a constitutional monarchy controlled largely by Protestant chiefs. Half of Bunyoro's conquered territory was also awarded to Buganda, including the historic heartland of the kingdom containing several royal tombs. Buganda doubled in size from ten to 20 counties (sazas), but the 'lost counties' of Bunyoro remained a grievance.

Economic Development

In 1901 a railway from Mombasa on the Indian Ocean reached Kisumu, on Lake Victoria, connected by boat with Uganda. The railway was later extended to Kampala. The railway had cost far more than was anticipated and the British, anxious for a return on their investment, turned to cotton to provide raw materials for British mills. Buganda, with its strategic location on the north shore of Lake Victoria, reaped the benefits of cotton growing; it soon became the major export crop and made the Buganda kingdom relatively prosperous. Coffee and sugar production accelerated in the 1920s. The country attracted few permanent European settlers and the cash crops were mostly produced by African smallholders, rather than the plantation system used in other colonies. Many South Asians were encouraged to settle in Uganda, where they played a leading role in the country's commerce. In 1921 a legislative council for the protectorate was established (although its first African member was admitted only in 1945).

The colonial government regulated the buying and processing of cash crops, setting prices and reserving the role of intermediary for Asians, who were thought to be more efficient. The British and Asians repelled African attempts to break into cotton ginning, leading to resentment among the Baganda. In addition, on the Asian-owned sugar plantations established in the 1920s, labour for sugarcane and other cash crops was increasingly provided by migrants from the fringes of Uganda and beyond. In 1949 discontented Baganda rioted and burned down the houses of pro-government chiefs in Kampala. The rioters had three demands: the right to bypass government price controls on the sales of cotton, the removal of the Asian monopoly over cotton ginning, and the right to have their own representatives in local government. They were also critical of the young kabaka, Frederick Walugembe Mutesa II. The British governor, Sir John Hall, regarded the riots as the work of communist-inspired agitators such as the Uganda African Farmers Union (UAFU), founded by I. K. Musazi in 1947. The UAFU was banned and none of the requested reforms were implemented. Musazi's Uganda National Congress replaced the UAFU in 1952 but remained a discussion group rather than an organized political party.

Meanwhile, the British began to prepare for an independent Uganda. Britain's post-war withdrawal from India, nationalism in West Africa and a more liberal philosophy all had an effect. Sir Andrew Cohen was installed as governor in 1952 and pursued economic and political reforms: removing obstacles to African cotton ginning, encouraging co-operatives, establishing the Uganda Development Corporation and reorganizing the Legislative Council to include Africans elected from districts across the country for the first time. There was also talk of a future federation of east African territories (Kenya, Uganda and Tanganyika). However, there was resistance among the Baganda, who feared the erosion of their power-base. Mutesa II refused to co-operate with Cohen's plan for an integrated Buganda. Cohen deported him to exile in London, setting off a storm of protest. Two years later Mutesa II was reinstated, officially as a constitutional monarch, but in reality having considerable political clout. In 1960 a political organizer from Lango, Milton Obote, formed a new party, the Uganda People's Congress (UPC), as a coalition of all those who opposed Buganda dominance (apart from the Catholic-dominated Democratic Party (DP)).

Independence

On 9 Oct. 1962 Uganda became independent, with Obote as prime minister and the kabaka as head of state. Buganda was given considerable autonomy. In 1963 Uganda became a republic and Mutesa II was elected president. The first years of independence were dominated by a struggle between the central government and Buganda. In 1966 Obote introduced a new constitution that ended Buganda's autonomy and restored the 'lost counties' to the Bunyoro. Obote then captured the kabaka's palace at Mengo and forced the kabaka to flee the country. In 1967 a new constitution was introduced giving the central government—especially the president—greater power and dividing Buganda into four districts. The traditional kingships were also abolished (in the case of Buganda retroactive to 1966). The 1960s saw a steady build-up of military power in Uganda, under Major Gen. Idi Amin Dada.

In Jan. 1971 Obote was deposed in a coup by Idi Amin. Amin was faced with opposition within the army by officers and troops loyal to Obote but by the end of 1971 he was in firm control. In 1972 he ordered Asians who were not citizens of Uganda to leave the country and within three months all 60,000 had left, most of them for Britain. Their expulsion hit the Ugandan economy hard. Amin's rule became increasingly dictatorial and brutal; it is estimated that over 300,000 Ugandans were killed during the 1970s. His corrupt administration led to divisions in the military and a number of coup attempts. Israel conducted a successful raid on the Entebbe airport in 1976 to rescue passengers on a plane hijacked by Palestinian terrorists. Amin's expulsion of Israeli technicians won him the support of Arab nations such as Libya.

In 1976 Amin declared himself president for life and two years later he invaded Tanzania in an attempt to annex the Kagera region. The following year Tanzania launched a successful counter-invasion, unifying anti-Amin forces under the Uganda National Liberation Front (UNLF). Amin's forces were driven out and he fled to exile in Saudi Arabia. Tanzania left an occupation force in Uganda. Yusufu Lule was installed as president but was quickly replaced by Godfrey Binaisa, who was then overthrown in a military coup on 10 May 1980, headed by Paulo Muwanga. Shortly after the Muwanga 1980 coup, Obote made a triumphant return from Tanzania and rallied his former UPC supporters. His main opponents were the DP, led by Paul Kawanga Ssemogerere. The DP were announced as winners on 10 Dec. 1980 but Muwanga seized control of the Electoral Commission and announced a UPC victory 18 hours later, verified by the Commonwealth Observer Group.

In Feb. 1981, shortly after the new Obote government took office, with Paulo Muwanga as vice-president and minister of defence, a former Military Commission member, Yoweri Museveni, and his armed supporters declared themselves the National Resistance Army (NRA). Museveni vowed to overthrow Obote by means of a popular rebellion, and what became known as 'the war in the bush' began. Approximately 200,000 Ugandans sought refuge in neighbouring Rwanda, Zaïre and Sudan. In 1985 a military coup deposed Obote and Lieut.-Gen. Tito Okello became head of state. When it was not given a role in the new regime, the NRA continued its guerrilla campaign. It took Kampala in 1986 and Museveni became the new president. He concentrated on rebuilding the ruined economy by cutting back the army and civil service and reforming agriculture and industry. In 1993 Museveni permitted the restoration of traditional kings, including Ronald Muwenda Mutebi II as kabaka. In May 1996 Museveni was returned to office in the country's first direct presidential elections. A new parliament, chosen in elections in June, was dominated by Museveni supporters.

Museveni was re-elected in March 2001, following a period of relative stability and economic growth. However, his popularity was diminished by discontent with Uganda's intervention in the Democratic Republic of the Congo's (formerly Zaïre) civil war and signs of corruption in the government. Uganda's forces were largely withdrawn from the Democratic Republic of the Congo by the end of 2002. In 2005 the International Court in The Hague ordered Uganda to pay compensation to the DRC for its activities there between 1998 and 2003.

In Feb. 2006 Museveni won a new presidential term. In July 2006 peace talks commenced between the government and the Lord's Resistance Army (LRA), a fanatically religious group led by Joseph Kony that has terrorized northern Uganda for many years. A ceasefire was declared in Aug. 2006 but subsequent talks have been marred by disputes and walkouts.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Uganda is bounded in the north by South Sudan, in the east by Kenya, in the south by Tanzania and Rwanda, and the west by the Democratic Republic of the Congo. Total area 241,550 sq. km, including 41,740 sq. km of inland waters.

The 2014 provisional census population was 34,856,813 (16,935,456 males, 17,921,357 females); density, 174 per sq. km. The largest city is Kampala, the capital (provisional census population of 1,516,210 in 2014). Other major towns are Kira, Mbarara, Mukono, Gulu, Nansana, Masaka and Kasese. In 2011, 13.5% of the population lived in urban areas.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 39.03m.

The country is administratively divided into one city and 111 districts, which are grouped in four geographical regions (which do not have administrative status). Area and population of the regions in 2002 (census) and 2014 (census, provisional):

Region	Area in sq. km	2002 population (in 1,000)	2014 population (in 1,000)
Central Region	61,510	6,575.4	9,579.1
Eastern Region	39,953	6,204.9	9,095.0

Region	Area in sq. km	2002 population (in 1,000)	2014 population (in 1,000)
Northern Region	84,658	5,363.7	7,230.7
Western Region	54,917	6,298.1	8,939.4

The official languages are English and (since 2005) Kiswahili. About 70% of the population speak Bantu languages; Nilotic languages are spoken in the north and east.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2008 estimates: births, 1,461,000; deaths, 401,000. Rates, 2008 estimates (per 1,000 population): births, 46.2; deaths, 12.7. Uganda has one of the youngest populations of any country, with 76% of the population under the age of 30 and 48% under 15. Uganda's life expectancy at birth in 2013 was 58.0 years for males and 60.4 years for females. Life expectancy declined dramatically until the late 1990s, largely owing to the huge number of people in the country with HIV. However, for both males and females expectation of life is now starting to rise again. Annual population growth rate, 2000–08, 3.2%. Infant mortality, 2010, 63 per 1,000 live births; fertility rate, 2008, 6.3 births per woman.

CLIMATE

Although in equatorial latitudes, the climate is more tropical because of its elevation, and is characterized by two distinct rainy seasons, March–May and Sept.–Nov. In comparison, June–Aug. and Dec.–Feb. are relatively dry. Temperatures vary little over the year. Kampala, Jan. 74°F (23.3°C), July 70°F (21.1°C). Annual rainfall 46.5" (1,180 mm). Entebbe, Jan. 72°F (22.2°C), July 69°F (20.6°C). Annual rainfall 63.9" (1,624 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

The President is head of state and head of government, and is elected for a five-year term by adult suffrage. In Aug. 2005 Parliament amended the constitution to allow an incumbent to hold office for more than two terms, thus enabling President Museveni to serve another term in office. Having lapsed in 1966, the kabakaship was revived as a ceremonial office in 1993. Ronald Muwenda Mutebi (b. 13 April 1955) was crowned Mutebi II, 36th Kabaka, on 31 July 1993.

Until 1994 the national legislature was the 278-member National Resistance Council, but this was replaced by a 284-member Constituent Assembly in March 1994. A new constitution was adopted on 8 Oct. 1995 and the Constituent Assembly dissolved. Uganda's unicameral Parliament now consists of 427 members (290 members directly elected and 137 indirectly elected from special interest groups—including women and the army). A referendum on the return of multi-party democracy was held on 29 June 2000, but 88% of voters supported President Museveni's 'no-party' Movement system of government. Turnout was 51%. In Feb. 2003 President Museveni pledged to lift the ban on political parties. In a referendum held on 28 July 2005, 92.4% of voters backed the restoration of a multi-party political system, although the opposition called for a boycott. Formerly the constitution limited the president to two terms but in July 2005 parliament voted to lift the restriction on the number of times that the president may be re-elected.

National Anthem

'Oh, Uganda, may God uphold thee'; words and tune by G. W. Kakoma.

RECENT ELECTIONS

Presidential elections were held on 18 Feb. 2016. President Museveni was re-elected winning 60.6% of votes cast, with his main rival, Kizza Besigye, receiving 35.6% of the vote. There were six other candidates. Turnout was 67.6%.

Parliamentary elections were held on the same day. The National Resistance Movement won 279 seats, the Forum for Democratic Change 34, the Democratic Party 11, Uganda People's Congress 9 and the Conservative Party and the Justice Forum both gained one seat each. 37 seats went to independents. Turnout was 59.3%.

CURRENT LEADERS

Yoweri Museveni

Position

President

Introduction

Yoweri Museveni became president of Uganda in 1986 and has been largely credited with transforming the country's economy after the years of misrule by Idi Amin Dada and Milton Obote. He won the first direct presidential elections in 1996 and was re-elected in 2001. In July 2005 a national referendum approved the lifting of restrictions on multi-party politics (in force since Museveni came to power) and the National Assembly abolished a constitutional limit on presidential terms. He won further terms in Feb. 2006, Feb. 2011 and Feb. 2016. His government has been in faltering talks with the Lord's Resistance Army (LRA) since 2006 in an attempt to end the long-standing conflict with the rebel group.

Early Life

Yoweri Kaguta Museveni was born in 1944 in Ankole, western Uganda, where he attended Mbarara High School and Ntare School. He studied economics and political science at the University of Dar es Salaam, Tanzania, graduating in 1970. While at university Museveni was politically active and became the chairman of a leftist student group linked to African liberation movements. In 1971 Idi Amin Dada came to power in Uganda and Museveni went back to Tanzania. He was a founder of the Front for National Salvation, one of the rebel groups that overthrew Amin in 1979. Museveni held various ministerial posts before running for president in 1980. Defeated by Milton Obote, he formed the National Resistance Army, which took power on 26 Jan. 1986 when Museveni declared himself president and minister of defence.

Career in Office

For much of his presidency, Museveni has been favoured by Western nations and foreign aid donors for opening up the Ugandan economy and reducing poverty. Primary school education has increased markedly and, thanks to anti-AIDS campaigns, he has succeeded in reducing HIV levels. However, Museveni's image has been tarnished internationally by Ugandan military interference in neighbouring Democratic Republic of the Congo and by human rights concerns.

After coming to power, Museveni claimed that political parties divided poor countries like Uganda into ethnic, religious and tribal groups. His preferred system therefore had individuals competing for political office on individual merit. However, after 2001 calls for a return to multi-party democracy in Uganda became more persistent, and this was approved in a national referendum in July 2005, although the turnout was low. Museveni's government nevertheless supported the restoration. Parliament meanwhile voted to lift the constitutional limit on the office of president. Museveni stood for re-election in Feb. 2006 and won a further term with almost 60% of the vote.

In Oct. 2005 Kizza Besigye—Museveni's main opposition rival in the 2001 presidential poll which had been tainted by violence—returned to Uganda from exile in South Africa to contest the 2006 elections. His subsequent arrest for treason provoked violent street protests before his release on bail in Jan. 2006. Meanwhile, concern over alleged human rights abuses by Museveni's government led the UK and other European countries to suspend direct development aid in Dec. 2005. Britain later agreed to resume aid in Nov. 2007 at the biennial Commonwealth Heads of Government conference hosted by Museveni in Kampala.

In July 2006 the government opened peace talks with the rebel LRA, which has conducted an insurgency in northern Uganda since the 1980s involving atrocities against the local population. A truce was signed in Aug. that year, but subsequent political progress was limited amid reported divisions within the LRA itself. In early 2008 the LRA announced that its leader, Joseph Kony, was ready to sign a peace agreement. Optimism proved unfounded, however, leading to a new offensive in Dec. against the rebels by troops from Uganda, Sudan and the Democratic Republic of the Congo. In Jan. 2009 the LRA called for a new ceasefire and in March Ugandan troops ended their offensive. Museveni's government claimed that the campaign had seriously hampered LRA capabilities and also rescued many kidnap victims. The LRA has nevertheless remained a destabilizing force in the region.

Following the announcement in Jan. 2009 of a significant oil discovery in Uganda by a British exploration company, Museveni said that the income from the oil could transform the country's economy and development. Subsequent allegations of bribery in the award of oil contracts led parliament to suspend new oil deals in Oct. 2011 and Museveni to publicly reject claims that government ministers were engaged in corrupt practices. At the same time, however, Sam Kutesa resigned as foreign minister ahead of an investigation (although he was reinstated in Aug. 2012).

In Sept. 2009 there were riots in Kampala by supporters of Ronald Mutebi, the king of Buganda (one of five ancient kingdoms that had been restored by Museveni) and leader of Uganda's largest ethnic group. Tensions between Museveni's government and Buganda grew when parliament passed new land legislation that the king had opposed because it eroded his ownership rights.

In Dec. 2009 the National Resistance Movement endorsed Museveni as its candidate for the presidential election in Feb. 2011. He secured a further term, taking 68% of the vote, but Kizza Besigye, his main challenger again, rejected the result amid claims of vote-rigging. In April and May Besigye organized opposition protests in Kampala, partly in reaction to rising food and fuel prices, but they were met with a heavy-handed response by security forces and Besigye himself was attacked and injured.

In late 2012 there were further allegations from the United Nations of Ugandan support for rebel forces opposed to the Kabila regime in the Democratic Republic of the Congo. In Nov. the Ugandan government responded by declaring that its troops would be withdrawn from UN-sponsored peacekeeping missions. Museveni did, however, sign a UN-brokered international accord in Feb. 2013 pledging non-interference in its neighbour's affairs.

In Dec. 2013 the Ugandan parliament passed legislation toughening penalties, to include life imprisonment, for homosexual behaviour. Museveni ratified the bill in Feb. 2014 despite international criticism and cuts in aid funding, but in Aug. the constitutional court ruled the law null and void.

In Sept. 2014 Museveni sacked Prime Minister Amama Mbabazi amid reported divisions within the National Resistance Movement and replaced him with Ruhakana Rugunda, previously the health minister. Mbabazi subsequently stood unsuccessfully against Museveni in the presidential elections held in Feb. 2016, when Museveni secured another landslide victory.

DEFENCE

Defence expenditure in 2013 totalled US$342m. (US$10 per capita), representing 1.6% of GDP.

Army

The Uganda People's Defence Forces (UPDF) had a strength estimated at 40,000–45,000 in 2011. There is a Border Defence Unit about 600-strong and local defence units estimated at 10,000.

Navy

There is a Marine unit of the police (about 400-strong in 2011).

Air Force

In 2011 the UPDF Air Wing operated 14 combat-capable aircraft (although the serviceability of some was in doubt) and one attack helicopter. There was also a police air wing around 800-strong.

INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

In Nov. 1999 Uganda, Tanzania and Kenya created a new East African Community to develop East African trade, tourism and industry and to lay the foundations for a future common market and political federation.

ECONOMY

In 2010 agriculture accounted for 24.2% of GDP, industry 25.5% and services 50.3%.

Overview

Agriculture is the main economic driver, employing 80% of the population. Coffee is the leading export commodity, followed by fish and related products. The economy grew at an annual average rate of 7.1% from 1992 to 2011. Inflation was 14.0% in 2012, although measures to keep it under control (including increased credit flow and a reduction in government spending) prompted a slowdown in growth to 2.6% that year, the lowest rate in 20 years.

In 2009, 24.5% of the population lived under the poverty line. The government launched a poverty eradication plan in 1997 aimed at reducing the figure to below 10% by 2017. The long-term outlook is promising after oil was discovered in 2006, with production expected to begin in 2018.

Currency

The monetary unit is the Uganda shilling (UGX) notionally divided into 100 cents. In 1987 the currency was devalued by 77% and a new 'heavy' shilling was introduced worth 100 old shillings. Inflation was 4.8% in 2013 and 4.6% in 2014. Foreign exchange reserves in June 2005 were US$1,326m. Total money supply in July 2005 was Shs 1,513.0bn.

Budget

The financial year runs from 1 July–30 June. Budgetary central government revenues in 2010–11 were Shs 7,292.5bn. and expenditures Shs 7,408.8bn. Main sources of revenue in 2010–11 were: taxes on goods and services, Shs 2,881.9m.; taxes on income, profits and capital gains, Shs 2,853.0m.; grants, Shs 890.5m. Main items of expenditure by economic type in 2010–11: use of goods and services, Shs 2,716.2m.; grants, Shs 2,644.7m.; compensation of employees, Shs 985.0m.

VAT is 18%.

Performance

Real GDP growth was 2.6% in 2012, 3.9% in 2013 and 4.8% in 2014. Prior to 2012 Uganda had consistently been among Africa's best performers. Uganda's total GDP in 2014 was US$27.0bn.

Banking and Finance

The Bank of Uganda (Governor, Emmanuel Tumusiime Mutebile) was established in 1966 and is the central bank and bank of issue. In addition there are five foreign, six commercial and two development banks. There is also the state-owned Uganda Development Bank, which is scheduled for eventual privatization.

External debt totalled US$2,994m. in 2010, representing 17.9% of GNI.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Uganda's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy were the equivalent of 0.1 tonnes per capita in 2011.

Electricity

Installed capacity in 2011 was 0.6m. kW, about 76% of which was provided by the Owen Falls Extension Project (a hydro-electric scheme). Production (2011 estimate) 2.59bn. kWh. Per capita consumption (2011 estimate) 72 kWh. Only 15% of the population has access to electricity.

Oil and Gas

Oil was first discovered in Uganda in 2006. There was a further major find in 2009, when the Jobi-Rii oil field was considered to be the largest onshore discovery in sub-Saharan Africa in over 20 years. Reserves have been estimated at 2.5bn. bbls. Production was expected to begin in 2012 but it is now not forecast to start until 2017.

Minerals

In Nov. 1997 extraction started on the first of an estimated US$400m. worth of cobalt from pyrites. Tungsten and tin concentrates are also mined. There are also significant quantities of clay and gypsum.

Agriculture

80% of the workforce is involved with agriculture. In 2007 the agricultural area included an estimated 5.5m. ha. of arable land and about 2.2m. ha. of permanent crops. Agriculture is one of the priority areas for increased production, with many projects funded both locally and externally. It contributes 90% of exports. Production (2003 estimates) in 1,000 tonnes: cassava, 13,500; plantains, 10,000; sweet potatoes, 2,600; sugarcane, 1,600; maize, 1,200; bananas, 615; millet, 584; potatoes, 546; dry beans, 535; sorghum, 395; coffee, 186. Coffee is the mainstay of the economy, accounting for more than 50% of the annual commodity export revenue. Uganda is the world's leading producer of plantains.

Livestock (2003 estimates): goats, 6.9m.; cattle, 6.1m.; pigs, 1.7m.; sheep, 1.2m.; chickens, 33m. Livestock products, 2003 estimates (in 1,000 tonnes): milk, 700; meat, 293.

Forestry

In 2010 the area under forests was 2.99m. ha., or 15% of the total land area. Exploitable forests consist almost entirely of hardwoods. Timber production in 2011 totalled 44.39m. cu. metres. Uganda has great potential for timber-processing for export, manufacture of high-quality furniture and wood products, and various packaging materials.

Fisheries

In 2010 fish landings totalled 413,805 tonnes, entirely from inland waters. Fish farming (especially catfish and tilapia) is a fast-growing industry, with production having increased from 5,539 tonnes in 2004 to 76,654 tonnes in 2009. Exports of fishery commodities, valued at US$109m. in 2009, are now one of Uganda's leading foreign currency earners.

INDUSTRY

Production (in 1,000 tonnes): cement (2013), 2,023; sugar (2012), 315; beer (2012), 254.5m. litres. In 2013–14 industry accounted for 26.3% of GDP, with manufacturing contributing 7.7%. Industrial production grew by 5.6% in 2013–14.

Labour

The labour force in 2013 was 14,589,000 (10,709,000 in 2003). 78.1% of the population aged 15–64 was economically active in 2013. In the same year 4.2% of the population was unemployed.

Uganda had 0.25m. people living in slavery according to the Walk Free Foundation's 2013 Global Slavery Index.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

In 2010 imports (c.i.f.) amounted to US$4,664.3m. (US$4,247.4m. in 2009); exports (f.o.b.) US$1,618.6m. (US$1,567.6m. in 2009). Coffee, fish and fish products are the principal exports. Major imports are machinery and transport equipment, and food, beverages and tobacco products. The main import suppliers in 2006 were Kenya (15.7%), UAE (12.7%) and India (8.2%). In 2006 the main export markets were UAE (19.4%), Sudan (9.5%) and Kenya (9.1%).

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

In 2003 there were 70,746 km of roads, of which 23% were paved. There were 81,300 passenger cars in use in 2007, 79,300 lorries and vans, 40,500 buses and coaches, and 176,500 motorcycles and mopeds. In 2007 there were 17,428 road accidents resulting in 2,779 deaths.

In 2007 the government established the Uganda Road Fund, a body responsible for financing road maintenance. The estimated budget in 2007–08 totalled US$111.35m.

Rail

In 2005 the Uganda Railways network totalled 1,241 km (metre gauge). In 1996 passenger services were suspended and have not been reinstated in the meantime. Freight tonne-km in 2003 came to 213m.

Civil Aviation

There is an international airport at Entebbe, 40 km from Kampala. Air Uganda, formed in 2007, was the national airline until July 2014. It ceased operations when the issuer of its air operator's certificate, the Ugandan Civil Aviation Authority, failed an audit carried out by the International Civil Aviation Organization. In 2003 scheduled airline traffic of Uganda-based carriers flew 2m. km, carrying 40,000 passengers (all on international flights).

In 2012 Entebbe handled 1,342,134 passengers (1,238,466 on international flights) and 56,519 tonnes of freight.

Telecommunications

In June 2013 there were 207,500 main (fixed) telephone lines; mobile phone subscriptions numbered 16,569,000 in June 2013 (44.1 per 100 persons). In 2013 an estimated 16.2% of the population were internet users. In June 2012 there were 415,000 Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The Supreme Court of Uganda, presided over by the Chief Justice, is the highest court. There is a Court of Appeal and a High Court below that. Subordinate courts, presided over by Chief Magistrates and Magistrates of the first, second and third grade, are established in all areas; jurisdiction varies with the grade of Magistrate. Chief and first-grade Magistrates are professionally qualified; second- and third-grade Magistrates are trained to diploma level at the Law Development Centre, Kampala. Chief Magistrates exercise supervision over and hear appeals from second- and third-grade courts, and village courts.

The population in penal institutions in Aug. 2010 was 30,312 (89 per 100,000 of national population). The death penalty is still in force. There were two executions in 2006 but none since. The International Centre for Prison Studies estimated in 2014 that 55.0% of prisoners had yet to receive a trial. In 2015 the World Justice Project Rule of Law Index, which provides data on how the rule of law is experienced by the general public across eight categories, ranked Uganda 80th of 102 countries for criminal justice and 68th for civil justice.

Education

In 2011 there were 8,098,177 pupils and 169,503 teaching staff at primary schools. 67.5% of primary schools were government-aided in 2013 and 32.5% private. There were 1,175,648 students and an estimated 63,400 teaching staff at secondary schools in 2008. In 2013 tertiary institutions included five public universities, 29 private universities, and 61 business and commerce institutions (of which 56 were private). Uganda had 289,545 students in tertiary education in 2011 and (in 2004) an estimated 4,200 academic staff. In 2013 there were 34,694 students at colleges of commerce and business studies and related study centres with 1,918 lecturers and tutors, and 8,056 students at teachers' colleges with 326 lecturers and tutors. The adult literacy rate was 71.4% in 2006 (81.4% among males and 62.1% among females).

School attendance has trebled since Yoweri Museveni became president in 1986. In 1997 free primary education was introduced, initially for four children in every family; in 2003 this was extended to cover all children. In 2008–09 public expenditure on education came to 3.2% of GDP and 15.0% of total government spending.

Health

In 2012–13 there were 148 public hospitals, 5,077 public health centres and 112 public district health offices. There were 1,488 private health care facilities in 2012–13. In 2002 there were 1,175 physicians, 75 dentists, 1,350 nurses and 850 midwives. Uganda has had significant success in the fight against AIDS. A climate of free debate, with President Museveni recognizing the threat as early as 1986 and making every government department take the problem seriously, resulted in HIV prevalence among adults declining from approximately 13% in the early 1990s to 7% in 2012.

RELIGION

According to the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life the population was 86.7% Christian in 2010, with Muslims accounting for 9.1%. Of the Christians, 51% in 2010 were Protestants and 49% Catholics. In Feb. 2016 there was one Roman Catholic cardinal.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

Uganda has three sites on the UNESCO World Heritage List: Bwindi Impenetrable National Park (inscribed on the list in 1994); Rwenzori Mountains National Park (1994); and the Tombs of the Buganda Kings at Kasubi (2001).

Press

There were five daily newspapers in 2008 with a combined average daily circulation of 110,000.

Tourism

In 2011 there were 1,151,000 international tourist arrivals (excluding day-visitors); spending by tourists totalled US$950m.

Festivals

The main festivals are for Islamic holidays (March and June), Martyrs' Day (3 June), Heroes' Day (9 June) and Independence Day (9 Oct.).

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Kyiv (formerly Kiev) was the centre of the Rus principality in the 11th and 12th centuries and is still known as the Mother of Russian cities. The western Ukraine principality of Galicia was annexed by Poland in the 14th century. At about the same time, Kyiv and the Ukrainian principality of Volhynia were conquered by Lithuania before being absorbed by Poland. Poland, however, could not subjugate the Ukrainian cossacks, who allied themselves with Russia. Ukraine, except for Galicia (part of the Austrian Empire, 1772–1919), was incorporated into the Russian Empire after the second partition of Poland in 1793.

In 1917, following the Bolshevik revolution, the Ukrainians in Russia established an independent republic. Austrian Ukraine proclaimed itself a republic in 1918 and was federated with its Russian counterpart. The Allies ignored Ukrainian claims to Galicia, however, and in 1918 awarded that area to Poland. From 1922 to 1932, drastic efforts were made by the USSR to suppress Ukrainian nationalism. Ukraine suffered from the forced collectivization of agriculture and the expropriation of foodstuffs; the result was the famine of 1932–33 when more than 7m. people died. Following the Soviet seizure of eastern Poland in Sept. 1939, Polish Galicia was incorporated into the Ukrainian SSR. When the Germans invaded Ukraine in 1941 hopes that an autonomous or independent Ukrainian republic would be set up under German protection were disappointed. Ukraine was retaken by the USSR in 1944. The Crimean region was joined to Ukraine in 1954.

On 5 Dec. 1991 the Supreme Soviet declared Ukraine's independence. Ukraine was one of the founder members of the Commonwealth of Independent States in Dec. 1991. After independence Crimea, which was part of Russia until 1954, became a source of contention between Moscow and Kyiv. The Russian Supreme Soviet laid claim to the Crimean port city of Sevastopol, the home port of the 350-ship Black Sea Fleet, despite an agreement to divide the fleet. There was also conflict between Ukraine and Russia over possession and transfer of nuclear weapons, delivery of Russian fuel to Ukraine and military and political integration within the CIS. Leonid Kuchma was elected president in 1994 and re-elected in 1999. Support for him fell after public demonstrations against maladministration including the accusation that he was responsible for the murder of a radical journalist. Conflicts between the presidential administration and government led to the sacking of reform-minded prime minister Viktor Yushchenko in April 2001, who was replaced by Kuchma loyalist Anatolii Kinakh at the end of May.

The Pope's historic visit to Ukraine in June 2001 was accompanied by disturbances, particularly in the capital, reflecting long-standing distrust between Catholics and Orthodox Christians. Presidential elections in Oct. and Nov. 2004 were won by Kuchma's chosen successor, Viktor Yanukovich, who defeated Viktor Yushchenko in the second round run-off. But observers claimed the election failed to meet democratic standards and in Kyiv widespread protests came to be known as the 'Orange Revolution'. After the poll was declared invalid Yushchenko was elected president in a repeat of the run-off. However, infighting between the leaders of the revolution led to growing popular discontent. In Feb. 2010 Yanukovich was elected president, defeating Yuliya Tymoshenko, a figurehead of the 2004 protests. Tymoshenko was imprisoned in Oct. 2011 for alleged abuse of power in relation to a 2009 gas deal with Russia. In April 2013 the European Court of Human Rights declared her arrest and detention unlawful.

In Nov. 2013 the government abandoned plans to sign an association agreement with the European Union. In Feb. 2014 President Victor Yanukovich was impeached by the Ukrainian parliament following widespread popular opposition to his efforts to develop closer political and economic relations with Russia. In response, Russian ground forces occupied strategic points around Ukraine's Crimean peninsula, citing a need to protect both its Black Sea naval fleet—which is stationed in the region—and ethnic Russians living in Crimea. Russia's actions were widely condemned by Western leaders. A referendum in Crimea in March 2014 saw 97% of votes cast in favour of the region joining Russia and seceding from Ukraine. Later the same month, the government in Moscow enacted legislation absorbing Crimea into the Russian Federation despite international condemnation.

In May 2014 unauthorized referenda held in Donetsk and Luhansk provinces indicated popular support for both to declare themselves independent republics. However, the polls lacked recognition from the government in Kyiv and from most of the international community (although Russia expressed 'respect' for the results). Fighting ensued in both provinces (collectively known as the Donbass Region) between Ukrainian troops and pro-Russian separatist forces. A ceasefire agreed in Sept. 2014 failed to hold, but a second, internationally-brokered peace deal was negotiated in Feb. 2015.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Ukraine is bounded in the east by the Russian Federation, north by Belarus, west by Poland, Slovakia, Hungary, Romania and Moldova, and south by the Black Sea and Sea of Azov. Area, 603,628 sq. km (233,062 sq. miles). At the last census, in 2001, the population was 48,457,102 of whom 26,015,758 were female; Jan. 2014 estimate, 45,426,249, giving a density of 75 per sq. km.

In 2001, 78% of the population were Ukrainians, 17% Russians and 5% others—Belarusians, Moldovans, Hungarians, Bulgarians, Poles and Crimean Tatars (most of the Tatars were forcibly transported to Central Asia in 1944 for anti-Soviet activities during the Second World War). Ukraine's population is projected to drop to 42.37m. by 2025 (the same population as in the late 1950s). In 2011, 69.1% of the population lived in urban areas.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 44.82m.

As of 1 Jan. 2014 Ukraine was divided into 24 provinces, two municipalities (Kyiv and Sevastopol) and the Autonomous Republic of Crimea. In March 2014 Crimea was annexed by Russia in a move lacking international recognition. In May 2014 separatists in Donetsk and Luhansk provinces unilaterally declared independence but the Ukrainian government and the wider international community have rejected the legitimacy of these declarations. Area and estimated population in Jan. 2012:

The 1996 constitution made Ukrainian the sole official language. Russian (the language of 33% of the population, mainly in the south and east), Romanian, Polish and Hungarian are also spoken. Additionally, the 1996 constitution abolished dual citizenship, previously available if there was a treaty with the other country (there was no such treaty with Russia). Anyone resident in Ukraine since 1991 may be naturalized.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2009 births, 512,525; deaths, 706,739; marriages, 318,198; divorces, 145,439. Rates (per 1,000 population), 2009: births, 11.1; deaths, 15.3. Annual population growth rate, 2000–05, –0.9%. Life expectancy, 2007: males, 62.7 years, females, 73.8. In 2006 the most popular age range for marrying was 20–24 for both males and females. Infant mortality, 2010, 11 per 1,000 live births; fertility rate, 2008, 1.3 births per woman.

CLIMATE

Temperate continental with a subtropical Mediterranean climate prevalent on the southern portions of the Crimean Peninsula. The average monthly temperature in winter ranges from 17.6°F to 35.6°F (–8°C to 2°C), while summer temperatures average 62.6°F to 77°F (17°C to 25°C). The Black Sea coast is subject to freezing. Precipitation generally decreases from north to south; it is greatest in the Carpathians where it exceeds more than 58.5" (1,500 mm) per year, and least in the coastal lowlands of the Black Sea where it averages less than 11.7" (300 mm) per year.

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

In a referendum on 1 Dec. 1991, 90.3% of votes cast were in favour of independence. Turnout was 83.7%.

A new constitution was adopted on 28 June 1996. It defines Ukraine as a sovereign, democratic, unitary state governed by the rule of law and guaranteeing civil rights. The head of state is the President, elected directly by the people for a five-year term. An amendment to the constitution that came into effect on 1 Jan. 2006 gives increased powers to parliament, including the right to appoint and dismiss the prime minister. However, after parliament dismissed the prime minister and the cabinet on 10 Jan. 2006 President Yushchenko stated that only the new parliament that was to be elected in March 2006 would have such powers.

Parliament is the 450-member unicameral Verkhovna Rada (Supreme Council), elected for four-year terms. Prior to the March 2006 election half of the members were chosen from party lists by proportional vote and half from individual constituencies, but in accordance with a constitutional amendment for the 2006 election all 450 members were chosen from party lists. The same method applied for the elections in 2007 but for the 2012 election it was decided to revert to the pre-2006 mixed voting system.

There is an 18-member Constitutional Court, six members being appointed by the President, six by parliament and six by a panel of judges. Constitutional amendments may be initiated at the President's request to parliament, or by at least one-third of parliamentary deputies. The Communist Party was officially banned in the country in 1991, but was renamed the Socialist Party of Ukraine. Hard-line Communists protested against the ban, which was rescinded by the Supreme Council in May 1993.

For information on Crimea's constitutional status, see CRIMEA on page 1222. In May 2014 the provinces of Donetsk and Luhansk held referenda that lacked recognition from the national government or from the international community but that nonetheless showed support for unilateral declarations of independence.

CURRENT LEADERS

Petro Poroshenko

Position

President

Introduction

Petro Poroshenko, one of Ukraine's richest businessmen, was voted president in the May 2014 election. A pro-European, his chief priorities have been to try and re-establish stability in the country following the collapse of the Victor Yanukovych regime and to address the need for urgent economic reforms, but relations with neighbouring Russia have remained hostile in the wake of Moscow's alleged backing for violent separatist unrest in eastern Ukraine.

Early Life

Petro Oleksiyovych Poroshenko was born on 26 Sept. 1965 in Bolhrad. He graduated in economics from Taras Shevchenko National University of Kyiv in 1989. He then undertook three years' postgraduate studies at the same institution, after which he co-founded and chaired Ukrprominvest, an investment company dealing mainly in confectionery. Over the next decade Ukrprominvest acquired several state-owned enterprises, creating the largest confectionery manufacturing operation in Ukraine and earning Poroshenko the nickname of 'the Chocolate King'.

In 1998 Poroshenko was voted into parliament as a member of the pro-Russian Social Democratic Party. In 2000 he established the Solidarity party but left in 2001 when he became campaign chief for Viktor Yushchenko's Our Ukraine Bloc. Poroshenko retained his parliamentary seat at the March 2002 polls. During the Orange Revolution of 2004 he was a key financial supporter for the pro-democracy movement and, following Yushchenko's 2004 presidential election victory, was named secretary of the National Security and Defence Council.

In March 2006 he was re-elected to parliament with the support of Our Ukraine and was given the chair of the parliamentary committee on finance and banking. From 2007–12 he was head of the board of the national bank, and from 2009–10 he served as minister of foreign affairs. In early 2012 Poroshenko served briefly as minister of trade and economic development under Viktor Yanukovych. In Oct. 2012 he returned to parliament as an independent candidate and was an active supporter of the pro-European protests that swept the country the following year. After winning the May 2014 presidential election with an outright majority (attracting almost 55% of the vote, making a run-off poll unnecessary), he was sworn into office on 7 June.

Career in Office

Poroshenko has aligned Ukraine's future with Europe (including the possibility of EU membership by 2025), advocated devolution of power to regional governments and tabled economic reforms to improve investment opportunities. His intentions to mend relations with Russia, however, have been hindered by Moscow's aggressive absorption of Crimea into the Russian Federation in March 2014 and the simmering conflict in the eastern provinces of Donetsk and Luhansk between Ukrainian troops and pro-Russian separatist forces (despite a fragile ceasefire agreement in force since Feb. 2015).

In Oct. 2014 Poroshenko called snap parliamentary elections that paved the way for a new government and effectively removed the remnants of Yanukovych's support. Following the elections Arseniy Yatsenyuk of the pro-Western People's Front, who had become acting prime minister in Feb. 2014, was reappointed as premier in Nov. at the head of a coalition government with the Petro Poroshenko Bloc supporting the president. However, in the wake of increasing political paralysis and a worsening economy, Poroshenko sought Yatsenyuk's resignation in Feb. 2016. The prime minister resisted until April when he announced his departure, and Poroshenko nominated parliamentary speaker Volodymyr Groysman as his successor. Groysman was sworn in on 14 April.

Volodymyr Groysman

Position

Prime Minister

Introduction

Volodymyr Groysman became prime minister on 14 April 2016 at the age of just 38, having been a former mayor of Vinnytsya and speaker of the national parliament. He rose to national prominence in the anti-Yanukovich revolution of 2014 and is regarded as an ally of President Petro Poroshenko.

Early Life

Volodymyr Borysovych Groysman was born on 20 Jan. 1978 in Vinnytsya. Before finishing secondary school, he had begun working in his father's company. In 2002, while studying jurisprudence at the Interregional Academy of Personnel Management, he was elected to the Vinnytsya City Council. He graduated in law in 2003 and a year later joined the pro-Western Our Ukraine Party.

In 2005 Groysman was elected head of the council in Vinnytsya and in 2006, backed by Our Ukraine and the Yuliya Tymoshenko Party, he became the youngest-ever mayor of a Ukrainian administrative centre. In 2010, representing the small Conscience of Ukraine Party, he was re-elected mayor with a strong majority. During his tenure he was credited with improving infrastructure and attracting European investment to the city. He also forged a relationship with Poroshenko, who owned a confectionary factory in the city.

Groysman garnered national attention during the 2014 uprising when in Feb. that year he was brought to Kyiv to join the coalition government headed by Prime Minister Arseniy Yatsenyuk. As minister of regional development, construction and housing and communal services he worked on emergency measures formulated in response to Russia's annexation of Crimea and ongoing fighting in the east of Ukraine. In July 2014 Groysman also chaired the Ukrainian Special Government Commission investigating the downing of a Malaysian commercial airliner while it was flying over Ukraine.

In Nov. 2014, with Poroshenko as president, Groysman was elected speaker of parliament (Verkhovna Rada). As the government under Yatsenyuk unravelled in early 2016 Groysman was chosen as prime minister by parliament in April.

Career in Office

Groysman faces a number of challenges including how to maintain the fragile ceasefire in the east between government forces and Russian-backed separatists. He must also tackle an economy in recession while juggling the demands for reform required to secure support from the International Monetary Fund (in the form of loans worth US$18bn.) and the European Union. Groysman has also identified corruption and ineffective governance as threats to internal security. However, his critics argue that his proximity to Poroshenko damages his ability to tackle cronyism, with several reformist ministers leaving government on Groysman's accession to the premiership.

DEFENCE

In 2011 the armed forces numbered 129,925 personnel, with 1m. reserves. Conscription was abolished in Oct. 2013, with Ukraine hoping to develop an all-professional military. However, it was reintroduced on 1 May 2014 in response to the escalating conflict with the pro-Russian insurgency in eastern Ukraine. When it became independent in 1991 Ukraine had around 1,700–1,900 Soviet strategic nuclear warheads deployed on its territory. By mid-1996 all Soviet-era strategic warheads had been transferred to Russia for elimination.

Military expenditure in 2013 totalled US$2,418m. (US$54 per capita), representing 1.3% of GDP.

Army

In 2011 ground forces numbered 70,753. Equipment included 2,988 main battle tanks (T-55s, T-64s, T-72s, T-80s and T-84s) and 139 attack helicopters.

In addition there were around 39,900 Ministry of Internal Affairs troops, 45,000 Border Guards and some 9,500 civil defence troops.

Navy

The Navy numbered 13,932 in 2011, including some 2,500 Naval Aviation and 3,000 naval infantry. Equipment in 2011 included one frigate and three corvettes.

In 2011 the aviation forces of the former Soviet Black Sea Fleet under Ukrainian command operated ten combat-capable aircraft and 77 helicopters. In March 2014 several Ukrainian vessels based in Crimea were seized by Russia following Russia's annexation of the region. Although agreement was reached between the two countries regarding the return of the ships, the Russian State Duma voted in the same month to terminate earlier treaties between Moscow and Kyiv governing the use of naval facilities in the region.

Air Force

Equipment in 2011 included 211 combat-capable aircraft (MiG-29s, Su-24s, Su-25s and Su-27s). Personnel numbered 45,240 in 2011.

ECONOMY

In 2010 agriculture accounted for 8.3% of GDP, industry 31.3% and services 60.4%.

Overview

Following independence in 1991, Ukraine's transition to a market economy was tumultuous. The economy was in recession for much of the 1990s, losing 60% of GDP between 1991 and 1999. Prices stabilized after the introduction of a new currency, the hryvnia, in 1996 and structural reforms helped bring the economy under control by 2000. Despite a sharp slowdown in 2005 following the political upheaval of the 2004 presidential elections, economic growth averaged 7.0% between 2001 and 2008, the second highest rate in Europe after Latvia over that period.

The global financial crisis sparked a withdrawal of investment and a collapse in the price of steel (a major industry) in 2008. Despite an IMF-approved US$16.4bn. loan in Oct. that year, GDP shrank by nearly 15% in 2009, reflecting the collapse of steel output and declines in the construction and retail sectors. The hryvnia lost 40% of its value against the US dollar.

Economic growth resumed in 2010 following moderate improvements in external demand. Trade with European Union countries has since exceeded that with Russia, although Russia remains Ukraine's main single-nation trading partner. However, following the collapse of the Yanukovich government in Feb. 2014 after widespread public protests against its decision to end EU association talks, the country's finances were plunged into new turmoil. Russia's annexation of Crimea and the ensuing civil war in the eastern provinces of Donetsk and Luhansk have further destabilized the economy. GDP contracted by 6.8% in 2014 and inflation surpassed 30% as the value of the hryvnia plummeted and corruption remained rife. In March 2015 the IMF issued a US$17.5bn. bailout package over four years to help support the economy through the ongoing crisis.

Currency

The unit of currency is the hryvnia (UAH) of 100 kopiykas, which replaced karbovanets on 2 Sept. 1996 at 100,000 karbovanets = 1 hryvnia. 2000 saw the introduction of a floating exchange rate for the hryvnia.

There was deflation of 0.3% in 2013 but then inflation of 12.1% in 2014. Inflation had been 4,735% in 1993. Foreign exchange reserves in Sept. 2009 were US$25,189m., gold reserves were 864,000 troy oz and total money supply was 221,530m. hryvnias.

Budget

Central government revenue and expenditure (in 1m. hryvnias), year ending 31 Dec.:

Principal sources of revenue in 2011 were: taxes on goods and services, 167,787m. hryvnias; social security contributions, 159,323m. hryvnias; taxes on income, profits and capital gains, 60,899m. hryvnias. Main items of expenditure by economic type in 2011 were: social benefits, 225,837m. hryvnias; grants, 95,216m. hryvnias; use of goods and services, 58,749m. hryvnias.

VAT is 20%.

Performance

Between 1994 and 1998 average annual real GDP growth was -10.0%, and it was still negative in 1999, at -0.2%. In 2000 the economy expanded considerably and this resurgence continued in the following years with per capita income more than tripling in the period 2000-06. Ukraine's economy did, however, experience a major downturn again in the wake of the global financial crisis that started in 2008. It made a brief recovery between 2010 and 2012 but the economy experienced zero growth in 2013 and then shrank by 6.8% in 2014. Ukraine's total GDP in 2014 was US$131.8bn.

Banking and Finance

A National Bank was founded in March 1991. It operates under government control, its Governor being appointed by the President with the approval of parliament. The Governor is Valeriya Hontaryeva. There were 198 banks in all as at 1 Jan. 2012, with assets totalling 1,054,280m. hryvnias. The largest banks are PrivatBank, Ukreximbank and Oschadbank.

In 2010 external debt totalled US$116,808m., equivalent to 85.9% of GNI.

There is a stock exchange in Kyiv.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2011 accounted for 6.6 tonnes per capita. Ukraine's greenhouse gas emissions fell by 57.1% between 1990 and 2012, mainly owing to the decline of polluting industries from the Soviet era.

Electricity

Installed capacity was 54.6m. kW in 2011. In 2011 production was 194.95bn. kWh; consumption per capita in 2011 was 4,119 kWh. A Soviet programme to greatly expand nuclear power-generating capacity in the country was abandoned in the wake of the 1986 accident at Chernobyl. Chernobyl was closed down on 15 Dec. 2000. In 2011 there were 15 nuclear reactors in use supplying 46.3% of output.

Oil and Gas

In 2009 output of crude petroleum was 21m. bbls; in 2012 production of natural gas was 18.6bn. cu. metres, with 600bn. cu. metres of proven natural gas reserves.

Minerals

Ukraine's industrial economy, accounting for more than a quarter of total employment, is based largely on the republic's vast mineral resources. The Donetsk Basin contains huge reserves of coal, and the nearby iron-ore reserves of Kryvy Rih are equally rich. Among Ukraine's other mineral resources are manganese, bauxite, nickel, titanium and salt. Production in 2004 (in 1m. tonnes): iron ore, 65.5m.; coal, 59.2m.; manganese, 2.4m.; salt, 2.3m.

Agriculture

Ukraine has extremely fertile black-earth soils in the central and southern portions, totalling nearly two-thirds of the territory. In 2002 there were 32.54m. ha. of arable land and 0.91m. ha. of permanent crops. Output (in 1,000 tonnes) in 2002: wheat, 20,556; potatoes, 16,620; sugar beets, 14,452; barley, 10,364; maize, 4,180; sunflower seeds, 3,270; rye, 1,509; cabbage, 1,229; tomatoes, 1,038. Livestock, 2003: 9,203,000 pigs, 9,108,000 cattle, 1,034,000 goats, 950,000 sheep, 148m. chickens, 20m. ducks. Livestock products, 2003 (in 1,000 tonnes): milk, 13,660; meat, 1,649; eggs, 656.

Forestry

The area under forests in Ukraine in 2010 was 9.71m. ha. (17% of the total land area). In 2011, 17.51m. cu. metres of timber were produced.

Fisheries

In 2010 the catch totalled 186,021 tonnes, of which 181,381 tonnes were from sea fishing. The total catch in 1988 had been 1,048,157 tonnes.

INDUSTRY

Industrial production grew by 10.2% in 2007. Output, 2007 (in tonnes unless otherwise stated): pig iron, 35.6m.; crude steel, 29.0m.; rolled ferrous metals, 24.5m.; cement, 15.0m.; petrol, 4.2m.; distillate fuel oil, 4.1m.; residual fuel oil, 3.4m.; mineral fertilizer, 2.8m.; bread and bakery products, 2.0m.; sugar, 1.9m.; sulphuric acid, 1.6m.; fabrics, 114m. sq. metres; footwear, 22.5m. pairs; refrigerators, 824,000 units; television sets, 507,000 units; passenger cars, 380,000 units; washing machines, 173,000 units; cigarettes, 129bn. units.

In 2007 industry accounted for 28.2% of GDP, with manufacturing contributing 20.5%.

