The most populous cities are Baghdad (the capital), with an estimated population of 6,150,000 in 2011, Mosul and Basra. Other large cities include Erbil, Karbala, Kirkuk, An-Najaf and As-Sulaymaniyah.

The population is approximately 80% Arab, 17% Kurdish (mainly in the north of the country) and 3% Turkmen, Assyrian, Chaldean or other. Shia Arabs (predominantly in the south of the country) constitute approximately 60% of the total population and Sunni Arabs (principally in the centre) 20%.

The official language is Arabic. Other languages spoken are Kurdish (official in Kurdish regions), Assyrian and Armenian.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2008 estimates: births, 940,000; deaths, 177,000; marriages, 171,000. Birth and death rates, 2008 estimates (per 1,000 population): births, 31.2; deaths, 5.9. Life expectancy at birth, 2007, was 64.2 years for men and 71.8 years for women. Annual population growth rate, 2000–08, 2.5%. Infant mortality, 2008: 36 per 1,000 live births. Fertility rate, 2008: 4.1 births per woman. Estimated maternal mortality rate per 10,000 live births, 2005: 30.

CLIMATE

The climate is mainly arid, with limited and unreliable rainfall and a large annual range of temperature. Summers are very hot and winters are cold. Baghdad, Jan. 50°F (10°C), July 95°F (35°C). Annual rainfall 6" (140 mm). Basra, Jan. 55°F (12.8°C), July 92°F (33.3°C). Annual rainfall 7" (175 mm). Mosul, Jan. 44°F (6.7°C), July 90°F (32.2°C). Annual rainfall 15" (384 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

Until the fall of Saddam Hussein, the highest state authority was the Revolutionary Command Council (RCC) but some legislative power was given to the 220-member National Assembly. The only legal political grouping was the National Progressive Front (founded 1973) comprising the Arab Socialist Renaissance (Ba'ath) Party and various Kurdish groups, but a law of Aug. 1991 legalized political parties provided they were not based on religion, race or ethnicity.

In July 2003 a 25-man Iraqi-led governing council met in Baghdad for the first time since the US-led war in an important staging post towards full self-government. The temporary Coalition Provisional Authority was dissolved on 28 June 2004. Power was handed over to the interim Iraqi government which assumed full sovereign powers for governing Iraq. It became a transitional government after elections in Jan. 2005. The 275-member Transitional National Assembly approved a draft new constitution on 29 Aug. 2005. It was approved in a nationwide referendum held on 15 Oct., with 78.6% of votes cast in favour. Shias and Kurds generally supported the constitution. Most Sunnis opposed it because of its reference to federalism and the risk that Iraq could ultimately break up, as Iraq's oil resources are in the Shia and Kurdish areas. The constitution states that Iraq is a democratic, federal, representative republic and a multi-ethnic, multi-religious and multi-sect country. Islam is the official religion of the state and a basic source of legislation. Elections were held in Dec. 2005 for the new 275-member Council of Representatives. In Dec. 2009 the number of seats was increased from 275 to 325 ahead of the March 2010 elections. In Nov. 2013 this was further increased to 328 ahead of the April 2014 elections.

RECENT ELECTIONS

In parliamentary elections to the permanent Iraqi National Assembly held on 30 April 2014 the State of Law coalition won 92 of 328 seats, ahead of the Sadrist Movement with 34 seats, the Islamic Supreme Council of Iraq with 31, Mutahidun with 28, the Kurdistan Democratic Party with 25, Wataniyya with 21, Patriotic Union of Kurdistan with 21, Arabiyya Alliance with 10 and the Change list with 9. The remaining 57 seats went to smaller parties and coalitions.

Fuad Masum was elected president by parliament in a second round of voting on 24 June 2014, gaining 211 votes against 17 for Hussein Musawi out of a total of 269 votes cast.

CURRENT LEADERS

Fuad Masum

Position

President

Introduction

On 24 July 2014 the Iraqi parliament approved Fuad Masum as president. He was the only candidate proposed by the main Kurdish parties. Masum replaced Jalal Talabani, who had been unable to fulfil his presidential duties as a result of poor health.

Early Life

Muhammad Fuad Masum was born in 1938 in the town of Koya to a well-established political family with Muslim clerical ties. His father, Sheikh Mulla Masum, was a former head of the Association of Muslim Scholars in Kurdistan. In 1958 he enrolled at Al-Azhar University in Cairo, Egypt, where he studied for an degree in Islamic studies and later a doctorate in Islamic philosophy.

In 1962 Masum became a member of the Iraqi Communist Party but left in 1964 to join the Kurdistan Democratic Party (KDP). In 1968 he joined the University of Basra as a lecturer, and became the KDP representative for the city. During this time he played an active role in the KDP's military operations in Iraqi Kurdistan. From 1973–75 Masum represented the party in Cairo. In 1976 he left the KDP and co-founded the Patriotic Union of Kurdistan (PUK).

He subsequently served as its envoy to Syria and the UK and in 1992 became the first prime minister of the Iraqi Kurdistan region. Following the invasion of Iraq and overthrow of the Saddam Hussein regime in 2003, Masum became a member of the delegation representing Kurdistan, and was a member of the constitution drafting committee. From June–Nov. 2010 he was acting speaker of the Council of Representatives. In the July 2014 presidential polls, Masum won 211 of 269 votes in parliament in the second round of voting.

Career in Office

Masum asked Haider al-Abadi to form a government on 11 Aug. 2014, a move greeted with intense criticism from incumbent Nouri al-Maliki. Known as a moderate, and for his good relations with both Sunni and Shia Muslims, Masum's role as president is largely ceremonial. It was hoped he would be a unifying figure for Iraq's many political factions.

Haider al-Abadi

Position

Prime Minister

Introduction

On 8 Sept. 2014 Haider al-Abadi was approved as prime minister by parliament. He succeeded Nouri al-Maliki with the support of the National Iraqi Alliance (a coalition of Shia political parties) and also claimed significant Sunni, Kurdish and international backing.

Early Life

Haider al-Abadi was born in Baghdad in 1952. His family were supporters of the Shia Dawa (Call) party, with which al-Abadi first became involved as a teenager. He graduated in electrical engineering from the University of Technology in Baghdad in 1975, before earning a doctorate in the same subject from the University of Manchester in the UK six years later. As a student in the UK he was an outspoken critic of Saddam Hussein. In the early 1980s two of al-Abadi's brothers were executed by the regime and a third imprisoned for their involvement with Dawa. In 1983 al-Abadi's passport was confiscated by the Iraqi government on charges that he was conspiring against the ruling Ba'ath Party.

Al-Abadi remained in the UK in voluntary exile for the next two decades and worked in the transportation industry in London. In 1993 he set up a design firm. Following the fall of Saddam Hussein in 2003, he returned to Iraq where he was openly critical of the privatization plans of the Coalition Provisional Authority. In 2005 he was elected to the House of Representatives for Baghdad. In 2006 his name emerged as a potential prime ministerial candidate but the appointment went to al-Maliki instead.

On 11 Aug. 2014 President Fuad Masum put forward al-Abadi for the post of prime minister on condition that he formed a government confirmed by parliament within 30 days. On 8 Sept. al-Abadi and most of his broad-based cabinet, including Sunni Arabs and Kurds, were duly approved.

Career in Office

Al-Abadi's chief challenge has been to halt the advance of Islamic State (IS), which seized control of swathes of the country from mid-2014. He requested international assistance to counter the militant Jihadist organization and, with the support of Iran and air strikes by a US-led military coalition, Iraqi and Kurdish forces gradually dislodged IS' presence in the north of the country in 2015 despite some setbacks.

DEFENCE

Following the downfall of Saddam Hussein, recruitment began in July 2003 for a new professional army run by the US military. Saddam Hussein's forces numbered 400,000 at their peak. In Nov. 2008 Iraq's parliament approved a plan that saw the last American troops leave the country in Dec. 2011. However, US redeployment began again in June 2014 to counter Islamic State forces. In 2013 military expenditure totalled US$16,897m. (US$530 per capita), representing 7.2% of GDP.

Army

In 2011 personnel numbered an estimated 193,000. In July 2004 the Civil Defense Corps (23,100 personnel in April 2004) was disbanded and converted into a National Guard. It was in turn merged into the Army in Jan. 2005.

Navy

A 3,600-strong (2011) Iraqi Navy (initially called the Coastal Defense Force) has been re-established since the 2003 war. It began operations in Oct. 2004.

Air Force

An Iraqi Air Force (initially called the Army Air Corps) has been reconstructed since 2003. There were a total of 5,050 personnel in 2011. Equipment in 2011 included three combat-capable aircraft.

ECONOMY

In 2011 oil and gas accounted for about 60% of GDP.

Iraq featured among the ten most corrupt countries in the world in a 2015 survey of 168 countries carried out by the anti-corruption organization Transparency International.

Overview

Iraq faces serious security and development challenges following decades of dictatorship, international sanctions and war. After the military victory of the US-led coalition in 2003, GDP declined by 41%, but in Nov. 2004 the Paris Club of creditors agreed to write off 80% of Iraq's external debt. By 2013 unemployment stood at 11% and the poverty rate at 14.2% according to the UN Development Programme.

Iraq has among the largest oil reserves in the world. Oil and gas accounted for 98% of exports in 2013.

The rise of Islamic State (IS) in the north and east of the country in 2014 crippled the country's infrastructure, disrupting trade and access to fuel and electricity. IS has financed its operations through illicit oil production, offering heavily subsidized prices to entrench its rule, although plunging international oil prices and US-led air strikes have hampered its progress. According to the IMF the economy shrank by 2.1% in 2014.

With some 1.8m. people displaced from their homes since Jan. 2014, providing housing and public services is a major priority, along with strengthening security. The government aims to create 10m. new jobs by 2030 by developing the energy sector.

Currency

From 15 Oct. 2003 a new national currency, the new Iraqi dinar (NID), was introduced to replace the existing currencies in circulation in the south and north of the country. Inflation rates (based on IMF statistics) for fiscal years:

2005	2006	2007	2008	2009	2010	2011	2012	2013	2014
37.0%	53.2%	30.8%	2.7%	-2.2%	2.4%	5.6%	6.1%	1.9%	2.2%

Budget

In 2007 revenues were ID58,714bn. and expenditures ID48,153bn. Crude oil export revenue accounted for 80.3% of all revenues in 2007; current expenditure accounted for 79.6% of all expenditures.

Performance

Real GDP growth rates (based on IMF statistics):

2005	2006	2007	2008	2009	2010	2011	2012	2013	2014
1.7%	5.6%	1.9%	8.2%	3.4%	6.4%	7.5%	13.9%	6.6%	-2.1%

Total GDP in 2014 was US$223.5bn.

Banking and Finance

All banks were nationalized in 1964. Following the Gulf War in 1991 the formation of private banks was approved, although they were prohibited from conducting international transactions. A new post-Saddam banking law in Oct. 2003 authorized private banks to process international payments, remittances and foreign currency letters of credit. The Trade Bank of Iraq has been established as an export credit agency to facilitate trade financing. The independent Central Bank of Iraq is the sole bank of issue; its Governor is Ali Mohsin Ismail. All domestic interest rates were liberalized on 1 March 2004.

The Iraq Stock Exchange opened in Baghdad in June 2004 as the successor to the former Baghdad Stock Exchange.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Iraq's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy accounted for 3.9 tonnes per capita in 2011.

Electricity

Installed capacity was 17.0m. kW in 2011. Production in 2011 was 54.24bn. kWh, with consumption per capita 1,932 kWh.

Oil and Gas

Proven oil reserves in 2014 totalled 150.0bn. bbls, the fifth highest in the world. Oil production in 2014 totalled 160.3m. tonnes, the highest total since 1979. In June 2015 production reached 4m. bbls per day for the first time, with the oil sector being largely unaffected by the security situation as Iraq's main oil fields and most of the export infrastructure are located in the south of the country, away from Islamic State-controlled areas. The sector provides 95% of government revenue.

In 2013 Iraq had natural gas reserves of 3.6trn. cu. metres.

Minerals

Output of minerals, 2012: sand and gravel, 23.2m. tonnes (estimate); limestone, 5.0m. tonnes; gypsum, 1.4m. tonnes; phosphate rock, 450,000 tonnes; salt, 143,000 tonnes.

Agriculture

There were around 3.43m. ha. of arable land in 2012 and 0.23m. ha. of permanent crops. An estimated 3.53m. ha. were equipped for irrigation in 2012. Production (2012 estimates, in 1,000 tonnes): wheat, 2,400; tomatoes, 1,100; dates, 650; potatoes, 560; cucumbers and gherkins, 505; barley, 500.

Livestock (2013 estimates): sheep, 8.3m.; cattle, 2.8m.; goats, 1.6m.; asses, 380,000; chickens, 38m.

Forestry

In 2010 forests covered 0.83m. ha., representing 2% of the land area. Timber production in 2011 was 177,000 cu. metres.

Fisheries

Catches in 2010 totalled 25,720 tonnes, of which about 52% from marine waters.

INDUSTRY

Iraq remains under-developed industrially. Production figures (2011, in 1,000 tonnes): residual fuel oil, 13,621; cement (estimate), 10,000; distillate fuel oil, 6,365; petrol, 3,226; kerosene, 2,258; jet fuel, 308.

Labour

In 2011 the labour force was 7.9m. (72% of working age males and 13% of working age females). The state employs nearly two-thirds of the workforce. Unemployment was officially put at 12% in Feb. 2012.

Iraq had 28,000 people living in slavery according to the Walk Free Foundation's 2013 Global Slavery Index.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

In 2007 imports amounted to US$18,289m. and exports to US$39,590m. Manufactures and food are the main import commodities. Crude oil is the main export commodity. Imports and exports have both increased significantly since the Saddam era. In Oct. 2012 oil exports totalled 81.3m. bbls, their highest level in more than 30 years.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

In 2002 there were an estimated 44,900 km of roads, of which 84.3% were paved. Vehicles in use in 2006 included 785,000 passenger cars and 1,345,000 lorries and vans. In 2005 there were 1,789 road accident deaths.

Rail

In 2005 railways comprised 2,032 km of 1,435 mm gauge route. Passenger-km travelled in 2004 came to 24m. and freight tonne-km to 90m.

Civil Aviation

In 2000 there were international flights for the first time since the 1991 Gulf War, with air links being established between Iraq and Egypt, Jordan and Syria. Since 2003 the two international airports at Baghdad and Basra have undergone post-war reconstruction. Major domestic airports are at Mosul, Kirkuk and Erbil. In May 2010 the government dissolved the state airline, Iraqi Airways, owing to a legal dispute with Kuwait dating back to the Iraqi invasion in 1990. It began flying again in 2012 and now serves a number of destinations in Europe, the Middle East and Asia.

Shipping

In Jan. 2009 there were 18 ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 86,000 GT. A 565-km canal was opened in 1992 between Baghdad and the Persian Gulf for shipping, irrigation, the drainage of saline water and the reclamation of marsh land. Iraq has three oil tanker terminals at Basra, Khor Al-Amaya and Khor Al-Zubair. Its single deep-water port is at Umm Qasr.

Telecommunications

There were 1.72m. fixed telephone lines in 2010 (55.6 per 1,000 inhabitants). In the same year mobile phone subscriptions numbered 23.26m. (75.1 per 1,000 inhabitants). Mobile phones were banned during the Saddam Hussein era. Fixed internet subscriptions totalled just 270 in 2010. In March 2012 there were 1.6m. Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The Iraqi Constitution of 2005 provided for a judiciary comprised of a Higher Judicial Council (to oversee federal judicial affairs), a Supreme Court, a Court of Cassation and other federal courts including the Central Criminal Court. There is also a Judiciary Oversight Commission.

The death penalty was introduced for serious theft in 1992; amputation of a hand for theft in 1994. It is believed that during the Saddam era there were hundreds of executions annually. The death penalty was suspended in April 2003 after the fall of Saddam, but reinstated in Aug. 2004. There were at least 26 judicial executions in 2015, down from at least 61 in 2014 and 169 in 2013. However, there have also been widespread reports of extrajudicial executions since the emergence of Islamic State. The population in penal institutions in June 2012 was 37,014 (110 per 100,000 of national population). 41.5% of prisoners had yet to receive a trial according to 2014 estimates by the International Centre for Prison Studies.

Police

A new post-war Iraqi Police Service has been established since 2003 and numbered about 325,000 in Oct. 2011. The personnel includes both former officers who have been retrained and new recruits. There is also a 45,000-strong paramilitary Iraqi Federal Police and a 31,000-strong Oil Police.

Education

Primary education became compulsory in 1976. Primary school age is 6–11. Secondary education is for six years, of which the first three are termed intermediate. The medium of instruction is Arabic; Kurdish is used in primary schools in northern districts.

In 2005 there were 92,769 pre-primary school children with 5,981 teaching staff; 4.43m. primary school children with 215,795 teaching staff; and 1.75m. secondary school pupils with 93,219 teaching staff. Adult literacy rate was an estimated 78.1% in 2009 (male, 86.3%; female, 69.9%). Most schools were closed in March–April 2003 when UNICEF estimates that 200 were destroyed and a further 2,750 looted. By Oct. 2003 all 22 universities and 43 technical institutes and colleges were open, as were nearly all primary and secondary schools. There were 424,908 students and 19,231 academic staff in tertiary education in 2005. Expenditure on education in 2003 was an estimated US$384.5m.

Health

According to the World Health Organization, in 2005 there were 19,010 physicians, 3,460 dentists, 3,170 pharmacists and 38,001 nurses and midwifery personnel. There are approximately 240 hospitals and 1,200 primary health care clinics operating in post-war Iraq.

RELIGION

The constitution proclaims Islam the state religion, but also stipulates freedom of creed and religious practices. In 2010 the population was 99.0% Muslim according to the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life; there were also an estimated 270,000 Christians. See also TERRITORY AND POPULATION above.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

Iraq has four UNESCO World Heritage sites: Hatra (inscribed in 1985), a large fortified city of the Parthian (Persian) Empire; Ashur (Qal'at Sherqat) (2003), the first capital and the religious centre of the Assyrians from the 14th to the 9th centuries BC; Samarra Archaeological City (2007), the site of the capital of the former Abbasid Empire; and Erbil Citadel (2014), an imposing occupied mound in Erbil created by many generations of people living and rebuilding on the same spot.

Press

In 2008 several hundred daily and weekly publications appeared regularly, the most popular of which, Al-Sabah ('The Morning'), had an average circulation of 50,000.

Tourism

In 2010 there were 1,518,000 foreign tourists, up from 864,000 in 2008.

Kurdistan

The Kurdistan Region of Iraq ('Iraqi Kurdistan') is the only area of Kurdistan to be recognized officially as an autonomous federal entity. After decades of insurgency Iraq granted limited independence in 1970. De facto independence was established following the Kurdish uprising at the end of the Gulf War in 1991. This led to the creation of the Kurdistan Regional Government by the Iraqi Kurdistan Front a year later. Self-governance was disrupted in 1994 by civil war between the Kurdistan Democratic Party (KDP) and the Patriotic Union of Kurdistan (PUK). Rival administrations were set up in As-Sulaymaniyah and Erbil. Peace was restored in Sept. 1998 with the signing of the US-mediated Washington Agreement. The region was acknowledged officially in the 2005 Iraqi constitution and power-sharing began in 2006.

Area, 40,643 sq. km (15,692 sq. miles); population (2002 estimate), 3,757,058. The region comprises three governorates, As-Sulaymaniyah, Dahuk and Erbil, and claims territory in other Kurdish areas although borders remain a contentious issue with Iraq. The unified government has been based at the capital, Irbil, since 2006.

In presidential elections held on 25 July 2009 Massoud Barzani was re-elected with 69.6% of the vote against 25.3% for Kamal Mirawdily. In parliamentary elections held on the same day the Kurdistan List won 57.3% of the vote and 59 of 111 seats, the Change List 23.8% (25 seats) and the Service and Reform List 12.8% (13 seats).

President: Massoud Barzani.

Prime Minister: Nechervan Idris Barzani.

Oil exports began in 2009. An oil pipeline from Kurdistan to Ceyhan in Turkey was completed in 2013, and in 2014 was pumping 120,000 bbls a day. In 2013 oil reserves were estimated to total 45bn. bbls. There are airports at As-Sulaymaniyah and Erbil.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Ireland was first inhabited around 7500 BC by Mesolithic hunter-gatherers who travelled across the land bridge that connected southwest Scotland with the northern part of Ireland (it was submerged around 6700 BC). Farmers from the Middle-East arrived in Ireland around 3500 BC. Their elaborate graves are also a feature of Neolithic communities in Brittany and the Iberian peninsula. From the sixth century BC, the island was invaded by waves of Celtic tribes from central Europe, including the Gaels, who established pastoral communities within massive stone forts. By AD 200 the Gaels dominated the island, though there was no central control: society was based on a complex structure of hundreds of small kingdoms. The Romans, who dominated much of northern Europe, never reached Ireland. The Gaels traded with other Celtic peoples and sent raiding parties to form settlements in Scotland (Dál Riata) and west Wales.

Christian missionaries reached Ireland during the 3rd century AD. St Patrick, born on the west coast of Britain, was consecrated as a bishop in Gaul and lived and preached in Ireland from c. 432 until his death c. 465. Monasteries were founded and, in an overwhelmingly agrarian society, they became important centres of learning and the dissemination of the written word. In contrast to much of northern Europe, ravaged by fragmentary forces following the collapse of the Roman Empire, Christianity found a haven in Ireland. Later, Irish missionaries took Celtic Christianity to Britain and continental Europe. By the 5th century AD there were five leading Gaelic kingdoms, which roughly correspond to the latter-day provinces of Ulster, Leinster, Munster and Connacht (the fifth kingdom occupied land in the modern counties of Meath and Westmeath). Each kingdom was dominated by one or two families—the Uí Néill clan was especially powerful in the north and east. The south (Munster) was dominated by the Eóganachta family.

Nordic Invasion

Viking longboats first appeared off the Irish coast in the late seventh century. 795 saw a full-scale Viking invasion, which heralded more than two hundred years of Scandinavian influence. The Vikings were great traders and established the first towns along the east and south coasts—the towns of Wexford, Waterford, Cork and Limerick became prosperous centres of manufacturing and commerce. Dublin, said to be founded in 841 by the Norse king Thurgesius, became a key outpost in a Viking diaspora stretching as far as Sicily and Russia. Gaelic kings made military alliances with the Viking settlers to support their struggles with neighbouring dynasties. In 976 the warrior Brian Boru (Bóruma) became king of Munster following a series of victories against the powerful Eóganachta. Following Boru's defeat of the Leinster groups and their Norse allies at Clontarf in 1014 he seemed destined to be the first high king of all Ireland, but was murdered shortly after his famous victory.

In the mid-12th century the Pope gave his blessing to an expedition of Anglo-Normans to Ireland. They were sent by the English King Henry II, who had been approached for military support by the deposed king of Leinster, Dermot MacMurrough (Diarmait Mac Murchada). Returning to Ireland in 1169 with Norman barons and Welsh mercenaries, MacMurrough recovered part of his former territories and captured Dublin. Richard de Clare (Strongbow), a powerful Norman invader, became MacMurrough's heir after marrying his daughter. During the 13th century various Anglo-Norman adventurers began to establish themselves in Ireland. Dublin Castle was built in 1204 on the site of a Norse fort and the first parliament sat there in 1264. After his decisive defeat of English forces at the Battle of Bannockburn in 1314, Edward Bruce, the brother of Robert Bruce, king of Scotland, dreamed of establishing a Celtic kingdom. In 1315 he landed in Ulster and attempted to overthrow the English. Within a year he controlled most of Ireland north of Dublin, but his troops left a trail of destruction and soon lost support. Bruce was defeated and killed at Dundalk in 1317 by a Norman-Irish army reinforced from England under orders from King Edward II.

The descendants of the Anglo-Norman settlers were gradually identified with the native Irish, whose language, habits, and laws they adopted. To counteract this, the Anglo-Irish Parliament passed the Statute of Kilkenny in 1366, decreeing heavy penalties against all who allied themselves with the Irish. This statute, however, remained inoperative; although Richard II went to Ireland in 1394 and 1399 to reassert royal authority, he failed to achieve any practical result. During the subsequent Wars of the Roses in England the authority of the English crown became limited to the Pale, a coastal district around Dublin.

King Edward IV, of the House of York, came to the English throne in 1461 and appointed Gerald (Gearóid Mór) FitzGerald, 8th earl of Kildare as viceroy of Ireland. The FitzGeralds were wealthy Yorkists, well-connected to a network of Anglo-Norman and Gaelic families. Gearóid Mór wielded considerable power, and managed to hold onto it even after the return of the Lancastrians in 1485. He was eventually replaced in 1494 by Sir Edward Poyning, who, representing English interests, brought in legislation providing for the reduction of the power of the Anglo-Irish lords. The Poyning's Laws removed the legal rights of the Irish parliament to legislate independently.

Henry VII reappointed Gearóid Mór as viceroy in 1496. For the next 38 years the FitzGerald's (Geraldines) ruled Ireland from Maynooth Castle, paying deference to the English crown. Henry VIII was determined to centralize power and reduce the influence of provincial magnates. He introduced the Reformation to Ireland in 1537 and began to dissolve the monasteries with little resistance.

Ulster Rebellion

Elizabeth I, through her deputy in Ireland, Sir Henry Sidley, removed the Irish chieftoms from their positions of power. An uprising in Munster in the early 1570s was quickly suppressed and only Ulster now provided a stumbling block to Tudor domination. It was from Ulster that Hugh O'Neill and Red Hugh O'Donnell launched an open rebellion. In 1598 O'Neill ambushed and defeated a government force of over 4,000 at the Battle of Yellow Ford near Armagh. Spoken of as 'Prince of Ireland', his ambitions were thwarted by the arrival of 20,000 troops under Lord Mountjoy in 1600. Reinforcements of Spanish soldiers in 1601 were insufficient and O'Neill left for the Continent with his followers in the 1607 'Flight of the Earls'.

The Earls' lands were seized by the English crown and in 1609 Ulster-Scottish and English settlers were invited to colonize. Swathes of land were cleared of farms and woodland, and 23 walled new towns were created, including Belfast. By the early 1620s the Anglo-Scottish population of Ulster was more than 20,000. English politics in the 1630s was dominated by struggles between the crown and parliament (the Puritans) and the Irish in Ulster took advantage, rebelling against the planters in late 1641 in a series of attacks in which thousands of Protestants were killed. The following year Owen Roe O'Neill, who had fled to Spain with his uncle Hugh in 1607, returned to Ireland and led the Confederate forces. A provisional government was established at Kilkenny and by the end of 1642 O'Neill controlled the whole island apart from Dublin and parts of Ulster.

Victory for the English parliamentarians under Oliver Cromwell and the execution of Charles I in 1649 had a profound impact on Ireland. Cromwell was determined to avenge the 1641 massacre of the Ulster planters. With his New Model Army, he stormed Drogheda and murdered its garrison of 2,000. Wexford fell, and by 1652 all of Ireland was in Cromwellian hands. Hundreds of thousands of acres of land were confiscated and given to a new wave of Protestant settlers.

Following the restoration of the English monarchy in 1660, Catholics in Ireland hoped to be rewarded for their former loyalty, but Charles II restored only a small number of Catholic estates. King James II, however, was a declared Catholic and under his viceroy in Ireland, Richard Talbot, earl of Tyrconnel, Catholics were advanced to positions of state and placed in control of the military. Protestant power was on the wane in England and the Protestant aristocracy invited William of Orange (the Dutch husband of James II's daughter Mary) to claim the English crown. James II fled to France, then travelled to Ireland with French soldiers. They moved north, aiming to subjugate Protestant Ulster. In the spring of 1689 only the walled towns of Derry/Londonderry and Enniskillen remained in Protestant hands. Derry/Londonderry was besieged, but it held out for 15 weeks until the arrival of William's forces, which defeated James at the Battle of the Boyne. The Jacobites retreated to Limerick, where they negotiated the Treaty of Limerick of 1691. Catholics were permitted some religious freedom, and the restoration of their lands. However, the treaty was not honoured by the English parliament and 11,000 Irish Jacobites set sail to join the French army.

Religious Divide

The defeat of the Catholic cause was followed by more confiscation of land and the introduction of the Penal Laws which prevented Catholics from buying freehold land, holding public office or bearing arms. During the American revolution, fear of a French invasion led Irish Protestants to form the Protestant Volunteer army. Led by Henry Grattan, they used their military strength to extract concessions from Britain. Trade concessions were granted in 1779 and the Poyning's Laws repealed three years later. However, Catholics continued to be denied the right to hold political office.

The principles of the French Revolution found their most powerful expression in Ireland in the Society of United Irishmen, which, led by the protestant lawyer Theobald Wolfe Tone, mounted a rebellion in 1798. Without the expected French assistance, the rebellion was crushed by crown troops led by Gen. Lake. The British prime minister, William Pitt, was convinced that the 'Irish problem' could be solved by the abolition of the Irish parliament, legislative union with Britain and Catholic emancipation. The first two goals were achieved in 1801, but the opposition of George III and British Protestants prevented the enactment of the Catholic Emancipation act until 1829, when it was accomplished largely through the efforts of Daniel O'Connell.

After 1829 the Irish representatives in the British Parliament, led by O'Connell, sought a repeal of the Act of Union. Calls for land reforms were drowned out by a disastrous potato famine. Between 1845–49 a blight wiped out the potato crop, the staple food of the Irish population and resulted in mass starvation. Of a population of 8.5m. almost 1m. died and over 1m. emigrated, mostly to the United States. Irish Catholics in the United States formed the secret Fenian movement, dedicated to achieving full Irish independence.

Home Rule Campaign

Charles Parnell, a Home Rule League MP, came to the fore of the nationalist movement in 1877 as president of the Home Rule Confederation of Great Britain. Parnell led parliamentary obstruction in response to the House of Lords' rejection of limited land reform in Ireland. Parnell's Irish Land League saw limited gains in Gladstone's 1881 Land Act but Parnell, voicing continuing discontent, was imprisoned in Dublin. His release in 1882 and the subsequent Kilmainham Treaty, granting more concessions to tenants, was seen by London as the quickest solution to an increasingly anarchic Ireland.

The Home Rule Party, led by Parnell, brought down the Conservative government at Westminster by voting with the Liberals, allowing William Gladstone to form a government in 1886. Gladstone attempted to resolve the 'Irish problem' by introducing a Home Rule Bill—seen as Parnell's greatest achievement—which would give the Irish Parliament the right to appoint the executive of Ireland. However, Home Rule was greatly opposed in Ulster and England and failed at Westminster in 1886 and 1893. Parnell's domination of Irish politics came to end with the disclosure of his affair with Kitty O'Shea—an English woman of aristocratic background—in 1890. After Gladstone rejected him, he lost control of the Irish parliamentarians and was condemned by the Catholic clergy.

During the 1880s a new pride in traditional Irish culture took root, symbolized by the establishment of the Gaelic Athletic Association in 1884 and the Gaelic League in 1893, which successfully campaigned for the return of the Irish language to the school curriculum. Though not political organizations, they provided a link between the conservative Catholic church and the Fenians (nationalists). In 1905 the Irish political leader and journalist Arthur Griffith founded Sinn Féin ('we ourselves') to promote Irish economic welfare and achieve complete political independence. However, at the time the dominant nationalist group remained the Home Rule party of John Redmond.

A Home Rule Bill was finally passed in 1914 but the act was suspended for the duration of the First World War. Redmond pledged the support of Ireland to the British war effort, which angered some nationalists. The Irish Republican Brotherhood (IRB) plotted a rebellion while Britain was at war, soliciting

German support. On Easter Monday 1916 the IRB seized the General Post Office in Dublin and Patrick Pearse read out the proclamation of the Republic of Ireland. Though the Easter Rising was over in under a week, the emotional impact was heightened when the British executed 16 of the rebel leaders. Sinn Féin, linked in the Irish public's mind with the rising, scored a dramatic victory in the parliamentary elections of 1918. Its members refused to take their seats in Westminster, declared the Dáil Éireann ('Diet of Ireland') and proclaimed the Irish republic. The British outlawed Sinn Féin and the Dáil, which went underground and associated military groups including the Irish Republican Army (IRA) engaged in guerrilla warfare against the local authorities representing the Union. The British sent police reinforcements (the Black and Tans) who further inflamed the situation.

Civil War

A new Home Rule Bill was passed in 1920, establishing two parliaments, one in Belfast and the other in Dublin. The Unionists of the six counties accepted this scheme, and a Northern Parliament was duly elected in May 1921. Sinn Féin rejected the plan, but in autumn 1921 British Prime Minister Lloyd George negotiated with Griffith and Michael Collins of the Dáil a treaty granting Catholic Ireland dominion status within the British Empire. Collins managed to gain approval in the Dáil by a slim majority. The Republicans in the Dáil, led by Éamon de Valera, rejected the treaty, which had divided Ireland and fell short of full independence. A brutal civil war ensued; Collins, who had assumed command of the army, was assassinated in Aug. 1922 by anti-treaty rebels. The treaty supporters emerged as victors and the Irish Free State was established in Jan. 1922. William Cosgrave became the first prime minister and his Fine Gael party led for ten years. In 1932 de Valera, leader of the Fianna Fáil party, became prime minister (taoiseach). Five years later he brought in a new constitution establishing the sovereign nation of Ireland and abolishing the oath of allegiance sworn by Irish parliamentarians to the British crown.

Independence

Ireland remained neutral in the Second World War, though in the harsh economic conditions of the time tens of thousands of people emigrated to Britain for work and many thousands joined the war effort. In 1948 Prime Minister John Costello demanded total independence from Britain and reunification with the six counties of Northern Ireland. Independence came the following year and in 1955 the Republic of Ireland was admitted to the United Nations, but nothing came of the claim to the six Ulster counties under British rule. Economic relations between the Republic and Northern Ireland improved in the 1950s and '60s, though both decades were marked by large-scale emigration from the Republic, chiefly to the United States. Trouble in the North flared up in the late '60s over Catholic demands for civil rights and equality in the allocation of housing. Confrontation between the two religious communities intensified and in 1969 British troops were deployed to keep the peace. The British military soon lost the confidence of the Catholic community, the IRA increased its activity and more violence ensued. In 1972 the Unionist government in Belfast resigned and direct rule from London was imposed.

On 1 Jan. 1973 the Republic of Ireland became a member state of the European Economic Community. Jack Lynch led Fianna Fáil into power in 1977, though over the next decade there were party splits while general elections were held against a backdrop of soaring unemployment. Emigration increased, especially among young people, reaching a peak of 44,000 in 1989 under Charles Haughey's premiership. The 1990s were marked by an economic upturn, buoyed by EU subsidies and foreign investment. The legalization of divorce in 1995 symbolized the Irish Republic's embrace of modern European values. In the north, a ceasefire between the IRA and Protestant militias in 1994 formed the basis for the signing of the Good Friday Agreement in April 1998. On 2 Dec. 1999 the Irish constitution was amended to remove the articles laying claim to Northern Ireland. Prime Minister Bertie Ahern, who came to power in the 1997 general election, took Ireland into the single European currency in Jan. 2002. In Oct. 2002 the Northern Irish Assembly was suspended for the fourth time in its history over allegations of IRA spying at the Northern Ireland Office. Direct rule from London was subsequently reimposed.

In May 2007 a devolved Northern Ireland government replaced direct rule from London. The following month Ahern won a third term in office but resigned 11 months later in the face of a personal financial scandal. In Oct. 2008 Ireland became the first western European nation to fall into recession as the global financial crisis took hold. Meanwhile, the following year a report by the Irish Child Abuse Commission criticized senior figures within the Irish Catholic Church for their handling of sexual abuse allegations.

In Nov. 2010 Ireland received an EU-IMF bailout and the government implemented a programme of austerity. In March 2011, 13 years of Fianna Fáil rule ended and Enda Kenny became prime minister. There were subsequent major social developments as limited access to abortion was legalized in July 2013 and same-sex marriage was approved in a referendum in May 2015.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

The Republic of Ireland lies in the Atlantic Ocean, separated from Great Britain by the Irish Sea to the east, and bounded in the northeast by Northern Ireland (UK). In 2011, 62.3% of the population lived in urban areas. The population at the 2011 census was 4,588,252 (2,315,553 females), giving a density of 67.0 persons per sq. km. The census population in 2011 was the highest figure since 1861 when the census recorded a population of 4.40m.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 4.69m.

The capital is Dublin (Baile Átha Cliath). Town populations, 2011: Greater Dublin, 1,110,627; Cork, 198,582; Limerick, 91,454; Galway, 76,778; Waterford, 51,519.

¹Data for births and deaths are by year of occurrence; data for marriages are by year of registration.

2012 rates (per 1,000 population): birth, 15.6; death, 6.4; marriage, 4.5. Annual population growth rate, 2005–10, 1.5%. Expectation of life at birth, 2011, 78.3 years for males and 82.8 years for females.

In 2009 the suicide rate per 100,000 population was 11.8 (men, 19.0; women, 4.7). Infant mortality in 2010, three per 1,000 live births; fertility rate (2013), 2.0 births per woman.

At a referendum on 24 Nov. 1995 on the legalization of civil divorce, 818,842 votes were in favour and 809,728 against. At a referendum on 22 May 2015 on the legalization of same-sex marriage, 1,201,607 votes were in favour and 734,300 against.

Immigration peaked at 151,100 in 2006–07. For the year ended April 2012 preliminary figures show the estimated number of immigrants to be 52,700 while emigrants totalled 87,100 in the same period (including 46,500 Irish nationals). In 2012 Ireland received 956 asylum applications, the lowest annual total since 1995.

A UNICEF report published in 2010 showed that 8.4% of children in Ireland live in relative poverty (living in a household in which disposable income—when adjusted for family size and composition—is less than 50% of the national median income).

CLIMATE

Influenced by the Gulf Stream, there is an equable climate with mild southwest winds, making temperatures almost uniform over the whole country. The coldest months are Jan. and Feb. (39–45°F, 4–7°C) and the warmest July and Aug. (57–61°F, 14–16°C).

May and June are the sunniest months, averaging 5.5 to 6.5 hours each day, but over 7 hours in the extreme southeast. Rainfall is lowest along the eastern coastal strip. The central parts vary between 30–44" (750–1,125 mm), and up to 60" (1,500 mm) may be experienced in low-lying areas in the west. Dublin, Jan. 40°F (4°C), July 59°F (15°C). Annual rainfall 30" (750 mm). Cork, Jan. 42°F (5°C), July 61°F (16°C). Annual rainfall 41" (1,025 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

Ireland is a sovereign independent, democratic republic. Its parliament exercises jurisdiction in 26 of the 32 counties of the island of Ireland. The first Constitution of the Irish Free State came into operation on 6 Dec. 1922. Certain provisions which were regarded as contrary to the national sentiments were gradually removed by successive amendments, with the result that at the end of 1936 the text differed considerably from the original document. On 14 June 1937 a new constitution was approved by Parliament and enacted by a plebiscite on 1 July 1937. This constitution came into operation on 29 Dec. 1937. Under it the name Ireland (Éire) was restored. In its original form the Irish Constitution provided that the territory of Ireland comprised the whole island, and thus included that of Northern Ireland. This position was modified by referendum in 1998 following the Good Friday Agreement of that year. The former territorial claim has now been replaced with a statement that, while it is the aspiration of the Irish nation to unite the peoples of the island and the current territory of Ireland is not final, unification shall not take place without the consent of majorities in both jurisdictions.

The head of state is the President, whose role is largely ceremonial, but who has the power to refer proposed legislation which might infringe the Constitution to the Supreme Court.

The Oireachtas or National Parliament consists of the President, a House of Representatives (Dáil Éireann) and a Senate (Seanad Éireann). The Dáil, consisting of 158 members, is elected by adult suffrage on the Single Transferable Vote system in constituencies of three, four or five members. Of the 60 members of the Senate, 11 are nominated by the Taoiseach (Prime Minister), six are elected by the universities and the remaining 43 are elected from five panels of candidates established on a vocational basis, representing the following public services and interests: (1) national language and culture, literature, art, education and such professional interests as may be defined by law for the purpose of this panel; (2) agricultural and allied interests, and fisheries; (3) labour, whether organized or unorganized; (4) industry and commerce, including banking, finance, accountancy, engineering and architecture; (5) public administration and social services, including voluntary social activities. The electing body comprises members of the Dáil, Senate, county boroughs and county councils.

A maximum period of 90 days is afforded to the Senate for the consideration or amendment of Bills sent to that House by the Dáil, but the Senate has no power to veto legislative proposals.

No amendment of the Constitution can be effected except with the approval of the people given at a referendum.

National Anthem

'Amhrán na bhFiann' ('The Soldier's Song'); words by P. Kearney, tune by P. Heeney and P. Kearney.

RECENT ELECTIONS

A general election was held on 26 Feb. 2016: Fine Gael (FG) won 50 seats with 25.5% of first preference votes (in 2011, 76 seats); Fianna Fáil (FF) 44 with 24.3% (20); Sinn Féin 23 with 13.8% (14); Labour Party (L), 7 with 6.6% (37); Anti-Austerity Alliance–People Before Profit, 6; Independents 4 Change, 4; Social Democrats, 3; Green Party, 2; ind., 19. Turnout was 65.2%.

Following elections to the Senate in April 2016, FF held 14 of the 60 seats, FG had 13, Sinn Féin had 7, L had 5, Green Party had 1 and independents held 9 seats. The 11 members nominated by the Taoiseach had not yet been appointed as at May 2016.

Presidential elections took place on 27 Oct. 2011. Michael D. Higgins (L) won 39.6% of the first preference votes, Seán Gallagher (ind.) 28.5%, Martin McGuinness (Sinn Féin) 13.7%, Gay Mitchell (FG) 6.4%, David Norris (ind.) 6.2%, Dana Rosemary Scallon (ind.) 2.9% and Mary Davis (ind.) 2.7%. Higgins won in the final count, with 61.6% of votes against 38.4% for Gallagher. Turnout was 56.1%.

European Parliament

Ireland has 11 representatives. At the May 2014 elections turnout was 51.0% (58.6% in 2009). Fine Gael won 4 seats with 22.3% of votes cast (political affiliation in European Parliament: European People's Party); Sinn Féin, 3 with 19.5% (European United Left/Nordic Green Left); Fianna Fáil, 1 with 22.3% (European Conservatives and Reformists). Three independents were elected, with 19.8% (one with Alliance of Liberals and Democrats for Europe, one with Greens/European Free Alliance and one with Progressive Alliance of Socialists and Democrats).

CURRENT GOVERNMENT

President: Michael D. Higgins (b. 1941; L), elected out of seven candidates on 27 Oct. 2011 and inaugurated 11 Nov. 2011.

In May 2016 the Fine Gael–ind. government was composed as follows:

CURRENT LEADERS

Michael D. Higgins

Position

President

Introduction

Michael Daniel Higgins took office as president on 11 Nov. 2011. Prior to his appointment he was the head of the Labour Party.

Early Life

Known popularly as Michael D., Higgins was born on 18 April 1941 in Limerick and raised in Co. Clare, in the west of Ireland. After working as a clerk he enrolled as a mature student at Galway University in 1962, where he would later lecture in sociology and politics. He undertook further studies at Manchester University in the UK and at the University of Indiana, USA.

Having twice stood unsuccessfully for election to the Dáil as a Labour Party candidate, Higgins was appointed to the Senate by Taoiseach Liam Cosgrave in 1973. He was elected to the Dáil in 1981 but lost his seat in Nov. 1982 following the collapse of the governing coalition. Known as a radical, he served as mayor of Galway from 1982–83, a position he again held from 1991–92. Re-elected to parliament in 1987, he retained his Galway West seat until opting not to stand at the 2011 election.

Having previously opposed Labour's entry into the ruling coalition, Higgins accepted the post of minister of the arts and culture in 1993. During his four years in the post he repealed the controversial Section 31, which allowed censorship over media coverage of the Troubles in Northern Ireland. He also oversaw the establishment of the Irish-language broadcaster, TG4.

Higgins was a vocal opponent of the 2003 Iraq War and has campaigned for human rights in Somalia, Chile, Nicaragua, Gaza and Cambodia. At the 2011 presidential election he defeated Seán Gallagher, a well-known entrepreneur, and Martin McGuinness, a former commander of the IRA and later deputy leader of the Northern Irish power-sharing assembly.

Career in Office

During campaigning for the largely ceremonial post, Higgins pledged to promote justice and equality as the country emerged from economic crisis. In April 2014 he made the first official state visit to Britain, including an address to the Westminster parliament, by an Irish president and in Dec. he completed a week-long visit to China.

In May 2015 the Irish Republic became the first country to legalize same-sex marriage by popular vote and in Aug. Higgins signed the enabling legislation.

Enda Kenny

Position

Prime Minister

Introduction

Enda Kenny became prime minister (Taoiseach) on 9 March 2011. He has been leader of the centrist Fine Gael since 2002 and is currently Ireland's longest-serving member of parliament. He is a former minister of state for tourism and trade.

Early Life

Kenny was born in 1951 in Castlebar, Co. Mayo. He studied at the University of Galway and St Patrick's College of Education in Dublin and then worked as a primary school teacher for a year.

His father was the Fine Gael member of parliament for Mayo West and a parliamentary secretary. Enda regularly assisted with constituency matters and on his father's death in 1975 took over the Mayo West seat after winning a by-election. Over the next decade Kenny served as a backbencher but in 1986 was appointed junior minister for education and labour in the government of Garret FitzGerald.

After Fine Gael lost the 1987 election, Kenny served on the opposition front bench. He became party chief whip in 1993 and a year later, after the collapse of Albert Reynolds' Fianna Fáil government, helped negotiate a 'rainbow coalition' with the Labour Party and the Democratic Left. He served in that government as minister for tourism and trade and chaired the European Union Council of Trade Ministers during Ireland's six-month presidency of the EU in 1996.

Fine Gael left government after the 1997 general election and Kenny ran unsuccessfully for party leader in 2001. In 2002, following the party's worst ever election performance, he was elected its new leader. In 2004 Fine Gael made significant gains at the European elections and out-pollled Fianna Fáil, the first time Fianna Fáil had come second in elections across the country since 1927. In 2006 Kenny became vice-president of the European People's Party (EPP), the centre-right grouping in the European Parliament.

Kenny led Fine Gael to a strong showing at the 2007 general election despite coming second to Fianna Fáil. In 2010 he held off a leadership challenge before overseeing victory at the 2011 general election on the back of strong anti-Fianna Fáil sentiment in light of the country's economic collapse. With 76 of a possible 166 seats, Fine Gael was the largest single party for the first time in its history and Kenny formed a coalition government with the Labour Party.

Kenny's primary challenge has been to spur a recovery in the financial system. Prior to the election he pledged to renegotiate the conditions of the €85bn. IMF-EU bailout package agreed by the previous government. In July 2011 EU leaders agreed to cut the interest rate on the rescue deal and to extend the repayment period. Ireland's fiscal position improved under the austerity regime of tax rises and spending cuts but the economy has remained vulnerable. Continuing weak growth pushed the country back into recession in 2013, although in Dec. that year Ireland was able to formally exit the EU-IMF bailout programme.

In July 2011 Kenny courted diplomatic controversy with an attack on the Vatican, which he accused of having tried to cloud the extent of sexual abuse of children by Catholic clergy in Ireland. In response, the Vatican recalled its envoy from Dublin.

In July 2013 parliament passed a controversial law allowing limited abortion rights for the first time, despite strong Catholic opposition, while in May 2015 Ireland became the first country in the world to legalize same-sex marriage in a referendum with over 60% of the electorate voting in favour.

Kenny announced a series of ministerial changes, including five new appointments to the cabinet, in July 2014 during an address to parliament in which he said that the Irish economy was entering 'a new phase of recovery'.

However, in a snap general election in Feb. 2016 Fine Gael lost substantial ground, resulting in a hung parliament. In April Fine Gael secured opposition support to form a new minority government and in May Kenny became the first Fine Gael leader to be re-elected as prime minister by parliament.

DEFENCE

The President of Ireland is the supreme commander of the Irish Defence Forces. Military command and administrative powers in relation to the Defence Forces are exercisable by the Government through and by the Minister for Defence. The Defence Acts, as amended, provides the legislative basis for the Defence Forces (Óglaigh na hÉireann). The Act and associated Defence Force Regulations set out the guiding principles under which the Defence Forces operate.

The Defence Forces comprise the Permanent Defence Force (the regular Army, the Air Corps and the Naval Service) and the Reserve Defence Force (comprising a First Line Reserve of members who have served in the Permanent Defence Force, a second-line Army Reserve and a second-line Naval Reserve).

The total strength of the Permanent Defence Force in Dec. 2011 was 9,438 (including 565 women) and the total strength of the Reserve Defence Force was 5,220. In Dec. 2011, 529 Defence Forces personnel were involved in 11 peace-support missions throughout the world.

Defence expenditure in 2013 totalled US$1,197m. (US$251 per capita), representing 0.5% of GDP.

Army

The Army strength in Dec. 2011 was 7,650 personnel with 4,995 reservists. The Army currently provides the deployable military capabilities for overseas peace support, crisis management and humanitarian operations augmented by personnel from the Air Corps and Naval Service.

Navy

The Naval Service is based at Haulbowline in Co. Cork. The strength in Dec. 2011 was 997 with 225 reservists. It operates eight offshore patrol vessels.

Air Corps

The Air Corps has its headquarters at Casement Aerodrome, Baldonnel, Co. Dublin. As the air component of the Defence Forces, the Air Corps provides air support capabilities to the other components in carrying out their roles. The Air Corps strength in Dec. 2011 was 791 personnel. The Corps operates 17 fixed-wing aircraft and ten helicopters.

INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

On 12 June 2008 Ireland became the first European Union member to reject the Treaty of Lisbon when it held a national referendum in which 53.4% of votes cast were against the reform treaty and only 46.6% in favour. Turnout was 53.1%. However, at a second referendum on 2 Oct. 2009, the treaty was approved by 67.1% to 32.9% (turnout, 59.0%). Parliamentary ratification followed on 23 Oct. 2009.

ECONOMY

Agriculture accounted for 1.4% of GDP in 2013, industry 26.1% and services 72.5%.

According to the anti-corruption organization Transparency International, Ireland ranked equal 18th in a 2015 survey of countries with the least corruption in business and government. It received 75 out of 100 in the annual index.

Overview

Ireland is a high-income OECD nation. In the decade to 2008 it experienced rapid growth fuelled by a housing and credit boom. However, the global financial crisis sent the economy into recession between 2008 and 2010 (recording a contraction of 5.7% in 2009) and again in 2012. However, by 2014 Ireland had bounced back to become the fastest-growing country in the European Union.

In Sept. 2008 the government moved to stabilize the domestic financial system with a €400bn. plan to protect all deposits, bonds and debts in six banks and building societies for two years. By Feb. 2009 the state had nationalized Anglo Irish Bank and provided emergency funding to Allied Irish Banks and the Bank of Ireland. In Nov. 2010, following widespread concerns in Europe over the Irish government's ability to service its banking sector's debts, the country accepted an €85bn. bailout from the EU, with the IMF providing €22.5bn. The government undertook a programme of austerity and tax rises to cut the budget deficit, amounting to some €25bn. (or 16% of output) between 2008 and 2013. Ireland exited the bailout programme in Dec. 2013, becoming the first eurozone country to do so. In Feb. that year the government negotiated a deal with the European Central Bank to extend the bailout period of the Anglo Irish Bank from ten to 40 years, so reducing borrowing needs by €20bn. over ten years.

GDP grew by 5.2% in 2014, driven by robust exports and a low corporation tax rate of 12.5%. Nonetheless, slow recovery in other eurozone economies and in the UK—Ireland's primary trading partners—has threatened to restrain further export-led growth. Domestic demand, however, has continued to grow through 2015 and into 2016, despite high levels of private and public debt that are significantly above the EU average. Unemployment fell from above 15% in late 2010 to below 9% in late 2015, but the country also lost almost a quarter of its young people to emigration in the period 2009–15. High levels of long-term youth unemployment present a challenge to future prospects.

Currency

On 1 Jan. 1999 the euro (EUR) became the legal currency in Ireland at the irrevocable conversion rate of 0.787564 Irish pounds to 1 euro. The euro, which consists of 100 cents, has been in circulation since 1 Jan. 2002. On the introduction of the euro there was a 'dual circulation' period before the Irish pound ceased to be legal tender on 9 Feb. 2002. Euro banknotes in circulation on 1 Jan. 2002 had a total value of €6.8bn.

Inflation rates (based on OECD statistics):

2.2%	2.7%	2.9%	3.1%	-1.7%	-1.6%	1.2%	1.9%	0.5%	0.3%

The Central Bank has the sole right of issuing legal tender notes; token coinage is issued by the Minister for Finance through the Bank. Gold reserves were 176,000 troy oz in Sept. 2009 and foreign exchange reserves US$574m. Total money supply was €83,181m. in Aug. 2009.

VAT is 23.0% (reduced rates of 13.5%, 9.0% and 4.8%).

Ireland's budget deficit in 2014 was 3.9% of GDP (2013, 5.7%; 2012, 8.0%). The required target set by the EU is a budget deficit of no more than 3%.

Performance

Real GDP growth rates (based on OECD statistics):

2005	2006	2007	2008	2009	2010	2011	2012	2013	2014
6.4%	6.3%	5.5%	-2.2%	-5.7%	0.4%	2.6%	0.1%	1.4%	5.2%

During the late 1990s Ireland had the fastest-growing economy in the European Union, with real GDP growth of 10.9% in 1997 and growth averaging 9.0% between 1995 and 1999. From a GDP per head of only 69% of the EU average in 1987, it was estimated to have risen to 148% of the EU average by 2007. Total GDP in 2014 was US$250.8bn.

Banking and Finance

In Oct. 2010 a new Central Bank of Ireland was created with a single fully-integrated structure and a unitary board—the Central Bank Commission. This replaced the boards of the Central Bank and Financial Services Authority of Ireland and the Irish Financial Services Regulatory Authority.

The Board of Directors of the Central Bank of Ireland consists of a Governor, appointed for a seven-year term by the President on the advice of the government, three ex officio directors (Director-General of Central Bank, Head of Financial Regulation and Secretary-General of Department of Finance) and between six and eight other directors, all appointed by the Minister for Finance. The Governor is Philip R. Lane. In 2009 the Bank's profit was €933.81m.; €745.47m. was paid to the Exchequer.

As at Nov. 2010, 420 credit institutions (including branches) were registered with the Central Bank.

At Sept. 2010 total assets of within-the-State offices of all credit institutions amounted to €1,312bn.

Gross external debt totalled US$2,123,300m. in June 2012.

There is a stock exchange in Dublin.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

In 2011, 6.7% of energy consumption came from renewables (wind power, solar power, hydro-electric power, tidal power, geothermal energy and biomass), compared to the European Union average of 13.0%. A target of 16% has been set by the EU for 2020.

Environment

Ireland's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2011 were the equivalent of 7.8 tonnes per capita.

Electricity

Installed capacity in 2011 was 8.8m. kW. In 2011 Ireland produced 27.7bn. kWh of electricity. Total consumption in 2011 was 28.1bn. kWh and consumption per capita 6,223 kWh.

Oil and Gas

Oil accounts for 56% of primary energy demand in Ireland while gas makes up 25% of demand. Over 0.6m. sq. km of the Irish continental shelf has been designated an exploration area for oil and gas; at the furthest point the limit of jurisdiction is 520 nautical miles from the coast. In the offshore there is a vast Continental Shelf in which a number of major basins and troughs have been identified. In March 2012 Providence Resources announced the discovery of a large oil field located 50 km off the Cork coast. Providing a flow in excess of 3,500 bbls per day, it is the first commercially viable oil field in Irish waters.

Natural gas reserves in 2010 totalled 10bn. cu. metres. Output in 2009 was 372m. cu. metres and consumption 5.1bn. cu. metres. 91% of natural gas supplies for the Irish Market are imported through the two sub-sea interconnectors connecting Ireland with

Scotland and the remaining 9% is supplied from the Kinsale Head gas field, about 50 km off the south coast of Ireland. Deliveries from the Corrib gas field, about 80 km off the west coast, began in Dec. 2015.

Natural gas transmission and distribution is currently carried out by Gas Networks Ireland, a business division of Ervia (formerly known as Bord Gáis Éireann, meaning 'Gas Board of Ireland'). The gradual liberalization of the Irish gas market, which started in July 2004, was completed in July 2007 when domestic as well as business users became free to select any licensed natural gas supplier.

Peat

The country has very little indigenous coal, but possesses large reserves of peat, the development of which is handled largely by Bord na Móna (Peat Board). The Board owns 77 ha. of peatlands, representing 7.5% of total peatlands in Ireland. With peat as a finite resource the Board is pursuing a policy of sustainability with no new bogs being brought into production. In 2011–12 the Board produced 3.6m. tonnes of milled peat for use in three milled peat electricity generating stations. 202,000 tonnes of briquettes were produced for sale to the domestic heating market. Bord na Móna also produced 1.9m. cu. metres of horticultural peat, mainly for export.

Minerals

Ireland has three zinc-lead mines, which in 2009 produced a combined total of 357,000 tonnes of zinc in concentrate and 43,000 tonnes of lead in concentrate, together with some silver (in lead). Ireland is Europe's leading zinc mine producer (36% of European output in 2009) and ranks tenth in the world for total zinc production. Gross value of metal production (lead and zinc) in Ireland in 2009 was €314m. Production of gypsum is significant (400,000 tonnes in 2009). Aggregate production in 2009 was an estimated 65m. tonnes. In June 2010, 37 companies held 514 prospecting licences; a total of €20.2m. was spent on exploration in 2009. The main target is base metals but there is also interest in gold.

Agriculture

The Central Statistics Office's Quarterly National Household Survey showed that in the quarter of March–May 2012 there were 87,100 people whose primary source of income was from agriculture, forestry and fisheries. In 2010 a total of 272,016 people worked on farms on a regular basis, working the equivalent of 168,387 full-time jobs. There were 139,860 farm holdings in Ireland, almost all of which were family farms. Average farm size was 32.7 ha. The land area of Ireland is 6.9m. ha., of which 4.6m. ha. were used for agriculture in 2011.

Agriculture, fisheries and forestry represented 2.5% of gross value added in 2010 (provisional). More than 80% of the agricultural area is devoted to pasture, hay and grass silage (3.74m. ha.), 10% to rough grazing (0.45m. ha.) and 8% to crop production (0.37m. ha.). In 2011 beef and milk production accounted for 57% of goods output at producer prices.

In 2011: barley accounted (in ha.) for 180,600; wheat, 94,200; oats, 21,400; oilseed rape, 12,400; potatoes, 10,400. Production figures in 2011 (in 1,000 tonnes) were: barley, 1,412; wheat, 669; potatoes, 420; oats, 148; oilseed rape, 28.

Goods output at producer prices including changes in stock for 2011 was estimated at €6.3bn.; operating surplus (aggregate income) was €2.4bn. Direct income payments, financed or co-financed by the EU, amounted to €1.8bn. It is estimated that net subsidies (subsidies on products plus subsidies on production less taxes on products and taxes on production) represented 76% of aggregate income. Livestock figures in 2010 were: 6,606,585 cattle; 5,078,952 sheep; 1,518,332 pigs; 11,025,441 poultry.

Forestry

Total forest area in 2010 was 0.74m. ha. (11% of total land area). Timber production in 2011 was 2.64m. cu. metres.

Fisheries

In 2012 approximately 11,100 people were engaged full- or part-time in the sea fishing industry; at the end of the same year the fishing fleet consisted of 2,217 vessels. The quantities and values of fish landed in 2009 were: wet fish, 139,960 tonnes, value €98.8m.; shellfish, molluscs and crustaceans, 19,825 tonnes, value €57.6m. Total quantity (2009): 159,785 tonnes; total value, €156.4m. The main types of fish caught in 2009 were mackerel (40,150 tonnes), horse mackerel (37,092 tonnes) and herring (15,552 tonnes). More than 98% of fish caught is from sea fishing.

INDUSTRY

The leading companies by market capitalization in Ireland in March 2015 were: Ryanair Holdings (US$16.4bn.); Bank of Ireland (US$12.3bn.); and Kerry Group, a chilled food manufacturer (US$11.8bn.).

The census of industrial production for 2011 gives the following details of the values (in €1m.) of gross and net output for the principal manufacturing industries.

	Gross output	Net output
Beverages	2,338	1,418
Wood and wood products, except furniture	601	209
Printing and reproduction of recorded media	902	638
Chemicals and chemical products	3,492	2,207

Food products, tobacco, coke and refined petroleum products, transport equipment and furniture	21,815	9,580
Basic pharmaceutical products and preparations; basic metals	38,277	30,806
Total, including others (all industries)	92,765	59,469

Labour

The total labour force in 2008 was 2,239,600, of whom 126,700 were out of work. The unemployment rate in April and May 2001 was just 3.7%, down from 17.1% in Sept. 1985. However, it rose sharply as a consequence of the global economic crisis, peaking at 15.1% in Nov. 2011 and again in Feb. 2012. It has gradually declined since then and in Dec. 2015 was 8.8%. It has now fallen to levels not seen since 2008. Of those at work in 2008, 1,246,400 were employed in the services sector, 492,000 in the industrial sector and 113,800 in the agricultural sector. Employment rose by approximately 40% between 1998 and 2008. In 2001 there were only 69,400 unemployed people, down from 226,000 in 1987, although this figure has risen steadily back up since then and in 2009 exceeded the 1987 total, with 264,600 unemployed. Ireland, along with the UK and Sweden, decided to open its labour market to nationals of the new EU member states in May 2004. Poles in particular went to Ireland following the EU expansion and by 2011 were the largest ethnic minority ahead of UK nationals; there were 122,585 Polish citizens in Ireland at the time of the 2011 census. In 2012 Ireland was one of only three OECD countries (the others being Hungary and the UK) in which the share of 15–24 year-olds who were unemployed or inactive and neither in education nor training was higher for the native rather than foreign-born population. On 1 Jan. 2016 the minimum hourly wage was raised to €9.15 from €8.65. The normal retirement age is 65 years.

Ireland is one of the most trade-dependent countries in the world. However, export levels have fallen slightly since the peak in 2002, when merchandise exports amounted to €93.7bn., generating a trade surplus of €38.0bn. (although the record trade surplus, of €43.9bn., was in 2010). In 2012 merchandise imports from other European Union countries accounted for 61.4% of total imports while merchandise exports to other EU countries accounted for 59.0% of total exports.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

At 31 Dec. 2012 there were 95,811 km of public roads, consisting of 5,515 km of National Primary Roads (including 1,187 km of motorway), 2,716 km of National Secondary Roads, 11,607 km of Regional Roads and 78,773 km of Local Roads.

Number of licensed motor vehicles at 31 Dec. 2011: private cars, 1,887,810; public service vehicles, 33,405; goods vehicles, 320,966; agricultural and industrial vehicles, 71,677; motorcycles, 36,582; other vehicles, 74,716. In 2011 a total of 186 people were killed in road accidents.

Rail

The total length of railway open for traffic in 2009 was 1,919 km (52 km electrified), all 1,600 mm gauge. A massive investment in public transport infrastructure is taking place in Ireland. The second National Development Plan that ran from Jan. 2007 to Dec. 2013 allowed for €12.9bn. to be invested in public transport, particularly in the Greater Dublin area.

Railway statistics for years ending 31 Dec.	2011	2012
Passengers (journeys)	37,400,000	36,900,000
Revenue (€1)	185,800,000	186,800,000
Operational costs (€1)	364,600,000	355,700,000

A light railway system was launched in Dublin in 2004.

Civil Aviation

Aer Lingus and Ryanair are the two major airlines operating in Ireland.

Aer Lingus was founded in 1936 as a State-owned enterprise. Its principal business is the provision of passenger and cargo services to the UK, Europe and North America with some flights to Morocco and the United Arab Emirates. It was privatized in 2006 and was bought in 2015 by International Airlines Group (IAG), the owner of British Airways. Ryanair began operations in 1985 and now operates to over 180 destinations (some seasonal only) in the UK and Europe as well as Morocco. In the year ended 31 March 2012 Ryanair carried 75.8m. passengers (all on international flights); revenue passenger-km totalled 94.3bn. Since 2007 Ryanair has been the airline carrying the highest number of international scheduled passengers. In addition to Aer Lingus and Ryanair, there are 13 other independent air transport operators.

The two busiest airports (Dublin and Cork) are operated by the Dublin Airport Authority plc; Shannon, the third busiest, used to be as well but has been a publicly owned commercial airport operated and run by the Shannon Airport Authority plc since the beginning of 2013. In 2012 Dublin handled 19.1m. passengers (an increase of 1.9% on 2011) and 111,069 tonnes of freight and mail; Cork handled 2.3m. passengers (decrease of 0.9%); Shannon handled 1.4m. passengers (decrease of 14.2%).

Shipping

In Jan. 2009 there were 32 ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 122,000 GT. Total cargo traffic passing through the country's ports amounted to 41,880,000 tonnes in 2009 (down from 51,081,000 in 2008). Dublin handled 18.6m. tonnes of cargo in 2009 and Cork 8.0m. tonnes.

Inland Waterways

The principal inland waterways open to navigation are the Shannon Navigation (270 km), which includes the Shannon-Erne Waterway (Ballinamore/Ballyconnell Canal), and the Grand Canal and Barrow Navigation (249 km). Merchandise traffic has now ceased and navigation is confined to pleasure craft operated either privately or commercially. The Royal Canal (146 km) from Dublin to Mullingar (53 km) was reopened for navigation in 1995.

Telecommunications

The Minister for Communications, Energy and Natural Resources, a member of the government, has overall policy responsibility for the development of the sector. The core policy objective is to contribute to sustained macro-economic growth and competitiveness, and ensure that Ireland is best placed to avail of the emerging opportunities provided by the information and knowledge society.

The communications sector within the department is divided into five divisions: the business and technology division, the communications development and electronic commerce division, communications policy division, knowledge society division and postal division.