Labour

In 2011 a total of 20,324,000 persons aged 15 to 70 were in employment. The principal areas of activity were (in 1,000): wholesale and retail trade, and restaurants and hotels, 4,865; agriculture, hunting, forestry and fishing, 3,394; manufacturing, 3,353. In 2011 there were 1,733,000 unemployed and the level of unemployment was 7.9%.

Ukraine had 0.11m. people living in slavery according to the Walk Free Foundation's 2013 Global Slavery Index.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

The following table shows the value of Ukraine's foreign trade (in US$1m.):

	Imports (c.i.f.)	Exports (f.o.b.)
2006	45,021.6	38,367.6
2007	60,600.6	49,294.4
2008	85,448.4	66,952.3
2009	45,412.9	39,695.6
2010	60,737.1	51,430.3

Main import suppliers in 2004: Russia, 40.7%; Germany, 9.4%; Turkmenistan, 6.7%; Poland, 3.3%; Italy, 2.8%. Main exports markets in 2004: Russia, 18.0%; Germany, 5.8%; Turkey, 5.7%; Italy, 5.0%; USA, 4.6%.

Main imports, 2004: crude petroleum, 16.7%; machinery, 16.3%; chemicals and chemical products, 12.6%; natural gas, 12.4%. Main exports: ferrous and nonferrous metals, 39.9%; food and raw materials, 10.6%; chemicals and chemical products, 9.9%; machinery, 9.3%.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

In 2007 there were 169,422 km of roads, including 20,497 km of national roads. There were 5,939,600 passenger cars in use in 2007 and 714,300 motorcycles and mopeds. There were 63,554 road accidents involving injury in 2007 (9,574 fatalities).

Rail

Total length was 22,302 km in 2009. Passenger-km travelled in 2009 came to 48.3bn. and freight tonne-km to 196.2bn. There are metros in Kyiv, Kharkiv, Kryvy Rih and Dnipropetrovsk.

Civil Aviation

The main international airport is Kyiv (Boryspil), and there are international flights from seven other airports. The flag carrier is Ukraine International Airlines. It operated international flights in 2005 to Amsterdam, Barcelona, Berlin, Brussels, Dubai, Düsseldorf, Helsinki, Kuwait, Lisbon, London, Madrid, Paris, Rome, Vienna and Zürich.

In 2012 Kyiv handled 8,478,091 passengers (7,432,008 on international flights) and 38,642 tonnes of freight. In the same year Simferopol (under Russian control since the annexation of Crimea in 2014) handled 1,113,900 passengers and Odesa 907,600 passengers.

Shipping

In 2007, 2m. passengers and 15m. tonnes of freight were carried by inland waterways. In Jan. 2009 there were 224 ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 770,000 GT. The main seaports are Illichivsk, Izmail, Mariupol, Mykolaïv, Odesa and Yuzhny. Odesa is the leading port, in 2008 handling 34,562,000 tonnes of freight.

Telecommunications

In 2009 there were 55,333,000 mobile phone subscriptions (1,210.6 per 1,000 inhabitants) and 13,026,000 fixed telephone lines. There were 2,649,000 fixed internet subscriptions in 2009 and 1,733,000 mobile broadband subscriptions. In March 2012 there were 1.7m. Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

A new civil code was voted into law in June 1997. Justice is administered by the Constitutional Court of Ukraine and by courts of general jurisdiction. The Supreme Court of Ukraine is the highest judicial organ of general jurisdiction. The death penalty was abolished in 1999. Over the period 1991–95, 642 death sentences were awarded and 442 carried out; there were 169 executions in 1996. The last executions took place in 1997. The population in penal institutions in Sept. 2013 was 137,965 (305 per 100,000 of national population). Ukraine was ranked 71st of 102 countries for criminal justice and 65th for civil justice in the 2015 World Justice Project Rule of Law Index, which provides data on how the rule of law is experienced by the general public across eight categories.

Education

In 2003–04 the number of pupils in 21,900 primary and secondary schools was 5.9m.; 339 further education establishments had 1,843,800 students, and 670 technical colleges had 592,900 students; 977,000 children were attending pre-school institutions.

In 2005–06 there were 16 universities including an international university of information systems, management and business.

Adult literacy rate in 2008 was over 99%.

In 2006 public expenditure on education came to 6.2% of GDP and 19.3% of total government spending.

Health

In 2007 there were 223,294 physicians, 25,450 dentists, 340,986 nurses, 23,645 midwives and 21,745 pharmacists. There were 439,549 beds in 2,843 hospitals in 2007.

Welfare

There were 10.6m. old-age pensioners as at 1 Jan. 2012 and 3.2m. other pensioners. The total included 881,636 Chernobyl victims. In 2002 social insurance and pension security programmes totalled 27.4bn. hryvnias, representing 12.4% of GDP.

RELIGION

According to the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life an estimated 83.8% of the population in 2010 were Christians (over 90% of which were Orthodox), with 14.7% religiously unaffiliated. The Pew Research Center's study estimated that there were 34.9m. Orthodox Christians in 2010.

The Orthodox Church is split into three factions. The largest is the Ukrainian Orthodox Church, Moscow Patriarchate, headed by Metropolitan Onufriy (Berezovskyi), Metropolitan of Kyiv and All Ukraine, which recognizes Kirill I (Vladimir Mikhailovich Gundyayev) as Patriarch of Moscow and All Russia and insists that all Ukrainian churches should be under Moscow's jurisdiction. The second largest is the Ukrainian Orthodox Church, Kyivan Patriarchate, headed by Metropolitan Filaret (Denysenko), Patriarch of Kyiv and All Rus-Ukraine, which was created in June 1992. Metropolitan Filaret was excommunicated by the Ukrainian Orthodox Church, Moscow Patriarchate in Feb. 1997. The third faction is the Ukrainian Autocephalous Orthodox Church, headed by Metropolitan Macarius (Maletych) of Lviv, which favours the unification of the three bodies. Only the Ukrainian Orthodox Church, Moscow Patriarchate is in communion with world Orthodoxy.

The hierarchy of the Roman Catholic Church (Primate, Cardinal Mieczysław Mokrzycki, Archbishop Metropolitan of Lviv) was restored by the Pope John Paul II's confirmation of ten bishops in 1991. In Feb. 2016 there were two cardinals. The Ukrainian Greek Catholic Church (Head, Bishop Sviatoslav Shevchuk, Major Archbishop, Metropolitan of Kyiv-Halych) is a Church of the Byzantine rite, which is in full communion with the Roman Church. Catholicism is strong in the western half of the country.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

Ukraine has seven sites on the UNESCO World Heritage List: Kyiv—Saint Sophia Cathedral and Related Monastic Buildings, Kyiv—Pechersk Lavra (inscribed on the list in 1990 and 2005); Lviv—the Ensemble of the Historic Centre (1998 and 2008); the Struve Geodetic Arc (2005), a chain of survey triangulations spanning from Norway to the Black Sea that helped establish the exact shape and size of the earth, which is shared with nine other countries; the primeval beech forests of the Carpathians (2007), shared with Slovakia; the Residence of Bukovinian and Dalmatian Metropolitans (2011), a property built from 1864–82; the ancient City of Tauric Chersonese and its chora (2013), located on the Heracleian Peninsula in southwest Crimea; and the wooden tserkvas (churches) of the Carpathian region (2013), comprising 16 tserkvas in the eastern fringe of Central Europe, shared with Poland.

Press

In 2013 there were 55 daily newspapers with an estimated average combined circulation of 2.4m. There were nine newspaper online editions in 2013. The number of newspaper online unique monthly visitors rose from 1,003,000 in 2010 to 1,402,000 in 2013.

Tourism

There were 23,013,000 non-resident tourists in 2012; total receipts were US$5,988m.

Festivals

The arts festival Day of Kyiv occurs on the last weekend of May. The main music festivals are the Koktebel Jazz Festival (Sept.) and Jazz Carnival in Odesa (Sept.). The Molodist International Film Festival takes place in Kyiv in Oct.

The Tatar population is disproportionately disadvantaged within Crimea. Up to 60% of Crimean Tatars are unemployed. After the ousting of Ukraine's President Yanukovich in Feb. 2014, pro-Russian forces occupied Simferopol and strategic sites throughout the region. In March Crimea's parliament voted in favour of seceding from Ukraine and joining Russia, a proposal that received 97% support in a regional referendum the same month. Within days Russia's president, Vladimir Putin, had championed a bill through the Moscow parliament that absorbed Crimea into the Russian Federation. However, the move lacked international recognition and Russia incurred sanctions from the European Union and the USA.

At elections held in two rounds on 16 and 30 Jan. 1994 Yuri Meshkov had been elected President. The post of president was then abolished for Ukraine in March 1995 after calls for a referendum on Crimean independence. In parliamentary elections held on 26 March 2006, the Bloc For Yanukovich! (Party of Regions and the Russian Bloc) obtained 44 seats, Soiuz 10, Kunitsyn's Electoral Bloc 10, the Communist Party of Ukraine 9, the People's Movement of Ukraine 8, the Yuliya Tymoshenko Electoral Bloc 8, the People's Opposition Bloc of Natalia Vitrenko 7 and the Opposition Bloc Ne Tak 4.

More recent parliamentary elections were held on 14 Sept. 2014 following Crimea's annexation by Russia. United Russia won 70 seats and the Liberal Democratic Party of Russia 5. Turnout was 53.6%.

On 2 Nov. 1995 parliament had adopted a constitution which defined Crimea as 'an autonomous republic forming an integral part of Ukraine'. The status of 'autonomous republic' was confirmed by the 1996 Ukrainian Constitution, which provided for Crimea to have its own constitution as approved by its parliament. The Prime Minister was to be appointed by the Crimean parliament with the approval of the Ukrainian parliament. In the aftermath of the collapse of the Yanukovich administration, Crimea's parliament appointed Sergey Aksyonov to the post of prime minister in Feb. 2014. However, Ukraine's acting president, Oleksandr Turchynov, declared the appointment unconstitutional in March 2014. Aksyonov was sworn in as head of the republic on 9 Oct. 2014 after the Crimean legislature voted unanimously in favour of his appointment.

The Tatar National Parliament (Kurultay) elects an executive board (Mejlis). The Chairman is Refat Chubarov. A power-sharing agreement of 12 May 2005 guaranteed the Crimean Tatars two ministry portfolios and the post of deputy prime minister in the Crimean local government.

In 2004 there were 624 pre-school institutions with 38,000 pupils and 638 primary and secondary schools with 241,000 students and 20,396 teachers. There were 68,000 students studying at 35 institutes of higher education in 2004.

Crimea

Crimea is a peninsula extending southwards into the Black Sea with an area of 26,100 sq. km. Population (2014 census, provisional), 2,284,400 (ethnic groups: Russians, 65.4%; Ukrainians, 15.1%; Tatars, 12.2%). The capital is Simferopol (2014 census, 350,600).

It was occupied by Tatars in 1239, conquered by Ottoman Turks in 1475 and retaken by Russia in 1783. In 1921 after the Communist revolution it became an autonomous republic, but was transformed into a province (oblast) of the Russian Federation in 1945, after the deportation of the Tatar population in 1944 for alleged collaboration with the German invaders in the Second World War. 46% of the total Tatar population perished during the deportation. Crimea was transferred to Ukraine in 1954 and became an autonomous republic in 1991. About half the surviving Tatar population of 0.5m. had returned from exile (for the most part in present-day Uzbekistan) by 2000.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Archaeological evidence indicates that in the 3rd millennium BC a culture known as Umm al-Nar developed in modern-day Abu Dhabi, its influence spreading inland and along the coast of Oman to the south. There was trade with both the Mesopotamian civilization and the Indus culture, particularly the export of copper (then the most valuable natural resource) from the Hajar mountains. Later settlements, with Hellenistic features and dating from between the 3rd century BC and the 3rd century AD, have been discovered at Meleiha, near the Sharjah coast, and at Al-Dur in the emirate of Umm al Qaiwain. There are indications that the coastal areas of the United Arab Emirates (UAE) and Oman came under Sassanian (Persian) influence from the 4th century AD until the early 7th century when the Islamic era began. After the death of the Prophet Muhammad, tribes in the Dibba region along the eastern coast rebelled before Islamic forces won a decisive battle in AD 632.

In the Middle Ages much of the region was part of the Persian Kingdom of Hormuz (from 1300), which controlled the approach to the Gulf and most of the trade. European intervention in the Gulf began in the early 16th century when the Portuguese established a commercial monopoly, building a number of forts including Julfar (in modern-day Ras al-Khaimah), a major medieval trading centre. Portuguese ascendancy was later challenged by the Dutch and then by the British, who exercised their naval power in the Gulf in the 18th century to protect trade with India.

By that time two major tribal confederations had grown powerful along the coast of the lower Gulf. The largest tribal grouping, the Bani Yas, was established on the coast by the late 16th century. A large Bani Yas settlement was founded in Abu Dhabi in the 1760s, following the discovery of water on Abu Dhabi island, and in 1793 it became the seat of government of the al-Nahyan branch of the tribal confederation. There is further evidence of elements of the Bani Yas population extending from Qatar in the west to Dubai in the east and inland to the Liwa oasis belt. The Qawasim, a branch of the Huwalah tribe, were a maritime people (largely operating from Ras al-Khaimah) who emerged as an important group once the Omani empire of the late 17th and early 18th centuries was destroyed at the end of the Omani-Persian war in 1720. They established control over other strands of the Huwalah between Sharjah and Musandam and with a large fleet, posed a serious challenge to British shipping.

Piracy was rife until the early 19th century when the British sent several naval expeditions to the Gulf ports to suppress the raiders. In 1820 Britain signed the General Treaty of Peace against piracy and the slave trade with the principal Arab sheikhdoms. From this and later agreements the area became known as the Trucial Coast from the 1850s (the term Trucial referring to the fact that the component sheikhdoms were bound by the truces concluded with Britain). Britain assumed responsibility for the defence of the territory under the maritime treaty of 1853 and, under the exclusive treaties of 1892, for external relations of each of the Trucial sheikhdoms. The sheikhdoms were otherwise autonomous and followed the traditional form of Arab monarchy, with each ruler having virtually absolute power over his subjects.

The collapse of the pearl market, which was believed to have originated in the Gulf in the late Stone Age, and the world economic depression of the early 20th century undermined the economies of the Trucial States. Their subsequent transformation began with the discovery of oil off the coast of Abu Dhabi. Sheikh Shakhbut bin Sultan al-Nahyan, the ruler of Abu Dhabi from 1928–66, granted the first of several oil exploration concessions to foreign companies in 1939. However, the Second World War delayed exploration. The first commercial discovery was made in the late 1950s and the first exports began in 1962.

Sheikh Shakhbut, who was seen as an obstacle to the development of the oil industry, was deposed in 1966 in favour of his younger brother Sheikh Zayed bin Sultan al-Nahyan. The president of the UAE for more than 30 years until his death in 2004, he was re-elected by the rulers of the other emirates at five-year intervals. In the late 1960s oil was discovered in Dubai and in Sharjah, and then in Ras al-Khaimah in the 1980s.

In Jan. 1968 Britain announced the withdrawal of its military forces from the area by 1971. In March the Trucial States joined Bahrain and Qatar (which were also under British protection) in what was named the Federation of Arab Emirates. It was intended that the Federation should become fully independent but the interests of Bahrain and Qatar proved to be incompatible with those of the other sheikhdoms and both seceded from the Federation in 1971 to become separate independent entities. Six of the Trucial States (Abu Dhabi, Dubai, Sharjah, Umm al Qaiwain, Ajman and Fujairah) had agreed a federal constitution for achieving independence as the United Arab Emirates. The British accordingly terminated its special treaty relationship, and the UAE became independent on 2 Dec. 1971. The remaining sheikhdom, Ras al-Khaimah, joined the UAE in Feb. 1972. At independence Sheikh Zayed of Abu Dhabi took office as the first President of the loose federation. Sheikh Rashid bin Said al-Maktoum, the ruler of Dubai for over 30 years from 1958, became Vice-President. The al-Maktoum family, like the al-Nahyan rulers of Abu Dhabi, are a dynastic line of the Bani Yas tribe. The UAE instituted the Federal National Council, a 40-member consultative body appointed by the seven rulers. After the oil price increases of 1973–74—the UAE having given support to the Arab cause in the 1973 war with Israel—the economy and wealth of the new federation developed rapidly.

An attempted coup took place in Sharjah in 1987. Sheikh Sultan Bin Mohammad al-Qassimi abdicated in favour of his brother after admitting mismanagement of the emirate's economy but was restored to power by the Supreme Council of Rulers. In 1991 the UAE became involved in a major international financial scandal when the Bank of Credit and Commerce International (BCCI), in which the Abu Dhabi ruling family held a controlling 77% interest, collapsed. Abu Dhabi sued BCCI for damages in 1993 and several executives were convicted of fraud, given prison sentences and ordered to pay compensation.

Sheikh Rashid bin Said al-Maktoum died in 1990 and was succeeded by his son Sheikh Maktoum bin Rashid al-Maktoum as ruler of Dubai and UAE vice-president. In June 1996 the Federal National Council approved a permanent constitution replacing the provisional document that had been renewed every five years since 1971. At the same time, Abu Dhabi City was designated as the UAE's permanent capital.

In foreign relations the UAE has adopted a largely pro-Western and anti-Iranian stance. Following the fall of the Shah of Iran in 1979 and the outbreak of the Iran–Iraq war in 1980, the stability of the entire region was threatened. Partly in response to Iranian threats to close the Strait of Hormuz to shipping carrying oil exports from Gulf countries, the UAE joined with five other states to form the Gulf Co-operation Council (GCC) in 1981 to work towards political and economic integration. There has been further tension with Iran relating to territorial claims over the island of Abu Musa and the Greater and Lesser Tunb islands, strategically located in the Strait of Hormuz. Iran claimed sovereignty over the islands in the early 1990s and rejected a proposal by the GCC for the claim to be resolved by the International Court of Justice. In 1996 Iran opened an airport on Abu Musa and a power station on Greater Tunb, further damaging relations. Following UAE criticism of a rapprochement between Saudi Arabia and Iran, the GCC reiterated its support for the Emirates in the dispute in 2001. Iran rejected what it claimed was a biased decision. An agreement on the demarcation of the border between the UAE and Oman was ratified in 2003.

UAE forces joined the US-led international coalition against Iraq after the invasion of Kuwait in 1990. Following the Sept. 2001 attacks in the USA, the UAE's banking sector was subject to international scrutiny, and the government consequently ordered financial institutions to freeze the assets of 62 organizations and individuals suspected of funding terrorist movements. The USA stationed forces in the UAE during the invasion of Iraq in March 2003.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

The Emirates are bounded in the north by the Persian Gulf, northeast by Oman, east by the Gulf of Oman and Oman, and south and west by Saudi Arabia. Their area is approximately 83,600 sq. km (32,300 sq. miles), excluding over 100 offshore islands. The total population at the last census in 2005 census was 4,106,427 (68.3% male); density, 49 per sq. km. Estimate, 1 July 2010, 8,246,000. About one-tenth are nomads. In 2011, 84.4% of the population lived in urban areas. Approximately 80% of the population are foreigners, the highest percentage of any country.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 9.16m. The population of the United Arab Emirates has trebled since 2000.

Populations of the seven Emirates, 2010 estimates unless otherwise indicated (in 1,000): Abu Dhabi, 1,968; Ajman, 263; Dubai, 1,836; Fujairah, 164; Ras al-Khaimah, 413; Sharjah, 830; Umm al Qaiwain, 53 (2008 estimate). The chief cities are Dubai (2012 estimated census population of 2,067,291), Abu Dhabi, the federal capital (estimated census population of 975,735 in 2012), Sharjah and Al Ain.

The official language is Arabic; English is widely spoken.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2008 births, 68,779; deaths, 9,775. 2008 birth rate (per 1,000 population), 14.4; death rate, 1.6; infant mortality rate (per 1,000 live births), 6 (2010). Life expectancy, 2013, 76.1 years for men and 78.2 years for women. Annual population growth rate, 1998–2008, 4.4%; fertility rate, 2013, 1.8 births per woman. The UAE has had one of the largest reductions in its fertility rate of any country in the world over the past quarter of a century, having had a rate of 4.4 births per woman in 1990.

CLIMATE

The country experiences desert conditions, with rainfall both limited and erratic. The period May to Sept. is generally rainless. Abu Dhabi, Jan. 65°F (18.3°C), July 95°F (35.0°C). Annual rainfall 3.5" (89 mm). Dubai, Jan. 66°F (18.9°C), July 94°F (34.4°C). Annual rainfall 3.7" (94 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

The Emirates is a federation, headed by a Supreme Council of Rulers which is composed of the seven rulers which elects from among its members a President and Vice-President for five-year terms, and appoints a Council of Ministers. The Council of Ministers drafts legislation and a federal budget; its proposals are submitted to a Federal National Council of 40 appointed members which may propose amendments but has no executive power. It was announced in Dec. 2005 that 20 of the 40 members would in future be elected through councils for each of the seven Emirates. There is a National Consultative Council made up of citizens.

The current constitution came into force on 2 Dec. 1971 and was made permanent in 1996.

National Anthem

'Ishy Biladi' (Long live my Homeland); words by Abdullah Al Hassan, tune by Mohamed Abdel Wahab.

CURRENT LEADERS

Sheikh Khalifa bin Zayed al-Nahyan

Position

President

Introduction

Sheikh Khalifa bin Zayed al-Nahyan was appointed president on 3 Nov. 2004, following the death of his father, Sheikh Zayed, who helped establish the country in 1971 and presided over it for 33 years. Sheikh Khalifa has continued his father's policies of co-operation with neighbouring Arab countries and with the USA, and reducing the UAE's economic dependence on oil and gas extraction.

Early Life

Sheikh Khalifa bin Zayed al-Nahyan, the eldest son of his father, was born in 1948 in Al Ain, Abu Dhabi. In 1966, following his father's promotion to the post of Ruler of Abu Dhabi, he was appointed as Ruler's Representative in the Emirate's eastern province. Three years later he was nominated as Crown Prince and head of Abu Dhabi's new department of defence.

Following Sheikh Zayed's initiative in 1971 to bring together the rulers of the Trucial States to form the UAE (and his assumption of the federation presidency), Sheikh Khalifa assumed two posts—deputy prime minister in the UAE's federal cabinet and chairman of the Abu Dhabi Executive Council. He oversaw the implementation of a massive infrastructure development programme in Abu Dhabi, funded by oil revenues, and in May 1976 was nominated as deputy supreme commander of the unified UAE Armed Forces.

In 1981 Sheikh Khalifa established the Abu Dhabi Department of Social Services and Commercial Buildings to offer low-interest loans for house building. The scheme was extended in 1991 and 2000, in line with the rapid increase in the country's population. From the late 1980s, he was Chairman of the Supreme Petroleum Council, and helped develop the UAE's petrochemicals and industrial complex at Ruwais in an attempt to diversify the economy. He also served as chairman of the Abu Dhabi Fund for Development (responsible for the country's overseas aid programme), chairman of the Abu Dhabi Investment Authority and head of the Environmental Research and Wildlife Development Agency. In late 1991 and early 1992 Sheikh Khalifa and his father were mired in the scandal surrounding the collapse of the BCCI bank, 77% of which was owned by the Abu Dhabi government. This followed a fraud in which billions of dollars were stolen. Sheikh Khalifa's scheme to compensate creditors resulted in a payout of US$1.8bn.

When Sheikh Zayed's health began to decline in the late 1990s, Sheikh Khalifa became the public face of the UAE, along with Sheikh Maktoum, Ruler of Dubai. On 3 Nov. 2004, the day after Zayed's death, Sheikh Khalifa was appointed president of the UAE.

Career in Office

In Dec. 2005 Sheikh Khalifa announced plans for the UAE's first elections, in which half of the members of the consultative Federal National Council would be elected by a limited number of citizens. The non-party elections were held in Dec. 2006, and the government said that they marked the start of a wider process to extend political participation.

Despite Sheikh Khalifa's strong support of the six-member Gulf Co-operation Council, in May 2009 the UAE withdrew from plans for Gulf monetary union, undermining prospects for further economic integration in the region. This move followed the decision to locate the headquarters of the Gulf Co-operation Council Monetary Council in Saudi Arabia. Meanwhile, the UAE and particularly Dubai were adversely affected by the global financial crisis, as banks were overexposed to a serious reversal in the property market. In Feb. 2009, and again in Dec., the Abu Dhabi government intervened to support the banking sector, to prevent a debt default by Dubai and to reassure the financial markets.

In 2011 the UAE was not disturbed significantly by the wave of political protest that erupted across much of the Arab world, although the government expanded the voter franchise for elections to the Federal National Council in Sept. that year. There was, however, increasing nervousness from 2012 over the continuing regional pressures for political liberalization and the rise of Islamist movements, prompting arrests of activists accused of plotting to destabilize the country. Further non-partisan parliamentary elections took place in Oct. 2015.

In 2011 the UAE joined the NATO-led military operation that helped dislodge the authoritarian Gaddafi regime in Libya. In Aug. 2014 the government intervened again in Libya, taking part in air strikes against Islamist militants, and then from Sept. participated with four other Arab states in the US-led air campaign against Islamic State jihadists operating in Syria. Also in 2014, the UAE's relations with neighbouring Qatar were soured over its alleged backing for the Muslim Brotherhood before a diplomatic reconciliation towards the end of the year. From March 2015 the UAE joined other Gulf Arab states in a Saudi Arabian-led military campaign of air strikes against an Iranian-backed insurgency by rebel Shia Houthi forces in Yemen. In Jan. 2016, following the ransacking by protesters of the Saudi embassy in the Iranian capital of Tehran, the UAE downgraded its diplomatic relations with Iran in support of the Saudi government.

There was speculation over Sheikh Khalifa's health when in Jan. 2014 he underwent surgery after suffering a stroke.

DEFENCE

Conscription was introduced in June 2014, and required all male high-school graduates aged 18 to 30 to serve in the armed forces for nine months. Those who have not completed secondary school serve for two years. In 2011 defence expenditure totalled US$9,320m. (US$1,810 per capita), representing 2.7% of GDP.

Army

The strength was (2011) 44,000 (including Dubai independent forces).

Navy

In 2011 the combined naval flotilla of the Emirates included 17 patrol and coastal combatants. Personnel in 2011 numbered around 2,500. The main base is at Abu Dhabi, with minor bases in the other Emirates.

Air Force

Equipment in 2011 included 178 combat-capable aircraft (including F-16s, Mirage 2000s and British Aerospace Hawks) and some 31 multi-role helicopters. Personnel numbered 4,500 in 2011.

ECONOMY

Crude petroleum and natural gas contributed 36.8% to GDP in 2008; followed by trade and hotels, 17.4%; finance and real estate, 15.1%; manufacturing, 12.1%; construction, 7.4%.

Overview

The UAE is the third largest exporter of oil in the world and has one of the highest per-capita incomes. Oil and natural gas contributed 30% of GDP in 2015.

Recognizing the longer-term importance of economic diversification, the authorities have sought investment in tourism, finance and manufacturing. In 2015 the government laid out plans to increase the contribution to GDP of non-oil sectors to 80% by 2030. The economy as a whole returned to growth in 2010 after contracting sharply in 2009, and has continued to expand since then. The government has sought to reduce its spending after a sharp increase in the aftermath of the global financial crisis and the Arab spring uprisings. In 2011 government spending accounted for 26.9% of GDP before falling to 26.3% in 2012 and dropping further to 23.3% in 2014. Mid-term economic prospects were threatened by a steep decline in oil prices in 2015.

Currency

The unit of currency is the dirham (AED) of 100 *fil*s. Gold reserves are negligible. In March 2009 foreign exchange reserves were US$34,040m. and total money supply was DH 211,314m. Inflation rates (based on IMF statistics):

2006	2007	2008	2009	2010	2011	2012	2013	2014
9.3%	11.1%	12.3%	1.6%	0.9%	0.9%	0.7%	1.1%	2.3%

Budget

The fiscal year is the calendar year. General government revenue in 2012 totalled DH 391,323m. and expenditure DH 294,339m. Revenue is principally derived from oil-concession payments. Defence, education, and public order and safety are the main items of expenditure.

The United Arab Emirates has the highest corporate tax rate of any country, at 55% in 2014.

Performance

Real GDP growth rates (based on IMF statistics):

2006	2007	2008	2009	2010	2011	2012	2013	2014
9.8%	3.2%	3.2%	-5.2%	1.6%	4.9%	7.2%	4.3%	4.6%

In 2014 total GDP was US$399.5bn.

Banking and Finance

The UAE Central Bank was established in 1980 (Governor, Mubarak al-Mansouri). The largest banks are the National Bank of Abu Dhabi, with assets of US$102.4bn. in March 2015, Emirates NBD (assets of US$98.8bn.) and First Gulf Bank (US$57.8bn.).

There are stock exchanges in Abu Dhabi and Dubai.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

In 2011 carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy were the equivalent of 44.4 tonnes per capita, the highest of any sovereign country in the world.

Electricity

Installed capacity was 26.1m. kW in 2011. Production in 2011 was 99.14bn. kWh, with consumption per capita (2011) 10,200 kWh. Construction of the first of four nuclear plants began in July 2012. The United Arab Emirates is the first country to begin construction of its first nuclear power plant since construction was started on China's first plant in 1985. The first plant is scheduled to become operational in 2017. All four plants are projected to be completed by 2020.

Oil and Gas

Oil and gas provided about 33.7% of GDP in 2002. Oil production, 2014, 167.3m. tonnes. The UAE had reserves in 2014 amounting to 97.8bn. bbls. Abu Dhabi has 95% of the UAE's total oil reserves.

Abu Dhabi also has reserves of natural gas, nationalized in 1976. There is a gas liquefaction plant on Das Island. Proven natural gas reserves (2014) were 6.1trn. cu. metres. Natural gas production, 2012, 51.7bn. cu. metres.

Minerals

Sulphur, gypsum, chromite and lime are mined.

Agriculture

The fertile Buraimi Oasis, known as Al Ain, is largely in Abu Dhabi territory. A lack of water and good soil means few natural opportunities for agriculture but there is a programme of fostering agriculture by desalination, dam-building and tree-planting; strawberries, flowers and dates are now cultivated for export. In 2002 there were 75,000 ha. of arable land and 191,000 ha. of permanent cropland. Output, 2002 (in 1,000 tonnes): dates, 758; tomatoes, 231; cabbage, 30; cucumbers and gherkins, 26; pumpkins and squash, 21.

Livestock products, 2003 estimates (in 1,000 tonnes): meat, 74; milk, 56; eggs, 18. Livestock (2002): goats, 1.4m.; sheep, 554,000; camels, 246,000; cattle, 107,000; chickens, 12m.

Forestry

In 2010, 0.32m. ha. were under forests (4% of the total land area).

Fisheries

Total catch, 2010, 79,610 tonnes (exclusively marine fish).

INDUSTRY

The largest companies in the United Arab Emirates by market capitalization in March 2015 were Emirates Telecom (US$27.0bn.); First Gulf Bank (US$17.9bn.); and National Bank of Abu Dhabi (US$16.9bn.).

In 2008 manufacturing accounted for 12.1% of GDP. Industrial products include aluminium, cable, cement, chemicals, fertilizers (Abu Dhabi), rolled steel and plastics (Dubai, Sharjah), and tools and clothing (Dubai). The diamond business is becoming increasingly important in Dubai.

Labour

The labour force in 2013 was 6,232,000 (2,196,000 in 2003). 80.2% of the population aged 15–64 was economically active in 2013. In the same year 3.8% of the population was unemployed. In 2012, 12.9% of the labour force was female.

The United Arab Emirates had 19,000 people living in slavery according to the Walk Free Foundation's 2013 Global Slavery Index.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

There are free trade zones at Jebel Ali (administered by Dubai), Sharjah and Fujairah. Foreign companies may set up wholly owned subsidiaries. In 2010 there were over 6,400 companies in the Jebel Ali zone.

The United Arab Emirates, along with Bahrain, Kuwait, Oman, Qatar and Saudi Arabia entered into a customs union in Jan. 2003.

Imports and Exports

Imports in 2001 totalled DH 120.6bn.; exports DH 176.9bn. Principal imports: machinery and transport equipment, food and textiles. Crude petroleum and natural gas are the main exports.

Main import suppliers, 2001: Japan (10.2%), USA (9.6%), UK (8.8%), China (8.6%). Main export markets: Japan (36.4%), India (7.5%), South Korea (7.1%), Singapore (6.3%).

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

In 2008 there were 4,080 km of roads. There were 1,279,100 passenger cars (293 per 1,000 inhabitants), 48,200 buses and coaches and 39,400 lorries and vans in 2007.

Rail

Ethihad Rail, a rail network linking the seven Emirates, is under construction and is expected to become operational by 2018. Commercial operations on the first of three phases began in Dec. 2015.

A metro system opened in Dubai in Sept. 2009.

Civil Aviation

There are international airports at Abu Dhabi, Al Ain, Dubai, Fujairah, Ras al-Khaimah and Sharjah. Dubai is the busiest airport, handling 66,431,533 passengers and 2,435,567 tonnes of freight in 2013 (up from 37,441,440 passengers and 1,824,992 tonnes of freight in 2008). Dubai was the seventh busiest airport in the world overall and the second busiest for international passenger traffic in 2013. However, in 2014 it overtook London Heathrow as the world's busiest airport for international traffic. As recently as 2006 it did not even rank among the 30 busiest airports in the world. A second airport in Dubai (Dubai World Central—al-Maktoum International Airport) opened in June 2010. Initially only handling cargo flights, it began to be used for passenger traffic in Oct. 2013. Dubai set up its own airline, Emirates, in 1985. In 2013–14 it flew 215,353m. international scheduled passenger-km, the most of any airline; it carried 44.5m. passengers in 2013–14. Ethihad Airways, the national airline of the United Arab Emirates, began operations in Nov. 2003. Air Arabia is a low-cost airline based in Sharjah, flying to 35 destinations (mainly in Asia).

In the World Economic Forum's Global Competitiveness Report 2009–2010 the UAE ranked third for quality of air transport infrastructure.

Shipping

There are 15 commercial seaports, of which five major ports are on the Persian Gulf (Zayed in Abu Dhabi, Rashid and Jebel Ali in Dubai, Khalid in Sharjah, and Saqr in Ras al-Khaimah) and two on the Gulf of Oman: Fujairah and Khor Fakkan. Rashid and Fujairah are important container terminals. In Jan. 2009 there were 124 ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 913,000 GT.

Telecommunications

In 2013 there were 2.1m. main (fixed) telephone lines. In the same year active mobile phone subscriptions numbered 16.1m. (1,718.7 per 1,000 persons). In 2013 an estimated 88.0% of the population were internet users. In March 2012 there were 2.9m. Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The basic principles of the law are Islamic. Legislation seeks to promote the harmonious functioning of society's multi-national components while protecting the interests of the indigenous population. Each Emirate has its own penal code. A federal code takes precedence and ensures compatibility. There are federal courts with appellate powers, which function under federal laws. Emirates have the option to merge their courts with the federal judiciary.

The death penalty is in force; there were no executions in 2013, but one in 2014 and one again in 2015. The United Arab Emirates was ranked ninth of 102 countries for criminal justice and 29th for civil justice in the 2015 World Justice Project Rule of Law Index, which provides data on how the rule of law is experienced by the general public across eight categories.

Education

In 2007 there were 100,269 pre-primary pupils with 4,823 teaching staff, 284,034 primary pupils with 16,523 teaching staff and 310,999 secondary pupils with 24,152 teaching staff. In 2005–06 there were 14,984 students at the United Arab Emirates University and 2,925 students at the five colleges of Zayed University. The largest higher education institution is the system of the Higher Colleges of Technology, with 16,894 students in 2005–06. It has 17 campuses throughout the UAE. The adult literacy rate in 2005 was 90.0%. In 2009 public expenditure on education came to 1.2% of GDP and 23.4% of total government spending.

Health

In 2012 there were 65 private hospitals and 31 public hospitals. In the period 2000–10 there were 19.3 physicians for every 10,000 population, 40.9 nursing and midwifery personnel per 10,000 population, 4.3 dentistry personnel per 10,000 and 5.9 pharmaceutical personnel per 10,000. There were 11 hospital beds per 10,000 population in the period 2006–12.

RELIGION

Most inhabitants are Sunni Muslims, with a small Shia minority.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

The Cultural Sites of Al Ain (Hafit, Hili, Bidaa Bint Saud and Oases Areas), a property that includes circular stone tombs, wells, towers, palaces and administrative buildings dating back to 2500 BC, was inscribed on the UNESCO World Heritage List in 2011.

Press

In 2008 there were 13 daily newspapers (12 paid-for and one free) with a combined circulation of 943,000.

Tourism

In 2014 Dubai received 13.2m. tourists. In 2013, 2.8m. people stayed at hotels and hotel apartments in Abu Dhabi.

UNITED KINGDOM OF GREAT BRITAIN AND NORTHERN IRELAND

The Romans were dominant from AD 78. From the 3rd century they were increasingly harried by tribes of Celts from Scotland and Ireland and by Angles and Saxons from northern Germany. Celtic tradition, presided over by druids (religious leaders) and bards (storytellers), survived most successfully in Ireland and Wales where Roman influence was barely visible. Scotland resisted the Roman legions; Hadrian's Wall was built as a northern frontier between the Tyne and Solway Firth in the early 2nd century AD. Roman authority was challenged, notably by Boudicca, queen of the Iceni tribe of East Anglia. The rebellion and the brutal repression that followed led to a long period of peaceful settlement, during which the Romans established a road network linking new towns such as Londinium (London) and Eboracum (York). But by the 5th century Roman Britain had disintegrated into a collection of warring kingdoms. The English and Welsh economies thrived on the export of silver, lead, gold, iron and other minerals. With the spread of Christianity, chiefly by Irish missionaries, came the beginnings of an education and legal system.

After the withdrawal of the Roman legions in the early 5th century, the Romano-British were pushed back to higher land in the west by waves of invading Saxons, Angles and Jutes. Danish invasions in 865 established the Danelaw in northern England. Alfred the Great of Wessex resisted Danish expansion, strengthening Anglo-Saxon unity.

Norman Conquest

William, duke of Normandy, led the Norman Conquest and was crowned king in 1066. When William died in 1087 he left Normandy to his eldest son Robert, thus separating it from England. The French dialect known as Anglo-Norman was spoken by the ruling class in England for two centuries after the Conquest. The Norman heritage was preserved also in the overlap between French and English feudal lords. Henry II, the founder of the Plantagenet dynasty, was feudatory lord of half of France. But most of the French possessions were lost by Henry's son John. Thereafter, the Norman baronage came to regard themselves as English. The ambitions of Edward III began and those of Henry V renewed the Hundred Years War (1338–1453) with France, which ended with the loss of all the remaining French possessions except Calais.

The dynastic struggle between the rival houses of York and Lancaster was concluded by the invasion of Henry (VII) Tudor in 1485. His son, Henry VIII, asserted royal authority over the church and rejected papal authority. Tudor power reached its zenith with Elizabeth I, under whom Protestantism became firmly established in England. The Spanish Armada—an attempt by Catholic Spain to return England to the papal fold—was repelled in 1588.

The accession of James VI of Scotland to the English throne in 1603 brought the two countries into dynastic union. A struggle for supremacy between Crown and Parliament culminated in the Civil War, which started in 1642. Charles I was executed by Parliament in 1649, beginning the rule of Protector Oliver Cromwell. The Stuart monarchy was restored in 1660, on terms which conceded financial authority and thus decision-making power to Parliament. The attempt of James II, a Catholic, to restore the royal prerogative led to the intervention of William of Orange. James fled the country and the crown was taken by William (III) and his wife Mary as queen regnant. The accession of William involved England in a protracted war against France.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Remains of Stone Age settlements of hunters and fishermen suggest that the first inhabitants crossed from the low countries of Continental Europe on one or more wide causeways. By the time their successors had turned to subsistence farming, the land links to the continent had disappeared under the sea. These offshore islands created at the ending of the Ice Age shared, with nearside Europe, a slowly evolving agricultural economy using bronze and iron tools. The Ancient Britons were Celts, whose ancestors had migrated from the valleys of the Rhine, the Rhône and the Danube. Having asserted their command of northern Italy and France (Gaul), the Celts established a bridgehead to Ireland and thence to Britain. By 600 BC they were the undisputed dominant force of Western Europe and were to remain so until challenged by the Romans.

The parliaments of England and Scotland were united in 1707 under Queen Anne, the first British monarch. With the accession of the Hanoverian George I in 1714, the system of Parliamentary party government took hold. By the mid-18th century London had taken over from Amsterdam as the leading financial centre. With easy access to capital, entrepreneurs were able to invest in new, improved methods of production. With the harnessing of steam power made possible by the engineering genius of Thomas Newcomen and James Watt, economic enterprise shifted away from the southeast to the north of England, Scotland and South Wales where there were large reserves of coal. The demand for raw materials and the pursuit of markets for finished goods opened up trade throughout the civilized world and extended British influence.

American Colonies

Britain's first successful colonies in North America were established in the reign of James I of England (1603–25) and, soon afterwards, Bermuda, St Kitts, Barbados and Nevis were colonized. By the mid-17th century, Britain controlled the American east coast and had strong bases in India and in the West Indies, where the sugar economy was dependent on slave labour imported from West Africa. Critical to imperial expansion was Britain's rivalry with France. Britain emerged much strengthened from the War of the League of Augsburg (1689–97) and the War of Spanish Succession (1702–13) while French ambitions in Europe and beyond were severely curtailed. But it was the Seven Years' War (1756–63), in which France and Prussia were the chief contenders, that deprived France of her remaining territorial claims in North America and India and confirmed Britain as the world's leading maritime power.

Relations between Parliament and Crown went through an unsettled period in the reign of George III, who was blamed for the loss of the American colonies. The War of Independence ended with Britain's recognition of American right to self-government in 1783. In 1793 revolutionary France declared war and was not finally defeated until 1815. The demands of war further stimulated the new, steam-powered industries. Despite Britain finding itself the pre-eminent world power, after 1815 there was frequent unrest as an increasingly urban and industrial society found its interests poorly represented by a parliament composed chiefly of landowners. The Reform Act of 1832 extended representation in Parliament and further acts (1867, 1884, 1918 and 1928) led gradually to universal adult suffrage.

Ireland was brought under direct rule from Westminster in 1801, creating the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland. The accession of Victoria in 1837 was the beginning of an era of unprecedented material progress. Early industrial development produced great national wealth but its distribution was uneven and the condition of the poor improved slowly. Whereas early Victorian reforms were responses to obvious distress, governments after 1868 were more inclined towards preventive state action.

The Victorian empire included India, Canada, Australasia and vast territories in Africa and Eastern Asia. There was war with Russia in Crimea (1854–56); most wars, however, were fought to conquer or pacify colonies. After 1870 the Suez Canal enabled Britain to control the empire more efficiently; Britain became a 40% shareholder in 1875 and the controlling power in Egypt in 1882. The most serious imperial wars were the Boer Wars of 1881 and 1899–1902 against the Dutch settlers in South Africa. After a less than glorious victory, Britain negotiated a Union of South Africa, by which South Africa enjoyed the same autonomy agreed for Canada (1867), Australia (1901) and later New Zealand (1907). The 'dominion status' of these countries was clarified by the Statute of Westminster (1931).

With the spread of trade unionism and the emergence of the Labour Party, the gap between right- and left-wing politics widened after 1900. Labour had to wait until 1924 to form its first government but the Liberal landslide of 1906 carried forward the programme of social reform. David Lloyd George's People's Budget led to the abolition of the House of Lords' right to override the House of Commons while a contributory insurance scheme to cover basic health care, a modest benefit for the unemployed, free school meals and non-contributory old age pensions were all introduced.

On 3 Aug. 1914 Germany invaded Belgium. Britain was obliged by treaty to retaliate by declaring war. Four years of bloody trench warfare ensued in northern France and Belgium, with American intervention in 1917 helping to break the stalemate. The United Kingdom alone lost 715,000 soldiers and another 200,000 from the empire. Rebellions broke out in Ireland, born of the failure of successive attempts to agree a formula for Irish Home Rule. The issue was complicated by factional disagreement in southern Ireland and the wish of northern Ireland (Ulster) to remain in the United Kingdom. In 1920, after four years' conflict, the Government of Ireland Act partitioned the country. The northern six counties remained British, a parliament was created and a Unionist government took office. The southern 26 counties moved by stages to complete independence as the Irish Free State in 1922.

Second World War

A post-war boom was followed by a lengthy recession and heavy unemployment, exacerbated by the reluctance of politicians to adopt Keynesian economics. Germany revived as a military power in the 1930s, unchecked by reluctant neighbours after the punitive Treaty of Versailles. British Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain agreed to the German acquisition of parts of Czechoslovakia at the Munich Agreement in 1938. His policy of appeasement was much criticized, though it is arguable that Britain was in no position to go to war in 1938. Germany invaded Poland on 1 Sept. 1939. Britain, bound once more by treaty, declared war. In May 1940 Chamberlain was replaced as prime minister by Winston Churchill, who formed a national unity government. Although British military casualties were less than in the 1914–18 war, the civilian population was hit much worse during the Second World War; over 90,000 died, many as a result of German bombing in the Battle of Britain in 1940.

The war ended with German and Japanese defeat in 1945, by which stage the United Kingdom was virtually bankrupt. In 1939 the country had had assets of around £3,000m. By the end of the war, it owed about the same amount. A pre-war balance of payments deficit averaging £43m. a year had jumped to £750m. It was a time of great social upheaval. In the 1945 election a Labour government under Clement Attlee was returned with a large majority and a socialist programme, which emphasized wealth distribution above wealth creation, was implemented. It undertook to establish a free National Health Service, an ambitious housing programme and the state control of major industries. Subsequent governments modified but generally accepted the changes.

With Britain bankrupted, the United States stepped into the breach as the now undisputed free world leader. Fearing a European breakdown and a Communist takeover, the Marshall Plan was implemented by the USA, providing massive investment to rebuild Europe. An essential condition of the Marshall Plan was a joint effort of the participating nations to put their economies in order. But when continental leaders made the first tentative moves towards European unity, the UK was unwilling to be closely involved. With the independence of India (and Pakistan), the centrepiece of the British Empire, in 1947, decolonization took root, reaching its climax in the 1960s. Rather than to Europe, Britain now looked instead to a Commonwealth of freely associated states, recognizing the British monarch as symbolic Commonwealth head (some states chose to retain the monarch as head of state), and to the 'special relationship' with the United States.

In March 1957 France, Germany, Italy, Belgium, the Netherlands and Luxembourg signed the Treaty of Rome, which laid down terms for the European Economic Community. Two years later seven of the European countries outside the Common Market—Austria, Denmark, Norway, Portugal, Sweden, Switzerland and the UK—formed the European Free Trade Association. When the United Kingdom moved to join the EEC in 1962, five of the six members of the Community were willing to support the application but France vetoed it. A second application, in 1967, also failed but admission was achieved in 1973 under the Conservative government of Edward Heath. Membership of the Community was endorsed by referendum in 1975.

On the wider international scene, the limits of independent military action were made clear by the Suez crisis of 1956 when the UK, in collusion with France and Israel, used force to stop President Nasser of Egypt nationalizing the Suez Canal. Assumed American support was not forthcoming and the enterprise collapsed when the UK was left alone to cope with a potentially disastrous run on sterling. In the 1960s and 1970s the UK began to come to terms with advanced technology. Old-established industries such as textiles, shipbuilding, iron and steel and coal mining, the leaders of the first industrial revolution, gave way to manufacturing that relied on the microchip. Service industries, particularly in the financial sector, occupied an increasing share of the economy and trade restrictions were dismantled throughout the world.

In 1979 a Conservative government led by Margaret Thatcher came to power, committed to a free market economy. State industry was returned to private enterprise, the trade unions (blamed for the crippling 1978–79 Winter of Discontent) lost much of their power to direct government policy, and high earners were to benefit from lower taxation. A period of readjustment climaxed with a coal miners' strike during 1984–85 that turned into a trial of strength between the government and organized labour. The Labour Party and allied unions, themselves in the process of modernization, distanced themselves from the socialist rhetoric of the miners' leaders and the strike collapsed.

Despite rising living standards, there was concern about the quality of essential services such as education and health and disillusionment with a Conservative administration unable to construct a coherent European policy. In 1997 a Labour government, led by Tony Blair, was returned with a large Commons majority. Like Thatcher, he believed in the free market. In addition he introduced reforms in the system of government including the abolition of voting rights of hereditary peers in the House of Lords and the setting up of directly elected assemblies for Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland. Blair showed greater enthusiasm for involvement in Europe while the war in Iraq went some way to recementing the 'special relationship' with the USA. Fears of terrorist reprisals for British involvement in the Iraq war were realized on 7 July 2005 when bombs planted on three London underground trains and a bus killed 52 people. Gordon Brown, the chancellor during Blair's premiership, succeeded him as prime minister in June 2007. He was replaced by Conservative leader David Cameron, who took office in May 2010 in a coalition with the Liberal Democrats to end 13 years of Labour rule.

Cameron's tenure has been dominated by the UK's faltering economy in the wake of the global financial crisis, which has prompted severe cuts to public expenditure. In 2013 the prime minister pledged to hold a referendum following the 2015 general election—were the Conservatives to be returned to power—on whether to maintain British membership of the European Union. In Sept. 2014 Scottish voters rejected independence from the UK in a fiercely contested referendum. Cameron was re-elected to a second term as prime minister following the May 2015 general election in which, contrary to expectations, the Conservatives won a majority of seats.

²The final counts for England and Wales are believed to be over-stated as a result of an error in processing. The preliminary counts presented here rounded to the nearest hundred are thought to be more accurate.

³There was a high level of non-enumeration in Northern Ireland during the 1981 census mainly as a result of protests in Catholic areas about the Republican hunger strikes.

The land area of the United Kingdom in 2011 was 242,509 sq. km; density, 261 per sq. km. 79.8% of the population lived in urban areas in 2011. London had a 2011 population of 8,174,000.

UK mid-2014 population estimate: 65,596,752 (31,793,606 males; 32,803,146 females).

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 64.72m.

British Citizenship. Under the British Nationality Act 1981 there are three main forms of citizenship: citizenship for persons closely connected with the UK; British Dependent Territories citizenship;

British Overseas citizenship. British citizenship is acquired automatically at birth by a child born in the UK if his or her mother or father is a British citizen or is settled in the UK. A child born abroad to a British citizen is a British citizen by descent. British citizenship may be acquired by registration for stateless persons, and for children not automatically acquiring such citizenship or born abroad to parents who are citizens by descent; and, for other adults, by naturalization. Requirements for the latter include five years' residence (three years for applicants married to a British citizen). The Hong Kong (British Nationality) Order 1986 created the status of British National (Overseas) for citizens connected with Hong Kong before 1997, and the British Nationality (Hong Kong) Act 1990 made provision for up to 50,000 selected persons to register as British citizens.

Emigration and Immigration. Immigration is mainly governed by the Immigration Act 1970 and Immigration Rules made under it. British and Commonwealth citizens with the right of abode before 1983 are not subject to immigration control, nor are citizens of European Economic Area countries. Other persons seeking to work or settle in the UK must obtain a visa or entry clearance.

Total international migration estimates for recent years are as follows.

Inflows (in 1,000):

	Total	British	Non-British
2011	566	78	488
2012	498	80	418
2013	526	76	450
2014	632	81	551

Outflows (in 1,000):

	Total	British	Non-British
2011	351	149	202
2012	321	143	178
2013	317	134	183
2014	320	137	182

The number of immigrants into the UK in 2014, at 632,000, was the highest on record for a calendar year. The number of emigrants from the UK in 2008, at 427,000, was the highest on record for a calendar year. The number of emigrants in 2013 was the lowest since 2001. Net migration—the difference between immigration and emigration—was 312,000 in 2014 (the highest on record for a calendar year). Emigration from the UK last exceeded immigration into the UK in 1993.

In the year ending Sept. 2014 there were 107,565 grants of settlement in the UK (down from 241,586 in year ending Sept. 2010). In 2013, of the 154,689 permissions granted 36% were to nationals of South Asia and 24% to nationals of Sub-Saharan Africa. Main individual countries were: India, 26,198; Pakistan, 18,905; Nigeria, 7,699; China, 7,244; South Africa, 5,778; USA, 5,420. In 2013, 7.7% of the UK's population were foreign citizens, compared to the EU-wide average of 4.1%.

Asylum. In 2014 there were 24,914 applications for asylum, down from the high of 84,132 in 2002. The main countries of origin in 2014 were Eritrea, Pakistan, Syria, Iran and Albania. While respecting its obligations to political refugees under the UN Convention and Protocol relating to the status of Refugees, the government has powers under the Asylum and Immigration Act 1996 to weed out applicants seeking entry for non-political reasons and to designate certain countries as not giving risk of persecution.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

UK statistics, 2014 (provisional): births, 776,352; deaths, 570,341; marriages (2012, provisional), 301,254; divorces (2013), 126,716. UK rates (per 1,000 population), 2014: birth, 12.0; death, 8.8; marriage (2012, provisional), 4.7; divorce (2013), 2.0. The number of births in the UK in 2012 was the highest since 1972; the number of deaths in 2011 (552,232) was the lowest since 1930. The divorce rate in 2013 was at its lowest since the early 1970s. In 1976, for the only time in the 20th century, deaths in the UK (680,800) exceeded births (675,500). In 2012 cancer caused 166,000 deaths (29% of all deaths in the UK), making it the biggest killer, ahead of respiratory diseases at 80,000 (14%), and coronary heart disease at 74,000 (13%). UK life expectancy, 2008–10: males, 78.2 years; females, 82.3. The World Health Organization's World Health Statistics 2014 put the UK in joint 19th place in a 'healthy life expectancy' list, with an expected 71 years of healthy life for babies born in 2012. Annual population growth rate, 2001–10, 0.6%. In 2011, 16.8% of the total population was over 65, up from 14.2% in 1971. In 2014 there were 6,122 suicides (4,652 of whom were men), giving a suicide rate of 10.8 per 100,000 population. Infant mortality, 2014, 3.9 per 1,000 live births. Fertility rate, 2014, 1.8 births per woman. Of the 776,352 live births in the UK in 2014, 47.6% were to unmarried women, up from 6% in 1961 and 20% in 1986. In 1999 for the first time there were more births to women in the 30–34 age group in the UK than in the 25–29 bracket. 63% of dependent children lived in married couple families in the UK in 2010 and 23% in single-parent families.

Great Britain statistics, 2014: births, 751,958; deaths, 555,663; marriages (2012, provisional), 292,774; divorces (2012), 128,029. In 2010 the average household in Great Britain consisted of 2.4 people, down from 3.1 in 1961. A UNICEF report published in 2010 showed that 12.1% of children in the UK live in relative poverty (living in a household in which disposable income—when adjusted for family size and composition—is less than 50% of the national median income), compared to just 4.7% in Iceland.

England and Wales statistics (in 1,000), 2014: births, 695; deaths, 50; marriages (2012, provisional), 262; divorces (2012), 118. In 2012 the annual number of births in England and Wales was at its highest level since the early 1970s although it has fallen slightly since then. The under 18 conception rate for 2010 was the lowest since 1969, at 35.5 conceptions per 1,000 females aged 15–17. By 2010 the number of centenarians had reached an estimated 11,600 in England and Wales. The average age of first marriage in England and Wales in 2011 was 32 years for men and 30 years for women, up from 25 years for men and 23 years for women in 1971. 70% of marriages in England and Wales in 2011 were civil and 30% religious, compared to 51% religious and 49% civil in 1991. Same-sex civil partnerships were legalized in Dec. 2005 in the UK as a whole; same-sex marriage was legalized in England and Wales in July 2013 with the first such weddings taking place in March 2014.

Compared to the rest of the European Union, Britain has relatively high rates of drug use, although overall drug usage is falling. Figures released in 2013 showed that 18.7% of schoolchildren aged 15 years old in England had used cannabis at least once in the previous year. In 2013–14, 15.1% of 16 to 24-year-olds had used cannabis and 4.2% cocaine. A 2014 report found that in the previous year cocaine use in England and Wales among adults was the second highest in the European Union after Spain. There were 2,955 drug-related deaths (involving both legal and illegal drugs) registered in England and Wales in 2013 (the highest annual total since 2001). Male drug misuse deaths (involving illegal drugs) increased by 23% from 1,177 in 2012 to 1,444 in 2013. Female drug misuse deaths increased by 12% from 459 in 2012 to 513 in 2013.

CLIMATE

The climate is cool temperate oceanic, with mild conditions and rainfall evenly distributed over the year, though the weather is very changeable because of cyclonic influences. In general, temperatures are higher in the west and lower in the east in winter and rather the reverse in summer. Rainfall amounts are greatest in the west, where most of the high ground occurs.

London, Jan. 39°F (3.9°C), July 64°F (17.8°C). Annual rainfall 25" (635 mm). Aberdeen, Jan. 38°F (3.3°C), July 57°F (13.9°C). Annual rainfall 32" (813 mm). Belfast, Jan. 40°F (4.5°C), July 59°F (15.0°C). Annual rainfall 37.4" (950 mm). Birmingham, Jan. 38°F (3.3°C), July 61°F (16.1°C). Annual rainfall 30" (749 mm). Cardiff, Jan. 40°F (4.4°C), July 61°F (16.1°C). Annual rainfall 42.6" (1,065 mm). Edinburgh, Jan. 38°F (3.3°C), July 58°F (14.5°C). Annual rainfall 27" (686 mm). Glasgow, Jan. 39°F (3.9°C), July 59°F (15.0°C). Annual rainfall 38" (965 mm). Manchester, Jan. 39°F (3.9°C), July 61°F (16.1°C). Annual rainfall 34.5" (876 mm).

The Queen's legal title rests on the statute of 12 and 13 Will. III, ch. 3, by which the succession to the Crown of Great Britain and Ireland was settled on the Princess Sophia of Hanover and the 'heirs of her body being Protestants'. By proclamation of 17 July 1917 the royal family became known as the House and Family of Windsor. On 8 Feb. 1960 the Queen issued a declaration varying her confirmatory declaration of 9 April 1952 to the effect that while the Queen and her children should continue to be known as the House of Windsor, her descendants, other than descendants entitled to the style of Royal Highness and the title of Prince or Princess, and female descendants who marry and their descendants should bear the name of Mountbatten-Windsor.

Lineage to the throne. 1) Prince of Wales. 2) Prince William of Wales. 3) Prince George of Cambridge. 4) Princess Charlotte of Cambridge. 5) Prince Henry of Wales.

By letters patent of 30 Nov. 1917 the titles of Royal Highness and Prince or Princess are restricted to the Sovereign's children, the children of the Sovereign's sons and the eldest living son of the eldest son of the Prince of Wales.

Traditionally provision has been made for the support of the royal household, after the surrender of hereditary revenues, by the settlement of the Civil List soon after the beginning of each reign. The Civil List Act of 1 Jan. 1972 provided for a decennial, and the Civil List (Increase of Financial Provision) Order 1975 for an annual review of the List, but in July 1990 it was again fixed for one decade. The Civil List of 2012 provided for an annuity of £7,900,000 to the Queen annually; and £359,000 to Prince Philip. These amounts were the same as for the periods 2001–10 and 1991–2000. The income of the Prince of Wales derives from the Duchy of Cornwall. The Civil List was exempted from taxation in 1910. The Queen has paid income tax on her private income since April 1993. In Oct. 2010 Chancellor George Osborne announced that from 2013 the Civil List would be abolished. It has been replaced by a Sovereign Support Grant combining the Civil List and three Grants-in-Aid into one payment, with the Queen receiving 15% of the profits from the Crown Estate but two years in arrears. The Sovereign Grant is set at £42.8m. for 2016–17.

The supreme legislative power is vested in Parliament, which consists of the Crown, the House of Lords and the House of Commons, and evolved into something resembling its present form in the mid-14th century. A Bill which is passed by both Houses and receives Royal Assent becomes an Act of Parliament and part of statute law.

Parliament is summoned, and a General Election is called, by the sovereign on the advice of the Prime Minister. Under the Fixed Term Parliaments Act 2011 a Parliament lasts five years, normally divided into annual sessions. A session is ended by prorogation, and most Public Bills which have not been passed by both Houses then lapse, unless they are subject to a carry over motion. A Parliament ends by dissolution at the end of five years, if a motion of no confidence is passed and no alternative government is found or if a motion for an early general election is agreed by at least two-thirds of the House of Commons.

Under the Parliament Act 1911 all Money Bills (so certified by the Speaker of the House of Commons), if not passed by the Lords without amendment, may become law without their concurrence within one month of introduction in the Lords. Under the Parliament Acts 1911 and 1949 Public Bills introduced in the House of Commons, other than Money Bills or a Bill extending the maximum duration of Parliament, if passed by the Commons in two successive sessions and rejected each time by the Lords, may become law without being passed by the Lords provided that one year has elapsed between Commons second reading in the first session and passing of the bill by the Commons in the second session, and that the Bill reaches the Lords at least one month before the end of the second session. The Parliament Acts have been used four times since 1949: in 1991 for the War Crimes Act, in 1999 for the European Parliamentary Elections Act, in 2000 for the Sexual Offences (Amendment) Act and for the Hunting Act in 2004.

Peerages are created by the sovereign, on the advice of the Prime Minister, with no limits on their number. The following are the main categories of membership of the House of Lords (composition at 1 Nov. 2013, excluding 45 members who were on leave of absence, eight disqualified as senior members of the judiciary and one disqualified as an MEP):

Party	Excepted Hereditary			Total
	Life Peers	Peers	Bishops
Conservative	173	49	...	222

Total	670	89	23	782

Composition by party or group:

Conservative	222 (42 women)
Labour	221 (65 women)
Liberal Democrat	99 (31 women)
Crossbench	182 (38 women)
Archbishops and Bishops	23 (no women)
Other	35 (6 women)
Total	782

The House of Commons consists of Members (of both sexes) representing constituencies determined by the Boundary Commissions. Persons under 18 years of age (since July 2006—formerly 21 years), civil servants, members of the regular armed forces, policemen, most judicial officers and other office-holders named in the House of Commons (Disqualification) Act are disqualified from sitting in the House of Commons. In general hereditary peers are no longer disqualified from membership of the Commons, following the passage of the House of Lords Act 1999. However, the 92 hereditary peers who still sit in the Lords remain disqualified, as do the few hereditary peers who were given life peerages after the passing of the 1999 Act. Life peers are disqualified from membership of the House of Commons.

In order to vote at elections in the United Kingdom a person must be on the electoral register. No person may vote in more than one constituency at a general election. All persons may apply to vote by post if they are unable to vote in person, or if they fulfil certain legal requirements they may also be entitled to vote by proxy. UK Parliamentary elections are held under the first-past-the-post system, in which the candidate who receives the most votes is elected.

All persons over 18 years old and not subject to any legal incapacity to vote and who are either British citizens or citizens of the Republic of Ireland resident in the UK, or Commonwealth citizens resident in the UK are entitled to be included in the register of electors for the constituency containing the address at which they were residing on the qualifying date for the register, and are entitled to vote at elections held during the period for which the register remains in force.

Members of the armed forces and their spouses are entitled, if otherwise qualified, to be registered as 'service voters' provided they make a 'service declaration'. There are also special arrangements for Crown Servants employed overseas. British citizens living overseas may be registered to vote in the constituency where they were previously registered for up to 15 years after they left the UK.

The Parliamentary Voting System and Constituencies Act 2011 made significant changes to the arrangements for reviewing Parliamentary constituency boundaries. Section 10 of the Act amended sections 3 and 4 of the Parliamentary Constituencies Act 1986 altering the frequency and timing of the boundary reviews.

The Boundary Commissions were required to submit boundary reports to the Secretary of State before 1 Oct. 2013 and every five years subsequently—this replaced the requirement to report every 8 to 12 years. The intention was that the 6th review would be implemented for the 2015 general election and that the Boundary Commissions would commence work on the next review to take effect at the 2020 general election, with reviews to then take place every five years. However, in Jan. 2013 Parliament voted to end work on the 2013 Review, postponing the report of a first Review under the new statutory rules until 2018. The Electoral Registration and Administration Act 2013 made provision for this. The Parliamentary electorate of the United Kingdom and Northern Ireland in the register in Dec. 2013 numbered 46,139,940 (38,597,137 in England, 2,297,250 in Wales, 4,027,187 in Scotland and 1,218,366 in Northern Ireland).

At the UK general election held on 7 May 2015, 650 members were returned: 533 from England, 59 from Scotland, 40 from Wales and 18 from Northern Ireland. Every constituency returns a single member.

On 5 May 2011 a referendum was held on proposals to replace the ‘first past the post’ electoral system (in which each constituency returns the candidate polling the largest number of votes) with an ‘alternative vote’ system (AV). The promise of a referendum on the issue was a key condition for the Liberal Democrats joining the coalition government following the 2010 general election. Under the AV system, voters rank candidates in order of preference, with the votes of the candidate receiving least support redistributed until one candidate has over 50% of votes. The Liberal Democrats and the Labour Party campaigned in support of moving to AV while the Conservatives opposed it. Turnout was 42.0%, with 67.9% of votes against the change and 32.1% in favour.

One of the main aspects of the former Labour government’s programme of constitutional reform was Scottish and Welsh devolution. In the referendum on Scottish devolution on 11 Sept. 1997, 1,775,045 votes (74.3%) were cast in favour of a Scottish parliament and 614,400 against (25.7%). The turnout was 60.4%, so around 44.8% of the total electorate voted in favour. For the second question, on the Parliament’s tax-raising powers, 1,512,889 votes were cast in favour (63.5%) and 870,263 against (36.5%). This represented 38.4% of the total electorate.

On 18 Sept. 1997 in Wales there were 559,419 votes cast in favour of a Welsh assembly (50.3%) and 552,698 against (49.7%). The turnout was 51.3%.

For MPs’ salaries see below. Members of the House of Lords are unsalaried but may recover expenses incurred in attending sittings of the House by claiming a flat rate attendance allowance of £150 or £300. Additionally, Members of the House who are disabled may recover the extra cost of attending the House incurred by reason of their disablement. In connection with attendance at the House and parliamentary duties within the UK, Lords may also recover the cost of travelling to and from home.

The executive government is vested nominally in the Crown, but practically in a committee of Ministers, called the Cabinet, which is dependent on the support of a majority in the House of Commons. The head of the Cabinet is the Prime Minister, a position first constitutionally recognized in 1905. The Prime Minister’s colleagues in the Cabinet are appointed on his recommendation.

Salaries. In 2015–16 Members of Parliament received an annual salary of £74,000 (a rise of 10.3% on 2014–15). This then went up by 1.3% to £74,962 for 2016–17. Ministers who are MPs also receive a ministerial salary. In 2016–17 the Prime Minister is entitled to an annual salary of £143,462 and Cabinet Ministers £135,527. Following a scandal over MPs’ abuse of expenses, the Parliamentary Standards Act 2009 was passed in July 2009 creating the Independent Parliamentary Standards Authority (IPSA).

Reforms to the expenses system were introduced by the IPSA in May 2010.

The Privy Council. Before the development of the Cabinet System, the Privy Council was the chief source of executive power, but now its functions are largely formal. It advises the monarch to approve Orders in Council and on the issue of royal proclamations, and has some independent powers such as the supervision of the registration of the medical profession. It consists of all Cabinet members, the Archbishops of Canterbury and York, the Speaker of the House of Commons and senior British and Commonwealth statesmen. There are a number of advisory Privy Council committees. The Judicial Committee is the final court of appeal from courts of the UK dependencies, the Channel Islands and the Isle of Man, and some Commonwealth countries.

Freedom of Information Act. The Freedom of Information Act 2000 was implemented gradually between Nov. 2002 and Jan. 2005 when the General Right of Access to all information became law. Not to be confused with the Data Protection Act of 1998, the FOIA allows individuals to gain access to information held by public authorities in England, Wales and Northern Ireland. A separate Act applies in Scotland. Some information is exempted from release, for example security-related documents. An independent Commissioner for Information oversees the process.

Local Government

Administration is carried out by four types of bodies: (i) local branches of some central ministries, such as the Departments of Health and Social Security; (ii) local sub-managements of nationalized industries; (iii) specialist authorities such as the National Rivers Authority; and (iv) the system of local government described below. The phrase ‘local government’ has come to mean that part of the local administration conducted by elected councils. There are separate systems for England, Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland.

The Local Government Act 1992 provided for the establishment of new unitary councils (authorities) in England, responsible for all services in their areas, though the two-tier structure of district and county councils remained for much of the country. In 1996 all of Wales and Scotland was given unitary local government systems. In April 2009 a further nine single-tier unitary authorities were created in a bid to simplify the system.

Local authorities have statutory powers and claims on public funds. Relations with central government are maintained through the Department for Communities and Local Government in England, and through the Welsh and Scottish Executives. In England the Home Office is concerned with some local government functions. (These are performed by departments within the Welsh and Scottish Offices.) Ministers have powers of intervention to protect individuals’ rights and safeguard public health, and the government has the power to cap (i.e. limit) local authority budgets.

The chair of the council (known as the Mayor in boroughs and cities) is traditionally one of the councillors elected by the rest. However, the Mayor of London has been directly elected since 1999 and following the Local Government Act 2000, 15 councils in England have also introduced direct mayoral elections. Mayors of cities may have the title of Lord Mayor conferred on them. 51 towns in England, seven in Scotland, six in Wales and five in Northern Ireland have the status of city. Brighton and Hove, Wolverhampton and Inverness were awarded city status in 2000. In 2002 Preston, Newport, Stirling, Lisburn and Newry were given city status to mark Queen Elizabeth II’s golden jubilee; and in 2012 Chelmsford, Perth and St Asaph were granted city status to mark her diamond jubilee. This status is granted by the personal command of the monarch and confers no special privileges or powers. In Scotland, the chair of city councils is deemed Lord Provost, and is elsewhere known as Convenor or Provost. In Wales, the chair is called Chairman in counties and Mayor in county boroughs. Any parish or community council can by simple resolution adopt the style 'town council' and the status of town for the parish or community.

Functions. Legislation in the 1980s initiated a trend for local authorities to provide services by, or in collaboration with, commercial or voluntary bodies rather than provide them directly. In England, county councils are responsible for strategic planning, transport planning, non-trunk roads and regulation of traffic, personal social services, consumer protection, disposal of waste, the fire and library services and, partially, for education. District councils are responsible for environmental health, housing, local planning applications (in the first instance) and refuse collection. Unitary authorities combine the functions of both levels.

Finance. Revenue is derived from the Council Tax, which supports about one-fifth of current expenditure, the remainder being funded by central government grants and by the redistribution of revenue from the national non-domestic rate (property tax). Capital expenditure is financed by borrowing within government-set limits and sales of real estate.

Elections. England: The 36 metropolitan districts are divided into wards, each one of which is represented by three councillors. One-third of the councillors are elected each year for three years out of four. 35 metropolitan districts had an election on 5 May 2016. The 201 district councils and the 56 English unitary authorities are divided into wards. Each chooses either to follow the metropolitan district system, or to have all seats contested once every four years, or to elect by halves every two years. 70 district councils had an election on 5 May 2016. 19 unitary authorities had elections on the same day and there were also elections for four directly-elected mayors. The 27 county councils have one councillor for each electoral division, elected every four years. County council elections were last held on 2 May 2013.

In London there are 33 councils (including the City of London), the whole of which are elected every four years. The Greater London Authority has a 25-member Assembly, elected using AMS (Additional Member System), and a directly elected mayor, elected by the SV (Supplementary Vote) system. For the election of London Assembly members London is divided into 14 constituencies. Each constituency elects one member, in addition to which there are 11 'London Member' seats. Sadiq Khan (Lab.) was elected mayor on 5 May 2016. Elections for all 32 London boroughs were held on 22 May 2014.

Wales: The 22 unitary authorities are split between single and multi-member wards, elected every four years. Elections for 21 authorities were held on 3 May 2012. Anglesey council elections were postponed to May 2013.

Scotland: The 32 unitary authorities generally hold elections every four years. The last elections, held on 3 May 2012, were delayed by one year to avoid a clash with elections to the Scottish parliament in May 2011. The next elections are scheduled for 2017 and thereafter local elections will revert to a four-year cycle.

Northern Ireland: On 22 May 2014 elections were held for councils in 11 districts that were to replace the previous 26 districts delineated in 1973. The old and new councils ran in tandem until the end of March 2015, when the old councils ceased to operate.

Resident citizens of the UK, Ireland, a Commonwealth country or an EU country may vote and stand for election at age 18.

Election Results. English elections for 35 metropolitan boroughs, 19 unitary authorities and 70 districts on 5 May 2016 resulted in Labour control of 58 councils, Conservative 38, Liberal Democrat 4 and no overall control in 24. Labour lost 18 seats (1,326 overall), the Conservatives lost 48 seats (total 842), the Liberal Democrats gained 45 (total 378), UKIP gained 25 (total 58) and others lost 4 (total 165).

English elections for 36 metropolitan boroughs, 49 unitary authorities and 194 districts on 7 May 2015 resulted in Conservative control of 163 councils, Labour 74, Liberal Democrat 4, UK

Independence Party (UKIP) 1, others 1 and no overall control in 36. The Conservatives gained 541 seats (5,521 overall), Labour lost 203 (total 2,278), the Liberal Democrats lost 411 (total 658), UKIP gained 176 (total 202) and others lost 122 (total 667).

English elections for 36 metropolitan boroughs, 32 London Boroughs, 19 unitary authorities and 74 districts on 22 May 2014 resulted in Labour control of 82 councils, Conservative 41, Liberal Democrat 6 and no overall control in 32. Labour gained 324 seats (2,121 overall), the Conservatives lost 236 (total 1,364), the Liberal Democrats lost 310 (total 427), UKIP gained 161 (total 163) and others gained 61 (total 187).

English elections for 35 councils (of which 27 non-metropolitan county councils, seven unitary authorities and the Isles of Scilly) took place on 2 May 2013. Excluding the Isles of Scilly—where all the councillors are independents—the Conservatives secured control over 18 councils (a net loss of 10), Labour 3 (a net gain of 2) and no overall control in the remaining 13. The Conservatives lost 335 seats (for a total of 1,116), Labour gained 291 (538), the Liberal Democrats lost 124 (352), UKIP gained 139 (147) and others gained 29 (209).

Elections for 21 Welsh unitary authorities held on 3 May 2012 resulted in Labour control of ten councils, independent control of two and no overall control in nine councils. An election for Anglesey's unitary authority on 2 May 2013 resulted in a continuation of no party having overall control.

Elections for all 32 unitary authorities in Scotland held on 3 May 2012 resulted in Labour control of 4 councils, Scottish National Party control of 2 and independents 3, with no overall control in the remaining 23. The Scottish National Party won 424 seats; Labour, 394; the Conservatives, 115; the Liberal Democrats, 71; the Greens, 14; the Scottish Socialist Party, 1; and others, 201.

Elections for 11 new local district councils were held in Northern Ireland on 22 May 2014. None of the parties took control of a council. The Democratic Unionist Party took 130 seats, Sinn Féin 105, Ulster Unionist Party 88, Social Democratic and Labour Party 66, Alliance Party 32 and Traditional Unionist Voice 13. Independents and others took 26 seats.

Elections for London's Mayor and a 25-member London Assembly took place on 5 May 2016. Sadiq Khan (Lab.) won with 56.9% of the vote (including second preferences). He gained 1,310,143 votes (1,148,716 as first votes) against 994,614 votes (909,755 as first votes) for Conservative candidate Zac Goldsmith.

CURRENT LEADERS

David Cameron

Position

Prime Minister

Introduction

David Cameron became prime minister of a coalition government with the Liberal Democrats on 11 May 2010, five days after the general election that returned the Conservatives to power following 13 years of Labour rule. On taking office he became the UK's youngest prime minister in nearly 200 years. In government he has embraced broadly the same foreign policy as the previous Labour administration, aligning Britain with the USA and supporting British military involvement in Iraq and Afghanistan. However, he has adopted a more sceptical stance on further integration with the European Union, pledging to negotiate a new relationship with the EU and to put the outcome to a national referendum (which was scheduled to be held on 23 June 2016). Regarding economic policy, he has promised to reduce the large deficit in the public finances, while protecting key public services, but had to contend with the recurring threat of recession before signs of a recovery emerged by late 2013. His working relationship with the Liberal Democrats in his first term proved fractious but after his party attained an outright majority at the May 2015 polls he began his second premiership at the head of an all-Conservative government.

Early Life

David William Duncan Cameron was born on 9 Oct. 1966 in London, the son of a stockbroker and a baronet's daughter. He grew up in Peasmore, Berkshire and was educated at Heatherdown Preparatory School and Eton College. From 1985–88 he studied politics, philosophy and economics at Brasenose College, Oxford, after which he worked for the research department of the ruling Conservative party. He rose to lead the department's political section and in 1992 headed the economic section of the Conservatives' general election campaign team. Following their victory, he was appointed special adviser. He was working for the then Chancellor of the Exchequer, Norman Lamont, when the government was forced to withdraw sterling from the European Exchange Rate Mechanism on 'Black Wednesday', 16 Sept. 1992.

In May 1993 he was appointed adviser to the Home Office where, under home secretary Michael Howard, he helped introduce criminal justice legislation and promoted initiatives for private companies to build and run prisons. Cameron left politics in 1994 to work in corporate affairs at media company Carlton Communications, where for seven years he worked closely with chairman Michael Green, handling public relations and communications. At the 1997 general election he unsuccessfully contested Stafford for the Conservatives. In the June 2001 election, he was elected MP for Witney in Oxfordshire, increasing the Conservative share of the vote. In the subsequent Conservative leadership contest he initially supported modernizer Michael Portillo, before finally voting for Iain Duncan Smith, who was seen as an outsider candidate and a eurosceptic.

Cameron was appointed to the Home Affairs Select Committee, where he argued for a review of legislation on illegal drugs. He supported British participation in the 2003 Iraq war, in line with Conservative party policy, despite expressing doubts in the press.

In June 2003 he was appointed shadow minister in the Privy Council office and in Nov. that year became deputy chairman of the Conservative party under newly elected leader Michael Howard. Cameron was named spokesman on local government finance in March 2004 and in June 2004, following poor local election results for the Conservatives, he was given responsibility for party policy co-ordination.

Cameron played a key role in developing the party's 2005 general election manifesto, which promised to cut taxes, increase numbers of police and prisons, and oppose the introduction of a European constitution. In May 2005 the Conservatives gained votes but failed to prevent a third successive Labour victory. Cameron was subsequently appointed shadow education secretary and when Howard resigned in Sept. that year he entered the contest for the party leadership. He positioned himself as a modernizer, able to appeal to a wide range of voters, while also winning the support of eurosceptics with a pledge to withdraw Conservative Members of the European Parliament (MEPs) from the European People's Party (EPP—the EU's main centre-right grouping) on the grounds that it was too federalist. After initially trailing his main rival, right-winger David Davis, he won support with his speech at the party conference in Oct. 2005. In the final ballot on 6 Dec. 2005 he defeated Davis, taking 67% of the vote.

In his acceptance speech he promised to address the under-representation of women among Conservative MPs, to reformulate the party's approach to the inner cities and to end 'Punch and Judy politics' by supporting government initiatives where they were in line with Conservative thinking. In July 2006 Cameron fulfilled his campaign promise and withdrew Conservative MEPs from the EPP, forming a new alliance with Czech and Polish MEPs, a move criticized by some as taking the party too far to the right. Identifying himself as a liberal conservative on social matters, he spoke in support of civil partnerships for gay couples at the 2006 party conference. During the same year he introduced the 'A-list' initiative, which required constituency parties to choose their parliamentary candidate from a centrally approved list. Intended to improve representation of women and ethnic minority candidates, this met resistance at local level.

In March 2007 Cameron launched a review into the quality of childhood in Britain and promised to promote marriage through taxation reforms. He repeatedly depicted Britain as a society in moral and economic decline, an interpretation summed up in his phrase 'broken Britain', and declared his support for economic liberalism combined with the promotion of voluntary and charity work.

During 2007 he said that a Conservative government would aim for lower taxes, with priority given to reducing inheritance tax liability. These proposals were widely credited with prompting Labour government reforms to inheritance tax thresholds in Oct. 2007. Cameron also announced his intention to diversify provision of public services, in particular in education and the health service, proposing that funds could be diverted from state agencies to private enterprise or the voluntary sector.

In foreign policy Cameron continued to support British troop deployment in Iraq and Afghanistan. On domestic security issues, in June 2008 he opposed increasing the maximum period of detention without charge from 28 to 42 days, arguing that it threatened civil liberties. He advocated a new border protection service that would include armed police officers. In Feb. 2009 he pledged to repeal the Human Rights Act and replace it with a British bill of rights, in response to public anxieties that the Act could be used to protect criminals. Cameron advocated increased prioritization of environmental policies, including proposals to expand nuclear energy, and he opposed plans—at that time—to build a third runway at Heathrow airport.

At the start of the international financial crisis in the autumn of 2008, he supported the Labour governments bank rescue package, though he strongly criticized its record of financial management, particularly the high level of the public finance deficit. The subsequent downturn forced him to reassess his party's policies. In 2009 he announced that tax cuts would be contingent on economic improvement and confirmed that this meant postponing further inheritance tax reforms. In Dec. 2009 ratification of the Lisbon Treaty on the European constitution obviated his previous pledge to hold a referendum on the issue. Instead he promised to introduce a sovereignty bill that would prevent any further transfer of power to the EU without a referendum. Cameron fought the 2010 general election on a platform of reduced government spending (with the exception of the NHS and overseas aid), fewer business regulations and increased choice in health and education services.

Career in Office

Cameron became prime minister on 11 May 2010. Although the Conservatives failed to secure an absolute majority in the election of 6 May they did win 306 seats compared to 258 for Labour and succeeded in forming a coalition (the UK's first since the Second World War) with the Liberal Democrats, who had won 57 seats.

Cameron's key challenges were to address the faltering economy and the growing gap between rich and poor. Following an initial austerity budget in June 2010, the coalition government went on to announce a raft of deep, and unpopular, public spending cuts aimed at reducing the UK's large budget deficit and also measures overhauling the state welfare system to be implemented over the course of the parliament.

On security issues Cameron pledged to maintain Britain's military commitment to, and offensive engagement in, Afghanistan until the anticipated withdrawal of NATO combat troops from the country in 2014. In 2011 Britain played a prominent military role in UN-sanctioned NATO intervention in Libya to protect civilians against the Gaddafi regime, which was overthrown in Oct. that year. In early 2013 the UK government provided logistical support for French military intervention in Mali to counter Islamist extremists controlling much of the north of the country. However, in response to the continuing civil war in Syria and the Assad regime's apparent use of banned chemical weapons, the rejection by the House of Commons in Aug. 2013 of any military intervention by UK forces in the conflict at that time proved a major setback for Cameron's political authority.

In June 2010 a long-running independent inquiry into 'Bloody Sunday', in which unarmed Catholic civil rights demonstrators in Northern Ireland were shot dead by British troops in 1972, concluded that the killings were unjustified, prompting an apology by Cameron as prime minister on behalf of the British state.

In May 2011 voters in a national referendum rejected by a large margin a proposal to replace the first-past-the-post electoral system for the House of Commons with the alternative vote (AV) system. Cameron had strongly opposed the plan, placing considerable strain on his governing partnership with the Liberal Democrats, for whom such a change had been a central policy objective.

In Aug. 2011 the worst rioting and looting in decades erupted in London and other English major cities and was only contained by police after several days of disorder and mass arrests. The violence prompted Cameron to recall Parliament from its recess to debate appropriate responses.

The effects of the debt crisis in several eurozone countries further aggravated the UK's parlous financial situation in 2011 and 2012, and highlighted the political divisions within the Conservative Party towards the EU. In Oct. 2011 Cameron suffered a major revolt by Conservative MPs who, in defiance of government policy, supported a motion calling for a referendum on continued membership. The motion was only defeated with the support of Liberal Democrat and opposition Labour members. In Dec. 2011, aware of Conservative hostility to further European integration, Cameron vetoed an EU-wide treaty change proposing greater fiscal union on the grounds that it would undermine London's position as a leading international financial hub. Although popular with his own parliamentary eurosceptics, the move put Cameron's relationship with his pro-EU Liberal Democrat coalition partners under further pressure. This was exacerbated in Jan. 2013 when Cameron, acting after rising support for the anti-EU UK Independence Party in several parliamentary by-elections in 2012, promised a renegotiation of Britain's relationship with the EU and, more controversially, a referendum on continued membership after 2015. The following month Cameron claimed credit for spearheading successful intergovernmental negotiations to reduce the EU's seven-year budget for the first time in the Union's history.

The UK economy continued to struggle as official figures in Jan. 2012 indicated that net public sector debt (excluding bank bailouts) had risen above £1trn. for the first time and the Chancellor of the Exchequer warned in Dec. that year of extended austerity until 2018. There were, however, some signs of accelerating growth by the end of 2013, including a rise in employment figures and a more buoyant housing market. Discontent with the government's austerity measures had meanwhile been aggravated by public concerns over Cameron's championing of controversial reforms to the National Health Service and deep cuts in the level of social welfare provision.

In Jan. 2011 Cameron's director of communications, Andy Coulson, resigned amid allegations that he was aware of illegal telephone hacking by the national Sunday newspaper of which he was editor before his political appointment in 2007. The subsequent escalation of the controversy, which saw some commentators cast doubt on Cameron's personal judgment, led to an inquiry under Lord Justice Leveson that published its report in Nov. 2012 into the culture, practices and ethics of the newspaper industry. Cameron's rejection of Leveson's central recommendation of statutory press regulation again highlighted differences with his Liberal Democrat coalition partners. Tensions were aggravated further by the Conservatives' failure to fully embrace Liberal Democrat aspirations to reform the House of Lords and by the Liberal Democrat refusal to back Conservative efforts to update parliamentary constituency boundaries.

In addition to the coalition friction, Cameron courted further dissent within his own party in Jan. 2013 as government legislation to approve same-sex marriage failed to attract the support of over half of Conservative MPs and only passed with Liberal Democrat and opposition backing.

In Oct. 2012 Cameron and Alex Salmond, the First Minister of Scotland, agreed to stage a referendum in Sept. 2014 on Scottish independence from the rest of the United Kingdom. Cameron campaigned successfully against the breakaway, which was rejected by 55% of voters.

Throughout the parliament Cameron had faced increasing public pressure for government action on levels of immigration which, together with growing scepticism about continued EU membership, underpinned a surge in support in several by-elections in 2013 and 2014 for the UK Independence Party (UKIP). This was principally at the expense of the Conservative Party, which lost its Clacton constituency seat to a defector to UKIP. In July 2014, with the next general election on the political horizon, Cameron sought to revitalize his cabinet with an extensive reshuffle.

Despite polls suggesting a very close result, the Conservatives won an outright majority at the general election in May 2015 and Cameron formed an all-Conservative administration. In an early political setback, the new government announced its intention to impose swingeing cuts in welfare payments in continuance of its economic austerity strategy. However, proposed legislation limiting claimants' tax credits was controversially blocked by the House of Lords in Oct. and subsequently shelved in what was widely labelled a government climb-down. Cameron's authority was more persuasive in Dec. when the House of Commons voted overwhelmingly to extend British anti-jihadist military action from Iraq to Syria, reversing the earlier vote in Aug. 2013.

It was the contentious issue of EU membership that nevertheless dominated the first year of Cameron's second term of office.

Against the background of Europe's worst refugee crisis in recent times and domestic opposition within the UK to further immigration, he sought a renegotiation of Britain's position within the EU. In Feb. 2016 he claimed to have secured a draft deal offering revised terms of membership, including an 'emergency brake' on EU migrants' entitlement to in-work benefits, a mechanism allowing national governments to block some EU legislation, prohibition of discrimination between EU currencies and a declaration that the UK would not be committed to further political integration into the EU. Although this proposed settlement failed to satisfy eurosceptic opinion, particularly within Cameron's own Conservative Party, it was approved by the European Council later in the month and a national referendum on the UK's continued membership was consequently scheduled for 23 June.

DEFENCE

The Defence Council was established on 1 April 1964 under the chairmanship of the Secretary of State for Defence, who is responsible to the Sovereign and Parliament for the defence of the realm. Vested in the Defence Council are the functions of commanding and administering the Armed Forces. The Secretary of State heads the Department of Defence.

Defence policy decision-making is a collective governmental responsibility. Important matters of policy are considered by the full Cabinet or, more frequently, by the Defence and Overseas Policy Committee under the chairmanship of the Prime Minister.

Total number of the UK forces services personnel at 1 Jan. 2015 was 194,600 (down from 199,600 on 1 Jan. 2014), of which 154,200 were UK regular forces. There were an estimated 30,000 volunteer reservists. Women numbered 15,500 (10.1%) of the regular forces. In 2011 UK armed forces abroad included 18,150 personnel based in Germany and 2,430 in Cyprus. Deaths in the UK regular armed forces totalled 60 in 2015, down from 205 in 2009. The last British troops left Iraq in July 2009. In Sept. 2014 there were approximately 3,900 British troops serving with the International Security Assistance Force (ISAF) in Afghanistan, although the mission's mandate expired at the end of the year. The UK then contributed some 500 troops to the 13,000 personnel charged with training, advising and assisting the Afghan National Security Forces for at least a year under the aegis of Operation Resolute Support. British troop deaths in Iraq between 2003 and July 2009 totalled 179; deaths in Afghanistan between 2001 and Dec. 2014 when the ISAF mission ended totalled 453 (with the last ones in April 2014). Three deaths in 2015 brought the total up to 456 as at March 2016.

In Nov. 2010 the UK and France signed a Defence and Security Cooperation Treaty providing for the creation of a rapid reaction force, with troops from both nations called up as required after a joint political decision. Aircraft carriers may be jointly used under certain circumstances and there will be joint training exercises, pooling of resources for the maintenance and logistics of the A400M transport aircraft, and joint work on several other projects. The treaty provides for collaboration and co-operation through shared facilities to maintain the safety of the two countries' independent nuclear deterrents. As part of the requirements under the treaty, a new Technology Development Centre is being built at Aldermaston in the UK. This will support a joint Anglo/French Hydrodynamics Research Facility being constructed at Valduc in France. Known as the EPURE facility, it is replacing existing facilities in both countries.

The ban on gays and lesbians serving in the armed forces, which had been upheld by a House of Commons vote in May 1996, was suspended in Sept. 1999 after the European Court of Human Rights ruled that the current ban was unlawful.

Defence Budget. In accordance with the 2016 Budget the planned defence budget for 2016–17 is £35.0bn. (£27.7bn. resource budget). Defence spending in 2013 represented 2.4% of GDP, down from 5.2% in 1985. Per capita defence expenditure in 2013 totalled £551 (US$900).

Nuclear Weapons. Having carried out its first test in 1952, there have been 45 tests in all (the last in 1991). The nuclear arsenal consisted of about 150 Trident submarine-launched ballistic missile warheads in Jan. 2015 according to the Stockholm International Peace Research Institute. In addition there were some 65 non-deployed weapons in the nuclear stockpile.

Arms Trade. The UK is a net exporter of arms and over the period 2010–14 was the world's sixth largest exporter, with 4.4% of the global major weapons total.

Army

The Chief of the General Staff (CGS) is the 4-star commander and professional head of the Army and is responsible for implementing departmental decisions within it. He provides advice to ministers on managerial and operational issues and sets the strategic direction for the Army. CGS is also accountable for the efficiency and fighting effectiveness of the Army and the delivery of military capability.

CGS commands the Army through a single Army Staff that works out of the Army Headquarters in Andover, Hants. Subordinate to CGS are three 3-star commanders: Commander Land Forces (CLF); the Adjutant General (AG); and Commander Force Development and Capability (FD&Cap). CLF trains and commands the formations and units of the Army—the Land Forces. AG is the Principal Personnel Officer and leads the personnel and infrastructure areas. Comd FD&Cap leads on the development and delivery of optimum Army capability, including equipment and its support. Once soldiers are deployed abroad on operations, they are commanded from the tri-service Permanent Joint Headquarters (PJHQ) at Northwood, north London.

In line with the 2010 Strategic Defence and Security Review, the Army is reorganizing into a new structure called 'Army 2020'. The number of regular personnel is in the process of reducing to around 82,000 while the reserves are increasing to a trained strength of 30,000 to make a fully integrated Army of 112,000 by 2020. Women serve throughout the Army with the exception of the infantry and armoured roles, but a study of the physiological impact on women if they take on these roles was released in March 2016.

The British Army's four core purposes are to: protect the United Kingdom; fight the UK's enemies; prevent conflict; and deal with disaster.

The British Army is currently equipped with a wide range of equipment to meet present-day threats. This includes the tracked range of Challenger 2 main battle tanks, Warrior Armoured Infantry Fighting vehicles, AS90 self-propelled artillery and the new Scout range of vehicles. The wheeled fleet includes Mastiff, Ridgeback, Husky, Jackal and Foxhound vehicles, proven on operations in Iraq and Afghanistan. Additionally the British Army has a fleet of AH-64D Apache and Wildcat helicopters.

Navy

Control of the Royal Navy is vested in the Defence Council and is exercised through the Admiralty Board, chaired by the Secretary of State for Defence.

The First Sea Lord and Chief of Naval Staff is the professional head of the Royal Navy and is responsible to the Secretary of State for Defence for the fighting effectiveness, efficiency and morale of the Naval Service. Subordinate to the First Sea Lord, the Fleet Commander, based at Navy Command Headquarters (NCHQ) in Portsmouth, is responsible for operations, while the Second Sea Lord is responsible for naval personnel. Main naval bases are at Devonport, Portsmouth and Faslane.

The roles of the Royal Navy are war-fighting, maritime security and international engagement. The Navy are also the custodians of the UK's Continuous-At-Sea-Deterrent (CASD).

The strength of the fleet's major units in the respective years:

	2007	2008	2009	2010	2011	2012
Strategic Submarines	4	4	4	4	4	4
Nuclear Submarines	9	9	8	7	6	5
Aircraft Carriers	2	2	2	2	1	1
Destroyers	8	7	6	6	6	6
Frigates	17	17	17	17	13	13
Landing Platform Docks	2	2	2	2	2	2
Landing Platform Helicopters	1	1	1	1	1	1

The four Trafalgar class nuclear submarines in active service are scheduled to be replaced by seven Astute class nuclear submarines by 2024. In 2014, two of the new Astute class submarines (HMS Astute and HMS Ambush) were launched following successful sea trials. A third, HMS Artful, underwent sea trials in Aug. 2015. A further four submarines are under construction and set to be commissioned by 2024.

The Continuous-At-Sea-Deterrent is borne by four Vanguard class Trident submarines—Vanguard, Victorious, Vigilant and Vengeance. They are each capable of deploying 16 US-built Trident II D5 missiles. As at April 2016 the Royal Navy lacked an operational aircraft carrier following the decommissioning of the last remaining Invincible class ship, HMS Illustrious, in Aug. 2014. Ark Royal, its sister ship, was decommissioned in Jan. 2011 following the government's Strategic Defence and Security Review in 2010, and a third ship in the class, Invincible, was decommissioned in 2005. The Invincible class is set to be replaced by two large Queen Elizabeth class aircraft carriers. The first, HMS Queen Elizabeth, will launch for sea trials in the second half of 2016, joining the Fleet later in the decade. Her sister ship, HMS Prince of Wales, is scheduled to enter service by 2020. A Helicopter Carrier, HMS Ocean, specifically designed for amphibious operations, entered service in 1998 and was joined by two amphibious Landing Platform Docks (LPD), HMS Albion and HMS Bulwark, in 2003 and 2004 respectively.

The current class of Type 23 Frigates are set to be replaced by the Type 26 Global Combat Ship in the early 2020s. Along with six Type 45 Destroyers, these ships will form the backbone of the future surface fleet.

The Fleet Air Arm is currently going through a period of transition. The search and rescue role previously provided by Sea King helicopters was taken over by contractor-provided services in late 2015. The Navy has taken delivery of its first Wildcat helicopters (which replace the Lynx Mk3 and 8 helicopters), the Merlin Mk2 (replacing the Merlin Mk1) and, alongside the RAF will, in the near future, operate a Carrier Strike capability from the new aircraft carriers with a fleet of F-35 Lightning IIs (otherwise known as the Joint Strike Fighter), which are scheduled to come into service and deploy from the Queen Elizabeth class carriers in 2020.

The Maritime Reserve (MR) comprises the Royal Naval Reserve (RNR) and the Royal Marines Reserve (RMR), which are volunteer forces that currently number around 2,600 but are expected to grow to 4,150. The MR provides trained personnel to supplement regular forces.

The Royal Marines Command, 6,880-strong in Dec. 2012, provides a commando brigade comprising three commando groups. The Special Boat Squadron and specialist defence units complete their operational strength.

The total number of trained naval service personnel was 32,000 in Dec. 2012 (down from 45,600 in April 1996).

Air Force

The Royal Air Force was formed on 1 April 1918 through the merger of the Royal Flying Corps and the Royal Naval Air Service. It consists of one Command (AIR), which is divided into three Groups.

Number 1 Group, with bases such as Coningsby (Lincs), Leuchars (Fife), Lossiemouth (Moray) and Marham (Norfolk), is home to combat aircraft, support helicopters, and Intelligence, Surveillance, Target Acquisition and Reconnaissance platforms.

The Typhoon has replaced the Tornado F3 in the air defence role and continues to develop a potent air-to-ground capability, with the new Paveway IV bomb as well as Stormshadow missiles for long-range attack. The Harrier was retired in Dec. 2010 following the government's Strategic Defence and Security Review; its successor, the F-35 Lightning II (otherwise known as the Joint Strike Fighter or Joint Combat Aircraft), is set to come into service from 2018. Attack versions of the Tornado have been upgraded and fitted with RAPTOR (Reconnaissance Airborne Pod for Tornado). Remotely Piloted Air Systems (RPAS) continue to be widely employed in support of operations in Afghanistan.

There are two main pillars within Number 2 Group: Air Transport (AT)/Air-to-Air Refuelling (AAR) and Force Protection. AT/AAR provides rapid strategic and tactical reach, including the delivery of the airbridge to the Middle East and South Atlantic. Force protection comprises the RAF Regiment and RAF Police. The Operational Support Squadrons of the Royal Auxiliary Air Force are also included in No. 2 Group, as are Regiment Auxiliaries and the Mountain Rescue Service.

Mainstays of the AT and AAR force are the Hercules, TriStar and C-17s based at Brize Norton (Oxon). The A330 Voyager entered service in April 2012 and will gradually supplant the TriStar tankers and the Vickers VC-10 jetliners (the latter of which were retired in Sept. 2013) as part of the Future Strategic Tanker Aircraft programme. The A400M Atlas entered operational service in Sept. 2015 to replace the Hercules fleet, which is due to be withdrawn from service by 2022.

The UK Air Surveillance and Control Systems (ASACS) Force retains a fixed, static structure and continues to hold responsibility for the security of UK airspace; in platform terms this mission is delivered through Quick Reaction Alert Typhoons operating in the air-to-air role. In addition the Force has a deployable radar capability provided through No. 1 Air Control Centre, which has provided valuable support to ongoing operations in Afghanistan. Another key element is the space surveillance and missile warning radar at Fylingdales (N. Yorks).

Number 22 (Training) Group recruits and provides trained specialist personnel, and is also responsible for the Air Cadet Organisation and the University Air Squadrons. No. 22 Group also has responsibility both for the Royal Air Force Aerobatic Team (the Red Arrows) and the Royal Air Force Battle of Britain Memorial Flight.

In terms of personnel, on 1 Jan. 2015 Royal Air Force strength stood at 35,030 (8,010 officers).