Ireland's telecommunications sector has been fully liberalized with effect from 1 Dec. 1998 when the last remaining elements of Telecom Éireann's (the forerunner of today's eir) exclusive privilege were removed. All elements of the market are now open to competition from other licensed operators. The largest mobile telephone operators in terms of subscribers are Vodafone Ireland and Three Ireland.

eir—Operational Information

The dominant operator in the telecommunications sector is eir (previously Telecom Éireann and then eircom plc). Telecom Éireann was a statutory body set up under the Postal and Telecommunications Services Act, 1983. In 1996, 20% of the State's holding was sold to KPN/Telia, a Dutch-Swedish consortium, who had an option of a further 15%, which was taken up in July 1999. In 1998 the government concluded an Employee

Share Ownership Scheme under which 14.9% of the company was to be made available to employees and also held an Initial Public Offer (IPO) of shares in the company in July 1999. In Oct. 1999 the newly privatized Telecom Éireann became eircom plc. Eircom was rebranded as eir in Sept. 2015.

The level of network digitalization is 100%. In 2013 there were 4,755,000 mobile phone subscriptions (1,027.6 per 1,000 population) and 2,034,000 fixed telephone subscriptions. In 2013, 78.3% of the population aged 16–74 were internet users. The fixed broadband penetration rate stood at 21.1 subscribers per 100 inhabitants in Dec. 2010. In March 2012 there were 2.1m. Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The Constitution provides that justice shall be administered in public in Courts established by law by Judges appointed by the President on the advice of the government. The jurisdiction and organization of the Courts are dealt with in the Courts (Establishment and Constitution) Act, 1961, the Courts (Supplemental Provisions) Acts, 1961–91, and the Courts and Court Officers Acts, 1995–2002. These Courts consist of Courts of First Instance and a Court of Final Appeal, called the Supreme Court. The Courts of First Instance are the High Court with full original jurisdiction and the Circuit and the District Courts with local and limited jurisdictions. A judge may not be removed from office except for stated misbehaviour or incapacity and then only on resolutions passed by both Houses of the Oireachtas. Judges of the Supreme Court and High Court are appointed from among practising barristers or solicitors of not less than 12 years standing or by the elevation of an existing member of the judiciary. Judges of the Circuit Court are appointed from among practising barristers or solicitors of not less than ten years standing or a County Registrar who has practised as a barrister or solicitor for not less than ten years before being appointed to that post or by the elevation of a District Court Judge. Judges of the District Court are appointed from among practising barristers or solicitors of not less than ten years standing.

The Supreme Court, which consists of the Chief Justice (who is ex officio an additional judge of the High Court) and seven ordinary judges, may sit in two Divisions and has appellate jurisdiction from all decisions of the High Court. The President may, after consultation with the Council of State, refer a Bill, which has been passed by both Houses of the Oireachtas (other than a money bill and certain other bills), to the Supreme Court for a decision on the question as to whether such Bill or any provision thereof is repugnant to the Constitution.

The High Court, which consists of a President (who is ex officio an additional Judge of the Supreme Court) and 31 ordinary judges (or 32 when a High Court Judge is appointed as a Commissioner of the Law Reform Commission, as is currently the case), has full original jurisdiction in and power to determine all matters and questions, whether of law or fact, civil or criminal. In all cases in which questions arise concerning the validity of any law having regard to the provisions of the Constitution, the High Court alone exercises original jurisdiction. The High Court on Circuit acts as an appeal court from the Circuit Court.

The Court of Criminal Appeal consists of the Chief Justice or an ordinary Judge of the Supreme Court, together with either two ordinary judges of the High Court or the President and one ordinary judge of the High Court. It deals with appeals by persons convicted on indictment where the appellant obtains a certificate from the trial judge that the case is a fit one for appeal, or, in case such certificate is refused, where the court itself, on appeal from such refusal, grants leave to appeal. The decision of the Court of Criminal Appeal is final, unless that court, the Attorney-General or the Director of Public Prosecutions certifies that the decision involves a point of law of exceptional public importance, in which case an appeal is taken to the Supreme Court.

The Offences against the State Act, 1939 provides in Part V for the establishment of Special Criminal Courts. A Special Criminal Court sits without a jury. The rules of evidence that apply in proceedings before a Special Criminal Court are the same as those applicable in trials in the Central Criminal Court. A Special Criminal Court is authorized by the 1939 Act to make rules governing its own practice and procedure. An appeal against conviction or sentence by a Special Criminal Court may be taken to the Court of Criminal Appeal. On 30 May 1972 Orders were made establishing a Special Criminal Court and declaring that offences of a particular class or kind (as set out) were to be scheduled offences for the purposes of Part V of the Act, the effect of which was to give the Special Criminal Court jurisdiction to try persons charged with those offences.

The High Court exercising criminal jurisdiction is known as the Central Criminal Court. It consists of a judge or judges of the High Court, nominated by the President of the High Court. The Court tries criminal cases which are outside the jurisdiction of the Circuit Court.

The Circuit Court consists of a President (who is ex officio an additional judge of the High Court) and 33 ordinary judges. The country is divided into eight circuits. The jurisdiction of the court in civil proceedings is subject to a financial ceiling, save by consent of the parties, in which event the jurisdiction is unlimited. In criminal matters it has jurisdiction in all cases except murder, treason, piracy, rape, serious and aggravated sexual assault and allied offences. The Circuit Court acts as an appeal court from the District Court. The Circuit Court also has jurisdiction in the Family Law area such as divorce.

The District Court, which consists of a President and 54 ordinary judges, has summary jurisdiction in a large number of criminal cases where the offence is not of a serious nature. In civil matters the Court has jurisdiction in contract and tort (except slander, libel, seduction, slander of title and false imprisonment) where the claim does not exceed €6,348.69; in proceedings founded on hire-purchase and credit-sale agreements, the jurisdiction is also €6,348.69. The District Court also has jurisdiction in Family Law matters such as maintenance, custody, access and the issuing of barring orders. The District Court also has jurisdiction in a large number of licensing (intoxicating liquor) matters.

All criminal cases, except those of a minor nature, and those tried in the Special Criminal Court, are tried by a judge and a jury of 12. Generally, a verdict need not be unanimous in a case where there are not fewer than 11 jurors if ten of them agree on the verdict.

In 2009 the police force, the Garda Síochána, had a total staff of 14,547. There were 284,485 crimes recorded in 2009, of which 87 homicide offences. The National Juvenile Office received 23,952 referrals relating to 18,519 individual children during 2009. The population in penal institutions in May 2011 was 4,495 (100 per 100,000 of national population).

Education

Education is compulsory from six to 16 years of age. In 2009 public expenditure on education came to 6.5% of GDP and 13.3% of total government spending. The adult literacy rate is at least 99%.

Elementary. Elementary education is free and was given in about 3,303 national schools (including 128 special schools) in 2008–09. The total number of pupils on rolls in 2008–09 was 498,914, including pupils in special schools and classes; the number of teachers of all classes was about 31,349 in 2008–09, including remedial teachers and teachers of special classes. The total expenditure for first level education during the financial year ended 31 Dec. 2011 was €3,080.9m. The total salaries for teachers for 2009, including superannuation etc., was €2,520m.

Special. Special provision is made for children with disabilities in special schools which are recognized on the same basis as primary schools, in special classes attached to ordinary schools and in certain voluntary centres where educational services appropriate to the needs of the children are provided. Integration of children with disabilities in ordinary schools and classes is encouraged wherever possible, if necessary with special additional support. Special schools (2008–09) numbered 128 with approximately 6,653 pupils. There were also some 9,668 pupils enrolled in about 1,131 special classes within ordinary schools. There is a National Education Officer for travelling children.

Secondary. Voluntary secondary schools are under private ownership and are conducted in most cases by religious orders. These schools receive grants from the State and are open to inspection by the Department of Education. The number of recognized secondary schools during the school year 2008–09 was 388, and the number of pupils in attendance was 184,329. There were 13,448 teachers in 2007–08.

Vocational Education Committee schools provide courses of general and technical education. Pupils are prepared for State examinations and for entrance to universities and institutes of further education. The number of vocational schools during the school year 2008–09 was 253, the number of full-time students in attendance was 103,732 and the number of teachers (2007–08) 8,106. These schools are controlled by the local Vocational Education Committees; they are financed mainly by State grants and also by contributions from local rating authorities and Vocational Education Committee receipts. These schools also provide adult education facilities for their own areas.

Comprehensive and Community Schools. Comprehensive schools which are financed by the State combine academic and technical subjects in one broad curriculum so that pupils may be offered educational options suited to their needs, abilities and interests. Pupils are prepared for State examinations and for entrance to universities and institutes of further education. The number of comprehensive and community schools during the school year 2008–09 was 91 and the number of students in attendance was 53,251. These schools also provide adult education facilities for their own areas and make facilities available to voluntary organizations and to the adult community generally.

The total current expenditure from public funds for second level and further education for the financial year ended 31 Dec. 2011 was €2,995.3m.

Third Level Education. The third level education system funded by the State comprises the university sector, the technological sector and colleges of education—these are autonomous and self-governing. In addition there are a number of independent private colleges offering third level qualifications.

Ireland has a binary system of higher education, designed to ensure maximum flexibility and responsiveness to the needs of students and to the wide variety of social and economic requirements. However, within each sector, a diversity of institutions offer differing types and levels of programmes. The Universities are essentially concerned with undergraduate and postgraduate programmes, together with basic and applied research. The main work of the Institutes of Technology is in undergraduate programmes, with a smaller number of post-graduate programmes and a growing involvement in research. Numbers in third level education have expanded dramatically since the mid-1960s, from 21,000 full-time students in 1965 to 148,197 in 2008–09.

The total current expenditure from public funds on third level education during the financial year ended 31 Dec. 2011 was €1,661.7m.

There are seven universities in the Republic of Ireland. These are: NUI, Galway; NUI, Maynooth; University College Cork; University College Dublin; Trinity College, Dublin; University of Limerick; and Dublin City University. Four of the universities (NUI Galway, NUI Maynooth, UCC and UCD) are constituent universities of the National University of Ireland. The National University of Ireland also has a number of recognized colleges, including the Royal College of Surgeons in Ireland, National College of Art and Design and Shannon College of Hotel Management.

The Irish higher education university system offers degree programmes—at bachelor, master's and doctorate level—in the humanities, social sciences, scientific, technological and social sciences, and in the medical area. Typically teaching at undergraduate level is by way of a programme of lectures supplemented by tutorials and, where appropriate, practical demonstration and laboratory work. Master's degrees are usually taken by course work, research work or some combination of both. Doctoral degrees are awarded on the basis of research. Institutions award their own degrees using external examiners to ensure consistency of standards. The institutions also have continuing and some distance education programmes and also engage in research work.

There are 14 Institutes of Technology. They are Dublin Institute of Technology, Athlone IT, IT Blanchardstown, Cork IT, IT Carlow, Dundalk IT, Dun Laoghaire Institute of Art, Design and Technology, Letterkenny IT, Galway-Mayo IT, Limerick IT, IT Sligo, IT Tallaght, IT Tralee and Waterford IT.

HETAC (the Higher Education and Training Awards Council) was established on 11 June 2001, under the Qualifications (Education and Training) Act 1999. It is the successor to the National Council for Educational Awards (NCEA) and is the qualifications awarding body for third level education and training institutions outside the university sector. The Qualifications (Education and Training) Act 1999 extended autonomy to allow Institutes of Technology to apply to HETAC for delegation of authority to make their own awards. Delegation of authority also allows institutes to validate their own programmes subject to the policies and criteria determined by HETAC and within the parameters of the National Framework of Qualifications.

Initial teacher education is provided by the Colleges of Education (primary teacher education) and the Universities (post-primary teacher education).

Health

Health boards are responsible for administering health services in Ireland. There are currently ten health boards established: three area health boards located in the eastern region under the guidance of the Eastern Regional Health Authority (ERHA) and seven regional health boards covering the rest of the country. Each health board is responsible for the provision of health and social services in its area. The boards provide many of the services directly and they arrange for the provision of other services by health professionals, private health service providers, voluntary hospitals and voluntary/community organizations.

A health service reform programme is currently being implemented which will result in the most significant structural changes in the Irish health services in recent decades. The existing health boards will be replaced by a single Health Service Executive (HSE) with four regional administrative areas. A Health Information and Quality Authority (HIQA) will also be established.

Everybody ordinarily resident in Ireland has either full or limited eligibility for the public health services.

A person who satisfies the criteria of a means test receives a medical card, which confers Category 1 or full eligibility on them and their dependants. This entitles the holder to the full range of public health and hospital services, free of charge, i.e. family doctor, drugs and medicines, hospital and specialist services as well as dental, aural and optical services. Maternity care and infant welfare services are also provided.

The remainder of the population has Category 2 or limited eligibility. Category 2 patients receive public consultant and public hospital services subject to certain charges. Persons in Category 2 are liable for a hospital in-patient charge of €75 per night up to a maximum of €750 in any 12 consecutive months. Persons in Category 2 are liable for a charge of €100 if they attend the Accident and Emergency Department of a hospital or receive out-patient services without a letter from a General Practitioner.

The Long Term Illness Scheme entitles persons to free drugs and medicines, which are prescribed in respect of 15 specific illnesses. The needs of individuals with significant or ongoing medical expenses are met by a range of other schemes, which provide assistance towards the cost of prescribed drugs and medicines. The Drug Payment Scheme was introduced on 1 July 1999 and replaced the Drug Cost Subsidisation Scheme (DCSS) and the Drug Refund Scheme (DRS). Under this scheme no individual or family will have to pay more than €144 in any calendar month for approved prescribed drugs, medicines and appliances for use by the person or his/her family in that month.

Services for People with Disabilities: The Department of Health and Children provides, through the health boards and the Eastern Regional Health Authority, a wide range of services for people with disabilities. These include day care, home support, therapy services, training, employment, sheltered work and residential respite care. The following allowances and grants for eligible people with disabilities come under the aegis of the Department of Health and Children and are administered by the health boards and the Eastern Regional Health Authority:

Disability Allowance—payable to persons who have an injury, disease, illness or disability that substantially restricts their capacity to work. The full rate of €188.00 per week has, since Jan. 2007, also been made available to long-term residents in institutions.

Blind Welfare Allowance—provides supplementary financial support to unemployed blind persons who are not maintained in an institution and who are in receipt of a Department of Social, Community and Family Affairs payment, such as Disability Allowance, Blind Pension or Old Age Pension.

Rehabilitative Training Bonus—payable to persons who are attending approved rehabilitative training programmes. The payment of €31.80 replaced the Disabled Persons Rehabilitation Allowance (DPRA) from 1 Aug. 2001.

Domiciliary Care Allowance (DCA)—provides home care for severely disabled or mentally handicapped children up to the age of 16. The maximum rate of DCA is €309.50 per month.

Carer's Support Grant—an annual payment of €1,700 (per person cared for) to help carers obtain respite care.

Health Contributions—A health contribution of 2% of income is payable by those with Category 2 eligibility. Employers meet the levy in respect of those employees who have a medical card.

In 2011 there were 51 publicly funded acute hospitals in operation. The average number of in-patient beds available for use over the year was 10,849. Average length of stay for in-patients was 5.7 days. There were 104,392 whole-time equivalent numbers employed in health board/regional authority and voluntary/joint board hospitals and homes for the mentally handicapped at 31 Dec. 2011. Of these 8,331 were medical/dental staff, 16,217 were health and social care professionals and 35,902 were nursing staff. In 2011 Ireland spent 8.0% of its GDP on health.

Welfare

The Department of Social Protection is responsible for the day-to-day administration and delivery of social welfare schemes and services through a network of local, regional and decentralized offices. The Department's local delivery of services is structured on a regional basis. There are a total of seven regions, with offices in Waterford, Cork, Galway, Longford, Sligo and two in the Dublin area.

There are, in addition, three statutory agencies under the aegis of the Department:

—the Pensions Board, which has the function of promoting the security of occupational pensions, their development and the general issue of pensions coverage.

—the Citizens Information Board, which has the function of ensuring that all citizens have easy access to the highest quality of information, advice and advocacy on social services.

—Office of the Pensions Ombudsman, which investigates and decides complaints and disputes involving occupational pension schemes and Personal Retirement Savings Accounts (PRSAs). The Ombudsman is independent of the Minister and the Department in the performance of his functions.

A programme of significant reform has taken place in the Department including developments such as: the transfer of the General Register Office to the Department of Social Protection in Jan. 2008; the transfer of the Community Welfare Service from the Health Service Executive to the Department in Oct. 2011; and the integration of FÁS Employment and Community Employment Services into the operations of the Department of Social Protection in Jan. 2012.

The following schemes and services have also transferred to the Department of Social Protection: the Rural Social Scheme; the Community Services Programme; Domiciliary Care Allowance; and the Redundancy and Insolvency Scheme.

In 2010 social welfare expenditure accounted for 13.5% of GDP.

Social Welfare Schemes. The social welfare supports can be divided into three categories:

—Social Insurance (Contributory) payments made on the basis of a Pay Related Social Insurance (PRSI) record. Such payments are funded by employers, employees and the self-employed. Any deficit in the fund is met by Exchequer subvention.

—Social Assistance (Non Contributory) payments made on the basis of satisfying a means test. These payments are financed entirely by the Exchequer.

—Universal payments such as Child Benefit or Free Travel, which do not depend on PRSI or a means test.

State Pension (Contributory). The State Pension (Contributory) is available to those aged 66 who have social insurance coverage beginning before 56 years of age.

People who reached pension age before 6 April 2002 must have 156 qualifying paid contributions (a total of three years although they do not have to be consecutive). This means that to be eligible people must have actually paid full-rate contributions.

People who reached pension age on or after 6 April 2002 but before 6 April 2012 need to have 260 paid contributions (effectively five years contributions although they need not be consecutive). However, anyone who paid voluntary contributions on or before 6 April 1997 only needs to have 156 paid contributions providing they have a yearly average of at least 20 contributions.

People who reach (or reached) pension age on or after 6 April 2012 will need to have 520 paid contributions (ten years paid contributions). In this case, not more than 260 of the 520 contributions may be voluntary contributions. However, anyone who paid voluntary contributions on or before 6 April 1997 and has a yearly average of ten contributions may also meet the requirements. They will need to have a total of 520 contributions, but only 156 need to be compulsory paid contributions.

There is also a means-tested non-contributory pension available to citizens aged 66 or older with limited means.

The Social Welfare and Pensions Act 2011 made a number of changes to the qualifying age for state pensions. The qualifying age rose to 66 from 1 Jan. 2014, and will rise to 67 in 2021 and 68 in 2028. For recipients born on or after 1 Jan. 1948 the minimum qualifying state pension age is 66; for recipients born on or after 1 Jan. 1955 the minimum qualifying state pension age is 67; for recipients born on or after 1 Jan. 1961 the minimum qualifying state pension age is 68.

The Social Welfare Appeals Office (SWAO) is an independent office responsible for determining appeals against decisions on social welfare entitlements.

RELIGION

According to the census of population taken in 2011 the principal religious professions were as follows:

	Leinster	Munster	Connacht	Ulster (part of)	Total
Roman Catholics	2,047,241	1,087,159	474,661	252,274	3,861,335

Eamon Martin (b. 1961) is the Archbishop of Armagh and Primate of All Ireland. In Feb. 2016 there were two cardinals.

The Church of Ireland did not divide when Ireland was partitioned in the 1920s. Around 35% of its members live in the Republic of Ireland with 65% in Northern Ireland.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

There are two UNESCO sites in Ireland: Archaeological Ensemble of the Bend of the Boyne (inscribed in 1993), the three principal sites of the Brúna Bóinne Complex, a major centre of prehistoric megalithic art; Skellig Michael (1996), a monastic complex on a craggy island from the 7th century.

Press

In 2014 there were nine dailies and seven Sunday newspapers (all in English) with a combined circulation of 1,202,000. There were 60 newspaper online editions in 2014.

Tourism

Total number of overseas tourists in 2008 was 7,839,000 (a 2.2% fall from 2007). In 2008 earnings from all visits to Ireland, including cross-border visits, amounted to €4,781m. 49% of visits in 2008 were from Great Britain. Irish residents made 7,877,000 visits abroad in 2008 (a 2.1% increase on 2007).

Festivals

Ireland's national holiday, St Patrick's Day (17 March), is celebrated annually. Among the most popular festivals are Clonmel Junction arts festival (July), Galway Arts Festival (July), Ballyshannon Folk and Traditional Festival in Co. Donegal (July–Aug.), Fleadh Cheoil na hEireann (national festival of music) in Co. Cavan (Aug.), Dublin Theatre Festival and Dublin Fringe Festival (Sept.–Oct.), Wexford Opera Festival (Oct.) and Cork Jazz Festival (Oct.).

Egyptian control was re-established with the reunification of Egypt in the 16th century. Thutmose III (1479–1425 BC), campaigning against the Mitanni Kingdom in Syria, defeated a Canaanite coalition at the Battle of Megiddo, subjugating Canaan and deporting thousands to Egypt. Egyptian power was challenged by the Hittites of Anatolia until Ramesses II concluded a peace treaty (the first recorded in the world) with the Hittite King Hattusilis III in 1258 BC, setting the border in northern Canaan.

The Israelite (or Hebrew) group occupied the hills of southern Canaan by the late 13th century. Around 1200 BC the Eastern Mediterranean littoral was attacked by the 'Sea Peoples' (probably including the Philistines), who destroyed coastal cities and settled on the coastal plain. The Israelite kingdom was formed from tribes supposedly returned from captivity in Egypt. In the late 11th century, Saul became king but it was his successor, David, who greatly expanded the Israelite state over most of southern Canaan. With Hittite and Egyptian power at low ebb, David conquered the trans-Jordanian states of Ammon, Edom and Moab, subjected Aram (lower Syria) to vassalage and made Jerusalem his capital. After the reign of Solomon (mid-10th century), who built the Temple of Jerusalem, the kingdom split into two: Judah in the south and the more populous Israel, centred on Samaria, in the north.

Having refused to pay tribute, Israel was conquered by Assyria's Sargon II in 722 BC and many of its people were deported; subsequent inhabitants of the Assyrian province of 'Samerina' became known as Samaritans, a mixed race of Israelites and immigrants from Mesopotamia and Persia. Sargon also besieged Jerusalem but was distracted by a Babylonian uprising. The resurgent Babylonians conquered Judah in 586 BC, having destroyed Philistia in 605 to clear access to Egypt. Nebuchadnezzar II had taken Jerusalem the previous year, deporting much of the Judaeans (Jewish) nobility to Babylon. Having conquered Babylon in 539 BC, Cyrus II of Persia allowed the return of the Jews to Jerusalem, as Persian vassals, and the rebuilding of the Temple. Persia's defeat by Alexander the Great of Macedon brought the region, by then known as Palestine (derived from Philistia), under Hellenistic control. The Hellenistic period saw an influx of Arab groups, including the Nabataeans, who replaced the Edomites south of the Dead Sea.

Roman Rule

A revolt against the religious intolerance of the Seleucid King Antiochus IV began in 167 BC, led by Judas Maccabaeus, who established the Hasmonean Dynasty in Judaea. Relations with the Samaritans, who also followed the Torah (the first five books of the Hebrew bible), deteriorated when the Hasmonean King John Hyrcanus destroyed the Samaritan Temple at Mount Gerizim in 128 BC. The entire region was conquered for Rome by Pompey in 67 BC; Judaea, including Samaria, was administered as a client kingdom. After the Parthian invasion of Judaea in 40 BC, an Idumaean, Herod, was installed by Rome as king of Judaea. On Herod's death in 4 BC, the kingdom was split amongst three of his sons, who ruled as tetrarchs. Herod's grandson, Herod Agrippa, was granted a reunited Judaea by Emperor Claudius in AD 41, as a reward for supporting Claudius' claim to the imperial throne. However, Herod Agrippa was assassinated in AD 44 and Judaea placed under a Roman procurator. Jewish resentment against loss of autonomy grew until the Great Jewish Revolt (AD 66–73), which was brutally suppressed. Jerusalem was destroyed and hundreds of thousands were massacred or sold into slavery.

Jewish rebellions across the East in 115 (the Kitos War) were quickly suppressed. Emperor Hadrian's attempts to enforce cultural uniformity across the Empire included rebuilding

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

A settled agricultural community by 6000 BC, the oasis of Jericho is possibly the world's oldest continuously inhabited settlement. Canaan—probably derived from 'Land of Purple', from the purple sea snail dye—described the Eastern Mediterranean coast and hinterland from the 3rd millennium BC. As part of the Fertile Crescent, it became an important caravan route between Egypt and Mesopotamia. 'Canaanite' has come to be associated with the Semitic group of languages and peoples of the pre-Classical Levant.

In the reign of Pharaoh Pepi I (c. 2313–2279 BC), Canaan was invaded five times by Egyptian forces. Egyptian authority collapsed in the 17th century, marking the end of the Middle Kingdom.

Jerusalem as Aelia Capitolina and forbidding Jewish custom. Simon Bar Kokhba, supported by the Sanhedrin (Jewish sages), led a major revolt in AD 132 and established a Jewish government in Jerusalem. However, Roman armies prevailed in 135, with the death of around half a million Jews. Hadrian reacted to the rebellion by suppressing Judaism, banning Jews from Aelia Capitolina, deporting large numbers as slaves and renaming the province Syria Palaestina; the province was split in three around 390.

Christianity

Under the Christian Byzantine Empire, Palestine became a centre of Christianity (Jerusalem was recognized as a patriarchate in 451), bringing pilgrims and prosperity. It also received lavish imperial patronage, such as Constantine's Church of the Holy Sepulchre (c. 326). The Samaritans made a bid for independence in 529 but were crushed by Justinian I and the Ghassanid Arabs. Persecuted by Christians, Jews and later by Muslims, Samaritan numbers dwindled over the following centuries. Byzantine administration of Palestine ended temporarily during the Persian occupation of 614–28; Jerusalem was sacked, its churches burned and the city turned over to the Jews. A spectacular campaign in 628, led by Emperor Heraclius, forced the Persians to cede Palestine and Syria. However, Byzantine rule ended permanently after the Arabs conquered the region; Jerusalem was taken in 638.

The Arabs retained the existing system of administration in the provinces of Jund Filastine (the south) and Jund Urdunn (the north). Taxes and restrictions on religious practice and office-holding imposed on non-Muslims caused large-scale conversions. The Umayyad caliphs moved the capital to Damascus and built the Dome of the Rock on the site of the Jewish Temple in Jerusalem in the 690s. The Christian and Jewish communities of Palestine were partly administered by their own religious leaders. Under the Umayyads' successors, the Abbasids, the capital moved to Baghdad in 762, drawing Asian trade away from Palestine. Fragmentation of the Caliphate in the 9th century saw Egyptian independence under the Tulunids, who seized Palestine and Syria in 878. Although Palestine was retaken in 906 by the Caliphate, in 935 it again fell to Egypt, this time under the Ikhshid Dynasty and, in 970, to its successors, the Fatimids.

Crusades

1070 saw the arrival of the Seljuk Turks, who rapidly overran the Byzantine East. Seljuk restrictions on Christian pilgrimage led to the European Crusader invasions of Palestine and Syria in the 12th century. Having been wrested from the Seljuks by the Fatimids in 1098, Jerusalem was taken the following year by a Crusader army, which massacred the population. Baldwin, count of Edessa, became king of Jerusalem in 1100. Responding to Crusader threats to Mecca (Makkah), Saladin (Salah ad-Din), the Kurdish sultan of Egypt, recaptured Jerusalem in 1187, bringing Palestine under the Ayyubid Dynasty. A treaty in 1192 with Richard I of England allowed Christian pilgrimage to Jerusalem and secured the rump Crusader state along the coast. A treaty of 1229 gave much of Palestine (the Kingdom of Jerusalem) to the Holy Roman Emperor, Frederick II, though Jerusalem was destroyed by Central Asian Khwarezmians in 1244, on behalf of the Ayyubids. The fall of Acre (Akko) to the Mamluks, rulers of Egypt, in 1291 ended Crusader rule in the Holy Land.

Under Mamluk suzerainty, Palestine was administered by Muslim emirates. Economic decline was exacerbated by the arrival of the Black Death in 1351. Although the Mamluk sultanate successfully held off Mongol invasions, Palestine fell to the Ottomans in 1516, bringing it (as part of the Damascus-Syria province) and most of the Islamic world under the rule of Turkish Istanbul. Suleyman the Magnificent rebuilt Jerusalem's walls in 1537.

Zionism

Palestine was briefly invaded in 1799 by Napoleon Bonaparte of France, who had occupied Egypt. Muhammad Ali, the renegade Ottoman viceroy of Egypt, invaded Palestine and Syria in 1831, defeating the Ottoman army. However, British intervention at Beirut, on behalf of the sultan, forced the viceroy's withdrawal to Egypt. Jews from central and eastern Europe arrived in Palestine from the 1880s as part of a nascent Zionist movement. In 1897 the first Zionist Congress met in Basle, Switzerland. Attempts were made in vain to gain the approval of Sultan Abdul Hamid II for Jewish settlement. However, by 1914, about 85,000 Jews were living in Palestine, many on agricultural collectives (kibbutz), in part funded by Western Europe's Jewry. Tel Aviv (originally called Ahuzat Bayit 'homestead') was founded by Jews in 1909 as a dormitory settlement for workers in Jaffa.

Britain, France and Russia declared war on the Ottoman Empire in Nov. 1914, in retaliation for its co-operation with Germany. Having repelled Ottoman attacks on the Suez Canal, British forces invaded Ottoman Palestine, seizing Rafah in Jan. 1917. Two abortive attacks on Gaza were followed by British-led success at Beersheba in Oct. 1917, leading to the fall of Gaza in Nov. and Jerusalem in Dec. The British won a major victory at Megiddo in Sept. 1918, effectively ending Ottoman rule in Palestine. The British were granted Palestine and Transjordan as mandates under the League of Nations, established in 1919 at the Versailles Peace Conference.

Britain supported a 'national home' for the Jews in Palestine, as laid out in the Balfour Declaration of 1917. Jewish immigration, though limited by the British authorities, increased in the 1920s. Land ownership disputes aggravated Jewish-Arab relations, leading to paramilitary communal attacks. While Transjordan was granted independence in 1928, proposals for an Arab-Jewish partition in Palestine were rejected. In 1936 an Arab strike degenerated into insurrection—the 'Great Uprising' or 'Great Revolt'—under the leadership of Amin al-Husayni, the Grand Mufti of Jerusalem. The revolt was suppressed by the British by 1939, aided informally by the Jewish paramilitary Haganah. Al-Husayni fled to Germany, where he declared jihād on the Allies during the Second World War. The Italian air force bombed Haifa and Tel Aviv in 1940. Some Jewish groups, such as the Lehi, fought the British during the war on account of the British ban on Jewish immigration to Palestine.

Arab Israeli Wars

In 1947 the United Nations intervened, recommending partition of Palestine and an international administration for Jerusalem. The plan was accepted by the Jewish Agency (not representative of all Jewish groups) but rejected by the Palestinian Arab leadership; inter-communal war followed. On 14 May 1948 the British Government terminated its mandate and the Jewish leaders proclaimed the State of Israel. No independent Arab state was established in Palestine. Instead the neighbouring Arab states invaded Israel on 15 May 1948. The Jewish state defended itself successfully, and the ceasefire in Jan. 1949 left Israel with one-third more land than had been originally assigned by the UN.

In 1956 Israel was subject to international criticism for its involvement in the Suez Crisis. When Egypt nationalized the Suez Canal, France and the UK resorted to military action. Under the premiership of David Ben-Gurion, Israel joined forces with the European powers and agreed to lead an initial attack on the Egyptian-controlled Gaza Strip and the Sinai Peninsula. The plan was that the UK and France would offer to intervene in the conflict and reoccupy the areas. Nasser's expected refusal of the offer would be the pretext for an invasion that would reclaim the Canal. The Israeli incursions began in late Oct. 1956 but amid widespread international condemnation, most damagingly from the USA, the three nations were forced into a humiliating withdrawal by Dec. Nasser promoted the affair as a victory for pan-Arabism.

In 1967, following some years of uneasy peace, local clashes on the Israeli–Syrian border were followed by Egyptian mass concentration of forces on the borders of Israel. Israel struck out at Egypt on land and in the air on 5–9 June 1967. Jordan joined in the conflict which spread to the Syrian borders. By 11 June the Israelis had occupied the Gaza Strip and the Sinai peninsula as far as the Suez Canal in Egypt, West Jordan as far as the Jordan valley and the heights east of the Sea of Galilee, including the Syrian city of Quneitra, which was destroyed during the conflict.

A further war broke out on 6 Oct. 1973 when Egyptian and Syrian offensives were launched. Following UN Security Council resolutions a ceasefire came into force on 24 Oct. In Sept. 1978 Egypt and Israel agreed on frameworks for peace in the Middle East. A treaty was signed in Washington on 26 March 1979 whereby Israel withdrew from the Sinai Desert in two phases; part one was achieved on 26 Jan. 1980 and the final withdrawal was completed on 26 April 1982.

In June 1982 Israeli forces invaded Lebanon. On 16 Feb. 1985 the Israeli forces started a withdrawal, leaving behind an Israeli trained and equipped Christian Lebanese force to act as a buffer against Muslim Shia or Palestinian guerrilla attacks.

Peace Process

In 1993, following declarations by Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin recognizing the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) as representative of the Palestinian people, and by Yasser Arafat, leader of the PLO, renouncing terrorism and recognizing the State of Israel, an agreement was signed in Washington providing for limited Palestinian self-rule in the Gaza Strip and Jericho. The treaty marked the end of six years of violent opposition to the Israeli occupation in what is known as the first intifada, during which over 2,000 Palestinians and 150 Israelis were killed. Negotiations on the permanent status of the West Bank and Gaza began in 1996. On 4 Nov. 1995 Yitzhak Rabin was assassinated by a Jewish religious extremist. In the subsequent election, a right-wing coalition led by Binyamin Netanyahu took office. Peace talks with the Palestinians then stalled. In Oct. 1998 Israel accepted partial withdrawal from the West Bank on condition that the Palestinians cracked down on terrorism. The following month, 2% of the West Bank was handed over to Palestinian control. Further moves were put on hold after the collapse of the Netanyahu coalition and the announcement of early elections.

In Sept. 1999 Ehud Barak provided the first evidence that the Middle East peace process was back on track by releasing nearly 200 Palestinian prisoners and by handing over 430 sq. km of land on the West Bank. In May 2000 Israel completed its withdrawal from south Lebanon, 22 years after the first invasion. By Oct. 2000 violence had broken out again between Israelis and Palestinians, fuelled by the conflict over control of Jerusalem, with terrorist acts a daily occurrence, leading to heavy casualties on both sides. This second intifada ended in 2005. With peace talks stalled once again, Barak called for a nationwide vote of confidence by putting himself up for re-election as prime minister. Defeated by the right-wing Ariel Sharon in Feb. 2001, he retired from politics. As violence escalated, in Dec. 2001 Israel ended all contact with Yasser Arafat, besieging his compound at Ramallah and putting him under virtual house arrest. Israeli incursions into Palestinian-controlled areas of the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, and suicide attacks by Palestinians, continued unabated in early 2002 with heavy loss of life. In June 2002 Israel began constructing a barrier to cut off the West Bank, with the aim of shielding the country from suicide bombers. Arafat died on 11 Nov. 2004 and was succeeded by Mahmoud Abbas in Jan. 2005. In Feb. 2005 Israeli prime minister Ariel Sharon and Mahmoud Abbas agreed to a 'cessation of hostilities' between the two peoples, a move which encouraged hopes of a resumption of the peace process. In Aug. 2005 Israeli troops and police evicted the 8,500 Jewish settlers from the Gaza Strip in accordance with an agreement between Israel and the Palestinians. This was the first time Israel had withdrawn from Palestinian land captured in the 1967 war.

In July 2006, after Hizbollah forces in Lebanon had captured two Israeli soldiers, Israel launched a large-scale military campaign against Lebanon with a series of bombing raids, destroying large parts of the civilian infrastructure.

In Dec. 2008 Israel began a military assault on Gaza aimed at destroying Hamas strongholds responsible for rocket and mortar attacks on Israeli targets. Three weeks of air and ground operations resulted in many Palestinian civilian deaths and the destruction of much of Gaza's civilian infrastructure. Israel's action was widely criticized, particularly after the bombardment of the UN's relief and works headquarters. The UN Security Council called for an immediate ceasefire, with all members voting in favour of the motion bar the USA.

In Feb. 2009 Binyamin Netanyahu returned as prime minister after a ten-year gap, following elections in which Likud and other right-wing parties prevailed. In May the following year relations with Turkey were strained when Israeli personnel killed nine Turkish pro-Palestinian activists aboard ships carrying aid supplies attempting to break the blockade of Gaza. In Oct. 2011 a high-profile prisoner exchange saw Hamas release one captured Israeli soldier in return for over 1,000 Palestinian prisoners.

Israeli troops clashed with Syrian forces in May 2013 as Syria's civil war encroached on the Golan Heights. Israel also launched air and land strikes against targets in Gaza in July and Aug. of 2014 after an upsurge in attacks by militant Palestinian groups. Following inconclusive parliamentary elections in March 2015, Netanyahu formed a new Likud-led coalition of right-wing parties in May.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

The area of Israel, including the Golan Heights (1,154 sq. km) and East Jerusalem, is 22,072 sq. km (8,522 sq. miles), of which 21,643 sq. km (8,357 sq. miles) are land. The population in Dec. 2011 was 7.84m. (5.91m. Jews, 1.61m. Arabs—a fifth of the population—and 0.32m. others), including East Jerusalem, the Golan Heights and Israeli settlers in the West Bank but excluding 200,000 foreign workers. Population density, 362 per sq. km.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 8.06m.

In 2011, 91.9% of the population lived in urban areas.

Jewish population by place of origin as of 2011: former USSR, 644,900; Morocco, 151,300; North America and Oceania, 93,900; Romania, 86,200; Ethiopia, 74,000; Iraq, 61,200; Poland, 49,500; Iran, 48,700.

The Jewish Agency, which, in accordance with Article IV of the Palestine Mandate, played a leading role in establishing the State of Israel, continues to organize immigration.

Israel is administratively divided into six districts:

District	Area (sq. km)	Population, 2011	Chief town
Northern	4,473	1,304,600	Nazareth
Haifa	866	926,700	Haifa
Central	1,294	1,894,400	Ramia

Jerusalem ¹	653	968,800	Jerusalem
Southern	14,185	1,121,600	Beersheba

¹Includes East Jerusalem.

A further 325,500 people lived in Judaea and Samara (roughly corresponding to the West Bank) in 2011.

On 23 Jan. 1950 the Knesset proclaimed Jerusalem the capital of the State and on 14 Dec. 1981 extended Israeli law into the Golan Heights. Population of the main towns (Dec. 2011): Jerusalem, 804,400; Tel Aviv/Jaffa, 404,800; Haifa, 270,300; Rishon le-Ziyyon, 232,400; Ashdod, 212,300; Petach Tikva, 210,400.

The official languages are Hebrew and Arabic.

CLIMATE

From April to Oct., the summers are long and hot, and almost rainless. From Nov. to March, the weather is generally mild, though colder in hilly areas, and this is the wet season. Jerusalem, Jan. 12.8°C, July 28.9°C. Annual rainfall, 657 mm. Tel Aviv, Jan. 17.2°C, July 30.2°C. Annual rainfall, 803 mm.

Israel is an independent sovereign republic, established by proclamation on 14 May 1948.

Israel does not have a written constitution. In 1950 the Knesset (Parliament), which in 1949 had passed the Transition Law dealing in general terms with the powers of the Knesset, President and Cabinet, resolved to enact from time to time basic laws, which eventually, taken together, would form the constitution. The 12 fundamental laws that have been passed are: the Knesset (1958), Israel Lands (1960), the President (1964), the State Economy (1975), the Army (1976), Jerusalem, capital of Israel (1980), the Judicature (1984), the State Comptroller (1988), Human Dignity and Liberty (1992), Freedom of Occupation (1994), the Government (2001) and Referendum (2014).

The President (head of state) is elected by the Knesset by secret ballot by a simple majority; his term of office is seven years. He may only serve for one term.

The Knesset, a one-chamber Parliament, consists of 120 members. It is elected for a four-year term by secret ballot and universal direct suffrage. Under the system of election introduced in 1996, electors vote once for a party and once for a candidate for Prime Minister. To be elected Prime Minister, a candidate must gain more than half the votes cast, and be elected to the Knesset. If there are more than two candidates and none gain half the vote, a second round is held 15 days later. The Prime Minister forms a cabinet (no fewer than eight members and no more than 18) with the approval of the Knesset.

Binyamin Netanyahu

Position

Prime Minister

Introduction

Following the general election of 10 Feb. 2009, right-wing Likud party leader Binyamin Netanyahu, who had previously been premier from 1996–99, formed a broad but politically volatile coalition government consisting of centre-right, centre-left and far-right parties. The next election was held in Jan. 2013 amid a continuing stalemate over the status of the Palestinians, further controversial Israeli settlement building in occupied territories, concerns over the nuclear capability of Iran and civil war in neighbouring Syria. The poll resulted in an alliance of the Likud and Yisrael Beiteinu parties, headed by Netanyahu, becoming the largest parliamentary grouping and heading a broad coalition from March that year with the centrist Yesh Atid, the far-right Jewish Home and the liberal Hatnuah party. Following the break-up of the coalition in Dec. 2014 and early elections in March 2015, Netanyahu remained the dominant political figure and in May 2015 succeeded in forming a new five-party coalition administration but with only a one-seat majority.

Early Life

Binyamin Netanyahu was born on 21 Oct. 1949 in Tel Aviv. After military service, he studied in the USA at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and Harvard. Having worked in business consultancy, he then joined the Israeli diplomatic service in Washington, D.C. in 1982 and served as Israel's ambassador to the UN from 1984–88.

In 1988 Netanyahu was elected to the Knesset for Likud and named deputy foreign minister. From 1991–92 he served as deputy minister in the Prime Minister's Office before succeeding Yitzhak Shamir in 1993 as Likud chairman and leader of the opposition. Sceptical of the Sept. 1993 Oslo Accords, Netanyahu oversaw a slim victory at the elections of May 1996. However, he was defeated in 1999 by Labour's Ehud Barak and subsequently lost the Likud leadership to Ariel Sharon.

Netanyahu returned to politics in 2002 as foreign minister and in 2003 took the finance portfolio in Sharon's cabinet. In Aug. 2005 he resigned over the Gaza disengagement plan, but in Dec. he regained the Likud leadership and became opposition leader following the Kadima party's victory in the 2006 elections.

At the Feb. 2009 elections Netanyahu's Likud and its right-wing coalition partners won the majority of the vote.

Career in Office

Netanyahu's primary challenges on taking office were the economic downturn, the continuing crisis with the Palestinians and concerns over Iran's nuclear ambitions.

In June 2009 he expressed for the first time his acceptance of a two-state solution for Israel and Palestine, provided that the Palestinian state was demilitarized and recognized Israel as the state of the Jewish people. However, substantive progress in the peace process remained elusive, particularly over the divisive issue of Jewish settlement building in the West Bank and East Jerusalem, which has undermined all attempts at meaningful dialogue.

Tensions were heightened in 2011 as Palestinian President Abbas confirmed in Sept. that he was applying for formal United Nations recognition of Palestinian independent statehood in defiance of Israel and the USA. In Nov. 2012 the UN General Assembly voted overwhelmingly to recognize Palestine's enhanced status as a non-member observer state, in response to which the Netanyahu government announced that Israel would extend Jewish settlement-building in the West Bank. The US government sought to revive peace negotiations but in April 2014, following a reconciliation between the rival Hamas and Fatah Palestinian factions holding sway in Gaza and the West Bank respectively, Netanyahu suspended further talks. In July and Aug. that year, a major military confrontation between Israel and Hamas erupted as Israeli forces launched air and ground assaults on Gaza in response to Hamas rocket attacks on Israeli border settlements. The conflict resulted in over 2,000 civilian deaths in Gaza before an Egyptian-brokered ceasefire. Tensions festered through the rest of the year, fuelled by a rash of small-scale Palestinian attacks on Israeli targets and also controversial legislation in Nov. by the Netanyahu government officially defining Israel as the nation state of the Jewish people. Several European countries were meanwhile edging towards recognition of Palestinian statehood and considering sanctions against continued Israeli settlement building. In Sept. 2015 Israeli–Palestinian tensions were again fuelled as the Palestinian president declared himself no longer bound by past peace agreements with Israel during a speech to the UN General Assembly. There followed a spate of shooting and stabbing attacks in Oct. and Nov. by Palestinians against Jewish citizens in Israel and the West Bank, raising fears of a new uprising or intifada.

In Sept. 2009 Netanyahu had stated that Iran posed a threat to world peace and that it had to be prevented from acquiring nuclear weapons. He also condemned the then Iranian president's denial of the Holocaust. Such antagonism fuelled speculation about possible pre-emptive Israeli military action against Iran. Following the election of a more moderate president in June 2013, Iran reached a conditional agreement in Nov. with the major Western countries, Russia and China to freeze aspects of its nuclear development programme in return for an easing of sanctions. A comprehensive plan of action was signed in July 2015 but Netanyahu criticized the deal, and its US supporters, and has continued to stress that Iran remains a threat to Israel's security.

Israel's relations with Turkey were severely undermined in 2010 by its military assault in May on a convoy of ships bringing aid to the Gaza Strip in defiance of the Israeli blockade, in which nine Turkish nationals were killed. The incident led in Sept. 2011 to the suspension of all defence links and the expulsion of the Israeli ambassador.

In Feb. 2011, in response to mounting concern over political turmoil in Egypt, Netanyahu said that Israel would review its security arrangements if Egypt reneged on the 1979 bilateral peace treaty. In Sept. that year bilateral relations came under further strain as an Egyptian crowd stormed the Israeli embassy in Cairo, prompting an airlift of diplomats and their dependents out of the country. Similarly mindful of the escalation of civil war in Syria and its potential security implications, Israel reportedly launched a bombing raid on an unspecified target near Damascus in Jan. 2013. In Jan. 2015 further confrontation between Israel and Hizbollah threatened when the radical Lebanese Shia militia fired missiles at Israeli military vehicles near the Lebanese border, killing two soldiers.

In Dec. 2014 Netanyahu dismissed the justice minister, Tzipi Livni, and finance minister, Yair Lapid, claiming disloyalty, which prompted the collapse of the coalition and scheduling of early elections for 17 March 2015. The poll again returned an array of disparate political and religious groupings and after seven weeks of negotiations Netanyahu formed a five-party right-wing coalition.

DEFENCE

Conscription (for Jews and Druze only) is three years (usually four years for officers; 24 months for women). Israel is one of the few countries with female conscription. A law passed in March 2014 ended the wholesale army exemptions granted to ultra-Orthodox seminary students. It is set to be fully implemented in 2017 and will involve an annual enlistment quota. The Israel Defence Force is a unified force, in which army, navy and air force are subordinate to a single chief-of-staff. The Minister of Defence is de facto C.-in-C.

Defence expenditure in 2013 totalled US$15,163m., representing 6.0% of GDP (compared to over 30% in the early 1970s). Expenditure per capita in 2013 was US$1,967, a figure exceeded only by Oman and Saudi Arabia.

Nuclear Weapons

Israel has an undeclared nuclear weapons capability. Although known to have a nuclear bomb, it pledges not to introduce nuclear testing to the Middle East. According to the Stockholm International Peace Research Institute, the nuclear arsenal was estimated to have about 80 warheads in Jan. 2015. Israel is one of three countries not to have signed the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty (the others being India and Pakistan).

Army

Strength (2011) 133,000 (conscripts 107,000). There are also 500,000 reservists available on mobilization. In addition there is a paramilitary border police of about 8,000.

Navy

The Navy, tasked primarily for coastal protection and based at Haifa, Ashdod and Eilat, includes three small diesel submarines and three corvettes.

Naval personnel in 2011 totalled about 9,500 (including a Naval Commando of 300) of whom 2,500 are conscripts. There are also 10,000 naval reservists available on mobilization.

Air Force

The Air Force (including air defence) has a personnel strength (2011) of 34,000, with 440 combat aircraft, all jets, of Israeli and US manufacture including F-15s and F-16s, and 77 attack helicopters. There were 55,000 Air Force reservists in 2011.

ECONOMY

Services account for about 82% of GDP, industry 16% and agriculture 2%.

Overview

Israel has a diversified economy with a rapidly expanding technology sector, but possesses limited natural resources. Although significant natural gas reserves were discovered off Israel's Mediterranean coast in 2009, the country remains dependent on imports of petroleum, coal and food. Main exports include high-technology equipment, cut diamonds and pharmaceuticals.

Until the 1990s traditional industries, including the textile and garments sectors, benefited from protectionist policies, but have since been overshadowed by the technology sector, which over the past two decades has become the bedrock of the economy. The 1990s saw strong growth bolstered by the dot-com internet boom and innovative government incentive schemes. However, during 2001–02 Israel suffered its worst recession in 50 years as a result of the second Palestinian intifada. The economy then rebounded, averaging 5% annual growth between 2004 and 2007 owing to improved internal security, strong external demand and sound financial and macroeconomic policies. Israel's technological expertise, skilled labour force and high living standards have attracted significant foreign investment, which averaged 3.3% of GDP annually from 2009–13.

The economy showed resilience through the global financial crisis and the 2011 Arab Spring, in large part as a result of prudent fiscal policy and diverse trade ties. Growth averaged 4.2% between 2010 and 2013, driven by higher exports, private consumption and investment.

The discovery of natural gas should ensure a reduction in fuel imports in the longer term. The Tamar gas field, which came on stream in March 2013, and the Leviathan field, expected to start production in 2017, have estimated combined reserves of 821bn. cu. metres.

Reducing the high public debt, which stands at around 68% of GDP, is a key challenge, while the poverty rate remains among the highest among the OECD countries. Israel has also experienced rapid house inflation in recent years, posing risks to long-term stability. In the 2013–14 budget the government implemented an austerity programme aimed at reducing the deficit and restoring investor confidence, but which is likely to moderate growth momentum in the medium term.

Currency

The unit of currency is the shekel (ILS) of 100 agorot. Foreign exchange reserves were US$58,426m. in Sept. 2009. Gold reserves have been negligible since 1998. Total money supply in Nov. 2008 was 83,131m. shekels.

Inflation rates (based on OECD statistics):

2005	2006	2007	2008	2009	2010	2011	2012	2013	2014
1.3%	2.1%	0.5%	4.6%	3.3%	2.7%	3.5%	1.7%	1.6%	0.5%

Budget

Central government revenue totalled 320,233m. shekels in 2011 (299,726m. shekels in 2010) and expenditure 358,284m. shekels (338,122m. shekels in 2010). Taxes constituted 66.4% of revenues in 2011 and social contributions 17.3%; use of goods and services accounted for 26.4% of expenditures and compensation of employees 24.3%.

The standard rate of VAT was raised from 17% to 18% in June 2013.

Performance

Real GDP growth rates (based on OECD statistics):

2005	2006	2007	2008	2009	2010	2011	2012	2013	2014
4.4%	5.6%	6.2%	3.2%	1.2%	5.4%	5.0%	2.9%	3.4%	2.6%

Total GDP was US$305.7bn. in 2014.

Banking and Finance

The Bank of Israel was established by law in 1954 as Israel's central bank. Its Governor is appointed by the President on the recommendation of the Cabinet for a five-year term. The Governor is Karnit Flug. As part of a government scheme several banks were privatized in the years 1993–2006.

In 2014 there were 15 commercial banks (of which the largest are Bank Hapoalim, Bank Leumi le-Israel and Israel Discount Bank), four foreign banks, six credit card companies, one financial institution and two joint service companies. The three major banks hold over 70% of total assets of the banking system.

Gross external debt amounted to US$95,263m. in June 2012.

There is a stock exchange in Tel Aviv.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2011 accounted for 10.0 tonnes per capita.

Electricity

Installed capacity in 2011 was 14.0m. kW. Electric power production amounted to 59.65bn. kWh in 2011; consumption per capita was 7,348 kWh in 2011.

Oil and Gas

In 2009 large quantities of natural gas were discovered off the coast of Israel that are expected to meet the country's needs for 35 years and potentially allow Israel to become energy self-sufficient. Production from the Tamar gas field began in 2013. In 2010 the reserves totalled 238bn. cu. metres. Crude petroleum reserves in 2011 were 2m. bbls.

Minerals

The most valuable natural resources are the potash, bromine and other salt deposits of the Dead Sea. Production figures in 1,000 tonnes: phosphate rock (2004), 2,947; potash (2004), 2,060; lignite (2004), 439; salt (2004 estimate), 398.

Agriculture

There were about 338,000 ha. of arable land in 2002 and 86,000 ha. of permanent crops. Production, 2002 (in 1,000 tonnes): melons and watermelons, 405; potatoes, 394; tomatoes, 383; grapefruit and pomelos, 256; wheat, 179; oranges, 159; cucumbers and gherkins, 144; apples, 126.

Livestock (2003 estimates): 395,000 sheep; 390,000 cattle; 190,000 pigs; 63,000 goats; 35m. poultry.

Types of rural settlement: (1) the Kibbutz and Kvutza (communal collective settlement), where all property and earnings are collectively owned and work is collectively organized (117,700 people lived in 267 Kibbutzim in 2005). (2) The Moshav (workers' co-operative smallholders' settlement) which is founded on the principles of mutual aid and equality of opportunity between the members, all farms being equal in size (213,600 in 402 Moshavim in 2005). (3) The Moshav Shitufi (co-operative settlement), which is based on collective ownership and economy as in the Kibbutz, but with each family having its own house and being responsible for its own domestic services (17,000 in 40 Moshavim Shitufi'im in 2005). (4) Other rural settlements in which land and property are privately owned and every resident is responsible for his own well-being. In 2005 there were a total of 240 non-cooperative villages with a population of 159,400.

Forestry

In 2010 forests covered 0.15m. ha. or 7% of the total land area. Timber production was 27,000 cu. metres in 2011.

Fisheries

Catches in 2010 totalled 2,588 tonnes, mainly from marine waters.

INDUSTRY

The leading company by market capitalization in Israel in March 2015 was Teva Pharmaceutical Industries Ltd (US$60.0bn.).

Products include chemicals, metal products, textiles, tyres, diamonds, paper, plastics, leather goods, glass and ceramics, building materials, precision instruments, tobacco, foodstuffs, electrical and electronic equipment.

Labour

The economically active workforce was 2,270,500 in 2001 (1,236,200 males). The principal areas of activity were: manufacturing, mining and quarrying, 394,200; wholesale and retail trade/repair of motor vehicles, motorcycles and personal and household goods, 299,800; education, 283,700; and real estate, renting and business activities, 277,200. Unemployment was 5.2% in Dec. 2015.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

Goods imports were US$72,311.8m. in 2014 (US$71,995.0m. in 2013) and goods exports US$68,965.0m. (US$66,781.2m. in 2013).

Principal imports in 2014 were machinery and transport (29.2%), manufactured goods, and mineral fuels and lubricants; main exports in 2014 were manufactured goods (34.9%), chemicals, and machinery and transport equipment.

The leading import supplier in 2013 was the USA (11.3%), followed by China and Germany; the leading export destination in 2013 was the USA (26.2%), followed by Hong Kong and the UK.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

There were 17,870 km of paved roads in 2007, including 344 km of motorway. Motor vehicles in use in 2007 totalled 1,805,400 passenger cars, 362,200 lorries and vans, 94,800 motorcycles and mopeds, and 21,300 buses and coaches. There were 398 fatalities as a result of road accidents in 2007.

Rail

There were 1,079 km of standard gauge line in 2011. 35.9m. passengers and 6.2m. tonnes of freight were carried in 2011. One of the smallest metro systems in the world (1,800 metres) was opened in Haifa in 1959. A tram system in Jerusalem opened in Aug. 2011.

Civil Aviation

There are international airports at Tel Aviv (Ben Gurion), Eilat (J. Hozman), Haifa and Ovda. Tel Aviv is the busiest airport, in 2012 handling 13,133,992 passengers (12,400,479 on international flights) and 285,813 tonnes of freight. El Al is the flag carrier. In 2005 scheduled airline traffic of Israeli-based carriers flew 97.9m. km and carried 4,382,200 passengers. In 2003 services (mainly domestic) were also provided by another Israeli airline, Arkia, and by over 40 international carriers.

Shipping

Israel has three commercial ports—Haifa, Ashdod and Eilat. In Jan. 2009 there were 15 ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 428,000 GT.

Telecommunications

In 2011 there were 3.5m. main (fixed) telephone lines. In the same year mobile phone subscribers numbered 9.2m. (1,219.8 per 1,000 persons). There were 25.8 fixed broadband subscriptions per 100 inhabitants in 2009 and 62.5 mobile broadband subscriptions per 100 inhabitants. In 2009, 74.5% of households had a computer and 66.3% of households had internet access at home. In March 2012 there were 3.5m. Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

Law. Under the Law and Administration Ordinance, 5708/1948, the first law passed by the Provisional Council of State, the law of Israel is the law which was obtaining in Palestine on 14 May 1948 in so far as it is not in conflict with that Ordinance or any other law passed by the Israel legislature and with such modifications as result from the establishment of the State and its authorities.

Capital punishment was abolished in 1954, except for support given to the Nazis and for high treason.

The law of Palestine was derived from Ottoman law, English law (Common Law and Equity) and the law enacted by the Palestine legislature, which to a great extent was modelled on English law.

Civil Courts. Municipal courts, established in certain municipal areas, have criminal jurisdiction over offences against municipal regulations and bylaws and certain specified offences committed within a municipal area. Magistrates courts, established in each district and sub-district, have limited jurisdiction in both civil and criminal matters. District courts, sitting at Jerusalem, Tel Aviv and Haifa, have jurisdiction, as courts of first instance, in all civil matters not within the jurisdiction of magistrates courts, and in all criminal matters, and as appellate courts from magistrates courts and municipal courts. The 14-member Supreme Court has jurisdiction as a court of first instance (sitting as a High Court of Justice dealing mainly with administrative matters) and as an appellate court from the district courts (sitting as a Court of Civil or of Criminal Appeal).

In addition, there are various tribunals for special classes of cases. Settlement Officers deal with disputes with regard to the ownership or possession of land in settlement areas constituted under the Land (Settlement of Title) Ordinance.

Religious Courts. The rabbinical courts of the Jewish community have exclusive jurisdiction in matters of marriage and divorce, alimony and confirmation of wills of members of their community and concurrent jurisdiction with the civil courts in all other matters of personal status of all members of their community with the consent of all parties to the action.

The courts of the several recognized Christian communities have a similar jurisdiction over members of their respective communities.

The Muslim religious courts have exclusive jurisdiction in all matters of personal status over Muslims who are not foreigners, and over Muslims who are foreigners, if under the law of their nationality they are subject in such matters to the jurisdiction of Muslim religious courts.

Where any action of personal status involves persons of different religious communities, the President of the Supreme Court will decide which court shall have jurisdiction, and whenever a question arises as to whether or not a case is one of personal status within the exclusive jurisdiction of a religious court, the matter must be referred to a special tribunal composed of two judges of the Supreme Court and the president of the highest court of the religious community concerned in Israel.

The population in penal institutions in Dec. 2012 was 17,279 (223 per 100,000 of national population).

Education

The adult literacy rate in 2003 was 96.9% (male, 98.3%; female, 95.6%). There is free and compulsory education from five to 18 years. There is a unified state-controlled elementary school system with a provision for special religious schools. The standard curriculum for all elementary schools is issued by the Ministry of Education with a possibility of adding supplementary subjects comprising not more than 25% of the total syllabus.

In 2004–05 there were 1,614,000 Hebrew pupils and 436,000 Arab pupils in the education system. In primary schools and kindergartens in 2004–05 there were 888,000 Hebrew children and 302,000 Arab children. There were 57,000 Hebrew teachers and 16,000 Arab teachers in primary education in 2004–05. In post-primary education there were 472,000 Hebrew pupils and 132,000 Arab pupils in 2004–05, with 64,000 Hebrew teachers and 11,000 Arab teachers. In special education there were 11,180 pupils in 2004–05. In post-secondary education, such as colleges, universities and vocational institutions, there were 255,000 pupils, of which 253,000 were Hebrew.

The Hebrew University of Jerusalem, founded in 1925, comprises faculties of the humanities, social sciences, law, science, medicine and agriculture. In 2004–05 it had 21,985 students. The Technion–Israel Institute of Technology in Haifa had 12,810 students. The Weizmann Institute of Science in Rehovoth, founded in 1949, had 960 students in 2004–05.

Tel Aviv University had 28,740 students in 2004–05. The religious Bar-Ilan University at Ramat Gan, opened in 1965, had 25,025 students, the Haifa University had 16,270 students and the Ben Gurion University had 18,640 students.

In 2008 public expenditure on education came to 5.9% of GDP and accounted for 13.7% of total government spending.

Health

In 2010 there were 121 hospitals. There were 60 hospital beds per 10,000 inhabitants in 2007. There were 25,138 physicians, 7,726 dentists, 4,958 pharmacists and 42,609 nurses and midwives in 2006. In 2009 health spending represented 7.5% of GDP.

Welfare

The National Insurance Law of 1954 provides for old-age pensions, survivors' insurance, work-injury insurance, maternity insurance, family allowances and unemployment benefits. In 2013 recipients of allocations from the National Insurance Institute included (monthly averages): child allowances, 1,088,251 families for 2,628,500 children; old age pensions, 733,686; general disability allowance, 222,641; birth grant, 169,711; long-term care benefit, 156,621.

RELIGION

Religious affairs are under the supervision of a special ministry, with departments for the Christian and Muslim communities. The religious affairs of each community remain under the full control of the ecclesiastical authorities concerned: in the case of the Jews, the Ashkenazi and Sephardi Chief Rabbis, in the case of the Christians, the heads of the various communities, and in the case of the Muslims, the Qadis. The Druze were officially recognized in 1957 as an autonomous religious community.

According to the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life, in 2010 there were an estimated 5.6m. Jews, 1.4m. Muslims, 230,000 people with no religious affiliation and 150,000 Christians.

The Chief Rabbis are David Lau (Ashkenazi) and Yitzhak Yosef (Sephardi).

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

There are nine UNESCO sites in Israel. Masada and the old city of Acre were both inscribed in 2001. Masada was built as a palace complex and fortress by Herod the Great. It was the site of the mass suicide of about 1,000 Jewish patriots in the face of a Roman army in the 1st century AD and is a symbol of the ancient kingdom of Israel. The port city of Acre preserves remains of its medieval Crusader buildings beneath the existing Muslim fortified town dating from the 18th and 19th centuries. The White City of Tel Aviv—the Modern Movement (2003) is an example of early 20th century town planning, based on the plan of Sir Patrick Geddes. The Biblical Tels, a series of prehistoric settlement mounds with biblical connections, and the Incense Route, four Nabatean towns along the spice and incense trail, were added to the list in 2005. The Bahá'í Holy Places in Haifa and the Western Galilee (2008) is a complex of buildings including the Shrine of Bahá'u'lláh in Acre and the Shrine of the Báb in Haifa that are visited as part of the Bahá'í pilgrimage. Sites of Human Evolution at Mount Carmel: the Nahal Me'arot/Wadi el-Mughara Caves (2012) is an archaeological site displaying 500,000 years of human evolution with evidence of burials, early stone architecture and the transition from a hunter-gathering lifestyle to agriculture and animal husbandry. Caves of Maresha and Bet-Guvrin in the Judean Lowlands as a Microcosm of the Land of the Caves (2014) is situated under the former towns of Maresha and Bet Guvrin and contains some 3,500 underground chambers, which served as baths, places of worship and hideaways. Necropolis of Bet She'arim: A Landmark of Jewish Renewal (2015) consists of a series of catacombs that are a treasury of artworks and inscriptions in Greek, Aramaic, Hebrew and Palmyrene.

Press

In 2012 there were 11 daily newspapers with an estimated combined circulation of 1.1m. The most widely read paper is the free Israel Hayom, which was only launched in 2007.

Tourism

In 2011 there were 2,820,000 tourist arrivals (excluding same-day visitors), up from 2,803,000 in 2010 and 2,417,000 in 2000. The main countries of origin of non-resident tourists in 2011 were the USA (21%), followed by Russia (13%) and France (10%). 86% of all tourist arrivals in 2011 were by air and 14% were by land border crossings.

Calendar

The Jewish year 5776 corresponds to 14 Sept. 2015–2 Oct. 2016; 5777 corresponds to 3 Oct. 2016–20 Sept. 2017.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

After Israel declared independence on 14 May 1948, Arab League troops invaded the former British Mandate for Palestine. The first Arab–Israeli War (known in Israel as the War of Independence) ended with an armistice in July 1949. Under its terms 77% of Palestine came under Israeli control (56% had been allocated by the UN Partition Plan of 1947). Around 700,000 Palestinians were displaced to the West Bank, the Gaza Strip or to neighbouring countries. Up to 150,000 Palestinians remained in Israel. Gaza came under Egyptian control and in April 1950 the West Bank and East Jerusalem were annexed into Jordan.

Border clashes were frequent in the early 1950s. When Egypt nationalized the Suez Canal in July 1956 Israeli troops occupied Gaza and the Sinai Peninsula until the arrival of UN Emergency Forces. Fatah (the Palestine National Liberation Movement) emerged in Gaza in the late 1950s, led by Yasser Arafat and Khalil al-Wazir. It became the leading faction in the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO), launched by the Arab League in 1964.

Guerrilla attacks by Fatah on Israel began in Jan. 1965. Tensions between Egypt and Israel rose in 1967 when UN forces withdrew. Israel's pre-emptive strike on Egyptian air bases ignited the Six Day War on 5 June, culminating in Israeli control of the West Bank, Gaza Strip and Golan Heights. In Nov. 1967 the UN stated that Israel should withdraw its forces from the territories occupied during the war in return for peace with its Arab neighbours. However, the PLO refused to accept Israel's right to exist. Following the Yom Kippur war in 1973, the possibility of a settlement was lost when radical factions broke from the PLO. In Oct. 1974 the Arab League recognized the PLO as the 'sole, legitimate representative of the Palestinian people'.

When Israel and Egypt signed the Camp David Accords in Sept. 1978, Israel withdrew from Sinai. Plans for Palestinian autonomy in Gaza and the West Bank excluded the PLO and were rejected by Palestinians, while Israel made clear its intention to maintain a military presence in the Occupied Territories and expand Jewish settlements in the West Bank.

Israel's invasion of southern Lebanon in June 1982 ended the PLO's presence there. The 88-day siege of Beirut forced 10,000 militia into Yemen, Sudan and other Arab countries. Arafat established new headquarters in Tunisia. In Nov. 1988, almost a year after the first Palestinian intifada (uprising) against Israel began, the PLO declared a Palestinian state. Arafat also recognized Israel's right to exist and renounced terrorism, paving the way for the 1993 Oslo Accords.