ECONOMY

In 2013 services accounted for 78% of GDP, industry 21% and agriculture 1% (63%, 35% and 2% respectively in 1989). Manufacturing's share of GDP fell from 23% in 1989 to 11% in 2013.

According to the anti-corruption organization Transparency International, in 2015 the United Kingdom ranked equal 10th in the world in a survey of the countries with the least corruption in business and government. It received 81 out of 100 in the annual index.

In 2014 the UK gave US$19.3bn. in international aid, representing 0.70% of its GNI. In actual terms this made the UK the second most generous country in the world, and as a percentage of GNI the fifth most generous and one of only five industrialized countries to meet or exceed the UN target of 0.7%.

Overview

The UK's economy ranks among the world's largest. From 1993–2004 it enjoyed sustained non-inflationary growth, the longest period of expansion in 30 years. Light market regulation and labour market flexibility had meanwhile prompted higher levels of foreign direct investment than in most other European Union countries. However, the economy was severely dented by the global financial crisis that began in 2008. After two years of recession, GDP growth averaged 2.0% per year in the period 2010–14 against a backdrop of radical public spending cuts. As of March 2016 inflation was significantly below its 2% target at 0.3%, whilst central bank reserves stood at £375bn.

Despite almost closing the GDP per capita gap with other major European countries, the disparity with the most successful OECD members (Canada, the USA and Australia) has remained, partly because of weaker productivity levels in the UK. Annualized growth in output per hour worked between 2010 and 2014 averaged 0.4%, compared to 2.2% in the decade preceding the financial crisis. The service sector was responsible for 80% of GDP in 2014, with insurance and financial services comprising 32% of total services exports that year (higher than in any other G7 country). These services remain a major pillar of the economy thanks to the strength of the City of London and despite the impact of the financial crisis.

In 2014 manufacturing accounted for 11% of the economy in terms of gross value added. The UK is the world's eighth largest producer of manufactured goods, with pharmaceuticals, electronics and the automotive industry making important contributions. The country also has a 17% global market share in aerospace, second only to the USA. Despite the fall in manufacturing's share of overall output in absolute terms (the sector having accounted for over 30% of GDP in 1970), it had increased decade by decade until its peak in 2007. In 2014 nearly 70% of all R&D expenditure accrued to the sector and, according to global advisory firm KPMG, the UK was ranked second (alongside China and behind only the USA) as a top destination for global companies to derive manufacturing sales growth over the preceding two years. However, in 2015 and early 2016 the steel industry was hit by a series of closures and sell-offs that resulted in the loss of thousands of jobs and questions over the industry's long-term future.

As of 2016 the UK was still emerging from the economic turmoil prompted by the global financial crisis that had begun eight years earlier. British bank Northern Rock had been taken into 'temporary' public ownership in Feb. 2008 as a result of credit problems. In Oct. that year continued instability in the financial markets had prompted a government injection of £37bn. into three of the UK's biggest banks—Royal Bank of Scotland, Lloyds TSB and Halifax Bank of Scotland. In an attempt to stave off a deep recession, the Bank of England reduced interest rates six times from Oct. 2008 to a record low of 0.5% in March 2009 (a rate that still held as of March 2016). By July 2012 the Bank had injected a total of £375bn. into the economy as part of an asset-purchase programme labelled 'quantitative easing'.

The economy had fallen into recession following contractions in the second and third quarters of 2008 and continued to shrink up to Sept. 2009 (recording a drop of 4.2% over the year as a whole). Recovery in 2011 was impeded by high commodity prices and the effects of the eurozone debt crisis—the value of shipments to eurozone countries, the destination of two-fifths of British exports, fell significantly. Having relapsed into recession in the first half of 2012 before the London Olympic Games provided a boost in the third quarter of that year, the economy then grew by 2.2% in 2013, its fastest pace since 2010 (propelled by improved consumer confidence and the easing of credit conditions). The IMF confirmed that growth in 2014 was faster than in any other advanced economy, although the current account deficit reached a 50-year high of 5.1% before declining to 4.1% in 2015.

Unemployment had meanwhile risen to 8.4% in Dec. 2011, its highest level in over 15 years. However, it was recorded at 5.5% by the second quarter of 2015, aided by the creation of some 600,000 new jobs in the previous year.

The Code for Fiscal Stability, introduced in 1998, had stipulated that the government could borrow only to invest and not to support current spending. The 'sustainable investment' or 'golden' rule looked to maintain the public sector net debt below 40% of GDP over the economic cycle. However, in April 2009 the then Chancellor, Alistair Darling, had confirmed in his budget report that borrowing would be taken to record levels to help the government manage the escalating economic crisis. By Sept. 2009 overall government debt stood at 57.5% of GDP, its highest level since 1974.

In June 2010 the new Chancellor, George Osborne, introduced an emergency budget to tackle the deficit, which reached £155bn. in 2009–10. In Oct. 2010 he revealed details of a spending review which would see nearly 500,000 public sector jobs lost by 2014–15, an increase in the retirement age from 65 to 66 by 2020 and £7bn. in additional welfare budget cuts. He has since announced progressive increases in tax-free allowances for individuals, a reduction in the top rate of income tax from 50% to 45% and several freezes to fuel duty, while it is hoped that measures against tax avoidance and evasion will raise £12bn. in extra revenue over the lifetime of the present parliament. The implementation of welfare reforms—including plans to change to a 'universal credit' system merging several benefits into a single monthly payment that had been scheduled to come into effect nationwide in 2017—has begun to roll out. Proposed changes to welfare entitlements for the sick and disabled have meanwhile proved particularly controversial.

In Oct. 2013 house prices in England rose above the levels of the previous housing bubble in 2007, prompting fears of overheating. Although demand began to subside from mid-2014, house prices have continued to outstrip income increases, with the ratio in London even surpassing pre-crisis levels.

Current spending on health care and education is around the OECD average but public services are overstretched. Nonetheless the UK's benefit system is more strongly targeted to supporting low-income groups than in most other OECD countries. As an increasing number of companies close final salary pension schemes, the government has also encouraged individuals to take more responsibility for their retirement. Osborne announced a new lifetime ISA in his 2016 budget with the aim of making saving more flexible for the younger generations. Under the scheme, anyone under the age of 40 can save up to £4,000 annually up to the age of 50, with the government contributing an additional £1 for each £4 saved.

The UK's long-term economic outlook could be significantly impacted by the result of a referendum in June 2016 to decide whether the country continues its membership of the EU. Each side in the debate claims that their stance will render the greater economic benefit.

Currency

The unit of currency is the pound sterling (£; GBP) of 100 pence (p.). Before decimalization on 15 Feb. 1971 £1 = 20 shillings (s) of 12 pence (d). A gold standard was adopted in 1816, the sovereign, a £1, or twenty-shilling gold coin, weighing 7.98805 grams. It is eleven-twelfths pure gold and one-twelfth alloy. Currency notes for £1 and 10s. were first issued by the Treasury in 1914, replacing the circulation of sovereigns. The issue of £1 and 10s. notes was taken over by the Bank of England in 1928. 10s. notes ceased to be legal tender in 1970 and £1 notes (in England and Wales) in 1988. Sterling was a member of the exchange rate mechanism of the European Monetary System from 8 Oct. 1990 until 16 Sept. 1992 ('Black Wednesday').

Coinage. Estimated number of coins in circulation at 31 March 2013 was 28,848m., of which: £2, 394m.; £1, 1,526m.; 50p, 920m.;

20p, 2,704m.; 10p, 1,598m.; 5p, 3,813m.; 2p, 6,600m.; 1p, 11,293m. Total value: £3,911m.

Banknotes. The Bank of England issues notes in denominations of £5, £10, £20 and £50 up to the amount of the fiduciary issue. Under the provisions of the Currency Act 1983 the amount of the fiduciary issue is limited, but can be altered by direction of HM Treasury on the advice of the Bank of England.

All current series Bank of England notes are legal tender in England and Wales. Some banks in Scotland (Bank of Scotland, Clydesdale Bank and the Royal Bank of Scotland) and Northern Ireland (Bank of Ireland, First Trust Bank, Danske Bank—formerly Northern Bank—and Ulster Bank) have note-issuing powers.

The total amount of Bank of England notes in circulation at 28 Feb. 2013 was £58,022m.

Foreign exchange reserves were US$76,400m. and gold reserves 9.98m. troy oz in Dec. 2014 (22.98m. troy oz in April 1999, before the Treasury's announcement of its intention to sell nearly 60% of UK gold reserves over the medium term).

Budget

The fiscal year runs from 6 April to 5 April. The March 2016 Budget estimated public sector net borrowing for 2015–16 at £72.2bn. (against £75.3bn. predicted in the March 2015 Budget), with a forecast of £55.5bn. in 2016–17, then £38.8bn. in 2017–18, £21.4bn. in 2018–19 and –£10.4bn. in 2019–20. Public sector net debt as a proportion of GDP is put at 83.7% for 2015–16, declining to 82.6% in 2016–17 and falling further to 77.2% in 2019–20 and 74.7% in 2020–21. As a share of GDP, this will see borrowing fall from 3.8% in 2015–16 to become a net surplus of 0.5% in 2019–20 and again in 2020–21.

Public sector current spending for 2016–17 is set at £694.2bn., increasing to £749.8bn. by 2020–21. Net investment is to rise from £33.2bn. in 2015–16 to £36.4bn. in 2016–17 before rising further to £42.4bn. by 2020–21. The United Kingdom's budget deficit in 2014 was 5.7% of GDP (unchanged since 2013; 2012, 8.3%).

The independent Office for Budget Responsibility forecasts economic growth of 2.0% in 2016, followed by 2.2% in 2017 and 2.1% in 2018. Among the Budget's provisions was a rise in the personal income tax allowance for under-65s from £10,600 for 2015–16 and £11,000 for 2016–17 to £11,500 from April 2017. The income threshold (including personal allowance) qualifying for higher rate (40%) income tax rises from £42,385 to £45,000 in 2017–18. Meanwhile, Class 2 National Insurance contributions are set to be abolished for the self-employed from 2018.

Other changes to taxation included a cut in corporation tax (20% as of 2016) to 17% by 2020. The threshold for small business rate relief is to increase from £6,000 to £15,000 from April 2017, while an increase from April 2016 in stamp duty on commercial properties (0% on purchases with a value up to £150,000; 2% up to £250,000; 5% above £250,000) was expected to raise £500m. per year. Capital gains tax was cut from 28% to 20% (or 18% to 10% for basic rate tax payers) as of April 2016, although the changes do not apply to residential property. The insurance premium tax is set to increase by 0.5% to 10% in Oct. 2016, raising some £700m. set aside for investment in flood defences. The Chancellor predicted that closing tax loopholes would raise an additional £12bn. over the lifetime of the parliament.

The ISA limit increased to £20,000 per year from April 2017. Furthermore, from April 2017 anyone aged under 40 will be able to open a lifetime ISA and save up to £4,000 per year, with the government contributing an additional £1 for each £4 saved. The supplementary charge on oil and gas revenues was halved with immediate effect from 20% to 10%, saving the industry an estimated £1bn. An increase in the climate change levy is scheduled for 2019 and £730m. has been earmarked for the development of renewable technologies. Fuel duty was frozen for the sixth successive year, and duty on beer, cider and whisky was also kept at the same level.

Among the most controversial plans outlined by the Chancellor was the proposed reform of the Personal Independence Payment, which assists with meeting extra costs incurred as a result of a disability. The plans, expected to save the Treasury some £1.2bn., prompted the immediate resignation of Iain Duncan-Smith, secretary of state for work and pensions, who described them as 'not defensible in the way they were placed with a budget that benefits higher-earning taxpayers'. Other measures included the introduction of a sugar levy on soft drinks from 2018, which is predicted to raise £520m. Funding is also to be provided in a bid to convert all schools into academies by 2022. Meanwhile, the Money Advice Service, set up in 2010 to offer financial advice to consumers, is to be abolished.

The Financial Times commented on the budget: 'The winds of fate have blown George Osborne this way and that during his time as chancellor... Mr Osborne's Budget on Wednesday showed that while the UK is stronger than most other advanced economies, the weather has once again turned against him... The growth, debt and deficit outlook has weakened relative to the Autumn Statement in November... Mr Osborne's response was no doubt influenced by a desire not to upset voters ahead of the Brexit referendum in June. He punted issues off into the future... This was essentially a defensive but politically savvy holding Budget from Mr Osborne. Ahead of the EU referendum and with the world economy in a state of pervasive uncertainty, it is hardly surprising that he left fiscal nettles ungrasped. If macroeconomic winds do not turn in his favour again, the chancellor will face challenges from which it will take more than a sugar tax to distract the voters.' (Financial Times, 16 March 2016).

Performance

In 2014 total GDP was US$2,988.9bn. (£1,866.6bn.), the fifth highest in the world.

The provisional real GDP growth rate in 2015 according to the Office of National Statistics was 2.2%. With the economy contracting in both the second and third quarters of 2008 the UK went into recession for the first time since 1991. There were five consecutive quarters of negative growth before the economy expanded by 0.4% in the third quarter of 2009. It shrank again in the fourth quarter of 2010, by 0.4%. After a slight recovery there was a further recession in late 2011 and early 2012.

The Office for Budget Responsibility forecasts economic growth of 2.0% for 2016 and 2.2% in 2017.

The UK was ranked ninth in the Global Competitiveness Index in the World Economic Forum's Global Competitiveness Report 2014–2015. The index analyses 12 areas of competitiveness for over 100 countries including macroeconomy, higher education and training, institutions, innovation and infrastructure.

Banking and Finance

The Bank of England is the government's banker and the 'banker's bank'. It has the sole right of note issue in England and Wales. It was founded by Royal Charter in 1694 and nationalized in 1946. The capital stock has, since 1 March 1946, been held by HM Treasury. The Governor (appointed for five-year terms) is Mark Carney (b. 1965; took office July 2013).

The statutory Bank Return is published weekly. End-Dec. figures are as follows (in £1):

	Notes in circulation	Reserve balances	Other liabilities
2010	54,806,680,990	138,349,127,533	53,750,398,819
2011	57,832,034,050	164,040,488,814	68,373,860,405

In Dec. 2012 Britain's largest bank both by market capitalization and assets was HSBC with US$195,340m. and US$2,693bn. respectively.

50% of the adult population were using online banking in 2013, up from 35% in 2008.

In May 1997 the power to set base interest rates was transferred from the Treasury to the Bank of England. The government continues to set the inflation target but the Bank has responsibility for setting interest rates to meet the target. Base rates are now set by a nine-member Monetary Policy Committee at the Bank; members include the Governor. Membership of the Court (the governing body) was widened. The 1998 Act provides for Court to consist of the Governor, two Deputy Governors and 16 Directors.

The Act also established the MPC as a Committee of the Bank and sets a framework for its operations. Responsibility for supervising banks was transferred from the Bank to the Financial Services Authority (FSA). The bank rate was lowered from 1.0% to 0.5% on 5 March 2009 (the lowest since the Bank of England was founded in 1694).

The London Stock Exchange (called International Stock Exchange until May 1991) originated over 300 years ago, although a regulated stock exchange did not come into existence until 1801. In July 1991 the 91 shareholders voted unanimously for a new memorandum and articles of association which devolves power to a wider range of participants in the securities industry, and replaces the Stock Exchange Council with a 14-member board. The Financial Times Stock Exchange 100 (FTSE 100) ended 2015 at 6,242.3, down from 6,566.1 at the end of 2014 (falling 4.9% during the year).

Gross external debt totalled US$9,944,667m. in June 2012 (compared to US$9,964,658m. in June 2011).

The UK received US$72.24bn. worth of foreign direct investment in 2014, up from US$47.68bn. in 2013 but down from a record US$183.82bn. in 2005.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

In 2011 just 3.8% of energy consumption came from renewables (wind power, solar power, hydro-electric power, tidal power, geothermal energy and biomass), compared to the European Union average of 13.0%. A target of 15% has been set by the EU for 2020.

Environment

The UK's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2011 were the equivalent of 7.8 tonnes per capita. The UK's total emission of greenhouse gases is estimated to have fallen from 809m. tonnes in 1990 to 568m. tonnes by 2013. An Environmental Performance Index compiled in 2014 ranked the UK 12th in the world, with 77.4%. The index examined various factors in six areas—air pollution, biodiversity and habitat, climate change, environmental health, productive natural resources and water resources. In 2012 an estimated 46% of municipal waste was recycled or composted, compared to the European Union average of 42%.

Electricity

The Electricity Act of 1989 implemented the restructuring and privatization of the electricity industry. In 1999 the domestic electricity market (peak load below 100 kW) was opened to competition.

Generators. Under the 1989 Act, National Power and Powergen took over the fossil fuel and hydro-electric power stations previously owned by the Central Electricity Generating Board, and were privatized in 1991. A succession of takeovers and mergers saw the rapid diversification of the UK generation market. There were a total of 15 nuclear reactors in use in the UK at eight nuclear power stations in April 2016, all of which are operated by EDF Energy. It plans to build several new nuclear power stations in the UK. Construction of the first of these, at Hinkley Point in Somerset, was approved in Oct. 2013. It is scheduled to become operational in 2025.

Transmission. Since 2005 the electricity systems of England, Wales and Scotland have been integrated and operate under the British Electricity Trading and Transmission Arrangements (BETTA). National Grid became the operator of the UK transmission networks under the new arrangements.

Distribution and Supply. The 12 Area Boards were replaced under the 1989 Act by regional electricity companies (RECs), which were privatized in 1990; 14 public electricity suppliers then came into operation which, under the terms of the Utilities Act of 2000, needed separate licences for their supply businesses and distribution networks. Subsequent market liberalization has seen a sharp increase in the number of electricity suppliers in operation, the largest of which are British Gas, EDF Energy, E.ON UK, npower, ScottishPower and SSE.

Electricity Associations. The Electricity Association, formerly the trade association of the UK electricity companies, was replaced in Oct. 2003 by three industry bodies. The Energy Networks Association (ENA) represents the transmission and distribution companies for both gas and electricity. The Association of Electricity Producers (AEP) represented companies that generate electricity using coal, gas and nuclear power as well as renewable sources such as wind, biomass and water. The Energy Retail Association (ERA) represented Britain's domestic electricity and gas suppliers in the internal market. AEP and ERA were merged with the UK Business Council for Sustainable Energy (UKBCSE) in April 2012 to create Energy UK. A trade association for both the electricity and the gas sector, it represents a wide range of interests. It includes small, medium and large companies working in electricity generation, energy networks and gas and electricity supply, as well as a number of businesses that provide equipment and services to the industry.

Regulation. The Office of Electricity Regulation ('Offer') was set up under the 1989 Act to protect consumer interests following privatization. In 1999 it was merged with the Office of Gas Supply ('Ofgas') to form the Office of Gas and Electricity Markets ('Ofgem'), reflecting the opening up of all markets for electricity and gas supply to full competition from May that year, with many suppliers now offering both gas and electricity to customers.

Statistics. The electricity industry contributed about 0.95% of the UK's Gross Domestic Product in 2012. The installed capacity of all UK power stations in 2013 was 82,928 MW. In 2012 the fuel generation mix was: coal 38%, gas 28%, nuclear 18%, wind and solar 6%, other renewables 4%, hydro 1%, oil and other fuels 1%, and net imports 3%. At its peak in the 1990s nuclear power accounted for over a quarter of electricity generation. In the second quarter of 2015, 25.3% of UK power was generated from renewable—i.e. wind, solar, biomass and hydro-electric—sources (up from 16.7% in April–June 2014) compared with 20.5% from coal (down from 28.2% year-on-year). It was the first time the share from renewables was greater than that of coal; gas was the largest power source, at 30.2%. Final consumption in 2012 totalled 325.4 TWh, of which domestic users took 35.3%, industrial users 30-2%, and service and energy industry users 34-6%. Consumption per capita in 2011 was 5,516 kWh.

Oil and Gas

Production in 1,000 tonnes, in 2010: throughput of crude and process oils, 73,200; refinery use, 4,478. Refinery output: gas/diesel oil, 24,837; motor spirit, 19,918; fuel oil, 6,912; aviation turbine fuel, 5,781; butane, propane and other petroleum gases, 2,764; burning oil, 2,570; naphtha, 1,596; bitumen, 1,276. Total output of refined products, 68,394. Total indigenous oil production (2012), 45-0m. tonnes. The UK had proven oil reserves of 3-1bn. bbls in 2012. The UK became a net importer of oil in 2005, having been a net exporter since 1980.

The first significant offshore gas discovery was made in 1965 in the North Sea, followed in 1969 by the first commercial oil offshore. Offshore production of gas began in 1967 and oil in 1975.

Oil and gas have played an important part in providing the UK's energy needs. In 2013, either through direct use or as a source of energy to produce electricity, oil and gas accounted for some 77% (32% gas and 45% oil) of total UK energy consumption, with UK-based production supplying some 70% of all the oil and gas consumed. However, oil production peaked in 1999 as did natural gas production in 2000, and annual production of both has gradually been declining in the years since then. As of 2012 the UK ranks 23rd among the world's largest gas producers and 20th among the largest oil producers.

Oil products also provide important contributions to other industries, such as feedstocks for the petrochemical industry and lubricants for various uses. While the importance of oil as a source of energy for electrical generation and use by industry and commercial operations has declined with the increasing use of gas, oil still makes up around 17% of total industrial uses of energy. Its prime importance is in the transport sector, where it provides 98% of the total energy used.

The reform of the old nationalized gas industry began with the Gas Act of 1986, which paved the way for the privatization later that year of the British Gas Corporation, and established the Director General of Gas Supply (DGSS) as the independent regulator. This had a limited effect on competition, as British Gas retained a monopoly on tariff (domestic) supply. Competition progressively developed in the industrial and commercial (non-tariff) market.

The Gas Act 1995 amended the 1986 Act to prepare the way for full competition, including the domestic market. It created three separate licences—for Public Gas Transporters who operate pipelines, for Shippers (wholesalers) who contract for gas to be transported through the pipelines, and for Suppliers (retailers) who then market gas to consumers. It also placed the DGSS under a statutory duty to secure effective competition.

The domestic market was progressively opened to full competition from 1996 until May 1998.

In 1997 British Gas took a commercial decision to de-merge its trading business. Centrica plc (a new company) was formed to handle the gas sales, gas trading, services and retail businesses of BG, together with the gas production businesses of the North and South Morecambe Field. The remaining parts of the business, including transportation and storage and the international downstream activities, were contained in BG plc. As a result of subsequent changes, National Grid Gas plc now owns and operates the UK's national gas transmission system.

The Department of Energy and Climate Change (DECC) was created on 3 Oct. 2008 to oversee the UK oil and gas industry. The regulator for Britain's gas and electricity industries is Ofgem (Office of the Gas and Electricity Markets), created in 1999 through the merger of Ofgas (Office of Gas Supply) and Offer (Office of Electricity Regulation). Its role is to protect and advance the interests of consumers by promoting competition where possible.

A second European Directive was published in June 2003 with rules for the internal market in natural gas. Member states were allowed one year to execute its provisions; the UK implemented the directive in July 2004.

The UK became a net importer of gas in 2004. To help ensure a secure gas supply as the UK becomes more dependent on imported gas, several gas infrastructure projects have been developed. These supply the UK with gas from a number of sources, including Norway and the Netherlands. There is already a pipeline (the Interconnector) linking the UK and European gas grids via Belgium. This link to Continental Europe opened in Oct. 1998 and has an export capacity of 20-0bn. cu. metres a year and an import capacity of 25-5bn. cu. metres a year.

Proven natural gas reserves in 2012 were 200bn. cu. metres. Production was 41-0bn. cu. metres in 2012. Apart from in 2008 the UK's natural gas output has declined every year since 2000, when it totalled 108-4bn. cu. metres. In 2013, 40-5% of the UK's total gas supply was used by domestic users and 23-8% by electricity generators.

Wind

In March 2014 there were a total of 593 wind energy projects; there were 4,330 onshore wind turbines with a capacity of 7,102 MW for electricity generation and 1,075 offshore wind turbines with a capacity of 3,653 MW.

Minerals

Legislation to privatize the coal industry was introduced in 1994 and established the Coal Authority to succeed the British Coal Corporation. The Coal Authority owns almost all the UK's coal reserves; it licenses private coal mining and disposes of property not required for operational purposes. The Coal Authority also deals with the historic legacy of coal mining including handling subsidence claims in former mining areas, treating mine water discharges and dealing with surface hazards. In 2014 there were three underground coal mines and 31 opencast coal mines in operation. The last underground mine closed in Dec. 2015.

Total production from deep mines was 6-2m. tonnes in 2012 (204-7m. tonnes in 1958 and 83-8m. tonnes in 1988). Output from opencast sites in 2012 was 10-1m. tonnes (20-3m. tonnes in 1988). In 2013 inland coal consumption was 60-4m. tonnes.

Output of non-fuel minerals in Great Britain, 2009 (in 1,000 tonnes): sand and gravel, 65,301; limestone, 58,092; igneous rock, 38,860; sandstone, 8,542; salt, 5,855; clay and shale, 5,310; chalk, 4,047; industrial sand, 3,755; dolomite, 3,164; china clay, 988.

Steel and Metals

Steel production in recent years (in 1m. tonnes):

2006	13.9	2010	9.7
2007	14.4	2011	9.5
2008	13.5	2012	9.6
2009	10.1

Deliveries of finished steel products from UK mills in 2012 were 9-3m. tonnes, the same as in 2011, and comprised 4-2m. tonnes to the UK domestic market and 5-1m. tonnes for export. About 53% of UK steel exports went to other EU countries. UK steel imports in 2012 were about 5-5m. tonnes, with 72% coming from other EU countries. UK steel demand totalled 9-7m. tonnes in 2012. The main markets for steel in the UK are construction, engineering, automotive and metal goods.

The steel contained in imported goods was 9-4m. tonnes in 2012, down from 9-9m. tonnes in 2011.

Since late 2015 the UK steel industry has been in crisis as a result of global overproduction and several major British manufacturing plants have been faced with closure.

Agriculture

Land use in 2014: agriculture, 71%; other, 29%. In 2014 agricultural land in the UK totalled (in 1,000 ha.) 18,456, comprising agricultural holdings, 17,257; and common rough grazing, 1,199. Land use of agricultural holdings in 2014 (in 1,000 ha.): permanent grassland (including rough grazing), 9,755; crops, 4,722; temporary grass under five years old, 1,396; uncropped arable land, 160; other, 1,224. Area sown to crops in 2014 (in 1,000 ha.): arable crops, 4,559 (of which wheat, 1,936; barley, 1,080; oilseed rape, 675); horticultural crops (including fruit), 164.

In 2014 there were 6.28m. ha. of arable land and 32,000 ha. of orchard fruit, soft fruit and wine grapes.

The area of fully organic farmland in the UK in 2014 was 548,000 ha. Including land in conversion, 3.2% of the agricultural land was managed organically in 2014. Organic food sales for the UK in 2013 totalled £1.66bn., unchanged from 2012.

The number of people working on agricultural holdings in June 2014 was 476,000, of whom 294,000 were farmers, partners, directors or spouses; 11,000 salaried managers; and 170,000 other workers including 66,000 seasonal, casual or gang workers. Of the 170,000 regular workers, 40,000 were part-time. There were some 212,000 commercial farm holdings in 2014. Average size of holdings, 81 ha.

Total income from farming was £5.4bn. in 2014 (£5.5bn. in 2013). Trade in food, feed and drink accounted for 6.1% of exports and 9.5% of imports in 2014, up from 5.8% of exports and 8.8% of imports in 2010.

Area given over to principal crops in the UK:

	Area (1,000 ha.)
	Wheat	Sugar beets	Potatoes	Barley	Oilseed rape	Oats
2006	1,836	130	140	881	568	121
2007	1,830	125	140	898	674	129
2008	2,080	120	144	1,032	598	135

Poultry	167,667	166,200	152,753	163,867	162,551

Livestock products in 2014, provisional (1,000 tonnes): beef and veal, 871; pork and pork products, 820; lamb and mutton, 307; poultry meat, 1,648; cheese, 414. Hens' eggs, 864m. dozen in 2014 (provisional). Milk production in 2014 (provisional) totalled 14,656m. litres.

In Feb. 2001 the UK was hit by a major foot-and-mouth disease epidemic for the first time since 1967-68, with 2,030 confirmed cases and 4,050,000 animals being slaughtered during the months which followed. In the 1967-68 epidemic there had been 2,364 cases with approximately 434,000 animals slaughtered.

Forestry

In March 2011 the area of woodland in the United Kingdom was 3,078,000 ha., of which the Forestry Commission/Forest Service owned or managed 870,000 ha. In the year to March 2011, 8,200 ha. of new woodland was created (800 ha., Forestry Commission/Forest Service; 7,300 ha., private woodlands) and 14,000 ha. restocked after harvesting. UK production of roundwood in 2010 was 9.7m. cu. metres underbark.

In 2010 imports of wood products (wood, panels, pulp and paper) were equivalent to 41.6m. cu. metres underbark; exports 5.5m. cu. metres underbark.

	646.3	635.6	679.5	719.9	828.2

In Dec. 2010 the fishing fleet comprised 5,800 registered vessels excluding Channel Islands and the Isle of Man. Major fishing ports: (England) Plymouth, Brixham, Newlyn; (Scotland) Peterhead, Lerwick, Fraserburgh, Scrabster; (Northern Ireland) Ardglass. Peterhead is the UK's leading port, with 106,600 tonnes of fish landed by UK vessels in 2011 (with a value of £132.5m.).

In the period 2008-10 the average person in the UK consumed 19.9 kg of fish and fishery products a year, compared to the European Union average of 23.1 kg.

INDUSTRY

The UK's largest company by market capitalization on 1 April 2016 was HSBC at £85,307m. (US$122,567m.), with British American Tobacco the second largest at £76,125m. (US$109,374m.).

In 2013 there were 137,045 manufacturing firms, of which 435 employed 500 persons or more, and 80,230 employed four or fewer. Manufacturing contributed 11% of GDP in 2013.

Chemicals and chemical products. Manufacturers' sales (in £1m.) in 2012: primary plastics and other plastic products, 18,577; pharmaceutical preparations and basic pharmaceutical products, 12,289; paints, etc., 2,950; organic basic chemicals, 2,940; perfumes and toilet products, 2,392; soap, detergents, and cleaning and polishing preparations, 1,784; fertilizers, etc., 1,603; rubber products (excluding tyres and tubes), 1,602.

Construction. Total value (in £1m.) of constructional work in Great Britain in 2011 was 121,737, including new work, 77,590 (of which housing, 21,322). Cement production, 2011, 8,529,000 tonnes; building brick production, 2011, 1,554m. units.

Electrical Goods. Manufacturers' sales (in £1m.) in 2012: electric motors, generators and transformers, 3,060; electricity distribution and control apparatus, 2,173; electronic and electric wires and cables, 1,425; electric lighting equipment, 1,334; electric domestic appliances, 1,156.

Engineering, machinery and instruments. Manufacturers' sales (in £1m.) in 2012: motor vehicles, 28,004; aircraft and spacecraft and related machinery, 17,265; electrical and electronic equipment for motor vehicles, and parts and accessories, 9,140; instruments and appliances for measuring, testing and navigation, 5,658; machinery for mining, quarrying and construction, 4,471; engines and turbines (excluding aircraft, vehicle and cycle engines), 4,232; repair and maintenance of aircraft and spacecraft, 3,333; installation of industrial machinery and equipment, 3,273; repair of machinery, 3,034; medical and dental instruments and supplies, 2,629; lifting and handling equipment, 2,326; non-domestic cooling and ventilation equipment, 2,260. Car production, 2012, 1,464,906 units (up 7.7% from 2011).

Foodstuffs, etc. Manufacturers' sales (in £1m.) in 2012: operation of dairies and cheese making, 6,792; meat processing and preservation, 5,835; bread, fresh pastry goods and cakes, 5,752; production of meat and poultry meat products, 5,593; mineral water and soft drinks (2010), 3,963; cakes, biscuits, preserved pastry goods and rusks, 3,958; prepared feeds for farm animals, 3,787; grain mill products, 3,736; distilled, rectified and blended spirits, 3,723; beer, 3,269; poultry processing and preservation, 2,947; fruit and vegetable processing and preservation, 2,900; cocoa, chocolate and sugar confectionery, 2,613; fish and fish products processing and preservation, 2,220; condiments and seasonings, 1,812; tobacco products, 1,793. Alcoholic beverage production, 2014: beer, 4,120.4m. litres (5,746.1m. litres in 2004); wine, 1,256.2m. litres (1,272.5m. litres in 2004); spirits, 866.8m. litres (408.1m. litres in 2004).

Metals. Manufacturers' sales (in £1m.) in 2012: metal structures and parts of structures, 5,463; machining, 4,559; forging, pressing, stamping and roll forming of metal, 1,968; weapons and ammunition, 1,881; tubes, pipes and other products of steel, 1,557; light metal packaging, 1,395; doors and windows of metal, 1,286.

Textiles and clothing. Manufacturers' sales (in £1m.) in 2012: finished textile articles (excluding apparel), 1,169; weaving and finishing of textiles, 1,100; outerwear (excluding workwear) and underwear, 1,010.

Wood products, furniture, paper and printing. Manufacturers' sales (in £1m.) in 2012: printing (excluding newspapers), 7,722; corrugated paper and paperboard, and containers of paper and paperboard, 3,921; furniture (excluding office, shop and kitchen furniture), 3,208; builders' carpentry and joinery, 2,983; paper and paperboard, 2,481.

Labour

In 2009 the UK's total economically active population (i.e. all persons in employment plus the claimant unemployed) was (in 1,000) 31,374 (13,452 females), of whom 28,979 (12,542 females) were in employment, including 24,937 (12,280 females) as employees and 3,850 (1,103 females) as self-employed. In 1999 only 27,167,000 people had been in employment, representing an increase of 1,812,000 in ten years. However, the recession of 2008–09 resulted in the number of employees in 2009 being the lowest since 2005. UK employees by form of employment in 2009 (in 1,000): real estate renting and business activities, 4,504; wholesale and retail trade, repair of motor vehicles, motorcycles and household goods, 4,435; health and social work, 3,527; retail trade except motor vehicles/motorcycles and repair of household goods, 2,808; manufacturing industry, 2,642; education, 2,460; hotels and restaurants, 1,787; transport, storage and communications, 1,530; public administration and defence, compulsory social security, 1,465; construction, 1,277; wholesale trade and commission trade except motor vehicles, 1,102; financial intermediation, 1,002; agriculture, hunting, forestry and fishing, 255. Between June 2005 and June 2009 employment in service industries increased by 117,000 (despite the recession) while employment in manufacturing declined by 460,000 over the same period.

Registered unemployed in UK (in 1,000; figures seasonally adjusted): 2004, 1,424 (4.8%); 2005, 1,465 (4.9%); 2006, 1,669 (5.4%); 2007, 1,653 (5.3%); 2008, 1,776 (5.7%); 2009, 2,395 (7.6%). Of the 2,395,000 unemployed people in 2009, 1,465,000 were men and 930,000 women. The number of jobless people was 1,685,000 in the period Nov. 2015–Jan. 2016 (down from both 1,713,000 in the three months from Aug.–Oct. 2015 and 2,335,000 in the period Nov. 2013–Jan. 2014). The number of unemployed people on job seekers allowance (the 'claimant count') was 716,700 in Feb. 2016, the lowest figure since 1975—giving a rate of 2.1%, down from 2.4% in Feb. 2015. The unemployment rate on the International Labour Organization (ILO) definition, which includes all those who are looking for work whether or not claiming unemployment benefits, was 5.1% in the period Nov. 2015–Jan. 2016 (down from 5.7% for the same period the previous year). In the period Nov. 2015–Jan. 2016, 630,000 young people in the UK aged 16–24 were unemployed (a rate of 13.7%), down from 743,000 in Nov. 2014–Jan. 2015. In 2012 the UK was one of only three OECD countries (the others being Hungary and Ireland) in which the share of 15–24 year-olds who were unemployed or inactive and neither in education nor training was higher for the native rather than foreign-born population. Long-term unemployment rose from 22.6% of the labour force between 16 and 64 having been out of work for more than a year in the period Oct.–Dec. 2008 to 35.9% in the period Nov. 2013–Jan. 2014.

There were 4,794,000 private sector businesses in the UK at the start of 2012 (up from 3,559,000 in 2002), of which 4,788,000 were small and medium-sized enterprises (fewer than 250 employees) and 4,580,000 had fewer than ten employees. 2.6m. businesses were registered at Companies House in March 2012.

Workers (in 1,000) involved in industrial stoppages (and working days lost): 2009, 209 (0.46m.); 2010, 133 (0.37m.); 2011, 1,530 (1.39m.); 2012, 237 (0.25m.); 2013, 395 (0.44m.). In 1975, 6m. working days had been lost through stoppages. Between 2007 and 2013 strikes cost Britain an average of 25 working days per 1,000 employees a year.

The Wages Councils set up in 1909 to establish minimum rates of pay (in 1992 of 2.5m. workers) were abolished in 1993. The former Labour government that came to power in May 1997 was committed to the introduction of a National Minimum Wage and established a Low Pay Commission to advise on its implementation. It is currently £6.70 for 21–24 year olds, £5.30 for 18–20 year olds and £3.87 for 16–17 year olds above school leaving age. A National Living Wage of £7.20 an hour was introduced in April 2016 for workers aged 25 and above who were not in the first year of an apprenticeship. In April 2010 the median gross salary for full-time employees was £25,900 (£28,100 for men and £22,500 for women). Median hourly pay for full-time employees excluding overtime in April 2010 in the UK was £11.09 (£12.35 for males and £9.90 for females). Median weekly earnings in April 2010 were highest in London, at £642.30, and lowest in Northern Ireland, at £440.80.

Britons in full-time employment worked an average of 41.3 hours a week in 2012, compared to the EU average of 40.7 hours. In the period Oct.–Dec. 2013, 3.35m. Britons (2.47m. men and 876,000 women) worked more than an average of 48 hours a week, with 104,000 working more than 78 hours a week.

The UK had 4,000 people living in slavery according to the Walk Free Foundation's 2013 Global Slavery Index.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

Imports of goods in 2014 totalled £419,104m. and exports £295,432m. In 2012 the UK's goods imports from other EU member countries totalled £206,378m. and from non-EU member countries £200,972m., compared to £201,988m. and £196,525m. respectively in 2011. Goods exports to other EU member countries in 2012 totalled £150,144m. and to non-EU member countries £149,313m., compared to £158,764m. and £139,657m. respectively in 2011.

In 2012 other EU members accounted for 50.4% of the UK's foreign trade in goods (50.7% of imports and 50.1% of exports). The USA accounted for 10.0% of foreign trade and the rest of the world 39.6%. Germany was the UK's biggest trading partner overall in 2012, followed by the USA, the Netherlands, France and China.

In 2012 finished manufactured goods accounted for 47.0% of the UK's imports and 47.0% of exports; semi-manufactured goods 24.4% of imports and 28.5% of exports; oil 13.2% of imports and 12.9% of exports; and food, beverages and tobacco 9.0% of imports and 5.9% of exports.

The UK's trade deficit in goods in 2012 totalled £107,893m., up from £47,619m. in 2002 and £13,050m. in 1992. The largest deficit in goods in 2012 was with China (£21.0bn.) and the largest surplus with the USA (£11.2bn.). The last trade surplus in goods was in 1982. The trade surplus in services in 2012 was £73,992m., giving a trade deficit in goods and services combined of £33,901m. The last trade surplus in goods and services combined was in 1997. The UK is the eleventh biggest exporter of goods but the fifth biggest importer, and the second biggest exporter of services (after the USA) but again the fifth biggest importer.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

Responsibility for the construction and maintenance of trunk roads belongs to central government. Roads not classified as trunk roads are the responsibility of county or unitary councils.

In 2009 there were 394,428 km of public roads in Great Britain, classified as: motorways, 3,560 km; trunk roads, 8,596 km; other major roads, 38,173 km; minor roads, 344,099 km.

In 2013 journeys by car, vans and taxis totalled 641bn. passenger km (less than 60bn. in the early 1950s). Even in the mid-1950s passenger km in cars, vans and taxis exceeded the annual total in 2013 by rail. Licensed motor vehicles in 2014 included 28,183,000 private cars, 1,067,000 mopeds, scooters and motorcycles, 109,000 buses and 3,890,000 other private and light goods vehicles. In 2010, 75% of households had regular use of a car/van with 33% of households having use of two or more cars/vans. New vehicle registrations in 2014, 2,973,700. Driving tests, 2014–15 (in 1,000): applications, 1,659; tests held, 1,533; tests passed, 719; pass rate, 47% (51% among males and 44% among females). The driving test was extended in July 1996 to include a written examination.

Road casualties in Great Britain in 2014, 194,477 (the first increase in casualties since 1997) including 1,775 killed. Britain has one of the lowest death rates in road accidents of any industrialized country, at 2.9 deaths per 100,000 people in 2014.

Journeys by bus and coach in 2013 totalled 40bn. passenger-km. Passenger journeys by local bus services, 2013–14, 5,206m. For London buses see Transport for London under Rail, below.

Rail

In 1994 the nationalized railway network was restructured to allow for privatization. Ownership of the track, stations and infrastructure was vested in a government-owned company, Railtrack, which was privatized in May 1996.

Passenger operations were reorganized into 25 train-operating companies, which were transferred to the private sector by Feb. 1997. By March 1997 all freight operations were also privatized. On 3 Oct. 2002 a new private sector not-for-dividend company limited by guarantee, Network Rail, took over from Railtrack plc as network owner and operator. The train-operating companies pay Network Rail for access to the rail network, and lease the rolling stock from three private-sector companies.

The rail network comprises 15,754 route km (around a third electrified). Annual passenger-km were a record 59.2bn. in 2013.

There were 1.59bn. passenger journeys in 2013–14 on franchised operated services (the highest total since the 1920s and more than double the 735.1m. of 1994–95). The amount of freight moved declined gradually over many years to 13.0bn. tonne-km in 1994–95 but has generally since risen and totalled 22.7bn. tonne-km in 2013–14, the highest total since the early 1970s. In 2013–14 a total of seven people (excluding trespassers) were fatally injured on the railways and nine people on level crossings (compared to 1,713 deaths in road accidents in 2013).

Eurotunnel PLC holds a concession from the government to operate the Channel Tunnel (49.4 km), through which vehicle-carrying and Eurostar passenger trains are run in conjunction with French and Belgian railways. Since Nov. 2007 a new dedicated high-speed line connects the Channel Tunnel to London St Pancras. Domestic trains began using the line on regular services in Dec. 2009.

Transport for London (TfL) is accountable to the Mayor of London and is responsible for implementing his Transport Strategy as well as planning and delivering a range of transport facilities. TfL's remit covers London Underground, London Overground, London Buses, the Docklands Light Railway and Croydon Tramlink. It is also responsible for London River Services, Victoria Coach Station and London's Transport Museum, and provides transport for users with reduced mobility via Dial-a-Ride. As well as running the central London congestion charging scheme, TfL manages a 580 km network of London's main roads, all 4,600 traffic lights and the private hire trade. It also provides grants to London Boroughs to fund local transport improvements.

Every weekday in Greater London, 5.4m. journeys are made on London's buses, 3m. on the underground, 7m. on foot, 0.3m. by bicycle, 0.2m. by taxi, 160,000 on the Docklands Light Railway and 60,000 on Croydon Tramlink.

The privately franchised Docklands Light Railway is operated in east inner London.

There are metros in Glasgow and Newcastle, and light rail systems in Birmingham/Wolverhampton, Blackpool, Manchester, Nottingham and Sheffield.

Civil Aviation

All UK airports handled a total of 251.7m. passengers in 2015 (238.6m. in 2014). London area airports (Heathrow, Gatwick, London City, Luton, Southend and Stansted) handled 155.3m. passengers in 2015.

Busiest airports in 2015:

	Total passengers	Of which on international flights		Freight (tonnes)
Heathrow	74,985,748	69,812,535	Heathrow	1,496,551
Gatwick	40,269,087	36,663,907	East Midlands
Manchester	23,136,047	20,713,032	International	291,689
Stansted	22,519,178	20,768,053	Stansted	207,996
Luton	12,263,505	11,317,069	Manchester	100,021
			Gatwick	73,371

Heathrow was the world's third busiest airport for passenger traffic in 2013 and Europe's busiest. For many years more international passengers used Heathrow than any other airport in the world, but in 2014 it lost this status to Dubai.

Following the Civil Aviation Act 1971, the Civil Aviation Authority (CAA) was established as an independent public body responsible for the economic and safety regulation of British civil aviation. A CAA wholly owned subsidiary, National Air Traffic Services, operates air traffic control. Highlands and Islands Airports Ltd is owned by the Scottish Ministers and operates 11 airports.

There were 20,161 civil aircraft registered in the UK at 3 Oct. 2011.

British Airways is the largest UK airline in terms of numbers of aircraft and distance flown, with a total of 259 aircraft in service at 31 Dec. 2013. It operates long- and short-haul international services, as well as an extensive domestic network. British Airways also has franchise agreements with two other operators: Comair and Sun-Air of Scandinavia. In April 2010 it signed a deal with the Spanish airline Iberia to merge and create a new company called International Airlines Group, which was formed in Jan. 2011. However, both carriers still operate under their own brands. Other major airlines in 2013 (with numbers of aircraft): easyJet (198); Flybe (64); Jet2.com (49); Monarch Airlines (39); Thomas Cook Airlines (31); Thomson Airways (63); Virgin Atlantic (39). According to CAA airline statistics, in 2008 easyJet overtook British Airways in terms of passengers carried to become the largest airline as measured by passenger numbers—in 2013 easyJet carried 50,963,923 passengers (44,722,874 on international flights) and flew 407.2m. km while British Airways carried 38,318,147 passengers in 2013 (33,154,062 on international flights), although it flew 673.9m. km. In April 2003 British Airways announced that Concorde, the world's first supersonic jet which began commercial service in 1976, would be permanently grounded from Oct. 2003. In recent years low-cost airlines such as Ryanair and easyJet have become increasingly popular. Serving mostly domestic and European destinations, they recovered quickly from the slump of the airline business following the attacks on New York and Washington on 11 Sept. 2001.

The most frequently flown route into and out of the UK in 2010 was Heathrow–New York John F. Kennedy and vice-versa (2,517,896 passengers), followed by Heathrow–Dublin and vice-versa (1,493,613) and Heathrow–Hong Kong Chek Lap Kok and vice-versa (1,386,779).

Shipping

The UK-owned merchant fleet (trading vessels over 100 GT) in Dec. 2012 totalled 675 ships of 21.6m. DWT and 20.4m. GT. These included 109 fully cellular container vessels, 107 general cargo vessels, 92 bulk carriers and 56 oil tankers. The UK-owned and registered fleet totalled 331 ships of 6.8m. DWT.

The shipping industry is estimated to have made a £5.6bn. value-added contribution to the UK GDP in 2011. 73% of shipping revenue in 2011 came from freight (including freight transported by passenger vessels) and 27% from carrying passengers.

The principal ports in terms of freight are (with 1m. tonnes of cargo handled in 2012): Grimsby and Immingham (60.1), London (43.7), Milford Haven (39.8), Southampton (38.1), Tees and Hartlepool (34.0). Total traffic in 2012 was 500.9m. tonnes. Felixstowe is by far the busiest container port, handling 3,249 TEUs (twenty-foot equivalent units) in 2011. Southampton handled 1,590 TEUs in 2011. Dover is by far the busiest port for passenger traffic (11,918,000 international passenger movements in 2012, although down from 16,329,000 in 2002), with Holyhead the second busiest (1,898,000 in 2012).

Inland Waterways

There are approximately 3,500 miles (5,630 km) of navigable canals and river navigations in Great Britain. In July 2012 a new waterways charity, the Canal & River Trust (CRT), took over the management of the network of waterways in England and Wales from British Waterways. In Scotland the 137 miles (220 km) of inland waterways remain under the control of British Waterways (operating as Scottish Canals), which is a stand-alone public body of the Scottish government.

River navigations and canals managed by other authorities include the Thames, Great Ouse and Nene, Norfolk Broads and Manchester Ship Canal.

The Association of Inland Navigation Authorities (AINA) represents some 30 navigation authorities providing an almost complete UK coverage.

Telecommunications

In 2015 there were four main mobile networks—EE, O2, Vodafone and Three. BT (then British Telecom) was established in 1981 to take over the management of telecommunications from the Post Office. In 1984 it was privatized as British Telecommunications plc, changing its trading name from British Telecom to BT in 1991. For many years it was the only fixed line provider, but there are now a large number of other providers with increased choice for consumers and a wide range of packages and deals.

By 1998 all of the BT system was served by digital exchanges. In 2010 there were 33,409,000 fixed telephone subscribers (equivalent to 538.5 per 1,000 population). 84% of UK households had a fixed telephone in 2012, a fall from a peak of 95% in the late 1990s as increasingly UK consumers use email, speaking on a mobile phone and in particular text messaging. At the end of 2013, 75% of fixed lines were residential and 25% business. There were 67,000 public payphones in 2012 (146,000 in 2002). BT had the largest share of the landline phone market at the end of 2011 with 36%, followed by Virgin Media with 12%. The other main providers are Sky and TalkTalk.

In 2013 there were 82.7m. mobile telephone subscriptions in the UK, up from 43.5m. in 2000 and 1.1m. in 1990. 15% of people lived in a mobile-only household in 2013. In 2012 each mobile subscriber sent on average 153 text messages per month. However, the volume of mobile originated calls fell by 1% year-on-year to 122bn. minutes.

Telecommunications services are regulated by the Office of Communications (Ofcom) in the interests of consumers. According to its Communications Market Report 2012, 58% of adults in a survey stated that they use text messaging to communicate with friends and family at least once a day, 49% face-to-face, 47% voice call on a mobile phone, 32% social networking, 30% email, 29% voice call on a landline and 26% instant messaging. Among those aged 16–24, 90% stated that they used text messaging, 63% face-to-face, 67% voice call on a mobile phone, 73% social networking, 43% email, 15% voice call on a landline and 62% instant messaging.

In March 2012 there were 30.5m. Facebook users (48% of the total population of the UK).

Internet

At 30 June 2012 there were 52.7m. internet users in the UK (the third highest total in Europe after Russia and Germany), just over 83% of the total population. In 2010, 77% of households had a home computer. 80% of households in Great Britain had internet access in 2012, up from 57% in 2006; 93% of households with internet access were using fixed broadband, up from 69% in 2006. According to a report published in 2011, 67% of children aged 5–7, 82% of 8–11 year olds and 90% of 12–15 year olds used the internet at home. In 2011, 45% of internet users used a mobile phone to connect to the internet, up from 23% in 2009. E-commerce amounted to £50bn. in 2011, the second highest in the world after the USA. In Dec. 2010 there were 36.9 wireless broadband subscribers per 100 inhabitants and 31.9 fixed broadband subscribers per 100.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

England and Wales. The legal system of England and Wales, divided into civil and criminal courts, has at the head of the superior courts, as the ultimate court of appeal, the Supreme Court of the United Kingdom, which hears appeals for all civil law cases in the UK and for all criminal cases in England, Wales and Northern Ireland (Scotland's highest court for criminal cases is the High Court of Justiciary). The Supreme Court was created as a result of the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 and came into being on 1 Oct. 2009, replacing the Appellate Committee of the House of Lords. In order that civil cases may go from the Court of Appeal (or Court of Session in Scotland) to the Supreme Court, it is necessary to obtain the leave of either the respective lower court, although in certain limited cases an appeal may lie direct to the Supreme Court from the decisions of the High Courts.

Appeals may be brought to the Supreme Court provided that the lower Court is satisfied that a point of law 'of general public importance' is involved, and that it is in the public interest that a further appeal should be brought. As a judicial body, the Supreme Court consists of 12 Justices drawn from the different jurisdictions of the United Kingdom, and is led by the President of the Supreme Court, the Rt Hon. the Lord Neuberger of Abbotsbury. The final court of appeal for certain of the Commonwealth countries, the UK overseas territories and the British Crown dependencies is the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council which includes Justices of the Supreme Court, other Lords of Appeal and Privy Councillors who hold or have held high judicial office in the UK or Privy Councillors who are or have been Chief Justices or Judges of certain Superior Courts of Commonwealth countries.

Civil Law. The main courts of original civil jurisdiction are the High Court and county courts.

The High Court has exclusive jurisdiction to deal with specialist classes of case, e.g. judicial review. It has concurrent jurisdiction with county courts in cases involving contract and tort although it will only hear those cases where the issues are complex or important. The High Court also has appellate jurisdiction to hear appeals from lower tribunals.

The judges of the High Court are attached to one of its three divisions: Chancery, Queen's Bench and Family; each with its separate field of jurisdiction. The Heads of the three divisions are the Lord Chief Justice (Queen's Bench), the Vice-Chancellor (Chancery) and the President of the Family Division. In addition there are 107 High Court judges (100 men and seven women). For the hearing of cases at first instance, High Court judges sit singly. Appellate jurisdiction is usually exercised by Divisional Courts consisting of two (sometimes three) judges, though in certain circumstances a judge sitting alone may hear the appeal. High Court business is dealt with in the Royal Courts of Justice and by over 130 District Registries outside London.

County courts can deal with all contract and tort cases, and recovery of land actions, regardless of value. They have upper financial limits to deal with specialist classes of business such as equity and Admiralty cases. Certain county courts have been designated to deal with family, bankruptcy, patents and discrimination cases.

There are about 220 county courts located throughout the country, each with its own district. A case may be heard by a circuit judge or by a district judge. Defended claims are allocated to one of three tracks—the small claims track, the fast track and the multi-track. The small claims track provides a simple and informal procedure for resolving disputes, mainly in claims for debt, where the value of the claim is no more than £5,000. Parties should be able to do this without the need for a solicitor. Other claims valued between £5,000 and £15,000 will generally be allocated to the fast track, and higher valued claims which could not be dealt with justly in the fast track may be allocated to the multi-track.

Specialist courts include the Patents Court, which deals only with matters concerning patents, registered designs and appeals against the decision of the Comptroller General of Patents. Cases suitable to be heard by a county court are dealt with at Central London County Court.

The Court of Appeal (Civil Division) hears appeals in civil actions from the High Court and county courts, and tribunals. Its President is the Master of the Rolls, aided by up to 38 Lords Justices of Appeal (as at July 2008) sitting in six or seven divisions of two or three judges each.

Civil proceedings are instituted by the aggrieved person, but as they are a private matter, they are frequently settled by the parties through their lawyers before the matter comes to trial. In very limited classes of dispute (e.g. libel and slander), a party may request a jury to sit to decide questions of fact and the award of damages.

Criminal Law. At the base of the system of criminal courts in England and Wales are the magistrates' courts which deal with over 95% of criminal cases. In general, in exercising their summary jurisdiction, they have power to pass a sentence of up to six months' imprisonment (or 12 months for consecutive sentences) and to impose a fine of up to £5,000 on any one offence. They also deal with the preliminary hearing of cases triable at the Crown Court. In addition to dealing summarily with over 2.0m. cases, which include thefts, assaults, drug abuse, etc., they also have a limited civil and family jurisdiction.

Magistrates' courts normally sit with a bench of three lay justices. Although unpaid they are entitled to loss of earnings and travel and subsistence allowance. They undergo training after appointment and they are advised by a professional legal adviser. Full-time District Judges (magistrates' courts), formerly known as stipendiary magistrates, also deal with cases in magistrates' courts. Generally they possess the same powers as the lay bench, but they sit alone. On 1 April 2010 the total strength of the lay magistracy was 29,270 including 14,540 women. Justices of the Peace are appointed on behalf of the Queen by the Lord Chancellor.

Justices are selected and trained specially to sit in Youth and Family Proceedings Courts. Youth Courts deal with cases involving children and young persons up to the age of 18 charged with criminal offences (other than homicide and other grave offences). These courts normally sit with three justices, including at least one man and one woman, and are accommodated separately from other courts.

Family Proceedings Courts deal with matrimonial applications and Children Act matters, including care, residence and contact and adoption. These courts normally sit with three justices including at least one man and one woman.

Above the magistrates' courts is the Crown Court. This was set up by the Courts Act 1971 to replace quarter sessions and assizes. Unlike quarter sessions and assizes, which were individual courts, the Crown Court is a single court which is capable of sitting anywhere in England and Wales. It has power to deal with all trials on indictment and has inherited the jurisdiction of quarter sessions to hear appeals, proceedings on committal of persons from the magistrates' courts for sentence, and certain original proceedings on civil matters under individual statutes.

The jurisdiction of the Crown Court is exercisable by a High Court judge, a Circuit judge or a Recorder (a part-time judge) sitting alone, or, in specified circumstances, with Justices of the Peace. The Lord Chief Justice has given directions as to the types of case to be allocated to High Court judges (the more serious cases) and to Circuit judges or Recorders respectively.

Appeals from magistrates' courts go either to a Divisional Court of the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court (when a point of law alone is involved) or to the Crown Court where there is a complete rehearing on appeals against conviction and/or sentence. Appeals from the Crown Court in cases tried on indictment lie to the Court of Appeal (Criminal Division). Appeals on questions of law go by right, and appeals on other matters by leave. The Lord Chief Justice or a Lord Justice of Appeal sits with judges of the High Court to constitute this court. Thereafter, appeals in England and Wales can be made to the Supreme Court.

There remains as a last resort the invocation of the royal prerogative of mercy exercised on the advice of the Home Secretary. In 1965 the death penalty was abolished for murder and in 1998 abolished for all crimes.

All contested criminal trials, except those which come before the magistrates' courts, are tried by a judge and a jury consisting of 12 members. The jury decides whether the accused is guilty or not. The judge is responsible for summing up on the facts and directing the jury on the relevant law. He or she sentences offenders who have been convicted by the jury (or who have pleaded guilty). If, after at least two hours and ten minutes of deliberation, a jury is unable to reach a unanimous verdict it may,

on the judge's direction—and provided that in a full jury of 12 at least ten of its members are agreed—bring in a majority verdict. The failure of a jury to agree on a unanimous verdict or to bring in a majority verdict may involve the retrial of the case before a new jury.

The Employment Appeal Tribunal. The Employment Appeal Tribunal, which is a superior Court of Record with the like powers, rights, privileges and authority of the High Court, was set up in 1976 to hear appeals on questions of law against decisions of employment tribunals and of the Certification Officer. The appeals are heard by a judge sitting alone or with two members (in exceptional cases four) appointed for their special knowledge or experience of industrial relations either on the employer or the trade union side, with always an equal number on each side. The great bulk of their work is concerned with the problems which can arise between employees and their employers.

Military Courts. Under the Armed Forces Act 2006, criminal offences and disciplinary offences alleged against service personnel subject to service law (or civilians overseas who are subject to service discipline) may be tried in the Court Martial. Lower-level offences by service personnel may be dealt with at a summary hearing by their commanding officer, subject to appeal to the Summary Appeal Court.

The Personnel of the Law. All judicial officers are independent of Parliament and the Executive. They are appointed by the Crown on the advice of the Prime Minister or the Lord Chancellor, or directly by the Lord Chancellor himself, and hold office until retiring age. Under the Judicial Pensions and Retirement Act 1993 judges normally retire by age 70 years.

The legal profession is divided; barristers, who advise on legal problems and can conduct cases before all courts, usually act for the public only through solicitors, who deal directly with the legal business brought to them by the public and have rights to present cases before certain courts. The distinction between the two branches of the profession has been weakened since the passing of the Courts and Legal Services Act 1990, which has enabled solicitors to obtain the right to appear as advocates before all courts. Long-standing members of both professions are eligible for appointment to most judicial offices.

For all judicial appointments up to and including the level of Circuit Judge, it is necessary to apply in writing to be considered for appointment. Vacancies are advertised. A panel consisting of a judge, an official and a lay member decide whom to invite for interview and also interview the shortlisted applicants. They make recommendations to the Lord Chancellor, who retains the right of final recommendation to the Sovereign or appointment, as appropriate.

Legal Services. The system of legal aid in England and Wales was established after the Second World War under the Legal Aid and Advice Act 1949. The Legal Aid Board was then set up under the Legal Aid Act 1988, and took over the administration of legal aid from the Law Society in 1989. The Legal Services Commission (LSC) was set up (as a non-departmental public body) under the Access to Justice Act 1999 and replaced the Legal Aid Board on 1 April 2000.

In 2010–11 the Commission funded over 2.7m. acts of assistance overall at a cost of £2.1bn. on the provision of legal aid services and spent £99.2m. on administration costs. The Community Legal Service spend of £985.4m. funded 1.25m. acts of assistance. The Criminal Defence Service spend of £1,129.8m. funded 1.47m. acts of assistance.

The LSC was abolished as a result of the Legal Aid, Sentencing and Punishment of Offenders Act (LASPO) 2012 and replaced from 1 April 2013 with the Legal Aid Agency (LAA), which is an executive agency of the Ministry of Justice. A new office of the Director of Legal Casework was created to ensure independence of decision-making. The Director will take decisions on the funding of individual cases.

The Legal Aid Agency includes contracted solicitors and advice agencies that provide civil and family legal advice and representation. It manages Civil Legal Advice, which includes telephone and internet-based services, and contracts with quality assured providers to deliver face-to-face civil legal aid services across a range of categories such as debt and housing. It aimed to reduce spending on legal aid in 2013–14 by 7.7% from £2.0bn. in 2012–13 to £1.8bn. It was also aiming to have administration costs totalling £86.1m. for the financial year, down 12.3% on the Legal Services Commission's 2012–13 budget.

The Agency also provides legal advice and representation to people being investigated or charged with a criminal offence. It manages the duty solicitor schemes for police stations and magistrates' courts so that those who need advice and representation can see a solicitor, and funds services in the higher courts. The Public Defender Service provides criminal defence services directly to the public.

¹On the principal offence basis. From 1 June 2000 the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 came into force nationally and removed the use of cautions for persons under 18 and replaced them with reprimands and final warnings.

Crime Survey for England and Wales British (CSEW) interviews in 2013–14 estimate that there were 7.1m. crimes against adults aged 16 or over living in private households in England and Wales, down from 8.4m. in 2012–13 and a peak of over 19.1m. in the mid-1990s. Property crime accounted for 82% of CSEW crime in 2013–14 and violence 18%. The 2013–14 total was the lowest since the forerunner of the CSEW, the British Crime Survey, was introduced in 1981. There were about 3.7m. crimes recorded by the police in both 2012–13 and 2013–14, the lowest total since the late 1980s. The number of recorded homicides in England and Wales in 2012–13 was 551, up from 530 in 2011–12 although in both cases the lowest since 1989.

In Sept. 2015 the prison population was 85,886 (95.5% of which were male), down from a high of 88,167 in Nov. 2011 although up from around 45,000 in 1990 and just over 20,000 in 1950. The annual average prison population rose 30% between 2001 and 2011, from 66,301 to 85,951. Although crimes have fallen considerably since the mid-1990s the prison population has risen considerably over the same period. Between 2001 and 2011 the annual average female prison population rose by 12%, from 3,740 to 4,188; the annual average male population rose by 31%, from 62,560 to 81,763. These figures do not include prisoners held in police cells. The UK was ranked 11th of 102 countries for criminal justice and 13th for civil justice in the 2015 World Justice Project Rule of Law Index, which provides data on how the rule of law is experienced by the general public across eight categories.

Police

In England and Wales there are 43 police forces, each maintained by a police authority typically comprising nine local councillors, three magistrates and five independent members. London is policed by the Metropolitan Police Service (responsible to the 23-member Metropolitan Police Authority, 11 of whom are members of the Greater London Assembly, plus the Mayor) and the City of London Police (whose police authority is the City of London Corporation). A similar tripartite arrangement (Cabinet Secretary, Chief Constable and Joint Police Board/Police Authority) exists for the accountability of the police service in Scotland.

Figures show that the total strength of the police service in England and Wales at 31 March 2008 was 140,230 (including 32,931 women). Police officers are supported by police staff and at the end of March 2008 there were 77,350 police staff (approximately 47,000 female), including 1,903 designated officers (investigation officers, detention officers and escort officers). In addition there were 15,805 police community support officers on 31 March 2008 (including approximately 6,800 women). There were 14,547 special constables in March 2008 (including 3,828 women).

Education

Adult Literacy and Numeracy. In 2001 the Labour government at the time published the Skills for Life Strategy in response to the recommendations in the 1999 Moser report (A Fresh Start. Improving Literacy and Numeracy). The strategy covered adults aged 16 and above at skills levels of pre-entry up to and including Level 2. The results of the 2011 Skills for Life Survey showed that in England 5.1m. adults aged 16–65 (14.9% of the population in this age bracket) had literacy levels below Level 1—equivalent to the level expected of an average 11-year-old—and 16.8m. had numeracy skills (49.1% of those in the same age range) below Level 1. From April 2001 to June 2008, 2,276,000 learners achieved at least one qualification in literacy, numeracy or language against a target set in 2001 of 2.25m. by July 2010.

The Publicly Maintained System of Education. Compulsory schooling begins at the age of five (four in Northern Ireland). The minimum leaving age for all pupils was 16 but as a result of the Education and Skills Act of Nov. 2008 this was raised in stages to 18. Since the summer of 2015 all young people in England born on or after 1 Sept. 1997 have to remain in education or training to 18. No tuition fees are payable in any publicly maintained school (but parents can choose to pay for their children to attend independent schools run by individuals, companies or charitable institutions). The post-school or tertiary stage, which is voluntary, includes universities, further education establishments and other higher education establishments, as well as adult education and youth services. Financial assistance (grants and loans) is generally available to students in higher education and to some students on other courses in further education.

National Curriculum. The National Curriculum was introduced in 1988 and has undergone a number of revisions—the latest taking place in 2014. It determines the content of what will be taught, sets attainment targets for learning and determines how performance will be assessed and reported.

The National Curriculum comprises the core subjects of English, mathematics and science; and foundation subjects of information communication technology, design and technology, history, geography, modern foreign languages, art and design, music, physical education and citizenship.

At Key Stage 4 (ages 14–16) schools must provide access for each pupil to a minimum of one course in the arts (art and design, music, dance, drama and media arts); one course in the humanities (history and geography); at least one modern foreign language; and design and technology. However, since Sept. 2004 these subject areas are no longer compulsory for key stage 4 pupils.

In addition, pupils must be taught religious education during all four key stages, although parents have the right to withdraw their children from this provision. Careers and sex education are compulsory at Key Stages 3 and 4, and work-related learning is compulsory at Key Stage 4. The subject of personal, social and health education is not statutory but should be taught across all four key stages. Every school must also provide a form of daily collective worship, but with the right to withdraw.

In Sept. 2008 the Early Years Foundation Stage (EYFS) replaced the Foundation Stage curriculum which was a distinct phase of education for children aged three to the end of the reception year of primary school. The EYFS is a national play-based framework for supporting the learning, development and safety of children from birth to the age of five. The EYFS does not form part of the National Curriculum. All state and independent schools and 'registered' early years providers are required to meet the learning and development requirements of the EYFS.

Early Learning. All three- and four-year-olds are entitled to 15 hours per week of free early learning for 38 weeks per year until they reach compulsory school age. Free early-learning places can be delivered by state nursery schools; nursery classes in primary schools and reception classes; and private, voluntary and independent providers and registered childminders who are part of a quality assured network. There are around 38,900 sites currently involved in delivering free early-learning. Local authorities have a duty to ensure that there are sufficient free early learning places for all three- and four-year-olds.

Primary Schools. These provide compulsory education for pupils from the age of five (four in Northern Ireland) up to the age of 11 (12 in Scotland). Most public sector primary schools take boys and girls in mixed classes. Some pre-compulsory age pupils attend nursery classes within primary schools, however, and in England some middle schools cater for pupils at either side of the secondary education transition age. In 2013–14 there were 21,040 public sector mainstream primary schools in the United Kingdom, with an average of 20.5 pupils per teacher.

Middle Schools. A number of local authorities operate a middle school system. These provide for pupils from the age of eight, nine or ten up to the age of 12, 13 or 14, and are deemed either primary or secondary according to the age range of the pupils.

Secondary Schools. In 2013–14 there were 4,116 state-funded secondary schools in the United Kingdom providing for pupils from the age of 11 upwards. Some local authorities have retained a selective admissions policy at age 11 (mainly for entry to grammar schools), and some 232 state-funded secondary schools in the United Kingdom operate a selective admissions policy. There are 51 secondary modern schools in England providing a general education up to the minimum school leaving age of 16, although some pupils stay on beyond that age. In state-funded secondary schools in the United Kingdom there are an average 15.4 pupils per teacher.

Almost all local authorities operate a system of comprehensive schools to which pupils are admitted without reference to ability or aptitude. In 2010–11 there were 3,036 such schools in the United Kingdom. With the development of comprehensive education, various patterns of secondary schools have come into operation. Principally these are: 1) All-through schools with pupils aged 11 to 18 or 11 to 16; pupils over 16 being able to transfer to an 11 to 18 school or a sixth form college providing for pupils aged 16 to 19. (Since 1 April 1993, sixth form colleges have been part of the further education sector—there were 94 sixth form colleges in 2012–13.) 2) Local authorities operating a three-tier system involving middle schools where transfer to secondary school is at ages 12, 13 or 14. These correspond to 12 to 18, 13 to 18 and 14 to 18 comprehensive schools respectively. 3) In areas where there are no middle schools a two-tier system of junior and senior comprehensive schools for pupils aged 11 to 18, with optional transfer to these schools at age 13 or 14.

Academies. Following passage of the Academies Act in 2010, all publicly-funded schools were invited to become academies. Academies are independent state schools funded directly from the government, rather than the local council. Each academy is run by a trust that employs staff directly. Academies can set their own term times and do not need to follow the national curriculum. Some are sponsored by businesses, universities, faith groups, voluntary groups or other schools. In May 2012 there were more than 1,800 academies in England.

Free Schools. The 2010 Academies Act also allowed for the creation of free schools. These are schools set up by groups of parents or teachers, charities, trusts, voluntary groups or faith groups if they believe the local state school provision is inadequate. They are funded and operate exactly as academies do. In early 2014 there were more than 170 free schools in England.

Faith Schools. A faith school is one associated with a particular religion. Most are run like other state schools and must follow the national curriculum except for religious studies, in which subject they are free to teach only about their own religion. Although anyone is free to apply for a place at a faith school, each school may have its own specific admissions criteria and staffing policies.

City Technology Colleges. CTCs are independent all-ability secondary schools established in partnership between government and business sponsors under the Education Reform Act 1988. They teach the full National Curriculum but give special emphasis to technology, science and mathematics. The government meets all recurrent costs. Although there were originally 15 CTCs, there are now only three remaining as 12 have been converted to Academies.

Music and Dance Scheme (formerly the Music and Ballet Scheme). The 'Aided Pupil Scheme' for boys and girls with outstanding talent in music or dance (principally ballet) helps parents with the fees and boarding costs at eight specialist private schools in England. Since 2004 the scheme has been developed to include 21 centres for advanced training and a national grants scheme for out-of-school-hours training.

Independent Schools. Independent schools which belong to an association affiliated to the Independent Schools Council (accounting for 80% of pupils) are subject to an inspection regime agreed between the government and the ISC. The Schools Inspection Service inspects schools affiliated to the Focus Learning Trust, and the Bridge Schools Inspectorate inspects schools affiliated to the Christian Schools Trust and the Association of Muslim Schools, also under arrangements agreed with the government. Non-association schools are inspected by Ofsted on a regular cycle.

The earliest of the independent schools were founded by medieval churches. Many were founded as 'grammar' (classical) schools in the 16th century, receiving charters from the reigning sovereign. Reformed mainly in the middle of the 19th century, among the best-known are Eton College, founded in 1440 by Henry VI; Winchester College (1394), founded by William of Wykeham, Bishop of Winchester; Harrow School, founded in 1560 as a grammar school by John Lyon, a yeoman; and Charterhouse (1611). Among the earliest foundations are King's School, Canterbury, founded 600; King's School, Rochester (604) and St Peter's, York (627).

Special Education. It is estimated that, nationally, 20% of the school population will have special educational needs at some time during their school career. For some 2.7% of pupils the local authority will need to make a statutory assessment of special educational needs under the Education Act 1996 and draw up a legal document, the statement, which sets out the extra provision a child needs. (In Scotland pupils are assessed for a Coordinated Support Plan.)

Maintained schools must use their best endeavours to make provision for such pupils. The new Special educational needs and disability code of practice: 0 to 25 years, which came into force on 1 Sept. 2014 and replaced an earlier Code, gives practical guidance.

Youth Work. The priority age group for agencies and services providing youth work is 13- to 19-year-olds, but the target age group may extend to 11- to 25-year-olds. Provision is usually in the form of positive activities delivered in youth clubs and centres, or through 'detached' or outreach work aimed at young people at risk from alcohol or drug misuse, or of drifting into crime. There is an increasing emphasis on youth workers working with disaffected, and socially excluded, young people and providing services at times and in places where young people want them. Youth work can be delivered by local authority youth services, the voluntary and community sector, and other specialist youth agencies.

Teachers. Qualified teacher status (QTS) is obtained through either an undergraduate or postgraduate course of initial teacher training. Training courses are either college-based or employment-based, the latter allowing trainees to teach as unqualified teachers and also study for QTS at the same time. As well as meeting common professional standards, trainees must also pass computerized skills tests in information and communication technology, numeracy and literacy in order to be awarded QTS. Newly qualified teachers are then required to complete an induction programme during their first year of teaching.

Those who are recognized as qualified teachers in Scotland or Northern Ireland are also entitled to apply to the General Teaching Council for England or the General Teaching Council for Wales for QTS without undertaking further training. Nationals of European Economic Area (EEA) countries who are recognized as schoolteachers in an EEA member state can apply to the GTCE for QTS without undertaking further training.

Teachers who qualified as teachers in countries outside of the EEA are allowed to teach for four years in state maintained and non-maintained special schools in England. This is subject to satisfying Home Office rules on employing overseas workers. They are only allowed to teach beyond four years if they have been awarded QTS which can be obtained through undertaking an employment-based training programme.

In 2013–14, 506,100 full-time teachers (353,700 females) were employed in maintained nursery, primary and secondary schools in the United Kingdom; there were also 85,700 full-time equivalent of part-time teachers.

Further Education (Non-University). The English Further Education (FE) system provides a wide range of education and training opportunities for individuals and employers. Learning opportunities are provided, from age 14 upwards, at all levels from basic skills to higher education. The FE system's primary purpose is to help people gain the skills they need to improve their employability.

Following the abolition of the former Learning and Skills Council, from April 2010 responsibility for funding full- and part-time education and training provision for people aged 16 to 19 fell to local education authorities and the Young People's Learning Agency (YPLA). The Skills Funding Agency (SFA), an agency of the Department for Business, Innovation and Skills, funds and regulates adult FE and skills training in England. Under the Education Act 2011 the YPLA, which was sponsored by the Department for Education and supported the delivery of training and education to 16- to 19-year-olds in England, was to close on 31 March 2012. On 1 April 2012 responsibilities of the YPLA were transferred to the Education Funding Agency (EFA), which is an executive agency of the Department for Education. The EFA funds the education system for 3- to 19-year-olds and manages the school and sixth form college estate. It is responsible for the allocation and distribution of approximately £50bn. revenue and capital funding each year, as well as the delivery of capital investment in schools.

Further education is the largest sector providing educational opportunities for the over 16s. In 2012–13 there were 396 FE colleges in the UK. The SFA operates with an average annual budget of £4.6bn. Until its closure in March 2012, the YPLA provided direct financial support to 750,000 young people to stay in learning and realise their potential.

Higher Education. In 2012–13 there were 2.5m. students in the UK at 160 higher education institutions, of which 132 were universities. The higher education student population was 56.1% female in 2012–13. 37% of the UK population between the ages of 25 and 34 have attained a tertiary qualification (OECD average, 34%), compared to only 25% of those aged between 55 and 64.

Total income for higher education institutions in the UK was £30.7bn. in 2013–14. Of this £6.1bn. came from funding body grants; £13.7bn. from tuition fees and education grants and contracts; £5.1bn. from research grants and contracts; £0.3bn. from endowment and investment income; and £5.6bn. from other sources. Higher education institutions are funded by four UK bodies, one each for England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland. Their roles include: allocating funds for teaching and research; promoting high-quality education and research; advising government on the needs of higher education; informing students about the quality of higher education available; and ensuring the proper use of public funds.

The Open University (OU) received its Royal Charter on 23 April 1969 and is an independent, self-governing institution, awarding its own degrees at undergraduate and postgraduate level. It is financed by students' fees and by the government through the Higher Education Funding Council for England for its students in England, Northern Ireland and other EU countries, the Scottish Funding Council and the Higher Education Funding Council for Wales.

Study materials provided may include specially written textbooks, online teaching materials, audio CDs, DVDs and computer software. The OU Anywhere initiative allows students to access learning materials through their smartphones and tablets. Support is usually provided by tutors or study advisers who are available to students through group tutorials and seminars, online or by telephone.

No formal qualifications are required for entry to the majority of undergraduate courses. 69% of undergraduates have no previous higher education qualifications on entry. The University launched with 25,000 students and in 2011–12 there were 246,626 students (including 37,121 on OU validated programmes). 342 undergraduate modules are offered by the OU along with 141 postgraduate modules. There are 13 national and regional centres in addition to 350 study centres across the UK and more than 6,340 associate lecturers. 80 of the FTSE 100 companies have sponsored staff to study with the OU. In 2010–11 the OU attracted more than £17.5m. in external research income.

The only university independent of the state system is the University of Buckingham, which opened in 1976 and received a Royal Charter in 1983. It offers two-year honours degrees, the academic year commencing in Jan., July or Sept., and consisting of four 10-week terms. There are a wide variety of degree courses available, the most popular being in business, humanities, law and science. In Jan. 2011 there were over 1,000 students.

All universities charge fees, but financial help is available to students from several sources, and the majority of students receive some form of financial assistance.

Higher Education (HE) Student Support. All students are expected to make a contribution towards their tuition fees. In Dec. 2010 the then coalition government agreed to increase the maximum tuition fee rate to £9,000 for 2012–13 for students beginning their studies in Sept. 2012 or later. No eligible student (new or existing) has to pay their fees either before or during their course, as a Tuition Fee Loan is available. Students in the fifth or later years of medical or dental courses and on NHS-funded courses in professions allied to medicine may be eligible for a means-tested grant from the NHS Bursary system. Postgraduate trainee teachers may be eligible for tax-free bursaries; these range from £3,000 to £30,000 depending on the teaching subject. Non-repayable Maintenance Grants of up to £3,387 are also available, targeted at students from lower income backgrounds.

Universities and colleges wishing to charge maximum fees must also make bursaries available to students who are in receipt of the full Maintenance Grant.

A Maintenance Loan is available to help with students' living costs. All students are entitled to 72% of the maximum loan, with the balance subject to income assessment. The maximum loans available for students who started their courses in 2012–13 or 2013–14 are: £7,675 (living away from home and studying in London); £5,500 (living away from home and studying outside London); and £4,375 (living at home). For students who started their courses in 2014–15 the maximum loans available are: £7,751 (living away from home and studying in London); £5,555 (living away from home and studying outside London); and £4,418 (living at home). For those who started their courses in 2015–16 the maximum loans available are: £8,009 (living away from home and studying in London); £5,740 (living away from home and studying outside London); and £4,565 (living at home). For students who are starting their courses in 2016–17 the maximum loans available are: £10,702 (living away from home and studying in London); £8,200 (living away from home and studying outside London); and £6,904 (living at home). Neither the Tuition Fee Loan nor the Maintenance Loan has to be repaid until the student has left university or college and is earning over £17,335 a year (if the course started before Sept. 2012) or over £21,000 (Sept. 2012 or later).

Applications for student finance are made through Local Authorities or, under a pilot scheme operating in some areas, direct to the Student Loans Company. The Student Loans Company manages loan accounts and the payment of the student finance package.

Postgraduate studentships and research grants are available from the Arts and Humanities Research Council (AHRC) or similar councils. There are six other grant-awarding Research Councils which each report to the Department of Business, Innovation and Skills. They offer awards to students studying within the broad spectrum of economics, engineering, astronomy and medical, biological and physical sciences.

The AHRC receives approximately £102m. annually from the government to support research and postgraduate study in the arts and humanities, from languages and law, archaeology and English literature to design and creative and performing arts. In any one year the AHRC makes approximately 700 research awards and around 1,350 postgraduate awards. Awards are made after a rigorous peer review process, to ensure that only applications of the highest quality are funded.

Professional and Career Development Loans (CDLs). These loans are specifically designed to help individuals acquire and improve vocational skills, and are aimed at those who would otherwise not have reasonable or adequate access to the funds. Loans of between £300 and £10,000 can be applied for to support up to two years of education or learning (plus up to one year's practical work experience where it forms part of the course).

Finance. Total public education expenditure in the United Kingdom for 2013–14 was £88.3bn. representing 5.1% of GDP, compared with £44.4bn. and 4.3% of GDP in 2000–01.

British Council

The British Council is the UK's international organization for educational opportunities and cultural relations. The British Council works in over 100 countries in the arts, education and English-teaching to build opportunity and trust through the exchange of knowledge and ideas between people. This work contributes to the security and prosperity both of the UK and the countries where it works. In 2010–11 it engaged face to face with 30m. people and reached 578m. It has 6,800 staff worldwide. Its total turnover in 2010–11 was £693m., of which £190m. was a grant-in-aid from the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. The remainder was generated through trading activities such as English-language teaching.

Health

The National Health Service (NHS) in England and Wales started on 5 July 1948. There is a separate Act for Scotland.

The NHS is a charge on the national income in the same way, for example, as the armed forces. Every person normally resident in the UK is entitled to use any part of the service, and no insurance qualification is necessary.

Since its inception, the NHS has been funded from general taxation and National Insurance (NI) contributions, and the present government has maintained the original principle that the NHS should be a service provided to all those who need it, regardless of their ability to pay or where they live. In 2008–09 the NHS in England was funded 17.5% by NI contributions, 71.9% by general taxation with the remainder coming from charges and receipts, including land sales and proceeds from income generation schemes. Health authorities may raise funds from voluntary sources; hospitals may take private, paying patients.

Health is the second largest government spending sector after social protection. In 2008–09 estimated NHS expenditure on health was £110.5bn. When combined with private expenditure on health care, the estimated overall percentage of UK GDP spent on health was 8.9%.

Organization. The Health and Social Care Act 2012 provided for a major restructuring of the NHS. On 1 April 2013 the ten Strategic Health Authorities (SHAs), responsible for implementing Department of Health policy at regional level and overseeing the operations of NHS trusts at the local level since 2002, were abolished. Primary Care Trusts—introduced in 2000 to control local health care and hold to account provider organizations for delivery of services that they commissioned—also ceased to exist.

Under the terms of the 2012 Act, responsibility for commissioning NHS care was given over to more than 200 clinical commissioning groups (CCGs), each made up of GPs and other clinicians. CCGs are directly responsible for a combined budget of some £60bn. Every GP practice is required to be a member of a CCG. Each CCG has a governing body comprising at least one registered nurse and a secondary care specialist alongside GPs.

CCGs are supported by the NHS Commissioning Board, which authorizes clinical commissioning groups, allocates resources and commissions certain services itself, such as primary care. The Commissioning Board operates 27 area teams.

The NHS Trust Development Authority oversees the performance and governance of NHS Trusts, including clinical quality and managing their progress towards NHS Foundation Trusts (which have greater managerial and financial independence than NHS Trusts). The Quality Care Commission, meanwhile, guarantees the safety and quality of services, and Monitor regulates economic efficiency. Separate bodies have overall responsibility for professional education, training and public health programmes.

Services. The NHS broadly consists of hospital and specialist services, general medical, dental and ophthalmic services, pharmaceutical services, community health services and school health services. In general these services are free of charge; the main exceptions are prescriptions, spectacles, dental and optical examination, dentures and dental treatment, amenity beds in hospitals, and some community services, for which contributory charges are made with certain exemptions.

Private. In recent years increasing numbers of people have turned to private medical insurance. This covers the costs of private medical treatment (PMI) for curable short-term medical conditions. PMI includes the costs of surgery, specialists, nursing and accommodation at a private hospital or in a private ward of an NHS hospital. Approximately 13% of the UK population have private medical insurance. The leading companies are BUPA Healthcare, AXA PPP Healthcare and PruHealth.

In 2009, 21% of the population of the UK aged 16 and over smoked. In 1974 the percentage had been 45%, with 51% of males and 41% of females smoking. Over the years the difference between the percentage of men and of women who smoke has been declining—in 2009 the rates were 22% for men and 20% for women. The overall percentage of the UK population who are smokers is similar to the average for the EU as a whole, but among men the percentage of smokers in the UK is lower than in the EU as a whole whereas among women it is higher. Alcohol consumption has fallen slightly in recent years. The average British adult consumed 11.6 litres of pure alcohol a year in the period 2008–10, down from 13.2 litres in 2003–05.

There were an estimated 86,500 people living with HIV in the UK in 2009 (0.1% of the population).

Personal Social Services

Under the Local Authority Social Services Act, 1970, and in Scotland the Social Work (Scotland) Act, 1968, the welfare and social work services provided by local authorities were made the responsibility of a new local authority department—the Social Services Department in England and Wales, and Social Work Departments in Scotland headed by a Director of Social Work, responsibility in Scotland passing in 1975 to the local authorities. The social services thus administered include: the fostering, care and adoption of children, welfare services and social workers for people with learning difficulties and the mentally ill, the disabled and the aged, and accommodation for those needing residential care services. Legislation of 1996 permits local authorities to make cash payments as an alternative to community care. In Scotland the Social Work Departments' functions also include the supervision of persons on probation, of adult offenders and of persons released from penal institutions or subject to fine supervision orders.

Expenditure is reviewed by the Social Services Inspectorate and the Audit Commission (in Scotland by the Social Work Services Inspectorate and the Accounts Commission).

Welfare

The National Insurance Act 1965 now operates under the Social Security Contributions and Benefits Act 1992 and the Social Security Administration Act 1992.

Since 1975 Class 1 contributions have been related to the employee's earnings and are collected with PAYE income tax. Class 2 and Class 3 contributions remain flat-rate, but, in addition to Class 2 contributions, those who are self-employed may be liable to pay Class 4 contributions, which for the year 2016–17 are at the rate of 9% on profits or gains between £8,060 and £43,000 (with a further 2% contribution on any profit exceeding the upper limit), which are assessable for income tax under Schedule D. The non-employed and others whose contribution record is not sufficient to give entitlement to benefits are able to pay a Class 3 contribution of £14.10 per week in 2016–17 voluntarily, to qualify for a limited range of benefits. Class 2 weekly contributions for 2016–17 for men and women are £2.80. Class 1A contributions are paid by employers who provide employees with a car and fuel for their private use.

The Social Security Pensions Act 1975 introduced earnings-related retirement, invalidity and widows' pensions. Members of occupational pension schemes may be contracted out of the earnings-related part of the state scheme relating to retirement and widows' benefits. Employee's national insurance contribution liability depends on whether he/she is in contracted-out or not contracted-out employment.

Full-rate contributions for non-contracted-out employment in 2016–17:

Weekly Earnings (in £1)	Employee (primary) pays	Employer (secondary) pays
Below 112 (Lower Earnings Limit) ¹	Nil	Nil
112–155 (Primary Threshold) ²	Nil	13.8%
155–827 (Primary Threshold to Upper Earnings Limit)	12%	13.8%
Over 827 (Upper Earnings Limit)	2%	13.8%

¹Below £156 (Secondary Threshold) for employer.
²Above £156 (Secondary Threshold) for employer.

For contracted-out employment, the contracted-out rebate for primary contributions (employee's contribution) is 1.4% of earnings between the lower earnings limit and the upper earnings limit for all forms of contracting-out; the contracted-out rebate for secondary contributions (employer's contributions) is 3.4% of earnings between the lower earnings limit and the upper earnings limit.

Contributions together with interest on investments form the income of the National Insurance Fund from which benefits are paid. 29,390,000 persons (13,420,000 women) paid contributions in 2008–09, including 25,210,000 employees at standard rate.

Receipts, 2009–10 (in £1m.), 129,320, including: contributions, 73,817; investment income, 1,684; transfers from Great Britain, 395; compensation for Statutory Sick Pay/Statutory Maternity Pay, 237. Disbursements (in £1m.), 79,793, including: retirement pensions, 66,442; Incapacity, 6,177; Personal Pensions, 2,623; administration, 1,401; Jobseeker's Allowance (Contributory), 1,106; Bereavement Benefits, 647; redundancy payments, 531; transfers to Northern Ireland, 395; maternity, 343.

Statutory Sick Pay (SSP). Employers are responsible for paying SSP to their employees who are absent from work through illness or injury for up to 28 weeks in any three-year period. All employees aged between 16 and 65 (60 for women) with earnings above the Lower Earnings Limit are covered by the scheme whenever they are sick for four or more days consecutively. The weekly rate is £88.45. For most employees SSP completely replaces their entitlement to state incapacity benefit which is not payable as long as any employer's responsibility for SSP remains.

Contributory benefits. Qualification for these depends upon fulfilment of the appropriate contribution conditions, except that persons who are incapable of work as the result of an industrial accident may receive incapacity benefit followed by invalidity benefit without having to satisfy the contributions conditions.

Jobseeker's Allowance. Unemployed persons claiming the allowance must sign a 'Jobseeker's Agreement' setting out a plan of action to find work. The allowance is not payable to persons who left their job voluntarily or through misconduct. Claimants with sufficient National Insurance contributions are entitled to the allowance for six months regardless of their means; otherwise, recipients qualify through a means test and the allowance is fixed according to family circumstances, at a rate corresponding to Income Support for an indefinite period. In May 2010 there were 1,354,620 people receiving the Jobseeker's Allowance (973,100 males), down from 1,443,000 a year earlier. Payments start at £57.90 per week.

Statutory Maternity Pay. Pregnant working women may be eligible to receive Statutory Maternity Pay directly from their employer for a maximum of 39 weeks if average gross earnings are £112 a week or more (2016–17). There are two rates: a higher rate (90% of average earnings for the first six weeks), and a lower rate of £139.58 or 90% of earnings (whichever is less) for up to 33 weeks. For women who do not qualify for Statutory Maternity Pay, including self-employed women, there is a Maternity Allowance.

A payment of £500 from the Social Fund (Sure Start Maternity Grant) may be available if the mother or her partner are receiving Income Support, income-based Jobseeker's Allowance, Pension Credit, Child Tax Credit (at a rate higher than the family element) or Working Tax Credit (in cases of disability). It is also available if a parent adopts a baby, is granted a parental order on a surrogate birth or is granted a residence order on a child (subject to certain conditions). It is restricted to the first child in a family.

Statutory Paternity Pay. Since 6 April 2003 working fathers have had the right to two weeks paid paternity leave providing average earnings are £112 a week or more (2016–17). This will be paid at the same rate as the lower rate of Statutory Maternity Pay (£139.58 a week or 90% of average weekly earnings if this is less than £139.58).

Statutory Adoption Pay. Paid adoption leave is for up to 39 weeks at the same rate as Statutory Paternity Pay. It is available to employed people adopting a child on their own, or for one member of a couple adopting together. Parents adopting from overseas are also eligible, although conditions may differ.

Bereavement Benefits. Available to both men and women, Bereavement Benefits were introduced from 9 April 2001 to replace the former Widows' Benefit scheme. There are three main types of Bereavement Benefits available to men and women widowed on or after 9 April 2001: bereavement payment, widowed parent's allowance and bereavement allowance. Bereavement Payment is a single tax-free lump sum of £2,000 payable immediately on bereavement. A widower/widow may be able to get this benefit if their late spouse has paid enough National Insurance Contributions (NIC) and was under 60 at death; or was not getting a Category A State Retirement Pension at death. Widowed Parent's Allowance is a weekly benefit payable when the widower/widow is receiving Child Benefit. The amount of Widowed Parent's Allowance is based on the late spouse's NIC record. He/she may also get benefit for the eldest dependent child and further higher benefit for each subsequent child; also an additional pension based on their late spouse's earnings. If the late spouse was a member of a contracted-out occupational scheme or a personal pension scheme, that scheme is responsible for paying the whole or part of the additional pensions. Widowed Parent's Allowance is taxable. Bereavement Allowance is a weekly benefit payable to widows and widowers without dependent children and is payable between age 45 and State Pension age. The amount of Bereavement Allowance payable to a widower/widow between 45 and 54 is related to their age at the date of entitlement. Their weekly rate is reduced by 7% for each year they are aged under 55 so that they get 93% rate at age 54, falling to 30% at age 45. Those aged 55 or over at the date of entitlement will get the full rate of Bereavement Allowance. The amount of Bereavement Allowance is based on the late spouse's NIC record and is payable for a maximum of 52 weeks from the date of bereavement. A widower/widow cannot get a Bereavement Allowance at the same time as a Widowed Parent's Allowance. Women widowed before 9 April 2001 continue to receive their Widows' Benefit entitlement on the arrangements that existed before that date so long as they continue to satisfy the qualifying conditions. There were 50,750 recipients of Widows' Benefits and 63,310 recipients of Bereavement Benefits in May 2010.

Retirement Pension. The state retirement ('old-age') pension scheme has two components: a basic pension and an additional state pension (state second pension or S2P). The amount of the first is subject to National Insurance contributions made; the amount of the second is earnings-related although it is scheduled to become a flat-rate top-up payment by 2030. Payments are made automatically when the basic pension is claimed. Qualifying National Insurance contributions are made for employed persons earning over a lower threshold (£5,824 in 2016–17), anyone looking after children under the age of 12 and in receipt of Child Benefit, carers working more than 20 hours a week claiming Carer's Credit and foster carers claiming Carer's Credit, and persons receiving certain other benefits as a result of illness or disability.

Pensions are payable to men at 65 years of age. Until April 2010 they were payable to women at 60 years of age but since then the state pension age for women has been gradually rising, with the age differential in the process of being phased out. Under the 2011 Pensions Act the equalization of the state pension age will take place by Nov. 2018 (instead of April 2020) and the state pension age for both men and women will be increased to 66 by Oct. 2020 and eventually to 68 by 2044–46. There are standard rates for single persons and for married couples. Proportionately reduced pensions are payable where contribution records are deficient.

Employees may contract out of the additional state pension if they join an employers contracted-out occupational pension scheme or have an appropriate stakeholder or personal pension scheme. The self-employed, unemployed, those in full-time training and anyone earning below a lower threshold (£5,824 in 2016–17) do not qualify.

Self- and non-employed persons may contribute voluntarily for retirement pension.

In Jan. 2013 the government announced plans to introduce a revised state pension scheme from April 2017, although it was subsequently brought forward to April 2016. A weekly flat-rate pension of £155.65 for people who reach state pension age on or after 6 April 2016 and are eligible replaced the existing basic state pension on that date. Claimants must have made 35 years of National Insurance contributions to receive the full new pension, up from the previously required 30 years.

Persons who defer claiming their pension during the five years following retirement age are paid an increased amount, as do men and women who had paid graduated contributions. 12,277,360 persons were receiving National Insurance retirement pensions in May 2009 (7,650,400 women and 4,626,960 men). The full basic state pension in 2016–17 is £115.95 per week for a single person and £185.45 per week for a couple. Since 1 Oct. 1989 the pension for which a person has qualified may be paid in full whether a person continues in work or not irrespective of the amount of earnings. Although for males the official retirement age is 65, in 2010 the average actual retirement age among males was 64.6 years (up from 63.8 years in 2004). For women the average actual retirement age rose from 61.2 years to 62.3 years between 2004 and 2010. At the age of 80 a small age addition is payable. In addition non-contributory pensions are now payable, subject to residence conditions, to persons aged 80 and over who do not qualify for a retirement pension or qualify for one at a low rate.

Pensioners whose pension is insufficient to live on may qualify for Income Support.

Non-Contributory Benefits

Universal Credit. Universal Credit has been trialled since April 2013 on a limited basis and has been gradually introduced nationally since then, although the process has not yet been completed. It replaces Child Tax Credit, Housing Benefit, Income Support, Income-related Employment Support and Allowance, Income-related Jobseeker's Allowance and Working Tax Credit.

Child Benefit. Child Benefit is a tax-free cash allowance normally paid to the mother. The weekly rates are highest for the eldest qualifying child (£20.70 weekly in 2016–17) and less for each other child (£13.70 weekly in 2016–17). Child Benefit is payable for children under 16, for 16- and 17-year-olds registered for work or training, and for those under 20 receiving full-time non-advanced education. Some 7,841,675 families received benefit in Aug. 2010. From Jan. 2013 families with at least one partner earning £50,000 or more were not able to claim the total amount of child benefit.

Child Support Agency. The Child Support Agency (CSA) is responsible for calculating, collecting and enforcing child maintenance payments. The non-resident parent pays 15% of their net income if they have one child, 20% for two and 30% for three or more children. The agency currently deals with around 1.5m. child support cases. In Dec. 2006 the Child Maintenance White Paper announced the establishment of a new and radically different organization called the Child Maintenance and Enforcement Commission. It assumed responsibility for the Child Support Agency in Nov. 2008, and was to introduce a tougher enforcement regime that encouraged parents to take greater responsibility for the financial support of their children. However, it was abolished in July 2012, with the CSA becoming the delivery arm of the Child Maintenance Group within the Department for Work and Pensions.

Working Tax Credit. This tackles poor work incentives and persistent poverty among working people. For families with children, credit is available for those with low incomes. It also extends support to low-income working people without children aged 25 or over working 30 hours or more a week. The Working Tax Credit is not just restricted to those with children; the amount of the award varies considerably depending on the prevailing circumstances. Both single persons and couples may be eligible.

Child Tax Credit. The Child Tax Credit aims at creating a single system of support for families with children, payable irrespective of the work status of the adults in the household. This means that the Child Tax Credit forms a stable and secure income bridge as families move off welfare and into work. It also provides a common framework of assessment, so that all families are part of the same inclusive system. The Child Tax Credit provides a family element of up to £545 per year and a child element of up to £2,780 per child per year in addition to Child Benefit. The amount paid varies depending on the number of children and the gross annual joint income.

Guardian's Allowance. A person responsible for an orphan child may be entitled to a Guardian's Allowance in addition to Child Benefit. Normally, both the child's parents must be dead but when they never married or were divorced, or one is missing or serving a long sentence of imprisonment, the allowance may be paid on the death of one parent only. The weekly rate of Guardian's Allowance is £16.55 in 2016–17.

Attendance Allowance. This is a tax-free Social Security benefit for disabled people over 65 who need help with personal care. The rates are increased for the terminally ill. There were 1,614,270 recipients in May 2010.

Carers' Allowance. This is a taxable benefit paid to those who care for a disabled person for at least 35 hours per week. The carer must be at least 16, not in full-time education of 21 hours or more per week, and not earn more than £100 per week after certain deductions have been made—such as income tax. This is a weekly rate (£62.10 in 2016–17), with increases for dependants. In May 2010 there were 536,900 recipients.

Disability Living Allowance. This is a non-taxable benefit available to people disabled before the age of 65, who need help with getting around or with personal care for at least three months. The mobility component has two weekly rates, the care component has three. There were 3,157,310 recipients in May 2010. From 8 April 2013 Disability Living Allowance is being gradually phased out and replaced by Personal Independence Payment.

Industrial Injuries Disablement and Death Benefits. The scheme provides a system of insurance against 'personal injury by accident arising out of and in the course of employment' and against certain prescribed diseases and injuries owing to the nature of the employment. There are no contribution conditions for the payment of benefit. There were 260,690 recipients in March 2009. Two types of benefit are provided:

—Disablement Benefit. This is payable where, as the result of an industrial accident or prescribed disease, there is a loss of physical or mental faculty. The loss of faculty will be assessed as a percentage by comparison with a person of the same age and sex whose condition is normal. If the assessment is between 14–100% benefit will be paid as weekly pension. The rates vary from 20% disabled to 100% disablement. Assessments of less than 14% do not normally attract basic benefit except for certain progressive chest diseases. Pensions for persons under 18 are at a reduced rate. When injury benefit was abolished for industrial accidents occurring and prescribed diseases commencing on or after 6 April 1983, a common start date was introduced for the payment of Disablement Benefit 90 days (excluding Sundays) after the date of the relevant accident or onset of the disease.