After the Israeli prime minister, Yitzhak Rabin, recognized the PLO an agreement was signed in Washington providing for limited Palestinian self-rule (through the Palestinian National Authority) in the Gaza Strip and part of the West Bank. The six-year intifada ended, during which over 2,000 Palestinians and 150 Israelis were killed.

In Nov. 1995 Rabin was assassinated by a Jewish extremist. Under an agreement of 1995 the Israeli army withdrew from six of the seven largest Palestinian towns in the West Bank and from 460 smaller towns and villages. The rest of the West Bank stayed under Israeli control with further withdrawals at six-month intervals. Negotiations on the permanent status of the West Bank and Gaza began in May 1996.

After elections in 1996, a right-wing coalition under Binyamin Netanyahu approved plans for an expansion of Jewish settlement in the West Bank. In Oct. 1998 Israel accepted partial withdrawal from the West Bank on condition that the Palestinians cracked down on terrorism. The following month, 2% of the West Bank was handed over.

Netanyahu's defeat by Ehud Barak in elections in 1999 improved relations with the PLO. In March 2000 Arafat accepted plans for expanded self-rule in the West Bank, involving the transfer of another 6% of the area to the Palestinian Authority. However, by Oct. 2000 a second intifada had begun, fuelled by conflict over control of Jerusalem. When talks stalled, Barak went to the polls in Feb. 2001 but was defeated by Ariel Sharon. Amid escalating violence, in Dec. 2001 Israel broke off contact with Arafat, putting him under virtual house arrest.

Violence on both sides continued in 2002 with heavy loss of life. In March 2002 the UN endorsed a Palestinian state for the first time. In June 2002 Israel began constructing a barrier cutting off the West Bank to shield against suicide bombers. Arafat died in Nov. 2004 and was succeeded by Mahmoud Abbas. In Feb. 2005 Sharon and Abbas agreed to cease hostilities. In Aug. 2005 Israel evicted 8,500 Jewish settlers from Gaza.

In Jan. 2006 Palestinian legislative elections were won by Change and Reform (Hamas), which does not recognize Israel and has called for its destruction. Western aid was thus suspended. In Dec. 2006, after deadlock between Fatah and Hamas over forming a national unity government, Abbas called new elections. Tensions between Fatah and Hamas peaked in June 2007, with Hamas seizing control of the Gaza Strip while the West Bank remained under Fatah. Abbas established a new government, recognized by Fatah and Israel but not by Hamas, under the premiership of Salam Fayyad.

In Dec. 2008 Israel began an assault in Gaza aimed at destroying Hamas strongholds responsible for attacks on Israeli targets. The international community called for a ceasefire amid concerns over the high civilian death toll and infrastructural damage. On 13 Jan. 2009 the UN headquarters in Gaza was bombed by Israeli forces. Israel apologized, claiming its forces were attacked by militants taking refuge there. On 18 Jan. Israel and Hamas announced unilateral ceasefires. An estimated 1,300 Palestinians and 13 Israelis were killed during the three-week offensive, and 50,000 displaced.

In May 2011 Mahmoud Abbas and Khaled Meshaal, leaders of Fatah and Hamas respectively, agreed that a joint caretaker administration should hold power until Palestinian elections—initially scheduled for May 2012 but subsequently postponed.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

The 2007 census population of the Palestinian territory was 3,767,126 (2,895,683 in 1997). Estimate, 2014: 4,550,400. In 2011, 74.4% of the population were urban. Life expectancy at birth, 2007, was 74.9 years for females and 71.7 years for males. The UN gives an estimated population for 2015 of 4.55m. The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 4.67m. In 2012 the infant mortality rate was 20.6 per 1,000 live births. The fertility rate in 2012 was 4.1 births per woman. Agricultural production, 2008 estimates, in 1,000 tonnes: cucumbers and gherkins, 208; tomatoes, 208; olives, 86; potatoes, 69; aubergines, 60; grapes, 55; pumpkins and squash, 51. Total fish catch in 2005 for the Palestinian Territories was 1,805 tonnes. In 2011 there were 95,725 children in pre-primary education, 411,268 primary school pupils, 705,627 pupils at secondary level and 213,973 tertiary level students. 97.4% of the Palestinian population in 2007 were Muslims and 1.2% Christians.

The West Bank has an area of 5,655 sq. km; the 2007 census population was 2,350,583, in addition to 275,000 Jewish settlers and 10,000 troops deployed there. Estimate, 2014: 2,790,300. By 2009 the number of Jewish settlers had risen above 300,000. In 2006 there was a Palestinian diaspora of 5.0m. The birth rate in 2004 was estimated at 39.6 per 1,000 population and the death rate 4.8 per 1,000. In 2003 there were 31,646 private cars and 14,521 commercial vehicles and trucks registered. In 2003 there were 54 hospitals.

The Gaza Strip has an area of 365 sq. km; the 2007 census population was 1,416,543. Estimate, 2014: 1,760,000. The seven-week Israel–Gaza conflict of July–Aug. 2014 left up to 500,000 Palestinians internally displaced. Two months after the ceasefire, more than 100,000 people were still homeless. The population doubled between 1990 and 2005. While the population is still growing, the rate of increase has slowed in the meantime. The chief town is Gaza itself. Over 98% of the population are Arabic-speaking Muslims. In 2005, 81.0% of the population lived in urban areas. Crude birth rate in 2004 was 43.7 per 1,000 population. The death rate was estimated at 3.9 per 1,000 population. In 2003 there were 17 hospitals. In 2003 there were 38,677 private cars and 9,392 commercial vehicles and trucks registered. Gaza International Airport, at the southern edge of the Gaza Strip, opened in Nov. 1998. Telecommunications development has been rapid, the number of fixed line telephone subscribers more than trebling between 1997 and 2000. In 2003 there were 243,494 subscribers. In 2003 life expectancy at birth was 71.7 years.

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

In April 1996 the Palestinian Council removed from its Charter all clauses contrary to its recognition by Israel, including references to armed struggle as the only means of liberating Palestine, and the elimination of Zionism from Palestine. The President is directly elected and heads the executive organ, the Palestinian National Authority, one fifth of whose members he appoints, while four fifths are elected by the Legislative Council. The latter comprises 132 members (88 until 2005), of which 66 members are chosen by district voting and the other 66 by proportional representation. The 2007 Election Law passed by President Mahmoud Abbas during a period of emergency rule introduced proportional representation for all seats. Hamas claimed the reforms were illegal as they were not ratified by the Legislative Council. The Palestinian Authority was created by agreement of the PLO and Israel as an interim instrument of self-rule for Palestinians living on the West Bank and Gaza Strip. The failure of the PLO and Israel to strike a permanent status agreement has resulted in the Authority retaining its powers. It is entitled to establish ministries and subordinate bodies, as required to fulfil its obligations and responsibilities. It possesses legislative and executive powers within the functional areas transferred to it in the 1995 Interim Agreement. Its territorial jurisdiction is restricted to Areas A and B in the West Bank and approximately two-thirds of the Gaza Strip.

Following an Israeli-Palestinian agreement on customs duties and VAT in Aug. 1994 the Palestinians set up their own customs and immigration points into Gaza and Jericho. Israel collects customs dues on Palestinian imports through Israeli entry points and transfers these to the Palestinian treasury.

A special committee is working on drafting a new Palestinian constitution. In March 2003 parliament approved the creation of the position of prime minister. Yasser Arafat nominated Mahmoud Abbas, the PLO Secretary General, to be the first premier. The president may dismiss the prime minister but parliament has to approve any new government.

There is a Palestinian Economic Council for Development and Reconstruction.

RECENT ELECTIONS

Legislative Council elections were held on 25 Jan. 2006. Change and Reform (Hamas) won 74 seats; Fatah Movement, 45; Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine, 3; the Alternative, 2; Independent Palestine, 2; Third Way, 2; ind. and others, 4. Turnout was 74.6%.

Presidential elections were held on 9 Jan. 2005. Mahmoud Abbas was elected president by 67.4% of votes cast, ahead of Mustafa Barghouti with 21.0%. There were five other candidates.

CURRENT GOVERNMENT

President of the Palestinian National Authority: Mahmoud Abbas (Fatah); b. 1935 (since Jan. 2005).

Prime Minister of the Palestinian Authority: Rami Hamdallah (ind.); b. 1958 (since June 2014).

INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

The Palestinian National Council unilaterally declared Palestine an independent state in 1988. In 2011 President Mahmoud Abbas of the Palestinian National Authority submitted an application for membership of the United Nations. Membership requires the backing of two-thirds of member states, including all five of the permanent members of the Security Council. As of March 2016, 136 member states of the United Nations—70.5% of the total—recognized Palestine, but only two of the Security Council members did (China and Russia). Palestine was granted ‘non-member observer state’ status in the UN in Nov. 2012.

ECONOMY

Budget

Budgetary central government revenue totalled US$3,134.8m. in 2011 and expenditure US$3,153.5m.

Overview

Following the outbreak of the second intifada in Sept. 2000, conditions in the Palestinian Territories deteriorated rapidly. Revival followed the appointment of a new caretaker government in the West Bank in 2007, with growth accelerating strongly in 2009, driven by donor assistance, increased ‘tunnel activity’ (shadow economic relations with neighbouring Egypt) and a relaxation of the Israeli blockade of Gaza.

However, growth subsequently slowed significantly, and in 2013 the economy is estimated to have contracted by 4.4%. A quarter of the Palestinian population lives in poverty, with unemployment hovering around 25%. The economic slowdown has created fiscal pressures on the Palestinian Authority, undermining the provision of public services, with a higher than expected budget deficit and lower external donor support recorded in 2014. Israel’s restrictions on movement of goods and people stand in the way of developing a more dynamic private sector to create the conditions for sustainable growth.

Currency

Israeli currency is in use.

Performance

The total GDP of the West Bank and the Gaza Strip was US$12.7bn. in 2014.

Banking and Finance

Banking is regulated by the Palestinian Monetary Authority. Palestine's leading bank is Arab Bank. A securities exchange, the Palestine Securities Exchange, opened in Nablus in Feb. 1997.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCESForestry

In 2010 forests covered 9,000 ha. or 2% of the total land area.

COMMUNICATIONSTelecommunications

There were 403,025 landline telephone subscriptions in 2013 (equivalent to 93.2 per 1,000 inhabitants) and 3,190,000 mobile phone subscriptions (or 737.4 per 1,000 inhabitants). In 2012, 43.4% of the population were internet users. In March 2012 there were 915,000 Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONSJustice

The Palestinian police consists of some 15,000; they are not empowered to arrest Israelis, but may detain them and hand them over to the Israeli authorities. There were 20 executions in 2014 but none in 2015. All of the executions carried out in 2014 were in the Hamas-controlled Gaza Strip.

Education

Adult literacy was 94.6% in 2009 (97.4% among males and 91.7% among females).

CULTUREWorld Heritage Sites

The Birthplace of Jesus: Church of the Nativity and the Pilgrimage Route, Bethlehem was the first Palestinian site added to the UNESCO World Heritage List (2012). The Church of the Nativity is considered to be the oldest continuously operating Christian church in the world. The site also includes numerous convents and churches, bell towers, terraced gardens and a pilgrimage route. The Land of Olives and Vines—Cultural Landscape of Southern Jerusalem, Battir was also inscribed on the list (2014). The Battir hill landscape comprises a series of farmed valleys and stone terraces and is located near Jerusalem.

Tourism

In 2013, 545,000 non-resident tourists stayed in hotels and similar accommodation (up from 490,000 in 2012).

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Excavations at Isernia have uncovered remains of Palaeolithic Neanderthal man that date back 70,000 years. New Stone Age settlements have been found across the Italian peninsula and at the beginning of the Bronze Age there were several Italic tribes, including the Ligurians, Veneti, Apulians, Siculi and the Sardi. The Etruscans were established in Italy by around 1200 BC. Their highly civilized society flourished between the Arno and Tiber valleys, with other important settlements in Campania, Lazio and the Po valley. The Etruscans were primarily navigators and travellers competing for the valuable trading routes and markets with the Phoenicians and Greeks. During the 8th century BC the Greeks had begun to settle in southern Italy and presented a challenge to Etruscan domination of sea trade routes. Greek settlements were established along the southern coast, on the island of Ischia in the Bay of Naples and in Sicily where the Corinthians founded the city of Syracuse. These colonies were known as Magna Graecia and flourished for six centuries. Magna Graecia eventually succumbed to the growing power of Rome where the impact of the Hellenic culture had already been felt.

According to legend, Rome was founded on 21 April 753 BC by Romulus (a descendant of Aeneas, a Trojan) who, after killing his twin brother, Remus, declared himself the first king of Rome.

The Etruscan dynasty of Tarquins gained control in 616 BC and expanded Roman agriculture and trade to rival the Greeks. The Romans overthrew the Tarquins in 510 BC and the first Roman Republic was born.

With the Republic came the establishment of the 'Roman Code', a collection of principles of political philosophy that enshrined the sovereign rights of Roman citizens. The early Roman Senate was dominated by a few patrician families, who held a monopoly on public office with the equites (the highest class of non-noble rich).

With the exception of the Greek city-states, Italy was unified by the Romans, who then set their sights on the Mediterranean, controlled by Carthage. Between 264–146 BC Carthage and Rome fought three wars (the Punic Wars) for supremacy of the Mediterranean trade routes. At the start Carthage was the more powerful, with a colonial empire that stretched as far as Morocco and included Sicily, Corsica, Sardinia and parts of Spain. Rome was also inexperienced in maritime war. In 218 BC the second Punic War started when Hannibal crossed the Alps and marched south, defeating the Romans in a series of battles in Italy. Without taking Rome itself, he crossed over to Zama in North Africa where he was finally defeated by Scipio in 202 BC. But by the end of the third Punic War in 146 BC the destruction of Carthage was total and Macedonian Greece was added to Rome's provinces. Rome incorporated Spain into her colonies and became the dominant power in the Mediterranean.

This dominance of trade routes led to great riches for Rome and the ensuing corruption among the upper ruling classes gave rise to social unrest. Sulla, a patrician general, marched on Rome in 82 BC, took the city in a bloody coup and instituted a new constitution. Nine years later Spartacus, an escaped slave, led 70,000 of his fellow slaves in a rampage throughout the peninsula. Out of the ensuing chaos, Julius Caesar emerged as leader. He had already conquered Gaul and declared southern Britain a part of Rome in 54 BC. His disregard for the Senate led to his legions being disbanded but he remained popular and returned to Rome a hero. His strength and charisma led to his assassination by members of the Senate on the Ides of March 44 BC. After his death, various rival successors fought to gain control, including Mark Anthony (Marcus Antonius), Marcus Junius Brutus and Gaius Cassius. But it was Caesar's nephew Octavian, having defeated Mark Anthony in 31 BC, who was crowned the first emperor of Rome in 27 BC, assuming the title Augustus.

Roman Domination

Augustus reigned for 45 years. With the aid of a professional army and an imperial bureaucracy he established the Pax Romana while extending the empire and disseminating its laws and civic culture. The arts thrived with writers, dramatists and philosophers such as Cicero, Plautus, Terence, Virgil, Horace and Ovid developing Latin into an expressive and poetic language. In 100 BC Rome itself had more than 1.5m. inhabitants and the Roman Empire was a unified diversity of many races and creeds. It had more than 100,000 km of paved roads, a complex of sophisticated aqueducts, and an efficient army and administrative system.

In AD 14 Augustus was succeeded by his stepson, Tiberius, who ruled in an era that saw the rise of Christianity. Successive emperors tried to suppress the new religion which spread quickly throughout the empire. The deranged Emperor Nero, who came to power in AD 54, intensified persecution of the Christians and was accused of setting Rome on fire. His death in AD 68 brought the Julio-Claudian dynasty to a close and, after a period of instability, Vespasian, the son of a provincial civil servant, took the throne and began some of the most ambitious building projects the Empire had seen. He started the Colosseum (completed by his son Titus) and the Arco di Tito (where the Via Sacra joins the Forum).

In AD 98 the Senate elected Trajan as emperor. Beginning a century of successful rule by the Antonine dynasty, he expanded the empire with the conquests of Dacia (Romania), Mesopotamia, Persia, Syria and Armenia. By the end of his reign the Roman Empire stretched from the Persian Gulf to Britain, from the Caspian Sea to Morocco and from the Sahara to the Danube. Trajan was responsible for several great architectural projects. A huge column depicting his Dacian campaigns served as his tomb in Rome. Trajan's successor, Hadrian, continued this programme of huge constructions, including Hadrian's Wall in Britain. After his death in 138, his tomb was converted into the fortress of Castel Sant'Angelo on the banks of the Tiber.

Under pressure from Teutonic tribes along the Danube and as a result of the increasingly strong influence of the Eastern religions, Rome began to lose control of its empire at the start of the 3rd century. In 306 Constantine became emperor. After he converted to Christianity in 313 his Edict of Milan established Rome as the headquarters of the Christian religion. A new building programme of Christian cathedrals and churches began throughout Italy. At the same time, Constantine cultivated the wealthy eastern regions of the Empire and, in 324, he moved his capital to Constantinople (now Istanbul). The decline of the Roman Empire continued when, after the death of Constantine, two brothers, Valens and Valentinian, divided the Empire. The west and east gradually became alienated, separated by invaders, language and religious interpretation. 'Rome' endured in the east as the Byzantine Empire, the most powerful medieval state in the Mediterranean.

Fall of Rome

The western half of the Roman Empire, having embraced Christianity as the state religion, came under repeated attacks from Central European ('Barbarian') tribes. The Germanic Vandals had cut off Rome's corn supplies from North Africa, and the Visigoths, a Teutonic tribe, controlled the northern Mediterranean coast and northern Italy. In 452 Attila the Hun, from the steppes of Central Asia, invaded and forced the people of northeastern Italy onto a lagoon haven that became Venice. Rome was captured and sacked in 455 by the Vandals and in 476 a Germanic mercenary captain, Odovacar, deposed Romulus Augustus, the last of the Western Roman Emperors. This date is generally accepted as the end of the Roman Empire in the West.

In 493 Odovacar was succeeded by Theodoric, an Ostrogoth who had acquired a taste for Roman culture. Theodoric ruled from Ravenna and by the time he died in 527 he had managed to restore peace to Italy. On his death, Italy was reconquered by an emperor of the Eastern Roman Empire, Justinian, who together with his wife Theodora laid the foundations of the Byzantine period. Although the Lombards drove back the Justinian conquest, Byzantine emperors managed to retain control of parts of southern Italy until the 11th century.

In the mid-5th century Attila the Hun had been persuaded not to attack Rome by Pope Leo I ('The Great'). This and a document known as the 'Donation of Constantine' secured the Western Roman Empire for the Catholic Church. In 590 Gregory I became pope and set about an extensive programme of reforms, including improved conditions for slaves and the distribution of free bread in Rome. He oversaw the Christianization of Britain, repaired Italy's network of aqueducts and created the foundations for Catholic services and rituals and church administration.

The invasion of Italy by the Lombards began before Gregory became pope and, although they eventually penetrated as far south as Spoleto and Benevento, they were unable to take Rome. They settled around Milan, Pavia and Brescia and abandoned their own language and customs in favour of the local culture. However, they were sufficiently threatening to cause the pope to invite the Franks under King Pepin to invade. In 756 the Franks overthrew the Lombards and established the Papal States (which survived until 1870). Pepin issued his 'Donation of Pepin', which gave the land still controlled by the Byzantine Empire to Pope Stephen II, proclaiming him and future popes the heirs of the Roman emperors. Pepin's son, Charlemagne, succeeded him and was crowned emperor on Christmas Day 800 by Pope Leo III in St Peter's Basilica in Rome. The installation of a 'Roman' emperor in the West—what was to become the Holy Roman Empire—endorsed the separation between Rome and Byzantium and moved the seat of European political power north of the Alps.

After Charlemagne's death it proved impossible to keep the enormous Carolingian Empire intact. In the period of anarchy that followed, many small independent rival states were established while in Rome the aristocratic families fought over the Papacy. Meanwhile, southern Italy was prospering under Muslim rule. By 831 Muslim Arabs had invaded Sicily and made Palermo their capital. Syracuse fell to them in 878. They created a Greek style civilization with Muslim philosophers, physicians, astronomers, mathematicians and geographers. Cotton, sugarcane and citrus fruits appeared for the first time in Italy and taxes were lowered. Hundreds of mosques were built and all over the region centres of academic and medical learning sprang up. Southern Italy lived harmoniously under Arab influence for more than 200 years while the north remained unsettled. After the collapse of the Carolingian Empire, warfare broke out between local rulers, forcing many people to take refuge in fortified hill towns. In 962 Otto I, a Saxon, was crowned Holy Roman Emperor, the first of a succession of Germanic emperors that was to continue until 1806.

At the beginning of the 11th century the Normans began to enter southern Italy in great numbers, where they had originally been recruited to fight the Arabs. Establishing themselves in Apulia and Calabria, they assimilated much of the eastern culture, co-existing peacefully with the Arabs. The architecture of churches and cathedrals built during this period shows the merging of the two cultural and religious influences. Roger II of Sicily (reigned 1112–54), nephew of the adventurer Robert Guiscard, extended Norman Hauteville power over southern Italy and his navy was dominant in the Mediterranean. He presided over a famous court of scholars and artists, many from the Muslim world, making Palermo a model of tolerance and learning.

North South Divide

Meanwhile, the delicate relationship between the Holy Roman Empire based in the north of Europe and the Papacy in the south was maintained by a common desire to recapture the Holy Land from the Muslims. Crusades were launched, mostly from the northern states, but achieved little. Germanic claims to the southern territories grew and after Frederick I (known as Barbarossa) was crowned Holy Roman Emperor in 1155, he married off his son Henry to the heir to the Norman throne in Sicily. Frederick II, Barbarossa's grandson, came to the throne of Sicily as a child in 1197 and was crowned Holy Roman Emperor in 1220. An enlightened and tolerant ruler, he was known as 'Stupor Mundi' ('Wonder of the World'). An accomplished warrior, he valued scholarship and the Arab culture and allowed Muslims and Jews freedom to follow their own religions. He founded the University of Naples in 1224 with the intention of producing a generation of administrators for his kingdom and moved the court of the Holy Roman Empire to the newly built octagonal masterpiece, Castel del Monte, in Apulia.

During this period a new middle class emerged; with the seat of government so far south, some of the northern cities began to free themselves from feudal control and set themselves up as autonomous states under the protection of either the pope or the emperor. Milan, Cremona, Bologna, Florence, Pavia, Modena, Parma and Lodi were the most important of these new states, each dominated by a powerful family, exercising governmental power in the form of signorie. These states functioned autonomously within larger regional areas: Veneto, Lombardy, Tuscany, the Papal States and the Southern Kingdom. In 1265

Charles of Anjou (a Frenchman who had beheaded Frederick II's grandson) was crowned king of Sicily. Greatly increased taxes, especially on rich landowners, made him unpopular despite his programme of road building, reform of the monetary system, improvement of the ports and the opening of silver mines. In 1282 an uprising known as the Sicilian Vespers was sparked by a French soldier assaulting a Sicilian woman. As a consequence of the opposition to the French in southern Italy, Palermo declared itself an independent republic while supporting the Spaniard Peter of Aragon as king. By 1302 the Anjou dynasty had established itself in Naples.

Plague

The Black Death (La Peste), the deadly plague that swept throughout Europe towards the end of the 13th century, ravaged the populations of the major cities, which were already struggling with famine after years of war. Despite this, the strength of the northern and central Italian city-states was increasing. The rival maritime republics of Venice and Genoa had their own fleets. Venice had added the ports of Dalmatia, the Peloponnese and Cyprus to its possessions and Genoa's influence stretched as far as the Black Sea. Meanwhile, the pope and the Church turned their crusading zeal from the East towards European heretics. Pope Boniface, elected in 1294, came from Italian nobility and was determined to safeguard the interests of his own family. He claimed papal supremacy in worldly and spiritual affairs with his Papal Bull (Unam Sanctam) in 1302.

Meanwhile, a rival Papacy had appeared in Avignon, where John XXII was based. Rome had lost most of her former glory and had become little more than a battleground for the power struggles between the Orsini and Colonna families. The Papal claim to be temporal rulers of Rome was under threat and the Papal States began to fall apart. The period 1305–77, when seven successive popes ruled in Avignon, became known as the 'Babylonian Captivity'. In 1377 Pope Gregory XI returned to Rome after Cardinal Egidio d'Albornoz managed to restore the Papal States with his Egidian Constitutions. Rome was in such a ruined state that Gregory was obliged to set up his court in the Vatican, which was fortified and protected by the proximity of the Castel Sant'Angelo. Gregory died a year later and the Roman cardinals elected one of their own, Urban VI, as his successor. Urban's unpopularity was such that the French cardinals rebelled, electing their own pope, Clement VII, who set up his rival claim in Avignon. Yet another rival pope set himself in Pisa and thus began the Great Schism that would separate the papacy from Rome for nearly half a century.

Renaissance

In 1418 the Great Schism was brought to an end by the Council of Constance and Rome began to recapture her previous glory. Italy was at the forefront of the Renaissance, a flowering of artistic and intellectual humanist expression in the city-states. After the Peace of Lodi in 1454, the powerful ruling families—among others the Medici in Florence, the Gonzaga in Mantua and the d'Este in Ferrara—were at leisure to sponsor the Renaissance and Rome became again the centre of Italian political, cultural and intellectual life. In Florence the Signoria was taken over by a wealthy merchant, Cosimo de Medici. His nephew, Lorenzo II Magnifico, became one of the great patrons of the arts. Feudal lords like Lorenzo de Medici frequently switched allegiance between the popes and the emperors, becoming wealthy bankers and captains of adventure in the process. Having defeated its arch-rival, Genoa, in 1381, Venice grew enormously, transforming its commercial maritime empire into a territorial empire that stretched almost to Milan.

The peace was shattered in 1494 by the invasion of Charles VIII, king of France. Encouraged to pursue his claim to the crown of Naples by Ludovico Sforza, duke of Milan, Charles shocked the Italian cities into an alliance to expel his army. As cities competed to become the richest and most cultured, a Dominican monk, Girolamo Savonarola, preached against humanism in Florence. He persuaded Charles VIII to overthrow the Medici family and declare a Florentine republic. Although he was eventually excommunicated, hanged and burned at the stake, Savonarola exerted a lasting influence on Florentine politics. The Venetian expansion, through diplomatic and military guile, had alienated Venice's neighbours, who formed in 1508 the League of Cambrai, which came close to eradicating the Venetian Republic.

The appearance of Spanish power in Naples began the Habsburg-Valois wars that used Italy as a battlefield until the Peace of Cateau-Cambrésis in 1559. These Italian Wars radically altered the political landscape of the peninsula, leaving Spain dominant in Italy. Florence's time as a republic was brief. The Emperor Charles V, who had sacked Rome in 1527, reinstated the Medici, who went on to rule Florence for the next 210 years.

By the second half of the 16th century, the Church of Rome was obliged to respond to the rise of the Protestant movement (the Reformation), inspired in Germany by Martin Luther. During the Counter-Reformation, the Inquisition, backed by Catholic Spain, was used to suppress heresy. Spain succeeded in dominating Italy during the second half of the 16th century but when Charles II (the last of the Spanish Habsburgs) died in 1700, the War of the Spanish Succession saw Italy become a prize for the dominant European powers. Italy was divided amongst the Austrian Habsburgs, the Spanish Bourbons, Savoy and the independent states. The papacy became less influential, the Jesuits were expelled from Portugal, France and Spain and, thanks to intermarriage between many of the ruling houses of Europe and new trading laws, many national barriers were broken down. The 18th century Age of Enlightenment gave Italy some of its greatest thinkers and writers as well as liberal legal reforms.

Unification

In 1796 Napoleon Bonaparte invaded Italy and declared an Italian Republic under his personal rule. In creating a single political entity, he laid the basis for modern Italy. The Congress of Vienna, which met after the defeat of Napoleon in 1815, reinstated Italy's former rulers. Secret societies, made up of disillusioned middle class intellectuals, fought for a new constitution to reunify the country. One such was founded in 1830 by a Genoan, Giuseppe Mazzini. His 'Young Italy' was committed to liberating the country from foreign dominance and to establishing a unified state under a republican government, a campaign that came to be known as Il Risorgimento. During the 1830s and 1840s Mazzini instigated a series of unsuccessful uprisings until he was exiled. By 1848 revolutionary uprisings were taking place all over Europe and the Italian Nationalist movement was gaining ground. Two supporters of the Nationalist cause, Cesare Balbo and Count Camillo Benso di Cavour, advocated an Italian constitution and a bicameral legislature.

As nationalist feeling increased, Giuseppe Garibaldi, whose terrorist activities for Young Italy had obliged him to flee to South America, returned to Italy and allied himself with the Italian National Society. Cavour, the prime minister of Sardinia-Piedmont, attempted to remove Austria from Italy with French help but it was not until Garibaldi and 1,000 volunteers (the Red Shirts) took Sicily and Naples from the Bourbons in 1860 that unification became a real possibility. Garibaldi handed over these kingdoms to Victor Emmanuel II, king of Sardinia-Piedmont. This was to the relief of Cavour, who had feared that Garibaldi might institute a rival republican government in the south. Although Italy was declared a kingdom in 1861 under Victor Emmanuel II, the country was still not unified. Venice was in the hands of the Austrians while France held Rome. In 1866 the Italians took the Veneto from the Prussians and in 1870 Rome was recaptured from the French. Only the Papal troops resisted the advance of the Italian army in 1870 and Pope Pius IX refused to recognize the Kingdom of Italy. In retaliation, the government stripped the pope of his temporal powers. Thus Italy was fully unified.

Twentieth Century

The turn of the 20th century saw popular support fluctuate between left-wing socialist and right-wing imperialist political parties. When the First World War broke out in 1914, Italy remained neutral although the State was associated with the British, French and Russian allies while the Papacy declared for Catholic Austria. In 1919 Benito Mussolini founded the Italian Fascist Party, whose black shirts and Roman salutes were to become the symbols of aggressive nationalism in Italy for the next two decades. In the elections of 1921 the Fascist Party won 35 of the 135 seats in the Italian parliament. A year later, Mussolini raised a militia of 40,000 'Black Shirts' and marched on Rome to 'liberate' it from the socialists. In 1922 the king asked Mussolini to form a government. His Fascist party won the elections of 1924 and Mussolini assumed the title Il Duce. By the end of 1925 Mussolini had expelled all opposition parties from parliament and gained control of the trade unions. Four years later, he signed a pact with Pope Pius XI declaring Catholicism the sole religion of Italy and recognizing the Vatican as an independent state. In return, the pope finally recognized the United Kingdom of Italy.

Mussolini's aggressive foreign policy resulted in disputes with Greece over Corfu and military campaigns in the Italian colony of Libya. In 1935 Italy invaded Abyssinia (now Ethiopia) and captured Addis Ababa. The newly formed League of Nations condemned this action and imposed sanctions. In the face of international isolation, Mussolini formed an alliance with the German dictator, Adolf Hitler, and in 1936 the Rome-Berlin Axis was formed. Having annexed Albania in April 1939, Italy entered the Second World War in June 1940. Mussolini's armies invaded Greece from Albania in Oct. 1940 but were repelled, forcing Hitler to invade Yugoslavia and Greece in April 1941. This diversion of German troops has been seen as a critical factor in the ultimate failure of the invasion of the USSR, delayed from May to June 1941. The Italian colonies of East Africa were lost in 1941 and Italian forces in North Africa surrendered in May 1943. The Allied armies landed in Sicily in July 1943 and, in the face of diminishing popular support for fascism and Hitler's refusal to assign more troops to the defence of Italy, the king led a coup against Mussolini and had him arrested. In the 45 days that followed, Italy exploded in a series of uprisings against the war. The king signed an armistice with the Allies and declared war on Germany but Nazi troops had already overrun northern Italy. The Germans rescued Mussolini from prison and installed him as a puppet ruler. In 1945 after trying to flee the country, Mussolini was recaptured by Italian partisans and shot. After the Italian Resistance suffered huge losses against the Germans, the allies liberated northern Italy in May 1945.

Post-War Period

In the years following the end of the Second World War, Italy's political forces attempted to regroup. The Marshall Plan, America's post-war aid programme, exerted considerable political and economic influence. The constitutional monarchy was abolished in 1946 by referendum and a republic was formed with a president (elected for a seven-year term by an electoral college), a two-chamber parliament and a separate judiciary. Initially the newly formed Christian Democrats under Alcide De Gasperi were in power with both the Communist Party and the Socialist Party, participating in a series of coalition governments until they were both excluded by De Gasperi in 1947. More than 300 separate political factions have struggled for power throughout the post-war era and no government has lasted longer than four years. Despite this instability, the war-damaged Italian economy began to pick up in the early 1950s. The industrialized northern regions thrived while the less industrialized south remained underdeveloped. The Cassa per il Mezzogiorno (a state fund for the South) was founded to try to redress the balance but with limited success.

In 1957 Italy became a founder member of the European Economic Community (EEC). The rapid growth of the motor industry, most notably Fiat in Turin, saw huge migrations of peasants from the south to work in the factories. By the mid-1960s the Communist Party, which had been gradually increasing its share of the poll at each election, had more card carrying members than the Christian Democrats but without participating in government. Social unrest was commonplace and in 1969 a series of strikes, demonstrations and riots followed on the heels of unrest elsewhere in Europe. Various terrorist groups were active including the extreme left-wing socialist group, the Red Brigade, founded in 1970. Right-wing neo-fascist terrorists were also in action, and in the less developed south, the Mafia, a loose coalition of crime 'families', flourished. Most of Italy's social, economic and political structures were manipulated by these unofficial organizations.

In 1963 Aldo Moro, a Christian Democrat, was appointed prime minister (a post he held until 1968) and invited the Socialists into his government. By the 1970s he was working towards a compromise to allow the Communists to enter government when he was captured, held hostage and finally murdered by the Red Brigade. This national outrage prompted the government to appoint Carabinieri Gen. Carlo Alberto dalla Chiesa to wipe out the terrorist groups. He instituted a system of pentiti (informants) who, in return for collaboration, would receive greatly reduced prison sentences. In 1980 he was asked to expand his area of operations to include the Mafia but was assassinated in Palermo a few months later. Throughout the 1970s Italy experienced radical social and political change. The country was divided into regional administrative areas with their own elected governments. Divorce became legal, women's rights were expanded (Italian women only achieved full suffrage after the Second World War) and abortion was legalized. In 1983 the minority Christian Democratic government handed the premiership to the Socialists under Bettino Craxi.

Italy was well on its way to becoming one of the world's leading economic powers but the 1990s brought fresh crises in the economic and political arenas. Unemployment and inflation rose sharply which, combined with a huge national debt and unstable lira, led to instability. On the political front, the Communist Party split with the hard-liners forming the Rifondazione Comunista, led by Fausto Bernotti, while the more moderate members set up the Democratic Party of the Left. In early 1992 the arrest of a Socialist Party worker on charges of accepting bribes in exchange for public works contracts sparked off Italy's largest ever political corruption scandal. Investigations into 'Tangentopoli' ('kick-back city') implicated thousands of politicians, public officials and businessmen. Former Prime Minister Bettino Craxi was forced to resign as party secretary after he came under investigation for bribery. Allied to Italy's humiliating exit from Europe's Exchange Rate Mechanism (ERM), the old political establishment was driven out of office. In the April 1992 elections, the Christian Democrat share of the vote dropped by 5% while the Lega Nord (the Northern League), under Umberto Bossi, took 9% of the vote on an anti-corruption, federalist platform. Oscar Luigi Scalfaro was elected president on a promise to set about reforming electoral laws and clearing up the Tangentopoli scandal. Investigations into corruption continued, despite reprisals from the Mafia. Craxi was convicted in absentia while Giulio Andreotti, who was prime minister three times between 1972 and 1992, was brought to trial in 1995 on charges of dealing with the Sicilian Mafia.

In the 1994 elections a right-wing coalition was elected. The Freedom Alliance, including the neo-fascist National Alliance and the federalist Northern League, was led by Silvio Berlusconi, a multi-millionaire media tycoon. Berlusconi lost his majority when the Northern League withdrew after nine months. Under mounting criticism for his failure to disassociate himself from his business interests and after receiving a vote of no confidence, Berlusconi resigned. After leaving the Freedom Alliance, the Northern League became more fanatical, advocating a 'Northern Republic of Padania', a separation of the rich northern regions from the poorer southern ones. The 1996 elections brought to power the centre-left 'Olive Tree' alliance with Romano Prodi as prime minister. Prodi aimed to balance the budget and create a stable political environment. He gained his first objective with a succession of economic measures that prepared the way for Italy's entry into EMU.

Prodi was succeeded by Massimo D'Alema in 1998 who, in turn, was replaced by Giuliano Amato in 2000. By the time of the 2001 elections Berlusconi's popularity had revived and he formed a new centre-right coalition. He introduced the first major constitutional reforms in 55 years, allowing the nation's 20 regions increased responsibility for their own tax, education and environmental programmes.

Berlusconi's tenure was dogged by questions over his private business interests. In Oct. 2002 parliament passed new criminal reform legislation that critics claimed was partly designed to allow Berlusconi to escape charges of corruption. He nonetheless stood trial in May 2003 on corruption charges related to his business dealings in the 1980s but the trial was halted the following month when the new law granted the prime minister immunity from prosecution. The legislation was declared void by the constitutional court in Jan. 2004 and his trial resumed three months later, culminating in his acquittal in Dec. 2004.

The proposed EU constitution was approved by parliament in April 2005, shortly before Berlusconi's government collapsed after a poor showing in regional elections. He was then asked by the president to form a new government but was beaten by Prodi in the general election of April 2006. The following month Giorgio Napolitano was elected president. Prodi resigned in Feb. 2007 when his foreign policy failed to gain Senate backing but resumed his premiership after winning confidence votes in both the upper and lower houses.

In early 2008 Prodi's coalition split when a minor partner withdrew its support. Despite surviving a vote of no confidence in the lower house, Prodi lost a similar vote in the Senate. Parliament was dissolved in Feb. 2008 and Prodi was asked to remain as caretaker prime minister ahead of a general election in April 2008, in which Silvio Berlusconi was returned to power.

The economy was in a parlous state as the global financial crisis deepened. Berlusconi responded by imposing austerity measures but faced several votes of confidence as the economy continued to falter and revelations emerged about his private life. With the IMF warning that the country needed to reduce its public debt, Berlusconi resigned in Nov. 2011 following an impasse in parliament over a new austerity package. He was replaced by Mario Monti, a technocrat charged with restoring economic stability. Monti introduced an austerity programme before his government collapsed in Dec. 2012. Parliamentary elections in Feb. 2013 resulted in deadlock until April when Giorgio Napolitano was re-elected president and appointed Enrico Letta of the Democratic Party (PD) as prime minister. Letta was replaced as premier in Feb. 2014 by Matteo Renzi, also of the PD, who headed up a new, broad-based coalition.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Italy is bounded in the north by Switzerland and Austria, east by Slovenia and the Adriatic Sea, southeast by the Ionian Sea, south by the Mediterranean Sea, southwest by the Tyrrhenian Sea and Ligurian Sea and west by France.

The area is 302,071 sq. km. Populations at successive censuses (in 1,000) were as follows:

10 Feb. 1901	33,778	15 Oct. 1961	50,624
10 June 1911	36,921	24 Oct. 1971	54,137

The official language is Italian, spoken by 92.8% of the population in 2003. Romanians, numbering 997,000 in Dec. 2010, make up the largest ethnic minority group. In Jan. 2010, 7.0% of the population was foreign-born.

In addition to Sicily and Sardinia, there are a number of other Italian islands, the largest being Elba (363 sq. km), and the most distant Lampedusa, which is 205 km from Sicily but only 113 km from Tunisia.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

Vital statistics (and rates per 1,000 population), 2008: births, 576,659 (9.6); deaths, 585,126 (9.8). Marriages in 2007, 250,360 (4.2); divorces in 2006, 49,534 (0.8). Infant mortality rate, 2010 (up to one year of age): three per 1,000 live births. Expectation of life, 2007: females, 84.0 years; males, 78.1. In 2010, 20.3% of the population was over 65—one of the highest percentages in the world.

Annual population growth rate, 2000–05, 0.6%; fertility rate, 2008, 1.4 births per woman. With only 17.7% of births being to unmarried mothers in 2007 (albeit up from 8.1% in 1995), Italy has one of the lowest rates of births out of marriage in Europe.

In 2006 there were 3,701 suicides; 76.8% were men.

At 1 Jan. 2007 there were 2,938,922 foreigners living in Italy, up from 2,670,514 a year earlier. In 2005, 53,931 people emigrated from Italy and there were 304,960 immigrants into the country (compared to 440,301 immigrants in 2003). Since 1992 Italy has experienced net immigration every year, peaking in 2003, although for most of the 20th century up until the mid-1960s it saw mass emigration. Italy received 30,324 asylum applications in 2008, up from 14,053 in 2007. New legislation was introduced in 2002 to tighten up immigration rules.

CLIMATE

The climate varies considerably with latitude. In the south, it is warm temperate, with little rain in the summer months, but the north is cool temperate with rainfall more evenly distributed over the year. Florence, Jan. 47.7°F (8.7°C), July 79.5°F (26.4°C). Annual rainfall 33" (842 mm). Milan, Jan. 38.7°F (3.7°C), July 73.4°F (23.0°C). Annual rainfall 38" (984 mm). Naples, Jan. 50.2°F (10.1°C), July 77.4°F (25.2°C). Annual rainfall 36" (935 mm). Palermo, Jan. 52.5°F (11.4°C), July 78.4°F (25.8°C). Annual rainfall 35" (897 mm). Rome, Jan. 53.4°F (11.9°C), July 76.3°F (24.6°C). Annual rainfall 31" (793 mm). Venice, Jan. 43.3°F (6.3°C), July 70.9°F (21.6°C). Annual rainfall 32" (830 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

The Constitution dates from 1948. Italy is 'a democratic republic founded on work'. Parliament consists of the Chamber of Deputies and the Senate. The Chamber is elected for five years by universal and direct suffrage and consists of 630 deputies. The Senate is elected for five years on a regional basis by electors over the age of 25, each Region having at least seven senators. The total number of senators is 322, of which 315 are directly elected. The Valle d'Aosta is represented by one senator only and Molise by two. The President of the Republic can nominate five senators for life from eminent persons in the social, scientific, artistic and literary spheres. The President may become a senator for life. The President is elected in a joint session of Chamber and Senate, to which are added three delegates from each Regional Council (one from the Valle d'Aosta). A two-thirds majority is required for the election, but after a third indecisive scrutiny the absolute majority of votes is sufficient. The President must be 50 years or over; term of office, seven years. The Speaker of the Senate acts as the deputy President. The President can dissolve the chambers of parliament, except during the last six months of the presidential term.

There is a Constitutional Court that consists of 15 appointed judges, five each by the President, Parliament (in joint session) and the highest law and administrative courts. The Court can decide on the constitutionality of laws and decrees, define the powers of the State and Regions, judge conflicts between the State and Regions and between the Regions, and try the President and Ministers.

The revival of the Fascist Party is forbidden. Direct male descendants of King Victor Emmanuel are excluded from all public offices and have no right to vote or to be elected; their estates are forfeit to the State. For 56 years they were also banned from Italian territory until the constitution was changed in 2002 to allow them to return from exile.

A referendum was held in June 1991 to decide whether the system of preferential voting by indicating four candidates by their listed number should be changed to a simpler system, less open to abuse, of indicating a single candidate by name.

The electorate was 46m. Turnout was 62.5% (there was a 50% quorum). 95.6% of votes cast were in favour of the change. As a result, an electoral reform of 1993 provides for the replacement of proportional representation by a system in which 475 seats in the Chamber of Deputies are elected by a first-past-the-post single-round vote and 155 seats by proportional representation in a separate single-round vote on the same day. There are 27 electoral regions. There is a 4% threshold for entry to the Chamber of Deputies.

At a further referendum in April 1993, turnout was 77%. Voters favoured the eight reforms proposed, including a new system of election to the Senate and the abolition of some ministries. 75% of the Senate is now elected by a first-past-the-post system, the remainder by proportional representation; no party may present more than one candidate in each constituency. Subsequent proposed constitutional reforms included a directly elected president with responsibility for defence and foreign policy, a reduction in the number of seats in the Senate and in the lower house and the creation of a third chamber to speak on behalf of the regions. Greater powers over tourism, transport and welfare policy have been devolved to the regions.

RECENT ELECTIONS

Parliamentary elections were held on 24–25 Feb. 2013. Pier Luigi Bersani's centre-left coalition won 345 of 630 seats in the Chamber of Deputies (including the Democratic Party with 297 seats), Silvio Berlusconi's centre-right coalition 125 (including People of Freedom, 98), Beppe Grillo's Five Star Movement 109 and Prime Minister Mario Monti's coalition 47, with smaller parties accounting for the remainder. In the Senate, Bersani's coalition won 123 of 315 seats (including the Democratic Party, 111), Berlusconi's coalition 117 (including People of Freedom, 98), the Five Star Movement 54 and Monti 19, again with smaller parties accounting for the remainder.

Sergio Mattarella was elected president by an assembly of lawmakers and regional representatives on 31 Jan. 2015, winning 665 votes to Ferdinando Imposimato's 127 with 46 for Vittorio Feltri and 17 for Stefano Rodotà in the fourth round of voting after three earlier rounds had failed to produce a clear result.

European Parliament

Italy has 73 representatives. At the May 2014 elections turnout was 57.2% (65.1% in 2009). The Democratic Party won 31 seats with 40.8% of votes cast (political affiliation in European Parliament: Progressive Alliance of Socialists and Democrats); the Five Star Movement, 17 with 21.2% (Europe of Freedom and Direct Democracy); Forza Italia, 13 with 16.8% (European People's Party); the Northern League, 5 with 6.2% (non-attached); alliance of New Centre-Right, Union of the Centre and Populars for Italy, 3 with 4.4% (European People's Party); the Other Europe, 3 with 4.0% (European United Left/Nordic Green Left); South Tyrolean People's Party, 1 with 0.5% (European People's Party).

CURRENT LEADERS

Matteo Renzi

Position

Prime Minister

Introduction

When Matteo Renzi took office as prime minister on 22 Feb. 2014, he was the youngest premier in the country's post-unification history. Nicknamed 'Il Rottamatore' ('The Scrapper'), he is Italy's third consecutive head of government to come to power without being elected. He pledged to kick-start the economy and oversee government reform.

Early Life

Matteo Renzi was born on 11 Jan. 1975 in Florence and graduated in law from the city's university. In 1996 he joined the centrist Italian People's Party (which in 2002 integrated with the Democratic Party; PD) and within three years was appointed its regional secretary. In June 2004 he was elected president of the province of Florence.

After five years in the post, Renzi announced his candidacy for Florence's mayoral election. He won 48% of the vote on 9 June 2009, comfortably defeating his nearest rival, Giovanni Galli, and used his time in office to pedestrianize the city centre and cultivate his political persona.

He suffered the first significant setback of his political career in Dec. 2012 when he was defeated by the veteran Pier Luigi Bersani in the race for the PD-led centre-left coalition's endorsement as a prime ministerial candidate. However, Bersani's inability to build a workable governing coalition in the wake of the election of Feb. 2013 forced his resignation. PD deputy leader Enrico Letta subsequently established a coalition and was sworn in as prime minister.

In Dec. 2013 Renzi was elected PD leader and declared his intention to sweep away the party old guard—an ambition that brought him into conflict with Letta. In Feb. 2014 tensions came to a head and Renzi formally asked Letta to resign the premiership. When he did so, then President Giorgio Napolitano invited Renzi to form a new government.

Career in Office

Renzi came to power in the midst of Italy's worst economic crisis since the end of the Second World War, with two consecutive years of recession compounding a sovereign debt level in excess of annual GDP. He pledged major reforms, including constitutional changes and a new electoral law and a restructuring of the labour market and tax system. In April 2014 he outlined the government's framework economic policy, envisaging a reduction in income tax for lower earners and cuts in public spending, and in Sept. set out a controversial programme to reform restrictive employment rules, which was approved by parliament in Nov. Meanwhile, his plan to reduce the size and powers of the Senate was accepted by the upper house in Aug. 2014, while in May 2015 parliament approved an electoral reform giving the largest political party an automatic majority of seats. However, the credibility and reputation of Renzi's government was undermined in mid-2015 by a series of political scandals, resulting in a fall in public support.

DEFENCE

Head of the armed forces is the Defence Chief of Staff. Conscriptio was abolished at the end of 2004 with the military becoming all-professional from 2005. In Aug. 1998 the government voted to allow women into the armed forces.

In 2013 defence expenditure totalled US$25,229m. (US$410 per capita), representing 1.2% of GDP.

Army

Strength (2011) 107,500. Equipment includes 120 Leopard, 300 Centauro and 200 Ariete tanks. There are 38,300 Army reserves.

The paramilitary Carabinieri (police force with military status) number 106,700.

Navy

The principal ships of the Navy are the aircraft carriers Giuseppe Garibaldi and Cavour, commissioned in 1985 and 2008 respectively. The combatant forces also include six diesel submarines, four destroyers and 12 frigates. The Naval Air Arm, 2,200 strong, operates 16 combat aircraft and 50 helicopters.

Main naval bases are at La Spezia, Brindisi, Taranto and Augusta. The personnel of the Navy numbered 33,000 in 2011. There were 3,800 naval reservists.

Air Force

The Air Force has four Commands: air squadron; training; logistics; operations.

Air Force strength in 2011 was about 43,000. There were 247 combat aircraft in operation in 2011 including Typhoons and Tornados.

ECONOMY

Agriculture accounted for 2% of GDP, industry 24% and services 74% in 2012.

Italy's 'shadow' (black market) economy is estimated to constitute approximately 17% of the country's official GDP.

In 2014 Italy gave US$4.0bn. in international aid. In terms of a percentage of GNI, however, Italy was one of the least generous major industrialized countries, giving just 0.19%.

Overview

The Italian economy is the eurozone's third largest but has suffered from weak growth since the late 1990s. Its main sectors are tourism, fashion, engineering, chemical and automotive manufacturing and food production. A diversified industrial sector exists mainly in the north, driven by small- and medium-sized enterprises (many of which are family-owned) producing high-quality consumer goods. The main trading partners in 2014 were Germany (which accounted for 12.4% of exports), France (11.0%) and the USA (7.0%). Foreign direct investment averaged 0.8% of GDP between 2009 and 2013, which ranked Italy 10th among global investors, but is nevertheless well behind other leading European countries.

Over the decade to 2014 the economy recorded average annual growth of 0.6% as investment concerns, high unemployment and low consumption weakened productivity. The economy was smaller in 2013 than in 2000, with GDP per capita declining over that period by 13.7%. Growth averaged only 1.5% per year in the decade leading up to the global financial crisis (the highest annual GDP growth this century being 2.1% in 2006). Over this period Italy lost significant market share in world trade as a result of its specialization in slow-growing sectors of world demand, comparatively weak foreign direct investment and low investment in research and development. The economy contracted by 5.5% in 2009 as the country entered its worst recession since the Second World War. Italy struggled to emerge from recession and a second contraction that began in mid-2011 lasted through to 2014. The government is committed to a far-reaching structural reform agenda that the IMF expects will boost growth during 2016 and 2017.

There is a stark divide between the richer, industrialized north that boasts some of the highest incomes in Europe and the less developed, welfare-dependent, agricultural south (known as the Mezzogiorno). This gap has been magnified by the recent economic crisis and exacerbated by the growth of the black economy (particularly in the agricultural and construction sectors), which was estimated to be worth around 20% of GDP annually. In 2013 GDP per capita in the northern regions was nearly twice as high as that in the south.

Public debt stood at a record 132.1% of GDP in 2014, burdening Italy with funding requirements of €450bn. In the same year the government deficit was recorded at 3.0% of GDP. The country has one of the most restrictive labour markets in Europe, leading to structural unemployment. The jobless rate peaked in Nov. 2014 at a record 13.2% (compared to the then eurozone average of 11.5%) but had declined to 11.4% by Nov. 2015 (against the eurozone's 10.5%). Youth unemployment remains one of the highest in Europe and has been increasing steadily since the mid-2000s, reaching over 44% in the second quarter of 2015 (the highest level since the late 1970s). The lack of growth and jobs has affected government tax revenues, while austerity measures have further hindered expansion. The administration of Prime Minister Matteo Renzi has prioritized labour market reform.

With low birth rates and a high and rising ratio of people over 65, Italy faces one of the greatest challenges from population ageing of any OECD country. The ageing society, together with ongoing eurozone financial difficulties, low productivity, high unemployment, weak competitiveness and a growing regional divide, are all expected to constrain Italy's medium-term growth prospects. Quota-driven immigration is a further brake on economic activity. The implementation of planned structural reform is necessary to support business expansion and attract foreign investment, which is historically low owing to complex bureaucracy and inconsistent enforcement of regulations.

Currency

On 1 Jan. 1999 the euro (EUR) became the legal currency in Italy at the irrevocable conversion rate of 1,936.27 lire to 1 euro. The euro, which consists of 100 cents, has been in circulation since 1 Jan. 2002. On the introduction of the euro there was a 'dual circulation' period before the lira ceased to be legal tender on 28 Feb. 2002. Euro banknotes in circulation on 1 Jan. 2002 had a total value of €97.4bn.

Inflation rates (based on OECD statistics):

2.2%	2.2%	2.0%	3.5%	0.8%	1.6%	2.9%	3.3%	1.3%	0.2%

In Sept. 2009 gold reserves were 78.83m. troy oz and foreign exchange reserves US$35,474m. Total money supply in Aug. 2009 was €711,993m.

Budget

In 2011 central government revenues totalled €595.17bn. (€591.83bn. in 2010) and expenditures €655.81bn. (€654.26bn. in 2010). Principal sources of revenue in 2011: social security contributions, €211.97bn.; taxes on income, profits and capital gains, €191.98bn.; taxes on goods and services, €132.44bn. Main items of expenditure by economic type in 2011: social benefits, €302.95bn.; grants, €118.47bn.; compensation of employees, €98.39bn.

Italy's budget deficit in 2014 was 3.0% of GDP (2013, 2.9%; 2012, 3.0%). The required target set by the EU is a budget deficit of no more than 3%.

VAT was increased from 21% to 22% in Oct. 2013. The reduced rates were kept at 10% and 4%.

The public debt totalled €1,988,363m. at 31 Dec. 2012.

Performance

Real GDP growth rates (based on OECD statistics):

2005	2006	2007	2008	2009	2010	2011	2012	2013	2014
1.1%	2.1%	1.4%	-1.1%	-5.5%	1.7%	0.7%	-2.9%	-1.8%	-0.4%

According to the National Institute of Statistics, the real GDP growth rate was 0.8% in 2015. Total GDP was US$2,141.2bn. in 2014.

Banking and Finance

The bank of issue is the Bank of Italy (founded 1893). It is owned by public-sector banks. Its Governor (Ignazio Visco) is nominated by the government for a six-year term, renewable once. In 1991 it received increased responsibility for the supervision of banking and stock exchange affairs, and in 1993 greater independence from the government.

The number of banks has gradually been declining in recent years, from 1,176 in 1990 to 807 (32,818 branches) in 2007. Of these, 439 were mutual banks and 39 were co-operative banks. Italy's largest bank in terms of assets is UniCredit (until May 2008 known as UniCredito Italiano). In June 2005 UniCredito Italiano finalized an agreement to acquire Germany's HypoVereinsbank in Europe's biggest cross-border banking takeover. In 2006 it had Italian assets of €282bn. (€752bn. including assets from its German and eastern European operations). In Aug. 2006 Italy's second and third largest banks, Banca Intesa and Sanpaolo IMI, agreed to merge. The merger was approved in Dec. 2006, creating the largest Italian bank, Intesa Sanpaolo, with assets of €541bn.

The 'Amato' law of July 1990 gave public sector banks the right to become joint stock companies and permitted the placing of up to 49% of their equity with private shareholders. In 1999 the last state-controlled bank was sold off.

On 31 Dec. 2005 banks had total deposits of €690,746m.

Gross external debt totalled US$2,356,371m. in June 2012.

Italy attracted US$11.5bn. worth of foreign direct investment in 2014, down from a record US$43.8bn. in 2007.

Legislation reforming stock markets came into effect in Dec. 1990. In 1996 local stock exchanges, relics of pre-unification Italy, were closed, and stock exchange activities concentrated in Milan.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

In 2011, 11.5% of energy consumption came from renewables (wind power, solar power, hydro-electric power, tidal power, geothermal energy and biomass), compared to the European Union average of 13.0%. A target of 17% has been set by the EU for 2020.

Environment

Italy's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2011 were the equivalent of 6.7 tonnes per capita.

Electricity

In 2011 installed capacity was 118,443 MW and the total power generated was 301.8bn. kWh (75.5% thermal and 15.8% hydro-electric). Consumption per capita was 5,733 kWh in 2011. Italy has four nuclear reactors in permanent shutdown, the last having closed in 1990. Plans to build a series of new reactors were proposed in 2008, but were subsequently abandoned following a referendum in 2011 in which 94% of votes cast were against the construction of new nuclear plants.

Oil and Gas

Oil production, 2012, 5.4m. tonnes. Proven oil reserves in 2012 were 1.4bn. bbls. In 2012 natural gas production was 7.8bn. cu. metres with proven reserves of 100bn. cu. metres.

Minerals

Fuel and mineral resources fail to meet needs. Only sulphur and mercury yield a substantial surplus for exports.

Production of metals and minerals (in tonnes) was as follows:

	1998	1999	2000	2001	2002
Sulphur	3,413,522	3,338,162	3,339,761	—	—
Feldspar	2,503,541	2,493,846	2,851,289	3,240,457	3,159,569
Bentonite	580,209	562,674	636,589	579,029	463,231
Lead	10,102	9,734	5,961	4,016	4,709
Zinc	5,242	—	—	—	—

Agriculture

In 2012, 833,400 persons were employed in agriculture, of whom 242,100 were female. The agricultural area totalled 13,630,000 ha. in 2013. Italy had 6,827,000 ha. of arable land in 2013 and 2,260,000 ha. of permanent crops. There were 1,621,000 agricultural holdings in 2010, down from 2,154,000 in 2000. In 2012 organic crops were grown in an area covering 1.17m. ha., representing 8.6% of all agricultural land.

Food and live animals accounted for 5.7% of exports and 7.1% of imports in 2010.

In 2005, 3,069,599 tractors were in use and 27,445 harvester-threshers.

Output of principal crops (in 1,000 tonnes) in 2005: sugar beets, 14,156; maize, 10,428; wheat, 7,717; grapes, 6,892; tomatoes, 6,640; olives, 3,775; oranges, 2,261; apples, 2,192; potatoes, 1,756; peaches and nectarines, 1,693; rice, 1,445; barley, 1,214.

Wine production in 2010 totalled 48,525,000 hectolitres (18.4% of the world total) making Italy the world's largest wine producer. Wine consumption has declined considerably in recent times, from more than 110 litres per person in 1966 to 50.1 litres per person in 2008.

Livestock, 2005: cattle, 6,251,925; sheep and goats, 8,900,062; pigs, 9,200,270; horses, 278,471; buffaloes, 205,093; chickens, 90,387,988. Livestock products, 2003 (in 1,000 tonnes): cow's milk, 11,000; sheep's milk, 790; buffalo's milk, 140; goat's milk, 112; pork and pork products, 1,587; poultry meat, 1,156; beef and veal, 1,125; cheese, 1,099; butter, 130; eggs, 672. Italy is the second largest producer of sheep's milk, after China.

Forestry

In 2010 forests covered 9.15m. ha. or 31% of the total land area. Timber production was 7.74m. cu. metres in 2011.

Fisheries

In 2012 the fishing fleet comprised 12,783 vessels of 165,619 GT. The catch in 2010 was 234,101 tonnes, of which more than 98% were from marine waters. Imports of fishery commodities were valued at US$6,211m. in 2012 and exports at US$775m.

INDUSTRY

The leading companies by market capitalization in Italy in March 2015 were: Eni, an integrated oil company (US$63.0bn.); Intesa Sanpaolo, a banking group (US$56.8bn.); and Enel, an electricity and gas company (US$42.5bn.).

In 2007 industry accounted for 28% of GDP, with manufacturing contributing 18%.

Industrial products (in tonnes): cement (2008), 43.0m.; distillate fuel oil (including San Marino; 2007), 41.1m.; crude steel (2007), 32.0m.; petrol (including San Marino; 2007), 21.4m.; residual fuel oil (including San Marino; 2007), 17.4m.; pig iron (2006), 11.5m.; lime (2005), 5.9m.; polyethylene (2004), 1.4m.

Motor vehicle production in 2009 totalled 843,239 units (661,100 cars). In 2007, 1.34m. fridge-freezers and 9.83m. washing and drying machines were produced. Italy was the leading mineral water producer in 2004, with 13,117.4m. litres. In 2004, 3,766.3m. litres of soft drinks and 1,369.2m. litres of beer were produced.

Labour

The labour force in 2013 was 25,474,000 (24,007,000 in 2003). 63.9% of the population aged 15–64 was economically active in 2013. Of those in employment in 2013, 69.4% worked in services, 27.2% in industry and 3.4% in agriculture. In that year 41.8% of the labour force was female. 47.1% of the labour force had a secondary education as the highest level and 18.8% had a tertiary education. Unemployment stood at 11.4% in Dec. 2015 (down from 12.7% in 2014 as a whole). Long-term unemployment is particularly high, with 48.5% of the labour force in 2010 having been out of work for more than a year. In 2012 the pensionable retirement age was 62 for women employed in the private sector, 63 for self-employed women and 66 for men (both employed and self-employed) and women in the public sector. The pensionable retirement age for women not in the public sector is gradually increasing and will be 66 years by 2018. It is expected that the age will increase for both sexes to at least 67 in 2021.

Italy had 8,000 people living in slavery according to the Walk Free Foundation's 2013 Global Slavery Index.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

The following table shows the value of Italy's foreign trade (in US$1bn.):

	2006	2007	2008	2009	2010
Imports c.i.f.	442.6	511.8	561.0	414.8	486.6
Exports f.o.b.	417.2	500.2	541.8	406.5	447.5

Principal import suppliers, 2010 (US$1m.): Germany, 77,464; France, 40,323; China, 38,135; Netherlands, 25,957; Spain, 22,051. Principal export markets, 2010 (US$1m.): Germany, 57,809; France, 51,515; USA, 26,832; Spain, 25,707; UK, 23,722.

Imports/exports by category, 2010 (in US$1bn.):

	Imports	Exports
Beverages and tobacco	4.6	7.2
Chemicals and related products	65.7	51.2
Food and live animals	34.8	25.5

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

Roads totalled 175,430 km in 2005, of which 6,542 km were motorways, 21,524 km were highways and main roads, and 147,364 km were regional and provincial roads. In 2005 there were 47,104,048 motor vehicles, including: passenger cars, 34,882,476 (594 per 1,000 inhabitants); buses and coaches, 96,477; vans and trucks, 3,982,001. There were 5,426 fatalities in road accidents in 2005.

Rail

The length of state-run railway (Ferrovie dello Stato) in 2011 was 16,726 km (11,925 km electrified). Italy's first section of high-speed railway opened in 1981; by 2009 the total length had reached 923 km. In 2011 the railways carried 522.9m. passengers and 46.1m. tonnes of freight. There are metros in Milan (76.0 km), Rome (38.0 km), Naples (29.8 km), Turin (9.6 km), Genoa (5.3 km) and Catania (3.8 km), and tram/light rail networks in Bergamo, Cagliari, Florence, Genoa, Messina, Milan, Naples, Padua, Perugia, Rome, Sassari, Trieste, Turin and Venice. A driverless automated metro system opened in Brescia in March 2013.

Civil Aviation

There are major international airports at Bologna (G. Marconi), Genoa (Cristoforo Colombo), Milan (Linate and Malpensa), Naples (Capodichino), Pisa (Galileo Galilei), Rome (Leonardo da Vinci/Fiumicino), Turin (Caselle) and Venice (Marco Polo). A number of other airports have a small selection of international flights. Alitalia commenced operations in Jan. 2009 as a privately-owned company (25%-owned by Air France-KLM), having taken over the name, landing rights and significant assets of the former national carrier (also Alitalia, which went bankrupt in 2008) and having merged with rival airline Air One. In Dec. 2014 the Abu Dhabi-based Etihad Airways purchased a 49% stake in Alitalia. There are a number of other Italian airlines, notably Meridiana. In 2013 the Alitalia group carried 23,993,486 passengers. In 2012 Rome (Fiumicino) airport handled 36,980,157 passengers (24,925,722 on international flights) and 143,172 tonnes of freight. Milan Malpensa was the second busiest for passengers, handling 18,522,760 (14,773,460 on international flights), but the busiest for freight, with 414,318 tonnes.

Shipping

In Jan. 2009 there were 779 ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 13.32m. GT. Of the 779 vessels registered, 280 were passenger ships, 212 oil tankers, 131 general cargo ships, 62 bulk carriers, 45 chemical tankers, 26 liquid gas tankers and 23 container ships. The Italian-controlled fleet comprised 745 vessels of 1,000 GT or over in Jan. 2009, of which 527 were under the Italian flag and 218 under foreign flags. The chief ports are Genoa (which handled 54,218,000 tonnes of cargo in 2008), Trieste (48,279,000 tonnes in 2008) and Taranto (43,271,000 tonnes in 2008). Gioia Tauro, the busiest container port, handled 3.5m. TEUs (twenty-foot equivalent units) in 2008.

Telecommunications

In May 1999 Olivetti bought a controlling stake in the telephone operator Telecom Italia, and in July 2001 Pirelli, backed by the Benetton clothing empire, in turn paid €7bn. (US$6.1bn.) to take over control of Telecom Italia. In 2014 mobile phone subscribers numbered 94,200,000, equivalent to 1,542.5 per 1,000 persons. TIM (Telecom Italia Mobile) is the largest operator, with a 34% share of the market, just ahead of Vodafone Italia, which has a 33% share. There were 20,570,000 main (fixed) telephone lines in 2014. 62.0% of the population were internet users in 2014. There were 235.3 fixed broadband subscribers per 1,000 inhabitants in 2014. In March 2012 there were 20.9m. Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

Italy has one court of cassation, in Rome, and is divided for the administration of justice into 29 appeal court districts, subdivided into 164 tribunal circondari (districts). There are also 93 first degree assize courts and 29 assize courts of appeal. For civil business, besides the magistracy above mentioned, Giudici di pace have jurisdiction in petty claims.