—Death Benefit. This is payable to the widow, widower or children of a person who died before 11 April 1988 as the result of an industrial accident or a prescribed disease. For deaths which occurred on or after 11 April 1988, standard Bereavement Benefits apply (and, until 2001, Widows' Benefits). Allowances may be paid to people who are suffering from pneumoconiosis or byssinosis or certain other slowly developing diseases due to employment before 5 July 1948. They must not at any time have been entitled to benefit under the Industrial Injuries provision of the Social Security Act, or compensation under Workmen's Compensation Acts, or have received damages through the courts.

War Pensions. Pensions are payable for disablement or death as a result of service in the armed forces. Similar schemes exist for other groups such as merchant seamen injured as a result of war or for civilians injured by enemy action in the Second World War. The amount depends on the degree of disablement. There were 180,400 recipients in March 2010.

Housing Benefit. The Housing Benefit scheme assists persons who need help to pay their rent, using general assessment rules and benefit levels similar to those for the income support scheme. The scheme sets a limit of £16,000 on the amount of capital a person may have and still remain entitled. Restrictions on the granting of benefit to persons under 25 were introduced in 1995. In May 2010 there were 4,751,530 beneficiaries. Since April 2013 claimants in social housing have their Housing Benefit reduced by 14% if they have one spare bedroom and by 25% if they have two or more spare bedrooms.

Income Support. Income Support is a non-contributory benefit for people aged 16 or over, not working 16 hours or more a week or with a partner not working more than 24 hours or more per week, and not required to be available for employment. These include single parents, long-term sick or disabled persons, and those caring for them who qualify for Invalid Care Allowance. Income Support is not payable if the claimant (or claimant and partner together) has capital assets that total more than £16,000. These include savings, investments or property other than their home. Savings/capital assets worth under £6,000 are ignored. Savings between £6,000 and £16,000 are treated as if each £250 or part of £250 brings in an income of £1 per week. Income Support claimants whose partners are of pensionable age may have up to £12,000 and still be entitled to Income Support. Claimants in residential care and nursing homes are allowed to have up to £16,000 and still be entitled to Income Support. From 6 Oct. 2003 a new Pension Credit replaced the Minimum Income Guarantee (Income Support for people aged 60 and over). In Oct. 2008 Income Support paid on the grounds of incapacity was replaced by Employment and Support Allowance for all new claims. In May 2010 there were 2,734,170 Pension Credit claimants, 1,842,490 Minimum Income Guarantee claimants and 9,780 Income Support claimants. Weekly payments start at £57.90.

Council Tax Benefit. Council Tax Benefit was abolished with effect from 1 April 2013 and has been replaced by a system of localized support (Council Tax Support).

The Social Fund. This comprises: Sure Start Maternity Grant (a payment of up to £500 for the first baby expected, born or adopted, payable to persons receiving Income Support, Income-based Jobseeker's Allowance, Child Tax Credit, Working Tax Credit or Pension Credit); Funeral Payments (a payment of fees levied by the burial authorities and crematoria, plus up to £700 for other funeral expenses, to persons receiving Income Support, Income-based Jobseeker's Allowance, Housing Benefit, Child Tax Credit, Working Tax Credit or Pension Credit); Cold Weather Payments (a payment of £25 for any consecutive seven days when the temperature is below freezing to persons receiving income support who are pensioners, disabled or have a child under five); Winter Fuel Payments (a payment of £250 to every household with a person aged 60 or over providing they do not live permanently in a hospital, residential care or nursing home, or £400 if the household has someone aged 80 years old or over). The Discretionary Social Fund comprises: Community Care Grants (payments to help persons receiving income support to move into the community or avoid institutional care); Budgeting Loans (interest-free loans to persons receiving income support for expenses difficult to budget for); Crisis Loans (interest-free loans to anyone without resources in an emergency where there is no other means of preventing serious risk to health or safety). Savings over £500 (£1,000 for persons aged 60 or over) are taken into account before payments are made.

RELIGION

The Anglican Communion originated from the Church of England and parallels in its fellowship of autonomous churches the evolution of British influence beyond the seas from colonies to dominions and independent nations. The Archbishop of Canterbury presides as primus inter pares at the decennial meetings of the bishops of the Anglican Communion at the Lambeth Conference and at the biennial meetings of the Primates and the Anglican Consultative Council. The 2008 Conference was held in Canterbury and was attended by 670 bishops. Average attendance at Sunday worship in 2013 numbered 1.0m., compared to 3.5m. in 1950. There were 1,085,600 Anglicans on the electoral roll in 2013.

The Anglican Communion (Anglican Episcopal family) consists of an estimated 80m. Christians who are members of 44 different Churches (including six Extra-Provincial Dioceses). These are: The Anglican Church in Aotearoa, New Zealand and Polynesia; The Anglican Church of Australia; The Church of Bangladesh; The Anglican Church of Bermuda (Extra-Provincial to the Archbishop of Canterbury); The Episcopal Anglican Church of Brazil; The Anglican Church of Burundi; The Anglican Church of Canada; The Church of the Province of Central Africa; The Anglican Church of the Central America Region; The Church of Ceylon (Sri Lanka) (Extra-Provincial to the Archbishop of Canterbury); The Province of the Anglican Church of the Congo; The Episcopal Church of Cuba (under a Metropolitan Council); The Church of England; The Parish of the Falkland Islands (Extra-Provincial to the Archbishop of Canterbury); Hong Kong Sheng Kung Hui; The Church of the Province of the Indian Ocean; The Church of Ireland; The Nippon Sei Ko Kai; The Episcopal Church in Jerusalem and the Middle East; The Anglican Church of Kenya; The Anglican Church of Korea; The Lusitanian Church (Portugal) (Extra-Provincial to the Archbishop of Canterbury); The Church of the Province of Melanesia; The Anglican Church of Mexico; The Church of the Province of Myanmar (Burma); The Church of Nigeria (Anglican Communion); The Church of North India; The Church of Pakistan; The Anglican Church of Papua New Guinea; The Episcopal Church in the Philippines; The Episcopal Church of Rwanda; The Scottish Episcopal Church; The Church of the Province of South East Asia; The Church of South India; The Anglican Church of Southern Africa; The Anglican Church of the Southern Cone of America; The Reformed Episcopal Church of Spain (Extra-Provincial to the Archbishop of Canterbury); The Episcopal Church of the Sudan; The Anglican Church of Tanzania; The Church of the Province of Uganda; The Episcopal Church in the United States of America; The Church in Wales; The Church of the Province of West Africa; and The Church in the Province of the West Indies. New provinces are also currently in formation. Churches in Communion include the Mar Thoma Syrian Church, the Philippine Independent Church, and some Lutheran and Old Catholic Churches in Europe. The Church in China is known as a 'post-denominational' Church whose formation included Anglicans in the Holy Catholic Church in China.

England and Wales. The established Church of England, which baptizes about 13% of infants born in England (i.e. excluding Wales but including the Isle of Man and the Channel Islands), is Anglican. Civil disabilities on account of religion do not attach to any class of British subject. Under the Welsh Church Acts, 1914 and 1919, the Church in Wales and Monmouthshire was disestablished as from 1 April 1920, and Wales was formed into a separate Province.

The Queen is, under God, the supreme governor of the Church of England, with the right, regulated by statute, to nominate to the vacant archbishoprics and bishoprics. The Queen, on the advice of the First Lord of the Treasury, also appoints to such deaneries, prebendaries and canonries as are in the gift of the Crown, while a large number of livings and also some canonries are in the gift of the Lord Chancellor.

There are two archbishops (at the head of the two Provinces of Canterbury and York), and 44 diocesan sees including the diocese in Europe, which is part of the Province of Canterbury. Justin Welby was enthroned as Archbishop of Canterbury on 21 March 2013. Each archbishop also has his own particular diocese, wherein he exercises episcopal, as in his Province he exercises metropolitan, jurisdiction. In Dec. 2008 there were 42 serving bishops, 64 suffragan and assistant bishops, 42 deans and provosts of cathedrals and 110 archdeacons. The General Synod, which replaced the Church Assembly in 1970 in England, consists of a House of Bishops, a House of Clergy and a House of Laity, and has power to frame legislation regarding Church matters. The first two Houses consist of the members of the Convocations of Canterbury and York, each of which consists of the diocesan bishops and elected representatives of the suffragan bishops, five for Canterbury province and three for York (forming an Upper House); deans and archdeacons, and a certain number of proctors elected as the representatives of the priests and deacons in each diocese, together with, in the case of Canterbury Convocation, four representatives of the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, London and the Southern Universities, and in the case of York two representatives of the Universities of Durham and Newcastle and the other Northern Universities, and three archdeacons to the Armed Forces, the Chaplain General of Prisons and two representatives of the Religious Communities (forming the Lower House). The House of Laity is elected by the lay members of the Deanery Synods but also includes two representatives of the Religious Communities. The Houses of Clergy and Laity also include a small number of ex officio members. Every Measure passed by the General Synod must be submitted to the Ecclesiastical Committee, consisting of 15 members of the House of Lords nominated by the Lord Chancellor and 15 members of the House of Commons nominated by the Speaker. This committee reports on each Measure to Parliament, and the Measure receives the Royal Assent and becomes law if each House of Parliament resolves that the Measure be presented to the Queen.

Parochial affairs are managed by annual parochial church meetings and parochial church councils. In 2008 there were 12,702 ecclesiastical parishes, inclusive of the Isle of Man and the Channel Islands. These parishes do not, in many cases, coincide with civil parishes. Although most parishes have their own churches, not every parish nowadays can have its own incumbent or priest. About 3,290 non-stipendiary clergy hold a bishop's licence to officiate at services.

In 2008 there were 4,431 incumbents excluding dignitaries, 1,913 other clergy of incumbent status and 1,301 assistant curates working in the parishes.

Women have been admitted to Holy Orders as deacons since 1987 and as priests since 1994. In July 2014 the General Synod voted to allow women to become bishops for the first time. On 26 Jan. 2015 Libby Lane became the Church of England's first female bishop when she was consecrated Bishop of Stockport. At 31 Dec. 2009 there were 1,649 full-time stipendiary women clergy, 1,548 of whom were in the parochial ministry. In the years following the vote in 1992 in favour of the ordination of women, 441 clergymen resigned because they disagreed with the decision. 11 clergymen subsequently re-entered the Church of England ministry and of the 441 who resigned, 260 are estimated to have joined the Roman Catholic Church and 30 the Orthodox Church. In Nov. 2010 five bishops (two retired) resigned in opposition to plans to admit women to the Episcopate.

Private persons possess the right of presentation to over 2,000 benefices; the patronage of the others belongs mainly to the Queen, the bishops and cathedrals, the Lord Chancellor, the colleges of the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge and other patronage trusts. More than 750 benefices include patronage trusts among their patrons. In addition to the dignitaries and parochial clergy already identified there were, in 2008, 143 cathedral and 342 full-time non-parochial clergy working within the diocesan framework, giving a total of 8,346 full-time stipendiary clergy working within the diocesan framework as at Dec. 2008. In addition there were 311 part-time stipendiary clergy. Although these figures account for the majority of active clergy in England, there are many others serving in institutions and elsewhere who cannot be quantified with any certainty. They include 1,609 chaplains in hospitals, the forces, prisons, schools and colleges, and those in mission agencies and religious communities.

Of the 40,405 buildings registered for the solemnization of marriages at 30 June 2007 (statistics from the Office of National Statistics), 16,418 belonged to the Church of England and the Church in Wales, and 23,987 to other religious denominations (Methodist, 6,362; Roman Catholic, 3,310; Baptist, 3,075; United Reformed, 1,587; Congregationalist, 1,245; Calvinistic Methodist, 1,057; Jehovah's Witnesses, 830; Brethren, 741; Salvation Army, 722; Unitarians, 161; other Christian, 4,291; Sikhs, 161; Muslims, 164; other non-Christian, 281). Of the 235,794 marriages celebrated in 2008 (331,150 in 1990), 57,057 were in the Established Church and the Church in Wales (115,328 in 1990), 21,444 in other denominations (43,837 in 1990) and 157,296 were civil marriages in Register Offices (156,875 in 1990).

The Roman Catholic population in England and Wales (the number of adherents) was 4,084,351 in 2009; 898,852 regularly attended Mass in England and Wales in 2009. There are 22 dioceses in five provinces and one Bishopric of the Forces (also covers Scotland), and the Personal Ordinariate of Our Lady of Walsingham. Vincent Nichols was installed as Archbishop of Westminster on 21 May 2009. In Feb. 2016 there were three Roman Catholic cardinals, one of whom is in Scotland. In England and Wales there are five archbishops, 17 other diocesan bishops and nine auxiliary or assistant bishops. In 2009 there were 4,645 priests in active ministry, 2,524 parish churches and 1,036 convents.

Religious affiliation figures for England and Wales according to the 2001 and 2011 censuses:

Religion	2001 census	2011 census	% of population in 2011
Christian	37,338,000	33,243,000	59.3
No religion	7,709,000	14,097,000	25.1

Other religion	151,000	241,000	0.4
Not stated	4,011,000	4,038,000	7.2

In Scotland according to the 2011 census 53.8% of the population stated their religion as Christian and 36.7% stated that they had no religion; the largest grouping was the Church of Scotland with 32.4% while 15.9% identified as being Roman Catholic.

In 2010 there were 5,515,000 members of Christian churches in the UK (5,845,000 in 2005), equivalent to 11.2% of the population (12.3% in 2005).

The Salvation Army is an international Christian church and charity, working in 124 countries, and offers unconditional friendship, support and practical help to people of all ages, backgrounds and needs. In the UK and Ireland (as at 2011) this work includes more than 800 community churches and social centres with more than 5,200 employees, some 1,200 ministers of religion and close to 50,000 members.

There is a 300-member Board of Deputies of British Jews.

In 2010 there were approximately 1.89m. to St Paul's Cathedral, London, 1.39m. to Westminster Abbey, London, 1.03m. visits to Canterbury Cathedral and 512,000 visits to York Minster.

World Heritage Sites

Sites under UK jurisdiction which appear on UNESCO's World Heritage List are (with year entered on list): Giant's Causeway and Causeway Coast (1986), rock formations on the Antrim Plateau in Northern Ireland; Durham Castle and Cathedral (1986 and 2008), the largest example of a Norman cathedral; Ironbridge Gorge (1986), built in the 18th century and considered the emblem of the industrial revolution; Studley Royal Park, including the Ruins of Fountains Abbey (1986), developed from the 18th century on the site of a former Cistercian abbey in Yorkshire; Stonehenge, Avebury and Associated Sites (1986 and 2008), among the world's most famous pre-historic monoliths; Castles and Town Walls of King Edward in Gwynedd (1986), a testament to the early period of English colonization in the late 13th century; St Kilda (1986, 2004 and 2005), a volcanic archipelago on the coast of the Hebrides; Blenheim Palace (1987), seat of the Dukes of Marlborough near Oxford and birthplace of Sir Winston Churchill; City of Bath (1987), with remains from its time as a Roman spa town, and home to many examples of neo-classical Georgian architecture; Westminster Palace, Westminster Abbey and Saint Margaret's Church (1987 and 2008)—the palace is the medieval seat of parliament rebuilt in the 19th century, the abbey the site of all coronations since the 11th century and Saint Margaret's is a small medieval gothic church; Henderson Island (1988), a South Pacific atoll; Tower of London (1988), a Norman fortress built to guard London; Canterbury Cathedral, St Augustine's Abbey and St Martin's Church (1988), the spiritual seat of the Church of England; Old and New Towns of Edinburgh (1995), the Scottish capital; Gough and Inaccessible Islands (1995 and 2004), two of the least disturbed islands and marine eco-systems in the South Atlantic; Maritime Greenwich (1997), including Britain's first Palladian building, designed by Inigo Jones, Christopher Wren's Royal Naval College and the Royal Observatory; Heart of Neolithic Orkney (1999), comprising several important neolithic monuments; Historic Town of St George's and Related Fortifications, Bermuda (2000), an example of early English New World colonialism; Blaenavon Industrial Landscape (2000), a symbol of South Wales' role as a coal and iron provider in the 19th century; Dorset and East Devon Coast (2001), which demonstrate rock formations and fossil remains from the Mesozoic Era; Derwent Valley Mills (2001), 18th-century cotton mills at the forefront of the Industrial Revolution; New Lanark (2001), Robert Owen's model industrial community and cotton mills of the early 19th century; Saltaire (2001), a mid-19th century planned industrial community for the textile industry; Royal Botanical Gardens, Kew (2003), containing important botanical collections in a historic landscape; Liverpool—Maritime Mercantile City (2004); the Cornwall and West Devon mining landscape (2006); the Pontcysyllte Aqueduct and Canal near Wrexham (2009), a feat of civil engineering by Thomas Telford during the Industrial Revolution; and the Forth Bridge (2015), a railway bridge that had the world's longest span when opened in 1890 and that continues to carry freight and passengers today.

The UK also shares the Frontiers of the Roman Empire sites (1987, 2005 and 2008) with Germany, containing the border line of the Roman Empire at its greatest extent in the 2nd century AD (specifically Hadrian's Wall).

Press

In Feb. 2016 there were 11 national dailies with a combined average daily circulation of 6,538,217 and ten national Sunday newspapers (5,870,963). In Jan. 2014 there were also 114 morning, evening and Sunday regional newspapers and 929 weeklies (345 of these for free distribution). In 2010 there were 3,212 consumer magazines and 4,765 business magazines. The most widely read daily is the tabloid The Sun, with an average daily circulation of 1,787,096 in Feb. 2016. The most widely read Sunday paper is The Sun on Sunday, with an average circulation of 1,412,453 in Feb. 2016.

In 2014 the Independent Press Standards Organisation (IPSO) replaced the former Press Complaints Commission. IPSO is the independent regulator of the newspaper and magazine industry. It is financed by the Regulatory Funding Committee, which is funded by member publications. Its chair is Sir Alan Moses.

In 2013 a total of 184,000 book titles were published in the UK (an 8% increase from 2012).

Tourism

In 2010 UK residents made 119.4m. trips within the UK, passing 373.3m. nights in accommodation and spending £20,835m. Of these, 78.7m. were holidaymakers. Visits from foreign tourists to the UK totalled 29.8m. in 2010 (down from a record 32.8m. in 2007). Spending was £16.9bn. in 2010. In 2010 the UK ranked sixth for international tourism arrivals behind the USA, Spain, France, Italy and China. The main countries of origin for foreign visitors in 2010 were: France (3.6m.), Germany (3.0m.), USA (2.7m.), Ireland (2.6m.) and Spain (1.8m.).

In 2010 there were 2.6m. people working in tourism-related industries.

UK residents made 55.6m. trips abroad in 2010 (39.6m. in 1994 but 69.6m. in 2006). Spain is the most popular destination for Britons travelling abroad for leisure (10.4m. visits), followed by France (9.1m.), the USA (3.2m.) and Ireland (3.0m.).

Festivals

Among the most famous music festivals are the Promenade Concerts or 'Proms', which take place at the Royal Albert Hall in London every year from July to Sept.; the Glyndebourne season in Sussex (May to Aug.); the Aldeburgh Festival in Suffolk (June); the Glastonbury Festival in Somerset (June); the Download Festival at Donington Park in Leicestershire (June); the Buxton Festival in Derbyshire (July); and the Reading and Leeds Festivals (Aug.). The annual London Film Festival takes place in Oct. Literary festivals include the Oxford Literary Festival in March, the Hay Festival at Hay-on-Wye in Powys (late May/early June) and the Cheltenham Festival of Literature in Gloucestershire (Oct.). The Edinburgh Festival and the Fringe Festival both take place in Aug./early Sept. and are major international festivals of culture. The Brighton Festival in May is England's largest arts festival. The multicultural Notting Hill Carnival in London takes place at the end of Aug. Other major events in the annual calendar are the New Year's Day Parade in London, the Crufts Dog Show at the Birmingham National Exhibition Centre (March), the Ideal Home Exhibition in London (March–April), the London Marathon (April), the Chelsea Flower Show (May), Royal Ascot (horse racing, in June), Wimbledon (tennis, in June–July), Henley Royal Regatta (July), Cowes (yachting, in Aug.) and the Lord Mayor's Show in London (Nov.).

ENGLAND

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Emperor Claudius' invasion in AD 43 established Roman rule in southern England. After the failed rebellions in AD 60 of Queen Boudicca of the Iceni and the suppression of Wales by AD 78, there was a long period of peaceful settlement, during which the Romans established new towns such as Londinium (London) and Eboracum (York). After the withdrawal of the Roman legions in the early 5th century, Pictish and Saxon raiders harassed the British towns. Defensive Saxon settlements were at first encouraged by the authorities but their rebellion soon threatened the Roman way of life. The Romano-British were pushed back to higher land in the west by waves of invading Saxons, Angles and Jutes. After a period of Mercian supremacy under Offa in the 8th century, the West Saxons (Wessex) dominated southern England. Danish invasions in 865 established the Danelaw in northern England. Alfred the Great of Wessex and his son Edward resisted Danish expansion, strengthening Anglo-Saxon unity under Alfred's successors—Athelstan became the first king of all England in 927.

Danish rule over England was reasserted by Sweyn in 994 and his son, Canute. The Anglo-Saxon restoration was short-lived; William, duke of Normandy led the Norman Conquest in 1066, defeating Harold II at the Battle of Hastings. When William died in 1087, he left Normandy to his eldest son Robert, thus separating it from England. Henry II, the founder of the Plantagenet dynasty, was feudatory lord of half of France but Henry's son John lost most of the French possessions. The barons forced John to seal the Magna Carta in 1215, later interpreted as the source of English civil liberties. Thereafter, the Norman baronage came to regard themselves as English.

The Hundred Years War (1338–1453) with France ended with the loss of all remaining French possessions except Calais. In 1387 and in later outbreaks, the Black Death reduced the population by over a third. A dynastic struggle between the rival houses of York and Lancaster was concluded by the invasion of Henry Tudor in 1485. His son, Henry VIII, asserted royal authority over the church, breaking with Rome. Tudor power reached its zenith with Elizabeth I. Philip II's Spanish Armada, destroyed in 1588, was sent to turn back the Protestant tide in England and to counter English ambitions in the New World.

The accession of James VI of Scotland to the English throne in 1603 brought the two countries into personal union. Charles I's defeat in the Civil War resulted in a republican Commonwealth but the Stuart monarchy was restored in 1660. England and Scotland were united in 1707 under Anne, queen of Great Britain.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

At the census taken on 27 March 2011 the area of England was 130,432 sq. km (of which land 130,278 sq. km) and the population 53,012,456, giving a density of 407 per sq. km. England covers 53.4% of the total area of the United Kingdom. Households at the 2011 census: 22,063,368. Mid-2014 population estimate: 54,316,618 (26,773,196 males; 27,543,422 females).

Population (present on census night) at the four previous decennial censuses:

1971	1981	1991	2001
46,018,371 ¹	46,226,100 ²	46,382,050	49,138,831

¹Area now included in Wales formed the English county of Monmouthshire until 1974. ²The final count is believed to be over-stated as a result of an error in processing. The preliminary counts presented here rounded to the nearest hundred are thought to be more accurate.

Population at census day 2011:

Males	Females	Total
26,069,148	26,943,308	53,012,456

For further statistical information, see under Territory and Population, UNITED KINGDOM.

The population on census day in 2011 in the nine English Government Office regions (created in 1994) was as follows: East, 5,846,965; East Midlands, 4,533,222; London, 8,173,941; North East, 2,596,886; North West, 7,052,177; South East, 8,634,750; South West, 5,288,935; West Midlands, 5,601,847; Yorkshire and the Humber, 5,283,733.

Following the local government reorganization in the mid-1990s, there is a mixed pattern to local government in England. Apart from Greater London, England is divided into 27 counties with two tiers of administration; a county council and district councils. There are six metropolitan county areas containing 36 single-tier metropolitan districts.

In addition, there are 56 single-tier unitary authorities which, with the exception of the Isle of Wight, were formerly district councils in the shire counties of England. The Isle of Wight is a unitary county council. The Isles of Scilly have a unitary council but are considered a district of 'Cornwall and the Isles of Scilly'.

As a consequence of the establishment of the 56 unitary authorities, a number of county areas were abolished. These were Avon, Cleveland and Humberside. Berkshire County Council was also abolished but the county itself is retained for ceremonial purposes. Greater London comprises 32 boroughs and the City of London.

Shipping

In 2009 English ports handled 340.8m. tonnes of traffic, down from 400.6m. tonnes in 2006.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Education

For details on the nature and types of school, see under Education, UNITED KINGDOM.

In 2012–13 education expenditure by central and local government in England was £109bn.

In Jan. 2014 there were 414 public sector nursery schools and one direct grant nursery school in England with provision for children under five; 39,915 pupils under five were attending public sector nursery schools. Some of these children were attending part-time.

In Jan. 2014 there were 4,416,710 pupils at 16,788 primary schools in England. Nearly all primary schools take both boys and girls. 13% of primary schools had 100 full-time pupils or fewer.

In Jan. 2014 there were 3,329 state-funded secondary schools in England with 3.2m. pupils of which 57% were academies (including free schools, university technical colleges and studio schools). Almost all local education authorities operate a system of comprehensive schools to which pupils are admitted without reference to ability or aptitude. In Jan. 2014 there were 1,249 such schools in England with 1.2m. pupils. Some local authorities continue to operate a selective admissions policy at age 11, as do 163 state-funded secondary schools in England (135 of these being converter academies). All-through schools have pupils aged three to 18; pupils over 16 being able to transfer to an 11 to 18 school or a sixth form college providing for pupils aged 16 to 19—there are currently 93 official or designated sixth form colleges in England. In Jan. 2014 there were 176 middle schools deemed secondary.

Under the Education Act 1996 children have special educational needs if they have a learning difficulty which calls for special educational provision to be made for them. In some cases the local authority will need to make a statutory assessment of special educational needs under the Education Act 1996, which may ultimately lead to a 'statement'. In England the total number of pupils with statements in Jan. 2014 was 232,190. In Jan. 2014 there were 964 maintained special schools and 69 non-maintained special schools.

Outside the state system of education there were 2,411 independent schools (excluding direct grant nursery schools) in England in Jan. 2014, ranging from large prestigious schools to small local ones. Some provide boarding facilities but the majority include non-resident day pupils. There were 578,975 pupils in these schools in Jan. 2014, which represent about 7% of the total pupil population in England.

In 2013–14, 26,103 trainees began college-based initial teacher training courses and a further 6,676 trainees entered School Direct training.

Further Education (Non-University). Participation in FE and Skills learning totalled 4.5m. in 2012–13, with 2.9m. students enrolled at FE colleges, 851,500 in apprenticeships and 759,600 in workplace and community learning. Total funding for the FE and Skills sector in England for 2012–13 was £4.0bn.

Higher Education. In 2011–12 there were 131 higher education institutions in England, including the individual colleges of the University of London. There were a total of 89 universities in England in 2011–12. Since then a further 11 institutions have been granted university status (see footnotes to sections c) and d) below). The main funding body is the Higher Education Funding Council for England (HEFCE), which distributes public money for teaching and research to universities and colleges. It works in partnership with the higher education sector and advises government on higher education policy. In 2011–12 HEFCE distributed a total of £6.51bn., including £4.34bn. for teaching and £1.56bn. for research.

SCOTLAND

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Earliest evidence of human settlement in Scotland dates from the Middle Stone Age. Hunters and fishermen on the west coast were succeeded by farming communities as far north as Shetland. The Romans, who were active in the 1st century AD, built Hadrian's Wall between the Tyne and Solway Firth as their northern frontier. At this time, the Picts formed two kingdoms north of the Firth of Clyde. From the 6th century, the Celtic Scots from Dalriada, in the north of Ireland, fought with Angles and Britons for control of southern Scotland.

In 843 Kenneth MacAlpine united the Scots and the Picts to found the kingdom of Scotland. A legal and administrative uniformity was established by David I (reigned 1124–53). William the Lion abandoned claims to Northumbria in 1209 but began the alliance with France. In 1286 Edward I of England asserted his claim as overlord of Scotland and appointed his son to succeed to the crown. Resistance to English rule was led by William Wallace and later by Robert Bruce, who defeated the English at Bannockburn in 1314. His grandson, Robert II, became the first Stewart (Stuart) king in 1371.

Royal minorities undermined the authority of the crown in the 15th century until the accession of James IV in 1488. Relations with England improved after his marriage to Margaret Tudor in 1503 but when Henry VIII invaded France, James attacked England and was killed at the Battle of Flodden in 1513. The young James V was assailed by conflicting pressures from pro-French and pro-English factions but having secured his personal rule, he entered into two successive French marriages. His daughter, Mary Queen of Scots, married the French Dauphin in 1558. Protestant opposition to French influence was bolstered by Elizabeth I of England, who sent troops. Mary was in France when the Scottish parliament renounced papal authority, bolstering the reformist movement, led by John Knox. Returning to Scotland after her husband's death in 1561, Mary was forced to take refuge in England. Her son, James VI, survived the animosity between his own and his mother's followers to make an alliance with England. Deemed a threat because of her claim to the English throne, Mary was executed on Elizabeth's orders in 1587.

Elizabeth died without issue in 1603 and was succeeded by James. Although he styled himself 'king of Great Britain', England and Scotland remained independent. Charles I alienated much of the Scottish nobility and was defeated in the Bishops' Wars by the Covenanters, who rejected English interference in the Scottish church. Scottish armies fought for both sides in the English Civil War, which led to the execution of Charles I in 1649. However, the Scots soon united to accept Charles II as their king. Having established dominance in England, Cromwell moved against Scotland forcing Charles II into exile. His restoration in 1660 was welcomed in both kingdoms. His successor, James VII (James II of England), was less astute in managing religious and political differences. The collapse of his regime in 1688 and the arrival of William of Orange confirmed the Protestant ascendancy in Scotland and England.

The union of parliament in 1707 brought Scotland more directly under English authority. However, Scotland retained its own legal and ecclesiastical systems. The remaining supporters of James VII, the Jacobites, led two abortive risings on behalf of James' son and grandson (the old and young Pretenders) but were defeated decisively at Culloden in 1746.

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

In a referendum on devolution on 11 Sept. 1997, Scotland's voters opted for devolved government, calling for the reinstatement of a separate parliament in Scotland, the first since union with England in 1707. 1,775,045 votes (74.3%) were cast in favour of a Scottish parliament and 614,400 against (25.7%). On a turnout of 60.4%, around 44.8% of the total electorate voted in favour. For the second question, on the Parliament's tax-raising powers, 1,512,889 votes were cast in favour (63.5%) and 870,263 against (36.5%). This represented 38.4% of the total electorate.

A referendum on independence from the United Kingdom was held on 18 Sept. 2014. In response to the question 'Should Scotland be an independent country?', 55.3% answered 'no' with 44.7% answering 'yes'. 4,283,392 people were registered to vote; turnout was 84.6%. For the first time in the United Kingdom 16- and 17-year-olds could vote in a major ballot.

The Scottish Parliament is made up of 129 members and managed a budget of £31.3bn. in 2008–09. The parliament may pass laws and has limited tax raising powers; it is also responsible for devolved issues, including health, education, police and fire services; however, 'reserved issues' (foreign policy, constitutional matters, and many domestic areas including social security, trade and industry, and employment legislation) remain the responsibility of the British Parliament in Westminster.

The Parliamentary electorate of Scotland in the register in Dec. 2013 numbered 4,027,187.

RECENT ELECTIONS

At the UK general election held in May 2015, 59 members were returned from Scotland. The Scottish National Party won 56 seats; Labour, 1; Conservative, 1; Liberal Democrats, 1. At the May 2014 European Parliament elections Labour won 2 seats, the Scottish National Party 2, the Conservatives 1 and UKIP 1.

In elections to the Scottish Parliament on 5 May 2016, the Scottish National Party (SNP) won 63 seats (4 by regional list), against 31 (24 by regional list) for the Conservatives, 24 (21 by regional list) for Labour, 6 (all by regional list) for the Greens and 5 (one by regional list) for the Liberal Democrats. Of the 129 seats, 73 were won on a first-past-the-post basis and 56 through proportional representation (regional list). The election delivered a third consecutive parliament in which the SNP were the largest party (although two seats short of a majority) and also saw the Conservatives surpass Labour in Scotland for the first time since the opening of the Scottish Parliament in 1999. The SNP is expected to prioritize education in the forthcoming parliament.

ECONOMY

For information on the economy, see UNITED KINGDOM.

Overview

After legislative powers were devolved to a reconstituted Scottish Parliament in 1999, the economy achieved a degree of financial autonomy, including the power to determine the cost of university education and to vary the level of income tax.

Traditionally, heavy industry—including mining, shipbuilding and engineering—had dominated the economy. Subsequent industrial decline during the second half of the 20th century was countered by the discovery of oil reserves in the North Sea in the mid-1960s and a shift towards a services-orientated economy. The services sector now accounts for nearly 75% of the economy. Tourism and financial services are key contributors, with the latter responsible for 13% of GDP and 7% of all jobs in 2013. Primary exports include textiles, whisky and shortbread.

In 2008 the near collapse of the Royal Bank of Scotland and HBOS (the holding company of the Bank of Scotland) threatened a UK financial sector meltdown until both institutions were bailed out by the government. Alongside the rest of the UK economy, Scotland returned to positive growth in 2010.

A referendum in Sept. 2014 resulted in a majority vote against Scottish independence from the UK. Analysts had predicted that independence would have bleak economic consequences for the nation, owing to declining oil revenues, an ageing population and uncertainty over the sterling currency union and membership of the European Union. Following the referendum, the UK government set out plans to devolve more responsibility to the Scottish Parliament, including greater localized tax-raising and spending power.

Currency

The Bank of Scotland, Clydesdale Bank and the Royal Bank of Scotland have note-issuing powers.

Budget

Government expenditure in Scotland came to £56.5bn. in 2008–09 (including social protection £18.6bn., health £10.2bn. and education £7.6bn.). Revenues (excluding North Sea revenue) totalled £43.5bn. (including income tax £10.7bn., national insurance contributions £8.0bn. and VAT £7.5bn.).

Performance

The real GDP growth rate in 2010 was 0.9%.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

35% of household waste was recycled in 2008–09.

Electricity

The Electricity Act 1989 led to the privatization of the industry in Scotland and the creation of three new companies: ScottishPower, Scottish Hydro-Electric and Scottish Nuclear. After a series of acquisitions and mergers, in Dec. 1998 Scottish Hydro-Electric became part of the newly formed Scottish and Southern Energy (rebranded to SSE in 2010), a vertically integrated company that covers generation, transmission, distribution and supply in northern Scotland. ScottishPower runs distribution in central and southern Scotland and in 2007 became a subsidiary of the Spanish company Iberdrola. Scottish Nuclear, responsible for operating the two Scottish nuclear power stations, merged with British Energy in 1996, which in turn became a subsidiary of EDF in Jan. 2009.

Water

Water supply is the responsibility of the Regional and Island local authorities. The Scottish Environment Protection Agency (SEPA) is responsible for environmental management.

Agriculture

In 2010 total agricultural area was 5,643,054 ha., of which 3,191,593 ha. were used for rough grazing and 1,932,274 ha. for crops and grass.

Selected crop production, 2010 (in 1,000 tonnes): barley, 1,665; potatoes, 1,472; wheat, 918; oats, 135.

Livestock, 2010 (in 1,000): sheep, 6,753; cattle, 1,826; pigs, 409; poultry, 14,593.

Forestry

Total forest area in March 2011 was 1,390,000 ha., of which 481,000 ha. was owned or managed by the Forestry Commission.

Fisheries

The major fishing ports in terms of value of fish landed are Peterhead, Lerwick, Fraserburgh and Aberdeen. In 2009 there were 2,174 fishing vessels that landed 378,000 tonnes of fish worth £443m.

INDUSTRY

Labour

In the period Nov. 2014–Jan. 2015 the economically active population numbered 2,773,000 (1,357,000 females), of whom 162,000 (63,000 females) were unemployed. The ILO unemployment rate in the period Oct.–Dec. 2013 was 7.1% (compared to 7.2% in the UK as a whole). In Sept. 2009, 37.1% of employee jobs were in public and other services, 22.0% in retail, wholesale and hotels, 18.7% in finance and business, and 8.7% in manufacturing.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

Responsibility for the construction and maintenance of trunk roads belongs to the Scottish Office. Roads not classified as trunk roads are the responsibility of county or unitary councils. As at 1 April 2009 there were 55,420 km of public roads, of which 559 km were motorways. There were 2.38m. licensed private and light goods vehicles.

Rail

Total railway length in 2007–08 was 2,745 km. In 2007–08 a total of 84.8m. passengers travelled by rail and 11.0m. tonnes of freight were carried. There is a metro in Glasgow.

Civil Aviation

There are major airports at Aberdeen, Edinburgh, Glasgow and Prestwick. In 2008 Edinburgh was the seventh busiest for passenger traffic in the UK, with 8,992,178 passengers (5,281,038 on domestic flights) and Glasgow was the eighth busiest with 8,135,260 (4,192,121). In 2008, 24,348,159 passengers and 45,554 tonnes of freight were carried by Scottish airports.

Shipping

The principal Scottish port is Forth (including Grangemouth, Leith and Rosyth), which handled 25.3m. tonnes of cargo in 2012.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The High Court of Justiciary is the supreme criminal court in Scotland and has jurisdiction in all cases of crime committed in any part of Scotland, unless expressly excluded by statute. It consists of the Lord Justice General, the Lord Justice Clerk and 30 other Judges, who are the same Judges who preside in the Court of Session, the Scottish Supreme Civil Court. One Judge is seconded to the Scottish Law Commission. The Court is presided over by the Lord Justice General, whom failing, by the Lord Justice Clerk, and exercises an appellate jurisdiction as well as being a court of first instance. The home of the High Court is Edinburgh, but the court visits other towns and cities in Scotland on circuit and indeed the busiest High Court sitting is in Glasgow. The court sits in Edinburgh both as a Court of Appeal (the quorum being two judges if the appeal is against sentence or other disposals, and three in all other cases) and on circuit as a court of first instance. Although the decisions of the High Court are not subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United Kingdom, with the Scotland Act 1998 coming into force on 20 May 1999, there is a limited right of appeal against the termination of a devolution issue to the Supreme Court of the United Kingdom. One Judge sitting with a Jury of 15 persons can, and usually does, try cases, but two or more Judges (with a Jury) may do so in important or complex cases. The court has a privative jurisdiction over cases of treason, murder, rape, breach of duty by Magistrates and certain statutory offences under the Official Secrets Act 1911 and the Geneva Conventions Act 1957. It also tries the most serious crimes against person or property and those cases in which a sentence greater than imprisonment for three years is likely to be imposed.

The Sheriff Court has an inherent universal criminal jurisdiction (as well as an extensive civil one), limited in general to crimes and offences committed within a sheriffdom (a specifically defined region), which has, however, been curtailed by statute or practice under which the High Court of Justiciary has exclusive jurisdiction in relation to the crimes mentioned above. The Sheriff Court is presided over by a Sheriff Principal or a Sheriff, who when trying cases on indictment sits with a Jury of 15 people. His powers of awarding punishment involving imprisonment are restricted to a maximum of three years, but he may under certain statutory powers remit the prisoner to the High Court for sentence if this is felt to be insufficient. The Sheriff also exercises a wide summary criminal jurisdiction and when doing so sits without a Jury; and he has concurrent jurisdiction with every other court within his Sheriff Court district in regard to all offences competent for trial in summary courts. The great majority of offences which come before courts are of a more minor nature and as such are disposed of in the Sheriff Summary Courts or in the District Courts (see below). Where a case is to be tried on indictment either in the High Court of Justiciary or in the Sheriff Court, the Judge may, before the trial, hold a preliminary or first diet to decide questions of a preliminary nature, whether relating to the competency or relevancy of proceedings or otherwise. Any decision at a preliminary diet (other than a decision to adjourn the first or preliminary diet or discharge trial diet) can be the subject of an appeal to the High Court of Justiciary prior to the trial. The High Court also has the exclusive power to provide a remedy for all extraordinary occurrences in the course of criminal business where there is no other mode of appeal available. This is known as the Nobile Officium powers of the High Court and all petitions to the High Court as the Nobile Officium must be heard before at least three judges.

In cases to be tried on indictment in the Sheriff Court a first diet is mandatory before the trial diet to decide questions of a preliminary nature and to identify cases which are unlikely to go to trial on the date programmed. Likewise in summary proceedings, an intermediate diet is again mandatory before trial. In High Court cases such matters may be dealt with at a preliminary diet.

District Courts have jurisdiction in more minor offences occurring within a district which before recent local government reorganization corresponded to district council boundaries. These courts are presided over by Lay Magistrates, known as Justices, who have limited powers for fine and imprisonment. In Glasgow District there are also Stipendiary Magistrates, who are legally qualified, and who have the same sentencing powers as Sheriffs.

The Court of Session, presided over by the Lord President (the Lord Justice General in criminal cases), is divided into an inner-house comprising two divisions of five judges each with a mainly appellate function, and an outer-house comprising 22 single Judges sitting individually at first instance; it exercises the highest civil jurisdiction in Scotland, with the Supreme Court of the United Kingdom as the final Court of Appeal.

¹Contraventions of Scottish criminal law are divided for statistical purposes into crimes and offences. The term 'crime' is generally used for more serious criminal acts; and 'offence' for less serious ones, although the term 'offence' may also be used in relation to serious breaches of criminal law. The distinction is made only for working purposes and the 'seriousness' is generally related to the maximum sentence that can be imposed.

²Except for serious offences which qualify for solemn proceedings, children aged 8–15 are not proceeded against in Scottish courts. Children within this age group that commit crime are generally referred to the reporter of the children's panel or are given a police warning.

Police

In Scotland, the unitary councils have the role of police authorities. Establishment levels were abolished in Scotland on 1 April 1996. The actual strength at 30 Sept. 2010 was 17,371 officers. There were 1,567 special constables. Total police funding in Scotland for 2010–11 was £1,412m.

Education

In Sept. 2013 there were 2,569 publicly funded (local authority, grant-aided and self-governing) primary, secondary and special schools. All teachers employed in these schools are required to be qualified.

Pre-school Education. In Sept. 2013 there were 2,504 pre-school centres that were in partnership with their local authority and 102,871 pupils enrolled in these centres.

Primary Education. In Sept. 2013 there were 2,056 publicly funded primary schools with 377,382 pupils and 22,905 full-time equivalent teachers.

Secondary Education. In Sept. 2013 there were 364 publicly funded secondary schools with 289,164 pupils and 23,695 full-time equivalent teachers. Pupils who start their secondary education in schools that do not cater for a full range of courses may be transferred at the end of their second or fourth year to schools where a full range of courses is provided.

Independent schools. There were 102 independent schools in Dec. 2013. In Sept. 2014 there were 30,687 pupils in 72 independent schools that belonged to the Scottish Council of Independent Schools. A small number of the Scottish independent schools are of the 'public school' type, but they are not known as 'public schools' since in Scotland this term is used to denote education authority (i.e. state) schools.

Special Education. In Sept. 2013 there were 149 publicly funded special schools with 6,984 pupils.

Further Education. Under the Further and Higher Education (Scotland) Act 1992 funding of the Further Education colleges was transferred to central government in 1993. Scotland's FE colleges are funded by the Scottish Funding Council (SFC), which replaced the Scottish Further Education Funding Council and the Scottish Higher Education Funding Council in Oct. 2005.

There are 43 incorporated FE colleges as well as the FE colleges in Orkney and Shetland, which are run by the local education authorities, and two privately managed colleges, Sabhal Mor Ostaig and Newbattle Abbey College. The colleges offer training in a wide range of vocational areas and co-operate with the Scottish Qualifications Authority, the Enterprise, Energy and Lifelong Learning Directorate and the Education Directorate of the Scottish Executive in the development of new courses. The qualifications offered by colleges aim to improve the skills of the nation's workforce and increase the country's competitiveness.

In 2010–11 there were 314,585 students and a total of 383,005 enrolments on courses at Scotland's 43 further education institutions; the full-time equivalent staff number in the colleges was 12,291.

Full-time students resident in Scotland (and EU students) undertaking non-advanced (further education) courses are mainly supported through discretionary further education bursaries that are administered locally by further education colleges within National Policy Guidelines issued by the SFC. The Colleges have delegated discretionary powers for some aspects of the bursary support award.

In May 2000 the Scottish Executive announced the abolition of tuition fees for all eligible Scottish (and EU) full-time further education students from autumn 2000. The Executive also made a commitment to take steps to align, from autumn 2001, the levels of support available on a weekly basis for FE students with those that will apply for HE students and to begin to align the systems of assessment of parental/family contributions.

Higher Education. In Scotland in 2011–12 there were 19 institutions of higher education funded by the Scottish Funding Council. Included in this total is the Open University. University education in Scotland has a long history. Four universities—St Andrews, Glasgow, Aberdeen and Edinburgh, known collectively as the 'ancient Scottish universities'—were founded in the 15th and 16th centuries. Four further universities—Strathclyde, Heriot-Watt, Stirling and Dundee—were formally established as independent universities between 1964 and 1967, and three others—Napier (now Edinburgh Napier University), Paisley (now the University of the West of Scotland) and Robert Gordon—were granted the title of university in 1992, with Glasgow Caledonian and Abertay Dundee being added in 1993 and 1994 respectively. Two more of the present-day universities followed in 2007 when the University of Paisley and Bell College merged to become the University of the West of Scotland and Queen Margaret University College became Queen Margaret University. Most recently the University of the Highlands and Islands, which evolved from the higher education institution UHI Millennium Institute and is a federation of 13 colleges and research institutions, was granted university status in 2011.

The remaining higher education institutions, which all offer courses at degree level (although not themselves universities), were formerly Central Institutions: Glasgow School of Art; Royal Conservatoire of Scotland (Glasgow); and SRUC (Scotland's Rural College), with campuses in a number of locations.

Further education colleges may also provide higher education courses.

All the higher education institutions are independent and self-governing. In addition to funding through the higher education funding councils, they receive tuition fees from the Students Awards Agency for Scotland for students domiciled in Scotland, and through local education authorities for students domiciled in England and Wales. Institutions which carry out research may also receive funding through the five Research Councils administered by the Office of Science and Technology.

Health

As at 30 Sept. 2009 there were 4,941 general medical practitioners in Scotland. At 31 March 2009 there were 2,507 general dental practitioners in Scotland.

In 2009, 27% of men and 26% of women aged 16–64 were obese (having a body mass index of 30 or over), up from 16% and 17% in 1995 respectively.

Scottish Social Work Services staff numbered around 53,100 in Oct. 2009. Scotland's expenditure on social work (2008–09) was £2,684m.

Welfare

In Feb. 2010 there were 1,003,760 retirement pensioners, 213,460 beneficiaries of incapacity benefit, 340,540 recipients of disability living allowance, 185,990 claimants of income support, 278,480 of pension credit, 147,030 recipients of attendance allowance and 141,840 claimants of Jobseeker's Allowance. A total of 468,960 households were receiving housing benefit in July 2010 and 562,680 council tax benefit. There were 517,300 families with child tax credit or working tax credit awards, or with children and receiving out-of-work benefits in Aug. 2008.

RELIGION

The Church of Scotland, which was reformed in 1560, subsequently developed a presbyterian system of church government which was established in 1690 and has continued to the present day.

The supreme court is the General Assembly, which now consists of some 750 voting members, ministers and elders in equal numbers, together with some members of the diaconate, all commissioned by presbyteries. It meets annually in May, under the presidency of a Moderator appointed by the Assembly. The Queen is normally represented by a Lord High Commissioner, but has occasionally attended in person. The royal presence in a special throne gallery in the hall (but outside the Assembly) symbolizes the independence from state control of what is nevertheless recognized as the national Church in Scotland.

There are also 43 presbyteries in Scotland, providing governance and supervision at regional level, together with the presbyteries of England, Europe and Jerusalem. At the base of this conciliar structure of Church courts are the Kirk Sessions, of which there were 1,454 on 31 Dec. 2009. The total communicant membership of the Church on 31 Dec. 2009 was 464,355.

The Scottish Episcopal Church is a province of the Anglican Communion and is one of the historic Scottish churches. It consists of seven dioceses. As at 31 Dec. 2009 it had 320 churches, 524 clergy and 37,047 members, of whom 25,776 were communicants.

There are in Scotland some small outstanding Presbyterian bodies and also Baptists, Congregationalists, Methodists and Unitarians.

The Roman Catholic Church had in Scotland (as at 1 Oct. 2010) one cardinal archbishop, one archbishop, six bishops, three bishops emeriti, 59 permanent deacons, 715 clergy, 449 parishes and 643,075 adherents.

The proportion of marriages in Scotland according to the rites of the various Churches in 2009 was: Church of Scotland, 22.3%; Roman Catholic, 6.5%; Humanist Society of Scotland, 5.6%; others, 13.9%; civic, 51.7%.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

Scotland has five sites on UNESCO's World Heritage List (with year entered on list): St Kilda (1986, 2004 and 2005), a volcanic archipelago on the coast of the Hebrides; Old and New Towns of Edinburgh (1995), the Scottish capital; the Heart of Neolithic Orkney (1999), comprising several important neolithic monuments; New Lanark (2001), Robert Owen's model industrial community and cotton mills of the early 19th century; and the Forth Bridge (2015), a railway bridge that had the world's longest span when opened in 1890 and that continues to carry freight and passengers today.

Press

Average daily circulation in Jan. 2011 for the daily Scotsman was 43,362 and the Daily Record 306,872; and for Scotland on Sunday 56,256 and the Sunday Mail 366,325.