2,818,834 crimes were reported in 2012. In Aug. 2013 there were 64,835 persons in prison (including persons imprisoned by San Marino). In 1947 the re-established democracy rewrote the Legislative Order; the constitution of the Italian Republic abolished the death penalty sanctioned in 1930 by Codice Penale, commonly known as Codice Rocco. Although the death penalty was abolished for ordinary crimes in 1947, it was not until 1994 that it was abolished for all crimes.

Italy was ranked 25th of 102 countries for criminal justice and 36th for civil justice in the 2015 World Justice Project Rule of Law Index, which provides data on how the rule of law is experienced by the general public across eight categories.

Education

Five years of primary and five years of secondary education are compulsory from the age of six. In 2005–06 there were 24,845 pre-school institutions with 1,662,139 children and 140,687 teachers (state and non-state schools); 18,218 primary schools with 2,790,254 pupils and 293,091 teachers (state and non-state schools); 7,886 compulsory secondary schools (scuole secondarie primo grado) with 1,764,230 pupils and 211,093 teachers (state and non-state schools); and 6,565 higher secondary schools with 2,691,713 pupils and 305,383 teachers (state and non-state schools).

Higher secondary education is subdivided into classical (ginnasio and classical liceo), scientific (scientific liceo), language lyceum, professional institutes and technical education: agricultural, industrial, commercial, technical, nautical institutes, institutes for surveyors, institutes for girls (five-year course) and teacher-training institutes (five-year course).

In 2005–06 there were 98 universities (79 state and 19 non-state), of which two are universities of Italian studies for foreigners, three specialized universities (commerce; education; Roman Catholic), three polytechnical university institutes; seven specialized university institutes (architecture; bio-medicine; modern languages; naval studies; oriental studies; social studies; teacher training). In 2005–06 there were 1,823,886 university students and 61,097 academic staff. Europe's first university was founded in 1088 in Bologna.

Estimated adult literacy rate, 2009, 98.9% (male 99.2%; female 98.6%).

In 2008 public expenditure on education came to 4.6% of GDP and 9.4% of total government spending.

Health

In 2003 the National Health Service included 1,367 hospitals of which 746 were public with 184,796 beds and 621 private hospitals with 55,059 beds. There were 246,834 physicians, 28,566 dentists and 59,580 pharmacists in 2008; and 379,213 nursing and midwifery personnel in 2009. In 2009 Italy spent 9.5% of its GDP on health.

Welfare

Social expenditure is made up of transfers which the central public departments, local departments and social security departments make to families. Payment is principally for pensions, family allowances and health services. Expenditure on subsidies, public assistance to various classes of people and people injured by political events or national disasters are also included.

In 2012 the minimum retirement age was 66 for men and women in the public sector, and 62 for women in the private sector (rising gradually to 66 by 2018). In order to receive this 'old-age pension', social security contributions must have been made for at least 20 years (five years if the claimant is aged 70 or older). The age restriction does not apply in the case of men who started making contributions before 1 Jan. 1996 with 42 years and three months of pension contributions, and women with 41 years and three months. Pensions accounted for 15.4% of GDP in 2009.

Public pensions are indexed to prices; 23,257,480 pensions were paid in 2005, with payments totalling €214,881.3m. (including 16,875,341 private sector, with payments totalling €152,483.5m.). The average annual pension in 2005 was €9,239. Social contributions in 2005 totalled €184,642m.

RELIGION

The treaty between the Holy See and Italy of 11 Feb. 1929, confirmed by article 7 of the Constitution of the republic, lays down that the Catholic Apostolic Roman Religion is the only religion of the State. Other creeds are permitted, provided they do not profess principles, or follow rites, contrary to public order or moral behaviour.

The appointment of archbishops and of bishops is made by the Holy See; but the Holy See submits to the Italian government the name of the person to be appointed in order to obtain an assurance that the latter will not raise objections of a political nature. In Feb. 2016 there were 47 cardinals.

According to the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life, in 2010 there were an estimated 50.3m. Roman Catholics, 7.5m. people with no religious affiliation, 2.2m. Muslims, 800,000 Protestants and 500,000 other Christians.

CULTURE

The Rhaetian Railway in the Albula/Bernina Landscapes (2008) is shared with Switzerland and the Prehistoric Pile dwellings around the Alps (2011) are shared with Austria, France, Germany, Slovenia and Switzerland.

Press

In 2011 there were 97 paid-for dailies with a combined circulation of 4.3m. copies and ten free dailies with a combined circulation of 1.7m. copies. Several of the papers are owned or supported by political parties. The church and various economic groups exert strong right of centre influence on editorial opinion. Most newspapers are regional but Corriere della Sera (which has the highest circulation of any Italian newspaper), La Repubblica, Il Sole 24 Ore, La Gazzetta and La Stampa are the most important of those papers that are nationally circulated. In 2011 there were 101 newspaper online editions.

Tourism

In 2010, 43.6m. international tourists visited Italy (43.2m. in 2009); receipts from tourism in 2010 were US$38.8bn. (US$40.2bn. in 2009). Only France, the USA, China and Spain received more foreign tourists in 2010.

Festivals

One of the most traditional festivals in Italy is the Carnival di Ivrea which lasts for a week in late Feb. or early March. Among the famous arts festivals is the Venice Film Festival in Sept. Venice also plays host, in the ten days before Ash Wednesday, to a large carnival. Major music festivals are the Maggio Musicale Fiorentino in Florence (May–June), the Ravenna Festival (June–July), the Spoleto Festival (June–July), the Rossini Opera Festival at Pesaro (Aug.) and the Verona Arena Opera Festival (June–Aug.). The biggest rock festival is the Italia Wave Love Festival in Livorno (known as the Arezzo Wave Festival until 2007), which is held in July, while the largest jazz festival is the Umbria Jazz Festival, also in July. Until 2010 Europe's largest reggae festival, Rototom Sunsplash, was held at Osoppo, in Tuscany. However, it was forced to relocate to Spain after the Italian authorities accused the festival and its organizers of facilitating the use of drugs.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Jamaica was discovered by Columbus in 1494 and was occupied by the Spaniards from 1509 until 1655 when the island was captured by the English. In 1661 a representative constitution was established consisting of a governor, privy council, legislative council and legislative assembly. The slavery introduced by the Spanish was augmented as sugar production increased in value and extent in the 18th century. The plantation economy collapsed with the abolition of the slave trade in the late 1830s. The 1866 Crown Colony government was introduced with a legislative council. In 1884 a partially elective legislative council was instituted. Women were enfranchised in 1919. By the late 1930s, demands for self-government increased. The constitution of Nov. 1944 introduced a freely-elected house of representatives of 32 members, a legislative council (the upper house) of 15 members, and an executive council. In 1958 Jamaica joined with Trinidad, Barbados, the Leeward Islands and the Windward Islands to create the West Indies Federation. In 1959 internal self-government was achieved. Jamaica withdrew from the West Indies Federation in 1961 and became an independent state within the British Commonwealth in 1962.

Power alternated between the Jamaica Labour Party and the People's National Party. The latter held power from 1989 until 2007, with Portia Simpson-Miller becoming the country's first female premier in 2006. In May 2010 a state of emergency was declared after the death of dozens of people in an operation to arrest one of the country's leading drug lords, Christopher 'Dudus' Coke. He was subsequently captured and extradited to the USA.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Jamaica is an island in the Caribbean Sea about 150 km south of Cuba. The area is 10,991 sq. km (4,244 sq. miles). The population at the census of April 2011 was 2,697,983, distributed on the basis of the 13 parishes of the island as follows: Kingston and St Andrew, 662,426; St Catherine, 516,218; Clarendon, 245,103; Manchester, 189,797; St James, 183,811; St Ann, 172,362; St Elizabeth, 150,205; Westmoreland, 144,103; St Mary, 113,615; St Thomas, 93,902; Portland, 81,744; Trelawny, 75,164; Hanover, 69,533. 2011 density: 245 per sq. km. There is a worldwide Jamaican diaspora of more than 2m.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 2.79m.

Chief towns (in 1,000), 2011: Kingston (metropolitan area), 585; Portmore, 182; Spanish Town, 147; Montego Bay, 110; May Pen, 62.

In 2011, 52.1% of the population were urban. The population is about 92% of African ethnic origin. The official language is English. Patois, a combination of English and African languages, is widely spoken.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

Vital statistics (2006): births, 46,277 (17.4 per 1,000 population); deaths, 16,317 (6.1); marriages, 23,181 (8.7); divorces, 1,768 (0.7). There were 17,100 emigrants in 2006, mainly to the USA. Expectation of life at birth, 2007, 68.3 years for males and 75.1 years for females. Annual population growth rate, 2008–10, 0.3%; infant mortality, 2010, 20 per 1,000 live births; fertility rate, 2008, 2.4 births per woman.

CLIMATE

A tropical climate but with considerable variation. High temperatures on the coast are usually mitigated by sea breezes, while upland areas enjoy cooler and less humid conditions. Rainfall is plentiful over most of Jamaica, being heaviest in May and from Aug. to Nov. The island lies in the hurricane zone. Kingston, Jan. 76°F (24.4°C), July 81°F (27.2°C). Annual rainfall 32" (800 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

Under the constitution of Aug. 1962 the Crown is represented by a Governor-General appointed by the Crown on the advice of the Prime Minister. The Governor-General is assisted by a Privy Council of six appointed members. The Legislature comprises the House of Representatives and the Senate. The Senate consists of 21 senators appointed by the Governor-General, 13 on the advice of the Prime Minister, eight on the advice of the Leader of the Opposition. The House of Representatives (increased from 60 to 63 members for the 2011 election) is elected by universal adult suffrage for a period not exceeding five years. Electors and elected must be Jamaican or Commonwealth citizens resident in Jamaica for at least 12 months before registration.

National Anthem

'Eternal Father, bless our land'; words by H. Sherlock, tune by R. Lightbourne.

RECENT ELECTIONS

In parliamentary elections held on 25 Feb. 2016 the opposition Jamaica Labour Party took (JLP) 32 of the 63 seats with 50.1% of votes cast (up from 21 in 2011) and the People's National Party (PNP) 31 with 49.7% (down from 42 in 2011). Turnout was 47%.

CURRENT LEADERS

Andrew Holness

Position

Prime Minister

Introduction

Andrew Holness took office as prime minister for a second time on 3 March 2016. His first term had been brief, having been appointed following the resignation of Bruce Golding on 23 Oct. 2011 only to suffer defeat at the polls just two months later. He is the leader of the Jamaica Labour Party (JLP).

Early Life

Holness was born in Spanish Town, in the south of the island, on 22 July 1972. He studied at the University of the West Indies, where he received a master's degree in development studies. On leaving university he worked for a voluntary organization based in Kingston, before accepting a job as personal assistant to the then JLP leader, Edward Seaga.

In 1997 Holness was elected to parliament representing the constituency of Saint Andrew West Central. He was made opposition spokesperson on land and development in 1999, a position he held for three years before taking over the portfolio for housing. In 2005 he moved to education and when the JLP returned to power after an 18-year hiatus in 2007 he was asked to lead that ministry.

When Bruce Golding resigned over his handling of the extradition of Jamaican drug lord Christopher Coke to the USA in 2011, Holness became the country's youngest ever prime minister and the first to have been born post-independence. Although his party suffered a landslide defeat at the ballot box on 29 Dec. 2011, he remained leader in opposition.

After a campaign dominated by economic issues, the JLP was narrowly returned to power in elections held on 25 Feb. 2016 with 32 seats against 31 for the People's National Party. Juliet Holness, the prime minister's wife, was among those elected to parliament.

Career in Office

With the previous government having pursued austerity policies to meet the conditions of a 2013 IMF loan, Holness promised to tackle unemployment, grow the economy by turning Jamaica into the 'Silicon Valley of the Caribbean' and invest in education and health care.

DEFENCE

In 2013 defence expenditure totalled US$129m. (US$44 per capita), representing 0.8% of GDP.

Army

The Jamaica Defence Force consists of a Regular and a Reserve Force. Total strength (Army, 2009): 3,377, including 877 reservists.

Navy

The Coast Guard, numbering 250 in 2009 including 60 reservists, operates nine patrol craft based at Port Royal and Pedro Cays.

Air Force

The Air Wing of the Jamaica Defence Force was formed in July 1963 and has since been expanded and trained successively by the British Army Air Corps and Canadian Air Force personnel. There are no combat aircraft. Personnel (2009), 156 (including 16 reservists).

ECONOMY

In 2009 agriculture accounted for 6.2% of GDP, industry 22.1% and services 71.7%.

Overview

Jamaica, a small and open upper-middle-income economy, is dominated by the service sector. Tourism, the biggest source of employment, proved resilient during the global economic crisis, with visitor arrivals increasing in 2009. Leading exports are alumina, bauxite, bananas and sugar. The agricultural sector has rebounded well from Tropical Storm Nicole in 2010. Worker remittances account for 15% of GDP.

The economy grew by 1.4% in 2011 after recording negative growth between 2008 and 2010. Prior to that there had been four decades of negligible or no growth. The national debt represented 139% of GDP in 2011. Unemployment stood at 14.3% in 2012 and is particularly high among the young. Youth unemployment, rural poverty, political instability and high levels of crime present significant obstacles to long-term growth.

Currency

The unit of currency is the Jamaican dollar (JMD) of 100 cents. The Jamaican dollar was floated in Sept. 1990. Inflation was 22.0% in 2008 but has since fallen, and was 9.4% in 2013 and 6.7% in 2014. Foreign exchange reserves were US$2,423m. in July 2005 and total money supply was J$68,141m.

Budget

Budgetary central government revenue and expenditure for fiscal years ending 31 March (in J$1m.):

	2008	2009	2010 ¹
Expenditure	275,223	325,731	412,992
		¹ Provisional.

The chief items of current revenue are income taxes, consumption taxes and customs duties. The chief items of current expenditure are public debt, education and health.

There is a General Consumption Tax of 16.5%.

Performance

After suffering major economic difficulties with negative growth in 1996, 1997 and 1998, Jamaica's economy recovered slightly, with growth reaching 2.9% in 2006. However, there was again negative growth in 2008, of -0.8%, in 2009, of -3.4%, and in 2010, of -1.5%. In 2011 the economy experienced another slight recovery, growing by 1.4%, before contracting by 0.5% in 2012. Jamaica then came out of recession with growth of 0.2% in 2013 and 0.4% in 2014. Total GDP was US$13.9bn. in 2014.

Banking and Finance

The central bank and bank of issue is the Bank of Jamaica. The Governor is Brian Wynter.

In 2002 there were five commercial banks, three development banks and two other banks (National Export-Import Bank of Jamaica and the National Investment Bank of Jamaica). Total assets of commercial banks at March 2006 were J$385,759.5m.; deposits were J$255,315.4m.

Foreign debt was US$13,865m. in 2010, representing 104.2% of GNI.

There is a stock exchange in Kingston, which participates in the regional Caribbean exchange.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

In 2011 carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy were the equivalent of 3.4 tonnes per capita.

Electricity

The Jamaica Public Service Company Limited is the public supplier. Total installed capacity was 0.8m. kW in 2011. Production in 2011 totalled 5-10bn. kWh; consumption per capita in 2011 was 1,851 kWh.

Oil and Gas

There is an oil refinery in Kingston.

Minerals

Jamaica ranks among the world's largest producers of bauxite. Ceramic clays, marble, silica sand and gypsum are also commercially viable. Production in 2005 (in tonnes): bauxite ore, 14.1m.; limestone, 2.6m.; sand and gravel, 2.4m.; gypsum, 302,066.

Agriculture

In 2012 there were an estimated 120,000 ha. of arable land and 100,000 ha. of permanent crops.

2012 production (in 1,000 tonnes): sugarcane, 1,475; coconuts (estimate), 315; yams, 145; oranges, 92; pumpkins and squash, 52; bananas, 47; sweet potatoes, 42; plantains, 36.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

In 2007 the island had 22,121 km of roads, including 44 km of motorway and 4,922 km of main roads. In 2006 there were 373,700 passenger cars in use and 29,100 motorcycles and mopeds. There were 350 fatalities in traffic accidents in 2007.

Rail

Passenger traffic ceased in 1992, but restarted in 2011. However, it closed again in Aug. 2012 as a result of the service suffering heavy losses. Freight transport continues on a limited basis, mainly for carrying bauxite to docks.

Civil Aviation

International airlines operate through the Norman Manley and Sangster airports at Palisadoes and Montego Bay. Sangster International is the busiest for passenger traffic, handling 3,378,000 passengers in 2006-07. Norman Manley airport is busier for freight, handling 16,136 tonnes of freight in 2006 but only 1,715,078 passengers. Air Jamaica, originally set up in conjunction with BOAC and BWIA in 1966, became a new company, Air Jamaica (1968) Ltd. In 1969 it began operations as Jamaica's national airline. It was acquired in May 2010 by Caribbean Airlines, the national airline of Trinidad and Tobago, but the name Air Jamaica has been retained. In 2006 scheduled airline traffic of Jamaica-based carriers flew 52m. km and carried 1,527,000 passengers.

Shipping

In Jan. 2009 there were 21 ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 229,000 GT. Kingston handled 16.3m. tonnes of cargo in 2008 (down from 17.7m. tonnes in 2007).

Telecommunications

In 2011 there were 272,100 landline telephone subscriptions (equivalent to 98.9 per 1,000 inhabitants) and 2,974,700 mobile phone subscriptions (or 1,081.2 per 1,000 inhabitants). There were 261.0 internet users per 1,000 inhabitants in 2010. Fixed internet subscriptions totalled 114,600 in 2009 (42.0 per 1,000 inhabitants). In Dec. 2011 there were 684,000 Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The Judicature comprises a Supreme Court, a court of appeal, resident magistrates' courts, petty sessional courts, coroners' courts, a traffic court and a family court which was instituted in 1975. The Chief Justice is head of the judiciary. Jamaica was one of ten countries to sign an agreement in Feb. 2001 establishing a Caribbean Court of Justice to replace the British Privy Council as the highest civil and criminal court. In the meantime the number of signatories has risen to 12. The court was inaugurated at Port of Spain, Trinidad on 16 April 2005 but Jamaica has yet to accept it as its final court of appeal.

In 2010 there were 1,428 murders, down from the record high of 1,682 in 2009. The rate of 52 per 100,000 persons (61 per 100,000 in 2009) is more than ten times that of the USA and ranks among the highest in the world. The death penalty is permitted but has not been used since 1988.

The population in penal institutions in Sept. 2013 was 4,201 (152 per 100,000 of national population). Jamaica was ranked 45th of 102 countries for criminal justice and 52nd for civil justice in the 2015 World Justice Project Rule of Law Index, which provides data on how the rule of law is experienced by the general public across eight categories.

Education

Adult literacy was an estimated 86.4% in 2009 (91.1% among females but only 81.2% among males).

Education is free in government-operated schools. Enrolment in 2007 in primary institutions was 310,000; in secondary institutions, 257,000; and in tertiary institutions (2008), 61,000. Numbers of teaching staff: primary (2005), 11,793; secondary (2007), 13,006; tertiary (2003), 2,006.

The University of the West Indies, which was founded in 1948 and has its main campus at Kingston, is the oldest, fully regional institution of higher learning in the Commonwealth Caribbean. In 2006 there were two public universities and two private universities as well as six teacher training colleges, five community colleges, and several technical/vocational training institutes and specialist colleges. Large numbers of educated Jamaicans have left the island over the past 30 years, but in the early part of the 21st century there are signs that young professionals are increasingly returning to Jamaica. However, 72% of Jamaican graduates live in OECD member countries.

In 2005 public expenditure on education came to 5.6% of GNI and 8.8% of total government spending.

Health

In 2012 Jamaica had 17 hospital beds per 10,000 people. In the period 2000–10 there were 8.5 physicians for every 10,000 population, 16.5 nursing and midwifery personnel per 10,000 population and 0.8 dentistry personnel per 10,000.

Welfare

The official retirement age is 65 years (men) or 60 years (women). The old-age pension is made up of a basic benefit of J$900 a week (reduced to J$675 a week with annual average contributions of between 26 and 38 weeks; J$450 with 13 weeks to 25 weeks), plus an earnings-related benefit of J$0.06 a week for every J$13 of employer-employee contributions paid during the working lifetime.

Jamaica's social welfare projects also cover disability and survivor benefits, sickness and maternity, and work injury. Jamaica has no unemployment programmes.

RELIGION

Freedom of worship is guaranteed under the Constitution. The main Christian denominations are Anglican, Baptist, Roman Catholic, Methodist, Church of God, United Church in Jamaica and the Cayman Islands (Presbyterian-Congregational-Disciples of Christ), Moravian, Seventh-day Adventist, Pentecostal, Salvation Army and Quaker. Pocomania is a mixture of Christianity and African survivals. Non-Christians include Hindus, Jews, Muslims, Bahá'í followers and Rastafarians.

CULTURE

Press

In 2008 there were three daily newspapers with a combined circulation of 115,000.

Tourism

In 2011 there were a record 1,951,752 non-resident overnight tourists, and 1,125,481 cruise passenger arrivals (down from a peak of 1,336,994 in 2006).

World Heritage Sites

Jamaica has one site on the UNESCO World Heritage List: Blue and John Crow Mountains (2015), a forested and mountainous region in the southeast of Jamaica.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

When the last ice sheets covered much of Asia, the sea level fell low enough for a land bridge to appear between Japan and the Asian mainland. This route was taken by hunter-gatherers from Asia who crossed into previously uninhabited Japan. By 10,000 BC the first pottery was produced in Japan and there was some cultivation. Rice was introduced, probably from Korea, by about 400 BC, and the use of metals around a century later, but agriculture and fixed settlements were confined to the south for a long period. During this time waves of migrants came from mainland Asia, bringing with them skills and technologies, including the Chinese characters for writing.

Religion, too, came from China: both Buddhism and Confucianism entered Japan, the former gaining a large following. In time traditional beliefs consolidated into Shintoism, which became the national religion. But, until the first millennium AD, there was no Japanese nation, although the legends of Japan tell us otherwise. According to myth, the first Japanese emperor was Jimmu around 600 BC, said to be a descendant of the sun goddess, Amaterasu.

In the first century BC, another wave of migrants entered Japan from Korea. The first Japanese state appeared in the central region of Honshu in the 7th century. This state soon controlled most of the west and centre of the island. In 710 the first permanent Japanese capital was established in Nara by Empress Genmei. In 794 the seat of power moved to Heian-kyo (present-day Kyoto).

Following the court and government tradition of China, Japan cut itself off from the outside world. As the imperial office became increasingly religious the day-to-day power passed into the hands of powerful nobles, such as the Fujiwara clan. Fujiwara Yoshifusa (804–872) was a powerful regent of Japan from 857 until his death, and by the 11th century the Fujiwaras were unchallenged rulers of the country. In the 12th century, however, Japan entered into a period of anarchy. The country passed under the control of barons, the daimyo, who exercised power through the warrior class known as the samurai.

Shogun

The anarchy ended when Taira Kiyamori seized power and made himself dictator. A civil war, the Gempei War, followed (1180–85). When Taira was defeated, power passed to Minamoto Yoritomo (1147–99), a distant descendant of the imperial family. Yoritomo established a new office, the shogun. For the next 700 years Japan was ruled by a military dictator, the shogun, while the emperor lived reclusively as a religious and national symbol.

At first the shogunate was seated in Kamakura, near modern Tokyo. Nine shoguns ruled during the Kamakura epoch (1185–1333) although latterly the Kamakura shogun was a puppet of the Hojo clan. In 1274 and 1281 Mongol attempts to invade Japan were unsuccessful: in 1281 the invasion was thwarted by a sudden typhoon that became known as the 'divine wind' (kami-kaze).

In 1334 a brief restoration of power to the emperor was ended by Ashikaga Takauji (1305–58), who established a strong military government. Subsequent members of the Ashikaga family ruled as shoguns based in Kyoto. Eventually this system, too, collapsed into anarchy, the victim of the ambitions of rival warlords. From 1467 to 1603 Japan suffered the Fighting Principalities (Sengokujidai). It was when the country was at its weakest that another powerful outside influence began to exert itself.

From 1543 Portuguese traders and missionaries arrived on the southern and western coasts. At first, trade was welcomed. Christianity, too, made converts after the Spanish Jesuit missionary St Francis Xavier landed in Japan in 1549. Along with western ideas and religion, the Portuguese, and later the Dutch, brought firearms. Three warlords in turn used western weapons to seize power and reunite the country. The last of this trio was Tokugawa Ieyasu (1542–1616), who held power from 1600. Ieyasu ordered the nobles to destroy their fortifications, except their principal residences, and encouraged the arts and learning as a preferred alternative to warfare.

Isolation

As the true rulers of Japan until 1869, the Tokugawa shogunate established itself at Edo (present-day Tokyo). They ruled harshly, subduing the warring lords by holding members of their families hostages. The Tokugawa perceived foreign influences as unsettling and a danger to their supremacy. For this reason, they decreed that Japan should become a closed society. In 1636 Japanese were forbidden to emigrate. Europeans were expelled, except for a single Dutch trading post in Nagasaki, which after 1639 became Japan's only contact with the outside world. Christianity was suppressed and the ownership of firearms, except by the central authorities, was made illegal. Japan entered 220 years of self-imposed isolation.

Cut off from outside influences, Japan gained stability and a strong sense of national identity. Yet this isolation came at a price. In 1853 a US fleet led by Commodore Matthew C. Perry appeared off the Japanese coast. Japan was forced to open up to international trade through the threat of invasion. Other western nations followed the American example. Japan was thrust into a modern world for which it was ill suited. The voices for reform grew and the Tokugawa shogunate, humiliated by Perry's mission, collapsed. Reformers seized Kyoto and parts of the west, but they needed a national symbol to legitimize their rule. In 1869 the shadowy figure of the emperor was called out of his cloistered life. His city, Edo, had by then been renamed Tokyo, meaning 'eastern capital'. The emperor surprised the country by his zeal for modernization which led to a period of rapid reform and transformed Japan into a modern nation.

But while a constitution was introduced, the resemblance to a western democracy was skin deep. Though the peasants were freed from serfdom, power remained in the hands of the nobility. Priority was given to developing industry and modern technology. Japan's rise as an industrial state began.

Rise of the Military

Much emphasis was given to modernizing the armed forces. A revitalized Japan defeated China in the First Sino-Japanese War in 1894–95 and gained Taiwan. In 1900 Japan intervened alongside the western powers against the Boxer Rebellion in China. An even greater shock was Japan's victory against Russia in 1903–04 in a war over Korea and Manchuria. Having contained Russian land forces in Manchuria, the Japanese decisively defeated the Russian Baltic Fleet in the Tsushima Strait. Russia's influence in the region faded and Japan received half of Sakhalin and the Kurile Islands. Later, with Russia removed from the scene, Japan annexed Korea (1910) and took control of parts of Manchuria.

In 1902 Japan made an alliance with Britain. To emphasize Japan's western credentials, Tokyo entered the First World War against Germany in 1914. Japanese forces took the German island colonies in the north and central Pacific and received these archipelagoes as a League of Nations Trust Territory in 1919. But greater rewards for their efforts in the war had been expected and Tokyo's disillusion with the west began. The collapse of world trade at the end of the 1920s brought hardship and helped the rise of political extremism and nationalism.

Japan began a phase of aggressive expansionism. In 1931 Japan invaded Manchuria and, two years later, installed the deposed last emperor of China as puppet emperor of Manchukuo. From 1932 Japanese forces entered various coastal and border areas of China, and in 1937 there was a full-scale war with China. Japanese forces took Shanghai in 1937, Guangzhou in 1938 and Nanjing in 1940. By the end of 1940 Japan had occupied French Indochina and formed a triple alliance (or Axis) with Nazi Germany and Fascist Italy.

Pearl Harbor

Under premier Gen. Tojo Hideki (1884–1948), Japan attacked the US fleet in Pearl Harbor, Hawaii in Dec. 1941. This action brought the United States into the Second World War (1939–45) and ranged Japan against forces that were superior in size and technology. Nevertheless, the war was initially in Japan's favour. Japanese forces swept through the Pacific and into Malaya and the Dutch East Indies (now Indonesia). The speed of Japan's ruthless advance overwhelmed the Allied powers as British and American positions were surrendered. The tide turned with the American victory at Midway in late 1942, but by the time Germany surrendered in May 1945 Japanese forces were still in control of large areas of the Pacific and Southeast Asia. In Aug. 1945 US planes dropped atomic bombs on the Japanese cities of Hiroshima and Nagasaki, devastating the two cities and causing more than 200,000 deaths. The emperor Hirohito (1926–89) surrendered.

The war had cost Japan dearly. Not only had two cities suffered the horror of atomic warfare, but many more Japanese had died in combat. Nearly 2m. Japanese were abandoned in China, most of whom were shipped to Siberia as prisoners. Japan was to be reformed by the occupying US forces under Gen. MacArthur.

In 1945 Shintoism, which had become associated with aggressive nationalism, ceased to be the state religion. In the following year, the emperor renounced his divinity.

A new liberal constitution was introduced in 1946. Japan signed a peace treaty in 1951 at San Francisco and the American occupation of Japan ended in April 1952 when the country regained its independence. A separate peace treaty was concluded later between Japan and China. There was, however, no agreement with the Soviet Union, which, at American behest, had declared war against Japan in the closing days of the Second World War. Soviet forces occupied Sakhalin and the Kurile islands to which Japan still lays claim.

The new Japan remained a monarchy, albeit one in which the emperor was a figurehead. Japan renounced war and the threat or use of force, but retained 'Self Defence Forces'. Japanese cities and industry were rebuilt. An astonishing economic recovery was led by an aggressive export policy. Huge investment in new technology gave the country a dominant position in many industries including motor vehicles, shipbuilding, electrical goods, electronics and computers. Japan grew to be the world's second biggest economy. This success is owed, in part, to the protection of domestic markets.

The power of Japanese industry was reflected in the political power of a small number of major corporations. From 1955 until 1993 the political scene was dominated by the centre-right pro-business Liberal Democrats (LDP). However, a series of major financial scandals broke the party's monopoly and coalition governments followed. By 2000 the LDP had resumed its dominant role.

In recent years, Japan has shown more confidence in international relations. The country is a major aid donor to developing countries. In 1992 the Diet (parliament) approved the involvement of Japanese military personnel and equipment in UN peacekeeping missions and in 2002 Japan contributed naval support vessels to the US-led intervention in Afghanistan. However, the country faces severe economic problems. A heavy international debt and domestic deflation left the Japanese economy in the doldrums at the turn of the century.

In March 2011 a huge offshore earthquake and a resulting tsunami devastated large areas of the northeast of Japan, causing between US$120bn. and US$235bn. of damage and killing over 10,000. The disaster also caused extensive damage to the Fukushima nuclear plant.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Japan consists of four major islands, Honshu, Hokkaido, Kyushu and Shikoku, and many small islands, with an area of 377,950 sq. km. Census population of 1 Oct. 2010 (2005 census in brackets), 128,057,352 (127,767,994); of which males, 62,327,737 (62,348,977), females, 65,729,615 (65,419,017); population density (land area only), 351 per sq. km (351 per sq. km). In Oct. 2013 the population was estimated at 127,293,575.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 126.57m. The population started to decline in 2010; the UN projects that by 2050 it will only be 107m.

In 2011, 67.0% of the population lived in urban areas. Foreigners registered on 31 Dec. 2007 were 2,152,973: including 606,889 Chinese, 593,489 Koreans, 316,967 Brazilians, 202,592 Filipinos, 59,696 Peruvians, 51,851 Americans, 41,384 Thais, 36,860 Vietnamese, 25,620 Indonesians, 20,589 Indians, 17,328 British, 11,459 Canadians, 11,255 Bangladeshis, 11,033 Australians, 9,332 Pakistanis and 1,573 stateless persons. In 2014 Japan accepted 11 asylum seekers (out of more than 5,000 applications), up from just six in 2013.

Japanese overseas, Oct. 2007, 1,085,671; of these 374,732 lived in the USA, 127,905 in China, 63,526 in the UK, 63,459 in Australia, 61,527 in Brazil, 47,376 in Canada, 42,736 in Thailand, 32,755 in Germany, 29,279 in France and 25,969 in Singapore.

The official language is Japanese.

A law of May 1997 'on the promotion of Ainu culture' marked the first official recognition of the existence of an ethnic minority in Japan. The Ainu were recognized as a people in their own right through a resolution passed by parliament in June 2008.

Japan is divided into 43 prefectures, one metropolis (Tokyo), one territory (Hokkaido) and two urban prefectures (Kyoto and Osaka). The populations and chief cities are:

SOCIAL STATISTICS

Statistics (in 1,000) for calendar years:

	2001	2002	2003	2004	2005	2006	2007
Births	1,171	1,154	1,124	1,111	1,063	1,093	1,090
Deaths	970	982	1,015	1,029	1,084	1,084	1,108

Birth rate of Japanese nationals in present area in 2007, 8.6 per 1,000 population (1947: 34.3); death rate, 8.8. Marriage rate in 2007 (per 1,000 persons), 5.7; divorce rate, 2.0. In 2007 the mean age at first marriage was 30.1 for males and 28.3 for females. The infant mortality rate per 1,000 live births, 2 (2010), is one of the lowest in the world. In 2012 only 2.0% of births were outside marriage. Life expectancy at birth was 86.0 years for women and 79.0 years for men in 2007. Japan's life expectancy is the highest of any sovereign country. The World Health Organization's World Health Statistics 2014 put the Japanese in second place in a 'healthy life expectancy' list, with an expected 75 years of healthy life for babies born in 2012. Japan has the oldest population of any country and a very quickly ageing population, stemming from a sharply declined fertility rate and one of the highest life expectancies in the world. In 2011, 23.3% of the population was aged 65 or over; by around 2039 it is expected that one in three will be over 65. In 2012 the total fertility rate was 1.41 births per woman (compared to a low of 1.26 in 2005 but 1.91 in 1975 and 3.65 in 1950). The percentage of the population over 65 rose from 10% in 1985 to more than 21% in 2007. Japan had an estimated 40,400 centenarians (35,000 women) in Sept. 2009—an increase of over 4,000 from Sept. 2008, and the 39th consecutive year the number has risen. In 2008 the population fell by 0.1%.

There were a total of 33,093 suicides in 2007, a rate of 35.8 males per 100,000 and 13.7 females per 100,000. The rate among women is one of the highest in the world.

A UNICEF report published in 2010 showed that 14.9% of children in Japan live in relative poverty (living in a household in which disposable income—when adjusted for family size and composition—is less than 50% of the national median income), compared to just 4.7% in Iceland.

CLIMATE

The islands of Japan lie in the temperate zone, northeast of the main monsoon region of southeast Asia. The climate is temperate with warm, humid summers and relatively mild winters except in the island of Hokkaido and northern parts of Honshu facing the Sea of Japan. There is a month's rainy season in June–July, but the best seasons are spring and autumn, although Sept. may bring typhoons. Tokyo, Jan. 5.8°C, July 25.4°C. Annual rainfall 1,467 mm. Hiroshima, Jan. 5.3°C, July 26.9°C. Annual rainfall 1,541 mm. Nagasaki, Jan. 6.8°C, July 26.6°C. Annual rainfall 1,960 mm. Osaka, Jan. 5.8°C, July 27.2°C. Annual rainfall 1,306 mm. Sapporo, Jan. -4.1°C, July 20.5°C. Annual rainfall 1,128 mm.

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

The Emperor is Akihito (b. 23 Dec. 1933), who succeeded his father, Hirohito on 7 Jan. 1989 (enthroned, 12 Nov. 1990); married 10 April 1959, to Michiko Shoda (b. 20 Oct. 1934). Offspring: Crown Prince Naruhito (Hironomiya; b. 23 Feb. 1960); Prince Akishino (Akishinomiya; b. 30 Nov. 1965); Princess Sayako (Norinomiya; b. 18 April 1969). Prince Naruhito married Masako Owada (b. 9 Dec. 1963) 9 June 1993. Offspring: Princess Aiko (b. 1 Dec. 2001). Prince Fumihito (henceforth to adopt his new title Prince Akishino) married Kawashima Kiko (b. 11 Sept. 1966) 29 June 1990. Offspring: Princess Mako (23 Oct. 1991); Princess Kako (29 Dec. 1994); Prince Hisahito (6 Sept. 2006). Princess Sayako married Yoshiaki Kuroda (b. 17 April 1965) 15 Nov. 2005 and gave up her imperial title in doing so as required by law. The succession to the throne is fixed upon the male descendants. Prince Hisahito was the first male born into the imperial family since 1965. The 1947 constitution supersedes the Meiji constitution of 1889. In it the Japanese people pledge themselves to uphold the ideas of democracy and peace. The Emperor is the symbol of the unity of the people. Sovereign power rests with the people. The Emperor has no powers related to government. Fundamental human rights are guaranteed.

Legislative power rests with the Diet, which consists of the House of Representatives (Shugi-in), elected by men and women over 20 years of age for a four-year term, and an upper house, the House of Councillors (Sangi-in) of 242 members (96 elected by party list system with proportional representation according to the d'Hondt method and 146 from prefectural districts), one-half of its members being elected every three years. The number of members has been reduced in recent years. There had been 252 members until 2001 and 247 members from 2001 until elections of July 2004.

The number of members in the House of Representatives was reduced from 500 to 480 for the election of June 2000, of whom 300 were to be elected from single-seat constituencies, and 180 by proportional representation on a base of 11 regions. There is a 2% threshold to gain one of the latter seats. Donations to individual politicians are to be supplanted over five years by state subsidies to parties.

A new electoral law passed in Oct. 2000 gives voters a choice between individual candidates and parties when casting ballots for the proportional representation seats in the House of Councillors.

National Anthem

'Kimigayo' ('The Reign of Our Emperor'); words 9th century, tune by Hayashi Hiromori. On 9 Aug. 1999 a law on the national flag and the national anthem was enacted. The law designates the Hinomaru and 'Kimigayo' as the national flag and national anthem of Japan. The 'Kimi' in 'Kimigayo' indicates the Emperor who is the symbol of the State and of the unity of the people, deriving his position from the will of the people with whom resides sovereign power; 'Kimigayo' depicts the state of being of the country as a whole.

RECENT ELECTIONS

Elections to the House of Representatives were held on 14 Dec. 2014. The coalition between the ruling Liberal Democratic Party (LDP, Jiminto) and the Komeito party won 326 seats (with 49.5% of the single-seat constituency vote); the opposition Democratic Party of Japan (DPJ, Minshuto) 73 seats (22.5%); Japan Innovation Party (JIP, Ishin no To) 41 (8.2%); Communist Party of Japan (JCP, Nihon Kyosanto) 21 (13.3%); Party for Future Generations (Jisedai no To) 2 (1.8%); Social Democratic Party (SDP, Shakai Minshuto) 2 (0.8%); People's Life Party, Yamamoto Taro and Company (Seikatsu no To to Yamamoto Taro to Nakamatachi) 2 (1.0%). Independents took eight seats. Turnout was 52.6%, the lowest since the Second World War.

Elections to 121 seats of the House of Councillors were held on 21 July 2013. The LDP gained 65 seats, DPJ 17, New Komeito party 11, Communist Party of Japan 8, Restoration Party 8, Your Party 8, Social Democratic Party 1 and ind. and others 3. As a result the LDP held 115 seats, DPJ 59, New Komeito party 20, Your Party 18, Communist Party of Japan 11, Restoration Party 9, Social Democratic Party 3 and ind. and others 7. The LDP–New Komeito party coalition held 135 of the 242 seats.

CURRENT LEADERS

Shinzo Abe

Position

Prime Minister

Introduction

Shinzo Abe, who first served as prime minister from 2006–07, became president of the Liberal Democratic Party (LDP) for the second time in Sept. 2012. He was sworn in as premier for a second spell after leading the party to victory at the Dec. 2012 parliamentary elections. A conservative from a prominent political family, Abe has consistently argued for Japan to take a more assertive role on the world stage. During his first term he oversaw an improvement in relations with North Korea and China, although domestic disagreements over Japanese logistical support for US troops in Afghanistan clouded his tenure. He started his second tenure promising to boost the economy and to defend Japanese interests. Relations with China, however, became increasingly strained in 2013, while the economy slipped back into recession towards the end of 2014. Abe nonetheless comfortably won another parliamentary election in Dec. 2014 that he had called two years ahead of schedule to reinforce his mandate.

Early Life

Abe was born on 21 Sept. 1954 in Nagato, Yamaguchi Prefecture. He is the son of Shintaro Abe, a former secretary-general of the centre-right LDP. Shinzo Abe graduated in political science from Seikei University in 1977 before undertaking further study at the University of Southern California. Returning to Japan in 1979 he took up employment at Kobe Steel Ltd and entered the political scene in 1982 as executive assistant to his father, who was minister for foreign affairs in the government of Yasuhiro Nakasone.

In elections for the house of representatives in July 1993 Abe won the seat in Yamaguchi Prefecture that had been held by his father (who died in 1991), although the ruling LDP lost its overall majority for the first time since 1955 and was replaced by an eight-party alliance headed by Morihiro Hosokawa. Appointed to the House of Representatives' committee on foreign affairs, Abe also served as director of the LDP's social affairs division, where he focused on pensions and social security against the backdrop of deep recession. The economy began to revive in 1999 after the government, led by the LDP's Keizo Obuchi, spent more than US$1trn. on public works and other programmes to stimulate growth.

In 2000 Abe was appointed deputy chief cabinet secretary in the second cabinet of Prime Minister Yoshiro Mori. In the wake of the 11 Sept. attacks in the USA, Abe led the parliamentary campaign for co-operation with the US-led 'war on terror', securing widespread support after initial opposition. In 2002 he accompanied Junichiro Koizumi, leader of the LDP and prime minister since April 2001, to Pyongyang to attend landmark summit talks with the North Korean leader, Kim Jong Il. Abe won plaudits for his tough stance with North Korea over the repatriation of Japanese nationals who had been abducted by North Koreans in the 1970s and 1980s.

He became secretary-general of the LDP in 2003. Following the party's landslide victory in the Sept. 2005 general election, he was appointed chief cabinet secretary and was central to the government's reform programme. During Koizumi's final parliamentary session the LDP passed 82 of its 91 proposed bills, including the controversial privatization of the postal service, set for 2017. On 20 Sept. 2006 Abe was elected to succeed Koizumi, who had stepped down as leader of the LDP in accordance with party rules. Six days later Abe was elected prime minister with 339 of 475 votes in the lower house and a majority in the upper house.

Career in Office

Abe pledged to continue Koizumi's economic reforms and to work to improve relations with China. He announced a 30% cut in his pay as a 'good model' for cutting government spending. His visits to China and South Korea within weeks of taking office demonstrated an assertive approach in international affairs. He also made it clear that he intended to pursue his predecessor's goals of revising Japan's pacifist constitution and securing a permanent seat on the UN Security Council.

However, his premiership went into meltdown in May 2007 when his minister of agriculture, Toshikatsu Matsuoka, committed suicide shortly before facing questions over a financial scandal. The LDP fared badly at elections to the upper house in July 2007 and Abe's position was further weakened when the new agriculture minister, Norihiko Akagi, resigned. He appointed a new cabinet in Aug. but another agriculture minister, Takehiko Endo, resigned after being linked to a separate financial scandal.

Abe faced stern parliamentary opposition to his anti-terrorism bill, which included provision for Japanese logistical support to the USA in Afghanistan. His failure to win passage for the law was widely believed to have influenced his decision to resign on 12 Sept. 2007. Health concerns were also cited, and he subsequently received treatment for ulcerative colitis.

He was replaced as prime minister and LDP president by Yasuo Fukuda but retained his seat in the House of Representatives. After the LDP went into opposition in 2009, he argued for measures to strengthen the existing social order and ease restrictions on defence institutions. He also called for increased government investment in the economy, especially the technology sector.

In Sept. 2012 Abe was reappointed as LDP president and in Nov. 2012, as opposition leader, secured a promise of early elections in return for supporting a government finance bill. In the subsequent Dec. 2012 general election, the LDP secured an outright majority in coalition with the New Komeito Party. Abe was sworn in on 26 Dec. 2012. As in his first term, Japan's economy and continuing regional tensions, notably with China, were dominant issues in his first year of office. On the economic front, exports grew strongly as a result of the weak currency, so boosting Abe's recovery plan. In Nov. 2013 he announced the phasing out of the long-established system of agricultural subsidies for rice growers, heralding a free market for the country's staple food. His political position was strengthened when the LDP–New Komeito coalition won an outright victory in the elections to the House of Councillors in July 2013, giving him control over both branches of the Diet.

Meanwhile, a long-standing sovereignty dispute with China over islands in the East China Sea degenerated further. In Nov. 2013 China declared an 'air defence identification zone' over a swathe of the sea area, including the islands, prompting a defiant response from both Japan and the USA. The following month Abe's government approved plans to significantly boost Japan's defence spending over a five-year period under a new national security strategy. He also visited the Yasukuni Shrine, a memorial to Japan's war dead, which provoked condemnation from China and South Korea, as well as criticism from the USA. In another controversial move, in July 2014 his government approved moves to change Japan's post-war pacifist security policy to allow its armed forces to engage in combat overseas. The legislation was passed in July 2015, prompting domestic and international protest.

Against a backdrop of continuing economic difficulties and despite a major cabinet reshuffle in Sept. 2014, Abe sought to bolster his political authority by calling a parliamentary election two years early in Dec. 2014. With the opposition Democratic Party of Japan in disarray, the LDP–Komeito party coalition comfortably retained its majority, taking 326 of 475 seats in the House of Representatives. In Oct. 2015 Abe carried out a further reorganization of his cabinet—although with key posts unchanged—aiming to revive an economy still teetering on the edge of recession.

During a state visit in April 2015, Abe became the first Japanese prime minister to address a joint sitting of the US Congress, expressing repentance over Japan's role in the Second World War.

Despite public opposition, in Aug. 2015 Japan's authorities restarted the Sendai plant nuclear reactor under new safety rules following the Fukushima disaster in March 2011.

DEFENCE

Japan has renounced war as a sovereign right and the threat or the use of force as a means of settling disputes with other nations. Its troops had not previously been able to serve abroad, but in 1992 the House of Representatives voted to allow up to 2,000 troops to take part in UN peacekeeping missions. A law of Nov. 1994 authorizes the Self-Defence Force to send aircraft abroad in rescue operations where Japanese citizens are involved. Following the attacks on New York and Washington of 11 Sept. 2001, legislation was passed allowing Japan's armed forces to take part in operations in the form of logistical support assisting the US-led war on terror. The legislation permits troops to take part in limited overseas operations but not to engage in combat. In May 2003 parliament passed a series of measures in response to North Korea's nuclear programme. Central government won increased control over the military which now has greater freedom to requisition civilian property in the event of attack.

In Jan. 1991 Japan and the USA signed a renewal agreement under which Japan pays 40% of the costs of stationing US forces and 100% of the associated labour costs. US forces in Japan totalled 40,180 in 2011 (mostly marines and air force personnel), around 60% of which are based on the island of Okinawa. The USA has more troops in Japan than in any other foreign country.

Total armed forces in 2011 numbered 247,750.

In 2013 defence expenditure totalled US$50,977m. (US$401 per capita), representing 1.0% of GDP.

Army

The 'Ground Self-Defence Force' is organized in five regional commands and in 2011 had a strength of 151,600. Equipment in 2011 included 806 main battle tanks.

Navy

The 'Maritime Self-Defence Force' is tasked with coastal protection and defence of the sea lanes to 1,000 nautical miles range from Japan. The main elements of the fleet are organized into four escort flotillas based at Yokosuka, Kure, Sasebo, Maizuru and Ominato. The submarines are based at Yokosuka and Kure.

Personnel in 2011 numbered 45,500. The combatant fleet, all home-built, includes 18 diesel submarines, 29 destroyers and 15 frigates. Japan's biggest warship since the Second World War, the Izumo, was unveiled in Aug. 2013. Officially a destroyer, sea trials began in Sept. 2014 and it entered service in March 2015. The Air Arm operated 95 combat aircraft in 2011. Air Arm personnel was estimated at 9,800 in 2011.

Air Force

An 'Air Self-Defence Force' was inaugurated on 1 July 1954. Its equipment includes (2011) F-15 Eagles, F-4E Phantoms and Mitsubishi F-2 fighters.

Strength (2011) 47,100 operating 371 combat aircraft.

ECONOMY

In 2011 services accounted for 73% of GDP, industry 26% and agriculture 1%.

According to the anti-corruption organization Transparency International, Japan ranked equal 18th in the world in a 2015 survey of the countries with the least corruption in business and government. It received 75 out of 100 in the annual index.

In 2014 Japan gave US$9.3bn. in international aid. However, this represented only 0.19% of its GNI (compared to the UN target of 0.7%).

Overview

Following China's recent rapid growth, Japan is now the world's third largest economy at market exchange rates, having been the second largest up to 2010. It is a major provider of global aid, capital and credit. The traditional corporate system of keiretsu (closely knit production chains linking manufacturers, suppliers and distributors) has been gradually eroded. Japan ranks fifth among OECD countries for expenditure on research and development, with spending equalling 3.6% of GDP in 2014.

From 1973 until 1991, Japan's economy grew at an average rate of more than 4% per year. Lax monetary policies, however, caused an unsustainable bubble economy and in its aftermath there was deflation, static wages and declining investment. Over the two decades to 2014 yearly growth averaged below 1%. Exports were the principal driving force of expansion (their share of GDP rising from 10.6% to 16.5%) before momentum shifted to domestic demand and private investment.

Global financial turmoil saw the economy experience six consecutive quarters of contraction in 2008 and 2009, with a collapse in overseas demand compounded by a strong yen (which by mid-2012 was 24% higher than in 2007 in real terms). Difficulties were accentuated by a reliance on manufactured exports, notably cars and consumer technology products. The economy emerged from recession in the first quarter of 2010 on a rebound in exports and a fiscal stimulus, but contracted again in 2011 after a major earthquake (magnitude 9.0) and subsequent tsunami caused massive damage valued at 3.5% of GDP. The reconstruction programme was estimated to have cost 25.5trn. yen by 2015. Nonetheless, by 2013 per capita income exceeded its 2007 pre-financial crisis level.

Foreign direct investment (FDI) had nearly tripled between 1998 and 2002, and reached record levels in 2008 before turning negative in 2010 and 2011 and averaging only 0.1% of GDP between 2011 and 2014. Inward FDI was the lowest among the OECD countries as of 2015. Meanwhile, there had been a trade deficit in 2011 for the first time in 31 years before the economy began to recover in 2012, led by reconstruction activity, industrial production and private consumption. By Oct. 2015 unemployment measured 3.1%—its lowest level since 1997.

The IMF has attributed the strengthening of the economy to reforms in labour and product markets, bank restructuring and corporate efforts to eliminate excess capacity and debt. However, while the traditional system of lifetime employment, which has limited labour market adaptability, is slowly being replaced by more flexible contracts, the number of low-paid temporary workers has risen substantially. Social inequality and relative poverty have widened as a result, with temporary workers (of which 60% are women) receiving less social protection and training.

Japan has acceded to 14 Economic Partnership Agreements since 2002 and in March 2012 joined negotiations to create the Trans-Pacific Partnership, an international free-trade agreement that the government hopes will prompt domestic industrial reforms. The Long-Term Trade Agreement had meanwhile led to Japan becoming China's most important trading partner in the late 1970s, with Japan relying on China for its oil. However, since the adoption of market policies in China, domestic demand for energy has increased rapidly, constraining the export market and causing friction between the two countries. Expanding its international ties has been a priority of the Chinese government, leading to Japan's relative decline as a major trading partner. Nevertheless, China took 18% of Japanese exports in 2013 (as much as the USA) and became the leading source of Japan's imports, accounting for 21%.

The banking system has been strengthened by tighter regulation introduced in the Program for Financial Revival (PFR), although bank profitability remains low by OECD standards. Nonetheless, the system was relatively well insulated from the global financial crisis as a result of its low exposure to toxic securities and bad debts. Credit has become tighter but commercial banks have increased lending to firms, helped by government guarantees for small and medium-sized businesses.

Gross public debt (the highest in the world) reached 243.3% of GDP in 2013 and remained high at 226% of GDP in 2014. Government revenues stood at 35.8% of GDP in 2014, among the lowest in the OECD. An IMF sustainability report in 2011 noted that Japan was experiencing moderate-to-large fiscal and private savings imbalances that had grown to unsustainable levels over the previous two decades. Lack of continuity in government strategy—reflected in Japan having seven prime ministers between 2006 and 2012—has also hindered economic stability.

In 2012 incumbent prime minister Shinzo Abe proposed a range of economic reforms, popularly labelled 'Abenomics', based on the 'three arrows' of fiscal spending, monetary easing and structural reforms. In Jan. 2013 the government revealed a 10.3trn. yen package to boost growth and a further 3.5trn. yen stimulus followed in 2014. A second consumption tax was postponed until 2017 and the government intends to cut corporate taxes below 30% to help stimulate investment in search of annual average growth of 2% in the decade to 2022. The Bank of Japan's commitment to a 2% inflation rate, envisaging long-term growth aided by 'quantitative and qualitative monetary easing', has also been postponed until 2017. Inflation returned to near-zero rates in the second quarter of 2015, and in a surprise move in Jan. 2016 the Bank adopted negative interest rates in an attempt to stimulate the economy.

Japan has the world's most aged and fastest-ageing population, with the proportion of elderly people increasing by 17 percentage points between 1980 and 2014. In 2014 more than one-third of the population was over 60. It is one of the few OECD countries where the working-age population started declining in the early 2000s. The mandatory retirement age of 60 has put further pressure on public finances as social spending doubled between 1990 and 2011. The ratio of over-65s to working-age population is the world's highest and is expected to rise from 42% in 2014 to 57% in 2030, rendering fiscal sustainability even more precarious. Weak economic performance and the ageing population have contributed to significantly lower living standards and higher poverty rates than the OECD average.

Currency

The unit of currency is the yen (JPY). Inflation rates (based on OECD statistics):

2005	2006	2007	2008	2009	2010	2011	2012	2013	2014
-0.6%	0.2%	0.1%	1.4%	-1.4%	-0.7%	-0.3%	0.0%	0.4%	2.7%

Japan's foreign exchange reserves totalled US$996,552bn. in Dec. 2009 (US$203.2bn. in 1998)—second only to those of China. Gold reserves in Sept. 2009 were 24.60m. troy oz. In Dec. 2009 the currency in circulation consisted of 80,954,000m. yen Bank of Japan notes and 4,556,000m. yen subsidiary coins.

Budget

Ordinary revenue and expenditure for fiscal year ending 31 March 2009 balanced at 88,548,000m. yen.

Of the proposed revenue (in yen) in 2009, 46,103,000m. was to come from taxes and stamps, 33,294,000m. from public bonds. Main items of expenditure (in yen): social security, 24,834,000m.; local government, 16,111,000m.; public works, 7,070,000m.; education, 5,310,000m.; defence, 4,774,000m.

The outstanding national debt incurred by public bonds was 680,448,000m. yen in March 2008.

The estimated 2009 budgets of the prefectures and other local authorities forecast a total revenue of 82,556,000m. yen, to be made up partly by local taxes and partly by government grants and local loans.

Consumption tax was increased from 5% to 8% with effect from 1 April 2014.

Performance

Real GDP growth rates (based on OECD statistics):

2005	2006	2007	2008	2009	2010	2011	2012	2013	2014
1.3%	1.7%	2.2%	-1.0%	-5.5%	4.7%	-0.5%	1.7%	1.6%	-0.1%

In 2014 total GDP was US$4,601.5bn., the third highest in the world after the USA and China, which replaced Japan as the second largest economy in 2010.

Banking and Finance

The Nippon Ginko (Bank of Japan), founded 1882, finances the government and the banks, its function being similar to that of a central bank in other countries. The Bank undertakes the management of Treasury funds and foreign exchange control. Its Governor is Haruhiko Kuroda (appointed March 2013). Its gold bullion and cash holdings at 31 Dec. 2002 stood at 638,000m. yen.

There were in Feb. 2004, six city banks, 64 regional banks, 27 trust banks, two long-term credit banks, 50 member banks of the second association of regional banks, 309 Shinkin banks (credit associations), 185 credit co-operatives, 72 foreign banks and six others. There is also a public corporation Japan Post handling postal savings which amounted to 229,938,100m. yen in Sept. 2003. Total savings by individuals, including insurance and securities, stood at 1,209,453,100m. yen on 30 Sept. 2003, and about 61% of these savings were deposited in banks and the post office. In 1999 a number of important mergers were announced in the banking sector, most notably the proposed merger of the Industrial Bank of Japan, Dai-Ichi Kangyo and Fuji Bank, which in Sept. 2000 created Mizuho Financial Group, at the time the world's biggest bank in terms of assets, at over 135,000bn. yen (US$1.3trn.). The second and fourth biggest banks, the Mitsubishi Tokyo Financial Group and UFJ Holdings, announced in Aug. 2004 that they had reached a basic agreement to merge to create Japan's largest bank. The new bank, named Bank of Tokyo–Mitsubishi UFJ, came into existence in Jan. 2006 with assets of 190,000bn. yen (US$1.6trn.). In Oct. 2007 the newly created Japan Post Bank became the world's largest bank by assets, at US$3.1trn. (although by March 2013 its ranking had fallen considerably and its assets had declined to US$2.1trn.).

Japan's banks are in a situation where many of them would be insolvent if they admitted the market value of the loans, shares and property they hold. At 31 March 2003 it was estimated that the banking system's bad loans amounted to 21,441bn. yen.

Gross external debt amounted to US$3,092,027m. in June 2012.

Foreign direct investment was US$2.1bn. in 2014, down from a record US$24.4bn. in 2008.

There are five stock exchanges, the largest being in Tokyo.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Japan's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy 2011 accounted for 3.7% of the world total and were equivalent to 9.4 tonnes per capita. An Environmental Performance Index compiled in 2016 ranked Japan 39th of 180 countries, with 80.6%. The index examined various factors in nine areas—agriculture, air quality, biodiversity and habitat, climate and energy, fisheries, forests, health impacts, water and sanitation, and water resources.

Electricity

Japan is poor in energy resources, and nuclear power generation has been important in reducing dependence on foreign supplies. However, following the March 2011 earthquake and Fukushima disaster all of the 54 reactors in operation before the earthquake—with a capacity of 48,960 MW—were shut for safety checks. The last one was shut down in May 2012, but two months later one of three reactors at Ohi became the first reactor to be restarted since the disaster. When the last of the reactors was taken offline for maintenance in May 2012 it left Japan without nuclear power for the first time since 1970. Scheduled maintenance and safety fears meant that in Sept. 2013 Japan again had no reactors in use. However, one of the reactors at the Sendai nuclear power plant in southwest Japan was reactivated in Aug. 2015 with the second one following two months later. In 2010 nuclear reactors produced approximately 26% of electricity. Total installed generating capacity was 292.1m. kW in 2011. Electricity produced in 2011 was 1,051,251m. kWh. Consumption per capita in 2011 was 8,257 kWh.

Oil and Gas

Output of crude petroleum, 2008, was 985,680 kilolitres, almost entirely from oilfields on the island of Honshu, but 234.4m. kilolitres of crude oil had to be imported. Output of natural gas, 2008, 3,735m. cu. metres; with reserves (2013) of 21bn. cu. metres.

Minerals

Production in tonnes: zinc (2006), 7,169; copper (2002), 1,519; lead (2006), 777; iron (2005), 736; silver (2006), 11,463 kg; gold (2008), 6,868 kg. Output of other minerals (2008 unless otherwise indicated, in 1,000 tonnes): limestone, 156,813; quartzite, 10,682; gypsum (2004), 5,865; silica sand, 3,664; dolomite, 3,370; coal (2004), 1,339; salt (2004), 1,225.

Agriculture

The agricultural population was 4.08m. in 2004 (of whom 2.17m. were economically active), compared to 12.98m. in 1980. Land under cultivation in 2009 was 4.6m. ha., down from 6.1m. ha. in 1961. In 2002 Japan had 0.34m. ha. of permanent crops. Average farm size was 1.6 ha. in 2002. In 2002 there were 2,028,000 tractors and 1,042,000 harvester-threshers.

Rice is the staple food, but its consumption is declining. Rice cultivation accounted for 1,627,000 ha. in 2008. Output of rice (in 1,000 tonnes) was 10,748 in 1995, 9,490 in 2000 and 8,823 in 2008.

Production in 2008 (in 1,000 tonnes) of sugar beets was 4,248; potatoes, 2,743; sugarcane, 1,598; cabbage, 1,389; onions, 1,271; wheat, 881; tomatoes, 733; carrots, 657; cucumbers, 627; lettuce, 544; aubergines, 366; spinach, 293; soybeans, 262; pumpkins and squash, 243; barley, 217; yams, 181. Sweet potatoes, which in the past mitigated the effects of rice famines, have, in view of rice over-production, decreased from 4,955,000 tonnes in 1965 to 1,011,000 tonnes in 2008. Domestic sugar production accounted for only 36.7% of consumption in 2006. 1.31m. tonnes were imported, of which 42.0% from Australia, 39.9% from Thailand and 13.8% from South Africa.

Fruit production, 2008 (in 1,000 tonnes): apples, 911; oranges (2006), 910; melons and watermelons, 611; pears, 362; persimmons, 267; grapes, 201.

Livestock (2008): 9.75m. pigs, 4.42m. cattle (including about 1.53m. dairy cows), 285m. chickens; and (2003) 34,000 goats, 20,000 horses and 11,000 sheep. Livestock products, 2008 (in 1,000 tonnes): milk, 7,982; meat (2003), 2,991; eggs, 2,554.

Forestry

Forests covered 24.98m. ha. in 2010, or 69% of the land area. Of the total area under forests 19% was primary forest in 2010, 40% other naturally regenerated forest and 41% planted forest. Timber production was 18.37m. cu. metres in 2011.

Fisheries

The catch in 2011 was 3,775,545 tonnes. More than 99% of fish caught are from marine waters. Japan is the second largest importer of fishery commodities (after the USA), with imports in 2011 totalling US$17.34bn.

INDUSTRY

The leading companies by market capitalization in Japan in March 2015 were: Toyota Motor Corporation (US$238.9bn.); Mitsubishi UFJ Financial Group (US$87.9bn.); and NTT DoCoMo, a telecommunications company (US$71.1bn.).

The industrial structure is dominated by corporate groups (keiretsu) either linking companies in different branches or linking individual companies with their suppliers and distributors.

Japan's industrial capacity, 2004, numbered 246,603 plants of all sizes, employing 8.11m. production workers.

Output in 2003 included: watches, 523.5m.; personal computers (2007), 8.35m.; television sets (2005), 11.07m.; refrigerators, 2.86m.; radio sets (2005), 1.77m. The chemical industry ranks fourth in shipment value after machinery, metals and food products. Production, 2008, included (in tonnes): sulphuric acid, 7.23m.; caustic soda (2005), 3.89m.; ammonium sulphate, 1.41m.; compound fertilizers, 1.23m. A total of 9,630,000 motor vehicles were manufactured in Japan in 2013. It was the world's largest vehicle producer until 2009 when China overtook it both on the number of cars and vehicles overall. Japan is now the second largest producer of passenger cars (8,189,000 in 2013).

Output, in 1,000 tonnes, 2009: crude steel, 87,534; pig iron, 66,943; cement (2008), 62,810; ordinary rolled steel, 62,024.

2007 production (in 1,000 tonnes): distillate fuel oil, 55,300; petrol, 42,801; residual fuel oil, 29,545; kerosene, 18,783.

In 2008 paper production was 18.83m. tonnes; paperboard, 11.80m. tonnes.

Output of woven fabrics, 2008, 1,554m. sq. metres. Output of cotton yarn, 2007, 71,669 tonnes; and of cotton woven fabrics (2008), 327m. sq. metres. Output, 2007, 3,870 tonnes of woollen yarns and (2008) 61m. sq. metres of wool fabrics. Output, 2008, of synthetic woven fabrics, 1,008m. sq. metres; rayon woven fabrics, 36m. sq. metres; silk fabrics, 14m. sq. metres.

3,213m. litres of beer were produced in 2008–09; 13,649m. litres of soft drinks and mineral water in 2003; 878,000 tonnes of sugar in 2008–09.

Shipbuilding orders in 2005 totalled 8,698,000 GRT. In 2007, 17,240,220 GRT were launched of which 5,284,893 GRT were tankers.

Labour

The labour force in 2013 was 65,559,000, down from 66,934,000 in 2003. 74.9% of the population aged 15–64 was economically active in 2013. Of those in employment in 2013, 69.1% worked in services, 25.8% in industry and 3.7% in agriculture. In that year 42.6% of the labour force was female. In Dec. 2015 unemployment stood at 3.3%, down from a record high of 5.7% in July 2009. The youth unemployment rate in 2013 was the lowest in the industrialized world, at just 6.9%. Long-term unemployment rose from 26.6% of the labour force between 16 and 64 having been out of work for more than a year in 2001 to 39.4% in 2011. The declining population means that the United Nations expects the working-age population in 2050 to be lower than it was in the 1950s. Retirement age is being raised progressively from 60 years to reach 65 by 2025.

Japan had 80,000 people living in slavery according to the Walk Free Foundation's 2013 Global Slavery Index.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

Trade (in US$1m.):

	2007	2008	2009	2010
Imports	622,243	762,534	551,985	694,059
Exports	714,327	781,412	580,719	769,774

In 2011 merchandise imports exceeded exports for the first time since 1980. In 2013 Japanese imports accounted for 4.4% of the world total imports, and exports 3.8% of the world total exports.

Main import suppliers, 2010 (US$1m.): China, 153,203; USA, 69,115; Australia, 45,097; Saudi Arabia, 35,972; UAE, 29,341; South Korea, 28,601; Indonesia, 28,283; Malaysia, 22,701; Qatar, 21,748; Thailand, 21,017. Main export markets, 2010 (US$1m.): China, 149,451; USA, 120,338; South Korea, 62,361; Hong Kong, 42,312; Thailand, 34,191; Singapore, 25,230; Germany, 20,290; Malaysia, 17,641; Netherlands, 16,338; Indonesia, 15,926.