Tourism

There were 2.59m. overseas visitors to Scotland in 2009, spending £1.4bn. Overall tourism receipts totalled £4.1bn. The leading free admission attraction was Kelvingrove Art Gallery and Museum in Glasgow, with 1.4m. visitors in 2009. The leading tourist attraction charging admission in 2009 was Edinburgh Castle, with 1.2m. visits. In 2013, 8% of the workforce was employed in the tourism and hospitality industry.

Festivals

St Andrew's Day on 30 Nov. is Scotland's official national day. However, Burns Night on 25 Jan. to commemorate the life and works of Scots poet Robert Burns has become the day on which Scottish culture is celebrated throughout the UK. The Edinburgh Festival and the Fringe Festival both take place in Aug./early Sept. and are major international festivals of culture. Strathallan Castle near Auchterarder in Perthshire now hosts the T in the Park rock and pop festival, held every July. New Year's Eve is known as Hogmanay and the largest celebrations occur in Edinburgh.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

After the Roman evacuation, Wales divided into tribal kingdoms. Cunedda Wledig, a prince from southern Scotland, founded a dynasty in the northwest region of Gwynedd—to become the focus for Welsh unity—while the Irish exerted an influence in the kingdom of Dyfed. Offa's Dyke, a defensive earthwork, was the dividing line between England and Wales. In the late 9th century the kings of southern Wales swore fealty to Alfred of Wessex, a relationship assumed by the English crown. Gruffydd ap Llywelyn of Gwynedd briefly united Wales from 1055–63. His death was followed by Norman expansion into southern Wales, where the Marcher lordships were created.

With the accession of Llywelyn the Great (1194–1240), the house of Gwynedd overcame rival claims from Powys and Deheubarth to forge a stable political state under English suzerainty. His grandson, Llywelyn ap Gruffydd (1246–82), was recognized as Prince of Wales by Henry III but Llywelyn intrigued against Edward I, who reduced Gwynedd's hegemony. Wales was annexed and subdued by a network of castles. Edward's infant son, born at Caernarfon, was made Prince of Wales.

Loyalty to Henry VIII, who was of Welsh descent, was rewarded with political influence. The 'Act of Union' in 1536 made English law general, admitted Welsh representatives to Parliament and established the Council of Wales and the Marches.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

At the census taken on 27 March 2011 the population was 3,063,456. The area of Wales is 20,780 sq. km. (of which land 20,735 sq. km). Population density, 2011 census: 148 per sq. km. Wales covers 8.5% of the total area of the United Kingdom.

Population at census day 2011:

Males	Females	Total
1,504,228	1,559,228	3,063,456

Population (present on census night) at the four previous decennial censuses:

1971	1981	1991	2001
2,731,204 ¹	2,790,500 ²	2,811,865	2,903,805

¹Areas now recognized as Monmouthshire and small sections of various other counties formed the county of Monmouthshire in England until 1974. ²The final count is believed to be over-stated as a result of an error in processing. The preliminary counts presented here rounded to the nearest hundred are thought to be more accurate.

Mid-2014 population estimate: 3,092,036 (1,521,315 males; 1,570,721 females).

Cardiff, the capital and largest city, had a population in 2011 of 346,090; Swansea, the second largest city, had a population of 239,023.

In 2011, 630,062 people aged three and over were able to speak, read or write Welsh. Households at the 2011 census: 1,302,676.

For further statistical information, see under Territory and Population, UNITED KINGDOM.

Wales is divided into 22 unitary authorities (cities and counties, counties and county boroughs).

Designations, areas and populations of the unitary authority areas at census day 2011:

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

One of the main aspects of the former British Labour government's programme of constitutional reform was devolution. On 18 Sept. 1997 in the referendum there were 559,419 votes cast in favour of a Welsh assembly (50.3%) and 552,698 against (49.7%). The turnout was 51.3%.

The Parliamentary electorate of Wales in the register in Dec. 2013 numbered 2,297,250.

RECENT ELECTIONS

At the UK general election in May 2015, 40 members were returned from Wales. Labour won 25 seats (26 in 2010), Conservatives 11 seats (8), Plaid Cymru 3 seats (3), Liberal Democrats 1 (3).

At the 2014 European Parliamentary elections the Conservatives, Labour, Plaid Cymru and UKIP won one seat each.

In the elections to the Welsh Assembly on 5 May 2016, Labour won 29 seats (2 by regional list), followed by Plaid Cymru with 12 (6 by regional list), the Conservatives with 11 (5 by regional list), UKIP with 7 (all by regional list) and the Liberal Democrats with 1. Of the 60 seats, 40 seats were won on a first-past-the-post basis and 20 through proportional representation (regional list).

DEFENCE

ECONOMY

For information on the economy, see UNITED KINGDOM.

Overview

Wales has enjoyed increased economic autonomy since the Welsh Assembly was created by legislation in 1998. In 2006 extended powers were delegated from the Westminster Parliament to the Assembly and a referendum held in March 2011 approved law-making powers similar to those of the Scottish Parliament.

With rich mineral deposits, development in the 19th and early 20th centuries centred on coal, slate and steel exports. Steel also supported a substantial manufacturing industry. The post-Second World War era marked a shift away from traditional heavy industry. Tourism is a vibrant part of the economy, contributing £3.1bn. to GDP in 2013. Financial services and light industry are the other keystones of the devolved government's development plans.

In 2012 Gross Value Added (GVA; a measure of goods and services produced less all production costs) for the economy was £46.3bn., accounting for 3.4% of the UK's GVA total. This equated to £15,401 per head, although this was only 72.3% of the UK average that year. Unemployment in the first quarter of 2014 was 6.8%, down from 8.2% a year earlier, but consumer spending and house prices remained depressed. There is a strong dependence on the public sector for jobs. The small population and lack of large metropolitan centres have been cited as factors in uneven development across the principality.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

For information on energy and natural resources, see UNITED KINGDOM.

Environment

41% of municipal waste was recycled in April–June 2009.

Water

The Water Act of Sept. 1989 privatized Welsh Water (Dŵr Cymru), along with the nine water authorities in England.

Agriculture

In 2009 there were 39,024 agricultural holdings. Of these, 15,287 were under 5 ha., 8,209 were between 5 and 20 ha., 6,491 were between 20 and 50 ha. and 9,037 were over 50 ha. The average size of a holding in Wales in 2009 was 38 ha.

The area of tillage in 2009 was 83,584 ha. (82,788 ha. for crops and 796 ha. bare fallow). Major crops, 2009–10 (1,000 tonnes): wheat, 140; barley, 134; potatoes (2010), 57; oats, 23.

Livestock, 2009: sheep and lambs, 8,237,737; cattle and calves, 1,129,968; pigs, 22,303; poultry, 7,250,598.

Forestry

In March 2011 there were 114,000 ha. of Forestry Commission woodland and 190,000 ha. of non-Forestry Commission woodland.

Fisheries

The major fishing port is Milford Haven. In 2009, in all ports in Wales, 15,904 tonnes of fish and shellfish worth £25,693,649 were landed. There were 481 fishing vessels registered in Wales in 2009.

INDUSTRY

Main industrial production (gross value added), 2012 in £1m. (provisional): basic metals and metal products, 1,136; food products, beverages and tobacco, 1,064; transport equipment, 871; rubber and plastic products, 716; computer, electronic and optical products, 662.

Labour

In the year ending 31 March 2012 there were 1,305,500 people in employment, of whom 178,900 were self-employed. The number of claimant count unemployed in March 2012 was 79,800. The largest sectors in terms of jobs in 2011 were: wholesale and retail trade, 212,000; human health and social work activities, 209,000; manufacturing, 144,000; education, 134,000. As a proportion of total employment, just over half (51%) of the workforce in 2011 were in these four industry sectors. The ILO unemployment rate in the period Oct.–Dec. 2013 was 7.1% (compared to 7.2% in the UK as a whole). In 2011, 128,000 working days were lost as a result of industrial disputes.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

For information on international trade, see UNITED KINGDOM.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

Responsibility for the construction and maintenance of trunk roads belongs to the Welsh Assembly Government. Roads not classified as trunk roads are the responsibility of county or unitary councils. In 2009 there were 133 km of motorway, 1,577 km of trunk roads and 2,742 km of principal roads. 1,742,400 vehicles were licensed in 2008, including 1,493,200 private and light goods vehicles. In 2008 there were 7,783 reported accidents which led to 11,185 casualties, including 142 deaths.

Civil Aviation

Cardiff Airport handled 1,631,236 passengers in 2009 (1,247,167 on international flights) and 178 tonnes of freight.

Shipping

The principal ports are (with 1m. tonnes of cargo handled in 2009): Milford Haven (39.3) and Port Talbot (5.2).

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

As at 31 March 2013 police strength amounted to 6,761. During the year ending March 2014 there were 172,689 recorded offences, including 17 homicides, 18,946 other crimes involving violence with injury and 3,366 sexual offences. The clear-up rate was 35%. 17,815 people were found guilty of indictable offences in Magistrates' Courts in 2011 and 3,903 in Crown Courts.

Education

In April 2006 ACCAC (the qualification, curriculum and assessment authority), Dysg (the Welsh operation of the Learning and Skills Development Agency), ELWa (the National Council for Education and Training Wales) and the Wales Youth Agency merged with the Welsh Assembly Government's Department for Training and Education to form a new department, the Department for Children, Education, Lifelong Learning and Skills (DCELLS) in the Welsh Assembly Government.

There were 25 maintained nursery schools in Jan. 2010, and 67,093 pupils under five years provided for in nursery schools and in nursery or infants classes in primary schools.

In Jan. 2010 there were 257,445 pupils at 1,462 primary schools. Of these, 476 primary schools use Welsh as the sole or main medium of instruction. Such schools are to be found in all parts of Wales but are mainly concentrated in the predominantly Welsh-speaking areas of west and northwest Wales. Generally, children transfer from primary to secondary schools at 11 years of age.

In Jan. 2010 there were 223 secondary schools. All maintained secondary schools are classified as comprehensive; there are no middle schools in Wales. In 2009–10, 58 of the secondary schools were classed as Welsh-speaking as defined in section 354(b) of the Education Act 1996.

Under the Education Act 1996, children have special educational needs if they have a learning difficulty that calls for special educational provision to be made for them. In a minority of cases the local education authority will need to make a statutory assessment of special educational needs under the Education Act 1996, which may ultimately lead to a 'statement of Special Educational Needs'. The total number of pupils with statements in Jan. 2010 was 14,327. Since April 2002 Special Educational Needs (SEN) guidance for Wales has been set out in the SEN Code of Practice for Wales.

In Jan. 2010, 8,943 full-time pupils and 279 part-time pupils attended 64 independent schools.

Post-16 Learning. The responsibilities of DCELLS (see above) include the funding, planning and promotion of children's services, education, learning and skills in Wales. In 2010–11 DCELLS funding for post-16 education and training Wales (excluding higher education provision) providers totalled £577m. This is split between FE institutions, school sixth forms, work-based learning providers, HE institutions and Local Authority (LA) community learning providers. In 2008–09, 45,040 full-time students and 160,250 students studying part-time in the further education sector (excluding work-based learning) were supported at 24 further education institutions and at several higher education institutions. The proportion of 16- to 18-year-olds with no qualifications fell from 12% in 2001 to 8% in 2009. The proportion of working age adults with no qualifications fell from 21% in 2001 to 14% in 2009; and 50% of working age adults had the equivalent of a National Qualification Framework Level 3 or above in 2009, compared to 40% in 2001.

Higher Education. In 2008–09 there were 11 higher education institutions in Wales with a total income of £1.17bn., of which 37.6% came from funding council grants. There were 134,565 students in the higher education sector in 2008–09, including those registered with the Open University in Wales, of which 80,990 were full-time and 53,580 part-time students, excluding those enrolled on higher education provision at further education colleges.

³In April 2013 the University of Glamorgan and the University of Wales, Newport merged to form the University of South Wales.

Health

As at 30 Sept. 2014 there were 2,006 general medical practitioners in Wales, with an average of 1,582 patients per doctor. As at 30 Sept. 2012 there were 28,080 whole-time equivalent nursing, midwifery and health visiting staff. At 31 March 2014 there were 1,438 general dental practitioners in Wales. The average daily number of hospital beds available in 2009–10 was 12,900, of which 10,500 were occupied. 510,900 in-patient cases were reported, with stays lasting an average 7.5 days. At 31 March 2011, 354,766 people were waiting to start treatment of whom 20,744 had waited for more than 26 weeks.

The 2014 Welsh Health Survey found that 22% of adults were obese (having a body mass index over 30).

Personal Social Services (PSS) staff numbered 27,287 in Wales at 31 March 2009. The total expenditure (2013–14) for PSS was £1,640m. in Wales.

Welfare

In Aug. 2014, 651,970 people received state retirement pensions. There were 47,710 people receiving income support in Aug. 2014 and 135,800 receiving pension credit; in Aug. 2013, 363,525 families received child benefit.

RELIGION

Under the Welsh Church Acts, 1914 and 1919, the Church in Wales and Monmouthshire was disestablished as from 1 April 1920, and Wales was formed into a separate Province.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

Wales has three sites on UNESCO's World Heritage List (with year entered on list): Castles and Town Walls of King Edward in Gwynedd (1986), a testament to the early period of English colonization in the late 13th century; Blaenavon Industrial Landscape (2000), a symbol of South Wales' role as a coal and iron provider in the 19th century; and the Pontcysyllte Aqueduct and Canal near Wrexham (2009), a feat of civil engineering by Thomas Telford during the Industrial Revolution.

Tourism

In 2009 there were some 9m. domestic trips (from elsewhere in the UK) into Wales. Visitors stayed 32.9m. nights and spent £1.4bn. The leading free admission attraction in 2009 was the Wales Millennium Centre in Cardiff with 1.1m. visits. The leading paid admission attraction was the LC, a leisure complex and waterpark in Swansea, with 597,000 visitors in 2009.

Festivals

Every year there are local and national eisteddfods (festivals for musical competitions, etc.). The National Eisteddfod of Wales takes place every Aug., traditionally alternating between north and south Wales. In 2017 it will be held near Bodedern, on Anglesey.

NORTHERN IRELAND

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

The Government of Ireland Act 1920 granted Northern Ireland its own bicameral parliament (Stormont). The rejection of home rule by the rest of Ireland (which pursued independence) forced a separation along primarily religious lines, with a large Catholic minority in the six northern counties. Between 1921–72 Stormont had full responsibility for local affairs except for taxation and customs; Northern Ireland was on the whole neglected by Westminster, allowing the virtual exclusion of Catholics from political office. The (predominantly Protestant) Unionist government ignored demands from London and the Catholic community to end communal discrimination.

In the late 1960s a Civil Rights campaign and reactions to it escalated into serious rioting and sectarian violence involving the Irish Republican Army (IRA, a terrorist organization aiming to unify Northern Ireland with the Republic of Ireland) and loyalist paramilitary organizations, such as the Ulster Defence Association. The British Army was deployed to protect civilians and was at first welcomed by the Catholic community. However, British soldiers shot dead 13 Catholic civil rights protesters in (London) Derry on 30 Jan. 1972—'Bloody Sunday'—prompting the Republic of Ireland's foreign minister to demand United Nations intervention. 467 people died in 1972, on account of 'the Troubles', and nearly 1,800 between 1971–77. The Northern Ireland government resigned and direct rule from Westminster was imposed.

Attempts have been made by successive governments to find a means of restoring greater power to Northern Ireland's political representatives on a widely acceptable basis, including a Constitutional Convention (1975–76), a Constitutional Conference (1979–80) and 78-member Northern Ireland Assembly elected by proportional representation in 1982. This was dissolved in 1986, partly in response to Unionist reaction to the Anglo-Irish Agreement signed on 15 Nov. 1985, which established an Intergovernmental Conference of British and Irish ministers to monitor issues of concern to the nationalist community. The Provisional IRA bombing of a Remembrance Day service in Enniskillen in 1987 killed 11. Universally condemned, it galvanized the anti-violence campaign.

On 15 Dec. 1993 the British and Irish prime ministers, John Major and Albert Reynolds, issued a joint declaration as a basis for all-party talks to achieve a political settlement. They invited Sinn Féin, the political wing of the IRA, to join the talks in an All-Ireland Forum after the cessation of terrorist violence. The IRA announced 'a complete cessation of military operations' on 31 Aug. 1994. On 13 Oct. 1994 the anti-IRA Combined Loyalist Military Command also announced a ceasefire 'dependent upon the continued cessation of all nationalist republican violence'.

Elections were held on 30 May 1996 to constitute a 110-member forum to take part in talks with the British and Irish governments. The Ulster Unionist Party won 30 seats, the Democratic Unionist Party 24 seats, the Social Democratic and Labour Party 21 seats and Sinn Féin 17 seats. Opening plenary talks, excluding Sinn Féin, began under the chairmanship of US Senator George Mitchell on 12 June 1996. A marathon negotiating struggle on 9–10 April 1998 led to agreement on a framework for sharing power designed to satisfy Protestant demands for a reaffirmation of their national identity as British, Catholic desires for a closer relationship with the Republic of Ireland and Britain's wish to return to Northern Ireland the powers London assumed in 1972.

Under the Good Friday Agreement, there was to be a democratically elected legislature in Belfast, a ministerial council giving the governments of Northern Ireland and Ireland joint responsibilities in areas like tourism, transportation and the environment, and a consultative council meeting twice a year to bring together ministers from the British and Irish parliaments, and the three assemblies being created in Northern Ireland and in Scotland and Wales. The Irish government eliminated from its constitution its territorial claim on Northern Ireland.

In the referendum on 22 May 1998, 71.1% of votes in Northern Ireland were cast in favour of the Good Friday peace agreement and 94.4% in the Republic of Ireland. As a consequence, in June, Northern Ireland's 1.2m. voters elected the first power-sharing administration since the collapse of the Sunningdale Agreement in 1974.

On 15 Aug. 1998 a 200 kg bomb exploded in the centre of Omagh. The dissident republican group the 'Real IRA' claimed responsibility. 29 people died and over 200 were injured, making it the single bloodiest incident of the Troubles—about 3,500 deaths had been recorded since the Troubles began by the end of 2001.

In Nov. 1999 the Mitchell talks finally produced an agreement between the Ulster Unionists and Sinn Féin, paving the way for devolved government. The new Northern Ireland Assembly met on 29 Nov. 1999 and on 2 Dec. legislative powers were fully devolved from London to Belfast. However, on 11 Feb. 2000 the Assembly was suspended following a breakdown in negotiations on the decommissioning of IRA weapons. Direct rule from London was restored. Devolved government resumed on 30 May after the IRA agreed to open their arms dumps to independent inspection. First Minister David Trimble resigned on 30 June 2001 to pressure republicans over decommissioning but on 22 Oct. Sinn Féin president Gerry Adams announced that he had recommended a 'ground-breaking' step on the arms issue. The IRA made a start on decommissioning arms, ammunition and explosives. David Trimble was re-elected first minister on 6 Nov. 2001.

On 15 Oct. 2002 the Assembly executive was again suspended over allegations of IRA spying at the Northern Ireland Office, although all charges were dropped in Jan. 2006. Direct rule from London was reimposed and on 30 Oct. the IRA cut off its links with the weapons decommissioning body. The Ulster Volunteer Force followed suit on 17 Jan. 2003. Elections for the Northern Ireland Assembly took place on 26 Nov. 2003. The theft of £26.5m. from the Northern Bank in Belfast in Dec. 2004 suggested closer than acknowledged associations between Sinn Féin and the IRA. Controversy surrounding the raid put the peace process on hold. In July 2005 the IRA formally announced an end to its armed campaign. In Sept. 2005 it claimed to have destroyed its arsenal of weapons.

The Stormont assembly met in May 2006 for the first time in more than three years, charged with restoring devolution by 24 Nov. that year. On that date a transitional assembly was established and in Jan. 2007 Sinn Féin voted to support policing policies in Northern Ireland, a key requirement for a workable power-sharing agreement. The transitional assembly was dissolved at the end of that month ahead of assembly elections in March 2007, in which the DUP and Sinn Féin made strong gains. Both parties came under pressure to compromise and on 26 March reached an historic agreement to share power from 8 May with a devolved Northern Ireland government replacing direct rule from London. Sporadic violence by dissident groups has nonetheless continued. In March 2009 Republican militants claimed responsibility for attacks that resulted in the first British military deaths in Northern Ireland since 1997 and the first police fatality since 1998.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Population of Northern Ireland at census day in 2011 and areas of districts in 2011 were as follows:

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

Under the Northern Ireland Act 1998 power that was previously exercised by the NI Departments was devolved to the Northern Ireland Assembly and its Executive Committee of Ministers. In April 2010 a new justice department came into existence to take responsibility for policing and judicial matters, which had previously been under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of State. Constitutional and national security issues along with firearms and explosives licensing and legislation remain the domain of the Secretary of State, who is also involved in public inquiries and some policy-making decisions.

The Parliamentary electorate of Northern Ireland in the register in Dec. 2013 numbered 1,218,366.

Secretary of State for Northern Ireland. Theresa Villiers.

RECENT ELECTIONS

At the general election of 7 May 2015, 18 members were returned from Northern Ireland. The Democratic Unionist Party won 8 seats (8 in 2010); Sinn Féin 4 (5); the Social and Democratic Labour Party 3 (3); the Ulster Unionist Party 2 (0); others 1 (1).

In the Northern Ireland Assembly elections on 5 May 2016 the Democratic Unionist Party won 38 of the 108 seats (29.2% of votes), Sinn Féin 28 (24.0%), the Ulster Unionist Party 16 (12.6%), the Social Democratic and Labour Party 12 (12.0%), Alliance Party of Northern Ireland 8 (7.0%), the Green Party 2 (2.7%), People Before Profit 2 (2.0%) and Traditional Unionist Voice 1 (3.4%). Turnout was 54.9%.

At the May 2014 European Parliament elections, voting was by the single transferable vote system: Sinn Féin (25.5%), the Democratic Unionist Party (20.9%) and the Ulster Unionist Party (13.3%) gained 1 seat each. Turnout was 51.8%.

CURRENT GOVERNMENT

First Minister: Arlene Foster; b. 1970 (Democratic Unionist Party; since 11 Jan. 2016, having previously been acting first minister from Jan.–Feb. 2010 and Sept.–Oct. 2015).

Deputy First Minister: Martin McGuinness; b. 1950 (Sinn Féin; sworn in 8 May 2007).

ECONOMY

For information on the economy, see UNITED KINGDOM.

Overview

Northern Ireland is the smallest of the economies that make up the United Kingdom. Traditionally, it has been led by manufacturing, heavy industry and agriculture, but there has been a shift towards a more service-based economy since the 1980s. There is a strong dependence on the public sector, which accounted for 27.9% of all jobs at the end of 2013. Low wages and low labour productivity levels are a legacy of 30 years of domestic conflict, an unfavourable demographic structure and a relatively peripheral geographical location.

Nonetheless, the economy has benefited from the peace process that culminated in the 1998 Good Friday Agreement, despite subsequent difficulties in implementation of the treaty. Northern Ireland's share of UK Gross Value Added (GVA; a measure of goods and services produced less all production costs) in 2012 was 2.1%. Gross Value Added per capita was lower than in all other regions of the United Kingdom except for Wales in 2012 (at £16,127), owing to the economy's low productivity levels and high rates of economic inactivity. Tourism is an important sector and offers potential for further expansion.

Northern Ireland has close economic links with the neighbouring Republic of Ireland, which accounted for 28.4% of manufacturing exports along with a quarter of construction output in 2007, prior to the global recession. In addition, two of the country's four main banks are Irish-owned, leading to significant knock-on effects from Ireland's own severe recession. In the first quarter of 2014 unemployment stood at 7.1%. However, the services and manufacturing sectors created a combined 3,500 jobs between Dec. 2013 and March 2014, prompting hopes of an upturn in the labour market.

Currency

Banknotes are issued by Bank of Ireland, First Trust Bank, Danske Bank (formerly Northern Bank) and Ulster Bank.

Banking and Finance

Among the Department of Finance and Personnel's primary functions are the control of expenditure of Northern Ireland departments; liaising with HM Treasury, the European Commission and the Northern Ireland Office on financial matters; reviewing and developing rating policy and legislation; formulating policy and co-ordinating arrangements for central personnel management including monitoring equal opportunities policy for the Civil Service; promoting energy efficiency in the public sector through provision of funding for energy efficiency projects and monitoring energy consumption and emissions; formulating building regulations policy and legislation; formulating policy and providing a procurement service for the Northern Ireland public sector.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Electricity

There are three power stations with an installed capacity of some 2,100 MW.

In addition, electricity is also supplied through a 500 MW interconnector linking the Northern Ireland Electricity (NIE) and Scottish Power networks and a number of interconnectors linking the NIE network with the Electricity Supply Board (ESB) network in the Republic of Ireland.

Oil and Gas

In Sept. 2001 the Northern Ireland executive approved grant support for the development of the gas network outside the Greater Belfast area, to the North/North West region and for the construction of a South/North pipeline. The North West gas pipeline was completed in late 2004 and supplies gas for the Combined Cycle Turbine power station at Coolkeeragh outside Londonderry, which opened in June 2005. The South/North pipeline was commissioned in Oct. 2006, connecting the grids of Northern Ireland and the Republic of Ireland for the first time. The Northern Ireland Authority for Energy Regulation has granted a licence to supply gas to the major towns along the route of both these.

Minerals

Output of minerals (in 1,000 tonnes), 2010: sandstone, 2,768; basalt and igneous rock (other than granite), 5,438; limestone, 3,689; sand and gravel, 2,178; other minerals (rock salt, fireclay, dolomite, granite and chalk), 2,087. There are extensive lignite deposits but they have not yet been developed. The United Kingdom's only operational gold mine, located near Omagh, opened in 2007; production in 2011 was 202 kg. Silver production in 2011 was 531 kg.

INDUSTRY

Labour

The main sources of employment statistics are the Census of Employment, conducted every two years, and the Quarterly Employment Survey. In Sept. 2012 there were 692,516 employees, of whom 336,137 were males. Employment in services amounted to 566,726 (82% of all employees in employment) and in manufacturing and construction to 103,537 (15%). There were 71,876 people working in manufacturing and 31,661 in construction. The ILO unemployment rate in the period Oct.–Dec. 2013 was 7.4% (compared to 7.2% in the UK as a whole).

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

In June 2009 the total length of public roads was 25,167 km, graded for administrative purposes as follows: motorway, 133 km (including 19 km slip roads); 'A' roads dual carriageway, 168 km; 'A' roads single carriageway, 2,101 km; 'B' roads, 2,883 km; 'C' roads, 4,705 km; unclassified, 15,195 km.

The Northern Ireland Transport Holding Company (NITHC) oversees the provision of public transport services in Northern Ireland. Its subsidiary companies, Ulsterbus, Citybus and Northern Ireland Railways, are responsible for the delivery of most bus and rail services under the brand name of Translink.

The number of motor vehicles licensed at 31 Dec. 2011 was 1,053,338, including private light goods vehicles, 879,787; heavy goods vehicles, 23,084; motorcycles, scooters and mopeds, 25,196.

Rail

Northern Ireland Railways, a subsidiary of the Northern Ireland Transport Holding Company, provides rail services within Northern Ireland and cross-border services to Dublin, jointly with Irish Rail (Iarnród Éireann). The number of track km operated is 340. In 2008–09 railways carried 10.2m. passengers, generating passenger receipts of £29.0m.

Civil Aviation

There are scheduled air services to three airports in Northern Ireland: Belfast International, George Best Belfast City and City of Derry. Scheduled services are provided by Aer Lingus, Balkan Holidays, British Airways, Brussels Airlines, Citywing, easyJet, Falcon Holidays, Flybe, Jet2.com, KLM, Ryanair, Thomas Cook, Thomson, United Airlines, Virgin Atlantic and Wizz Air. In 2009 the airports collectively handled approximately 7.5m. passengers. Belfast International, the busiest airport, is Northern Ireland's main charter airport. In 2005 it launched a direct service to New York with Continental Airlines (now United Airlines). Belfast International handled 4.5m. passengers in 2009.

Belfast City Airport offers services to 18 regional airports in Great Britain including services to London Heathrow. The City of Derry Airport provides services from the northwest of Ireland to four United Kingdom destinations including London Stansted. There are two other licensed airfields at St Angelo and Newtownards.

Shipping

There are five commercial ports in Northern Ireland. Belfast is the largest port, competing with Larne for the majority of the passenger and Roll-on Roll-off services that operate to and from Northern Ireland. Passenger services are currently available to Liverpool, Fleetwood, Stranraer, Cairnryan and Troon. In addition, Belfast, Londonderry and Warrenpoint ports offer bulk cargo services mostly for British and European markets. They also occasionally service other international destinations direct.

Total tonnage of goods through the principal ports in Northern Ireland in 2009 was 20.8m. tonnes. Belfast handled 12.1m. tonnes of cargo in 2009.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The Lord Chief Justice of Northern Ireland is President of the Courts of Northern Ireland and Head of the Judiciary and as such is responsible for assigning the judiciary to the courts. The Lord Chief Justice is also Chairman of the Judicial Appointments Commission which is responsible for selecting and recommending to the Lord Chancellor candidates for judicial appointment in Northern Ireland. The court structure in Northern Ireland has three tiers: the Court of Judicature of Northern Ireland (comprising the Court of Appeal, the High Court and the Crown Court), the County Courts and the Magistrates' Courts. There are 21 Petty Sessions districts which when grouped together for administration purposes form seven County Court Divisions and four Crown Court Circuits.

The County Court has general civil jurisdiction subject to an upper monetary limit. Appeals from the Magistrates' Courts lie to the County Court, or to the Court of Appeal on a point of law, while appeals from the County Court lie to the High Court or, on a point of law, to the Court of Appeal.

Police

Following legislation introduced in the House of Commons in May 2000, the name of the Royal Ulster Constabulary was changed to the Police Service of Northern Ireland (PSNI). The Police Authority for Northern Ireland has been replaced by the Northern Ireland Policing Board. The Police Service continues to undergo significant changes arising from the recommendations of the Commission into the future of policing in Northern Ireland published in 1999. In 2010 the PSNI comprised 7,212 regular officers including those student officers undergoing training, 305 full-time reserve officers and 677 part-time reserves. The proportion of Catholic regular officers, which was around 19.1% by Jan. 2006, had increased to 29.6% by Dec. 2010.

The population in penal institutions in Sept. 2013 was 1,851 (101 per 100,000 population).

Education

Public education, other than university education, is presently administered by the Department of Education, the Department of Employment and Learning, and locally by five Education and Library Boards. The Department of Education is concerned with the range of education from nursery education through to secondary, youth services and for the development of community relations within and between schools. The Department of Employment and Learning is responsible for higher education, further education, student support, postgraduate awards, and the funding of teacher training.

Integrated Schools. The Department of Education has a statutory duty to encourage and facilitate the development of integrated education. It does not seek to impose integration but responds to parental demand for new integrated schools where this does not involve unreasonable public expenditure. The emphasis for future development of the integrated sector has increasingly been on the transformation of existing schools to integrated status. In 2011–12 there were 62 integrated schools, with a total enrolment of 21,747 pupils (6% of all pupils).

Irish Medium Education. Following a commitment in the Belfast Agreement, the 1998 Education Order placed a statutory duty on the Department to encourage and facilitate the development of Irish-medium education. It also provided for the funding of an Irish-medium promotional body, and funding of Irish-medium schools on the same basis as integrated schools. In 2011–12 there were 25 Irish-medium primary schools, one post-primary and 13 units (four of which are post-primary) catering for 3,635 pupils.

Pre-school Education is provided in nursery schools or nursery classes in primary schools, reception classes and in funded places in voluntary and private settings. There were 97 nursery schools in 2011–12 with 5,911 pupils, and 8,608 nursery pupils in primary schools. A further 444 reception pupils were enrolled in primary schools. In addition there were 8,149 children in funded places in voluntary and private pre-school education centres in 2011–12.

Primary Education is from four to 11 years. In 2011–12 there were 839 primary schools with 153,740 pupils. There were also 15 preparatory departments of grammar schools with 1,954 pupils. In 2009–10 there were 7,808 FTE primary school teachers and 141 FTE preparatory department teachers.

Secondary Education is compulsory from 11 to 16 years. In 2011–12 there were 68 grammar schools with 62,554 pupils and 148 other secondary schools with 84,193 pupils. In 2009–10 there were 4,137 FTE grammar school teachers and 5,970 FTE other secondary school teachers.

Further Education. In Aug. 2007 six regional colleges of further education were formed from the former 16 FE institutions: Belfast Metropolitan College, Northern Regional College, North West Regional College, Southern Regional College, South Eastern Regional College, South West College. In 2011–12 there were over 4,100 lecturers and support staff, 27,905 full-time enrolments and 125,175 part-time enrolments.

Special Education. The Education and Library Boards provide for children with special educational needs up to the age of 19. This provision may be made in ordinary classes in primary or secondary schools or in special units attached to those schools, or in special schools. In 2010–11 there were 43 special schools with 4,658 pupils. This includes two hospital schools.

Universities. There are two universities: the Queen's University of Belfast (founded in 1849 as a college of the Queen's University of Ireland and reconstituted as a separate university in 1908), which had 22,985 students, 1,375 full-time and 140 part-time academic staff in 2011–12; and the University of Ulster, formed on 1 Oct. 1984, which has campuses in Belfast, Coleraine, Jordanstown and Londonderry. In 2011–12 it had 26,560 students, 1,060 full-time and 405 part-time academic staff.

Full-Time Initial Teacher Education takes place at both universities and at two university colleges of education—Stranmillis and St Mary's—the latter mainly for the primary school sector, in respect of which four-year (Hons) BEd courses are available. The training of teachers for secondary schools is provided, in the main, in the education departments of the two universities, but four-year (Hons) BEd courses are also available in the colleges for intending secondary teachers of religious education, business studies and craft, design and technology. There were a total of 2,360 students (1,814 women) in training at the two university colleges and the two universities during 2011–12.

Health

The Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety has three main business responsibilities: Health and Personal Social Services (HPSS), which includes policy and legislation for hospitals, family practitioner services, and community health and personal social services; Public Health, which covers policy, legislation and administrative action to promote and protect the health and well-being of the population; and Public Safety, which covers policy and legislation for fire, rescue and ambulance services.

The four Health and Social Services Boards commission health and personal social services for their resident populations from providers including HSS Trusts, and voluntary and private sector bodies. The 19 Health and Social Services Trusts, established under the Health and Personal Social Services (NI) Order 1991, are managerially independent but accountable to the Minister. They are the main providers of health and personal social services as commissioned by the HSS Boards and are responsible for the management of staff and services of hospitals and other health and personal social services establishments. Seven provide hospital services only, five provide community and personal social services only and six provide both. In 2007 there were 1,127 doctors (principals) with an average of 1,626 patients each.

The 2011/12 Health Survey Northern Ireland found that around 23% of adults were obese (having a body mass index over 30).

Welfare

The Social Security Agency's remit is now part of the Department for Social Development, and social security schemes are similar to those in Great Britain.

National Insurance. During the year ended 31 March 2009 the receipts of the National Insurance Fund at £2,293m. exceeded payments by £314m. Total benefit expenditure was £1,879m. Jobseeker's Allowance contributions amounted to £19.5m. State Pensions amounted to £1,463.4m. and Bereavement Benefits to £24.9m. Incapacity Benefits totalled £336.7m. Maternity Allowance of £9.2m. was paid and employers were reimbursed £59.0m. in respect of Statutory Sick, Maternity, Adoption and Paternity Pay. £50.6m. was given to personal pension plan providers.

Child Benefit. In 2008–09 a total of £362m. was paid. 195,000 families benefited from Child and Working Tax Credits.

RELIGION

According to the 2011 census there were: Roman Catholics, 738,033; Presbyterians, 345,101; Church of Ireland, 248,821; Methodists, 54,253; other Christian, 104,380; other religions and philosophies, 14,859. There were also 305,416 persons with no religion or religion was not stated.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

Northern Ireland has one site on UNESCO's World Heritage List: the Giant's Causeway and Causeway Coast (inscribed on the list in 1986), a series of rock formations on the Antrim Plateau.

Tourism

There were 2.1m. non-resident visitors to Northern Ireland in 2013 (excluding day trips), contributing £531m. to the economy. Holiday-makers from Northern Ireland contributed a further £192m. Eight Areas of Outstanding Natural Beauty and 47 National Nature Reserves have been declared, and there are many country and regional parks. The leading paid admission attraction in 2013 was the Giant's Causeway World Heritage Site with 754,000 visits. The leading free admission attraction (excluding country parks, parks and gardens) was the Ulster Museum with 416,000 visits in 2013.

ISLE OF MAN

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

The Isle of Man was first inhabited 10,000 years ago. Part of Norway in the 9th century, in 1266 it was ceded to Scotland but came under English control in 1333.

The Isle of Man has been a British Crown dependency since 1765, with the British government responsible for its defence and foreign policy. Otherwise it has extensive right of self-government.

A special relationship exists between the Isle of Man and the European Union providing for free trade, and adoption by the Isle of Man of the EU's external trade policies with third countries. The island remains free to levy its own taxes.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Area, 572 sq. km (221 sq. miles); resident population census in March 2011, 84,497, giving a density of 147.7 per sq. km. In 2011 an estimated 78% of the population lived in urban areas. The principal towns are (March 2011 population) Douglas (27,938), Onchan (adjoining Douglas; 9,273), Ramsey (7,821) and Peel (5,093). The island is divided into six sheadings—Ayre, Garff, Glenfaba, Michael, Middle and Rushen. Garff is further subdivided into two parishes and the others each have three parishes. Just over half the population at the 2011 census was born outside of the island.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2011: births, 890; deaths, 799. Annual growth rate, 2006–11, 1.0%.

CLIMATE

Lying in the Irish Sea, the island's climate is temperate and lacking in extremes. Thunderstorms, snow and frost are infrequent, although the island tends to be windy. July and Aug. are the warmest months with an average daily maximum temperature of around 17.6°C (63°F).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

As a result of Revestment in 1765, the Isle of Man became a dependency of the British Crown. The UK government is responsible for the external relations of the island, including its defence and international affairs, and the island makes a financial contribution to the cost of these services. The Isle of Man has a special relationship with the European Union. It neither contributes funds to, nor receives money from, the EU. The Isle of Man is not represented in either the UK or European Parliaments.

The island is administered in accordance with its own laws by the High Court of Tynwald, consisting of the President of Tynwald, the Legislative Council and the House of Keys. The Legislative Council is composed of the Lord Bishop of Sodor and Man, eight members selected by the House of Keys and the Attorney General, who has no vote. The House of Keys is an assembly of 24 members chosen by adult suffrage. The minimum age for voting was lowered to 16 in 2006. The President of Tynwald is chosen by the Legislative Council and the House of Keys, sitting together as Tynwald. An open-air Tynwald ceremony is held in early July each year at St Johns. Until 1990 the Lieut.-Governor, appointed by the UK government, presided over Tynwald.

A Council of Ministers was instituted in 1990, replacing the Executive Council which had acted as an advisory body to the Lieut.-Governor. The Council of Ministers consists of the Chief Minister (elected for a five-year term) and the ministers of the nine major departments, being the Treasury; Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry; Education; Health and Social Security; Home Affairs; Local Government and the Environment; Tourism and Leisure; Trade and Industry; and Transport.

RECENT ELECTIONS

Elections to the House of Keys were held on 29 Sept. 2011. Independents took 21 of the 24 seats and the Liberal Vannin Party 3. Turnout was 54%.

CURRENT GOVERNMENT

Lieut.-Governor: Adam Wood.

President: Clare Christian (elected July 2011).

In April 2016 the Chief Minister was Allan Bell. Treasury Minister: Eddie Teare.

ECONOMY

Currency

The Isle of Man government issues its own notes and coins on a par with £ sterling. Various commemorative coins have been minted. Inflation was 2.8% in 2012.

Budget

The Isle of Man is statutorily required to budget for a surplus of revenue over expenditure. Revenue is raised from income tax, taxes on expenditure, health and social security contributions, and fees and charges for services.

The standard rate of tax is 10% for personal income, and there is a higher rate of 18%. Banking and land property businesses are liable at 10% on their first £100m. of taxable income and 18% on the balance.

There is a Customs and Excise Agreement with the UK, and rates of tax on expenditure are the same as those in the UK with very few exceptions. In addition, there is a reciprocal agreement on social security with the UK, and the rates of most health and social security (National Insurance) contributions are the same as in the UK.

In 2007–08 the Isle of Man government budgeted for expenditure of £809m. and revenue of £845m.

Performance

In 2011–12 GDP was £3,786m. Real GDP growth in 2011–12 was 2.0%. 88% of national income is generated from services with the finance sector being the single largest contributor (36%).

Banking and Finance

The banking sector is regulated by the Financial Supervision Commission. It is responsible for the licensing and supervision of banks, deposit-takers and financial intermediaries giving financial advice, and for receiving client monies for investment and management. A compensation fund to protect investors was set up in 1991 under the Commission.

In June 2013 the deposit base was £45bn., and there were 30 licensed deposit takers, 54 investment businesses and 303 corporate and trust service providers.

The insurance industry is regulated by the Insurance and Pensions Authority. In June 2012 there were 142 insurance companies.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Electricity

The Manx Electricity Authority generates most of the island's electricity by oil-fired power stations although there is a small hydro-electric plant. A cable link with the UK power grid came into operation in Nov. 2000. In 2006, 379m. kWh were sold.

Minerals

Although lead and tin mining industries were major employers in the past, they have long since shut down and the only mining activity in the island is now for aggregates. The Lady Isabella, built in 1854 to drain the mines above Laxey, is one of the largest waterwheels in Europe.

Agriculture

The area farmed is about 104,000 acres, being 74% of a total land area of around 141,500 acres. 65,000 acres are grassland with a further 27,000 acres for rough grazing. There are approximately 137,000 sheep, 30,000 cattle, 20,000 poultry and 600 pigs on the island's 658 farms. Agriculture now contributes less than 2% of the island's GDP.

Forestry

The Department of Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry has a forestry estate of some 6,800 acres. Commercial forestry is directed towards softwood production. The Manx National Glens and other amenity areas are maintained for public use by the Department, which owns some 18,000 acres of the island's hills and uplands open for public use.

Fisheries

The Isle of Man is noted for the Manx kipper, a gutted smoked herring. Scallops and the related queen scallops (queenies) are the economic mainstay of the Manx fishing fleet. In 2012 the total catch was 6,172 tonnes.

INDUSTRY

Labour

The economically active population in 2006 was 41,793, of whom 6,381 were self-employed and 1,010 were unemployed. Employment by sector: finance, 23%; professional services, 20%; distributive services, 11%; construction, 8%; manufacturing, 5%.

At the end of 2006 there were 577 persons on the unemployment register, giving an unemployment rate of 1.4%.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

The Isle of Man forms part of the customs union of the European Union, although the island is not part of the EU itself. The relationship with the EU provides for free trade and the adoption of the EU's external trade policies and tariffs with non-EU countries.

Imports and Exports

The Isle of Man is in customs and excise union with the United Kingdom, which is also its main trading partner.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

There are 800 km of good roads. At the end of March 2010 there were 81,985 licensed vehicles, with 72,621 of these being private cars. Bus services operate to all parts of the island. The TT (Tourist Trophy) motorcycle races take place annually on the 60.75-km Mountain Circuit.

Rail

Several novel transport systems operate on the island during the summer season from May to Sept. Horse-drawn trams run along Douglas promenade, and the Manx Electric Railway links Douglas, Laxey, Ramsey and Snaefell Mountain (621 metres) in the north. The Isle of Man Steam Railway also operates between Douglas and Port Erin in the south.

Civil Aviation

Ronaldsway Airport in the south handles scheduled services linking the island with Belfast, Birmingham, Blackpool, Bristol, Brussels, Dublin, Geneva, Glasgow, Gloucester, Liverpool, London, Manchester and Newcastle. Air taxi services also operate.

Shipping

Car ferries run between Douglas and the UK and the Irish Republic. In 2014 there were 391 merchant vessels on the island's shipping register.

Telecommunications

Manx Telecom Limited, a wholly owned subsidiary of O2, holds the telecommunications licence issued by the Communications Commission for the Isle of Man.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The First Deemster is the head of the Isle of Man's judiciary. The Isle of Man Constabulary numbered 329 all ranks in 2014.

The population in penal institutions in Oct. 2014 was 80 (94 per 100,000 of national population).

Education

Education is compulsory between the ages of five and 16. In 2013 the Isle of Man had 6,275 pupils in primary education and 5,523 in secondary education, across five secondary schools and 32 primary schools. The Department also runs a college of further education and a special school. Government expenditure on education was budgeted to be £90m. in 2014–15. The island has a private primary school, a private secondary school and an international business school.

Health

The island has had its own National Health Service since 1948, providing medical, dental and ophthalmic services. In 2012–13 government expenditure on the NHS was budgeted to be £125m. There are two hospitals. At the end of 2013 there were 164 full-time equivalent physicians, 34 full-time and 18 part-time general practitioners, 32 full-time and four part-time dentists, and 23 pharmacies.

Welfare

Numbers receiving certain benefits at Dec. 2013: Retirement Pension 18,646; Child Benefit, 9,592; Sick and Disablement Benefits, 4,643; Income Support, 4,003; Jobseekers' Allowance, 856. Total government expenditure on social security benefits in 2013–14 was budgeted to be £260m.

RELIGION

The island has a rich heritage of Christian associations, and the Diocese of Sodor and Man, one of the oldest in the British Isles, has existed since 476.

CULTURE

Press

In 2008 there were two paid-for weekly newspapers and one free weekly. There are also various magazines concentrating on Manx issues.

Tourism

During the late 19th century through to the middle of the 20th century, tourism was one of the island's main sources of income and employment. In 2013 there were 290,754 visitors (294,460 in 2012); tourism expenditure in 2013 totalled £106.8m.

CHANNEL ISLANDS

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

The Channel Islands consist of Jersey, Guernsey and the following dependencies of Guernsey: Alderney, Brechou, Great Sark, Little Sark, Herm, Jethou and Lihou. They were an integral part of the Duchy of Normandy at the time of the Norman Conquest of England in 1066. Since then they have belonged to the British Crown and are not part of the UK. The islands have created their own self-government, with the British government at Westminster being responsible for defence and foreign policy. The Lieut.-Governors of Jersey and Guernsey, appointed by the Crown, are the personal representatives of the Sovereign as well as being the commanders of the armed forces. The legislature of Jersey is 'The States of Jersey', and that of Guernsey is 'The States of Deliberation'.

Left undefended from 1940 to 1945 the islands were the only part of Britain to fall to Germany.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

The Channel Islands cover a total of 194 sq. km (75 sq. miles), and in 2011 had a population of approximately 163,000.

The official languages are French and English, but English is now the main language.

CLIMATE

The climate is mild, with an average temperature for the year of 11.5°C. Average yearly rainfall totals: Jersey, 862.9 mm; Guernsey, 858.9 mm. The wettest months are in the winter. Highest temperatures recorded: Jersey (St Helier), 36.0°C; Guernsey (airport), 33.7°C. Maximum temperatures usually occur in July and Aug. (daily maximum 20.8°C in Jersey, slightly lower in Guernsey). Lowest temperatures recorded: Jersey, -10.3°C; Guernsey, -7.4°C. Jan. and Feb. are the coldest months (mean temperature approximately 6°C).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

The Lieut.-Governors and Cs.-in-C. of Jersey and Guernsey are the personal representatives of the Sovereign, the Commanders of the Armed Forces of the Crown, and the channel of communication between the Crown and the insular governments. They are appointed by the Crown and have a voice but no vote in the islands' legislatures. The Secretaries to the Lieut.-Governors are their staff officers.

ECONOMY

Performance

Total GDP in 2007 was US$11.5bn.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Fisheries

Total catch in 2010 was 3,373 tonnes, exclusively from sea fishing.

EXTERNAL ECONOMIC RELATIONS

The Channel Islands are not members of the European Union but under a special relationship accept a number of European laws, including certain EU customs regulations. Trade with the UK is classed as domestic.

COMMUNICATIONS

Civil Aviation

Scheduled air services are maintained by Aer Lingus, Air Berlin, Aurigny Air Services, Austrian Airlines, Blue Islands, British Airways, Citywing, easyJet, Flybe, Germanwings, Jet2.com, Lufthansa and SkyWork Airlines.

Shipping

Passenger and cargo services between Jersey, Guernsey, England (Poole and Portsmouth) and France (St Malo) are maintained by Condor Ferries. Local companies run between Guernsey, Alderney and England, and between Guernsey and Sark.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

Justice is administered by the Royal Courts of Jersey and Guernsey, each of which consists of the Bailiff and 12 Jurats (magistrates), the latter being elected by an electoral college. There is an appeal from the Royal Courts to the Courts of Appeal of Jersey and of Guernsey. A final appeal lies to the Privy Council in certain cases. A stipendiary magistrate in each, Jersey and Guernsey, deals with minor civil and criminal cases.

RELIGION

Jersey and Guernsey each constitutes a deanery under the jurisdiction of the Bishop of Winchester. The rectories (12 in Jersey; 10 in Guernsey) are in the gift of the Crown. The Roman Catholic and various Nonconformist Churches are represented.

UNITED KINGDOM OVERSEAS TERRITORIES

There are 14 British Overseas Territories: Anguilla; Bermuda; British Antarctic Territory; British Indian Ocean Territory; British Virgin Islands; Cayman Islands; Falkland Islands; Gibraltar; Montserrat; Pitcairn Islands; St Helena, Ascension and Tristan da Cunha; South Georgia and the South Sandwich Islands; the Sovereign Base Areas of Akrotiri and Dhekelia in Cyprus; and the Turks and Caicos Islands. Three (British Antarctic Territory, British Indian Ocean Territory and South Georgia and the South Sandwich Islands) have no resident populations and are administered by a commissioner instead of a governor.