Imports/exports by category, 2010 (in US$1bn.):

	Imports	Exports
Chemicals and related products	60.8	78.4
Food and live animals	52.9	4.0
Inedible crude materials, excluding fuels	55.6	10.9
Machinery and transport equipment	161.5	458.0
Manufactured goods	58.8	99.8
Mineral fuels and lubricants	199.1	13.0
Miscellaneous manufactured articles	84.5	58.4
Other products	20.9	47.3

The importation of rice was prohibited until the emergency importation of 1m. tonnes from Australia, China, Thailand and the USA in 1993–94 to offset a poor domestic harvest. The prohibition was lifted in line with WTO agreements. Until 2000 rice imports had limited access; the market is now fully open.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

The total length of roads (including urban and other local roads) was 1,196,217 km at 1 April 2008. There were 54,736 km of national roads of which 49,756 km were paved. In 2006, 79.2% of all roads were paved. Motor vehicles, at 31 March 2010, numbered 78,693,000, including 40,419,000 passenger cars and 6,362,000 trucks. In 2007 there were 5,353,648 new vehicle registrations. In 2009 there were 4,914 road deaths (10,679 in 1995).

The world's longest undersea road tunnel, spanning Tokyo Bay, was opened in Dec. 1997. The Tokyo Bay Aqualine, built at a cost of 1.44trn. yen (US$11.3bn.), consists of a 4.4 km (2.7 mile) bridge and a 9.4 km tunnel that allows commuters to cross the bay in about 15 minutes.

Rail

The first railway was completed in 1872, between Tokyo and Yokohama (29 km). Most railways are of 1,067 mm gauge, but the high-speed 'Shinkansen' lines are standard 1,435 mm gauge. In April 1987 the Japanese National Railways was reorganized into seven private companies, the Japanese Railways (JR) Group—six passenger companies and one freight company. Total length of railways in 2008–09 was 27,343 km, of which the JR had 19,987 km and other private railways 7,356 km. In 2008–09 the JR carried 8,984m. passengers (other private, 13,992m.) and 33m. tonnes of freight (other private, 13m.). An undersea tunnel linking Honshu with Hokkaido was opened to rail services in 1988.

There are metros in Tokyo (two metro systems, total 304.1 km in 2008), Fukuoka (29.8 km), Hiroshima (18.4 km), Kobe (30.6 km), Kyoto (28.8 km), Nagoya (89.1 km), Osaka (137.8 km), Sapporo (48.0 km), Sendai (14.8 km) and Yokohama (40.4 km). There are over 40 electric light railways and tram networks in 14 cities.

Japan was ranked second only to Switzerland for quality of rail infrastructure in the World Economic Forum's Global Competitiveness Report 2009–2010.

Civil Aviation

The main international airports are at Fukuoka, Hiroshima, Kagoshima, Nagoya, Naha, Niigata, Osaka (Kansai International), Sapporo, Sendai and two serving Tokyo—at Narita (New Tokyo International) and Haneda (Tokyo International). The principal airlines are Japan Airlines International (JAL), formed when Japan Airlines and Japan Air System merged in 2001, and All Nippon Airways. In Jan. 2010 JAL filed for bankruptcy protection after making a single-quarter loss of nearly 100bn. yen. The move prompted a restructuring of the company and the expected loss of 15,600 jobs. In the financial year 2008 Japanese companies carried 92.89m. passengers on domestic services and 16.43m. passengers on international services. JAL flew 361.8m. km in 2002 and carried 33,525,752 passengers, All Nippon Airways flew 259.1m. km and carried 43,680,438 passengers, and Japan Air System flew 106.9m. km and carried 21,426,817 passengers.

In 2007 Narita handled 35,478,146 passengers (mainly on international flights) and 2,254,421 tonnes of freight (making it the 7th busiest airport in the world for freight). Although Tokyo Haneda is mainly used for domestic flights, the opening of a dedicated international terminal in 2010 in conjunction with the completion of a fourth runway has allowed the number of international flights serving the airport to increase considerably; it handled 66,823,414 passengers in 2007 (making it the 4th busiest airport in the world for overall traffic volume).

Shipping

In Jan. 2009 there were 2,524 ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 12.29m. GT. Of the 2,524 vessels registered, 966 were general cargo ships, 499 oil tankers, 370 bulk carriers, 306 passenger ships, 249 chemical tankers, 162 liquid gas tankers and 22 container ships. The Japanese-controlled fleet is the largest in the world, comprising 3,674 vessels of 1,000 GT or over in Jan. 2009. Only 646 of the 3,474 vessels in Jan. 2009 were flying the Japanese flag. The busiest ports are Nagoya (218,130,000 freight tons handled in 2008), Chiba, Yokohama, Kitakyushu and Osaka.

Coastguard

The 'Japan Coast Guard' consists of one main headquarters, 11 regional headquarters, 66 offices, one maritime guard and rescue office, 53 stations, six info-communication management centres, seven traffic advisory service centres, 14 air stations, one transnational organized crime strike force station, one special security station, one special rescue station, one national strike team station, five district communications centres, four hydrographic observatories, one Loran navigation system centre and 39 aids-to-navigation offices (with 5,604 aids-to-navigation facilities); and controlled 52 large patrol vessels, 44 medium patrol vessels, 23 small patrol vessels, 233 patrol craft, 13 hydrographic service vessels, five large firefighting boats, four medium firefighting boats, 87 special guard and rescue boats, one aids-to-navigation evaluation vessel, four buoy tenders and 50 aids-to-navigation tenders in the financial year 2003. Personnel numbered 12,258. The 'Japan Coast Guard' aviation service includes 29 fixed-wing aircraft and 46 helicopters.

Telecommunications

Telephone services have been operated by private companies (NTT and others) since 1985. In 2013 there were 1,176.3 mobile phone subscriptions per 1,000 inhabitants and 479.9 fixed telephone subscriptions per 1,000 population. There were 289.0 fixed broadband subscriptions per 1,000 inhabitants in 2013 and 1,205.4 mobile broadband subscriptions per 1,000. In 2013, 86.3% of the population aged 15–74 were internet users. In March 2012 there were 7.7m. Facebook users (only 6% of the population).

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The Supreme Court is composed of the Chief Justice and 14 other judges. The Chief Justice is appointed by the Emperor, the other judges by the Cabinet. Every ten years a justice must submit himself to the electorate. All justices and judges of the lower courts serve until they are 70 years of age.

Below the Supreme Court are eight regional higher courts, district courts in each prefecture (four in Hokkaido) and the local courts.

The Supreme Court is authorized to declare unconstitutional any act of the Legislature or the Executive which violates the Constitution.

Jury trials were reintroduced in Aug. 2009 for the first time since the Second World War.

In 2012, 2,015,347 penal code offences were reported, including 1,030 homicides. The death penalty is authorized; there were three executions in both 2014 and 2015. The population in penal institutions in June 2013 was 64,932 (51 per 100,000 population). In 2015 the World Justice Project Rule of Law Index, which provides data on how the rule of law is experienced by the general public across eight categories, ranked Japan 16th of 102 countries for criminal justice and 14th for civil justice.

Education

Education is compulsory and free between the ages of six and 15. Almost all national and municipal institutions are co-educational. In May 2009 there were 13,516 kindergartens with 110,692 teachers and 1,630,000 pupils; 21,970 elementary schools with 419,518 teachers and 7,064,000 pupils; 10,785 lower secondary schools with 250,771 teachers and 3,600,000 pupils; 5,074 upper secondary schools with 307,914 teachers and 3,347,000 pupils; 406 junior colleges with 33,040 teachers and 161,000 pupils; and 64 technical colleges with 6,525 teachers and 59,386 pupils. There were also 935 special schools for children with physical disabilities (74,141 teachers, 117,035 pupils).

Japan has seven main state universities: Tokyo University (1877); Kyoto University (1897); Tohoku University, Sendai (1907); Kyushu University, Fukuoka (1910); Hokkaido University, Sapporo (1918); Osaka University (1931); and Nagoya University (1939). In addition, there are various other state and municipal as well as private universities. There are 773 colleges and universities altogether with (May 2009) 2,846,000 students and 352,514 teaching staff (172,039 full-time).

In 2011 expenditure on education came to 3.8% of GDP and 9.7% of total government spending.

The adult literacy rate is at least 99%.

According to the OECD's 2012 PISA (Programme for International Student Assessment) study, 15-year-olds in Japan rank seventh among OECD and other major countries and cities in mathematics, and fourth in both reading and science. The three-yearly study compares educational achievement of pupils in over 60 countries.

Health

Hospitals on 1 Oct. 2008 numbered 8,794 with 1,609,403 beds. The hospital bed provision of 126 per 10,000 population was one of the highest in the world. Physicians in 2008 numbered 286,699; dentists, 99,426. In 2011 Japan spent 10.1% of its GDP on health, with public spending accounting for 81.9% of total expenditure on health and private spending 18.1%. A survey carried out in May 2012 found that 21.1% of Japanese were smokers (32.7% of males but only 10.4% of females).

Welfare

There are various types of social security schemes in force, such as health insurance, unemployment insurance and age pensions. The old age pension system in Japan is made up of a two-tiered public benefit. The first tier of the public pension is the basic pension which is payable from age 65 with 25 years' contributions. To receive the full benefit amount, 40 years' contributions to the system are necessary. There is an earnings floor for contributions at approximately 28% of average earnings. The monthly premium of the National Pension is uniformly fixed (13,300 yen in fiscal year 2004). The full basic pension was a flat amount of 804,200 yen per annum in fiscal year 2002, paid in two-monthly instalments. A reduced early pension is available between the ages 60–64, while pensions may also be deferred up to age 70.

14 weeks maternity leave is statutory.

Social security expenditure in 2006–07 was 89,109.8bn. yen, including 47,325.3bn. yen on pensions and 28,102.7bn. on medical care. In 2006, 18,166,704 persons and 12,909,835 households received some form of regular public assistance. A proposed reform of the pension system involves the public making higher payments for lower benefits.

RELIGION

State subsidies have ceased for all religions, and all religious teachings are forbidden in public schools. In Dec. 2012 Shintoism claimed 100.94m. adherents, Buddhism 85.14m.; these figures overlap. Christians numbered 1.91m.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

Japan has 19 sites on the UNESCO World Heritage List (date of inscription on the list in brackets): the Buddhist Monuments in the Horyu-ji Area (1993); Himeji-jo (1993); Yakushima (1993); Shirakami-Sanchi (1993); the Historic Monuments of Ancient Kyoto (Kyoto, Uji and Otsu Cities) (1994), including 13 of Kyoto's Buddhist temples, three Shinto shrines and one castle—temples include Byōdo-in, Daigo-ji, Enryaku-ji, Ginkaku-ji, Kinkaku-ji, Kiyomizu-dera, Kōzan-ji, Ninna-ji, Nishi Hongan-ji, Ryōan-ji, Saihō-ji, Tenryū-ji and Tō-ji; the Historic Villages of Shirakawa-go and Gokayama (1995); Hiroshima Peace Memorial (Genbaku Dome) (1996); Itsukushima Shinto Shrine (1996); the Historic Monuments of Ancient Nara (1998), including five Buddhist temples—Tōdai-ji, Kōfuku-ji, Gango-ji, Yakushi-ji and Tōshōdai-ji—and three listed shrines—Kasuga Taisha, Kasuga Yama Primeval Forest and the remains of Heijō-kyō Palace;

Shrines and Temples of Nikko (1999); Gusuku Sites and Related Properties of the Kingdom of Ryukyu (2000); Sacred sites and pilgrimage routes in the Kii mountain range (2004); marine and land ecosystems at Shiretoko (2005); the Iwami Ginzan Silver Mine and its cultural landscape (2007); Hiraizumi—temples, gardens and archaeological sites representing the Buddhist Pure Land (2011); Ogasawara Islands (2011); the stratovolcano, Fujisan, generally known as Mount Fuji (2013); Tomioka Silk Mill and Related Sites (2014); and Sites of Japan's Meiji Industrial Revolution: Iron and Steel, Shipbuilding and Coal Mining (2015).

Press

In 2014 daily newspapers numbered 104 with aggregate circulation of 45.45m, including four major English-language newspapers. The newspapers with the highest circulation are Yomiuri Shimbun (daily average of 9.2m. copies in 2014) and Asahi Shimbun (daily average of 6.8m. copies in 2014). They are also the two most widely read newspapers in the world. Japan has one of the highest circulation rates of daily newspapers in any country. There were 75 newspaper online editions in 2014. In the 2013 World Press Freedom Index compiled by Reporters Without Borders, Japan was ranked 53rd out of 179 countries.

In 2013, 82,589 new book titles were published.

Tourism

In 2012 there were 8,358,000 foreign visitors (up from 6,219,000 in 2011 although down from 8,611,000 in 2010). Of the foreign visitors in 2011, 77% were from elsewhere in East Asia and the Pacific, 12% from the Americas and 9% from Europe. Tourist receipts amounted to US$16.2bn. in 2012.

Festivals

Japan has a huge number of annual festivals, among the largest of which are the Sapporo Snow Festival (Feb.); Hakata Dontaku, Fukuoka City (May); the Sanja Festival of Asakusa Shrine, Tokyo (May); the Tanabata Festival in Hiratsuka City (July) and Sendai City (Aug.); the Nebuta Festival in Aomori City (Aug.); and Jidai Matsuri, Kyoto (Oct.). Leading rock and pop festivals include Fuji Rock Festival, Naeba (July); Rising Sun Rock Festival, Otaru (Aug.); and Summer Sonic, Chiba and Osaka (Aug.).

JORDAN

The Arabs of the Ottoman Damascus province rebelled with British support in 1916. The Hashemite Prince Faisal ibn Husayn took Aqaba in 1917 and the British took Amman and Damascus in 1918. The First World War victors decreed two mandates—British Palestine and French Syria. Britain created the Transjordan Emirate in 1922, ruled semi-autonomously by Faisal's brother, Abdullah. Full independence was achieved on 25 May 1946 as the Hashemite Kingdom of Transjordan (Jordan from 1949).

Transjordan declared war on the Israeli state in May 1948, taking the West Bank and East Jerusalem, an occupation supported only by Britain. Palestinian resistance to the annexation culminated in King Abdullah's assassination in 1951. Talal, his son and successor, was deemed mentally unfit in 1952 and Hussein Bin Talal was installed in 1953. After an attempted coup in 1957, instigated by West Bank Palestinians, King Hussein banned political parties and ended Palestinian representation. A brief union with Iraq, ruled by his cousin, ended after an Iraqi republican coup in 1958. Hussein turned to Britain and the USA for military and financial support.

Fatah and the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) maintained terrorist attacks on Israel from Jordan, provoking Israeli retaliation in the West Bank. Despite secret co-operation with Israel over containing the Palestinians, Hussein allied with Syria and Egypt in the war of June 1967. Israel repelled Jordanian forces from the West Bank, moving the de facto border to the River Jordan. This devastated the Jordanian economy but removed Palestinian opposition to the Hashemite regime. However, Jordan's relations with the Palestinians deteriorated; in Sept. 1970 four airliners were destroyed by Palestinian extremists in the Jordanian desert. Jordan, with US and British assistance, repelled a Syrian invasion and evicted the PLO. Relations with Israel also worsened from 1977 with the Jewish settlement programme in the West Bank.

On 31 July 1988 Hussein dissolved Jordan's legal and administrative ties with the West Bank in reaction to the intifada, which he saw as a threat to his regime. Elections in 1989 led the way to the suspension of martial law—in place from 1967–91. Hussein, constrained by Jordan's economic and political ties with Iraq, refused to abandon Saddam Hussein in the 1991 Gulf War, creating a rift with Jordan's Western partners. Multi-party elections were held in 1993, giving Hussein parliamentary support. He signed a peace treaty with Israel in 1994. In Jan. 1999 Hussein replaced as crown prince his brother, Hassan, with his son, Abdullah, who succeeded on his father's death a month later.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Jordan is bounded in the north by Syria, east by Iraq, southeast and south by Saudi Arabia and west by Israel. It has an outlet to an arm of the Red Sea at Aqaba. Its area is 89,342 sq. km (including 540 sq. km inland water). The 2004 census population was 5,103,639; Dec. 2012 estimate, 6,388,000, giving a density of 71.5 per sq. km.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 7.60m.

In 2011, 78.6% of the population lived in urban areas. Populations of the 12 governorates:

Governorate	2012 estimate	Governorate	2012 estimate

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Egyptian control was established over Semitic Amorite tribes in the Jordan valley in the 16th century BC. However, Egypt's conflict with the Hittite Empire allowed the development of autonomous kingdoms such as Edom, Moab, Gilead and Ammon (centred on modern Amman). The Israelites settled on the east bank of the Jordan in the 13th century and crossed into Canaan. David subjugated Moab, Edom and Ammon in the 10th century but the Assyrians wrested control in the 9th century, remaining until 612 BC. Nabataea expanded in the south during the Babylonian and Persian periods until conquered for Rome by Pompey in the 1st century BC. After Trajan's campaign of AD 106, the Jordan area was absorbed as Arabia Petraea.

Rome (later Byzantium) and Sassanid Persia clashed over the area but a Muslim army under Khalid ibn al-Walid defeated Byzantium in 636 at the Yarmuk River. After the fall of the Umayyad Caliphate in 750, the centre of power moved from Damascus to Baghdad. The principality of Oultre Jourdain, established by the Christian crusader kingdom of Jerusalem in the early 12th century, was destroyed by Saladin in 1187. The Mamluk Empire held power until the advent of the Turkish Ottoman Empire in the 16th century.

The largest towns are (2012 population estimates): Amman, the capital, 1,291,000; Zarqa, 481,000; Irbid, 300,000.

In mid-2015 Jordan's population included 664,000 refugees, most of whom were from neighbouring Syria. At 90 refugees per 1,000 inhabitants in mid-2015, Jordan has the second highest number of refugees compared to the national population of the host country (after Lebanon).

The official language is Arabic.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

Births (est.), 2008, 180,000; deaths, 20,000. Rates, 2008 per 1,000 population: birth (est.), 31; death (est.), 4. Annual population growth rate, 2008–10, 2.2%. CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

The Kingdom is a constitutional monarchy headed by H. M. King Abdullah Bin Al Hussein II, born 30 Jan. 1962, married H. M. Queen Rania (Rania Al-Yassin, b. 31 Aug. 1970) on 10 June 1993. He succeeded on the death of his father, H. M. King Hussein, on 7 Feb. 1999. Sons: Hussein, b. 28 June 1994; Hashem, b. 30 Jan. 2005; daughters: Iman, b. 27 Sept. 1996; Salma, b. 26 Sept. 2000.

The Constitution ratified on 8 Dec. 1952 provides that the Cabinet is responsible to Parliament. It was amended in 1954, 1958, 1960, 1973, 1974, 1976, 1984 and 2011. The legislature consists of a Senate of 75 members appointed by the King and a House of Representatives of 150 members (15 are reserved for women) elected by universal suffrage. Nine seats are reserved for Christians, and three for Circassians or Chechens. A law of 1993 restricts each elector to a single vote.

The lower house was dissolved in 1976 and elections postponed because no elections could be held in the West Bank under Israeli occupation. Parliament was reconvened on 9 Jan. 1984. By-elections were held in March 1984 and six members were nominated for the West Bank, bringing Parliament to 60 members. Women voted for the first time in 1984. On 9 June 1991 the King and the main political movements endorsed a national charter which legalized political parties in return for the acceptance of the constitution and monarchy. Movements linked to, or financed by, non-Jordanian bodies are not allowed.

RECENT ELECTIONS

Early elections to the House of Representatives were held on 23 Jan. 2013 after the King dissolved the parliament in Oct. 2012. Independents, mostly loyal to King Abdullah, won 123 of the 150 seats. The Muslim Brotherhood and four smaller parties boycotted the election in protest against the legislation governing the process, and afterwards claimed that there had been electoral fraud and vote-buying. The official turnout was 56.7%.

CURRENT LEADERS

Abdullah Bin Al Hussein II

Position

King

Introduction

Abdullah came to the throne of the Hashemite Kingdom in Feb. 1999 on the death of his father, Hussein Bin Talal. He had been declared Crown Prince and heir by his father the previous month, replacing his uncle, Prince Hassan, who had served in that capacity since 1965. Abdullah has maintained the moderate regional policies of his late father. He has aimed to reconcile the domestically unpopular 1994 peace agreement with Israel and friendly relations with the USA with the need to appease Jordan's more militant Arab neighbours and its own large Palestinian population. Following the wave of discontent that swept across the Arab world from 2011, he faced popular demands for democratic reform and has conceded limited constitutional changes in an effort to maintain political stability.

Early Life

Born in Amman on 30 Jan. 1962, Abdullah was educated at St Edmund's School in Surrey, England, then Eaglebrook School in Massachusetts and Deerfield Academy in the USA. With his uncle holding office as Crown Prince, Abdullah focused on the military, enrolling in the Royal Military Academy Sandhurst, England in 1980. Having then attended Oxford University and Georgetown University in Washington, D.C., for studies in international relations, he moved up through the ranks of Jordan's armed forces to become Major-Gen. in May 1998.

Career in Office

Abdullah became Crown Prince on 25 Jan. 1999 after King Hussein had rescinded the 1965 constitutional amendment in favour of his younger brother Hassan. Two weeks later, on 7 Feb. 1999, Hussein died and Abdullah assumed the throne. Consistent with the policy of his father, Abdullah has deterred Islamic militancy (particularly the activities of the radical Palestinian Hamas group), while extending economic liberalization. He revived the privatization programme, oversaw Jordan's admission to the World Trade Organization and concluded a free trade accord with the USA.

Abdullah has supported the wider Arab-Israeli peace process and maintains a close affinity with the USA. He also backs Palestinian statehood in the West Bank, a policy that takes account of Jordan's large Palestinian population. He made early overtures towards Jordan's moderate Arab neighbours, visiting Egypt, Saudi Arabia, Oman and the United Arab Emirates in the first few months of his reign, and also tried to forge closer relations with Syria, a traditional antagonist. Relations with Iran have wavered since Abdullah's accession. In 2003 Abdullah backed the US intervention in Iraq, a decision not wholly popular with Jordanian citizens. The subsequent insurgency in Iraq spilled over into Jordan in Nov. 2005 in co-ordinated suicide bomb attacks apparently perpetrated by an Iraqi wing of the al-Qaeda terrorist network. Nevertheless, in Aug. 2008 Abdullah became the first leader of an Arab state to visit Iraq since the 2003 US invasion in a move signifying a rapprochement across the confessional Sunni-Shia divide and also growing international confidence in the Iraqi government.

Although Abdullah retains the power to rule by decree, there is an elected Chamber of Deputies to which a large majority of non-partisan candidates loyal to the King were returned in polling in Nov. 2007. Abdullah subsequently appointed Nader Dahabi as the new prime minister, replacing Marouf al-Bakhit who had been in office since Nov. 2005. In Nov. 2009 the King unexpectedly dissolved the Chamber only halfway through its four-year term and called for early elections. No official reason was given, but the assembly had reportedly been accused of inaction and inept handling of legislation. Abdullah appointed Samir Zaid al-Rifai as the new prime minister in Dec. and a new electoral law was introduced in May 2010. Fresh parliamentary elections were held in Nov. 2010, despite a boycott by the opposition Islamic Action Front, and the poll returned mainly pro-government candidates to the 120-member Chamber, provoking street protests.

Jordan was not immune from the anti-government disaffection across much of the Arab world from early 2011. Although on a lesser scale than in some neighbouring countries, the protests prompted Abdullah to appoint new prime ministers in Feb. and Oct. 2011 and in April and Oct. 2012, charged with balancing political reform against establishment concerns over the increasing influence of the Islamist opposition. Following changes to the electoral law in mid-2012 that increased the number of seats for political parties, in Oct. the King announced that parliamentary elections would be held in Jan. 2013. The Islamic Action Front, dissatisfied with the scope of the changes, boycotted the poll, which returned a pro-government majority. In March that year a fresh administration led by incumbent prime minister, Abdullah Ensour, took office. He faced a serious budget deficit, necessitating continued dependence on foreign support, with the additional burden of the huge refugee influx from neighbouring war-torn Syria. Syrian accusations that Jordan was supporting and harbouring rebels opposed to the Assad regime led the Jordanian government to expel the Syrian ambassador in May 2014. From Sept. 2014 Jordan took part in Western-led air offensives against Islamic State in Syria because of concerns about the threat that the jihadist extremist movement posed to Jordanian security. Similarly, from March 2015, Jordan joined Saudi Arabia in an air campaign against Houthi rebels in Yemen.

DEFENCE

Defence expenditure in 2013 totalled US$1,216m. (US$188 per capita), representing 3.6% of GDP.

Army

Total strength (2011) 88,000. In addition there were 60,000 army reservists, a paramilitary Public Security Directorate of approximately 10,000 and a civil militia 'People's Army' of approximately 35,000.

Navy

The Royal Jordanian Navy numbered an estimated 500 in 2011 and operates 17 patrol and coastal combatants, all based at Aqaba.

Air Force

Strength (2011) 12,000 personnel, 115 combat-capable aircraft (including F-5Es, F-16As and Mirage F1s) and some 25 attack helicopters.

INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

A 46-year-old formal state of hostilities with Israel was brought to an end by a peace agreement on 26 Oct. 1994.

ECONOMY

Services accounted for 65.5% of GDP in 2009, industry 31.6% and agriculture 2.9%.

Overview

Jordan is classified by the World Bank as an upper-middle-income country. However, it has few natural resources (aside from potash and phosphate) and suffers from a shortage of water, fertile land and oil.

Around 80% of the population live in cities, while the population is one of the youngest among middle-income countries, with 38% aged under 14. Services account for over three-quarters of jobs and 70% of GDP. Jordan has one of the most open economies in the Middle East and is well integrated with its neighbours. Remittances from abroad are also important.

Between 2000 and 2009 the economy grew on average by 7.1% per year, led by a favourable external environment and the expansion of the manufacturing and construction sectors. However, growth fell to 2.3% in 2010, while inflation reached 5.0% in the same year.

Since the early 2000s, the government has focused on liberalization and privatization. There have been structural reforms to the health, education and tax systems. Declining gas supplies from Egypt in 2012 forced Jordan toward more expensive alternatives, worsening the fiscal position. In addition, the conflict in Syria since 2011 has resulted in a mass influx of refugees, putting pressure on public institutions and social services.

Long-term development has suffered as funds planned for capital expenditures have been diverted to meet immediate operating costs. In 2012 an IMF stand-by arrangement worth US$2bn. was granted to stabilize the financial markets. Nevertheless, Jordan is highly vulnerable to fluctuations in world oil and food prices. Further reforms are needed to address the country's high unemployment, dependency on remittances, lack of natural resources and the knock-on effects of regional instabilities.

Currency

The unit of currency is the Jordan dinar (JOD), usually written as JD, of 1,000 fiils, pegged to the US dollar since 1995 at a rate of one dinar = US$1.41. There was inflation of 4.8% in 2013 and 2.9% in 2014. Foreign exchange controls were abolished in July 1997. Foreign exchange reserves were US$5,601m. and gold reserves 411,000 troy oz in July 2005. Total money supply in May 2005 was JD 3,487m.

Budget

In 2011 budgetary central government revenues totalled JD 5,413.8m. and expenditures JD 6,047.1m. Principal sources of revenue in 2011: taxes on goods and services, JD 2,033.1m.; grants, JD 1,215.0m.; taxes on income, profits and capital gains, JD 667.5m. Main items of expenditure by economic type in 2011: compensation of employees, JD 2,863.2m.; social benefits, JD 1,097.3m.; subsidies, JD 947.9m.

There is a sales tax of 16% (reduced rates, 4% and 0%).

Performance

Total GDP was US$35.8bn. in 2014. Real GDP growth rose from 2.7% in 2012 to 2.8% in 2013 and 3.1% in 2014.

Banking and Finance

The Central Bank of Jordan was established in 1964 (Governor, Ziad Fariz). In 2002 there were nine national banks, seven foreign banks and 11 specialized credit institutions. The largest bank is Arab Bank Group, with assets in Dec. 2013 of US$46.4bn.

Foreign debt was US$7,822m. in 2010, representing 27.9% of GNI.

There is a stock exchange in Amman (Amman Financial Market).

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2011 accounted for 2.8 tonnes per capita.

Electricity

Installed capacity was 3.7m. kW in 2011. Production (2011) 14.65bn. kWh; consumption per capita was 2,421 kWh. Nuclear power is seen as the solution to meeting the country's growing energy needs. Construction of its first research reactor was approved in Aug. 2013; it is expected to be operational by 2021.

Oil and Gas

Natural gas reserves in 2013 totalled 6bn. cu. metres, with production (2009) 193m. cu. metres. Jordan relies heavily on oil from other Arab countries, importing around 96% of its energy needs.

Water

99% of the total population and 100% of the urban population has access to safe drinking water.

Minerals

Phosphate ore production in 2009 was 5.28m. tonnes; potash, 1.20m. tonnes.

Agriculture

The country east of the Hejaz Railway line is largely desert; northwestern Jordan is potentially of agricultural value and an integrated Jordan Valley project began in 1973. In 2012 there were 95,700 ha. of irrigated land. The agricultural cropping pattern for irrigated vegetable cultivation was introduced in 1984 to regulate production and diversify the crops being cultivated. In 1986 the government began to lease state-owned land in the semi-arid southern regions for agricultural development by private investors, mostly for wheat and barley. In 2012 there were 214,400 ha. of arable land and 85,900 ha. of permanent crops.

Production in 2012 (in 1,000 tonnes): tomatoes, 616; aubergines, 178; cucumbers and gherkins, 156; olives, 156; potatoes, 142; watermelons, 109.

Livestock (2013 estimates): 2.25m. sheep; 795,000 goats; 69,000 cattle; 13,500 camels; 9,000 asses; 27m. chickens. Total estimated meat production was 235,000 tonnes in 2012; milk, 310,000 tonnes.

Forestry

Forests covered 0.10m. ha. in 2010, or 1% of the land area. In 2011, 314,000 cu. metres of roundwood were cut.

Fisheries

Fish landings in 2010 totalled 486 tonnes, mainly from inland waters.

INDUSTRY

The largest company by market capitalization in Jordan in April 2015 was Arab Bank (US$5.5bn.).

The number of industrial establishments in 2006 was 20,214, employing 174,368 persons. The principal industrial concerns are the production or processing of phosphates, potash, fertilizers, cement and oil.

Production, 2007 (in 1,000 tonnes) includes: cement, 4,051; distillate fuel oil, 1,292; residual fuel oil, 1,215; fertilizers, 831; phosphoric acid, 480.

Labour

The labour force in 2013 was 1,717,000 (1,294,000 in 2003). 43.6% of the population aged 15–64 was economically active in 2013. In the same year 12.6% of the population was unemployed.

Jordan had 13,000 people living in slavery according to the Walk Free Foundation's 2013 Global Slavery Index.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Legislation of 1995 eases restrictions on foreign investment and makes some reductions in taxes and customs duties.

Imports and Exports

Imports (c.i.f.) in 2010 totalled US$15,262m. and exports (f.o.b.) US$7,023m. Major exports are phosphate, potash, fertilizers, foodstuffs, pharmaceuticals, clothes, cement, fruit and vegetables, textiles and plastics.

Principal imports in 2010 were from: Saudi Arabia, 19.8%; China, 10.8%; Germany, 6.1%; USA, 5.6%. Main exports in 2010 were to: Iraq, 16.0%; USA, 13.2%; India, 11.1%; Saudi Arabia, 9.4%. In 2000 Jordan became the first Arab country to sign a free trade agreement with the USA.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

Total length of roads, 2007, 7,768 km, of which 3,206 km were main roads. In 2007 there were 536,700 passenger cars (94 per 1,000 inhabitants), 2,800 motorcycles and mopeds, 17,200 coaches and buses, and 230,800 lorries and vans. There were 992 deaths in road accidents in 2007 (388 in 1992).

Rail

The 1,050 mm gauge Hedjaz Jordan Railway (HJR) runs from the Syrian border to Amman. HJR controls 496 km of track but much of it is out of use. The Aqaba Railway Corporation (ARC) leases a section of track (169 km) south of Menzil from HJR for freight traffic and owns a 115 km stretch from Batn el Ghul to the port town of Aqaba. Passenger-km travelled in 2010 came to 0.5m. Freight tonne-km travelled amounted to 353m. on ARC in 2009 and 0.4m. on HJR in 2008.

Civil Aviation

The Queen Alia International airport is at Zizya, 30 km south of Amman. There are also international flights from Amman's second airport. Queen Alia International handled 6,250,048 passengers in 2012 (6,190,911 on international flights) and 96,855 tonnes of freight. Royal Jordanian is the national carrier. The government owns 26% of its shares; around 70% of all shares belong to Jordanians. In 2003 scheduled airline traffic of Jordanian-based carriers flew 36m. km, carrying 1,353,000 passengers (all on international flights).

Shipping

In Jan. 2009 there were 21 ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 315,000 GT. The main port is Aqaba, which handled 17.3m. tonnes of foreign cargo in 2008.

Telecommunications

In 2011 there were 465,400 landline telephone subscriptions (equivalent to 73.5 per 1,000 inhabitants) and 7,482,600 mobile phone subscriptions (or 1,182.0 per 1,000 inhabitants). In 2000 the government sold a 40% stake in Jordan Telecommunications Company (Jordan Telecom) to France Télécom. In 2006 France Télécom (rebranded as Orange in 2013) became the majority shareholder when it purchased a further 11% of Jordan Telecom from the government. Jordan Telecom's monopoly on fixed-line services ended on 1 Jan. 2005. In 2011, 34.9% of the population were internet users. In March 2012 there were 2.2m. Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The legal system is based on Islamic law (Sharia) and civil law, and administers justice in cases of civil, criminal or administrative disputes. The constitution guarantees the independence of the judiciary. Courts are divided into three tiers: regular courts (courts of first instance, magistrate courts, courts of appeal, Court of Cassation/High Court of Justice); religious courts (Sharia courts and Council of Religious Communities); special courts (e.g. police court, military councils, customs court, state security court).

The death penalty is authorized; there were 11 executions in 2014 and two in 2015. The population in penal institutions in 2011 was 6,066 (95 per 100,000 of national population). In 2015 the World Justice Project Rule of Law Index, which provides data on how the rule of law is experienced by the general public across eight categories, ranked Jordan 34th of 102 countries for criminal justice and 31st for civil justice.

Education

Adult literacy in 2007 was 91.1% (male, 95.7%; female, 88.4%). Basic primary and secondary education is free and compulsory. In 2006–07 there were 1,267 kindergartens (1,259 private) with 4,834 teachers and 93,236 pupils; 2,996 basic schools (706 private) with 66,075 teachers and 1,294,075 pupils; 1,268 secondary schools (160 private) with 17,771 teachers and 184,663 pupils; and 27 vocational schools with 3,581 teachers and 31,432 pupils. In 2006–07 there were ten state and 15 private universities. 16,753 Jordanians were studying abroad in 2007.

The ministry of education received 9.9% of central government budget allocations in 2010 (9.5% in 2009).

Health

There were 13,460 physicians, 18,439 nurses and midwives, 4,330 dentists and 7,360 pharmacists in 2005. In 2007 there were a total of 11,029 hospital beds in 103 hospitals.

Welfare

There are numerous government organizations involved in social welfare projects. The General Union of Voluntary Societies finances and supports the Governorate Unions, voluntary societies, and needy individuals through financial and in-kind aid. There are also 240 day care centres run by non-governmental organizations.

RELIGION

According to the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life, in 2010 an estimated 97.2% of the population were Muslims (mainly Sunnis) and 2.2% Christians (mainly Orthodox).

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

There are five sites on the World Heritage List: the rose-red rock-carved city of Petra and Quseir Amra (both entered on the list in 1985); Um er-Rasas (2004); the Wadi Rum protected area (2011); and Baptism Site 'Bethany Beyond the Jordan' (2015). Petra is over 2,000 years old and contains more than 800 monuments, some built but most carved out of the natural rock. Quseir Amra is the best preserved of Jordan's 'desert castles' and is noted for its frescoes. Um er-Rasas (Kastron Mefa'a) is an archaeological site largely unexcavated, containing remains from the Roman, Byzantine and Early Muslim periods. The Wadi Rum protected area features a varied desert landscape with rock carvings and inscriptions that trace the evolution of human thought and the early development of the alphabet. Baptism Site 'Bethany Beyond the Jordan' is an archaeological site believed to be the location where Jesus of Nazareth was baptized by John the Baptist.

Press

In 2008 there were seven paid-for daily newspapers with a combined circulation of 270,000 and 23 paid-for non-dailies.

Tourism

In 2009 there were 3,789,000 non-resident tourists (excluding same-day visitors), up from 3,729,000 in 2008 and 3,431,000 in 2007.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Turkestan (part of the territory now known as Kazakhstan) was conquered by the Russians in the 1860s. In 1866 Tashkent was occupied, followed in 1868 by Samarkand. Subsequently further territory was conquered and united with Russian Turkestan. In the 1870s Bokhara was subjugated, with the amir, by an agreement of 1873, recognizing Russian suzerainty. In the same year Khiva became a vassal state to Russia. Until 1917 Russian Central Asia was divided politically into the Khanate of Khiva, the Emirate of Bokhara and the Governor-Generalship of Turkestan. In the summer of 1919 the authority of the Soviet Government extended to these regions. The Khan of Khiva was deposed in Feb. 1920, and a People's Soviet Republic was set up, the medieval name of Khorezm being revived. In Aug. 1920 the Amir of Bokhara suffered the same fate and a similar regime was set up in Bokhara. The former Governor-Generalship of Turkestan was constituted an Autonomous Soviet Socialist Republic within the RSFSR on 11 April 1921.

In the autumn of 1924 the Soviets of the Turkestan, Bokhara and Khiva Republics decided to redistribute their territories on a nationality basis; at the same time Bokhara and Khiva became Socialist Republics. The redistribution was completed in May 1925, when the new states of Uzbekistan, Turkmenistan and Tajikistan were accepted into the USSR as Union Republics. The remaining districts of Turkestan populated by Kazakhs were united with Kazakhstan which was established as an Autonomous Soviet Republic in 1925 and became a constituent republic in 1936. Independence was declared on 16 Dec. 1991 when Kazakhstan joined the CIS. Nursultan Nazarbayev became president, and legislation has been introduced to award him privileges for life. Over a million of the country's ethnic Russians and Germans have returned to their homelands in the last ten years. Kazakhstan has been focusing on border disputes with China and Uzbekistan and fighting fundamentalism along with other Central Asian governments.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Kazakhstan is bounded in the west by the Caspian Sea and Russia, in the north by Russia, in the east by China and in the south by Uzbekistan, Kyrgyzstan and Turkmenistan. With an area of 2,724,900 sq. km (1,052,090 sq. miles) it is the world's largest landlocked country. The population at the census of Feb. 2009 was 16,009,597 (density of 5.9 per sq. km), of whom Kazakhs accounted for 63.1% and Russians 23.7%. There are also Uzbeks, Ukrainians, Uigurs, Tatars, Germans and smaller minorities. Estimate, Jan. 2014: 17,160,774. In 2009 the population was 51.7% female; it was 58.8% urban in 2011. During the 1990s some 1.5m. people left Kazakhstan—mostly Russians and Germans returning to their homelands. In 2008 around 4m. ethnic Kazakhs were living abroad.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 17.63m.

Kazakhstan's administrative divisions consist of 14 provinces and three cities as follows, with area and population:

	Area (sq. km)	Population (Jan. 2014 estimate)
Almaty ¹	224,000	1,984,518
Almaty City	300	1,507,509

¹Formerly Alma-Ata. ²Formerly Tselinograd and then Akmola.

³Formerly Gurev. ⁴As the space base of Bayqonyr is under Russian administration, its 6,700 sq. km and estimated 39,000 inhabitants are excluded from overall Kazakhstan figures. The lease was extended until 2050 in 2004. ⁵Formerly Dzhambul.

In Dec. 1997 the capital was moved from Almaty to Aqmola, which was renamed Astana in May 1998 (the name of the province remained as Aqmola). Astana has a population of 613,006 (Feb. 2009 census). Other major cities, with Feb. 2009 populations: Almaty (1,365,632); Shymkent (603,499); Qaraghandy (459,778).

The official languages are Kazakh and Russian; Russian is more widely spoken.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2007: births, 321,963; deaths, 158,297; marriages, 146,379; divorces, 36,107. Rates, 2007 (per 1,000 population): birth, 20.8; death, 10.2; marriage, 9.5; divorce, 2.3. Suicides in 2007 numbered 4,168 (rate of 26.9 per 100,000 population). Annual population growth rate, 2000–05, 0.4%. Expectation of life at birth, 2007, 59.1 years for males and 71.2 years for females. Infant mortality, 2010, 29 per 1,000 live births; fertility rate, 2008, 2.3 births per woman.

CLIMATE

The climate is generally fairly dry. Winters are cold but spring comes earlier in the south than in the far north. Almaty, Jan. -4°C, July 24°C. Annual rainfall 598 mm.

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

Relying on a judgement of the Constitutional Court that the 1994 parliamentary elections were invalid, President Nazarbayev dissolved parliament on 11 March 1995 and began to rule by decree. A referendum on the adoption of a new constitution was held on 30 Aug. 1995. The electorate was 8.8m.; turnout was 80%. 89% of votes cast were in favour. The Constitution thus adopted allowed the President to rule by decree and to dissolve parliament if it holds a no-confidence vote or twice rejects his nominee for Prime Minister. It established a parliament consisting of a 39-member Senate (two selected by each of the elected assemblies of Kazakhstan's 16 principal administrative divisions plus seven appointed by the president); and a lower house (Majlis) of 77 (67 popularly elected by single mandate districts, with ten members elected by party-list vote). The constitution was amended in Oct. 1998 to provide for a seven-year presidential term. It was amended again in May 2007 to lift the term-limit clause on the president, reduce the presidential term to five years with effect from 2012, oblige the president to consult with parliament when choosing a prime minister and adopt proportional representation for the lower house. The amendment also raised from seven to 15 the number of senators appointed by the president (increasing the total number of senators to 47) and from 77 to 107 the number of lower house deputies (with 98 elected by proportional representation from party lists and nine elected by the Assembly of the People of Kazakhstan—a body comprising the various ethnic groups in the country, which itself is appointed by the president). In June 2010 parliament approved an amendment to the constitution giving President Nazarbayev the title 'Leader of the Nation' and with it a wide range of privileges after the end of his presidential term.

A Constitutional Court was set up in Dec. 1991 and a new constitution adopted on 28 Jan. 1993, but President Nazarbayev abolished the Constitutional Court in 1995. In June 2000 a bill to provide President Nazarbayev with life-long powers and privileges was passed into law.

CURRENT LEADERS

Nursultan Abishuly Nazarbayev

Position

President

Introduction

Nursultan Nazarbayev, leader of the Nur Otan (Light of the Fatherland) Party, was first elected president of Kazakhstan in 1991, leading the country to independence after the collapse of the USSR. He has sought to exploit the nation's rich mineral resources although much of the population remains poor. He has also sought close ties with southern regional neighbours as well as Russia, China and the West. His autocratic regime, however, has been widely accused of corruption and human rights abuses.

Early Life

Nursultan Nazarbayev was born on 6 July 1940 in Chemolgan in the Almaty region. He was employed by the Karagandy metallurgical works in 1960 and graduated in engineering from a higher technical college in 1967. Having joined the Soviet Communist Party in 1962, he became secretary of the party's regional committee in 1977 and rose through the ranks to the central committee. In 1984 he was appointed chairman of the Republic's council of ministers and became a full member of the Politburo five years later. In the same year Nazarbayev was named first secretary of the Kazakh Communist party. In April 1990 he was chosen by the Supreme Soviet as president of the Republic of Kazakhstan.

Career in Office

Nazarbayev spoke out in support of Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev during a coup attempt in Moscow in Aug. 1991. Nevertheless, Kazakhstan seceded from the USSR in Dec. 1991 to join the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS). In the same month Nazarbayev's position as head of state was consolidated in presidential elections. Earlier in the year he had closed the nuclear test ground at Semipalatinsk.

In 1992 Nazarbayev secured Kazakhstan's membership of the UN and of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe (the precursor of the OSCE). Despite parliamentary opposition, he implemented a series of economic reforms, including a programme of privatization. He sought close co-operation with his CIS partners and signed up Kazakhstan to the treaties on strategic arms reduction and nuclear non-proliferation. Two years later he signed an agreement on economic and military co-operation with Russia. In the same year his term of office was extended by referendum to 2000 amid accusations that he was becoming increasingly autocratic.

In 1997 Nazarbayev announced the transfer of the national capital from Almata to Aqmola (renamed Astana in 1998) to take advantage of Aqmola's central location and its seismically less sensitive position. He won presidential elections brought forward to Jan. 1999 with 79.8% of the vote, but earned international criticism for the disqualification of the leading opposition figure, Akezhan Kazhegeldin, from the polls. Kazhegeldin was accused of corruption, went into exile and was sentenced in absentia to ten years imprisonment. Parliamentary elections held later in the year were criticized by the OSCE.

Nazarbayev implemented heightened security measures against Islamist militants following increased activity in the region in 2000. That year the government passed constitutional amendments granting him wide-ranging influence once he has retired from office. In June 2001 Kazakhstan joined the Shanghai Co-operation Organization (along with China, Russia, Kyrgyzstan, Uzbekistan and Tajikistan) to bolster regional co-operation in economics and against ethnic and religious activism. In the aftermath of the 11 Sept. attacks on Washington and New York in 2001, Nazarbayev met US President George W. Bush to consolidate relations between the two countries. In 2000 the government passed constitutional amendments granting Nazarbayev wide-ranging influence once he has retired from office. In Nov. 2001 he purged his government of founding members of the opposition Democratic Choice, whose leading figures were subsequently imprisoned on disputed charges, as were journalists critical of his regime.

In June 2003 the then prime minister, Imangali Tasmagambetov, resigned in protest at land reforms allowing private ownership for the first time in the nation's history. Nazarbayev's Otan Party (the predecessor of the Nur Otan Party) won a majority of National Assembly seats in parliamentary elections in 2004, and on 4 Dec. 2005 he was re-elected president with 91% of the votes cast. There was some movement towards further democratization, including the establishment in March 2006 of a new state commission chaired by the president to oversee a widening of the powers of legislative bodies, strengthening of the judiciary and law enforcement agencies, and constitutional development. Kazakhstan also ratified two international covenants on civil, political, economic and cultural rights. However, the political opposition remained sceptical in the light of parliament's vote in May 2007 to allow Nazarbayev to stay in office for an unlimited number of terms and then the legislative elections later in the year which returned all the seats to his Nur Otan Party. Moreover, in mid-2010 parliament approved legislation giving Nazarbayev the title of 'Leader of the Nation' and granting him additional powers including immunity from prosecution. In Jan. 2010 Kazakhstan became the first former Soviet state to chair the OSCE, despite widespread reservations about Nazarbayev's commitment to democracy.

After almost a decade of average annual growth of around 10%, Kazakhstan's economy started to slow markedly in 2008 in the wake of the global credit crisis. This prompted Nazarbayev in Oct. that year to announce a US$10bn. injection of reserves from the National Fund (established in 2000 to accumulate revenues from the expanding oil and gas sector) into the economy, with a further US$5bn. in support for struggling local banks.

Nazarbayev secured a further term in the presidential elections of April 2011, taking 96% of the vote. In Nov. he brought forward the date of parliamentary elections to Jan. 2012, at which his Nur Otan Party was again dominant. In Sept. 2012 Karim Massimov resigned as prime minister to join the presidential office as chief of staff and Nazarbayev appointed Serik Akhmetov in his place at the head of a largely unchanged cabinet. However, Massimov was reinstated as premier in April 2014 when Akhmetov resigned.

On 1 Jan. 2015 the Eurasian Economic Union officially came into force, facilitating the free movement of trade, services and capital between Kazakhstan, Russia, Belarus and Armenia and superseding the former Eurasian Economic Community customs union.

At early presidential elections held in April 2015 Nazarbayev extended his mandate, defeating two other pro-government candidates with 97.7% of the vote. Then in March 2016 his Nur Otan Party again won the parliamentary polling.

DEFENCE

Defence expenditure in 2013 totalled US$2,318m. (US$131 per capita), representing 1.1% of GDP. There is currently conscription for 12 months, but Kazakhstan is set to switch to a fully professional army during 2016.

Nuclear Weapons

When Kazakhstan gained independence from the USSR in 1991 it became the world's fourth largest nuclear power. However, all the weapons systems were returned to Russia unilaterally and Kazakhstan's nuclear infrastructure was dismantled.

Army

Personnel, 2011, 30,000. Paramilitary units: Presidential Guard (2,000), Government Guard (500), Internal Security Troops (approximately 20,000), State Border Protection Forces (approximately 9,000).

Navy

A 3,000-strong Navy was established in 2003. In 2009 it was equipped with 14 inshore patrol craft.

Air Force

In 2011 there were 12,000 personnel (including Air Defence) with 162 combat-capable aircraft, including MiG-29, MiG-31 and Su-27 interceptors and Su-24 and Su-25 strike aircraft.

INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

In Jan. 1995 agreements were reached for closer integration with Russia, including the combining of military forces, currency convertibility and a customs union.

In 1998 President Nazarbayev signed major treaties with Russia and China, Kazakhstan's neighbours to the north, west and east, in the hope of improving relations with both countries.

ECONOMY

Agriculture accounted for 6.4% of GDP in 2009, industry 40.3% and services 53.3%.

Overview

Kazakhstan has prodigious natural resources but is over-reliant on its extractive industries. The country was severely affected by the global economic crisis but has since rebounded.

From 2002–10 GDP growth averaged 8%, driven by foreign investment in the Caspian oil sector alongside an expansion in the construction and financial sectors. Growth of 7.5% in 2011 placed Kazakhstan among the International Monetary Fund's list of the top ten fastest-growing economies. The poverty rate fell from 46.7% in 2001 to 6.5% in 2010, although the urban–rural gap in living standards remains large. In 2013 inflation stood below its 6–8% target.

The growth outlook in the medium term is positive, with production in the vast Kashagan oilfield—which began in Sept. 2013 but had to be suspended a month later owing to a pipeline leak—expected to resume in late 2016.

Currency

The unit of currency is the tenge (KZT) of 100 tiyn, which was introduced on 15 Nov. 1993 at 1 tenge = 500 roubles. It became the sole legal tender on 25 Nov. 1993. The tenge was devalued by 18% in Feb. 2009 and 19% in Feb. 2014. In Aug. 2015 Kazakhstan allowed the tenge to float freely. Inflation rates (based on IMF statistics):

2005	2006	2007	2008	2009	2010	2011	2012	2013	2014
7.5%	8.6%	10.8%	17.1%	7.3%	7.1%	8.3%	5.1%	5.8%	6.7%

Inflation was running at nearly 1,880% in 1994, but has since dropped dramatically. In July 2005 foreign exchange reserves were US$6,953m. and gold reserves amounted to 1.88m. troy oz. Total money supply was 876,981m. tenge in June 2005.

Budget

In 2010 revenues were 4,299.1bn. tenge and expenditures 4,457.2bn. tenge. Tax revenue accounted for 68.2% of revenues in 2010; social security accounted for 20.3% of expenditures, education 16.9% and health 12.4%.

Performance

Real GDP growth rates (based on IMF statistics):

2005	2006	2007	2008	2009	2010	2011	2012	2013	2014
9.7%	10.7%	8.9%	3.3%	1.2%	7.3%	7.5%	5.0%	6.0%	4.3%

Total GDP in 2014 was US$217.9bn.

Banking and Finance

The central bank and bank of issue is the National Bank (Governor, Daniyar Akishev). In 2013 there were 38 banks. As at 1 Dec. 2013 assets of the banks amounted to 15,109bn. tenge. The largest banks are Kazkommertsbank (KKB), Halyk Bank and BTA Bank. Foreign banks are banned from operating unless formed under subsidiaries incorporated within the country. However, as at 2013 there were 17 foreign-majority owned banks. External debt was US$118,723m. in 2010, representing 94.3% of GNI. Foreign direct investment amounted to US$9.7bn. in 2013, down from US$13.8bn. in 2012.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2011 were the equivalent of 12.0 tonnes per capita.

Electricity

Installed capacity was an estimated 18.7m. kW in 2011. Output in 2011 was 86.6bn. kWh. Consumption per capita was 5,478 kWh in 2011.

Oil and Gas

Proven oil reserves in 2012 were 30.0bn. bbls. The onshore Tengiz field has estimated oil reserves between 6bn. and 9bn. bbls; the onshore Karachaganak field has oil reserves of 2bn. bbls, and gas reserves of 600bn. cu. metres. Output in 2012 of oil, 81.3m. tonnes; natural gas, 19.7bn. cu. metres with proven reserves of 1.3trn. cu. metres. The first major pipeline for the export of oil from the Tengiz field was opened in March 2001, linking the Caspian port of Atyraū with the Russian Black Sea port of Novorossiisk. In Sept. 1997 Kazakhstan signed oil agreements with China worth US$9.5bn.; although only a small portion of that investment ever materialized. However, a 962-km oil pipeline linking Atasu in Kazakhstan and Alashankou in China opened in Dec. 2005. Oil and gas investment by foreign companies is now driving the economy. In 1997 oil production sharing deals were concluded with two international consortia to explore the North Caspian basin and to develop the Karachaganak gas field. A huge new offshore oilfield in the far north of the Caspian Sea, known as Kashagan, was discovered in early 2000. The field could prove to be the largest find in the last 30 years, and estimates suggest that it may contain 50bn. bbls of oil. In 2013 the Chinese state-owned oil and gas company, China National Petroleum Corporation, acquired an 8.3% stake in the field. Commercial production began in Sept. 2013. However, production ceased after only a few weeks owing to leaks of poisonous gas and is not expected to start again until late 2016.

It is believed that there may be as much as 14bn. tonnes of oil and gas reserves under Kazakhstan's portion of the Caspian Sea.

A state-owned national company, KazMunaiGaz, was created in 2002 to manage the oil and natural gas industries.

Minerals

Kazakhstan is extremely rich in mineral resources, including coal, bauxite, cobalt, vanadium, iron ores, chromium, phosphates, borates and other salts, copper, lead, manganese, molybdenum, nickel, tin, gold, silver, tungsten and zinc. Production figures (2003 unless otherwise indicated), in tonnes: coal (2004), 86.00m.; iron ore, 19.28m.; bauxite, 4.74m.; lignite (2004), 3.95m.; copper, 485,000; zinc, 394,000; uranium (2010), 17,803; silver, 827.4; gold, 19.3. Kazakhstan overtook Canada as the world's largest producer of uranium in 2009.

Agriculture

Kazakh agriculture has changed from primarily nomad cattle breeding to production of grain, cotton and other industrial crops. In 2011 agriculture accounted for 5% of GDP. There were 22.9m. ha. of arable land and 75,000 ha. of permanent crops in 2012. 2.1m. ha. were equipped for irrigation in 2012.

Tobacco, rubber plants and mustard are also cultivated. Kazakhstan has rich orchards and vineyards. Kazakhstan is noted for its livestock, particularly its sheep, from which excellent quality wool is obtained. Livestock (2013): 5.9m. cattle (9.6m. in 1993), 15.2m. sheep (33.6m. in 1993), 2.4m. goats, 0.9m. pigs, 1.8m. horses and 33.2m. chickens.

Output of main agricultural products (in 1,000 tonnes) in 2013: wheat, 9,841; potatoes, 3,126; barley, 1,491; watermelons, 1,155; tomatoes, 706; onions, 525; maize, 520. Livestock products, 2012 (in 1,000 tonnes): cow's milk, 4,830; meat, 934; eggs, 206.

Forestry

Forests covered 3.31m. ha. in 2010, or 1% of the land area. In 2011, 345,000 cu. metres of timber were cut.

Fisheries

Catches in 2010 totalled 42,953 tonnes, exclusively freshwater fish.

INDUSTRY

Kazakhstan was heavily industrialized in the Soviet period, with non-ferrous metallurgy, heavy engineering and the chemical industries prominent. Industrial output was valued at 16,852bn. tenge in 2012, up from 15,929bn. tenge in 2011. Production, 2007 unless otherwise indicated (in 1,000 tonnes) includes: cement (2008), 5,837; crude steel, 4,784; distillate fuel oil, 4,295; pig iron, 3,240; petrol, 2,633; residual fuel oil, 2,584; wheat flour (2003), 2,123; ferroalloys, 1,713; cotton woven fabrics (2002), 14m. sq. metres; leather footwear (2002), 250,000 pairs; TV sets (2008), 326,374 units.

Labour

The labour force in 2013 was 9,198,000 (7,756,000 in 2003). 78.6% of the population aged 15–64 was economically active in 2013. In the same year 5.2% of the population was unemployed.

Kazakhstan had 47,000 people living in slavery according to the Walk Free Foundation's 2013 Global Slavery Index.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

In Jan. 1994 an agreement to create a single economic zone was signed with Kyrgyzstan and Uzbekistan. Since Jan. 1992 individuals and enterprises have been able to engage in foreign trade without needing government permission, except for goods 'of national interest' (fuel, minerals, mineral fertilizers, grain, cotton, wool, caviar and pharmaceutical products) which may be exported only by state organizations.

In Jan. 2010 Kazakhstan joined a customs union, together with Russia and Belarus, which was superseded by the Eurasian Economic Union in Jan. 2015.

Imports and Exports

In 2010 imports (c.i.f.) were valued at US$24,023.6m. and exports (f.o.b.) at US$57,244.1m. In 2010, 22.8% of imports came from Russia, 16.5% from China and 7.6% from Germany. Main export markets in 2010 were China, 17.7%; Italy, 16.7%; France, 7.7%. Main imports, 2010 (US$1m.): machinery and transport equipment, 9,727; manufactured goods, 4,346; chemicals and related products, 2,858; and mineral fuels, lubricants and related materials, 2,380. Main exports, 2010 (US$1m.): mineral fuels, lubricants and related materials, 41,033; manufactured goods, 7,430; inedible crude materials (except fuels), 3,085; and chemicals and related materials, 2,510.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

In 2007 there were 93,123 km of roads, of which 23,507 were highways, main or national roads. Passenger cars in use in 2007 numbered 2,183,100, and there were also 359,200 lorries and vans, 83,400 buses and coaches, and 45,200 motorcycles and mopeds. There were 4,365 fatalities as a result of road accidents in 2007.

Rail

In 2012 there were 14,319 km of 1,520 mm gauge railways. Passenger-km travelled in 2009 came to 14.9bn. and freight tonne-km to 197.3bn. The first section of a metro in Almaty, covering 8.6 km, opened in 2011. Eventually it is expected to reach 45 km in length.

Civil Aviation

The national carrier is Air Astana, which carried 3,770,000 passengers in 2014. There are international airports at Almaty and Astana.

Shipping

There is one large port, Aktau. In Jan. 2009 there were nine ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 33,000 GT.

Telecommunications

There were 4.01m. fixed telephone lines in 2010 (250.3 per 1,000 inhabitants). Mobile phone subscribers numbered 19.77m. in 2010. There were 182.0 internet users per 1,000 inhabitants in 2009. Fixed internet subscriptions totalled 846,900 in 2010 (52.8 per 1,000 inhabitants). In March 2012 there were 452,000 Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

Jury trials for serious offences were introduced in Jan. 2007. In 2009, 121,667 crimes were reported, of which 1,638 homicides or attempted homicides. The population in penal institutions in Jan. 2013 was 48,684 (295 per 100,000 of national population). In 2015 the World Justice Project Rule of Law Index, which provides data on how the rule of law is experienced by the general public across eight categories, ranked Kazakhstan 58th of 102 countries for criminal justice and 53rd for civil justice.

Education

In 2007, 330,897 children were attending pre-school institutions, there were 947,807 pupils at primary schools, 1,874,213 pupils at secondary schools and 772,600 students in tertiary education. Adult literacy rate is more than 99%.

In 2007 public government expenditure on education came to 3.2% of GNI.

Health

In 2002 there were 894 hospitals with a provision of 81 beds per 10,000 inhabitants (2007). There were 57,514 physicians, 5,612 dentists, 113,098 nurses and midwives and 14,048 pharmacists in 2006.

Welfare

In 1998 the former social insurance system was replaced by mandatory individual accounts. Pension contributions are 10% of employees' monthly income. The basic state old-age pension is 40% of the monthly minimum wage. There were 1.7m. old-age pensioners in 2006.

RELIGION

In 2010 there were an estimated 11.3m. Muslims according to the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life (70.4% of the population), with the main minorities being Orthodox Christians (3.4m.), Catholics (380,000) and Protestants (310,000). A further 670,000 people had no religious affiliation.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

Kazakhstan has four sites on the UNESCO World Heritage List: the Mausoleum of Khoja Ahmed Yasawi (inscribed on the list in 2003), an excellent and well preserved example of late 14th century Timurid architecture; Petroglyphs within the Archaeological Landscape of Tamgaly (2004), a concentration of some 5,000 rock carvings; and Saryarka-Steppe and the Lakes of Northern Kazakhstan (2008), 450,344 ha. of wetlands that contain the Naurzum State Nature Reserve and the Korgalzhyn State Nature Reserve and are of outstanding importance for migratory water birds. Shared with China and Kyrgyzstan, Silk Roads: the Routes Network of Chang'an-Tianshan Corridor (2014) is a 5,000-km section of the extensive Silk Roads network stretching from Chang'an/Luoyang in China to the Zhetysay region in present-day Kazakhstan.

Press

There were 1,900 newspapers and magazines in 2008. The leading newspapers are the Kazakh-language Egemen Kazakhstan and the Russian-language Kazakhstanskaya Pravda.

Tourism

In 2010 there were 3,393,000 non-resident tourists, up from 3,118,000 in 2009. There were 1,460 hotels in 2010.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Aboriginal hunter-gatherers—possibly ancestors of the Ogiek who live on the Rift Valley's Mau escarpment—were Kenya's earliest inhabitants. Cushitic-speaking cattle-herders migrated south from the horn of Africa from around 1500 BC, followed by Nilo-Saharan pastoralists and, from early in the first millennium AD, Bantu-speaking farmers from western Cameroon settled. Prominent Bantu groups include the Kikuyu, the Kamba, the Luhya and the Meru, while speakers of Nilotic languages include the Luo, Maasai, Samburu and Turkana. Muslim seafarers from the Arabian peninsula (Oman) established trading settlements along the Kenyan coast from the seventh century, with thriving ports like Lamu and Mombasa developing a distinctive African-Arabic 'Swahili' culture.

The Portuguese explorer Vasco da Gama reached Mombasa in 1498, heralding two centuries of Portuguese influence in coastal Kenya, centred on Mombasa and the island of Kilwa (now southern Tanzania). Skirmishes with Venetian merchants and Omani Arabs occurred frequently; the capture of Mombasa's Fort Jesus in 1698 paved the way for Omani control over the coastal strip and parts of the interior. Clove plantations were established in the 18th century and trade in slaves and ivory increased, particularly after 1840 when Sayyid bin Sultan moved his capital from Muscat to Zanzibar.

British merchants were increasingly active in coastal Kenya during the 19th century, notably through the British India Steam Navigation Company, founded in 1856 by William Mackinnon. Following the Berlin Conference in 1885, the British government appointed Mackinnon to administer their new East African dependency, leased from the Sultan of Zanzibar and centred on Mombasa. In 1895 the British declared the region the East Africa Protectorate and the following year work began on a railway connecting Mombasa with Kisumu on Lake Victoria. 30,000 labourers from British India worked on the line, which was completed in 1902 and spearheaded the development of tea and coffee plantations and big-game hunting in the Kenyan highlands.

The outpost of Nairobi grew quickly, becoming capital of the protectorate in 1905 and, from 1920, capital of the colony of Kenya. African resentment at the loss of land rights and the exclusively white-representative colonial legislative council was voiced by leaders such as Jomo Kenyatta. In 1952 the Mau Mau uprising began when Kikuyu militants attacked politicians and raided settler farms. A state of emergency was declared and the British administration fought a violent counter-insurgency over the next eight years, detaining tens of thousands without trial, often in appalling conditions. The number of casualties is disputed, with official figures claiming 11,000 but some estimates running to more than 150,000. In 1960 the British administration announced a plan for transition to African majority rule. The following year Kenyatta was freed and reinstated as president of the pro-independence Kenya African National Union (KANU) party.

Full internal self-government was achieved in 1962 and in Dec. 1963 Kenya became independent, with Kenyatta elected president of the new republic the following year. Ethnic unrest ignited in 1969 after the assassination of Tom Mboya, a high-profile Luo government minister. On the death of Kenyatta in Aug. 1978, Daniel T. arap Moi, the vice-president, became acting president. He was elected to the role outright in 1979 and again in 1983 (having survived an attempted coup the previous year), 1988, 1992 and 1997.

In 1982 Kenya became a one-party state but multi-party elections were re-introduced in 1992, paving the way for the first genuinely competitive election since 1963. At the 2002 polls the opposition united behind Mwai Kibaki. He won a landslide victory against Moi's successor as KANU leader, Uhuru Kenyatta, to become the first non-KANU president of independent Kenya.

In Nov. 2005 a new draft constitution was rejected amid criticism that it gave the president too much power. In Dec. 2007 Kibaki claimed victory in a disputed presidential election that prompted a wave of civil unrest in which 1,500 were killed. In Feb. 2008 Kibaki and the opposition leader, Raila Odinga, agreed a power-sharing deal. In March 2013 Uhuru Kenyatta won the election for the presidency. An appeal by Odinga, his chief rival, was rejected by the Supreme Court.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Kenya is bounded by South Sudan and Ethiopia in the north, Uganda in the west, Tanzania in the south and Somalia and the Indian Ocean in the east. The total area is 581,313 sq. km. The 2009 census gave a population of 38,610,097 (19,417,639 females); density, 66 per sq. km. In 2009, 70.2% of the population were rural. In 2006 more than 30,000 Somali refugees entered Kenya to escape the fighting that escalated in Somalia the course of the year.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 46.05m.

Kenya is divided into seven provinces and one national capital area (Nairobi). The land areas, populations and capitals are:

Province	Sq. km	Census 2009	Capital	Census 2009
Rift Valley	173,868	10,006,805	Nakuru	286,411
Eastern	159,891	5,668,123	Embu	35,736
Nyanza	16,162	5,442,711	Kisumu	259,258
Central	13,176	4,383,743	Nyeri	63,626
Western	8,360	4,334,282	Kakamega	69,502
Coast	83,603	3,325,307	Mombasa	915,101
Nairobi	684	3,138,369	—	—
North-Eastern	126,902	2,310,757	Garissa	110,383

Other large towns (2009): Eldoret (252,061), Ruiru (236,961), Kikuyu (190,208), Thika (136,576).

Most of Kenya's 38.61m. people belong to 13 tribes, the main ones including Kikuyu (about 22% of the population), Luhya (14%), Luo (13%), Kalenjin (12%), Kamba (11%), Gusii (6%), Meru (5%) and Mijikenda (5%). There is a large Somali minority, numbering over 2.4m. at the time of the 2009 census.

Swahili and English are both official languages, but people belonging to the different tribes have their own language as their mother tongue.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2008 births (estimates), 1,503,000; deaths, 451,000. Estimated birth rate in 2008 was 38.8 per 1,000 population; estimated death rate, 11.6. Annual population growth rate, 2000–08, 2.6%. Expectation of life at birth in 2007 was 53.2 years for males and 54.0 years for females. Infant mortality, 2010, 55 per 1,000 live births. Fertility rate, 2008, 4.9 births per woman. In 2005, 46% of Kenyans lived below the poverty line (down from 52% in 1997).

CLIMATE

The climate is tropical, with wet and dry seasons, but considerable differences in altitude make for varied conditions between the hot, coastal lowlands and the plateau, where temperatures are very much cooler. Heaviest rains occur in April and May, but in some parts there is a second wet season in Nov. and Dec. Nairobi, Jan. 65°F (18.3°C), July 60°F (15.6°C). Annual rainfall 39" (958 mm). Mombasa, Jan. 81°F (27.2°C), July 76°F (24.4°C). Annual rainfall 47" (1,201 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

A new constitution was approved in a referendum on 4 Aug. 2010 with 66.9% of votes cast in favour. Under its terms, the President and Parliament will have five-year fixed terms. The president may not serve more than two terms. To be elected president, a candidate must secure at least 50% of votes cast, with at least a quarter coming from more than half of the county constituencies. The old 46 local government districts were restructured into 47 counties, with each county having a governor and a senator. Senators sit in a newly created 68-member upper house, providing the country with a bicameral legislature following the elections of March 2013. The National Assembly, the lower house, is made up of 350 members following the election with 290 directly elected, 47 women, 12 nominated plus the Speaker (up from 224 previously, with 210 directly elected, 12 appointed plus the Speaker and the Attorney General). The Senate consists of 47 elected senators, 20 nominated senators plus the Speaker. Each county assembly must return at least one female MP. Parliament has the power to vet key appointments previously appointed by order of the president. The constitution also provides for a supreme court (the highest court in the land) backed by a court of appeals. Judges are subject to review by a judicial appointments panel.

National Anthem

'Ee Mungu nguvu yetu' ('Oh God of all creation'); words by a collective, tune traditional.

Position
President

Introduction

Uhuru Kenyatta, son of Kenya's first president, won a disputed election in March 2013 to become the nation's fourth president.

Early Life

Kenyatta was born in Oct. 1961 in Nairobi. His father, Jomo, became president three years later. Uhuru attended St Mary's School in Nairobi and in 1985 graduated in political science and economics from Amherst College in Massachusetts, USA.

He began his political career in 1997 when he was elected chairman of his hometown branch of the ruling party, the Kenya African National Union (KANU). In the same year he ran for the parliamentary seat of Gatundu South, losing to Moses Muhia. Kenyatta was appointed chairman of the Kenya Tourism Board in 1999 by then President Daniel arap Moi.

In 2001 he was nominated for a parliamentary seat by Moi and was appointed minister for local government. He was Moi's preferred choice to succeed him as president and ran as the KANU candidate in the 2002 presidential election, losing by a large margin to Mwai Kibaki. In 2005 Kenyatta defeated Nicholas Biwott to become chairman of KANU.

Kenyatta withdrew from the 2007 presidential election and threw his support behind former rival Kibaki's re-election. In 2010 he was named as a suspect by the International Criminal Court (ICC) in relation to the violence that swept the nation in the aftermath of the election, which Kibaki won and the opposition disputed. Specifically, Kenyatta was accused of organizing attacks against members of groups who supported Kibaki's rival, Raila Odinga.

Kenyatta was appointed minister of local government by Kibaki in 2008 and subsequently held the posts of deputy prime minister and minister of trade. In 2009 he became minister of finance. In 2012 he took over The National Alliance (TNA), which formed a coalition with the United Republican Party of William Ruto to oppose Raila Odinga's Coalition for Reforms and Democracy in the 2013 presidential election.

Career in Office

Five days after polling on 4 March 2013, Kenyatta was declared president. Odinga unsuccessfully lodged a formal challenge with the Supreme Court, claiming the election was fraudulent. Kenyatta's new cabinet comprised only 18 ministers, significantly less than its predecessor, and included six women, notably Amina Mohamed as foreign minister and Raychelle Omamo as minister of defence.

Kenyatta faced the prospect of carrying out his duties while on trial at the ICC accused of crimes against humanity for his alleged part in the violence that left over 1,200 dead following the 2007 election. As he awaited his trial he maintained his innocence and contested the evidence against him. In Dec. 2014 the prosecution case was controversially withdrawn. Nonetheless, the allegations left relations with the international community strained and weakened his authority domestically.

In Sept. 2013 nearly 70 people were killed, including Kenyatta's nephew, in a four-day terrorist attack and siege by Somali Islamists extremists at a shopping mall in Nairobi. In a further incident in April 2015 militants killed about 150 people in an assault on a university in Garissa in the east of the country. In Nov. Kenyatta announced a new government structure, increasing the number of ministries and departments, which was prompted by claims of corruption in the administration and saw six cabinet secretaries sacked.

DEFENCE

In 2013 defence expenditure totalled US$975m. (US$22 per capita), representing 2.1% of GDP.

Army

Total strength (2011) 20,000. In addition there is a paramilitary Police General Service Unit of 5,000.

Navy

The Navy, based in Mombasa, consisted in 2011 of 1,620 personnel (including 120 marines).

Air Force

An air force, formed on 1 June 1964, was built up with RAF assistance. Personnel (2011) 2,500, with 38 combat-capable aircraft.

INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

In Nov. 1999 a treaty was signed between Kenya, Tanzania and Uganda to create a new East African Community as a means of developing East African trade, tourism and industry and laying the foundations for a future common market and political federation.

ECONOMY

Agriculture contributed 22.6% of GDP in 2009, industry 15.3% and services 62.1%.

Overview

Against a backdrop of improving political stability after largely peaceful elections in March 2013, the economy grew by 4.6% in 2013, driven by the industrial and agricultural sectors. Inflation has been kept low by strong monetary policy and stable exchange rates overseen by the central bank. Meanwhile, increased remittances have boosted foreign exchange reserves.

Kenya has the third largest banking sector in Africa. Private sector lending growth accelerated from 7.7% in 2012 to 17.4% in 2013. In the same year the International Monetary Fund extended a credit facility programme, which has distributed US$750m. to further reinforce foreign reserves, reduce the fiscal deficit and lower public debt.

Nonetheless, the economy has been held back by long-standing political uncertainty that has seen it underperform relative to its sub-Saharan neighbours and to its own potential. Plans for devolution are expected to place extra fiscal burdens on the state, alongside increasing public sector wages. Other risks to growth include rising interest rate payments, increasing import prices and consistently low export demand. The government also faces challenges from security threats and energy supply bottlenecks.

Currency

The monetary unit is the Kenya shilling (KES) of 100 cents. The currency became convertible in May 1994. The shilling was devalued by 23% in April 1993. Inflation was 5.7% in 2013 and 6.9% in 2014. Foreign exchange reserves were US$1,653m. in July 2005, total money supply was K Sh 222,558m. and gold reserves were 1,000 troy oz.

Budget

In 2008–09 revenues totalled K Sh 511,355m. and expenditures K Sh 621,909m. Tax revenue accounted for 85.5% of revenues; current expenditure accounted for 74.3% of expenditures. The fiscal year ends on 30 June.

Performance

Real GDP growth was 4.6% in 2012, 5.7% in 2013 and 5.3% in 2014. Total GDP in 2014 was US$60.9bn.

Banking and Finance

The central bank and bank of issue is the Central Bank of Kenya (Governor, Patrick Njoroge). There are 43 banks, two non-banking financial institutions and a couple of building societies. The largest banks are Barclays Bank of Kenya, Equity Bank and Kenya Commercial Bank.

Foreign debt was US$8,400m. in 2010, representing 26.9% of GNI.

There is a stock exchange in Nairobi.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Kenya's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2011 were the equivalent of 0.3 tonnes per capita.

Electricity

Installed generating capacity was 1.80m. kW in 2011, mostly provided by hydro-power from power stations on the Tana river with some from oil-fired power stations and by geothermal power. Kenya is the largest producer of geothermal energy in Africa. Total production in 2011 was 7.85bn. kWh, with consumption per capita 187 kWh.

Oil and Gas

Oil was discovered in the northwest of the country in March 2012. It was announced in 2015 that production would begin in 2022.

Minerals

Production, 2005 (in 1,000 tonnes): lime and limestone (estimate), 1,085; soda ash, 360; fluorite, 97. Other minerals include gold (616 kg exported in 2005), raw soda, diatomite, garnets, salt and vermiculite.

Agriculture

As agriculture is possible from sea-level to altitudes of over 2,500 metres, tropical, sub-tropical and temperate crops can be grown and mixed farming is pursued. In 2012 there were around 5.6m. ha. of arable land and 530,000 ha. of permanent crop land. 103,000 ha. were equipped for irrigation in 2012. Four-fifths of the country is range-land producing mainly livestock products and the wild game that is a major tourist attraction.

Tea, coffee and horticultural products, particularly flowers, are all major foreign exchange earners.

Kenya is the world's third largest producer of tea. The production is high quality tea, raised in near-perfect agronomic conditions. In 2012 production was 369,400 tonnes.

Coffee output in 2011 was 40,800 tonnes. Other major agricultural products (2012, in 1,000 tonnes): sugarcane, 5,823; maize, 3,600; potatoes, 2,915; mangoes and guavas, 2,782; bananas, 1,394; cassava, 893; sweet potatoes, 860.

Livestock (2013 estimates): goats, 30.0m.; cattle, 19.5m.; sheep, 18.5m.; camels, 3.1m.; pigs, 360,000; chickens, 32.5m.

Forestry

Forests covered 3.47m. ha. in 2010 (6% of the land area). There are coniferous, broad-leaved, hardwood and bamboo forests. Timber production was 27.55m. cu. metres in 2011.

Fisheries

Catches in 2010 totalled 143,111 tonnes, of which 134,847 tonnes were freshwater fish (mostly from Lake Victoria). Marine fishing has not reached its full potential, despite a coastline of 640 km. Fish landed from the sea totals less than 9,000 tonnes annually, but there is an estimated potential of 150,000 tonnes in tuna and similar species.

INDUSTRY

In 2006 industry accounted for 18.8% of GDP, with manufacturing contributing 11.5%. In 2003 there were 579 manufacturing firms employing more than 50 persons. The main products are textiles, chemicals, vehicle assembly and transport equipment, leather and footwear, printing and publishing, food and tobacco processing and oil refining. Production (2003 unless otherwise indicated) included (in tonnes): cement (2008), 2,829,000; residual fuel oil (2005), 549,000; sugar, 448,489; distillate fuel oil (2005), 374,000; petrol (2007), 207,000; wheat flour, 179,866; maize meal, 120,942; cattle feed, 99,616; kerosene (2007), 116,000.

Labour

The labour force in 2013 was 16,969,000 (12,574,000 in 2003). 67.8% of the population aged 15–64 was economically active in 2013. In the same year 9.1% of the population was unemployed.

Kenya had 37,000 people living in slavery according to the Walk Free Foundation's 2013 Global Slavery Index.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

Imports (c.i.f.) in 2010 totalled US$12,092.9m. and exports (f.o.b.) US$5,169.1m. The gap between imports and exports has widened considerably since 2005, when imports (c.i.f.) totalled only US$5,846.2m. but exports (f.o.b.) were US$3,419.9m. Principal imports in 2010 (US$1m.): machinery and transport equipment, 3,841; mineral fuels, lubricants and related materials, 2,670; manufactured goods, 1,775. Leading exports in 2010 (US$1m.): food and live animals, 2,096; manufactured goods, 626; inedible crude materials (except fuels), 613. Tea constituted 22.5% of Kenya's exports in 2010. Main import suppliers, 2010: China, 12.6%;

United Arab Emirates, 21.1%; India, 10.8%. Main export markets, 2010: Uganda, 12.7%; UK, 9.8%; Tanzania, 8.1%.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

In 2004 there were 63,265 km of roads (6,527 km of highways, national and main roads). There were, in 2007, 562,400 passenger cars in use, 210,900 vans and lorries, 180,800 motorcycles and mopeds, and 20,100 buses and coaches. There were 2,893 fatalities as a result of road accidents in 2007.

Rail

In 2006 there were 2,064 km of railways (metre gauge). Most of the network (1,918 km, including non-operational sections) is managed by Rift Valley Railways (Kenya) Ltd. In 2008–09, 4.4m. passengers and 1.6m. tonnes of freight were carried. The Magadi Railway Co. Ltd manages a 146 km stretch of line from Manzi to Konza to carry soda ash for export through Mombasa. A new railway line from Mombasa to Nairobi is currently under construction with Chinese assistance. It is expected to be completed in 2018.

Civil Aviation

There are international airports at Nairobi (Jomo Kenyatta International) and Mombasa (Moi International). The national carrier, Kenya Airways, is operated under a public-private partnership with the Kenyan government owning a 29.8% share and Dutch airline KLM 26.7%. In 2013 it carried 3,693,000 passengers (2,808,000 on international flights), serving 58 international and four domestic destinations. In 2010 Jomo Kenyatta International handled 5,484,771 passengers and Moi International 1,271,078.

Shipping

The main port is Mombasa, which handled 16.4m. tonnes of cargo in 2008; container traffic totalled 616,000 TEUs (twenty-foot equivalent units) in 2008. In Jan. 2009 there were six ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 6,000 GT.

Telecommunications

Kenya had 283,500 landline telephone subscribers in 2011, or 6.8 per 1,000 persons. Since 1999 the government has been introducing measures to liberalize the telecommunications sector that have led to massive price reductions and improved services. In 2011 mobile phone subscribers numbered 26,980,800. The main mobile providers are Safaricom and Airtel Kenya. There were 209.8 internet users per 1,000 inhabitants in 2010. Fixed internet subscriptions totalled 8,300 in 2009 (0.2 per 1,000 inhabitants). In June 2012 there were 1.4m. Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The courts of Justice comprise the Supreme Court, Court of Appeal and the High Court, beneath which are specialized courts, magistrates courts and Kadhis (Islamic) courts. The Chief Justice is the president of the Supreme Court, which also comprises the Deputy Chief Justice and five other judges. Only the Supreme Court can hear and determine any case challenging the election of the president. The Court of Appeal, comprising at least 12 judges, is based in Nairobi and in the course of its Appellate duties visits Mombasa, Kisumu, Nakuru, Nyeri and Eldoret. The High Court, with full jurisdiction in both civil and criminal matters, comprises the Chief Justice and not fewer than 11 but not more than 50 puisne judges. There are 15 High Court stations in the country. Kadhis courts are established in areas of concentrated Muslim populations: Mombasa, Nairobi, Malindi, Lamu, Garissa, Kisumu and Marsabit.

There were 63,476 recorded crimes in 2008; the prison population was approximately 52,000 in Oct. 2012 (121 per 100,000 of national population). Kenya was ranked 89th of 102 countries for criminal justice and 73rd for civil justice in the 2015 World Justice Project Rule of Law Index, which provides data on how the rule of law is experienced by the general public across eight categories.

Education

The adult literacy rate in 2008 was 87%. Free primary education was introduced in 2003. In 2007 there were 1,691,093 children in pre-primary schools with 76,323 teaching staff, 6,687,510 pupils were in primary schools with 146,796 teaching staff and 2,729,040 pupils in secondary schools with 102,449 teaching staff. There were 139,524 students in higher education in 2007.

In 2005 public expenditure on education came to 7.3% of GNI and 17.9% of total government spending.

Health

In 2003 there were 4,813 physicians, 772 dentists, 40,081 nurses and 1,881 pharmacists. There were 526 hospitals (with 63,407 beds), 649 health centres and 3,382 sub-centres and dispensaries in 2003. Free medical service for all children and adult out-patients was launched in 1965.

RELIGION

In 2010 there were 24.2m. Protestants according to the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life, 9.0m. Catholics, 3.9m. Muslims and 0.7m. folk religionists. A further 1.0m. people did not have any religious affiliation. In Feb. 2016 there was one Roman Catholic cardinal.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

Kenya has six sites on the UNESCO World Heritage List: Mount Kenya National Park/Natural Forest (1997 and 2013), including the second highest peak in Africa; Lake Turkana National Parks (1997 and 2001), a breeding ground for Nile crocodiles and hippopotami; Lamu Old Town (2001), the oldest and best-preserved Swahili settlement in East Africa; the Sacred Mijikenda Kaya Forests (2008), 11 separate forest sites containing the remains of numerous fortified villages; Fort Jesus, Mombasa (2011), a 16th century Portuguese fort; and the Kenya Lake System in the Great Rift Valley (2011), consisting of three lakes that are home to numerous threatened bird species.

Press

In 2010 there were eight paid-for daily papers with a total average daily circulation of 310,000 plus 15 paid-for non-dailies. The most widely read paper is the English-language Daily Nation.

Tourism

In 2009 there were 1,392,000 non-resident tourists (down from a high of 1,686,000 in 2007). In 2009 receipts from tourism amounted to US$1,124m., down from US$1,514m. in 2007. Tourism is the country's leading source of hard currency.

KIRIBATI

Ribaberikin Kiribati
(Republic of Kiribati)

Capital: Bairiki (Tarawa)

Population estimate, 2015: 112,000

GNI per capita, 2014: (PPP$) 2,434

HDI/world rank, 2014: 0.590/137

Internet domain extension: .ki

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

The islands that now constitute Kiribati were first settled by early Austronesian-speaking peoples long before the 1st century AD. Fijians and Tongans arrived about the 14th century and subsequently merged with the older groups to form the traditional I-Kiribati Micronesian society and culture. The Gilbert and Ellice Islands were proclaimed a British protectorate in 1892 and annexed at the request of the native governments as the Gilbert and Ellice Islands Colony on 10 Nov. 1915. On 1 Oct. 1975 the Ellice Islands severed constitutional links with the Gilbert Islands and took on a new name, Tuvalu. The Gilberts achieved full independence as Kiribati in 1979. Internal self-government was obtained on 1 Nov. 1976 and independence on 12 July 1979 as the Republic of Kiribati.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Kiribati (pronounced Kiribahss) consists of three groups of coral atolls and one isolated volcanic island, spread over a large expanse of the Central Pacific with a total land area of 811 sq. km (313 sq. miles). It comprises Banaba or Ocean Island (6 sq. km), the 16 Gilbert Islands (280 sq. km), the eight Phoenix Islands (29 sq. km) and eight of the 11 Line Islands (496 sq. km), the other three Line Islands (Jarvis, Palmyra Atoll and Kingman Reef) being uninhabited dependencies of the USA. The capital is the island of Bairiki in Tarawa. The gradual rise in sea levels in recent years is slowly reducing the area of the islands. Most of the land is less than 3 metres above sea level.

Population, 2010 census, 103,058 (52,262 females); density, 127 per sq. km.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 112,000.

In 2011, 44.0% of the population lived in urban areas.

Banaba, all 16 Gilbert Islands, Kanton (or Abariringa) in the Phoenix Islands and three atolls in the Line Islands (Teraina, Tabuaeran and Kiritimati—formerly Washington Island, Fanning Island and Christmas Island respectively) are inhabited; their populations in 2010 (census) were as follows:

Banaba (Ocean Is.)	295	Butaritari	4,346
Makin	1,798	Marakei	2,872

Abaiang	5,502	North Tabiteuea	3,689
Tarawa	56,284	South Tabiteuea	1,290
North Tarawa	6,102	Beru	2,099
South Tarawa	34,427	Nikunau	1,907
Betio	15,755	Onotoa	1,519
Maiana	2,027	Tamana	951
Abemama	3,213	Arorae	1,279
Kuria	980	Kanton	31
Aranuka	1,057	Teraina	1,690
Nonouti	2,683	Tabuaeran	1,960
Tabiteuea	4,979	Kiritimati	5,586

The remaining 12 atolls have no permanent population; the seven Phoenix Islands comprise Birnie, Rawaki (formerly Phoenix), Enderbury, Manra (formerly Sydney), Orona (formerly Hull), McKean and Nikumaroro (formerly Gardner), while the others are Malden and Starbuck in the Central Line Islands, and Millennium Island (formerly Caroline), Flint and Vostok in the Southern Line Islands. The population is almost entirely Micronesian.

English is the official language; I-Kiribati (Gilbertese) is also spoken.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2005 estimates: births, 2,460; deaths, 810. Rates, 2005 estimates (per 1,000 population): births, 26.6; deaths, 8.7. Infant mortality rate (2010), 39 per 1,000 live births; life expectancy (2005), 61.0 years. Annual population growth rate, 2000–05, 1.8%; fertility rate, 2008, 3.1 births per woman.

CLIMATE

The Line Islands, Phoenix Islands and Banaba have a maritime equatorial climate, but the islands further north and south are tropical. Annual and daily ranges of temperature are small; mean annual rainfall ranges from 50" (1,250 mm) near the equator to 120" (3,000 mm) in the north. Typhoons are prevalent (Nov.–March) and there are occasional tornadoes. Tarawa, Jan. 83°F (28.3°C), July 82°F (27.8°C). Annual rainfall 79" (1,977 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

Under the constitution founded on 12 July 1979 the republic has a unicameral legislature, the House of Assembly (Maneaba ni Maungatabu), comprising 46 members, 44 of whom are elected by popular vote, and two (the Attorney-General ex officio and a representative from the Banaban community) appointed for a four-year term. The President is both Head of State and government.

National Anthem

'Teirake kain Kiribati' ('Stand up, Kiribatians'); words and tune by U. Ioteba.

RECENT ELECTIONS

The last House of Assembly elections were held on 30 Dec. 2015 and 7 Jan. 2016. Following the election, Boutokaan Te Koaua (BTK; 'Pillars of Truth') had 26 seats in the House of Assembly and the Tobwaan Kiribati Party/TKP 19.

On 9 March 2016 Taneti Maamau (Tobwaan Kiribati Party/TKP) was elected president with 60.0% of the vote, defeating Rimeta Beniamina who took 38.6% and Tianeti Ioane with 1.5%.

CURRENT GOVERNMENT

President: Taneti Maamau (since 11 March 2016).

In March 2016 the government comprised:

Vice President, and Minister of Public Works and Utilities: Kourabi Nenem.

CURRENT LEADERS

Taneti Maamau

Position
President

Introduction

Taneti Maamau became president on 11 March 2016. He is a member of the Tobwaan Kiribati Party.

Early Life

Taneti Maamau comes from Onotoa and studied at the University of the South Pacific before taking a master's degree at the University of Queensland, Australia. He completed his thesis—in industrialization and trade policies in India—in 2003.

He has been a member of parliament for several decades. In the mid-1990s President Tito appointed him permanent secretary at the ministry of finance and economic development, a post he held for several years. During the presidency of Anote Tong from 2003–16, Maamau was part of the opposition that advocated greater government transparency and campaigned to establish a system of committees to scrutinize the government executive, especially in relation to health spending.

Following the 2015–16 general election that resulted in the Boutokaan Te Koaua party receiving the most seats, two opposition parties—Karikirakean Tei-Kiribati and Maurin Kiribati—formed a new coalition, the Tobwaan Kiribati Party. In Feb. 2016 Maamau was nominated as its presidential candidate and campaigned on promises to focus on domestic policies. He won the election with 60% of the vote and was sworn in on 11 March 2016.

Career in Office

As he presides over a minority government, with only 19 of 44 elected seats, one of Maamau's principal challenges is to secure sufficient support to push through his policies. His priorities are likely to include strengthening the economy, ensuring transparency of government and working with the international community to address the impact of climate change on Kiribati.

ECONOMY

Agriculture accounted for 26% of GDP in 2009, industry 8% and services 66%.

Overview

Kiribati, which achieved independence from the UK in 1979, is one of the least developed of the Pacific island nations and possesses few natural resources. Its economy depends on fishing licence fees derived from its Exclusive Economic Zone, a $A500m. Revenue Equalization Reserve Fund (RERF, created using pre-1979 revenues accrued from phosphate mining), passport fees, foreign aid (including remittances from native seamen abroad) and tourism. The economy has a narrow production base, with exports limited to coconuts, copra, seaweed and fish (from which around 80% of households make a living). The public sector accounts for nearly 80% of employment.

Kiribati was badly hit by the global economic crisis through a fall in remittances and a decline in the value of the RERF and Kiribati Provident Fund (the government-owned pension asset fund). Following two years of contraction, the economy began recovery in the second half of 2010, thanks in part to copra subsidies and increased civil servant wages. Growth averaged 2.9% per year from 2011–14, largely driven by increased revenue from fishing licences and construction projects funded by development partners.

Limited resources and geographic isolation make transport and communications costly. The country is also extremely vulnerable to climate change and rising sea levels.

Currency

The currency in use is the Australian dollar. There was deflation of 1.5% in 2013 but inflation of 2.1% in 2014.

Budget

Foreign financial aid, mainly from the UK and Japan, has amounted to 25–50% of GDP in recent years. Budgetary central government revenues in 2011–12 totalled $A135.4m. and expenditures $A105.4m.

Performance

The economy grew by 3.4% in 2012, 2.4% in 2013 and 3.7% in 2014. Total GDP in 2014 was US$167m.

Banking and Finance

ANZ Bank (Kiribati) Ltd is 25% government-owned and 75% owned by ANZ Bank. In Sept. 2009 deposits totalled $A47.2m. There is also a Development Bank of Kiribati and a network of village lending banks and credit institutions.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy were the equivalent of 0.6 tonnes per capita in 2011.

Electricity

Installed capacity (2011 estimate), 6,000 kW; production (2011), 24m. kWh.

Agriculture

In 2012 there were about 2,000 ha. of arable land and 32,000 ha. of permanent crops. Copra and fish represent the bulk of production and exports. The principal tree is the coconut; other food-bearing trees are the pandanus palm and the breadfruit. The only vegetable which grows in any quantity is a coarse calladium (alocasia) with the local name 'bwabwai', which is cultivated in pits; taro and sweet potatoes are also grown. Coconut production (2012 estimate), 170,000 tonnes; bananas, 7,000 tonnes; taro, 1,800 tonnes. Principal livestock, 2013 estimates: pigs, 13,500; chickens, 610,000.

Forestry

There were 12,000 ha. of forest in 2010, or 15% of the total land area.

Fisheries

Fishing license fees provide key sources of income. Total catches in 2010 amounted to 44,559 tonnes, exclusively from sea fishing.

INDUSTRY

Industry is concentrated on fishing and handicrafts.

Labour

The economically active population classified as cash workers (not including village workers engaged in subsistence activities) totalled 13,133 in 2005. In 2005, 52.9% of cash workers were employed in public administration, 11.2% in transport and communication, 9.0% in retail trade, and 7.1% in agriculture and fishing. 6.1% of the labour force were unemployed in 2005; the unemployment rate in 2005 including village workers was 64.5%.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

Total imports (2009), US$68.1m.; exports (2005), US$3.6m. Main import sources in 2009: Australia, 29.4%; Fiji, 25.8%; France, 6.9%; USA, 6.8%. Main export markets in 2005: Free zones, 33.3%; Australia, 22.2%; Fiji, 16.7%; Hong Kong, 8.3%. Principal exports: copra, seaweed, fish; imports: foodstuffs, machinery and equipment, manufactured goods and fuel.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

In 2002 there were 670 km of roads. There were 9,600 cars, 4,320 trucks and vans and 2,080 motorcycles in 2008.

Civil Aviation

The national airline is the state-owned Air Kiribati. In 2010 there were scheduled services from Tarawa (Bonriki) to Fiji as well as domestic flights linking the main islands of Kiribati.

Shipping

The main port is at Betio (Tarawa). Other ports of entry are Banaba, English Harbor and Kanton. There is also a small network of canals in the Line Islands. In Jan. 2009 there were 58 ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 245,000 GT.

Telecommunications

In 2011 there were 8,461 main (fixed) telephone lines and 13,788 mobile phone subscriptions. There were 90 internet users per 1,000 inhabitants in 2010.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

Kiribati's police force is under the command of a Commissioner of Police who is also responsible for prisons, immigration, fire service (both domestic and airport) and firearms licensing. There is a Court of Appeal and High Court, with judges at all levels appointed by the President.

The population in penal institutions in Oct. 2012 was 118 (equivalent to 114 per 100,000 of national population).

Education

In 2005 there were 16,133 pupils and 654 teachers at primary schools and 7,487 pupils in general secondary education with 665 teachers. 51.6% of males and 49.5% of females had received secondary or higher education in 2005 compared to 27.1% of males and 20.6% of females in 1995. There is a regional campus of the University of the South Pacific on Tarawa. Other post-secondary institutions include a teacher training college, a marine training centre, a fisheries training centre, a school of nursing and a technical institute.

Health

The government maintains free medical and other services. In 2004 there were 20 physicians, three dentistry personnel and 260 nursing and midwifery personnel. There is a national referral hospital in South Tarawa and three other hospitals. In 2005 there were 15 hospital beds per 10,000 inhabitants.

RELIGION

In 2010 an estimated 50% of the population were Roman Catholics according to the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life and 40% Kiribati Protestants; there are also small numbers of Seventh-day Adventists, Latter-day Saints (Mormons) and Bahá'ís.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

Kiribati has one site on the UNESCO World Heritage List: Phoenix Islands Protected Area (inscribed on the list in 2010).

Press

In 2008 there were three newspapers with a combined circulation of 4,000.

Tourism

In 2011, 5,264 non-resident tourists—excluding same-day visitors—arrived by air at Tarawa and Kiritimati (the two most populous islands).

DIPLOMATIC REPRESENTATIVES

Of Kiribati in the United Kingdom

Acting High Commissioner: Makurita Baaro (resides in Kiribati).

Honorary Consul: Michael Walsh (The Great House, Llanddewi Rhydderch, Monmouthshire, NP7 9UY).

Of the United Kingdom in Kiribati

High Commissioner: Roderick Drummond (resides in Suva, Fiji).

Of Kiribati in the USA and to the United Nations

Ambassador: Makurita Baaro.

Of the USA in Kiribati

Ambassador: Judith Cefkin (resides in Suva, Fiji).

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

The Korean peninsula was first settled by tribal peoples from Manchuria and Siberia who provided the basis for the modern Korean language. By 3000 BC agriculture-based communities had emerged. The earliest known colony in the region was established at Pyongyang in the 12th century BC. Among the most prominent agricultural communities was Old Choson, which by 194 BC had evolved into a league of tribes ruled by Wiman or 'Wei Man'. His realm was taken over by the Han empire of China in 108 BC and replaced by four Chinese colonies.

The rest of the peninsula evolved into tribal states; Puyo in the north and Chin south of the Han River. Chin was itself split into three tribal states (Mahan, Chinhae and Pyonhan); these states then evolved into three rival kingdoms (Koguryo, Paekche and Silla). Three powerful figures, King T'aejo (AD 53–146) of Koguryo, King Koi (AD 234–86) of Paekche and King Naemul (AD 356–402) of Silla, established hereditary monarchies while powerful aristocracies developed from tribal chiefdoms.

With China's support Silla conquered the other two kingdoms; Paekche in 660 and Koguryo in 668. In 676 Silla drove out the Chinese and gained complete control of the peninsula. Survivors from Koguryo established Parhae, under the leadership of Tae Cho-yong, in the northern region. After a period of conflict with Silla, Parhae grew into a prosperous state in its own right before being taken over by northern nomadic peoples. In Silla an absolute monarchy replaced the council of nobles (its former decision making body) with a central administrative body called the chancellery (Chipsabu), thus undermining aristocratic power. Meanwhile, the capital Kumsong (now Kyongju in South Korea) was developed. The state was divided into administrative units by province (chu), prefecture (kun), and county (hyon), and five provincial capitals prospered as cultural centres. Avatamsaka Buddhism was the dominant religion.

Divisions within the aristocracy in the 8th century led to the restoration of the Council of Nobles and the overthrow of the monarchy. Forced to pay taxes to powerful provincial families and central government, the peasants rebelled. Two provincial leaders, Kyonhwon and Kungye, established the Later Paekche (892) and Later Koguryo (901) as rivals to Silla.

National Unity

The powerful leader Wang Kon founded Koryo (now Kaesong, North Korea) in 918, and established a unified kingdom in the Korean peninsula in 936. Three chancelleries and the royal secretariat formed the supreme council of state and governed the kingdom. Koryo's leaders were then largely aristocratic, and the political system greatly favoured those in the top five tiers of the nine hierarchical levels. That the military was not eligible for any hierarchical position above the second level and received little land, led to a military coup in 1170. Gen. Ch'oe Ch'ung-hon established a military regime which held power for the next sixty years. Zen Buddhism and the allied ideology of Confucianism had grown but were suppressed under the Ch'oe regime. Many monks fled to the mountains, where they formed what became Korean Buddhism, the Chogye.

In 1231 the Mongols invaded Koryo but were resisted by the Ch'oe leaders for nearly three decades, until a peasant uprising saw the Ch'oe overthrown. A power-sharing agreement between the rebels and the Mongols came into force in 1258. Despite some interference from the Mongols, Koryo retained its identity as a unified state. Conflict between the aristocracy and the bureaucratic class led to a rebellion. With the help of the Ming dynasty in China and supported by government officials, Gen. Yi Song-gye seized power in 1392. A new system of land distribution ended the Koryo dynasty.

Gen. Yi named the state Choson, designating Hanyang (now Seoul, South Korea) as the capital. Buddhism was dropped in favour of a new Chinese-influenced Confucian ethical system and the state was governed by a hereditary aristocracy (the yangban), who controlled all aspects of Korean society. In 1420 the Hall of Worthies (Chiphyonjon) was established for scholars, and after 1443 the Korean phonetic alphabet (hanguk) was adopted. Later in the period, a centralized yangban government was formed and the country divided into eight administrative regions, with standardized laws and a central decision-making and judicial body.

In 1592 Japan, newly unified under the command of Toyotomi Hideyoshi, sent an army to Korea supposedly as part of an invasion of China. Korea's naval forces, under Admiral Yi Sun-shin, were able to repel the invaders. Swelling anti-Japanese sentiment prompted Koreans from all hierarchical divisions to fight in the war alongside troops dispatched from Ming China. However, Japanese forces did not withdraw completely until Toyotomi's death in 1598, leaving Korea in ruins.

Despite joint efforts by China and Korea to stem the advances of the nomadic Manchu in the early 17th century, Seoul was captured in 1636. The Manchu established the Ch'ing dynasty several years later and demanded tribute from Korea.

During the 17th and 18th centuries, advances in irrigation increased the output of rice, tobacco and ginseng. By the late 18th century many Korean scholars had turned to Roman Catholicism, leading to government suppression of Christianity in a bid to preserve the dominance of Confucianism. However, European priests maintained strong links in the country.

Japanese Influence

In the 19th century, a succession of monarchs yet to attain the age of majority undermined national stability. In 1864 Taewon'gun, the father of the child-king Kojong, took power and pursued a programme of controversial political reform that increasingly isolated Korea from the outside world. When Taewon'gun was eventually forced to step down, Korea came under pressure from Japan to open up its ports. Nervous of growing Japanese influence, China placed troops in Korea following a failed coup attempt by pro-Taewon'gun forces. There followed a trade agreement which greatly benefited Chinese commercial interests. Further treaties with France, Germany, Russia, the UK and the USA followed in the 1880s. As foreign influence increased, Korea's ruling elite divided between moderates and radicals. The radicals carried out a coup in 1884 but were quickly defeated by Chinese troops. An agreement to maintain a balance of power in the region was signed by Japan and China the following year.

As modernization gathered pace, government spending increased, adding to the burden of reparations payments to Japan. The peasants turned to Tonghak ('Eastern Learning'), a new religion established by an old yangban scholar and based on traditional beliefs. A Tonghak rebellion in 1894 caused China to send in troops. Japan responded by sending its own forces and war broke out. By the following year Japan had secured control of the peninsula.

Korea declared neutrality at the outbreak of war between Japan and Russia in 1904 but was pressured by Japan into allowing use of Korean territory. Japan achieved victory in 1905 and made Korea a protectorate. An unsuccessful appeal to the international peace conference at The Hague further undermined relations between Japan and Korea. Anti-Japanese guerrilla fighters in the southern provinces were active during 1908–09 but were crushed the following year when Korea was annexed by Japan.

Japan established a government in Korea and implemented a programme designed to supplant the Korean identity. There were restrictions on freedom of speech, press and assembly while the language and history of Japan were taught in schools. Many Koreans were dispossessed as Japan built new transport and communications infrastructures. After the Japanese suppressed a mass demonstration in 1919, independence leaders set up a provisional government in Shanghai and named Syngman Rhee as president. Hoping to calm dissent, Japan lifted certain press restrictions and replaced the gendarmerie with an ordinary police force, but uncompromising colonial rule remained in place.

Korea became a market for Japanese goods and attracted much capital investment but at the expense of agriculture, leading to a long-term shortage of rice. Tokyo reimposed military rule in 1931 when war broke out between Japan and China. Magazines, newspapers and academic organizations operating in the Korean language were banned and hundreds of thousands of Koreans were made to fight in the Japanese army or work in Japanese mines and factories to support Japan in the Second World War. The provisional government, having moved from Shanghai to Chungking in southwest China, declared war on Japan in Dec. 1941. An army of Korean resistance fighters joined the Allied forces in China and fought with them until the Japanese surrender in 1945.

Korea Divided

Korea was promised independence by China, Britain and the USA at the Cairo conference of 1943 but at the end of the war, after Japan's collapse, Korea was divided along the 38th Parallel. A planned four-way power share in Korea, involving Britain and the Republic of China, was abandoned after US troops took control of the south of the country while the USSR occupied the north. The Soviet forces helped to establish a Communist-led provisional government under Kim Il-sung. As relations between the USA and the Soviet Union worsened, trade ceased between the two zones.

General elections in Korea were proposed by the United Nations in Sept. 1947. However, a commission to oversee voting was denied entry by Soviet troops. Rhee was elected in the South while the North appointed Kim Il-sung as leader. In 1948 the southern Republic of Korea (with Seoul as the capital) and the northern Democratic People's Republic of Korea (with Pyongyang as capital) were formally recognized.

Soviet and US troops left the peninsula in 1949 and war broke out between the North and South in June 1950. A US-led UN force under Gen. Douglas MacArthur entered South Korea and pushed back the North Korean forces. The UN pressed on into North Korea and established a commission for the reunification. China, which at that point had no representation in the United Nations, entered the war adding 1.2m. troops to the North Korean side. Peace negotiations began in 1951 and a new international boundary and demilitarized zone were declared in 1953. The USA offered South Korea financial support and signed a mutual security pact with Rhee, who had been reluctant to accept the division of the country. The issue of prisoner returns, particularly of North Koreans unwilling to return to the communist state, remained a point of contention. The war left 4m. people dead or injured.

In the aftermath, Kim set about tightening his grip on his country. He established a dictatorship based on a personality cult and introduced his philosophy of Juche, by which the country was to develop without any help from outside. Industrialization and military spending gathered pace in the later 1950s and the 1960s despite North Korea's international isolation. However, by the late 1970s North Korea had fallen far behind its southern neighbour and a period of stagnation began.

Kim maintained close relations with China and the Soviet Union, although his allegiance wavered between the two as Sino-Soviet relations deteriorated in the 1960s. When the Soviet Union collapsed in 1990–91, North Korea went into an economic crisis that included widespread famine. Attempts to improve relations with South Korea in the early 1990s faltered over the North's alleged nuclear capacity although in 1994 North Korea agreed to shut down controversial reactors in return for aid and oil. Kim died in 1994 and power passed to his son, Kim Jong-il.

Under the younger Kim the economy has collapsed to subsistence level although spending on the military remains high. In 1997 the UN World Food Programme estimated that 2m. North Koreans faced starvation. More than 5% of the population starved to death during the 1990s. In 2000 Kim received South Korean President Kim Dae-jung as relations between the North and South appeared to be thawing. The two leaders agreed that reunification was the eventual aim of both Koreas but relations again deteriorated in 2002 after a naval battle in the Yellow Sea between North and South forces killed four South Korean and around 30 North Korean sailors. Kim Jong-il blamed the USA and South Korea for the attack. South Korean president Kim Dae-jung suspended rice shipments to the north and demanded an apology.

Relations with the USA worsened during 2002 and 2003 after the USA claimed that North Korea had a secret nuclear programme. US president George W. Bush accused North Korea of forming part of what he called the 'Axis of Evil' along with Iraq and Iran. North Korea subsequently reactivated a nuclear plant and demanded the withdrawal of inspectors from the UN International Atomic Energy Agency. Pyongyang claimed it had been forced to reopen the reactor in response to US plans for a pre-emptive nuclear strike. North Korea then announced its withdrawal from the nuclear non-proliferation treaty, although it denied any intention to produce nuclear weapons. Many observers suggested Kim carried out these manoeuvres to pressurize the USA into direct talks with a view to signing a mutual non-aggression pact.

North Korea's nuclear programme has in turn unsettled relations with regional neighbours including South Korea and Japan. In Feb. 2005 North Korea publicly admitted for the first time that it possessed nuclear weapons. On 9 Oct. 2006 it conducted its first nuclear test, carrying out an underground explosion. In Feb. 2007 at talks between North Korea, South Korea, Japan, Russia, China and the USA, Pyongyang agreed to close its chief nuclear reactor in return for fuel aid. In Oct. 2007 it agreed to close a further three installations and was scheduled to surrender its nuclear stockpile in 2008. However, Pyongyang missed a Dec. 2007 deadline to disclose full details of all of its nuclear facilities.

In Oct. 2007 North and South Korea issued a joint declaration calling for a permanent peace on the peninsula to replace the armistice in place since the end of the Korean War. However, relations soon deteriorated and at the end of 2008 Pyongyang accused Seoul of fostering hostility. The South accused the North of testing long-range missile technology in April 2009 and a month later North Korea walked out of international talks aimed at ending its nuclear programme. In May 2010 an international report concluded that North Korea had been responsible for the sinking of a South Korean ship two months earlier. A collapse in trading and diplomatic relations followed.

In Dec. 2011 it was announced that Kim Jong-il had died of a heart attack. State-run television called on the public to support his son, Kim Jong-un, as 'the great successor'.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

North Korea is bounded in the north by China, east by the Sea of Japan (East Sea of Korea), west by the Yellow Sea and south by South Korea, from which it is separated by a demilitarized zone of 1,262 sq. km. Its area is 122,762 sq. km.

The census population in 2008 was 24,052,231; density 195.9 per sq. km. In 2011, 60.3% of the population were urban.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 25.16m.

The area, 2008 census population (in 1,000) of the provinces and Pyongyang (directly governed city):

	Area in sq. km	Population	Chief Town
Chagang	16,968	1,300	Kanggye
North Hamgyong ¹	17,570	2,327	Chongjin
South Hamgyong	18,970	3,066	Hamhung
North Hwanghae ²	9,262	2,114	Sariwon
South Hwanghae	8,002	2,310	Haeju
Kangwon ³	11,152	1,478	Wonsan
North Pyongan ⁴	12,191	2,729	Sinuiju
South Pyongan	12,330	4,052	Pyongsong
Pyongyang (directly governed city)	2,000	3,255	—
Yanggang	14,317	719	Hyesan

¹Area and population include Rason directly governed city.
²Area and population include Kaesong industrial region.
³Area and population include Kumgangsán tourist region.
⁴Area and population include Sinuiju special administrative region.

Pyongyang, the capital, had a 2008 census population of 2,581,076. Other large towns (census, 2008): Hamhung (703,610); Chongjin (614,892); Sinuiju (334,031).

The official language is Korean.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2008 estimated births, 327,000; deaths, 238,000. 2008 estimated birth rate, 13.7 per 1,000 population; death rate, 10.0. Annual population growth rate, 2000–08, 0.5%. Marriage is discouraged before the age of 32 for men and 29 for women. Life expectancy at birth, 2013, was 66.4 years for men and 73.4 years for women. Infant mortality, 2010, 26 per 1,000 live births; fertility rate, 2008, 1.9 births per woman. North Korea has the highest suicide rate of any independent country, at 39.5 per 100,000 inhabitants in 2012 (a rate of 41.0 among males and 38.1 among females).

CLIMATE

There is a warm temperate climate, though winters can be very cold in the north. Rainfall is concentrated in the summer months. Pyongyang, Jan. 18°F (−7.8°C), July 75°F (23.9°C). Annual rainfall 37" (916 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

North Korea adopted a new constitution in April 2009 that formalized songun or 'military first' politics as a guiding principle of state but dropped the word 'communism'. The Constitution provides for a 687-seat Supreme People's Assembly elected every five years by universal suffrage. Citizens of 17 years and over can vote and be elected. The government consists of the Administration Council directed by the Central People's Committee.

In 1998, four years after the death of Kim Il-sung, the title of president was abolished. On the death of Kim Jong-il on 19 Dec. 2011 his son and designated successor, Kim Jong-un (b. 1983), assumed the role of 'Supreme Leader'.

About 3m. people are affiliated with the ruling party, the Korean Workers' Party. There are also the puppet religious Chongu and Korean Social Democratic Parties and various organizations combined in a Fatherland Front.

National Anthem

'A chi mun bin na ra i gang san' ('Shine bright, o dawn, on this land so fair'); words by Pak Se Yong, tune by Kim Won Gyun.

RECENT ELECTIONS

Elections to the Supreme People's Assembly were held on 9 March 2014. Only the list of the Democratic Front for the Reunification of the Fatherland (led by the Korean Workers' Party) was allowed to participate. 687 deputies were elected unopposed.

CURRENT GOVERNMENT

Supreme Leader, Commander of the Korean People's Army, First Secretary of the Workers' Party of Korea and First Chairman of the National Defence Commission: Kim Jong-un.

In March 2016 the government comprised:

Prime Minister: Pak Pong-ju; b. 1939 (appointed 1 April 2013).

Vice Prime Ministers: Ro Tu-chol (also Chairman of the State Planning Commission), Ri Chol-man (also Minister of Agriculture), Kim Yong-jin, Ri Mu-yong (also Minister of Chemical Industry), Kim Tok-hun.

Minister of Atomic Energy Industry: Ri Je-son. Coal Industry: Mun Myong-hak. Commerce: Kim Kyong-nam. Construction and Building Materials Industry: Tong Chong-ho. Culture: Pak Chun-nam. Education: Kim Sung-du. Electric Power Industry: Kim Man-su. Electronics Industry: Kim Jae-song. Finance: Ki Kwang-ho. Fisheries: Ri Hyok. Food and Consumer Goods Industries: Jo Yong-chol. Food Procurement and Administration: Mun Ung-jo. Foreign Affairs: Ri Su-yong. Foreign Trade: Ri Ryong-nam. Forestry: Han Ryong-guk. Higher Education: Thae Hyong-chol. Labour: Jong Yong-su. Land and Environment Protection: Kim Kyong-jun. Land and Maritime Transport: Kang Jong-gwan. Light Industry: Cho Il-ryong. Machine-Building Industry: Ri Jong-guk. Metallurgical Industry: Kim Yong-gwang. Mining Industry: Ri Hak-chol. Oil Industry: Pae Hak. Physical Culture and Sports: Kim Yong-hun. Post and Telecommunications: Sim Chol-ho. Public Health: Kang Ha-guk. Railways: Jon Kil-su. State Construction Control: Kwon Song-ho. State Natural Resources Development: Ri Chun-sam. Urban Management: Kang Yong-su.

President, Supreme People's Assembly Presidium: Kim Yong-nam. Vice Presidents: Yang Hyong-sop, Kim Yong-dae.

In addition there is one minister who is not in the cabinet. Minister of the People's Armed Forces: Gen. Pak Yong-sik.

In practice the country is ruled by the Korean Workers' (i.e. Communist) Party, which elects a Central Committee that in turn appoints a Politburo.

CURRENT LEADERS

Kim Jong-un

Position

Supreme Leader

Introduction

Kim Jong-un was named Supreme Commander of North Korea's military in Dec. 2011 after the death of his father, Kim Jong-il. Officially, Kim is a member of a triumvirate—with Premier Pak Pong-ju and President of the Supreme People's Assembly Presidium Kim Yong-nam—that heads the executive branch of government. However, it is widely understood that Kim, like his late father, yields absolute power over the state, party and army.

Early Life

Kim Jong-un was born in 1983 or 1984. He was educated in Switzerland and at the Kim Il-sung Military University. In 2009 he was given a mid-level position within the National Defence Commission and became clear favourite to take over from his father when he was appointed a four-star Daejang (General) of the People's Army on 27 Sept. 2010, despite his lack of experience. A day later he was given the post of vice-chairman of the Central Military Commission of the Workers' Party.

In the months before Kim Jong-il's death, Kim accompanied him to public events, apparently in preparation for assuming the leadership. Following his father's sudden death, Kim was proclaimed as 'the great successor' by the North Korean media before his appointment as Supreme Commander of the Army on 30 Dec. 2011.

Career in Office

There was initial optimism within the international community that the new administration might be open to reform. However, a moratorium on missile tests, brokered with the USA in Feb. 2012 in return for food aid, was broken when North Korea unsuccessfully tested a long-range rocket in April. Another rocket was then successfully test-launched in Dec. 2012, prompting condemnation from the international community. Meanwhile, Kim had been named First Secretary of the ruling Workers' Party and First Chairman of the National Defence Commission in April 2012 and in July had assumed the highest military rank of marshal.

In March 2013 the UN imposed new sanctions in response to North Korea's third nuclear test the previous month. Pyongyang reacted by threatening pre-emptive nuclear strikes against South Korea and the USA and the following month announced the resumption of operations at the Yongbyon nuclear enrichment complex. It also withdrew its participation in the Kaesong industrial park run jointly with South Korea, although this decision was reversed in Sept.

In Dec. 2013 Kim had his uncle and former political mentor, Jang Song-taek, executed for alleged treason and corruption.

In 2014 and the first half of 2015 North Korea continued to conduct missile tests, including, it was claimed, from a submarine for the first time. The consequent friction with the USA was further soured amid mutual allegations of internet cyber-attacks stemming from the distribution of a controversial US comedy cinema film depicting Kim's assassination. Tensions with South Korea also escalated from Aug. 2015 following an artillery confrontation along the border over the South's propaganda broadcasts across the demilitarized zone, and high-level talks in Dec. to defuse the standoff ended without agreement. Then in Jan. 2016 the North claimed that it had conducted its fourth nuclear test since 2006, with the detonation of a hydrogen bomb for the first time, which prompted immediate international condemnation—including from China—and threats of further sanctions.

Meanwhile, there had been considerable speculation in 2014 about Kim's physical health, given his lack of public appearances.

DEFENCE

The Supreme Commander of the Armed Forces is Kim Jong-un. Military service is compulsory at the age of 16 for periods of 5–12 years in the Army, 5–10 years in the Navy and 3–4 years in the Air Force, followed by obligatory part-time service in the Pacification Corps to age 40. Total armed forces troops were estimated to number 1,190,000 in 2013, up from 840,000 in 1986. Around 70% of the troops are located along or near the Demilitarized Zone between North and South Korea.

Defence expenditure in 2012 totalled an estimated US$3.5bn. in 2012, which is believed to equate to approximately 22% of GDP.

In 1998 North Korea tested a medium-range nuclear-capable Taepo Dong-1 missile. It has also developed a shorter-range Nodong ballistic missile in addition to Scud B and Scud C missiles, and is developing a longer-range inter-continental ballistic missile, the two- or three-stage Taepo Dong-2, which experts believe could reach Alaska and the westernmost Hawaiian islands. A first unsuccessful test was carried out in July 2006. A second unsuccessful test, of the three-stage Taepo Dong-2, followed in April 2009 and a third unsuccessful launch came in April 2012. In July 2009 North Korea fired seven missiles into the Sea of Japan. It is believed that this included Nodongs, which could hit South Korea, China and Japan. In March 2014 Pyongyang is known to have tested its medium-range Nodong ballistic missile.

Nuclear Weapons

North Korea was for many years suspected of having a secret nuclear-weapons programme, and perhaps enough material to build two warheads. In Oct. 2002 it revealed that it had developed a nuclear bomb in violation of an arms control pact agreed with the USA in 1994. North Korea has not signed the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban-Treaty, which is intended to bring about a ban on any nuclear explosions. It ratified the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty (the international agreement limiting the spread of nuclear weapons) in 1985 but withdrew in 2003; it is the only country to have done so. In Feb. 2005 it declared that it had manufactured nuclear weapons and stated that it would not re-enter multilateral negotiations on its disarmament. It carried out its first test of a nuclear weapon in Oct. 2006. In July 2007 Pyongyang closed the Yongbyon nuclear complex in return for international aid and in Oct. pledged to disable a further three facilities, ahead of surrendering its nuclear stockpile in 2008. However, Pyongyang missed a Dec. 2007 deadline to give a full account of all of its nuclear facilities although it eventually did so in June 2008. The following day North Korea destroyed Yongbyon's cooling tower. Further dismantling of its nuclear facilities was postponed after the USA refused to remove North Korea from its list of state sponsors of terrorism until Pyongyang produced verification of its nuclear downgrading. North Korea was removed from the list in Oct. 2008 and pledged to resume dismantling the Yongbyon reactor.

In April 2009 North Korea was accused by South Korea and the UN of testing long-range nuclear missile technology. North Korea responded by walking out of international talks to wind up its nuclear programme. The following month Pyongyang claimed it had successfully completed underground nuclear tests. In June the UN imposed new sanctions, with Pyongyang stating its intent to weaponize plutonium supplies. A 'miniaturized' nuclear device was tested underground at the Punggye-ri test site in Feb. 2013, prompting new UN sanctions the following month. Pyongyang subsequently threatened pre-emptive nuclear strikes against South Korea and the USA and in April 2013 announced plans to revive the Yongbyon reactor. In Nov. 2013 the International Atomic Energy Agency reported activity at the complex the complex consistent with this aim and in Sept. 2015 the North Korean authorities announced the complex had resumed 'normal operations'. In Jan. 2016 Pyongyang claimed to have carried out a successful underground hydrogen bomb test. While the declaration was regarded as a provocation by the international community, there was widespread scepticism as to its veracity.

Army

One of the world's biggest, the Army was estimated at 1,020,000 personnel in 2011 with 600,000 reserves. There is also a paramilitary worker-peasant Red Guard of some 5.7m. reservists and a ministry of public security force of 189,000 including border guards.

Equipment includes some 3,500 T-34, T-54/55, T-62 and Type-59 main battle tanks.

Navy

In 2011 the Navy, principally tasked to coastal patrol and defence, included 72 tactical submarines, three frigates, and 383 patrol and coastal combatants. Personnel in 2011 totalled about 60,000.

Air Force

The Air Force had a total of 603 combat-capable aircraft and 110,000 personnel in 2011. Combat-capable aircraft include J-5/6/7s (Chinese built versions of MiG-17/19/23s), MiG-23s, MiG-29s, Su-7s and Su-25s.

ECONOMY

Agriculture is estimated to account for approximately 25% of GDP, industry 60% and services 15%.

In 2012 North Korea received approximately US$126m. in foreign aid.

North Korea was rated the joint most corrupt country in the world in a 2015 survey of 168 countries carried out by the anti-corruption organization Transparency International.

Overview

Economic progress in North Korea has been impeded by all-powerful state bureaucracy and control and by a reluctance to depart from Marxist-Stalinist dogma. Aid agencies estimate that food shortages caused by natural disasters and economic mismanagement have resulted in up to 2m. deaths since the mid-1990s. The economy is dependent on international aid. Food shortages became critical in 2003 but US food assistance resumed in June 2008.

International sanctions over North Korea's nuclear programme have led to a greater economic reliance on China, which now accounts for four-fifths of its trade. In June 2011 it was announced that special economic zones at Rason and on the islands of Hwanggumpyong and Wihwa would be developed in co-operation with China, an idea long promoted by the government. In 2013 plans for a further 12 such zones were outlined. South Korea's central bank estimates that North Korea's economy grew by 1.1% in 2013, its third consecutive year of expansion, boosted by progress in the agriculture and mining sectors.

Currency

The monetary unit is the won (KPW) of 100 chon. Banknotes were replaced by a new issue in July 1992. Exchanges of new for old notes were limited to 500 won. In Nov. 2009 the government readjusted the value of the won, with 100 old won worth one new won. Officially the won trades at 135 per US dollar but unofficially it can sometimes trade at up to 3,000 per dollar. North Korea has periodically suffered from high inflation rates since 2000. Following a failed currency reform in Nov. 2009 the inflation rate soared, peaking at an estimated monthly rate of 496% in March 2010.

Budget

Estimated revenue, 2007, US$3.2bn.; expenditure, US$3.3bn.

Performance

The economy is estimated to have shrunk by 0.9% in 2009 and 0.5% in 2010 but then grown by 0.8% in 2011. In 2012 real GDP growth was put at 1.3%. GDP per head was put at US$494 in 2003, or less than a twentieth of that of South Korea.

Banking and Finance

The bank of issue is the Central Bank of Korea (President, Kim Chon-gyun). In 2002 there were seven state banks, seven joint venture banks and two foreign investment banks.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2011 were the equivalent of 2.7 tonnes per capita.

Electricity

Installed capacity was an estimated 9.5m. kW in 2011 (approximately 61% hydro-electric). Production in 2011 was 21.63bn. kWh. Consumption per capita was 878 kWh in 2011. In Feb. 2003 North Korea reactivated its nuclear reactor at Yongbyon that had been dormant since 1994. It was again shut down in July 2007 in exchange for economic aid and political concessions following negotiations with China, Japan, Russia, South Korea and the USA. In April 2009 it was reactivated again following United Nations condemnation of a controversial long-range rocket launch.

Oil and Gas

Oil wells went into production in 1957. An oil pipeline from China came on stream in 1976. China's supplies account for up to 90% of North Korea's oil consumption.

Minerals

North Korea is rich in minerals. Estimated reserves in tonnes: coal, 11,990m.; manganese, 6,500m.; iron ore, 3,300m.; uranium, 26m.; zinc, 12m.; lead, 6m.; copper, 2.15m. 23.9m. tonnes of coal were mined in 2007, 6.5m. tonnes of lignite in 2007, 5m. tonnes of iron ore in 2006, 500,000 tonnes of salt in 2006 and 12,000 tonnes of copper in 2006. 2006 production of silver was 20 tonnes; gold, 2,000 kg.

Agriculture

In 2012 there were approximately 2.35m. ha. of arable land and 230,000 ha. of permanent crop land. An estimated 3.05m. persons were economically active in agriculture in 2011.

Collectivization took place between 1954 and 1958. 90% of the cultivated land is farmed by co-operatives. Land belongs either to the State or to co-operatives, and it is intended gradually to transform the latter into the former, but small individually-tended plots producing for 'farmers' markets' are tolerated as a 'transition measure'.

There is a large-scale tideland reclamation project. In 2012 the total area equipped for irrigation was around 1.46m. ha., making possible two rice harvests a year. The technical revolution in agriculture (nearly 95% of ploughing, etc., is mechanized) has considerably increased the yield of wheat (sown on an estimated 60,000 ha. in 2013). Areas harvested of other major crops (2013 estimates): rice (paddy), 664,000 ha.; maize, 520,000 ha.; soybeans, 305,000 ha. Production (2012 estimates, in 1,000 tonnes): rice, 2,681; maize, 2,000; potatoes, 1,800; apples, 785; cabbage, broccoli, etc., 700.

Livestock, 2013 estimates: goats, 3.60m.; pigs, 2.26m.; cattle, 590,000; sheep, 170,000; 18m. chickens.

A chronic food shortage has led to repeated efforts by UN agencies to stave off famine. In Jan. 1998 the UN launched an appeal for US$378m. for food for North Korea, the largest ever relief effort mounted by its World Food Programme.

Forestry

Forest area in 2010 was 5.67m. ha. (47% of the land area). Timber production was 7.53m. cu. metres in 2011.

Fisheries

In 2010 total catch was an estimated 205,000 tonnes, of which 98% were sea fish.

INDUSTRY

Industries were intensively developed by the Japanese occupiers, notably cotton spinning, hydro-electric power, cotton, silk and rayon weaving, and chemical fertilizers. Production: cement (2007), 6.1m. tonnes; crude steel (2007), 1.23m. tonnes; pig iron (2007), 900,000 tonnes. The suspension of economic assistance from the former Soviet Union following its break-up in 1990 caused a great shock to the North Korean economy. A shortage of coking coal, electric power and timber led to the virtual collapse of industrial production. Manufacturing was estimated to have accounted for 21.9% of GDP in 2012.

Labour

The labour force in 2013 was 15,206,000 (14,048,000 in 2003). 82.7% of the population aged 15–64 was economically active in 2013. In the same year 4.1% of the population was unemployed.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Joint ventures with foreign firms have been permitted since 1984. A law of Oct. 1992 revised the 1984 rules: foreign investors may now set up wholly-owned facilities in special economic zones, repatriate part of profits and enjoy tax concessions. In Jan. 2012 foreign debt was estimated at US$20bn. The USA imposed sanctions in Jan. 1988 for alleged terrorist activities. From June 1995 to May 2010 South Korean businesses and individuals were permitted to make investments and set up branch offices in North Korea. However, following the sinking of its warship Cheonan in March 2010, South Korea imposed trade restrictions on the North that banned all inter-Korean economic exchanges with the exception of the joint industrial park at Kaesong.

Imports and Exports

Trade figures for 2013 (excluding inter-Korean trade): imports, US$4.12bn.; exports, US$3.22bn. In 2006 China was the biggest import supplier (27%), followed by South Korea (16%) and Thailand (9%); in 2007 South Korea was the main export destination (45%), ahead of China (35%) and Thailand (5%). Leading export commodities are minerals, textiles, metallurgical products, agricultural and fishery products, and armaments. Main import categories are petroleum, machinery and equipment, coking coal, textiles and grain.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

There were 25,554 km of road in 2006. The first of two planned cross-border roads between the two Koreas opened in Feb. 2003. Private car ownership is rare.

Rail

Rail transport is provided by Korean State Railways. There is an extensive network of standard gauge lines totalling over 6,000 km and a network of 762 mm narrow gauge lines covering some 350 km. Main lines cover around 2,500 km. In June 2000 it was agreed to start consultations to restore the railway from Sinuiju, on the North Korean/Chinese border, to Seoul by rebuilding an 8 km long stretch from Pongdong-ni to Changdan, on the North Korean/South Korean border, and a 12 km long stretch in South Korea. Two passenger trains crossed the border between North and South Korea on 17 May 2007 (one northbound and one southbound), completing the first cross-border journey in more than 50 years. Regular freight services between the two Koreas were resumed in Dec. 2007 but usage is very limited.

There is a metro and two tramways in Pyongyang.

Civil Aviation

There is an international airport at Pyongyang (Sunan). There were flights in 2010 to Bangkok, Beijing, Shenyang and Vladivostok. The national carrier is Air Koryo.

Shipping

The leading ports are Chongjin, Wonsan and Hungnam. Pyongyang is connected to the port of Nampo by railway and river. In Jan. 2009 there were 223 ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 884,000 GT.

The biggest navigable river is the Yalu, 698 km up to the Hyesan district.

Telecommunications

There were 1.18m. main (fixed) telephone lines in 2013. A mobile phone service was introduced in Dec. 2008 four years after a previous service had been shut down without explanation. In 2013 there were 2.42m. subscribers (972 for every 10,000 inhabitants). It was only in 2013 that the number of mobile phone subscriptions surpassed the number of fixed telephone subscriptions.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The judiciary consists of the Supreme Court, whose judges are elected by the Assembly for three years; provincial courts; and city or county people's courts. The procurator-general, appointed by the Assembly, has supervisory powers over the judiciary and the administration; the Supreme Court controls the judicial administration.

In May 2011 some 150,000–200,000 political prisoners were being held at a number of detention camps in the country. North Korea does not divulge figures on its use of the death penalty; however, Amnesty International reported that there were at least 22 executions in 2015. People were reportedly executed in 2013 for offences including cannibalism, corruption, embezzlement, attempting to escape to China, pornography and watching banned videos from South Korea.

Education

Free compulsory universal technical education lasts 11 years: one pre-school year, four years primary education starting at the age of six, followed by six years secondary. In 2008, 2.18m. pupils attended pre-primary or primary schools and 2.47m. pupils were at secondary school. There were also 437,000 students in tertiary education in 2008.

The adult literacy rate in 2008 was 100%.

Health

Medical treatment is free. In 2003 there were 74,597 doctors (one per 312.5 population), 87,330 nurses and 6,084 midwives. In 2002 there were 214,647 hospital beds (92 per 10,000 population). 6.3% of GDP was spent on health care in 2004.

North Korea has been one of the least successful countries in the battle against undernourishment in the past 20 years. The proportion of undernourished people rose from 18% of the population in the period 1990–92 to 35% in 2001–03.

RELIGION

The state-sanctioned philosophy of Juche is the only government-recognized ideology, to the point of excluding all other religions. Juche means 'self-reliance' in Korean. Although the official North Korean line is that it is an atheistic philosophy, many observers maintain that it is a religion. There are small numbers of Buddhists, Cheondoists and Christians. Persecution of Christians is considered to be more severe than in any other country.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

There are two UNESCO sites in North Korea: the Complex of Koguryo Tombs (2004); and the Historic Monuments and Sites in Kaesong (2013).

Press

There were three national daily newspapers and 12 regional dailies in 2008 with a combined circulation of 4.5m. The party newspaper is Nodong (or Rodong Sinmun (Workers' Daily News)).