Gibraltar is a peninsula bordering the south coast of Spain; the Sovereign Base Areas are in Cyprus and the remainder are islands in the Caribbean, Pacific, Indian Ocean and South Atlantic. Gibraltar and the Falkland Islands are the subjects of territorial claims by Spain and Argentina respectively.

The Overseas Territories are constitutionally not part of the United Kingdom. They have separate constitutions, and most of them have elected governments with varying degrees of responsibilities for domestic matters. The Governor, who is appointed by, and represents, HM the Queen, retains responsibility for external affairs, internal security, defence, and in most cases the public service.

At the launch of the White Paper 'Partnership for Progress and Prosperity', in March 1999, the UK Foreign Secretary at the time, Robin Cook, outlined four underlying principles for the relationship between Britain and the Overseas Territories: self-determination for the Territories; mutual obligations and responsibilities; freedom for the Territories to run their own affairs to the greatest degree possible; and Britain's firm commitment to help the territories develop economically and to assist them in emergencies. He also offered British citizenship, with the right of abode in the UK, to those citizens of the Overseas Territories who did not already enjoy it. The Overseas Territories Consultative Council was established in 1999. The Council, which meets annually, is a forum for discussion of key policy issues between British government ministers and heads of territory governments. On 21 May 2002 the citizenship provisions of the British Overseas Territories Act came into force. It granted British citizenship to the citizens of all Britain's Overseas Territories (except those who derived their British nationality by virtue only of a connection with the Sovereign Base Areas of Akrotiri and Dhekelia in Cyprus).

Anguilla

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Anguilla was probably given its name by the Spaniards or the French because of its eel-like shape. It was inhabited by Arawaks for several centuries before the arrival of Europeans. Anguilla was colonized in 1650 by English settlers from neighbouring St Kitts. In 1688 the island was attacked by a party of Irishmen who then settled. Anguilla was subsequently administered as part of the Leeward Islands and from 1825 became even more closely associated with St Kitts. In 1875 a petition sent to London requesting separate status and direct rule from Britain was rejected. Again, in 1958, the islanders petitioned the Governor requesting a dissolution of the political and administrative association with St Kitts, but this too failed. From 1958 to 1962 Anguilla was part of the Federation of the West Indies.

Opposition to rule from St Kitts erupted on 30 May 1967 when St Kitts policemen were evicted from the island and Anguilla refused to recognize the authority of the State government any longer. During 1968–69 the British government maintained a 'Senior British Official' to advise the local Anguilla Council and devise a solution to the problem. In March 1969, following the ejection from the island of a high-ranking British civil servant, British security forces occupied Anguilla. A Commissioner was installed, and in 1969 Anguilla became de facto a separate dependency of Britain, a situation rendered de jure on 19 Dec. 1980 under the Anguilla Act 1980 when Anguilla formally separated from the territory of St Kitts-Nevis-Anguilla. A new constitution came into effect in 1982 providing for a large measure of autonomy under the Crown.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Anguilla is the most northerly of the Leeward Islands, some 112 km (70 miles) to the northwest of St Kitts and 8 km (5 miles) to the north of St Martin/Sint Maarten. The territory also comprises the island of Sombrero and several other off-shore islets or cays. The total area of the territory is about 155 sq. km (60 sq. miles). May 2011 census population was 13,572 (up from 11,430 in 2001); density of 87.6 per sq. km. People of African descent make up 90% of the population, mixed origins 5% and white 4%. The capital is The Valley.

The official language is English.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

Births, 2013, 165; deaths, 68. In 2006 life expectancy at birth for females was 81.1 years and for males 76.5 years. Households numbered 4,935 in 2011.

CLIMATE

Tropical oceanic climate with rain throughout the year, particularly between May and Dec. Tropical storms and hurricanes may occur between July and Nov. Generally summers are hotter than winters although there is little variation in temperatures.

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

A set of amendments to the constitution came into effect in 1990, providing for a Deputy Governor, a Parliamentary Secretary and an Opposition Leader. The House of Assembly consists of a Speaker, Deputy Speaker, seven directly elected members for five-year terms, two nominated members and two ex officio members: the Deputy Governor and the Attorney-General. The Governor discharges his executive powers on the advice of an Executive Council comprising a Chief Minister, three Ministers and two ex officio members: the Deputy Governor, Attorney-General and the Secretary to the Executive Council.

Bermuda

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

The islands were discovered by Juan Bermúdez, probably in 1503, but were uninhabited until British colonists were wrecked there in 1609. A plantation company was formed; in 1684 the Crown took over the government. A referendum in Aug. 1995 rejected independence from the UK.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Bermuda consists of a group of 138 islands and islets (about 20 inhabited), situated in the western Atlantic (32° 18' N. lat., 64° 46' W. long.); the nearest point of the mainland, 940 km distant, is Cape Hatteras (North Carolina). The area is 53.3 sq. km (20.6 sq. miles). In June 1995 the USA surrendered its lease on land used since 1941 for naval and air force bases. The 2010 census population was 64,237; density, 1,205 per sq. km. Capital, Hamilton; population (2010), 1,010. Population of St George's (2010), 1,743.

Ethnic composition, 2010: Black, 54%; White and others, 46%.

The official language is English.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

In 2013 there were 648 live births, 471 marriages and 471 deaths. Average annual growth rate, 2005–10, –0.4%. Life expectancy at birth, 2009: 79.4 years.

CLIMATE

A pleasantly warm and humid climate, with up to 60" (1,500 mm) of rain spread evenly throughout the year. Hamilton, Jan. 63°F (17.2°C), July 79°F (26.1°C). Annual rainfall 58" (1,463 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

Under the 1968 constitution the Governor, appointed by the Crown, is normally bound to accept the advice of the Cabinet in matters other than external affairs, defence, internal security and the police, for which he retains special responsibility. The legislature consists of a Senate of 11 members, five appointed by the Governor on the recommendation of the Premier, three by the Governor on the recommendation of the Opposition Leader and three by the Governor in his own discretion. The members of the House of Assembly are elected, one from each of 36 constituencies (as of 2012) by universal suffrage.

At a referendum on 17 Aug. 1995, 16,369 votes were cast against the option of independence, and 5,714 were in favour. The electorate was 38,000; turnout was 58%.

RECENT ELECTIONS

A general election was held on 17 Dec. 2012. Turnout was 71.1%. The One Bermuda Alliance/OBA—created in 2011 through the merger of the two main opposition parties, the United Bermuda Party and the Bermuda Democratic Alliance—won 19 of the 36 seats in parliament with 51.7% of votes cast. The ruling Progressive Labour Party (PLP) won 17 seats with 46.1%. The PLP is largely representative of the black population, while the OBA membership is mostly white.

CURRENT GOVERNMENT

Governor: George Fergusson; b. 1955 (took office on 23 May 2012).

Premier: Michael Dunkley; b. 1958 (since 19 May 2014—acting until 20 May 2014).

Government Website: <http://www.gov.bm>

DEFENCE

The Bermuda Regiment numbers 600 personnel, mostly part-time. There are 29 professional staff. Bermuda, unlike the rest of the UK, retains conscription.

ECONOMY

Bermuda is the world's third largest reinsurance market after London and New York, hosting some 1,400 insurance companies. Bermuda has one of the highest per capita incomes of any country thanks to the ever-increasing role of the offshore banking sector.

Currency

The unit of currency is the Bermuda dollar (BMD) of 100 cents at parity with the US dollar. Inflation was 3.1% in both 2005 and 2006.

Budget

The fiscal year ends on 31 March. Total revenue in 2011–12 was BD$940.0m. and total expenditure BD$1,002.4m. Chief sources of revenue in 2011–12: payroll taxes, 37.2%; customs duty, 21.3%; taxes on international companies, 7.3%. Chief items of expenditure (in BD$1m.) in 2011–12: health, 17.2%; education, 12.8%; public order, 9.7%.

Performance

Total GDP was US$5.6bn. in 2013. Bermuda's economy contracted by 2.1% in 2010 and 3.3% in 2011.

Banking and Finance

Bermuda is a leading offshore financial centre with tax exemption facilities. In 2008 there were 15,631 international companies registered in Bermuda. There are four commercial banks, with total assets of BD$24,277m. in 2008. HSBC bought the Bank of Bermuda in 2003 for US$1.3bn. The Bermuda Monetary Authority (Chairman, Gerald Simons) acts as a central bank. There is a stock exchange, the BSX.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Bermuda's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2011 were the equivalent of 8.6 tonnes per capita.

Electricity

Installed capacity was 0.2m. kW in 2011. Production in 2011 was an estimated 714m. kWh, with consumption per capita at an estimated 10,965 kWh in 2011.

Minerals

Bermuda is rich in limestone.

Agriculture

The chief products are fresh vegetables, bananas and citrus fruit. The value of agricultural products in 2008 was BD$8,587,000. In 2008 there were 968 skilled agricultural and fishery workers in employment. Livestock, 2008 estimates: 1,000 horses, 800 pigs, 650 cattle, 350 goats, 50,000 chickens.

Forestry

Approximately 20% of land is woodland.

Fisheries

The total catch in 2010 was 382 tonnes. Fishing is centred on reef-dwelling species such as groupers and lobsters.

INDUSTRY

Bermuda's leading industry is tourism, with annual revenue in excess of US$350m.

Labour

The number of people in employment in 2008 totalled 40,213 including 4,869 in hotels and restaurants, 4,776 in international business activity and 4,770 in wholesale, retail trade and repairs.

EXTERNAL ECONOMIC RELATIONS

Foreign firms conducting business overseas only are not subject to a 60% Bermuda ownership requirement. In 2009 some 400 international companies had a physical presence in Bermuda.

Imports and Exports

The visible adverse balance of trade is more than compensated for by invisible exports, including tourism and off-shore insurance business.

Merchandise imports totalled BD$964m. in 2005 and exports BD$25m. In 2005 the USA accounted for 74.5% of imports, Canada 4.4% and the UK 4.2%.

Principal imports are food, beverages and tobacco, machinery, chemicals, clothing, fuels and transport equipment. The bulk of exports comprise sales of fuel to aircraft and ships, and re-exports of pharmaceuticals.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

There are 225 km of public highway and 222 km of private roads. In 2008 there were a total of 51,215 vehicles including: 22,793 private cars; 760 buses, taxis and limousines; 4,018 trucks and tank wagons; and 15,192 motorcycles. There are heavy fines for breaking the speed limit of 35 km/h (22 mph). Bermuda limits cars to one per household and bans hire vehicles.

Civil Aviation

L. F. Wade International Airport (formerly known as Bermuda International Airport) is 19 km from Hamilton. It handled 805,802 passengers and 5,662 tonnes of freight in 2009. Air Canada, American Airlines, British Airways, Delta Air Lines, jetBlue, United Airlines, US Airways and WestJet serve Bermuda with regular scheduled services.

Shipping

There are three ports: Hamilton, St George's and Dockyard. There is an open shipping registry. In Jan. 2009 there were 142 ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 9.31m. GT. Of the 142 vessels registered, 33 were passenger ships, 33 liquid gas tankers, 23 bulk carriers, 22 container ships, 22 oil tankers and nine general cargo ships.

Telecommunications

In 2013 there were an estimated 72,000 main (fixed) telephone lines; mobile phone subscriptions numbered an estimated 94,300 in the same year (144.3 per 100 persons). In 2013, 75.0% of households had internet access. In 2010 Bermuda had the highest fixed broadband penetration rate in the world, at 36.7 subscriptions per 100 inhabitants.

British Indian Ocean Territory

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

This territory was established to meet UK and US defence requirements by an Order in Council on 8 Nov. 1965, consisting then of the Chagos Archipelago (formerly administered from Mauritius) and the islands of Aldabra, Desroches and Farquhar (all formerly administered from Seychelles). The latter islands became part of Seychelles when that country achieved independence on 29 June 1976. In Nov. 2000 the High Court ruled that the 2,000 Ilois people (native to the archipelago) deported between 1967 and 1973 to accommodate a US military base on Diego Garcia had been removed unlawfully. Chagos islanders subsequently lost a UK High Court case for compensation and the right to return in 2003. However, further High Court rulings in 2006 and 2007 went against the UK government. In 2010 the British government unilaterally imposed a marine protected area around the archipelago, a decision challenged by the Mauritian government at the Permanent Court of Arbitration in 2014. Return by the Ilois to the archipelago (excepting Diego Garcia) is unlikely until all appeal processes have been exhausted.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

The group, with a total land area of 60 sq. km (23 sq. miles), comprises five coral atolls (Diego Garcia, Peros Banhos, Salomon, Eagle and Egmont), of which the largest and southernmost, Diego Garcia, covers 44 sq. km (17 sq. miles) and lies 725 km (450 miles) south of the Maldives. A US Navy support facility has been established on Diego Garcia. There is no permanent population.

CURRENT GOVERNMENT

Commissioner: Peter Hayes (non-resident).

Administrator: Tom Moody.

British Antarctic Territory

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

The British Antarctic Territory was established on 3 March 1962, as a consequence of the entry into force of the Antarctic Treaty, to separate those areas of the then Falkland Islands Dependencies which lay within the Treaty area from those which did not (i.e. South Georgia and the South Sandwich Islands).

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

The territory encompasses the lands and islands within the area south of 60°S latitude lying between 20°W and 80°W longitude (approximately due south of the Falkland Islands and the Dependencies). It covers an area of some 1,700,000 sq. km, and its principal components are the South Orkney and South Shetland Islands, the Antarctic Peninsula (Palmer Land and Graham Land), the Filchner and Ronne Ice Shelves and Coats Land.

There is no indigenous or permanently resident population. There is, however, an itinerant population of scientists and logistics staff of about 300, manning a number of research stations.

British Virgin Islands

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Discovered by Columbus on his second voyage in 1493, British Virgin Islands were first settled by the Dutch in 1648 and taken over in 1666 by a group of English planters. The islands were annexed to the British Crown in 1672. Constitutional government was granted in 1773, but was later surrendered in 1867. A Legislative Council formed in that year was abolished in 1902. In 1950 a partly nominated and partly elected Legislative Council was restored. A ministerial system of government was introduced in 1967.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

The Islands form the eastern extremity of the Greater Antilles and number 60, of which 16 are inhabited. The largest, with census populations (2010), are Tortola, 23,419; Virgin Gorda, 3,930; Jost Van Dyke, 298; and Anegada, 285. Other islands had a total population (2010 census) of 122 (including marine population). Total area 151 sq. km (58 sq. miles); total population (2010 census), 28,054. In 2013, 41.1% of the population were urban.

The capital, Road Town, on the southeast of Tortola, is a port of entry; population (estimate 2011), 10,000.

The official language is English. Spanish and Creole are also spoken.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

Birth rate, 2014, was 9.7 per 1,000 population; death rate, 3.9 per 1,000. Life expectancy in 2014 was an estimated 79.3 years. Population growth rate in 2010–11 was 0.2%.

CLIMATE

The British Virgin Islands enjoys a moderate, tropical climate with summer temperatures lowered by sea breezes and cool nights. Road Town (2013), Jan. 26°C, July 29°C; rainfall (2013), 1372 mm.

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

The constitution became effective on 15 June 2007. It granted the British Virgin Islands greater autonomy and self-determination. There is a Premier (formerly Chief Minister) and a House of Assembly (formerly Legislative Council). The Premier is appointed by the Governor. The House of Assembly consists of 13 members elected for a four-year term (five directly elected members from constituencies and four members from 'at large' seats covering the territory as a whole), a Speaker and the Attorney General ex officio. The Cabinet consists of the Premier, four other Ministers and the Attorney General ex officio.

RECENT ELECTIONS

In parliamentary elections on 8 June 2015 the National Democratic Party (NDP) won 11 of the 13 available seats and the Virgin Islands Party (VIP) two. The remaining two seats are held by a Speaker and the Attorney General.

CURRENT GOVERNMENT

Governor: John Duncan.

Eight additional international airlines provide services to London, Toronto, The Bahamas, Honduras, Jamaica and the USA.

Shipping

Motor vessels ply regularly between the Cayman Islands, Cuba, Jamaica and Florida. In 2007, 329,133 tonnes of cargo were offloaded at George Town.

Telecommunications

In 2013 there were 167.8 mobile phone subscriptions per 100 inhabitants and 62.8 fixed telephone lines per 100 inhabitants. In 2013 an estimated 74.1% of the population were internet users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

There is a Grand Court, sitting six times a year for criminal sessions at George Town under a Chief Justice and two puisne judges. There are three Magistrates presiding over the Summary Court.

The average daily population in penal institutions in 2012 was 185 (equivalent to 330 per 100,000 population).

Education

In 2007 there were 17 government schools with 4,637 pupils and 2,692 students were enrolled in ten private schools. There are two government facilities for special educational needs: a school for children and a training centre for adults. Four institutions—a private four-year college, a private medical and veterinary college, the government community college and a law school—provide tertiary education.

Health

The government's health services complex in George Town includes a 101-bed hospital, a dental clinic and an eye clinic. On Grand Cayman there are four district health centres. There is a hospital on Cayman Brac (18 beds) and a health centre on Little Cayman. In 2007 there were 46 doctors in government service (including five on Cayman Brac) and 44 in private practice.

RELIGION

The residents are primarily Christian (85%) and over 12 denominations meet regularly; Church of God, Presbyterian/United, Roman Catholic, Baptist and Seventh-day Adventists are the largest. Other religions, including Baha'i, Buddhism, Hinduism, Islam and Judaism, have representation in the community.

CULTURE

Press

In 2008 there were two daily newspapers, the Caymanian Compass and the Caymanian Net News, with a combined average daily circulation of 18,000.

Tourism

Tourism is the chief industry after financial services. In 2010 there were 288,272 overnight tourist arrivals by air and 1,597,838 cruise ship visitors, up from 271,958 and 1,520,372 respectively in 2009.

the settlement to the British in 1771, but the settlement was withdrawn in 1774. In 1806 Spanish rule was overthrown in Argentina, and the Argentine claimed to succeed Spain in the French and British settlements in 1820. The British objected and reclaimed their settlement in 1832 as a Crown Colony.

On 2 April 1982 Argentine forces occupied the Falkland Islands. On 3 April the UN Security Council called, by 10 votes to one, for Argentina's withdrawal. After a military campaign, but without a formal declaration of war, the UK regained possession on 14–15 June when Argentina surrendered. In April 1990 Argentina's Congress declared the Falkland and other British-held South Atlantic islands part of the new Argentine province of Tierra del Fuego though the threat of hostilities has been lifted.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

The Territory comprises numerous islands situated in the South Atlantic Ocean about 480 miles northeast of Cape Horn covering 12,200 sq. km. The main East Falkland Island, 6,760 sq. km; West Falkland, 5,410 sq. km, including the adjacent small islands. The population at the census of April 2012 was 2,840. The only town is Stanley, in East Falkland, with a 2012 population of 2,120. 59% of the residents consider their national identity to be 'Falkland Islander' and 29% consider themselves to be British. The population is nearly all of British descent. In 2012, 86% lived in urban areas (excluding personnel based at RAF Mount Pleasant).

The official language is English.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

In 2008 there were 29 births and 22 deaths on the islands.

CLIMATE

A cool temperate climate, much affected by strong winds, particularly in spring. Stanley, Jan. 49°F (9.4°C), July 35°F (1.7°C). Annual rainfall 24" (625 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

A new constitution came into force in Jan. 2009, updating the previous constitution of 1985 and the 1997 amendments. Provisions on the right of self-determination contained in international covenants were affirmed in the main body of the constitution. It also provided for a Public Accounts Committee and a Complaints Commissioner to allow for greater transparency in financial matters. The human rights chapter was updated to bring it in line with international agreements.

Domestic policy is the responsibility of the Executive Council although the Governor has the right to override the council and decide policy 'in the interests of good governance' or in matters relating to external affairs, defence, internal security (including police), the administration of justice, audit and public service management.

There is a Legislative Council consisting of eight members (five from Stanley and three from Camp, elected every four years) and two ex officio members, the Chief Executive and Financial Secretary. Only elected members have a vote.

British citizenship was withdrawn by the British Nationality Act 1981, but restored after the Argentine invasion of 1982.

In a referendum on the Territory's political status held on 10–11 March 2013, 99.8% of votes cast were in favour of remaining a British territory.

RECENT ELECTIONS

Elections to the Legislative Assembly were held on 7 Nov. 2013. Only non-partisans were elected.

CURRENT GOVERNMENT

Governor: Colin Roberts, CVO.

Chief Executive: Keith Padgett.

Falkland Islands

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

France established a settlement in 1764 and Britain a second settlement in 1765. In 1770 Spain bought out the French and drove off the British. This action on the part of Spain brought that country and Britain to the verge of war. The Spanish restored

DEFENCE

Since 1982 the Islands have been defended by between 1,000 and 2,000 British service personnel. In addition there is a local volunteer defence force.

ECONOMY

The economy of the Islands grew considerably in the second half of the 1980s as a result of the expansion of the fishing industry. In 2012 total GDP was £198.4m.

Currency

The unit of currency is the Falkland Islands pound (FKP) of 100 pence, at parity with £1 sterling.

Budget

Revenue and expenditure (in £ sterling) for fiscal year ending 30 June 2011 was: revenue, 7.0m.; expenditure, 8.8m.

Banking and Finance

There is not a central bank—the only bank is Standard Chartered Bank, which has one branch in Stanley.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Electricity

Electricity production in 2011 totalled about 18m. kWh. Installed capacity in 2011 was estimated at 12,000 kW.

Oil and Gas

In 1996 the Falkland Islands government awarded production licences to Shell, Amerada Hess, Desire Petroleum and International Petroleum Corporation (Sodra), allowing them to begin oil exploration. The licensed areas were situated 150 km north of the Islands over the North Falkland Basin. Six exploration wells were drilled in 1998 but the project was abandoned as crude oil prices fell to around US$10 a barrel.

Interest revived in 2008 when oil prices rose above US$100 a barrel, as the areas around the Falkland Islands are believed to have reserves of oil estimated at about 60bn. bbls. In 2010 five companies held licences for oil exploration in the region—Desire, Falkland Oil & Gas, Rockhopper, Borders & Southern and Argos Resources. With the potential for significant oil riches, Argentina has appealed to the United Nations to bring the UK into renewed talks over the islands.

Agriculture

The economy was formerly based solely on agriculture, principally sheep farming. Following a programme of sub-division, much of the land is divided into family-size units. There were 85 farms in 2009–10, averaging 13,053 ha. and 5,630 sheep. Wool is the principal product; 1,587 tonnes were produced in 2009–10.

Livestock: in May 2010 there were 478,525 sheep, 4,738 cattle and 519 horses. With a population of 2,841 in 2012 the Falkland Islands have the equivalent of approximately 170 sheep per resident.

Fisheries

The total catch in 2010 was 99,560 tonnes, up from 27,190 tonnes in 1995.

INDUSTRY

Labour

In 2012 there were employed 1,920 people, including 485 in public service, 189 in agriculture and 183 in wholesale and retail trade. There were 24 unemployed people.

EXTERNAL ECONOMIC RELATIONS

Around 85% of trade is with the UK, the rest with Latin America, mainly Chile. In 2007 imports totalled £35m.; exports, £134m. Main import commodities are refined petroleum oils and surveying, hydrographic, oceanographic, hydrological, meteorological or geophysical instruments and appliances. Significant export commodities are molluscs (which constitute around three-quarters of exports), frozen fish and wool.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

There are over 50 km of surfaced roads and another 400 km of unsurfaced road. This includes the 80 km between Stanley and Mount Pleasant Airport. Other settlements outside Stanley are linked by tracks. There were 1,754 motor vehicles in 2006 (1,264 vehicles in Stanley).

Civil Aviation

An airport, completed in 1986, is sited at Mount Pleasant on East Falkland. The Ministry of Defence operates non-commercial flights twice weekly to and from Brize Norton in the UK via Ascension Island. LAN Airlines, a group of South American Airlines based in Chile, runs a weekly service to and from Santiago via Punta Arenas.

Shipping

A charter vessel calls four or five times a year to and from the UK. Vessels of the Royal Fleet Auxiliary run regularly to South Georgia. Sea links with Chile and Uruguay began in 1989.

Telecommunications

Number of telephone main lines in 2013 was 2,000. There were 3,600 mobile phone subscriptions in the same year. In 2013 an estimated 96.9% of the population were internet users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

There is a Supreme Court, and a Court of Appeal sits in the UK; appeals may go from that court to the judicial committee of the Privy Council. The senior resident judicial officer is the Senior Magistrate. There is an Attorney General and a Senior Crown Counsel.

Education

Education is compulsory between the ages of five and 16 years. In Stanley in 2002 there were 30 pre-school pupils, 190 primary pupils (18 teachers) and 160 pupils in the 11–16 age range (18 teachers). In rural areas students attend small settlement schools or are visited by one of seven travelling teachers. Lessons may also be carried out over the radio or telephone.

Health

The Government Medical Department is responsible for all medical services to civilians. Primary and secondary health care facilities are based at the King Edward VII Memorial Hospital, the only hospital on the islands. It has 28 beds. It is staffed by five doctors, six sisters (including four midwives), eight staff nurses, a health visitor, counsellor, physiotherapist, social worker and an auxiliary nursing staff. The Royal Army Medical Corps staff the surgical facilities. There are two dentists on the island.

Welfare

In 2011 total amount spent on old age pension payments was £2.4m. There were a total of 416 pensioners in the same year.

CULTURE

Press

In 2012 there was one weekly newspaper, the Penguin News.

Tourism

In the 2010–11 season there were 40,542 cruise ship visitors. There are a variety of lodges around the Islands. Stanley has one major hotel and some guest houses.

Gibraltar

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

The Rock of Gibraltar was settled by Moors in 711. In 1462 it was taken by the Spaniards, from Granada. It was captured by Admiral Sir George Rooke on 24 July 1704, and ceded to Great Britain by the Treaty of Utrecht, 1713. The cession was confirmed by the treaties of Paris (1763) and Versailles (1783). In 1830 Gibraltar became a British crown colony.

On 10 Sept. 1967 a UN resolution on the decolonization of Gibraltar led to a referendum to ascertain whether the people of Gibraltar wished to retain their link with the UK. Out of an electorate of 12,762, an overwhelming majority voted to retain the British connection.

The border was closed by Spain in 1969, opened to pedestrians in 1982 and fully opened in 1985. In 1973 Gibraltar joined the European Community as a dependent territory of the United Kingdom. In 2001 talks were held between Britain and Spain over the colony's sovereignty. In a joint statement, the British and Spanish foreign ministers said they would work towards a comprehensive agreement by the summer of 2002. Gibraltar's government held an unofficial referendum on sharing sovereignty with Spain on 7 Nov. 2002 in which 98.97% of votes cast were against joint sovereignty. While Britain sees the principle of shared sovereignty as the definitive solution, Spain maintains its historic claim to outright control. An agreement reached in Sept. 2006 eased border controls and opened up Gibraltar to flights from Spain and other European countries.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Gibraltar is situated in latitude 36°07' N and longitude 05°21' W. Area, 6.5 sq. km (2½ sq. miles) including port and harbour. Total census population 2012, 32,577 (of whom 25,444 were Gibraltarian, 4,632 other British and 2,501 other); density, 5,012 per sq. km. The population is mostly of Genoese, Portuguese, Maltese and Spanish descent.

The official language is English; Spanish is also spoken.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

Statistics (2009): births, 417; deaths, 234; marriages, 966. Rates per 1,000 population, 2006: birth, 12.6; death, 8.0.

CLIMATE

The climate is warm temperate, with westerly winds in winter bringing rain. Summers are pleasantly warm and rainfall is low. Mean maximum temperatures: Jan. 16°C, July 28°C. Annual rainfall 722 mm.

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

A new constitution was approved in a referendum on 30 Nov. 2006 and came into effect on 2 Jan. 2007, giving Gibraltar full internal self-government. The Gibraltar House of Assembly (itself an amalgamation of the former Legislative and City Councils) was renamed the Gibraltar Parliament. The legislature of Gibraltar consists of the Queen as head of state and the Gibraltar Parliament. The Governor remains Commander-in-Chief but only retains direct constitutional responsibility for matters relating to defence, external affairs and some aspects of internal security. There is a Council of Ministers presided over by the Chief Minister who is appointed by the Governor. The constitution also abolished the former Gibraltar Council.

The Gibraltar Parliament consists of a Speaker appointed by the parliament and at least 17 elected members. A Mayor of Gibraltar is elected by the members of parliament (excluding the Speaker).

Gibraltarians have full UK citizenship.

RECENT ELECTIONS

At the elections of 26 Nov. 2015 turnout was 70.8%. The ruling alliance of the Gibraltar Socialist Labour Party and the Liberal Party won 68.5% of the vote, gaining seven and three seats respectively. The Gibraltar Social Democratic Party took 31.5% of the vote with seven seats.

CURRENT GOVERNMENT

Governor and C.-in-C.: Lieut.-Gen. Edward Davis, CB, CBE (sworn in 19 Jan. 2016).

Chief Minister: Fabian Picardo; b. 1972 (Gibraltar Socialist Labour Party; elected in Dec. 2011).

Deputy Chief Minister: Joseph Garcia. Minister for Business and Employment: Neil Costa. Economic Development, Telecommunications and the Gibraltar Savings Bank: Joe Bossano. Education, Justice and International Exchange of Information: Gilbert Licudi. Financial Services and Gaming: Albert Isola. Health, Environment, Energy and Climate Change: John Cortes. Sports, Culture, Heritage and Youth: Steven Linares. Tourism, Housing, Equality and Social Services: Samantha Sacramento. Transport, Traffic and Technical Services: Paul Balban.

The Speaker is Adolfo Canepa.

Government Website: <http://www.gibraltar.gov.gi>

DEFENCE

The Ministry of Defence presence consists of a tri-service garrison numbering approximately 900 uniformed personnel. Supporting the garrison are approximately 1,100 locally-employed civilian personnel. The garrison supports a NATO Headquarters.

ECONOMY

Overview

The economy is primarily dependent on service industries and port facilities, with income derived from tourism, transshipment and, perhaps most importantly in terms of growth, the provision of financial services. It is also a world-leading centre for online gambling, which it is estimated accounts for 20% of GDP and 10% of jobs.

Currency

The legal tender currency is UK sterling. Also legal tender are Government of Gibraltar Currency notes and coins. The Gibraltar pound (GIP) of 100 pence is at parity with the UK £1 sterling. The total of Government of Gibraltar notes in circulation at 31 March 2009 was £23.4m. The annual rate of inflation was 3.4% in Jan. 2010.

Budget

Departmental revenue credited to the consolidated fund for the year ending 31 March 2009 totalled £244m. whilst expenditure amounted to £201m. The main sources of consolidated fund revenues were income tax (£109m.), import duties (£47m.), company taxes (£26m.) and general rates and salt water charges (£14m.). Main items of consolidation fund expenditure: health (£24m.), education (£24m.), social affairs (£22m.) and utilities (£14m.).

Performance

In 2011 Gibraltar's GDP was £1,169m., equivalent to £36,376 per head.

Banking and Finance

At June 2010 there were 19 authorized credit institutions. The majority of these are either subsidiaries or branches of major UK or other European Economic Area (EEA) credit institutions. 12 of these credit institutions are incorporated in Gibraltar and are licensed by the Financial Services Commission, one of which is only authorized as an e-money institution. There are five branches of EEA-authorized credit institutions operating in Gibraltar and two non-EEA branches, one from the Channel Islands and one from Switzerland. The banking sector provides services to both local and non-resident customers.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Gibraltar's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2011 were the equivalent of 164.2 tonnes per capita, the highest in the world.

Electricity

Production in 2011 amounted to 171.0m. kWh.

Oil and Gas

Gibraltar is dependent on imported petroleum for its energy supplies.

Agriculture

Gibraltar lacks agricultural land and natural resources; the territory is dependent on imports of foodstuffs and fuels.

INDUSTRY

The industrial sector (including manufacturing, construction and power) employed around 16% of the working population in 2009.

Labour

The total number of employee jobs at Oct. 2009 was 20,450. Principal areas of employment (Oct. 2009): community, social and personal services, 4,496; trade, restaurants and hotels, 4,076; construction, 2,557; manufacturing, 473; electricity and water, 299; other, 8,848. (Figures cover only non-agricultural activities, excluding mining and quarrying). Under 5% of the labour force was unemployed in 2009.

EXTERNAL ECONOMIC RELATIONS

Gibraltar has a special status within the EU which exempts it from the latter's fiscal policy.

Imports and Exports

Imports in 2009 totalled £479.3m. and exports £169.5m. (excluding petroleum products).

Britain provided 25% of imports in 2009 and is the largest source. Other major trade partners include Spain, the Netherlands and Germany. Foodstuffs accounted for 5% of total imports in 2009 (excluding petroleum products). Mineral fuels comprised about 71% of the value of total imports in 2008. Exports are mainly re-exports of petroleum and petroleum products supplied to shipping, and include manufactured goods, wines, spirits, malt and tobacco. Gibraltar depends largely on tourism, offshore banking and other financial sector activity, online gaming, the entrepôt trade and the provision of supplies to visiting ships. Exports of domestic produce are negligible. In 2009 Gibraltar recorded a visible trade deficit of £350.5m.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

There are 56 km of roads including 6.8 km of pedestrian way. In 2006 there were 14,637 private vehicles, 7,024 motorcycles, 1,391 goods vehicles, 112 taxis and 99 buses.

Civil Aviation

There is an international airport, Gibraltar North Front. Scheduled flights were operated in 2009 by easyJet to London (Gatwick), by British Airways to London (Gatwick and Heathrow), by Monarch Airlines to London (Luton) and Manchester and by Andalus Airlines to Madrid and Barcelona. In 2009, 183,703 passengers arrived by air and 186,049 departed; 10.7 tonnes of freight were loaded and 134 tonnes were unloaded (figures exclude military freight).

Shipping

The Strait of Gibraltar is a principal ocean route between the Mediterranean and Black Sea areas and the rest of the world. Approximately 110,000 vessels pass through the Straits per year. Tax concessions are available to ship-owners who register their ships at Gibraltar. A total of 10,042 merchant ships of 253.1m. GRT entered port during 2009, including 7,818 deep-sea ships of 208.4m. GRT. In 2009, 349 calls were made by yachts of 372,925 GRT. 238 cruise liners called during 2009 involving 348,508 passengers.

Telecommunications

Gibtelecom, jointly owned by Telekom Slovenije and the Government of Gibraltar, is the main provider of fixed, wireless and internet services to residential and business customers.

As at 1 Jan. 2010 the Group's fixed exchange lines stood at 23,293. In 2009 there were 10,500 fixed internet subscriptions and 200 mobile broadband subscriptions.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The judicial system is based on the English system. There is a Court of Appeal, a Supreme Court, presided over by the Chief Justice, a Court of First Instance and a Magistrates' Court.

The average daily population in penal institutions in 2011 was 70 (equivalent to 238 per 100,000 population).

Education

Free compulsory education is provided between the ages of four and 15 years. The medium of instruction is English. The comprehensive system was introduced in Sept. 1972 and all schools currently follow a locally adapted version of the National Curriculum for England and Wales. In the 2009-10 academic year there were 11 primary and two secondary schools. Primary schools are divided into first schools for children aged 4-8 years and middle schools for children aged 8-12 years. All primary schools are mixed though secondary schools are single-sex.

Vocational education and training is available at the Gibraltar College (a post-15 institution), the Construction Training Centre and the Gibdock Training Centre; the former two are managed by the Gibraltar government and the latter by Cammell Laird, a shipbuilding company (and part-funded by the Government). In Sept. 2009 there were 2,926 pupils at government primary schools, 326 at private primary schools and 156 at the Services school. 1,140 pupils were enrolled at the boys' comprehensive school and 1,040 at the girls' comprehensive. There were 338 students in the Gibraltar College. Government expenditure on education in the year ended 31 March 2010 was £25.2m.

Health

The Gibraltar Health Authority is the organization responsible for providing health care in Gibraltar. The Authority operates a Group Practice Medical Scheme, which is a contributory scheme and enables registered persons to access free medical treatment. The St Bernard's Hospital, opened in 2005, has a total of 201 beds. A military hospital, the Princess Royal Medical Centre, opened in 2009, and replaced the old Royal Naval Hospital. Total expenditure on medical and health services for the financial year 2009-10 was £74.1m.

Welfare

The social security system consists of: the Social Security (Employment Injuries Insurance) Scheme which only applies to employed persons; the Social Security (Short-Term Benefits) Scheme which provides for payments of maternity grants, maternity allowance, death grants and unemployment benefit; and the Social Security (Open Long-Term Benefits) Scheme which provides for pensions and widows' allowances.

RELIGION

According to the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life, in 2010 the population was an estimated 80% Roman Catholic, 8% Protestant and 4% Muslim while 3% did not have any religious affiliation.

CULTURE

Press

In 2009 there were two daily and two weekly newspapers.

Tourism

In 2009 just over 10.3m. tourists visited Gibraltar (including day-visitors) bringing in revenue of £257.6m. There are approximately 900 hotel beds in Gibraltar. Tourism accounts for more than a quarter of GDP.

Montserrat

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Montserrat was discovered by Columbus in 1493 and colonized by Britain in 1632, who brought Irish settlers to the island. Montserrat formed part of the federal colony of the Leeward Islands from 1871 until 1958, when it became a separate colony following the dissolution of the Federation.

On 18 July 1995 the Soufriere Hills volcano erupted for the first time in recorded history, which led to over half the inhabitants being evacuated to the north of the island, and the relocation of the chief town, Plymouth. Another major eruption on 25 June 1997 caused a number of deaths and led to further evacuation.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Montserrat is situated in the Caribbean Sea, 43 km southwest of Antigua. The area is 102.3 sq. km (39.5 sq. miles). Census population, 2011, 4,922. What was previously the capital, Plymouth, is now deserted as a result of the continuing activity of the Soufriere Hills volcano. The safe area is in the north of the island, where Brades, the de facto capital, is located.

The official language is English.

CLIMATE

A tropical climate with an average annual rainfall of 60" (1,500 mm) the wettest months being Sept.–Dec., with a hurricane season June–Nov. Plymouth, Jan. 76°F (24.4°C), July 81°F (27.2°C).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

Montserrat is a British Overseas Territory. A new constitution was promulgated in 2011, replacing one enacted in 1989. The head of state is Queen Elizabeth II, represented by a Governor. The 2011 constitution provides for greater control of international relations by the government of Montserrat, the strengthening of fundamental rights and freedoms, and the establishment of a national advisory council along with commissions to deal with complaints, integrity, elections and clemency. The Legislative Assembly consists of nine elected members and two ex officio members (namely the Attorney-General and the Financial Secretary); it sits for five year terms. The cabinet includes a minimum of the Premier (formerly the Chief Minister), three other ministers and two ex officio members (the Attorney-General and the Financial Secretary).

RECENT ELECTIONS

In elections to the Legislative Council on 11 Sept. 2014 the People's Democratic Movement won seven of nine seats with Movement for Change and Prosperity winning the other two.

CURRENT GOVERNMENT

Governor: Elizabeth Carriere (since 5 Aug. 2015).

Premier: Donaldson Romeo (since 12 Sept. 2014).

Government Website: <http://www.gov.ms>

ECONOMY

Currency

Montserrat's currency is the East Caribbean dollar (see ANTIGUA AND BARBUDA: Currency).

Budget

In 2008 the estimated current revenue was EC$40.2m. and estimated current expenditure EC$99.2m.

Performance

In 2006 the economy shrank by 3.8% but there was a slight recovery in 2007 with growth of 2.8%.

Banking and Finance

The East Caribbean Central Bank based in St Kitts and Nevis functions as a central bank. The Governor is Timothy Antoine. In 2010 there were two commercial banks and 11 offshore banks. Responsibility for overseeing offshore banking rests with the Governor.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2011 were the equivalent of 17.1 tonnes per capita.

Electricity

Production (2011 estimate) 23m. kWh. Installed capacity (2011 estimate): 5,000 kW.

Agriculture

The volcanic eruptions in 1997 dramatically reduced the area of land under cultivation. Agriculture, now concentrated in the north, is showing signs of recovering. In 2002 there were 2,000 ha. of arable and permanent crop land. The main products have traditionally been potatoes, tomatoes, onions, mangoes and limes. Meat production began in 1994 and the island soon became self-sufficient in chicken, mutton and beef.

Livestock (2002): cattle, 10,000; pigs, 1,000; sheep, 5,000; goats, 7,000.

Forestry

The area under forests in 2010 was 3,000 ha., or 24% of the total land area.

Fisheries

The total catch in 2010 was 24 tonnes.

INDUSTRY

Manufacturing has in recent years contributed about 6% to GDP and accounted for 10% of employment, but has been responsible for about 80% of exports. It has been limited to rice milling and the production of light consumer goods such as electronic components, light fittings, plastic bags and leather goods. The volcanic activity has put a halt to the milling of rice in the exclusion zone and curtailed the production of light consumer goods.

EXTERNAL ECONOMIC RELATIONS

Imports and Exports

Imports in 2005 totalled US$26.2m.; exports, US$1.8m. The USA is the main trading partner.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

The percentage of usable roads has declined considerably since the volcanic eruptions of 1995 and 1997. Since then, improving and maintaining Montserrat's road network to a high standard has been one of the island's main objectives. A number of road work projects are under way. In Dec. 2008 there were 2,471 registered vehicles.

Civil Aviation

At the W. H. Bramble airport LIAT used to provide services to Antigua with onward connections to the rest of the eastern Caribbean, but it was closed in June 1997 as volcanic activity increased. A new airport opened in Feb. 2005.

Shipping

Plymouth is the port of entry, but alternative anchorage was provided at Old Bay Road during the volcanic crisis.

Telecommunications

In 2011 there were 2,600 main (fixed) telephone lines; mobile phone subscriptions numbered 4,200 that year (84.0 per 100 persons). In 2013 an estimated 54.6% of the population were internet users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

Law is based on UK common law as exercised by the Eastern Caribbean Supreme Court. Final appeal lies to the UK Privy Council. Law is administered by the West Indies Associated States Court, a Court of Summary Jurisdiction and Magistrate's Courts.

Education

In 2013–14 there were four primary schools with a combined total of 439 pupils and 33 teachers, and one secondary school with 343 pupils and 22 teachers.

In 2009 public expenditure on education came to 5.1% of GDP.

Health

In 2011 Montserrat had one 30-bed hospital, five doctors, and 36 nurses and midwives.

RELIGION

In 2001, 24.4% of the population were Anglican, 19.0% Methodist, 15.9% Pentecostal, 13.0% Roman Catholic and 11.8% Seventh-day Adventist.

CULTURE

Press

In 2008 there were two weekly newspapers, the Montserrat Reporter and the Montserrat Times.

Tourism

Tourism at one time contributed about 30% of GDP. There were 36,077 visitors including 11,636 cruise ship arrivals in 1994. However, after the volcanic eruptions the tourist industry declined dramatically; over half the island is closed. There were 5,981 tourist arrivals in 2010, the sixth consecutive year of falling tourist arrival numbers.

Pitcairn Island

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Pitcairn was discovered by Carteret in 1767, but remained uninhabited until 1790, when it was occupied by nine mutineers of HMS Bounty, with 12 women and six men from Tahiti. Nothing was known of their existence until the island was visited in 1808.

In 2004 six men, comprising some 12% of the island's resident population and including several prominent public figures one of whom was the mayor, were convicted of child sex offences. The scandal divided the island, with defendants arguing that English law did not have jurisdiction on Pitcairn and that underage sex was a long-standing tradition. Sentences ranged up to six-and-a-half years in prison. Several of the convicted served part of their sentences in home detention to enable them to carry on essential island work.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Pitcairn Island (4.6 sq. km; 1.75 sq. miles) is situated in the Pacific Ocean, nearly equidistant from New Zealand and Panama (25° 04' S. lat., 130° 06' W. long.). Adamstown is the only settlement. The estimated population in 2015 was 57. The uninhabited islands of Henderson (31 sq. km), Ducie (3.9 sq. km) and Oeno (5.2 sq. km) were annexed in 1902. English is the official language but Pitkern is also spoken.

CLIMATE

An equable climate, with average annual rainfall of 80" (2,000 mm) spread evenly throughout the year. Mean monthly temperatures range from 75°F (24°C) in Jan. to 66°F (19°C) in July.

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

The Local Government Ordinance of 1964 constitutes a Council of ten members; four councillors and the chairman of the internal committee are elected annually, one is nominated by the Council and two—including the island secretary—are appointed by the Governor. It is presided over by the island mayor. There is also a commissioner liaising between the governor and the council. No political parties exist. The Island Magistrate, who is elected triennially, presides over the Council; other members hold office for only one year. Liaison between Governor and Council is through a Commissioner in the Auckland, New Zealand, office of the British Consulate-General.

CURRENT GOVERNMENT

Governor: Jonathan Sinclair, LVO.

Mayor: Shawn Christian.

ECONOMY

Currency

New Zealand currency is used.

Budget

For the financial year 2003–04 revenue was NZ$742,000 and expenditure NZ$1,347,000. There is no taxation. Instead all able-bodied men and women are required to perform public work.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Forestry

The area under forests in 2010 was 4,000 ha., or 83% of the total land area.

Fisheries

The catch in 2010 was approximately three tonnes. In May 2013 a report for submission to the UK Foreign and Commonwealth Office was prepared by the Pew Charitable Trusts, the National Geographic Society and the Pitcairn Island Council. In a bid to preserve the environment and boost tourism, it called for a marine reserve around the territory measuring 830,000 sq. km in which fishing would be banned. It was approved by the UK government in March 2015 and will be the largest continuous marine reserve in the world. Unauthorized vessel activity in the reserve is to be monitored via satellite in Harwell, Oxfordshire.

St Helena, Ascension and Tristan da Cunha

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

The island of St Helena was uninhabited when discovered by the Portuguese in 1502. It was administered by the East India Company from 1659 and became a British colony in 1834. Napoleon died there in exile in 1821. In 2009 a new constitution saw the territory renamed from St Helena and Dependencies to St Helena, Ascension and Tristan da Cunha.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

St Helena, of volcanic origin, is 3,100 km from the west coast of Africa. Area, 122 sq. km (47 sq. miles), with a cultivable area of 243 ha. The resident population of St Helena at the 2008 census was 3,981 (excluding the then dependencies of Ascension and Tristan da Cunha) of which St Helena itself had a population of 3,867 with 114 on board the RMS St Helena and on yachts in the harbour. In 2010, 60.5% of the population were rural. The capital and port is Jamestown, population (2008) 640.

The official language is English.

Ascension is a small island of volcanic origin, of 88 sq. km (34 sq. miles), 700 miles northwest of St Helena. There are 120 ha. providing fresh meat, vegetables and fruit. The population in 2008 was 1,122.

The island is the resort of sea turtles, rabbits, the sooty tern or 'wideawake', and feral donkeys.

A cable station connects the island with St Helena, Sierra Leone, St Vincent, Rio de Janeiro and Buenos Aires. There is an airstrip (Miracle Mile) near the settlement of Georgetown; the Royal Air Force maintains an air link with the Falkland Islands.

Tristan da Cunha is the largest of a small group of islands in the South Atlantic, lying 2,124 km (1,320 miles) southwest of St Helena, of which they became dependencies on 12 Jan. 1938. Tristan da Cunha has an area of 98 sq. km and a population (2008) of 284, all living in the settlement of Edinburgh.

Inaccessible Island (10 sq. km) lies 20 miles west, and the three Nightingale Islands (2 sq. km) lie 20 miles south of Tristan da Cunha; they are uninhabited. Gough Island (90 sq. km) is 220 miles south of Tristan and has a meteorological station.

Tristan consists of a volcano rising to a height of 2,060 metres, with a circumference at its base of 34 km. The volcano, believed to be extinct, erupted unexpectedly early in Oct. 1961. The whole population was evacuated without loss and settled temporarily in the UK; in 1963 they returned to Tristan. Potatoes remain the chief crop. Cattle, sheep and pigs are now reared, and fish are plentiful.

The original inhabitants were shipwrecked sailors and soldiers who remained behind when the garrison from St Helena was withdrawn in 1817.

At the end of April 1942 Tristan da Cunha was commissioned as HMS Atlantic Isle, and became an important meteorological and radio station. In Jan. 1949 a South African company commenced crawfishing operations. An Administrator was appointed at the end of 1948 and a body of basic law brought into operation. The Island Council, which was set up in 1932, consists of a Chief Islander, three nominated and eight elected members, under the chairmanship of the Administrator.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2008 figures for St Helena: births, 36; deaths, 44. Expectation of life at birth (2007): females, 77.3 years; males, 70.8 years. Annual average growth rate of resident population, 1998–2008, –2.4%.

CLIMATE

A mild climate, with little variation. Temperatures range from 75–85°F (24–29°C) in summer to 65–75°F (18–24°C) in winter. Rainfall varies between 13" (325 mm) and 37" (925 mm) according to altitude and situation.

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

A new constitution came into force on 1 Sept. 2009, replacing its 20-year old predecessor. Under the terms of the new constitution, the territory changed its official name from St Helena and Dependencies to St Helena, Ascension and Tristan da Cunha. It included a bill of rights, allowing citizens to appeal to local courts on human rights issues rather than address the European Court of Human Rights in Strasbourg as they had done previously. Constraints were placed on the powers of the Governor (who no longer holds the title of 'Commander-in-Chief') and the independence of the judiciary and public service were constitutionally enshrined.

The territory's Legislative Council consists of twelve elected members, three non-voting ex officio members (the Chief Secretary, the Financial Secretary and the Attorney General) and the Speaker and Deputy Speaker. The Governor is advised by an Executive Council comprising three non-voting ex officio members (the Chief Secretary, the Financial Secretary and the Attorney General) and five elected members from the Legislative Council. The Governor must, except in certain prescribed circumstances, act in accordance with the advice of the Executive Council.

RECENT ELECTIONS

The last Legislative Council elections were on 17 July 2013. Only non-partisans were elected.

CURRENT GOVERNMENT

Governor: Lisa Phillips.

Administrator of Ascension: Marc Holland.

Administrator of Tristan da Cunha: Alex Mitham.