In the 2013 World Press Freedom Index compiled by Reporters Without Borders, North Korea ranked 178th out of 179 countries.

Tourism

A 40-year ban on non-Communist tourists was lifted in 1986. In 2002 there were 400,000 foreign tourists. On 19 Nov. 1998 North Korea received its first tourists from South Korea, on a cruise and tour organized by the South Korean firm Hyundai.

Calendar

A new yearly calendar was announced on 9 July 1997 based on Kim Il-sung's birthday on 15 April 1912. Thus 1912 became Juche year 1; 2016 is Juche 105.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

The Korean peninsula was first settled by tribal peoples from Manchuria and Siberia who provided the basis for the modern Korean language. By 3000 BC agriculture-based communities had emerged. The earliest known colony in the region was established at Pyongyang in the 12th century BC. Among the most prominent agricultural communities was Old Choson, which by 194 BC had evolved into a league of tribes ruled by Wiman or 'Wei Man', a leader widely held to have defected from China, although he may have been a native of the Choson region. His realm was taken over by the Han empire of China in 108 BC and replaced by four Chinese colonies.

The rest of the peninsula developed into tribal states; Puyo in the north and Chin south of the Han River. Chin was itself split into three tribal states (Mahan, Chinhan and Pyonhan); these states then evolved into three rival kingdoms, Koguryo, Paekche, and Silla. Three powerful figures, King T'aejo (AD 53-146) of Koguryo, King Koi (AD 234-86) of Paekche and King Naemul (AD 356-402) of Silla, established hereditary monarchies while powerful aristocracies developed from tribal chiefdoms.

With China's support Silla conquered the other two kingdoms; Paekche in 660 and Koguryo in 668. In 676 Silla drove out the Chinese and gained complete control of the peninsula. Survivors from Koguryo established Parhae, under the leadership of Tae Cho-yong, in the northern region. After a period of conflict with Silla, Parhae grew into a prosperous state in its own right before being taken over by northern nomadic peoples. In Silla an absolute monarchy replaced the council of nobles (its former decision making body) with a central administrative body called the chancellery (Chipsabu), thus undermining aristocratic power. Meanwhile, the capital Kumsong (now Kyongju in South Korea) was developed. The state was divided into administrative units by province (chu), prefecture (kun), and county (hyon), and five provincial capitals prospered as cultural centres. Avatamsaka Buddhism was the dominant religion.

Divisions within the aristocracy in the 8th century led to the restoration of the Council of Nobles and the overthrow of the monarchy. Forced to pay taxes to powerful provincial families and central government, the peasants rebelled. Two provincial leaders, Kyonhwon and Kungye, established the Later Paekche (892) and Later Koguryo (901) as rivals to Silla.

National Unity

The powerful leader Wang Kon founded Koryo (now Kaesong, North Korea) in 918, and established a unified kingdom in the Korean peninsula in 936. Three chancelleries and the royal secretariat formed the supreme council of state and governed the kingdom. Koryo's leaders were then largely aristocratic, and the political system greatly favoured those in the top five tiers of the nine hierarchical levels. That the military was not eligible for any hierarchical position above the second level and received little land, led to a military coup in 1170. Gen. Ch'oe Ch'ung-hon established a military regime which held power for the next 60 years. Zen Buddhism and the allied ideology of Confucianism had grown popular but were suppressed under the Ch'oe regime. Many monks fled to the mountains, where they formed what became Korean Buddhism, the Chogye.

In 1231 the Mongols invaded Koryo but were resisted by the Ch'oe leaders for nearly three decades, until a peasant uprising saw the Ch'oe overthrown. A power-sharing agreement between the rebels and the Mongols came into force in 1258. Despite some interference from the Mongols, Koryo retained its identity as a unified state. The aristocracy established seats of power throughout the country, encouraging peasants to seek protection as serfs. This, however, led to reduced tax revenues and when the government did not have sufficient resources to reward its bureaucratic class, a rebellion ensued. Led by General Yi Song-gye, and with the help of the Ming dynasty in China, government officials seized power in 1392 and established a new system of land distribution, thus ending the Koryo dynasty.

Gen. Yi named the state Choson, designating Hanyang (now Seoul, South Korea) as the capital. Buddhism was dropped in favour of a new Chinese-influenced Confucian ethical system and the state was governed by a hereditary aristocracy (the yangban), who controlled all aspects of Korean society. In 1420 the Hall of Worthies (Chiphyonjon) was established for scholars, and after 1443 the Korean phonetic alphabet (hangul) developed. Later in the period, a centralized yangban government was formed and the country divided into eight administrative regions, with standardized laws and a central decision-making and judicial body.

In 1592 Japan, newly unified under the command of Toyotomi Hideyoshi, sent an army to Korea supposedly as part of an invasion of China. Korea's naval forces, under Admiral Yi Sun-shin, were able to repel the invaders. Swelling anti-Japanese sentiment prompted Koreans from all hierarchical divisions to fight in the war alongside troops dispatched from Ming China. However, Japanese forces did not withdraw completely until Toyotomi's death in 1598, leaving Korea in ruins.

Despite joint efforts by China and Korea to stem the advances of the nomadic Manchu in the early 17th century, Seoul was captured in 1636. The Manchu established the Ch'ing dynasty several years later and demanded tribute from Korea.

During the 17th and 18th centuries, Korea's agriculture developed as irrigation improved and rice, tobacco and ginseng became increasingly important crops. By the late 18th century many Korean scholars had turned to Roman Catholicism, leading to government suppression of Christianity in a bid to preserve the dominance of Confucianism. However, European priests maintained strong links in the country.

Japanese Influence

In the 19th century, a succession of monarchs yet to attain the age of majority undermined national stability. In 1864 Taewon'gun, the father of the child-king Kojong, took power and pursued a programme of controversial political reform that increasingly isolated Korea from the outside world. When Taewon'gun was eventually forced to step down, Korea came under pressure from Japan to open up its ports. Nervous of growing Japanese influence, China placed troops in Korea following a failed coup attempt by pro-Taewon'gun forces. There followed a trade agreement which greatly benefited Chinese commercial interests. Further treaties with France, Germany, Russia, the UK and the USA followed in the 1880s. As foreign influence increased, Korea's ruling elite divided between moderates and radicals. The radicals carried out a coup in 1884 but were quickly defeated by Chinese troops. An agreement to maintain a balance of power in the region was signed by Japan and China the following year.

As modernization gathered pace, government spending increased, adding to the burden of reparations payments to Japan. The peasants turned to Tonghak ('Eastern Learning'), a new religion established by an old yangban scholar and based on traditional beliefs. A Tonghak rebellion in 1894 caused China to send in troops. Japan responded by sending its own forces and war broke out. By the following year Japan had secured control of the peninsula.

Korea declared neutrality at the outbreak of war between Japan and Russia in 1904 but was pressured by Japan into allowing use of Korean territory. Japan achieved victory in 1905 and made Korea a protectorate. An unsuccessful appeal to the international peace conference at The Hague further undermined relations between Japan and Korea. Anti-Japanese guerrilla fighters in the southern provinces were active during 1908-09 but were crushed the following year when Korea was annexed by Japan.

Japan established a government in Korea and implemented a programme designed to supplant the Korean identity. There were restrictions on freedom of speech, press and assembly and the language and history of Japan was taught in schools at the expense of those of Korea. Many Koreans were dispossessed of their land as Japan built new transport and communications infrastructures. When the Japanese brutally suppressed a 2m.-strong demonstration in 1919, independence leaders established a provisional government in Shanghai and named Syngman Rhee as president. Hoping to calm dissent, Japan lifted certain press restrictions and replaced the gendarmerie with an ordinary police force, but uncompromising colonial rule remained in place.

Korea became a market for Japanese goods and attracted much capital investment but at the expense of agriculture, leading to a long-term shortage of rice. Tokyo reimposed military rule in 1931 when war broke out between Japan and China and attempted to quash all manifestations of a separate Korean identity over the following decade. Magazines, newspapers and academic organisations operating in the Korean language were banned.

Hundreds of thousands of Koreans were made to fight in the Japanese army, or work in Japanese mines and factories in order to support Japan's military efforts during the Second World War. The provisional government, having moved from Shanghai to Chungking in southwest China, declared war on Japan in Dec. 1941. An army of Korean resistance fighters joined the Allied forces in Korea and fought with them until the Japanese surrender in 1945.

Korea Divided

Korea was promised independence by China, Britain and the USA at the Cairo conference of 1943 but at the end of the war, after Japan's collapse, Korea was divided in two along the 38° Parallel. Initially the USA and the USSR had agreed informally to a four-way power share in Korea, involving Britain and the Republic of China. However, in order to hasten a Japanese surrender, US troops controlled the south of the country while the USSR took command of the north. The Soviet forces helped to establish a Communist-led provisional government under Kim Il Sung. As relations between the USA and the Soviet Union worsened, trade ceased between the two zones, causing economic hardship because industry was concentrated in the north and agriculture in the south.

In Sept. 1947 the United Nations urged elections in both sectors. However, a commission to oversee voting in the North was denied entry by Soviet troops. Rhee was elected in the South while the North appointed Kim Il Sung as leader. In 1948 the southern Republic of Korea (with Seoul as the capital) and the northern Democratic People's Republic of Korea (with Pyongyang as capital) came into being.

Soviet and US troops left the peninsula in 1949 and war broke out between the North and South in June 1950. A US-led UN force under Gen. Douglas MacArthur entered South Korea and pushed back the North Korean forces. The UN pressed on into North Korea and established a commission for the reunification and rehabilitation of Korea. China, which at that point had no representation in the United Nations, entered the war and contributed 1.2m. troops to the North Korean side. Peace negotiations began in 1951 and a new international boundary and demilitarized zone were declared in 1953. The USA offered South Korea financial support and signed a mutual security pact with Rhee, who had been reluctant to accept the division of the country. The issue of prisoner returns, particularly of North Koreans unwilling to return to the communist state, remained a point of contention. The war left 4m. people dead or injured.

Traditionally an agricultural region, South Korea faced severe economic problems after partition. Limited resources, war damage and a flood of refugees from North Korea all pointed towards economic disaster, and the country became dependent on foreign aid, particularly from the USA.

The authoritarian rule of President Rhee, marred by corruption, received widespread condemnation. The elections of 1960 were blighted by violence and fraud and when the police shot 125 students during a demonstration, the government was forced to step down. Rhee was exiled. Subsequent leaders failed to solve the country's problems and in May 1961 Gen. Park Chung-hee led a military coup. As leader of the Democratic Republican Party, he was elected president in 1963, 1967 and, following a constitutional amendment to allow a third term in office, 1971.

Park's government was powerful and efficient, reviving the economy through the development of manufacturing for export and attracting increased foreign investment, especially from America. In 1972 Park proclaimed martial law and abolished the National Assembly. In 1979 he was assassinated and the country collapsed into chaos. Chun Doo-hwan became leader in 1980 in another military coup and, as leader of the Democratic Justice Party (DJP), revived the National Assembly.

In 1983 a South Korean passenger jet strayed into Soviet airspace and was shot down with the loss of all 269 lives on board.

The incident increased tensions significantly between Moscow and Washington.

Popular dissatisfaction with the South Korean government grew throughout the decade and a new constitution in 1987 stipulated that the president be elected by popular vote and his term of office reduced to five years.

Roh Tae-woo was elected president in 1988 as leader of the DJP and later of the Democratic Liberal Party. Fighting rising inflation, he established diplomatic relations with China and the Soviet Union and developed a better relationship with opposition parties in his own country. North and South Korea met several times during the 1980s in a bid to improve relations. In 1991 the two countries signed a treaty of non-aggression, with each country promising not to interfere in the internal affairs of the other.

In 1992 Kim Young-sam, the former opposition leader who had merged his party with Roh's, became the first civilian to be elected president since the Korean War. He launched an anti-corruption campaign and continued to pursue closer relations with North Korea. During the financial crisis that affected East Asia in 1997 South Korea was forced to ask the International Monetary Fund for help, though it largely avoided long-term economic damage and remains one of Asia's most affluent countries.

In Dec. 1997 Kim Dae-jung, a pro-democracy dissident during the years of military dictatorship, was elected president. Kim forged a 'sunshine policy' aimed at closer ties with the North and received the Nobel peace prize for his efforts. The two Koreas subsequently undertook a series of joint commercial and infrastructural projects. Constitutionally disqualified from standing for the presidency again in 2002, Kim was replaced by Roh Moo-hyun who continued the 'sunshine policy', despite North Korea's deteriorating relationship with the USA.

In Oct. 2007 South and North Korea jointly called for a permanent peace on the peninsula to replace the armistice in place since the end of the Korean War. However, relations soon deteriorated and at the end of 2008 Pyongyang accused Seoul of fostering hostility. The South accused the North of testing long-range missile technology in April 2009 and a month later North Korea walked out of international talks aimed at ending its nuclear programme. In May 2010 an international report concluded that the sinking of a South Korean ship two months earlier had been the responsibility of North Korea, prompting a collapse in trading and diplomatic relations between the two countries.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

South Korea is bounded in the north by the demilitarized zone (separating it from North Korea), east by the Sea of Japan (East Sea), south by the Korea Strait (separating it from Japan) and west by the Yellow Sea. The area is 99,461 sq. km. The population at the census of 1 Nov. 2010 was 48,580,293; density, 488.4 per sq. km (one of the highest in the world). In 2011 the urban population was 83.3%.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 50.29m.

The official language is Korean. In July 2000 the Korean government introduced a new Romanization System for the Korean Language to romanize Korean words into English.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2008: births, 465,900; deaths, 246,100; marriages, 327,700; divorces, 116,500. Rates per 1,000 population in 2008: birth, 9.7; death, 5.1; marriage, 6.8; divorce, 2.4. In 2012 only 2.1% of births were outside marriage, one of the lowest rates in the world. South Korea has among the highest suicide rates of any country, at 36.6 per 100,000 inhabitants in 2012 (a rate of 49.9 among males although only 23.4 among females). Expectation of life at birth, 2007, 82.4 years for females and 75.8 for males. Life expectancy had been 47 in 1955 and 62 in 1971. Infant mortality, 2010, four per 1,000 live births. The fertility rate in 2008 was 1.2 births per woman (the joint lowest rate in the world), down from 6.3 per woman in the period 1955–60. Annual population growth rate, 2005–10, 0.5%. In 2009 the average age of first marriage was 31.6 for men and 28.7 for women.

South Korea has one of the most rapidly ageing populations in the world, partly owing to an ever-decreasing birth rate. In 2009, 10.7% of the population were over 65, up from 2.9% in 1960. There were 16.92m. households in 2009, with on average 2.8 members per household. According to the UN Human Development Report 2009, South Korea has an emigration rate of 3.1%; North America is the main destination, with 50.3% of South Korean migrants living there. Within South Korea, there are 551,200 foreign migrants, representing 1.2% of the total population.

CLIMATE

The country experiences continental temperate conditions. Rainfall is concentrated in the period April to Sept. and ranges from 40" (1,020 mm) to 60" (1,520 mm). Busan, Jan. 36°F (2.2°C), July 76°F (24.4°C). Annual rainfall 56" (1,407 mm). Seoul, Jan. 23°F (-5°C), July 77°F (25°C). Annual rainfall 50" (1,250 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

The 1988 constitution provides for a President, directly elected for a single five-year term, who appoints the members of the State Council and heads it, and for a National Assembly (Gukhoe), currently of 299 members, directly elected for four years (243 from constituencies and 56 from party lists in proportion to the overall vote). The current constitution created the Sixth Republic. The minimum voting age is 20.

CURRENT LEADERS

Park Geun-hye

Position

President

Introduction

Park Geun-hye became the country's first female president on 25 Feb. 2013 at the head of one of the world's most male-dominated governments. She has had to contend with the legacy of her late father, Park Chung-hee, a former president both revered as the driving force behind South Korea's economic miracle and condemned for his suppression of opposition.

Early Life

Park Geun-hye was born on 2 Feb. 1952 in Jung-gu, Daegu. She graduated in electronic engineering from Seoul's Sogang University in 1974. She then studied at the University of Grenoble, France, before returning to Seoul following the death of her mother on 15 Aug. 1974 in a botched assassination attempt on Park Chung-hee. Park stepped into the role of first lady until 26 Oct. 1979 when her father was assassinated by his intelligence chief.

Following her father's death, Park retreated from politics and served on the boards of various charities and educational institutions. In 1997 she joined the Grand National Party (GNP) and won a seat in the National Assembly after winning a by-election for Dalseong, Daegu in 1998. In the run-up to the 2004 general election the GNP, beleaguered by scandals, appointed Park as leader. Despite its lacklustre performance at the election, under Park's leadership the GNP recovered in the following years by winning all the by-elections it contested.

In 2006 Park stepped down from the party leadership in a bid to become the GNP candidate at the following year's presidential election. She was narrowly defeated at the party primaries by Lee Myung-bak, who went on to become president. In Dec. 2011 Park was chosen to chair the GNP's emergency committee, overseeing the party's name change to Saenuri (New Frontier) to signal a fresh start in the face of growing voter dissatisfaction. Stepping back from the party in May 2012 to run for the presidency, she won the election on 19 Dec. 2012 with 51.6% of the vote.

Park's centrist agenda has aimed to continue economic growth, close the wealth gap, increase spending on social welfare and reduce unemployment, especially among the young. Although she has favoured improved relations with North Korea, her tenure has been marked by military provocations, both conventional and nuclear, and threatening rhetoric by the North. In 2014 and the first half of 2015 North Korea continued to conduct missile tests, including, it was claimed, from a submarine for the first time. Tensions escalated further from Aug. 2015 following an artillery confrontation along the border over the South's propaganda broadcasts across the demilitarized zone. Then in Jan. 2016 the North claimed that it had conducted its fourth nuclear weapon test since 2006, prompting international condemnation and threats of further sanctions.

In April 2014 Park accepted the resignation of Prime Minister Chung Hong-won, who took responsibility for the government's heavily criticized response to the MV Sewol ferry disaster that left more than 300 of the 476 people on board (mostly schoolchildren) dead or missing. Chung remained in office until Feb. 2015 when he was replaced by Lee Wan-koo. Two other candidates for the premiership had earlier failed to secure sufficient parliamentary backing. However, following a bribery scandal he too submitted his resignation just two months later, which Park also accepted, and was replaced in May by Hwang Kyo-ahn. In the wake of protests in Seoul against the government's economic policy, Park announced a cabinet reshuffle in Dec. and named new finance and interior ministers.

Also in Dec. 2015 Japan agreed to settle a long-standing dispute with the South Korean government over the sexual abuse of Korean women in the Second World War by the Japanese military.

DEFENCE

Peacetime operational control, which had been transferred to the United Nations Command (UNC) under a US general in July 1950 after the outbreak of the Korean War, was restored to South Korea on 1 Dec. 1994. In the event of a new crisis, operational control over the Korean armed forces will revert to the Combined Forces Command (CFC). Conscription is 21 months in the Army, 23 months in the Navy and 24 months in the Air Force. In Sept. 2007 it was announced that the length of conscription will be gradually reduced and that conscientious objectors will be allowed to choose community service in place of military service. In 2004 the USA and South Korea agreed to the redeployment of 12,500 US personnel in three phases that would continue until 2008. In April 2008 the number of troops had been reduced to 28,000 (mainly army and air force personnel) from 37,000 in 2002. The number of US troops in South Korea has remained unchanged since then.

In 2013 defence expenditure totalled US$31,846m. (US$651 per capita), representing 2.5% of GDP.

Army

Strength (2011) 522,000. Paramilitary Civilian Defence Corps, 3-0m. The armed forces reserves numbered 4.5m.

Navy

In 2011 the Navy had a substantial force of 68,000, including 27,000 marine corps troops. In 2011 the fleet included 23 submarines, two cruisers, six destroyers, 12 frigates, 30 corvettes and 80 fast-attack craft. Naval Aviation operated eight combat-capable aircraft. The naval headquarters are at Gyeryong.

Air Force

In 2011 the Air Force had a strength of 65,000 personnel and 390 combat-capable aircraft (F-4s, F-5s, F-15s and F-16s).

INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

Defections to South Korea from North Korea totalled 1,397 in 2014 compared to a record 2,914 in 2009.

South Korea's foreign policy is predominantly directed towards maintaining regional security in light of its volatile relationship with neighbouring North Korea. Eventual reunification of the two states remains a long-term goal.

ECONOMY

Agriculture accounted for 2.5% of GDP in 2013, industry 38.4% and services 59.3%.

In 2014 South Korea gave US$1.9bn. in international aid. In terms of a percentage of GNI, however, it was one of the least generous major industrialized countries, giving just 0.13%.

Overview

South Korea used to have a centrally planned economy and its GDP per capita in the 1960s was comparable to that in some of the poorest countries in Africa. However, market reforms over the ensuing decades saw the economy record remarkable levels of growth, driven largely by export-oriented manufacturing. The World Bank ranked South Korea the 13th largest economy in 2014, measured by GDP.

The 1997 Asian financial crisis exposed weaknesses in the country's development model and led to a severe recession in 1998. High debt-to-equity ratios, heavy foreign borrowing and an undisciplined financial sector with a significant amount of non-performing loans weighed heavily on the economy. Nonetheless, there was average annual growth of 5.8% from 1999 to 2007. In 2008 the global financial crisis saw exports slump and capital leave the country at a higher rate than at the height of the Asian crisis. GDP growth declined to 2.8% in 2008 and 0.7% in 2009 (the slowest rate since 1998), but recovered robustly in 2010, recording a 6.5% rise—one of the earliest rebounds in the OECD.

GDP growth slipped back in 2012 to 2.3%, reflecting reduced activity in key export markets including China, the eurozone and the USA (although in March that year the US-South Korea Free Trade Agreement entered into force). Subdued growth revealed underlying structural problems, notably high household debt (equivalent to 125% of disposable income), an under-developed service sector and weak small and medium-sized enterprises.

In April 2013 the government announced a US$15.3bn. stimulus plan with the aim of creating 40,000 jobs and boosting the stagnant property market. However, growth slowed during 2014 and fell to a six-year low in the fourth quarter as a result of a slump in infrastructure spending and exports, prompting a cut in base rates to a record level of only 2% in Oct. Growth in 2015 was estimated at 4.0%. The IMF has noted that the long-term economic outlook hinges on the success of efforts to tackle structural vulnerabilities and side-effects from global financial conditions.

Owing to a lack of natural resources, South Korea is heavily reliant on imports and is the second largest importer of natural gas. The manufacturing sector faces competition from China, Indonesia and other low wage economies, and labour unrest has presented an ongoing challenge. Around 100 manufacturing firms employ 50,000 North Koreans in an arrangement sanctioned by both Seoul and Pyongyang, although this set-up was suspended for five months during heightened tensions in 2013.

The ageing population poses long-term problems for the economy, with 6m. people (close to 12% of the population) aged over 65. South Korea is expected to have the second oldest population in the OECD by 2050 and has one of the lowest fertility rates in the world. The government has committed to medium-term fiscal consolidation in a bid to address these demographic challenges. Meanwhile around 50% of the elderly live in relative poverty, a rate that is the eighth highest in the OECD.

Currency

The unit of currency is the won (KRW). Inflation rates (based on OECD statistics):

2005	2006	2007	2008	2009	2010	2011	2012	2013	2014
2.8%	2.2%	2.5%	4.7%	2.8%	2.9%	4.0%	2.2%	1.3%	1.3%

Foreign exchange reserves were US$240,915m. in Aug. 2009 (US$51,963m. in 1998) and gold reserves 463,000 troy oz. Total money supply in June 2009 was 103,242bn. won.

Budget

In 2011 central government revenue was 287,404bn. won and expenditure 251,895bn. won. Principal sources of revenue in 2011: taxes on income, profits and capital gains, 87,161bn. won; taxes on goods and services, 71,519bn. won. Main items of expenditure by economic type in 2011: grants, 101,234bn. won; social benefits, 45,837bn. won.

VAT is 10%.

Performance

Real GDP growth rates (based on OECD statistics):

2005	2006	2007	2008	2009	2010	2011	2012	2013	2014
3.9%	5.2%	5.5%	2.8%	0.7%	6.5%	3.7%	2.3%	2.9%	3.3%

Total GDP in 2014 was US$1,410.4bn.

Banking and Finance

The central bank and bank of issue is the Bank of Korea (Governor, Lee Ju-yeol). There are four major financial groups—Woori Finance Holdings (assets in May 2014 of US$309.7bn.), Shinhan Financial Group (US$295.0bn.), Hana Financial Group (US$279.7bn.) and KB Financial Group (US$276.5bn.). Specialized banks include the National Agricultural Co-operative Federation (NACF), Korea Development Bank and Industrial Bank of Korea. Foreign-owned banks operating in South Korea include ABN AMRO, Bank of America, Bank of Tokyo-Mitsubishi UFJ, Deutsche Bank and Hongkong and Shanghai Banking Corporation. The use of real names in financial dealings has been required since 1994.

Gross external debt amounted to US$418,607m. in June 2012, up from US$399,249m. in June 2011.

South Korea has opened up once protected industries to foreign ownership, and in 2014 attracted US$9.9bn. in foreign direct investment.

There is a stock exchange in Seoul.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

South Korea's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2011 were the equivalent of 13.3 tonnes per capita.

Electricity

Installed capacity in 2011 was 84.7m. kW. Electricity generated (2011) was 522,839m. kWh (including: thermal, 358,505m. kWh; nuclear, 154,723m. kWh; hydro-electric, 7,831m. kWh). There were 21 nuclear reactors in use in 2011. Consumption per capita in 2011 was 10,738 kWh.

Oil and Gas

South Korea is the world's fifth largest importer of crude oil and second largest importer of liquefied natural gas (LNG). Domestic oil and gas production is negligible. In 2009 total gross petroleum imports amounted to 3.1m. bbls per day; daily consumption was 2.2m. bbls. Three of the world's ten largest oil refineries are in South Korea. In 2009 consumption of natural gas totalled 34.09bn. cu. metres. South Korea has no international gas pipeline connections and all imports are delivered by LNG tankers.

Minerals

Output, 2008, included (in tonnes): limestone, 82.25m.; anthracite coal, 2.77m.; salt, 0.38m.; iron ore, 0.37m.; silver, 1,462; gold, 38.

Agriculture

Cultivated land was 1.74m. ha. in 2009, of which 1.01m. ha. were rice paddies; the area of dry field was 727,000 ha. As at Dec. 2009 the farming population was 3.12m. and there were 1.20m. farm households. 1.76m. people were employed in agriculture, forestry and fishing in Sept. 2010. There were 243,662 tractors in 2007. Food and live animals accounted for 0.7% of exports and 3.7% of imports in 2007.

Production (2008, in 1,000 tonnes): rice, 6,919; cabbage, 2,902; onions, 1,540; watermelons, 857; tangerines, mandarins and clementines, 636; potatoes, 605; apples, 471; pears, 471; persimmons, 431; tomatoes, 408; chillies and green peppers, 386; cucumbers and gherkins, 384; garlic, 375; grapes, 334.

Livestock in 2008 (in 1,000): pigs, 9,153; cattle, 2,894; goats, 266; chickens, 120,000.

Livestock products in 2008 (in 1,000 tonnes): pork 1,056; beef, 246; poultry meat, 542; milk, 2,204; eggs, 595.

Forestry

Forest area was 6.22m. ha. in 2010 (63% of the land area). Of the total area under forests 48% was primary forest in 2010, 23% other naturally regenerated forest and 29% planted forest. Timber production was 6.15m. cu. metres in 2011.

Fisheries

The fish catch totalled 1,670,385 tonnes in 2012 (almost entirely from sea fishing). Imports of fishery commodities were valued at US$3,935m. in 2011 and exports at US$2,012m.

INDUSTRY

The leading companies by market capitalization in South Korea in March 2015 were: Samsung Electronics Company Ltd (US$214.0bn.); Hyundai Motor (US$39.8bn.); and SK Hynix, a memory chipmaker (US$29.9bn.).

Manufacturing industry is concentrated primarily on oil, petrochemicals, chemical fibres, construction, iron and steel, mobile phones, cement, machinery, chips, shipbuilding, automobiles and electronics. Tobacco manufacture is a semi-government monopoly. Industry is dominated by giant conglomerates (chaebol). There were 3.19m. businesses in 2004, of which 263,128 were incorporated. 878,294 businesses were in wholesale and retail trades, 643,773 in hotels and restaurants, 331,458 in transport and communications and 328,338 in manufacturing. The leading chaebol are Samsung

Production in 2005: petroleum products, 922.9m. bbls; mobile phones, 201.2m. units; refrigerators, 6.92m. units; TV sets, 5.85m. units; cars, 3.70m. units; cigarettes, 107.2bn. units. Production (2005) in 1,000 tonnes: cement, 51,391; crude steel, 47,770; distillate fuel oil (2007), 34,314; residual fuel oil (2007), 27,363; pig iron (2009), 27,475; beer (2004), 2,016m. litres.

Shipbuilding orders totalled 21.96m. GT in 2005.

Labour

In Sept. 2010 the population of working age was 40.68m.; the economically active population was 24.91m. (14.51m. males and 10.40m. females) including 16.44m. persons employed in services, 5.85m. in construction, manufacturing and mining, and 1.76m. in agriculture, fisheries and forestry. 5.61m. persons were self-employed in Sept. 2010. Unemployment was 3.5% in Dec. 2015—one of the lowest rates in the industrialized world. Long-term unemployment is particularly low, with only 0.3% of the labour force in 2010 having been out of work for more than a year. An annual legal minimum wage is set by the Minimum Wage Act (enforced from 1988), which applies to all industries. In Jan. 2009 it was increased to 4,000 won per hour and 32,000 won per eight-hour day.

A five-day working week for smaller companies has been gradually phased in; small businesses with between five and 20 employees did not have to introduce the shorter working week until July 2011. Workers in South Korea put in among the longest hours in the industrialized world. In 2013 workers put in an average of 2,079 hours.

A minimum retirement age of 60 is being phased in after a law was passed in April 2013. From 2017 employers will no longer be able to specify a retirement age under 60, although it will still be possible for employees to retire early if they wish.

South Korea had 10,000 people living in slavery according to the Walk Free Foundation's 2013 Global Slavery Index.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Total external foreign debt was US$381,100m. in 2008. In May 1998 the government removed restrictions on foreign investment in the Korean stock market. It also began to allow foreign businesses to engage in mergers and acquisitions. From July 1998 foreigners were allowed to buy plots of land for both business and non-business purposes. Since Aug. 1990 South Korean businesses and individuals have been permitted to make investments and set up branch offices in North Korea, on an approval basis.

Imports and Exports

Imports (c.i.f.) and exports (f.o.b.) for calendar years in US$1m.:

	2006	2007	2008	2009	2010
Exports	325,457.2	371,477.1	422,003.5	363,531.1	467,730.2

Leading import sources in 2010 (US$1m.) were: China, 71,526; Japan, 64,269; USA, 40,610; Saudi Arabia, 26,773. The principal export markets in 2010 (US$1m.) were: China, 117,167; USA, 50,115; Japan, 28,274; Hong Kong, 25,308.

Imports/exports by category, 2010 (in US$1bn.):

	Imports	Exports
Chemicals and related products	41.0	49.2
Food and live animals	16.3	3.9
Inedible crude materials, excluding fuels	30.6	5.6
Machinery and transport equipment	123.3	264.8
Manufactured goods	56.1	60.7
Mineral fuels and lubricants	122.6	32.5
Miscellaneous manufactured articles	31.5	46.9
Other products	3.7	4.1

Rice imports were prohibited until 1994 but following the GATT Uruguay Round the rice market opened to foreign imports in 1995.

Roads

In 2007 there were 102,061 km of roads, comprising 3,103 km of motorways, 14,225 km of highways and main roads and 84,733 km of secondary roads; 77.6% of roads (79,189 km) were paved. In 2006, 97,854m. passenger-km were travelled by road and 12,545m. tonne-km of freight were moved.

In 2007 motor vehicles in use included 12,020,700 passenger cars, 4,189,000 vans and lorries, 182,100 buses and coaches, and 1,821,300 motorcycles and mopeds. In 2007 there were 6,166 fatalities as a result of road accidents (9,353 in 2000).

The first of two planned cross-border roads between the two Koreas opened in Feb. 2003.

Rail

In 2009 Korail's system totalled 3,380 km of 1,435 mm gauge (including 240 km of high speed railways). In 2009 passenger-km travelled came to 31.3bn. and freight tonne-km to 9.3bn. In June 2000 it was agreed to start consultations to restore the railway from Seoul to Sinuiju, on the North Korean/Chinese border, by rebuilding a 12 km long stretch from Munsan, in South Korea, to Jangdan, on the South Korean/North Korean border, and an 8 km long stretch in North Korea.

Two passenger trains crossed the border between North and South Korea on 17 May 2007 (one northbound and one southbound), completing the first cross-border journey in more than 50 years. Freight services between the two Koreas were resumed in Dec. 2007 but usage is very limited.

There is an extensive metro system in Seoul and smaller ones in Busan, Daegu, Daejeon, Gwangju and Incheon.

Civil Aviation

There are six international airports in South Korea: at Seoul (Incheon), Busan (Gimhae), Daegu, Jeju, Yangyang and Cheongju. Incheon airport, 50 km to the west of Seoul and built on reclaimed land made up of four small islands, opened in March 2001 and is the largest airport in Asia. It replaced Gimpo Airport as Seoul's International Airport; Gimpo remains open for domestic flights and is the second busiest airport with 14.3m. passengers in 2008. Incheon handled 30.0m. passengers in 2008, while Jeju handled 12.4m. and Busan 7.2m.

The national carrier is Korean Air, which in June 2009 operated flights to 101 cities in 39 countries. In 2005 Korean Air carried 22.0m. passengers (11.0m. on international flights); passenger-km totalled 50.3bn. The other main Korean carrier is Asiana Airlines, which was established in 1988.

Shipping

In 2005 there were 52 ports (28 for international trade), including Busan, Incheon, Gunsan, Mokpo, Yeosu, Pohang, Donghae, Jeju, Masan, Ulsan, Daesan and Kwangyang. In Jan. 2009 there were 1,128 ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 13.41m. GT. Of the 1,128 vessels registered, 350 were general cargo ships, 260 oil tankers, 242 bulk carriers, 81 container ships, 80 passenger ships, 67 chemical tankers and 48 liquid gas tankers. The busiest port is Busan, which was visited by 48,343 vessels of 354,350,000 GRT in 2005. Cargo handled in 2005 totalled 217,217,000 tonnes (112,103,000 tonnes loaded and 105,114,000 tonnes discharged).

In 2005, 11,099,554 domestic passengers and 2,104,939 international passengers took ferries and other ocean-going vessels. There were 7,119 registered vessels accounting for a tonnage of 10,068,379.

Telecommunications

In 2014 mobile phone subscribers numbered 57,290,356 (1,157.1 per 1,000 persons). The largest operator, SK Telecom, has 49% of the market share for smartphone subscriptions, ahead of KT with 31%. There were 29,481,226 main (fixed) telephone lines in 2014.

In 2014, 84.3% of the population were internet users. In March 2012 there were 6.4m. Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

Judicial power is vested in the Supreme Court, High Courts, District Courts and Family Court, as well as the Administrative Court and Patent Court. The single six-year term Chief Justice is appointed by the President with the consent of the National Assembly. The other 13 Justices of the Supreme Court are appointed by the President with the consent of the National Assembly, upon the recommendation of the Chief Justice, for renewable six-year terms; the Chief Justice appoints other judges. There has been an unofficial moratorium on executions since 1998—the death penalty was last used in Dec. 1997. In Dec. 2009 there were 2,468 judges, 1,699 prosecutors and 11,016 registered private attorneys.

In 2008 there were 2.19m. recorded offences; the most serious offences (including murder, rape, theft and assault) numbered 439,000. The population in the 50 penal institutions in Jan. 2010 was 47,514 (98 per 100,000 of national population); 5.4% were females and 3.2% foreigners. South Korea was ranked 13th of 102 countries for criminal justice and seventh for civil justice in the 2015 World Justice Project Rule of Law Index, which provides data on how the rule of law is experienced by the general public across eight categories.

Education

The Korean education system consists of a six-year elementary school, a three-year middle school, a three-year high school and college and university (two to four years). Elementary education for 6–11 year olds and middle school education are compulsory. Mandatory middle school education began in 2002.

The total number of schools has increased sixfold from 3,000 in 1945 to 19,586 in 2005, with 11,934,863 enrolled students. In 2005 there were 8,275 kindergartens with 541,603 pupils and 31,033 teachers; 5,646 elementary schools with 4,023,806 pupils and 160,143 teachers; 2,010,704 pupils and 103,835 teachers at 2,935 middle schools; and 2,095 high schools with 1,762,896 pupils and 116,411 teachers. In 2005 there were 158 colleges and universities with 1,859,639 students and 49,200 teachers; 11 universities of education with 25,141 students and 798 teachers; 1,051 graduate schools with 282,225 students; and 18 industrial universities with 188,753 students and 2,658 teachers. In 2012, 66% of 25 to 34-year-olds had attained tertiary education, up from 37% in 2000. Around 214,000 South Koreans were studying abroad in 2005.

In 2005 public expenditure on education came to 4.3% of GDP and 15.3% of total government spending. Total expenditure on tertiary education in 2005 was among the highest in the world at 2.4% of GDP. Private spending on education in 2005 came to 2.9% of GDP, the highest share of any industrialized country. The adult literacy rate is at least 99%.

Health

In 2004 there were 282 general hospitals (with 117,323 beds), 25,346 other hospitals and clinics (189,044 beds), 9,303 oriental medical hospitals and clinics (9,585 beds) and 15,406 dental hospitals and clinics. In 2004 there were 81,998 physicians (587 people per doctor), 15,406 oriental medical doctors, 21,344 dentists, 8,626 midwives, 202,012 nurses and 53,492 pharmacists.

In 2008 South Korea spent 6.5% of its GDP on health, with public spending accounting for 55.3% of total expenditure on health and private spending 44.7%.

Welfare

In 2006, 12.8m. persons were covered by the National Pension System introduced in 1988. Employers and employees should make contributions amounting to 4.5% of the standard monthly income respectively, based on the employees' earned income. The Scheme covers old age pensions, disability pensions and survivors' pensions.

Under a system of unemployment insurance introduced in July 1995, workers laid off after working at least six months for a member employer are entitled to benefits averaging 50% of their previous wage for a period of 90 up to 240 days.

RELIGION

Traditionally, Koreans have lived under the influence of shamanism, Buddhism (introduced AD 372) and Confucianism, which was the official faith from 1392 to 1910. Catholic converts from China introduced Christianity in the 18th century, but a ban on Roman Catholicism was not lifted until 1882. The Anglican Church was introduced in 1890 and became an independent jurisdiction in 1993 under the Archbishop of Korea. According to the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life, in 2010 estimated affiliations of the main religions were: Buddhism, 11,050,000; Protestantism, 8,560,000; Roman Catholicism, 5,270,000. People with no religious affiliation numbered 22,350,000 in the same year, equivalent to 46.4% of the population. In Feb. 2016 there were two Roman Catholic cardinals.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

There are 12 sites in South Korea that appear on the UNESCO World Heritage List. They are (with year entered on list): the Sokkuram Grotto and Pulguksa Temple (1995), the Temple of Haeinsa (1995), Chongmyo Shrine (1995), Changdeokgung Palace, Seoul (1997), Hwasong Fortress, Suwon (1997), the dolmens of Gochang, Hwasun and Ganghwa (2000), Gyeongju historic area (2000), Jeju volcanic island and lava tubes (2007), the Royal Tombs of the Joseon Dynasty (2009), the Historic Villages of Hahoe and Yangdong (2010), Namhansanseong (2014) and Baekje Historic Areas (2015).

Press

There were 324 daily newspapers in 2012. With 10.9m. paid daily newspaper subscriptions in 2012, South Korea has the fifth highest newspaper circulation among developed countries. The most widely read dailies are Chosun Ilbo (average daily circulation of 1.8m. per issue in 2013), JoongAng Ilbo (1.3m. copies) and Dong-A Ilbo (907,000 copies). Newspaper online editions had 847,000 unique monthly visitors in 2010.

Tourism

A record 9,795,000 foreign nationals visited South Korea in 2011 (up from 8,798,000 in 2010 and 6,023,000 in 2005). The leading countries of origin of non-resident tourists in 2011 were: Japan (3,289,000), mainland China (2,220,000), the USA (662,000), Taiwan (428,000) and the Philippines (337,000). 12,694,000 South Koreans travelled abroad in 2011 (up from 12,488,000 in 2010 and 10,080,000 in 2005). In Nov. 1998 the first South Korean tourists to visit North Korea went on a cruise and tour organized by the South Korean firm Hyundai.

Festivals

Korean New Year or Seollal is celebrated on the first day of the lunar calendar and generally falls on the same date as the Chinese New Year. Other traditional festivals include the festival for the first full moon of the year known as Daeboreum; Dano or Suritnal (spring festival) which is held on the fifth day of the fifth month of the lunar calendar; and Chuseok (harvest festival) on the 15th day of the eighth month. The biggest music festivals are the Tongyeong International Music Festival (March), specializing in Western and Asian classical music, and the Pentaport Rock Festival in Incheon (July).

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Northern Kuwait formed part of ancient Mesopotamia and there is evidence of settlement during the Ubaid prehistoric period. For instance, fragments of a reed boat preserved in bitumen tar at As-Sabiyah have been dated to around 5,000 BC. Settlements along the bay of Kuwait and on the island of Failaka were part of the Bronze Age Dilmun civilization, which flourished and controlled trade in the Persian Gulf between 4,000 BC and 1,800 BC. After 600 BC the coastal settlements came under Babylonian rule. Alexander the Great's arrival in the region in the third century BC paved the way for a period of Hellenistic influence, including a settlement on Failaka founded by Nearchus (one of Alexander's officers). The area was part of the Sassanid Empire from the third century AD to the seventh century, and known as Maishan.

The Bani Khaled clan moved into the area from central Arabia from the 14th century, establishing fishing and pearling villages on the bay of Kuwait. A small fort, known as Al Kout, was constructed in 1613. Other clans, notably the al-Sabah, profited when nearby Basra came under Persian control in 1775 and expanded to become a major port on the lucrative trade route between the Mediterranean and India. Kuwait was ostensibly under Ottoman control, administered from Basra, for much of the 19th century. In 1899 Sheikh Mubarak signed a treaty with Britain that offered his support for British interests in return for naval protection.

Crude oil, discovered in vast quantities beneath the desert in 1938 by the British-US Kuwait Oil Company, fuelled Kuwait's transformation after the Second World War. Made the capital of an independent country on 19 June 1961, Kuwait City expanded rapidly, drawing in hundreds of thousands of migrants to work in the oil industry and the myriad services that supplied it.

Kuwait supported Iraq during the Iran-Iraq war in the 1980s. However, on 2 Aug. 1990 Iraqi forces invaded the country, having accused Kuwait of stealing Iraqi oil from a field straddling the border between the two countries. Following the expiry of the date set by the United Nations for Iraq's withdrawal, an air offensive was launched by coalition forces, followed by a land attack on 24 Feb. 1991. Although led by the USA, the coalition personnel came from over 30 countries, including Saudi Arabia, the United Kingdom, Egypt and Syria. Iraqi forces were routed and Kuwait City was liberated on 26 Feb. The Amir and his cabinet returned from exile in Saudi Arabia the following month. On 10 Nov. 1994 Iraq recognized the independence and boundaries of Kuwait.

Kuwait holds around 7% of the world's oil reserves, with oil exports, increasingly shipped to East Asia, accounting for about half of GDP. Compared with elsewhere in the region, Kuwait has done little to diversify its economy. This partly reflects its strong fiscal position, but acrimonious relations between the ruling al-Sabah family and the elected parliament have also hindered reforms. Mass protests have become more frequent since the 2011 'Arab Spring', including a series of demonstrations in late 2012 over proposed changes to electoral boundaries. Tribal and liberal groups emerged as the main winners of the parliamentary election in July 2013, with minority Shia MPs losing more than half of their seats.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Kuwait is bounded in the east by the Persian Gulf, north and west by Iraq and south and southwest by Saudi Arabia, with an area of 17,818 sq. km. In 1992-93 the UN Boundary Commission redefined Kuwait's border with Iraq, moving it slightly northwards in conformity with an agreement of 1932. The population at the 2011 census was 3,065,850; density, 172 per sq. km. In 2011, 98.4% of the population were urban. In June 2014 the population was estimated at 4,039,445, of which 68.8% were non-Kuwaitis.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 3.89m.

The country is divided into six governorates: the capital (comprising Kuwait City, Kuwait's nine islands and territorial and shared territorial waters) (2011 census population, 326,513); Farwaniya (818,571); Hawalli (672,910); Ahmadi (588,068); Jahra (400,975); Mubarak al-Kabir (258,813). The capital city is Kuwait, with an estimated population in 2010 (metropolitan area) of 2,102,000. Other major cities are Hawalli, Qalib ash-Shuyukh, as-Salimiya.

The Neutral Zone (Kuwait's share, 2,590 sq. km), jointly owned and administered by Kuwait and Saudi Arabia from 1922 to 1966, was partitioned between the two countries in May 1966, but the exploitation of the oil and other natural resources continues to be shared.

Over 78% speak Arabic, the official language. English is also used as a second language.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

Births, 2008, 54,571; deaths, 5,701. The birth rate in 2009 was 21.9 per 1,000 population and death rate 2.3 per 1,000 population (one of the lowest in the world). Expectation of life at birth, 2013, was 73.5 years for males and 75.5 years for females. Infant mortality, 2010, ten per 1,000 live births. Annual population growth rate, 2005-10, 5.3%.

Fertility rate, 2008, 2.2 births per woman. Kuwait has had one of the largest reductions in its fertility rate of any country in the world over the past 30 years, having had a rate of 7.2 births per woman in 1975. It was ranked 117th in a gender gap index of 145 countries compiled by the World Economic Forum for its Global Gender Gap Report 2015. The annual index considers economic, political, education and health criteria.

CLIMATE

Kuwait has a dry, desert climate which is cool in winter but very hot and humid in summer. Rainfall is extremely light. Kuwait, Jan. 56°F (13.5°C), July 99°F (36.6°C). Annual rainfall 5" (125 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

The ruler is HH Sheikh Sabah al-Ahmed al-Jaber al-Sabah, the 15th Amir of Kuwait, who succeeded on 29 Jan. 2006. Crown Prince: Sheikh Nawwaf al-Ahmed al-Sabah (b. 1937). The present constitution was approved and promulgated on 11 Nov. 1962.

In 1990 the National Council was established, consisting of 50 elected members and 25 appointed by the Amir. It was replaced by a National Assembly or Majlis al-Umma in 1992, consisting at the time of 50 elected members. It now has 65 members, of whom 50 are elected. The franchise extends to Kuwaiti citizens who are 21 or older, with the exception of those who are serving in the armed forces and citizens who have been naturalized for fewer than 30 years. In May 1999 the cabinet approved a draft law giving women the right to vote and run for parliament. However, in Dec. 1999 parliament rejected the bill allowing women to vote by a margin of 32 to 20. Women were granted the right to vote and run for office in May 2005 when parliament voted in favour of amending the election law by a margin of 35 votes to 23. Women were eligible to stand for election and to vote in a council by-election held in April 2006 and in the full parliamentary election held in June 2006.

Executive authority is vested in the Council of Ministers.

RECENT ELECTIONS

In Oct. 2012 the Amir, Sheikh Sabah, dissolved parliament, leading to new elections in Dec. 2012. Prior to these elections the Amir passed a law cutting the number of votes per citizen from four to one. The newly elected assembly was dominated by non-attached pro-regime members, with the Shia minority winning 17 seats and the Sunni Islamists four seats.

In June 2013 the assembly was dissolved again after the Constitutional Court annulled the results of the Dec. 2012 elections on a technicality. In elections held on 27 July 2013 Sunni independents won 30 seats (28 in Dec. 2012), Liberals nine (one in Dec. 2012), Shias eight (17 in Dec. 2012) and Sunni Islamists three (four in Dec. 2012). Two women were elected. Turnout was 52.5%.

CURRENT LEADERS

Sheikh Sabah al-Ahmed al-Jaber al-Sabah

Position

Amir

Introduction

Sheikh Sabah became Amir of Kuwait in Jan. 2006, ending a brief constitutional crisis in the wake of the death of Sheikh Jaber. As foreign minister for over 40 years, Sheikh Sabah oversaw the positioning of Kuwait as a key Western ally in the Gulf, allowing the USA to use the country as a launch pad for its invasion of Iraq in 2003. He has faced increasing calls for greater democratization.

Early Life

Sabah al-Ahmed al-Jaber al-Sabah was born in 1929 in Kuwait, then a British protectorate. He is the fourth son of Sheikh Ahmed al-Jaber al-Sabah, the founder of modern Kuwait and its leader from 1921–50. Educated at al Mubarakya School and by tutors, Sheikh Sabah became a member of the central committee municipality council in 1954. He also served as a member of the building and construction council at a time when the Amir, Sheikh Abdullah al-Salem al-Sabah, was pumping much of the state's new oil wealth into an ambitious public works programme.

From 1956–62 Sheikh Sabah chaired the printing and publishing authority and was then appointed minister of information in the first post-independence cabinet. He was promoted to foreign minister in 1963 and headed Kuwait's inaugural delegation to the UN later that year. He presided over a generally low-profile, neutralist foreign policy. Palestinian rights received strong support; Fatah was founded in Kuwait.

On 16 Feb. 1978 Sheikh Sabah was appointed deputy prime minister while keeping the foreign affairs portfolio. A broadly pro-Iraqi orientation was adopted during the early stages of the Iran–Iraq War and Kuwait became a member of the Gulf Co-operation Council. After Iraq's invasion of Kuwait in 1990, Sheikh Sabah joined other government members in exile in Saudi Arabia. The al-Sabahs' flight caused resentment among those left behind in Kuwait but post-liberation elections and the creation of a National Assembly in 1992 were well received. In 1996 Sheikh Sabah joined the Supreme Council of Planning.

The increasingly frail Sheikh Jaber issued a decree separating the posts of crown prince and prime minister on 13 July 2003 and appointed Sheikh Sabah as premier. Endowed with considerable executive powers, he continued the reforms begun by the Amir, appointing the first woman minister and promoting religious tolerance in schools. After the death of Sheikh Jaber in Jan. 2006, the 76-year old crown prince, Sheikh Saad al-Abdullah al-

Salim al-Sabah, was deemed too ill to take the Amir's oath of office. He was voted out of office by parliament on 24 Jan. 2006 and the cabinet nominated Sheikh Sabah to take over. He was sworn in on 29 Jan. 2006.

Career in Office

Sheikh Sabah promised to speed up reforms promoting greater economic transparency, full political rights for women and democratic elections. Women had their first opportunity to vote in April 2006 in a municipal election, and were also allowed to stand as candidates in the parliamentary elections in June that year although none were successful. However, two women ministers were included in a new cabinet appointed in March 2007. In March 2008 Sheikh Sabah dissolved parliament and called fresh elections in May, in which Islamists won 30 of the 50 National Assembly seats. Women candidates were again unsuccessful. A year later he dissolved parliament again when the cabinet resigned on 16 March 2009 to prevent questioning of the Amir's nephew, Prime Minister Sheikh Nasser Muhammad al-Ahmad al-Sabah, on charges of misuse of public funds. Sheikh Nasser was reappointed prime minister following elections held on 16 May 2009 in which four women candidates were returned as parliamentary members for the first time.

Reflecting the political disaffection that spread across much of the Arab world from early 2011, there were demonstrations calling for reforms in Kuwait in March. The cabinet again resigned, but Sheikh Nasser was reinstated once more and in May formed a new administration with no changes to key personnel. However, after a crowd stormed parliament in Nov. in protest at alleged high-level corruption, Sheikh Nasser stood down again. The Amir accepted his resignation and appointed Sheikh Jaber Mubarak al-Hamad al-Sabah as the new prime minister. In Feb. 2012 Sheikh Jaber also resigned, but his administration was promptly reinstated with no changes to key ministries other than defence.

Islamists won a majority of seats in the Feb. 2012 elections but the Constitutional Court annulled the results in June. The Amir called for new elections in Dec. that year while issuing a decree in Oct. amending the electoral law. The opposition claimed that the law favoured government candidates, prompting violent street protests. The Dec. poll was boycotted by the opposition and was further undermined by a low voter turnout. In June 2013 the Constitutional Court again intervened to dissolve parliament, heralding further elections the following month in which liberals made some gains at the expense of minority Shia candidates. Political tensions persisted in 2014 and 2015 as the government revoked citizenship from opponents calling for reform and those associated with extremist groups, and also maintained a policy of tight media control. In June 2015 a suspected Sunni suicide attack on a Shia mosque killed 27 people and injured many more. Earlier, in April, the government reintroduced compulsory military service.

From March 2015 Kuwait participated in air strikes by a Saudi-led coalition against Houthi rebels in Yemen, while in Jan. 2016 Kuwaiti relations with Iran were downgraded in response to that country's widening regional rift with Saudi Arabia and the other Gulf states.

DEFENCE

In Sept. 1991 the USA signed a ten-year agreement with Kuwait to store equipment, use ports and carry out joint training exercises. In March 2013, 15,000 US troops were stationed in Kuwait. Compulsory military service for males was reintroduced in 2015, having been suspended in 2001, and is set to be implemented in 2017.

In 2013 defence expenditure totalled US$4,427m., with spending per capita US$1,642. The 2013 expenditure represented 2.6% of GDP.

Army

Strength (2011) 11,000. In addition there is a National Guard of around 6,600.

Navy

Personnel in 2011 numbered an estimated 2,000, including 500 Coast Guard personnel.

Air Force

From a small initial combat force the Air Force has grown rapidly, although it suffered heavy losses after the Iraqi invasion of 1990–91. Equipment includes F/A-18 Hornet strike aircraft and British Aerospace Hawks. Personnel strength was (2011) 2,500, with 66 combat-capable aircraft and 16 attack helicopters.

ECONOMY

Agriculture accounted for 0.4% of GDP in 2014, industry 64.3% and services 35.3%.

Overview

In 2009 the global economic downturn prompted a GDP contraction of 5%. Thanks to a surge in oil production there was growth of over 8% in both 2011 and 2012. The oil and gas industry accounts for 64% of nominal GDP, 95% of exports and 80% of government revenue, rendering the economy more oil-dependent than most of its Gulf State neighbours.

Progress in transforming the country into a regional trade and finance hub has been slow. However, the financial services, tourism, warehousing and real estate sectors are expanding in response to increased incentives for foreign investors. A US$130bn. economic development plan includes the construction of Silk City at Subiya and a vast port complex on Bubiyan Island to the north of Kuwait City, intended as a gateway to both Kuwait and Iraq.

Subsidies have taken per capita income to over US$40,000. The government aims to reduce social welfare spending. There are also moves to reduce the number of foreign workers by 100,000 a year over ten years, although the Kuwaiti labour force currently lacks the education and skills needed to replace them.

Currency

The unit of currency is the Kuwaiti dinar (KWD), usually written as KD, of 1,000 fiils. Inflation was 2.7% in 2013 and 2.9% in 2014. Foreign exchange reserves were US$7,544m. in July 2005, monetary gold reserves were 2.54m. troy oz and total money supply was KD 3,581m.

Budget

The fiscal year begins on 1 April. Budgetary central government revenue and expenditure (in KD 1m.):

	2009–10	2010–11	2011–12
Revenue	17,473	21,239	29,944
Expenditure	10,269	13,109	15,879

Oil accounts for 85% of government revenues. Main items of expenditure by economic type in 2011–12 (in KD 1m.): compensation of employees, 3,786; subsidies, 3,535; use of goods and services, 2,130.

Performance

The economy grew by 7.7% in 2012. However, real GDP growth was only 0.8% in 2013 and 0.1% in 2014. Total GDP in 2014 was US$163.6bn.

Banking and Finance

The Governor of the Central Bank is Dr Mohammad Al-Hashel. There is also the Kuwait Finance House. In 2002 there were 11 national banks and one Islamic banking firm. The combined assets of banks operating in Kuwait totalled KD 18,818m. in Dec. 2003. Foreign banks were not permitted until 2005.

There is a stock exchange, linked with those of Bahrain and Oman.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Kuwait's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy accounted for 38.7 tonnes per capita in 2011.

Electricity

Installed capacity was 14.8m. kW in 2011. Production in 2011 was 57.5bn. kWh; consumption per capita was 18,388 kWh.

Oil and Gas

Oil production in 2014, 150.8m. tonnes. Kuwait had reserves in 2014 amounting to 101.5bn. bbls. Most of the oil is in the Great Burgan area (reserves of approximately 70bn. bbls), comprising the Burgan, Maqwa and Ahmadi fields located south of Kuwait City. Natural gas production was 14.5bn. cu. metres in 2012, with 1.8trn. cu. metres of proven reserves.

Water

The country depends upon desalination plants. Fresh mineral water is pumped and bottled at Rawdhatain. Underground brackish water is used for irrigation, street cleaning and livestock. Production, 2003, 127,185m. gallons (95,174m. gallons fresh, 32,011m. gallons brackish). Consumption, 2003, 119,521m. gallons (94,987m. gallons fresh, 24,534m. gallons brackish).

Agriculture

There were 10,400 ha. of arable land in 2003 and 2,100 ha. of permanent crops. Production of main crops, 2003 (in 1,000 tonnes): tomatoes, 64; cucumbers and gherkins, 35; potatoes, 21; dates, 16; aubergines, 15; chillies and green peppers, 8; pumpkins and squash, 8; cauliflowers, 7.

Livestock (2003): sheep, 481,000; goats, 194,000; cattle, 27,000; poultry, 30m. Milk production (2003), 43,000 tonnes.

Forestry

Forests covered 6,000 ha. in 2010, or 0.3% of the land area.

Fisheries

The total catch in 2012 was 4,030 tonnes, exclusively from sea fishing. In the space of a month in 2001 more than 2,000 tonnes of dead fish were washed ashore. Some experts claimed the cause was the alleged pumping of raw sewage into the Gulf while others attributed it to waste from the oil industry. Shrimp fishing was important, but has declined since the 1990-91 war through oil pollution of coastal waters. Before the discovery of oil, pearls were at the centre of Kuwait's economy, but today pearl fishing is only on a small scale.

INDUSTRY

The leading companies by market capitalization in Kuwait in March 2015 were: National Bank of Kuwait (US$13.4bn.); Kuwait Finance House, a banking group (US$10.6bn.); and Zain Group, a mobile telecommunications company (US$6.8bn.).

Industries, apart from oil, include boat building, fishing, food production, petrochemicals, gases and construction. Production figures in 2011 unless otherwise indicated (in 1,000 tonnes): distillate fuel oil, 10,872; residual fuel oil, 9,766; kerosene, 5,912; liquefied petroleum gas, 4,428; jet fuel, 2,538; petrol, 2,206; cement (2012 estimate), 2,250.

Labour

The labour force in 2013 was 1,899,000 (1,051,000 in 2003). 70.1% of the population aged 15-64 was economically active in 2013. In the same year 3.2% of the population was unemployed. Approximately 80% of nationals work for the government, with around 95% of private jobs being filled by expatriates. In March 2013 the government announced its intention to reduce by a million the number of foreign workers over a period of ten years.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Kuwait, along with Bahrain, Oman, Qatar, Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates entered into a customs union in Jan. 2003.

Imports and Exports

Imports (c.i.f.) were valued at US$24,840m. in 2008 and exports (f.o.b.) at US$87,457m. Oil accounts for 92% of revenue from exports. In 2008 the leading import suppliers were China, the USA and Japan; the main export markets were Japan, South Korea and India.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

There were 5,749 km of roads in 2004, 85% of which were paved. There were 750,600 passenger cars in use in 2007 (282 per 1,000 inhabitants), 573,200 lorries and vans, and 27,300 buses and coaches. There were 45,376 road accidents in 2003 involving injury with 1,704 fatalities.

Civil Aviation

There is an international airport (Kuwait International). The national carrier is the state-owned Kuwait Airways. Kuwait's first low-cost airline, Jazeera Airways, began operations in Oct. 2005. In 2005 scheduled airline traffic of Kuwait-based carriers flew 50.7m. km and carried 1,944,200 passengers. Kuwait International airport handled 4,260,136 passengers in 2003 and 144,727 tonnes of freight.

Shipping

The port of Kuwait formerly served mainly as an entrepôt, but this function is declining in importance with the development of the oil industry. The largest oil terminal is at Mina Ahmadi. Three small oil ports lie to the south of Mina Ahmadi: Mina Shuaiba, Mina Abdullah and Mina al-Zor. In Jan. 2009 there were 52 ships of 300 GT or over registered (including 22 oil tankers), totalling 2.33m. GT.

Telecommunications

In 2010 Kuwait had 519,000 landline telephone subscriptions (equivalent to 173.6 per 1,000 inhabitants) and 3,979,000 mobile phone subscriptions (or 1,330.1 per 1,000 inhabitants). In 2011, 74.2% of the population were internet users. In the same year 66.9% of households had a computer and 62.0% of households had internet access at home. In March 2012 there were 899,000 Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

In 1960 Kuwait adopted a unified judicial system covering all levels of courts. These are: Courts of Summary Justice, Courts of the First Instance, Supreme Court of Appeal, Court of Cassation and a Constitutional Court. Islamic Sharia is a major source of legislation. The death penalty is in force and was last used in 2013, when five executions were carried out, for the first time since 2007. No executions took place in 2014 or 2015. The population in penal institutions in 2010 was 4,179 (137 per 100,000 of national population). The International Centre for Prison Studies estimated in 2014 that 10.0% of prisoners had yet to receive a trial.

Education

Education is free and compulsory from six to 14 years. In 2007 there were 211,576 pupils in primary schools with 22,016 teaching staff, and 247,233 pupils in secondary schools with 26,050 teaching staff. In 2006 there were 37,521 students in tertiary education and 1,986 academic staff. There are two state-supported higher education institutions, Kuwait University and the Public Authority for Applied Education and Training. There were approximately 28,000 students at Kuwait University in 2009. There are also a number of private universities and colleges, a teacher training college, a music academy and several Quranic schools. The Arab Open University which opened in Nov. 2002 is based in Kuwait and has branches in several other Middle Eastern countries. There were around 17,000 enrolments in 2003–04. Adult literacy rate in 2007 was 94%. In 2005 public expenditure on education came to 4.7% of GDP and accounted for 12.7% of total government spending.

Health

Medical services are free to all residents. In 2003 there were 15 hospitals and sanatoria, with a provision of 4,712 beds (19 per 10,000 population). There were 4,840 doctors (18 per 10,000 population), 810 dentists, 9,940 nurses and midwives and 1,340 pharmacists in 2005. There were 74 clinics and other health centres and 1,569,549 people were admitted to public hospitals in 2003.

RELIGION

In 2010 there were 2.0m. Muslims according to estimates by the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life (of whom approximately two-thirds to three-quarters Sunnis and the rest Shias), plus 390,000 Christians and 230,000 Hindus.

CULTURE

Press

In 2008 there were 17 daily newspapers, with a combined circulation of 630,000. Formal press censorship was lifted in Jan. 1992.

Tourism

There were 5,729,000 non-resident visitors in 2012 (up from 4,482,000 in 2007), bringing revenue of US$780m.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Kyrgyzstan became part of Soviet Turkestan, which itself became a Soviet Socialist Republic within the Russian Soviet Federal Socialist Republic (RSFSR) in April 1921. In 1924, when Central Asia was reorganized territorially on a national basis, Kyrgyzstan was separated from Turkestan. In Dec. 1936 Kyrgyzstan was proclaimed one of the constituent Soviet Socialist Republics of the USSR. With the collapse of the Soviet Empire, the republic asserted its claim to sovereignty in 1990 and declared independence in Sept. 1991. Askar Akayev became president in 1990 and subsequently expanded presidential powers. Kyrgyzstan became a member of the CIS in Dec. 1991.

Incursions into Kyrgyz territory by Islamic rebels and border skirmishes in the Fergana Valley are a cause for concern for all Central Asian governments. Kyrgyzstan tripled its defence budget for 2001 to combat terrorism. Allegations of widespread government corruption and disputed parliamentary elections in Feb. 2005 led to widespread popular protests. The Supreme Court declared the elections void and Kurmanbek Bakiyev was appointed prime minister and acting president. Akayev, in exile in Russia, resigned as president in April 2005. Bakiyev was confirmed as president by winning the elections held in July 2005. His tenure was marked by elections that fell below accepted international standards, concerns over civil liberties and growing popular resentment at his failure to address corruption. The doubling of household utility costs in Jan. 2010 sparked a wave of protests that resulted in Bakiyev stepping down in April 2010 with Roza Otunbayeva, previously foreign minister, heading an interim government until Almazbek Atambayev took office as president in Dec. 2011.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Kyrgyzstan is situated on the Tien-Shan mountains and bordered in the east by China, west by Kazakhstan and Uzbekistan, north by Kazakhstan and south by Tajikistan. Area, 199,945 sq. km (77,199 sq. miles). Population (census 2009), 5,362,793 (51.3% females); density, 27 per sq. km. In 2009, 65.9% of the population lived in rural areas. In Jan. 2014 the population was estimated at 5,776,600.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 5.94m.

The republic comprises seven provinces (Batken, Djalal-Abad, Issyk-Kul, Naryn, Osh, Talas and Chu) plus the city of Bishkek, the capital (formerly Frunze; 2014 estimated population, 901,700). Other large towns (with 2014 estimates) are Osh (238,600), Djalal-Abad (96,600), Karakol (formerly Przhevalsk, 69,300), Tokmak (57,400), Uzgen (53,400), Balykchy (44,600) and Karabalta (42,200).

The Kyrgyz are of Turkic origin and formed 69.2% of the population in 2008; the rest included Uzbeks (14.5%), Russians (8.7%) and Dungans (1.2%).

The official languages are Kyrgyz and Russian. After the break-up of the Soviet Union, Russian was only the official language in provinces where Russians are in a majority. However, in May 2000 parliament voted to make it an official language nationwide, mainly in an attempt to stem the ever-increasing exodus of skilled ethnic Russians. The Cyrillic alphabet is still used although the reintroduction of the Roman alphabet (in use 1928–40) remains a source of political debate.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2009 births, 135,494; deaths, 35,898; marriages (2006), 43,760. Rates, 2009 (per 1,000 population): birth, 26.4; death, 7.0; infant mortality (per 1,000 live births, 2010), 33. Life expectancy, 2007, 63.9 years for males and 71.4 for females. In 2003 the most popular age for marrying was 20–24 for females and 25–29 for males. Annual population growth rate, 2000–05, 0.9%; fertility rate, 2008, 2.5 births per woman.

CLIMATE

The climate varies from dry continental to polar in the high Tien-Shan, to sub-tropical in the southwest (Fergana Valley) and temperate in the northern foothills. Bishkek, Jan. 9°F (–13°C), July 70°F (21°C). Annual rainfall 14.8" (375 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

A new constitution was adopted in June 2010 after it won overwhelming support in a referendum following the ousting of the incumbent president, Kurmanbek Bakiyev, in April 2010. The referendum was held two weeks after ethnic violence between Kyrgyz and Uzbek groups killed up to 2,000 and left 400,000 displaced. Nonetheless, international observers deemed the vote fair. Turnout was put at 72.2%, with 90.5% of votes cast in favour.

Under the terms of the constitution, greater power is invested in parliament at the expense of the presidency. The president is allowed to serve a maximum of one six-year term and cannot seek re-election, although the office does retain its power of veto and has the authority to appoint heads of various state institutions. The unicameral parliament (Jogorku Kenesh) is comprised of 120 seats, with no single party allowed to hold more than 65. Political parties cannot be constituted on religious or ethnic grounds and members of the armed forces, the judiciary and the police are banned from party membership.

National Anthem

'Ak möngülüü aska yoolor, talaalar' ('High mountains, valleys and fields'); words by D. Sadykov and E. Kuluev, tune by N. Davlyesov and K. Moldovasanov.

RECENT ELECTIONS

Presidential elections were held on 30 Oct. 2011. Former prime minister Almazbek Atambayev won with 63.2% of the vote, ahead of Adakhan Madumarov with 14.7% and Kamchybek Tashiyev with 14.3%. There were 13 other candidates. Reported turnout was over 57%. Madumarov and Tashiyev warned in advance of potential attempts to rig the voting and concerns were raised over the transparency of the elections.

Parliamentary elections were held on 4 Oct. 2015 in which 38 of 120 seats were won by the Social Democratic Party of Kyrgyzstan, 28 by Ata-Zhurt (Fatherland), 18 by the Kyrgyzstan Party, 13 by Onuguu-Progress, 12 by Bir Bol and 11 by Ata Meken. Turnout was 57.6%.

CURRENT GOVERNMENT

In April 2016 the government comprised:

President: Almazbek Atambayev; b. 1956 (Social Democratic Party of Kyrgyzstan; since 1 Dec. 2011).

CURRENT LEADERS

Almazbek Atambayev

Position
President

Introduction

Almazbek Atambayev was sworn in as president on 1 Dec. 2011. His election represented the first peaceful handover of power since the country gained independence during the dissolution of the Soviet Union. He succeeded Roza Otunbayeva, who assumed the post on a temporary basis after the previous incumbent, Kurmanbek Bakiyev, was ousted in a violent uprising in April 2010. A successful entrepreneur, Atambayev has favoured closer ties with Russia.

Early Life

Atambayev was born on 17 Sept. 1956 in Chui, a northern region of what is now Kyrgyzstan. He studied at the Moscow Institute of Management, from where he graduated with a degree in economics. From 1983 until 1987, when the Kyrgyz Republic was still a constituent part of the Soviet Union, he served on the Supreme Council of the Republic.

In 1993, two years after the country had declared independence, Atambayev was one of the founders of the Social Democratic Party of Kyrgyzstan. Having established himself as a prosperous businessman in the post-Soviet era, he became chairman of the party in 1999. In 2000 he won 6% of the vote in a presidential election. In Dec. 2005 he was appointed minister of industry, trade and tourism, but resigned five months later. In Nov. 2006 he was among the leaders of anti-government protests in the capital, Bishkek. He served as prime minister from March to Nov. 2007, and ran again for president in April 2009 but withdrew on the day of the ballot, citing electoral fraud.

Kurmanbek Bakiyev was overthrown in April 2010, prompting a wave of ethnic violence between Kyrgyz and Uzbek communities in the south of the country. A national referendum approved a new constitution that weakened the authority of the president and shifted power towards the legislature. Parliamentary elections followed and a coalition government was established for the first time in the country's history. Atambayev was appointed prime minister once more, a position he held until the presidential election in Oct. 2011.

Atambayev gained a comfortable victory at that election which, though criticized by some observers, was regarded as a significant democratic achievement.

Career in Office

Atambayev came to power in a country riven by ethnic division. He urged national unity and named Russia as the country's 'main strategic partner'. He said that he would look to close a US military base in the country when its lease expired—a position endorsed by parliament in June 2013, after which the base closed in June 2014.

In Sept. 2012 Atambayev appointed technocrat Zhantoro Satybaldiyev as prime minister following the collapse of the coalition government amid corruption allegations, a poor economic record and the resignation of former premier Omurbek Babanov. Further reports of corruption also prompted the fall of Satybaldiyev's administration in March 2014, with Dzhoomart Otorbayev appointed the new premier. He in turn resigned in April 2015 and was succeeded by Temir Sariyev. In parliamentary elections the following Oct. Atambayev's Social Democratic Party of Kyrgyzstan was returned as the largest party and another coalition government under Sariyev's premiership was formed.

In April 2016 Sooronbay Jeenbekov was sworn in as prime minister after Sariyev and his cabinet resigned having been accused of corruption by a parliamentary commission.

DEFENCE

Conscription is for 12 months. Defence expenditure in 2013 totalled US$102m. (US$18 per capita), representing 1.4% of GDP. The USA opened a military base in Kyrgyzstan in 2001 to aid the war in Afghanistan against the Taliban. The base was scheduled to close by the end of Aug. 2009 after an eviction notice was served on 20 Feb. 2009 giving the US military 180 days to vacate the site. However, on 23 June 2009 the Kyrgyz and US governments agreed a new deal that allowed a one-year extension of the lease. The base closed when a further lease expired in June 2014. In Sept. 2003 Kyrgyzstan also agreed to allow Russia to open an air force base in the country.

Army

Personnel, 2011, 8,500. In addition there are 5,000 border guards, 3,500 interior troops and a National Guard of 1,000.

Air Force

Personnel, 2011, 2,400, with 33 combat-capable aircraft (mainly MiG-21 fighters) and two attack helicopters.

ECONOMY

Agriculture accounted for 21% of GDP in 2009, industry 27% and services 52%.

Overview

After independence in 1991, Kyrgyzstan suffered from the loss of Soviet economic support. The country was plagued by nepotism and corruption during the post-independence rule of President Akayev (1990–2005). In 2010 the power of the president was constitutionally curtailed, but wealth inequality nonetheless remains endemic and exacerbates simmering ethnic tensions.

There is under-investment in infrastructure and social services and the economy is classed as low-income. GDP per capita was US$920 in 2011, when the economy faltered as a result of the global financial crisis, internal political unrest and inflated food prices. The poverty rate rose from 33.7% in 2010 to 36.8% in 2011.

Mining brings in over 25% of government revenues and 50% of all export earnings. When gold mining was temporarily reduced in the country's largest mine at Kumtor (responsible for some 60% of the country's industrial output) in 2012, GDP contracted by 0.9% despite robust growth in non-gold sectors.

The government has set about reforming the agricultural sector which employs the vast majority of workers, establishing a land reform programme, a rural bank and an agricultural advisory service to help boost investment and productivity.

Long-term challenges include reform of the education, healthcare and social protection systems. There is scope for much improvement in the national infrastructure and the government must attempt to curb over-reliance on energy imports.

Currency

On 10 May 1993 Kyrgyzstan introduced its own currency unit, the som (KGS), of 100 tyiyn, at a rate of 1 som = 200 roubles. Inflation was 24.5% in 2008, and more recently 6.6% in 2013 and 7.5% in 2014. Gold reserves totalled 83,000 troy oz in July 2005, foreign exchange reserves US$509m. and total money supply 13,884m. soms.

Budget

Budgetary central government revenue totalled 69,021.5m. soms in 2011 and expenditure 62,184.3m. soms. Tax revenues in 2011 were 46,125.2m. soms. Main items of expenditure by economic type in 2011 were: compensation of employees (16,124.2m. soms) and use of goods and services (14,092.6m. soms).

VAT is 12%.

Performance

The economy contracted by 0.9% in 2012 but then made a significant recovery to grow by 10.5% in 2013. There was then growth in 2014 of 3.6%. Total GDP in 2014 was US$7.4bn.

Banking and Finance

The central bank and bank of issue is the National Bank (Chair, Tokunbek Abdygulov). There were 22 commercial banks, including three foreign banks, in 2002.

Foreign debt was US$3,984m. in 2010, representing 89.2% of GNI.

There is a stock exchange in Bishkek.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Kyrgyzstan's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy were the equivalent of 1.6 tonnes per capita in 2011.

Electricity

Installed capacity was an estimated 3.9m. kW in 2011. Production in 2011 was 15.16bn. kWh, of which 93.3% hydro-electric; consumption per capita was 2,288 kWh. Kyrgyzstan exports electricity to Russia and to other neighbouring countries.

Oil and Gas

Output of oil, 2009, 0.5m. bbls; natural gas, 2009, 15m. cu. metres.

Minerals

In 2009 lignite production totalled 535,000 tonnes and hard coal production 67,000 tonnes. Gold is also mined. Output in 2009 (gold content) was 16,950 kg. Gold is by far the country's leading mineral commodity in terms of value. One gold mine, the Kumtor mine, accounts for nearly 12% of the country's annual GDP.

Agriculture

Kyrgyzstan is famed for its livestock breeding, in particular the small Kyrgyz horse. In 2004 there were 2,882,000 sheep, 1,003,000 cattle, 795,000 goats, 340,000 horses and 2m. chickens. Yaks are bred as meat and dairy cattle, and graze on high altitudes unsuitable for other cattle. Crossed with domestic cattle, hybrids give twice the yield of milk.

There were 1.34m. ha. of arable land in 2003 and 67,000 ha. of permanent crops. Number of peasant farms (2003), 255,822.

Principal crops include wheat, barley, corn and vegetables. Fodder crops for livestock are grown, particularly lucerne; also sugar beets, cotton, tobacco and medicinal herbs. Sericulture, fruit, grapes and vegetables are major branches.

Output of main agricultural products (in 1,000 tonnes) in 2003: potatoes, 1,308; wheat, 1,014; sugar beets, 812; corn for grain, 399; barley, 198; tomatoes, 144; carrots, 126; raw cotton, 106; cabbages, 104; onions, 104; cucumbers, 50. Livestock products, 2003, in 1,000 tonnes: beef and veal, 94; mutton and goat meat, 44; milk, 1,192; eggs, 268m. units.

Forestry

In 2010 forests covered 954,000 ha., or 5% of the land area. Timber production in 2011 was 46,000 cu. metres.

Fisheries

The catch in 2010 was 27 tonnes, entirely from freshwater fishing.

INDUSTRY

Industrial enterprises include food, timber, textile, engineering, metallurgical, oil and mining. There are also sugar refineries, tanneries, cotton and wool-cleansing works, flour-mills and a tobacco factory. In 2006 industry accounted for 20.1% of GDP, with manufacturing contributing 12.9%. In 2003 output was valued at 48,940.1m. soms at current prices.

Production, 2003: cement, 757,300 tonnes; carpets, 13.4m. sq. metres; cotton woven fabrics, 1m. sq. metres; footwear, 238,000 pairs.

Labour

The labour force in 2013 was 2,677,000 (2,172,000 in 2003). 70.9% of the population aged 15–64 was economically active in 2013. In the same year 8.3% of the population was unemployed.

Kyrgyzstan had 16,000 people living in slavery according to the Walk Free Foundation's 2013 Global Slavery Index.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

Imports (c.i.f.) were valued at US$4,072m. in 2008 and exports (f.o.b.) at US$1,618m.

In 2008 main import sources (in US$1m.) were: Russia (1,492); China (728); Kazakhstan (377). Main export markets in 2008 (in US$1m.) were: Switzerland (445); Russia (186); Uzbekistan (167).

Principal imports in 2008 (in US$1m.) were: machinery and transport equipment (646); manufactured goods (514); food (401). Principal exports in 2008 (in US$1m.) were: gold (464); articles of apparel and clothing accessories (99); non-metallic mineral manufactures (90).

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

There were 34,000 km of roads in 2007. Passenger cars in use in 2007 numbered 229,700 (44 per 1,000 inhabitants). There were 1,252 road accident fatalities in 2007.

Rail

In the north a railway runs from Lugovaya through Bishkek to Rybachi on Lake Issyk-Kul. Towns in the southern valleys are linked by short lines with the Ursatyevskaya–Andizhan railway in Uzbekistan. Total length of railway, 2011, 417 km. Passenger-km travelled in 2011 came to 83m. and freight tonne-km to 798m.

Civil Aviation

There is an international airport at Bishkek (Manas). The national carrier is Air Kyrgyzstan. In 2003 Bishkek handled 217,576 passengers (112,487 on international flights) and 1,978 tonnes of freight. In 2003 scheduled airline traffic of Kyrgyzstan-based carriers flew 6m. km, carrying 206,000 passengers (103,000 on international flights).

Telecommunications

In 2010 there were 489,100 landline telephone subscriptions (equivalent to 91.7 per 1,000 inhabitants) and 5,275,500 mobile phone subscriptions (or 989.0 per 1,000 inhabitants). Fixed internet subscriptions totalled 68,900 in 2010 (12.9 per 1,000 inhabitants).

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The population in penal institutions in Jan. 2012 was 9,828 (181 per 100,000 of national population). The new constitution that came into force in Jan. 2007 abolished the death penalty. In 2015 the World Justice Project Rule of Law Index, which provides data on how the rule of law is experienced by the general public across eight categories, ranked Kyrgyzstan 84th of 102 countries for criminal justice and 77th for civil justice.

Education

In 2008–09 there were 72,000 children in pre-primary education (3,000 teaching staff), 392,000 pupils in primary education (16,000 teaching staff), an estimated 679,000 pupils in secondary education (51,000 teaching staff) and 17,000 university level lecturers for 294,000 students. There were 49 higher educational institutions and 75 secondary professional education establishments in 2004–05. Kyrgyz University had 20,855 students in 2004–05. Adult literacy was 99.2% in 2009.

In 2005 public expenditure on education came to 4.9% of GDP.

Health

In 2006 there were 12,710 physicians, 1,017 dentists and 30,824 nurses and midwives. In 2003 there were 151 hospitals.

Welfare

In Dec. 2007 there were 529,000 pensioners.

RELIGION

In 2010 there were an estimated 4.69m. Muslims (mainly Sunnis) and 610,000 Christians (mainly Orthodox) according to the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life. There were 1,784 mosques, 359 Christian congregations, one synagogue and one Buddhist temple in 2008.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

There are two sites in Kyrgyzstan that appear on the UNESCO World Heritage List. Sulaiman-Too Sacred Mountain in the Fergana Valley was inscribed in 2009. Situated at the crossroads of important routes on the Central Asian Silk Roads system, Sulaiman-Too is the site of numerous ancient places of worship and caves with petroglyphs. Shared with China and Kazakhstan, Silk Roads: the Routes Network of Chang'an–Tianshan Corridor (2014) is a 5,000 km section of the extensive Silk Roads network stretching from Chang'an/Luoyang in China through the northeast of present-day Kyrgyzstan to the Zhetysu region in what is now Kazakhstan.

Press

There were three national daily newspapers in 2008, with a combined circulation of 40,000.

Tourism

In 2010 there were 1,316,000 non-resident tourists, down from 2,147,000 in 2009. This was as a consequence of the political upheaval in April 2010 and the ethnic conflict that ensued.

LAOS

elephants'). The kingdom encompassed a wide area either side of the Mekong River, with its capital at Luang Prabang.

In the mid-16th century King Suya Setthathirat transferred the capital to Viang Chan (Vientiane), which boosted trade. Under Suriya Vongsa's 57-year reign the Lan Xang reached its zenith. Viang Chan developed into a centre of Buddhist learning, while trade links were established with Europe through the Dutch East India Company. However, the kingdom's influence waned in the 18th century as divisions emerged in Luang Prabang and Champassak, while Siam—led by Gen. Taksin—became increasingly powerful. By 1779 all three Lao kingdoms had surrendered to Siamese armies and came under Bangkok's control.

The Lao frequently rebelled against Siamese dominance, most notably under King Anouvong in 1827–28. Eventually captured and imprisoned in Bangkok, he nevertheless became a national hero. Siamese rule was reinstated but by the 1880s it was being undermined by French expansion in the region. In 1863 France had established a protectorate in Cambodia and in 1893 French gunboats threatened Bangkok, eventually gaining control of Lao territories to the east of the Mekong. Vientiane was reinstated as the administrative centre, although real power lay in Hanoi, the capital of French Indochina. Investment in infrastructure and institutions was greatest in Vietnam and Cambodia while Laos remained a relative backwater.

In 1945, after French authority had been suppressed by the Japanese, an independence movement known as Lao Issara (Free Laos) set up a government. However, it collapsed the following year with the return of French rule. Under a new constitution of 1947 Laos became a constitutional monarchy under the Luang Prabang dynasty and in 1949 became an independent sovereign state within the French Union.

An almost continuous state of war began in 1953 between the Royal Lao Government, supported by US bombing campaigns and Thai mercenaries, and the Patriotic Front Pathet Lao, backed by North Vietnamese troops. Peace talks resulted in an agreement on 21 Feb. 1973 providing for the formation of a provisional national unity coalition government and the withdrawal of foreign troops. However, after Communist victories in neighbouring Vietnam and Cambodia in April 1975, the Pathet Lao effectively took over the running of the whole country. On 29 Nov. 1975 King Savang Vatthana abdicated and the People's Congress proclaimed the People's Democratic Republic of Laos on 2 Dec. 1975.

After decades of isolationism, the authorities responded to the collapse of the Soviet Union by cautiously embracing economic reform and forging international ties. In 1995 the USA ended its aid embargo and two years later Laos joined the Association of South East Asian Nations. In 2005 the USA normalized trade relations with the country and a stock market was opened in Vientiane in 2011. Having applied to join the World Trade Organization in 1997, Laos became a member in Feb. 2013.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Laos is a landlocked country of 236,800 sq. km (91,428 sq. miles) bordered on the north by China, the east by Vietnam, the south by Cambodia and the west by Thailand and Myanmar. Apart from the Mekong River plains along the border of Thailand, the country is mountainous, particularly in the north, and in places densely forested.

The population (2005 census) was 5,621,982 (2,821,431 females); density, 24 per sq. km. 2011 estimate: 6,385,057. In 2011, 34.3% of the population lived in urban areas.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 6.80m.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Neolithic settlements were established in upland areas of present-day Laos by around 2000 BC. Migrants from southern China introduced rice cultivation and trade in iron ore and manufactured goods. Thousands of large stone vessels containing ceramics and burial goods on the Xieng Khoung plateau in central Laos are testament to the society's wealth and sophistication. From around 300 BC the Hindu-influenced Funan Kingdom held sway across parts of southern and central Laos, as well as much of present-day Cambodia. Trading links with India, China and the Middle East developed and strengthened under the Funan.

During the sixth century AD a rival kingdom, Chenla, rose in southern Laos (modern Champassak province). Over the next 300 years its influence spread across Cambodia and northern Thailand. The colonization of Cambodia's coastal regions in the eighth century by Javanese mariners forced Khmer-speaking clans inland, including to southern and central Laos. The crowning of Jayavarman II as a deva-rajā (god-king) in AD 802 heralded a long period of regional Khmer domination centred on Angkor. Tai peoples originating in southern China settled in growing numbers in northern Laos from the ninth century. Several independent city states were united in the mid-14th century by Chao Fa Ngum, founder of Lan Xang ('land of a million

There are 16 provinces and one prefecture. Administrative centres and populations (2011 estimates) are as follows:

CURRENT LEADERS

Bounnhang Vorachit

Position

President

Introduction

Bounnhang Vorachit became president on 20 April 2016. He had earlier been appointed general secretary of the dominant People’s Revolutionary Party of Laos (PPPL) in Jan. 2016, having previously served as prime minister and vice president. Bounnhang’s election to the presidency by a National Assembly vote was widely interpreted as a continuation of the political status quo.

Early Life

Bounnhang Vorachit was born on 15 Aug. 1937 in the district of Thapangthong, in the southern province of Savannakhet. He studied economics and politics in Vietnam before joining the revolutionary communist movement in Laos.

He served for ten years from 1982 as the governor of Savannakhet, and as mayor of Vientiane from 1993 until 1996. He subsequently enjoyed a steady ascent through the ranks of the PPPL, serving as deputy prime minister from 1996 to 2001 and then as prime minister. On 8 June 2006 he was named vice president, a position he held until his promotion to the presidency in 2016.

He was appointed leader of the PPPL at its five-year Congress in Jan. 2016. Then in April the National Assembly elected him as the country’s new president with more than two-thirds of votes cast. He leads a 77-member central committee and an 11-person politburo.

Career in Office

Speaking at his inauguration, he pledged to pursue ‘peaceful international policies, unity, friendship and co-operation’. He took charge of an economy enjoying strong growth on the back of heavy Chinese investment, although a visit by Bounnhang to Vietnam suggested that he intends to pursue a balance between Laos’ two main traditional allies. Among his first tasks as president was to manage Laos' chairmanship of the Association of South East Asian Nations (ASEAN).

DEFENCE

Military service is compulsory for a minimum of 18 months. Defence expenditure in 2013 totalled US$21m. (US$3 per capita), representing 0.2% of GDP.

Army

There are four military regions. Strength (2011) about 25,600. In addition there are local defence forces totalling over 100,000.

Navy

There is an Army Marine Section of about 600 personnel (2011).

Air Force

There are no combat-capable aircraft or armed helicopters. Personnel strength, 3,500 in 2011.

ECONOMY

In 2009 agriculture accounted for 35.2% of GDP, industry 25.5% and services 39.3%.

Overview

The economy grew by an average of 7% per year from 2008 to 2012, boosted by a programme of decentralization and the expansion of private enterprise in the single-party communist state. The economy is dominated by rice cultivation, with the agricultural sector responsible for 30% of GDP and 75% of employment.

Infrastructure is basic but improving, although telecommunications provision remains notably weak. Tourism grew by 17% between 2005 and 2012, spurred by increased visitor numbers from the booming economies of China and Thailand. Landlocked Laos hopes to develop a role as a link between its two wealthiest neighbours. Low labour costs and a young population make it a potential source of cheap labour for China and Thailand's manufacturing sectors.

The government aims to increase foreign direct investment, which stood at 3.2% of GDP in 2011. With the hydro-electric, gold and copper industries all ripe for foreign investment, the World Bank has declared Laos' goal of graduating from the UN Development Programme's list of least-developed countries by 2020 as achievable.

Currency

The unit of currency is the kip (LAK). Inflation was 128.4% in 1999 but has since fallen steeply and was 0.0% in 2009. It was 6.4% in 2013 and 5.5% in 2014. Foreign exchange reserves were US$199m. in March 2005 and gold reserves were 117,000 troy oz. Total money supply was 1,364.1bn. kip in Feb. 2005.

Budget

The fiscal year begins on 1 Oct. Revenues in 2008–09 were 8,065bn. kip (tax revenue, 78.6%) and expenditures 9,783bn. kip (current expenditure, 58.3%).

VAT is 10%.

Performance

Real GDP growth was 7.9% in 2012, 8.0% in 2013 and 7.4% in 2014. Total GDP in 2014 was US$12.0bn.

Banking and Finance

The central bank and bank of issue is the State Bank (Governor, Somphao Phaysith). In Dec. 2010 there were four state-owned commercial banks, nine private banks, two joint venture banks and 11 branches of foreign banks; assets totalled 27,897bn. kip. External debt was US$5,559m. in 2010, representing 79.0% of GNI.

A stock exchange opened in Vientiane in Jan. 2011.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

In 2011 carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy were the equivalent of 0.2 tonnes per capita.

Electricity

Total installed capacity in 2011 was 2.8m. kW of which around 2.6m. kW was hydro-electric. In 2011 production was 3,802m. kWh (about 87% hydro-electric). Consumption per capita in 2011 was an estimated 388 kWh; approximately 2,020 kWh were exported.

Minerals

Production in 2009 (in tonnes): gypsum (estimate), 775,000; lignite (2010), 502,000; coal (2010), 212,000; refined copper (estimate), 68,000; salt (estimate), 35,000.

Agriculture

In 2002, 76.1% of the economically active population were engaged in agriculture. There were an estimated 920,000 ha. of arable land in 2002 and 81,000 ha. of permanent crop land. The chief products (2002 estimates in 1,000 tonnes) are: rice, 2,416; sugarcane, 222; sweet potatoes, 194; maize, 124; melons and watermelons, 116; cassava, 83; bananas, 53; pineapples, 36; potatoes, 35; coffee, 32; oranges, 29; tobacco, 27.

Livestock (2003 estimates): pigs, 1.65m.; cattle, 1.20m.; buffaloes, 1.08m.; chickens, 20m.

Livestock products (2003 estimates, in 1,000 tonnes): pork and pork products, 36; beef and veal, 22; poultry, 18; milk, 6; eggs, 13.

Forestry

Forests covered 15.75m. ha. in 2010, or 68% of the land area. They produce valuable woods such as teak. Timber production, 2011, 6.79m. cu. metres.

Fisheries

The catch in 2010 was 30,900 tonnes, entirely from inland waters.

INDUSTRY

Production in 2002: cement, 201,000 tonnes; iron bars, 13,000 tonnes; detergent, 650 tonnes; nails, 650 tonnes; corrugated iron, 2.8m. sheets; plywood, 2.1m. sheets; mineral water, 235m. litres; beer, 60.49m. litres; soft drinks, 13.15m. litres; oxygen, 21,500 cylinders; cigarettes, 38.3m. packets; lumber, 155,000 cu. metres.

Labour

The labour force in 2013 was 3,297,000 (2,569,000 in 2003). 80.6% of the population aged 15–64 was economically active in 2013. In the same year 1.3% of the population was unemployed.

Laos had 50,000 people living in slavery according to the Walk Free Foundation's 2013 Global Slavery Index.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Since 1988 foreign companies have been permitted to participate in Lao enterprises.

Imports and Exports

Merchandise imports were US$3,055m. in 2012 and exports US$2,071m. Leading imports are consumer goods, food, fuel, machinery and equipment, and vehicles and spare parts. Leading exports are coffee and other agricultural products, copper, electricity, garments, gold, rattan, tin, and wood and wood products. The main import suppliers are Thailand, China, Vietnam and South Korea; the leading export markets are Thailand, China, Vietnam and Japan.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

In 2006 there were 29,811 km of roads, of which 13.5% were paved. In 2007 there were 12,800 passenger cars (two per 1,000 inhabitants), 109,000 lorries and vans, 6,400 buses and coaches, and 506,500 motorcycles and mopeds. There were 5,198 traffic accidents with 608 fatalities in 2006. A bridge over the River Mekong, providing an important north-south link, was opened in 1994.

Rail

A 3.5-km stretch of railway from Nongkhai, on the Thai bank of the Mekong River, across the Thai-Lao Friendship Bridge to Thanaleng in Laos was opened in 2009.

Civil Aviation

There are three international airports at Vientiane (Wattay), Pakse and Luang Prabang. The national carrier is Lao Airlines, which in 2005 operated domestic services and international flights to Bangkok, Chiang Mai, Hanoi, Ho Chi Minh City, Kunming, Phnom Penh and Siem Reap (Cambodia). In 2006 scheduled airline traffic of Laos-based carriers flew 4m. km, carrying 327,000 passengers (81,000 on international flights).

Shipping

The River Mekong and its tributaries are an important means of transport. In Jan. 2008 there were two ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 3,000 GT.

Telecommunications

In 2011 there were 107,600 landline telephone subscriptions (equivalent to 17.1 per 1,000 inhabitants) and 5,480,900 mobile phone subscriptions (or 871.6 per 1,000 inhabitants). In 2011, 9.0% of the population were internet users. In March 2012 there were 156,000 Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

Criminal legislation of 1990 established a system of courts and a prosecutor's office. Polygamy became an offence.

Education

In 2007 there were 891,807 pupils in primary schools with 29,604 teaching staff, and 403,833 pupils and 17,110 teaching staff at secondary level.

There are eight teacher training institutes (four teacher training colleges and four teacher training schools) and one college of Pali. In June 1995 the National University of Laos (NUOL) was established by merging nine existing higher education institutes and a centre of agriculture. NUOL comprises faculties in agriculture, pedagogy, political science, economics and management, forestry, engineering and architecture, medical science, humanities and social science, science, and literature. In 2007 there were 75,003 students in higher education and 3,030 academic staff.

Adult literacy was 72.7% in 2005 (82.5% among males and 63.2% among females).

In 2007 public expenditure on education came to 3.6% of GNI and 15.8% of total government spending.

Health

In 2003 there were 24 hospitals (with 2,711 beds), 125 district-level hospitals and 662 primary health care centres. There were 1,283 physicians in 2003 plus 83 dentists and 5,291 nurses. According to a joint World Health Organization/UNICEF report published in 2015, 76–90% of the population use improved drinking water sources.

RELIGION

In 2010 there were an estimated 4.1m. Buddhists and 1.9m. folk religionists according to the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life. There is also a small Christian minority.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

Laos has two sites on the UNESCO World Heritage List: the Town of Luang Prabang (inscribed on the list in 1995), a unique blend of Lao and European colonial architecture; and Vat Phou and Associated Ancient Settlements within the Champasak Cultural Landscape (2001), including a Khmer era Hindu temple complex.

Press

In 2008 there were six paid-for national dailies with a combined circulation of 25,000.

Tourism

There were 2,140,000 non-resident tourists in 2012 (up from 1,142,000 in 2007); revenue from tourism amounted to US$461m.

Festivals

The national day is celebrated on 2 Dec. The Boun Bang Fai (Rocket Festival) takes place at the beginning of the rainy season in May and is thought to have originated in the pre-Buddhist fertility rites and ceremonies to induce the coming of the rains. It is celebrated with parades, songs and dances and homemade bottle rockets and also coincides with the Visakha Puja festival that commemorates the life of Buddha.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

The name Latvia derives from latvis, a 'forest clearer'. Human inhabitation dates from around 9000 BC and the Balts (or proto-Balts) probably arrived around 2000 BC. In addition to the Finnic predecessors of the Estonians and Livs, four Baltic tribal groups emerged during the Iron Age: the Couronians (Kurši), Selonians (Sēļi), Semigallians (Zemgaļi) and Latgallians (Latgaļi). Linguistic evidence points to the habitation of central Latvia by Latgallians and Lithuanians while coastal areas were populated by Couronians, Semigallians, Selonians and Prussians. The north of the country, occupied mainly by Finnic Livs, was separated by sparsely inhabited areas, which accounts for the lack of cultural mixing between the ethnic groupings.

Scandinavian settlements were established after AD 650, disappearing abruptly around 850. In the 10th century the Baltic tribes came under attack from Varangians (Swedish Vikings), attracted in part by amber which was traded up the Daugava River to Russia and south to Byzantium. Slavic incursions from the east were hampered by primeval forest and marshes.

The region was transformed by German colonization in the 13th century. The Archbishop of Bremen ordered the Christian conquest of the Eastern Baltic sending his nephew Albert, who founded Riga in 1201 and became its bishop. He also created the Sword Brothers (or Livonian Order), a small military order that carved out a feudal state ruled mainly by German aristocracy. It subdued Livonia (southern Estonia and northeastern Latvia), Courland and Zemgale, forming the Livonian Confederation. In 1237 the weakened Sword Brothers were incorporated as an autonomous order into the Order of the Teutonic Knights, which completed the conquest of modern-day Latvia. Riga joined the Hanseatic League in 1282.

The Teutonic Knights were defeated in 1410 at the Battle of Grünwald (Tannenberg) by a Polish-Lithuanian army. Russian Tsar Ivan IV invaded in 1558 in an attempt to gain access to the Baltic Sea. The Livonian War ended with the disbandment of the Livonian Order and the partition of Livonia in 1561. The north went to Lithuania, while Courland became a Lithuanian fief. During the early 17th century Latvia was a theatre of war between Sweden and the Commonwealth of Lithuania-Poland. In 1605 the small hussar army of Jan Karol Chodkiewicz destroyed a much larger Swedish force at the Battle of Kircholm (Salaspils), near Riga. However, Sweden had taken control of Livonia by 1621 and its empire in the Baltic did not end until the signing of the Treaty of Nystad in 1721. The Livonian territory of Vidzeme passed to Russia which acquired Latgale (Latgallia) in 1772 from Poland, and Courland in 1795.

The German landowners remained within the Russian Empire, bolstered by unification with other Germans in the Baltic. The abolition of serfdom in 1817 created new tensions between the Latvian and German communities, though there were German elements who supported land reform which duly arrived in 1847. Nascent Latvian nationalism in the 1860s prompted the Russian authorities to centralize power away from the German aristocracy. Tensions between the communities erupted during the 1905 Russian Revolution when attacks on hundreds of German settlements precipitated a wave of German emigration.

After the German occupation of 1915 demands for the creation of a Latvian state grew until the 1917 Russian Revolution. Soviet rule was proclaimed in Dec. 1917 but was overthrown when the Germans reinvaded in Feb. 1918, with Russia ceding its claims on Latvia by the Treaty of Brest-Litovsk. After the armistice, Latvia declared independence but the Soviets reasserted power following the German withdrawal in Dec. 1918. The Soviets were again overthrown between May-Dec. 1919 by combined British naval and German military forces and a democratic government was established.

In the wake of economic depression, the democratic regime fell in a May 1934 coup when Prime Minister Kārlis Ulmanis dissolved parliament and, in 1936, merged his office with that of the president. When the secret protocol of the Soviet-German agreement of 23 Aug. 1939 assigned Latvia to the Soviet sphere of interest, most of the ancient Baltic German community emigrated. Formal annexation came in 1940 and over 15,000 Latvians were deported to Siberia. The German occupation of 1941-45 caused the deaths of over 90,000 Latvians, mostly Jews. Violent resistance to Soviet reoccupation led to the deportation of another 43,000 Latvians to Siberia and substantial Soviet immigration followed.

The Latvian Supreme Soviet declared sovereignty in July 1989 and on 4 May 1990, having declared the 1940 Soviet occupation illegal, re-established the 1922 constitution. This was annulled by Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev, sparking violent protest and police crackdowns. Following a referendum, independence was declared on 21 Aug. 1991 and recognized in Sept. by the USSR. With independence, issues of ethnic identity came to the fore, with the large Russian minority initially disadvantaged by new citizenship and language laws (later repealed). President Vaira Vīķe-Freiberga was elected as the former Communist bloc's first female president in 1999. Latvia became a member of NATO and the European Union in 2004.

From March-Dec. 2004 Indulis Emsis was prime minister, becoming the EU's first Green Party premier. Latvia suffered badly during the global economic crisis, prompting popular protests and an IMF bailout in Dec. 2008. The government imposed swingeing austerity measures to stabilize the economy and in June 2013 its application to join the eurozone in Jan. 2014 was accepted by the European Commission.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Latvia is situated in northeastern Europe. It is bordered by Estonia on the north and by Lithuania on the southwest, while on the east there is a frontier with the Russian Federation and to the southeast with Belarus. Territory, 64,559 sq. km (larger than Denmark, the Netherlands, Belgium and Switzerland), including 2,402 sq. km of inland waters. Population (2011 census), 2,070,371; density, 32.1 per sq. km. In Jan. 2014 the population was estimated at 2,001,468.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 1.97m.

In 2010, 67.7% of the population were urban. Major ethnic groups in 2011: Latvians 62.1%, Russians 26.9%, Belarusians 3.3%, Ukrainians 2.2%, Poles 2.2%, Lithuanians 1.2%, Jews 0.3%, Roma 0.3%, Germans 0.1%, Estonians 0.1%.

There are 110 municipalities (novadi) and nine republican cities (republikas pilsētas). The capital is Riga (658,640, or nearly a third of the country's total population, at the 2011 census); other principal towns, with 2011 populations, are Daugavpils (93,312), Liepāja (76,731), Jelgava (59,511), Jurmala (50,840) and Ventspils (38,750).

The official language is Latvian. Latgalian is also spoken.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2010: births, 19,219 (rate of 8.6 per 1,000 population); deaths, 30,040 (13.4 per 1,000 population); marriages, 9,290 (4.1 per 1,000 population); divorces, 4,930 (2.2 per 1,000 population); infant mortality, 5.7 per 1,000 live births (2010). In 2007 life expectancy was 67.1 years for males but 77.1 years for females. In 2005 the most popular age range for marrying was 25–29 for males and 20–24 for females. The annual population growth rate in the period 2000–05 was –0.6%. Fertility rate, 2011, 1.2 births per woman (the joint lowest rate in the world). The suicide rate was 22.9 per 100,000 population in 2009 (rate among males, 40.0). In 2005 there were 1,886 immigrants and 2,450 emigrants.

CLIMATE

Owing to the influence of maritime factors, the climate is relatively temperate but changeable. Average temperatures in Jan. range from –2.8°C in the western coastal town of Liepāja to –6.6°C in the inland town of Daugavpils. The average summer temperature is 20°C.

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

The Declaration of the Renewal of the Independence of the Republic of Latvia dated 4 May 1990, and the 21 Aug. 1991 declaration re-establishing de facto independence, proclaimed the authority of the Constitution (Satversme). The Constitution was fully re-instituted as of 6 July 1993, when the fifth Parliament (Saeima) was elected.

The head of state in Latvia is the President, elected by parliament for a period of four years and for a maximum of two terms.

The highest legislative body is the one-chamber parliament comprised of 100 deputies and elected in direct, proportional elections by citizens 18 years of age and over. Deputies serve for four years and parties must receive at least 5% of the national vote to gain seats in parliament.

In a referendum on 3 Oct. 1998, 53% of votes cast were in favour of liberalizing laws on citizenship, which would simplify the naturalization of the Russian-speakers who make up nearly a third of the total population and who were not granted automatic citizenship when Latvia regained its independence from the former Soviet Union in 1991. Around half of the 650,000 ethnic Russians in Latvia have not taken out Latvian citizenship. Ethnic Russians who are not Latvian citizens do not have the right to vote. A seven-member Constitutional Court was established in 1996 with powers to invalidate legislation not in conformity with the constitution. Its members are appointed by parliament for ten-year terms.

Executive power is held by the Cabinet of Ministers.

CURRENT LEADERS

Raimonds Vējonis

Position

President

Introduction

Raimonds Vējonis first entered parliament in 2002 and served as minister of environment and of defence before becoming president on 8 July 2015.

Early Life

Vējonis was born on 15 June 1966 in the Pskov Oblast of Russia. He developed an early interest in environmentalism following an accident on a collective farm that left his grandfather blinded by chemicals. Having graduated in biology from the University of Latvia in 1989, he went on to earn a master's degree in environmental engineering from the same university in 1995 after teaching for a time in the town of Madona. An early recruit to the Latvian Green Party, he was a member of the Madona city council from 1990–93. In 1996 he became director of the Greater Riga regional environmental board, a position he kept until 2002.

Career in Office

From Nov. 2002 Vējonis became engaged in frontline politics as he was appointed minister of environmental protection and regional development in the government of the then premier Einars Repše. The following year he was named minister of the environment in a cabinet reorganization, before reverting to the previous title in 2011. After a spell out of government, he was named minister of defence in 2014 by then prime minister Laimdota Straujuma. In this post he adopted a tougher policy stance towards Russia in the face of perceived aggression from Moscow.

Having been nominated as a presidential candidate by parliament, Vējonis succeeded Andris Bērziņš following his election on 3 June 2015. He is the first European Union head of state to come from a 'green' party. He has emphasized the need for reinforcing national security and strengthening Latvia's armed forces while maintaining the country's political neutrality on the international stage. He has also acknowledged the difficulty of improving relations with Russia while Moscow maintains a hostile regional stance towards neighbouring Ukraine. In Dec. 2015 Vējonis strongly advocated the need to secure an agreement at the United Nations climate change summit in Paris, which concluded with a landmark agreement on limiting the increase in global average temperature.

Māris Kučinskis

Position

Prime Minister

Introduction

Māris Kučinskis, leader of the Union of Greens and Farmers (ZZS), became prime minister in Feb. 2016.

Early Life

Born on 28 Nov. 1961, Kučinskis studied economics at the University of Latvia from 1983–88. He worked in accountancy and finance for the city of Valmiera from 1980, and later served as city council chairman from 1996–97 and again from 1998–2003. From 1998–2000 he was also chairman of Valmiera district council.

He entered parliament in 2003 for the People's Party, serving as minister for regional development and local government from 2004–06. Re-elected in 2006, he changed party allegiance in 2010 to represent the For a Good Latvia grouping.

Having left parliament in 2011, he returned in 2014 representing the ZZS, becoming part of a governing coalition with the Unity party and the National Alliance. From Nov. 2014 to Feb. 2016 he was chairman of the Sustainable Development Commission. Following the resignation in Dec. 2015 of Prime Minister Laimdota Straujuma, leader of the Unity party, and the refusal of the National Alliance to back her proposed successor, Kučinskis was appointed prime minister in Feb. 2016 and approved by parliament.

Career in Office

Kučinskis took office on 11 Feb. 2016 at the head of a three-party coalition government, intending to continue an emphasis on domestic politics and the pursuit of economic growth to halt Latvia's demographic decline. He has also faced the challenge of responding to the European Union's refugee crisis.

DEFENCE

The National Armed Forces (NAF) were created in 1994 and comprise the Land Forces, which are based on an infantry brigade and the National Guard, the Naval Forces, the Air Forces, the Logistic Command, the Training Doctrine Command and the National Defence Academy. Compulsory military service was abolished in Jan. 2007.

In 2013 defence expenditure totalled US$300m. (US$138 per capita), representing 1.0% of GDP.

Army

The Land Forces were 1,137 strong in 2011. There is a National Guard reserve numbering 10,666 in 2011.

Navy

The Naval Forces, based at Riga and Liepāja, numbered 485 in 2011 (including a Coast Guard). Latvia, Estonia and Lithuania have established a joint naval unit 'BALTRON' (Baltic Naval Squadron), with bases at Liepāja, Riga and Ventspils in Latvia, Tallinn in Estonia and Klaipėda in Lithuania.

Air Force

Personnel numbered 284 in 2011. There are no combat-capable aircraft.

INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

Latvia held a referendum on EU membership on 20 Sept. 2003, in which 67.4% of votes cast were in favour of accession, with 32.6% against. It became a member of NATO on 29 March 2004 and the EU on 1 May 2004.

ECONOMY

Services accounted for 76.1% of GDP in 2009, industry 20.6% and agriculture 3.3%.

Overview

With Latvia's transition from communism in the early 1990s, the economy suffered from raw material and energy shortages, the loss of Soviet export markets and weak international competitiveness. After independence, market reforms were introduced including privatization, price liberalization, land reform and the establishment of a local currency and an independent central bank.

After joining the European Union in May 2004, growth accelerated to double-digit figures driven by private sector capital inflows and EU funds. However, by mid-2006 the economy showed signs of overheating, inflation rose and the current account deficit peaked at over 20% of GDP. In 2008 the global financial crisis led to a slowdown in lending driven by the withdrawal of funds from foreign banks. In Dec. that year Latvia accepted a US$9.5bn. IMF-led bailout, causing widespread social turmoil and the resignation of the ruling coalition in Feb. 2009.

A new coalition government agreed a series of spending cuts, including significant reductions in public sector pay and pensions to meet IMF targets to reduce the budget deficit. The economy contracted by nearly 18% in 2009 and unemployment was the highest in the EU at nearly 21%. However, the economy emerged from recession in the first quarter of 2010 and fiscal adjustment measures brought the deficit down from 9.7% in 2009 to 1.5% of GDP by 2014. International reserves meanwhile rose above pre-crisis levels, while wage and price cuts, along with productivity growth, improved competitiveness and reduced external imbalances. Unemployment had also fallen to 11% by 2014. Nonetheless, poverty rates are among the highest in Europe. The overspill effects of the eurozone crisis restricted GDP growth to 2.4% in 2014 and have left the economy vulnerable to further downturns.

Currency

On 1 Jan. 2014 the euro (EUR) replaced the lats (LVL) as the legal currency of Latvia at the irrevocable conversion rate of 0.702804 lats to one euro. Inflation, which reached a high of 109.1% in 1993, was 0.0% in 2013 and 0.7% in 2014. Gold reserves were 249,000 troy oz in July 2005, foreign exchange reserves US$2,076m. and total money supply 1,736m. lats.

Budget

The financial year is the calendar year. Central government revenue totalled 3,783.3m. lats in 2010 (3,916.4m. lats in 2009) and expenditure was 4,537.2m. lats (4,603.3m. lats in 2009). Tax revenue constituted 43.0% of revenues in 2010 and social contributions 28.9%; social benefits accounted for 36.5% of expenditures and subsidies 24.2%. There is a flat income tax rate of 24%.

Latvia's budget deficit in 2014 was 1.5% of GDP (2013, 0.9%; 2012, 0.8%). The required target set by the EU is a budget deficit of no more than 3%.

The standard rate of VAT is 21.0% (reduced rate, 12.0%).

Performance

In 2007 real GDP growth was 9.8%. However, having contracted by 3.2% in 2008 the economy shrank by 14.2% in 2009 and a further 2.9% in 2010. It has since recovered, with growth of 4.2% in 2013 and 2.4% in 2014. Latvia has the lowest GDP per capita of any of the ten countries that joined the EU in May 2004. Total GDP was US$31.3bn. in 2014.

Banking and Finance

The Bank of Latvia both legally and practically is a completely independent institution. Governor of the Bank and Council members are appointed by Parliament for office for six years (present Governor, Ilmārs Rimšēvičs). In 2010 there were 29 banks in Latvia, including nine foreign banks' branches. Latvia's banks have 11 branches abroad. Latvian banks' assets to GDP exceeded 170% at the end of 2010. The banking sector assets constitute almost 90% of Latvia's financial sector assets. Foreign debt was US$39,555m. in 2010, equivalent to 164.3% of GNI.

NASDAQ OMX Riga (formerly Riga Stock Exchange) is the only regulated secondary securities market in Latvia.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

In 2011, 33.1% of energy consumption came from renewables (wind power, solar power, hydro-electric power, tidal power, geothermal energy and biomass), compared to the European Union average of 13.0%. A target of 40% has been set by the EU for 2020.

Environment

Latvia's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2011 were the equivalent of 3.7 tonnes per capita. Latvia's greenhouse gas emissions fell by 120.8% between 1990 and 2012, mainly owing to the decline of polluting industries from the Soviet era.

Electricity

Electricity production in 2011 totalled 6.09bn. kWh. Consumption per capita in 2011 was 3,540 kWh. 47% of electrical power produced in Latvia is generated in hydro-electric power stations. Installed capacity was 2.6m. kW in 2011.

Oil and Gas

Latvia produces virtually no oil and is dependent on imports, although the Latvian Development Agency estimates that there are 733m. bbls of offshore reserves in the Latvian areas of the Baltic Sea. Consumption of oil products was 1,488,000 tonnes in 2010. All Latvia's natural gas supplies are imported from Russia. Consumption in 2010 totalled 620m. cu. metres.

Minerals

Peat deposits extend over 645,000 ha. or about 10% of the total area, and it is estimated that total deposits in Jan. 2012 were 168m. tonnes. Peat output in 2011 (provisional) totalled 1,387,689 tonnes.

Production of other minerals in 2011 (provisional, in 1,000 tonnes): gravel, pebbles, shingle and flint, 5,642; silica and construction sand, 2,338; crushed stone for concrete aggregate, 2,051. Crude dolomite, clays, gypsum and limestone are also produced.

Agriculture

In 2010 there were 1.17m. ha. of arable land and 6,800 ha. of permanent crops (excluding strawberries). Field crops and dairy farming are the chief agricultural occupations. In 2010 there were 83,300 economically active agricultural holdings. 34% of holdings have fewer than 5 ha. of utilized agricultural land. There were 50,000 tractors, 6,500 grain combine harvesters and 1,500 potato combine harvesters in 2010. In 2010, 8.8% of the economically active population were employed in agriculture, forestry and fishing.

Output of crops (in 1,000 tonnes), 2010: wheat, 989; potatoes, 484; barley, 229; rapeseeds, 226; oats, 101; rye, 70; cabbage, 61; carrots, 34; apples, 10. Livestock, 2010: pigs, 390,000; cattle, 380,000; sheep, 77,000; poultry, 4.9m. Livestock products (2010, in 1,000 tonnes): meat, 80; milk, 835; eggs, 45.

Forestry

In 2010 Latvia's total forest area was 3.35m. ha., or 54% of the land area. Growing stock was 633m. cu. metres in 2010 (335m. cu. metres coniferous and 298m. cu. metres broadleaved). Timber production in 2011 was 12.83m. cu. metres.

The share of the forest sector in gross industrial output is between 13 and 15%. Timber and timber products exports account for 37–38% of Latvia's total exports.

To provide the protection of forests there are three forest categories: commercial forests, 70.4%; restricted management forests, 18.6%; protected forests, 11.0%.

Fisheries

In 2010 the total catch was 164,819 tonnes, almost exclusively marine fish. The Latvian fishing fleet numbered 758 vessels of 9,100 gross tonnes in 2011.

INDUSTRY

Industry accounted for 20.6% of GDP in 2009, with manufacturing contributing 9.9%.

Industrial output in 1,000 tonnes: cement (2011 estimate), 1,100; hot-rolled steel products (2012 estimate), 810; crude steel (2011), 568; sawnwood (2013), 3.35m. cu. metres; wood-based panels (2012), 1.01m. cu. metres; plywood (2012), 278,000 cu. metres; beer (2013), 151.3m. litres.

Labour

The total labour force (persons aged 15–74) in 2011 numbered 1,028,200. In 2011 there were 861,600 persons in employment in Latvia. The leading areas of activity were: wholesale and retail trade/repair of motor vehicles and motorcycles, 136,200; manufacturing, 114,400; education, 88,800. In 2011 women constituted 52% of the workforce. In 2011 there was a monthly minimum wage of 200 lats. Average gross monthly salary was 464 lats in 2011. The average gross monthly salary in the public sector in 2011 was 492 lats.

The unemployment rate (persons aged 15–74) in the second quarter of 2012 was 16.1%, one of the highest rates in the EU.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

Imports (f.o.b.) were valued at US$16,782m. in 2013 and exports (f.o.b.) at US$13,317m. The leading imports in 2013 were machinery, mechanical appliances and electrical equipment (18.4%), mineral products (17.2%), chemical and allied industries (9.4%), and base metals and articles of base metal (8.7%). The main exports in 2013 were wood and wood products (15.9%), machinery, mechanical appliances and electrical equipment (15.6%), base metals and articles of base metal (10.5%), and prepared foodstuffs, beverages and tobacco (9.4%). Main import suppliers (2013): Lithuania, 20.4%; Germany, 11.6%; Poland, 9.9%; Russia, 8.4%; Estonia, 8.2%. Main export markets (2013): Lithuania, 17.2%; Estonia, 12.7%; Russia, 11.6%; Germany, 7.4%; Poland, 6.7%.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

In 2014 there were 58,628 km of roads, including 20,150 km of state roads. Road passenger traffic in 2012 totalled 13,886m. passenger-km; freight transport totalled 13,670m. tonne-km in 2014. There were 3,728 road accidents in 2014 resulting in 212 deaths. Passenger cars in 2014 numbered 657,799 (331 per 1,000 inhabitants), in addition to which there were 83,205 lorries and tractors and 4,845 buses.

Rail

In 2014 there were 1,860 km of 1,520 mm gauge route (251 km electrified). In 2014, 57.0m. tonnes of cargo and 19.2m. passengers were carried by rail. The main groups of freight transported are oil and oil products, mineral fertilizers, ferrous metals and ferrous alloys.

Civil Aviation

There is an international airport at Riga. A new national carrier, airBaltic, assumed control of Latavio and Baltic International Airlines in Aug. 1995 and began flying in Oct. 1995. It went on to become eastern Europe's first low-cost airline; in 2012 it carried 3.08m. passengers and operated scheduled services to 55 destinations. It is 99.8% state-owned, with Transaero owning the remaining 0.2%. In 2010 Riga handled 4,663,692 passengers and 12,247 tonnes of freight.

Shipping

There are two major ports. Riga handled 41.1m. tonnes of cargo in 2014 and Ventspils 26.2m. tonnes. There is a smaller port at Liepāja. A total of 65.1m. tonnes were loaded at the three ports in 2014 and 9.1m. tonnes unloaded. In Jan. 2009 there were 28 ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 240,000 GT.

Telecommunications

Telecommunications are conducted by companies in which the government has a 51% stake, under the aegis of the state-controlled Lattelcom. There were 516,300 landline telephone subscriptions in 2011 (equivalent to 230.2 per 1,000 inhabitants) and 2,303,600 mobile phone subscriptions in 2009 (or 1,018.7 per 1,000 inhabitants). There were 684.2 internet users per 1,000 inhabitants in 2010. In 2009 there were 18.6 fixed broadband subscriptions per 100 inhabitants and 8.8 mobile broadband subscriptions per 100 inhabitants. In March 2012 there were 319,000 Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

A new criminal code came into force in 1998. Judges are appointed for life. There is a Supreme Court, regional and district courts and administrative courts. The death penalty was abolished for all crimes in Jan. 2012, having previously been abolished for peacetime offences in 1999. In 2009, 56,748 crimes were reported; 10,855 people were convicted for offences (79 for intentional homicide). In Jan. 2013 there were 6,117 people in penal institutions, giving a prison population rate of 304 per 100,000 population.

Education

Adult literacy rate in 2009 was estimated at 99.8% (99.8% among both males and females). The former Soviet education system was restructured on the UNESCO model. Education begins with two years of compulsory attendance at pre-primary education institutions. From the age of six or seven education is compulsory for nine years in comprehensive schools. This may be followed by three years in secondary school or one to six years in art, technical or vocational schools. In 2011–12 there were 839 schools with 218,442 pupils.

State-financed education is available in Latvian and four national minority languages (Russian, Polish, Ukrainian and Belarusian), although the use of Latvian in the classroom is being increased. A bilingual curriculum had to be implemented by all minority primary schools from the start of the 2002–03 school year. Secondary schools started to implement minority education curricula with an increased Latvian-language component (60% of all teaching) from Sept. 2004. In 2011–12, 158,828 pupils were taught solely in Latvian, 58,087 received instruction in Russian and 1,527 in other minority languages.

In 2011–12 there were 34 state-recognized higher education institutions. Courses at state-financed universities are conducted in Latvian. A number of private educational institutions have languages of instruction other than Latvian.

Public expenditure on education in 2009 came to 5.6% of GDP and accounted for 12.1% of total government expenditure.

Health

At the end of 2010 there were 7,951 physicians and dentists, 10,024 nurses and 408 midwives. There were 67 hospitals in 2010 with a provision of 53 beds per 10,000 persons.

Welfare

The official retirement age was increased from 62 years to 62 years 3 months from 1 Jan. 2014 for both men and women and is being increased gradually each year so that by 2025 it will be 65 years. In 2014 the minimum pension was just over the state social security allowance of €64.03 a month at €70.43. The minimum pension is increased by 1.1% for an insurance period of up to 20 years, by 1.3% for an insurance period of 20 to 30 years, 1.5% for an insurance period of 30 to 40 years and 1.7% for an insurance period of more than 40 years. In Dec. 2013 there were 580,800 pension recipients.

The government runs an unemployment benefit scheme in which the amount awarded is determined by the number of insurance contributions and the length of previous employment.

RELIGION

In order to practise in public, religious organizations must be licensed by the Department of Religious Affairs attached to the Ministry of Justice. New sects are required to demonstrate loyalty to the state and its traditional religions over a three-year period. According to estimates by the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life, 990,000 people (43.8% of the population) had no religious affiliation in 2010. There were some 450,000 Protestants in the same year, 430,000 Catholics and 370,000 Orthodox Christians. In Feb. 2016 the Roman Catholic church had one cardinal.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

Latvia has two sites on the UNESCO World Heritage List: the Historic Centre of Riga (inscribed on the list in 1997), a late-medieval Hanseatic centre; and the Struve Geodetic Arc (2005). The Arc is a chain of survey triangulations spanning from Norway to the Black Sea that helped establish the exact shape and size of the earth and is shared with nine other countries.

Press

Latvia had 12 daily paid-for newspapers in 2014 (six national paid-for dailies and six regional and local paid-for dailies). The leading newspapers in terms of readership in 2014 were Latvijas Avīze and Diena, both of which are in Latvian, and the Russian-language Vesti Segodnya.

Tourism

In 2010 there were 1,373,000 overnight non-resident tourists (1,323,000 in 2009). The main countries of origin of non-resident tourists in 2010 were Russia (189,000), Lithuania (182,000), Sweden (157,000) and Estonia (130,000).

Festivals

There is an annual Riga Opera Festival in June and the city also hosts the Lielais Kristaps National Film Festival in Sept.–Oct. The biggest music festival is Positivus Festival which takes place in July at Salacgrīva. The National Song Festival (held every five years) will next be held in 2018.

LEBANON

inside Israel. Israeli troops eventually withdrew in June, but instead of handing over all their positions to UN Peacekeeping Forces, they installed Israeli-controlled Christian Lebanese militia forces in border areas. In June 1982 Israeli forces once again invaded, this time in massive strength, and swept through the country, eventually laying siege to and bombing Beirut. In Sept. Palestinian forces, together with the PLO leadership, evacuated Beirut. Israeli forces started a withdrawal on 16 Feb. 1985 but it was not until the end of 1990 that the various militias which had held sway in Beirut withdrew. A new Government of National Reconciliation was announced on 24 Dec. 1990. The dissolution of all militias was decreed by the National Assembly in April 1991, but the Shia Muslim militia Hizbollah was allowed to remain active. Following a 17-day Israeli bombardment of Hizbollah positions in April 1996, a US-brokered unsigned 'understanding' of 26 April 1996 guaranteed that Hizbollah guerrillas and Palestinian radical groups would cease attacks on civilians in northern Israel and granted Israel the right to self-defence. Hizbollah maintained the right to resist Israel's occupation of Lebanese soil. In May 2000 Israel completed its withdrawal from south Lebanon, 22 years after the first invasion.

On 14 Feb. 2005 former Prime Minister Rafiq al-Hariri was assassinated in a bomb attack, sparking international condemnation of the murder and mass public protests at the continued presence of Syrian soldiers in the country. Soon afterwards Syria began withdrawing and redeploying its 14,000 troops and intelligence agents from Beirut. By the end of April 2005 all Syrian troops had been withdrawn from Lebanon. In July 2006, after Hizbollah forces in Lebanon had captured two Israeli soldiers, Israel launched a large-scale military campaign against Lebanon with a series of bombing raids, destroying large parts of the civilian infrastructure. More than 1,200 Lebanese, the majority of them civilians, were killed during the conflict. Following the resignation of five Shia Muslim cabinet ministers and the assassination of industry minister Pierre Gemayel in Nov. 2006 there were anti-government demonstrations in Beirut in which over 800,000 protesters—nearly a quarter of the population of Lebanon—demanded the resignation of Prime Minister Fouad Siniora.

In Nov. 2007 Siniora's cabinet assumed presidential powers in the wake of Emile Lahoud's resignation until parliament chose Michel Suleiman to fill the office in May 2008. Suleiman reappointed Siniora as premier. Diplomatic relations were established with Syria in Oct. 2008, the first time since both countries became independent. Following a general election in June 2009, Saad al-Hariri of the pro-Western 14 March Alliance formed a coalition government in Nov. In Jan. 2011 the coalition collapsed, although he agreed to stay on as premier in a caretaker capacity until a new administration could be formed.

In June 2011 Najib Mikati took over as prime minister at the head of a Hizbollah-dominated government. It collapsed in March 2013, with Mikati nominally retaining the premiership until a successor government was formed. Tammam Salam was charged with forming a workable coalition the following month and was eventually able to do so in Feb. 2014. Meanwhile, Lebanon saw 1m. refugees from neighbouring Syria cross the border to escape the civil war.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Lebanon is mountainous, bounded on the north and east by Syria, on the west by the Mediterranean and on the south by Israel. The area is 10,201 sq. km (3,939 sq. miles). The last census was in 1932. The United Nations gave an estimated population for 2012 of 4.92m.; density, 483 per sq. km. In 2011, 87.4% of the population were urban.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

The Ottomans invaded Lebanon, then part of Syria, in 1516–17 and held nominal control until 1918. After 20 years' of French mandatory regime, Lebanon was proclaimed independent on 26 Nov. 1941. In early May 1958 the Muslim opposition to President Chamoun rose in insurrection and for five months the Muslim quarters of Beirut, Tripoli, Sidon and the northern Bekaa were in insurgent hands. On 15 July the US Government landed army and marines who re-established Government authority. Internal problems were exacerbated by the Palestinian problem. An attempt to regulate the activities of Palestinian fighters through the secret Cairo agreement of 1969 was frustrated both by the inability of the Government to enforce its provisions and by an influx of battle-hardened fighters expelled from Jordan in Sept. 1970. From March 1975 Lebanon was beset by civil disorder bringing the economy to a virtual standstill.

By Nov. 1976 large-scale fighting had been brought to an end by the intervention of the Syrian-dominated Arab Deterrent Force. Large areas of the country, however, remained outside governmental control, including West Beirut, which was the scene of frequent conflict between opposing militia groups. In March 1978 there was an Israeli invasion following a Palestinian attack

Around 1.1m. refugees have fled to Lebanon from Syria since the start of the civil war there in 2011. At 209 refugees per 1,000 inhabitants in mid-2015, Lebanon has the highest number of refugees compared to the national population of the host country.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 5.85m.

Beirut (the capital) had an estimated population in 2010 of 2.0m. Other large towns are Tripoli, Zahlé and Saida (Sidon).

The official language is Arabic. French and, increasingly, English are widely spoken in official and commercial circles. Armenian is spoken by a minority group.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2008 estimates: births, 66,000; deaths, 29,000. Estimated rates, 2008 (per 1,000 population): births, 15.7; deaths, 7.0. Infant mortality was 19 per 1,000 live births in 2010; expectation of life (2013), 78.1 years for males and 82.3 for females. Annual population growth rate, 2000–08, 1.3%; fertility rate, 2008, 1.8 births per woman.

CLIMATE

A Mediterranean climate with short, warm winters and long, hot and rainless summers, with high humidity in coastal areas. Rainfall is largely confined to the winter months and can be torrential, with snow on high ground. Beirut, Jan. 55°F (13°C), July 81°F (27°C). Annual rainfall 35.7" (893 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

The first Constitution was established under the French Mandate on 23 May 1926. It has since been amended in 1927, 1929, 1943 (twice), 1947 and 1990. It is based on a separation of powers, with a President, a single-chamber National Assembly elected by universal suffrage at age 21 in 12 electoral constituencies, and an independent judiciary. The President serves a six-year term, although in both 1995 and 2004 the terms of office of the then Presidents were extended from six to nine years through 'exceptional' constitutional amendments. The executive consists of the President and a Prime Minister and Cabinet appointed after consultation between the President and the National Assembly. The system is adapted to the communal balance on which Lebanese political life depends by an electoral law which allocates deputies according to the religious distribution of the population, and by a series of constitutional conventions. This means that the President is always a Maronite Christian, the Prime Minister a Sunni Muslim and the Speaker of the Assembly a Shia Muslim. There is no party system. In Aug. 1990, and again in July 1992, the National Assembly voted to increase its membership, and now has 128 deputies with equal numbers of Christians and Muslims (although Muslims make up a clear majority of the population).

On 21 Sept. 1990 President Haraoui established the Second Republic by signing constitutional amendments which had been negotiated at Taif (Saudi Arabia) in Oct. 1989. These institute an executive collegium between the President, Prime Minister and Speaker, and remove from the President the right to recall the Prime Minister, dissolve the Assembly and vote in the Council of Ministers.

RECENT ELECTIONS

Elections were held on 7 June 2009. The ruling anti-Syrian 14 March Alliance—including the Movement of the Future, the Progressive Socialist Party, the Lebanese Forces, the Kataeb Party and their allies—won 71 of 128 seats; Hizbollah, Amal and their allies, 29 seats; and the Free Patriotic Movement and its allies, 28.

Indirect presidential elections were held in April 2014. A two-thirds majority must be achieved in order for a president to be elected. As no candidate managed this in the first round of voting on 23 April or in four more rounds before the end of President Michel Suleiman's term on 25 May 2014, a sixth round was scheduled for 9 June. As at March 2016 a total of 37 rounds had failed to produce a winner.

CURRENT GOVERNMENT

In March 2016 the government comprised:

Prime Minister and Acting President: Tammam Salam; b. 1945 (took office as prime minister on 15 Feb. 2014 and as acting president on 25 May 2014).

Tammam Salam

Position

Prime Minister and Acting President

Introduction

Tammam Salam was nominated as prime minister-designate on 6 April 2013 by President Michel Suleiman following Najib Mikati's resignation two weeks earlier. Considered a centrist, Salam received support for his premiership from parties across the political spectrum, including Hizbollah. However, the process of forming a cabinet with broad political appeal took until Feb. 2014.

Early Life

Salam was born in Beirut on 13 May 1945 to a prominent Sunni Muslim family. His father, Saeb, was prime minister on four separate occasions between 1952 and 1973 and his grandfather, Salim Ali Salam, was an official in the Ottoman Empire and later in the French colonial mandate. Salam was educated at Brummana High School and Haigazian University in Beirut. He later graduated with a degree in economics and management after studying in the United Kingdom.

In 1974 Salam founded Ruwwad Al Islah in Beirut, a movement advocating political reform, but disbanded it at the start of the civil war as he distanced himself from militant activities. In 1978 he joined the board of Makassed, an Islamic philanthropic organization with strong ties to the Salam family, and in 1982 took over its presidency from his father. He stayed in the role until 2000.

He first stood for election to parliament in 1992 but withdrew his candidacy in protest at Syrian dominance of Lebanese politics. He stood again in 1996 with the support of Prime Minister Rafiq al-Hariri and was elected to represent a Beirut constituency. By 2000 the alliance between al-Hariri and Salam had collapsed and Salam failed to win re-election. On 11 July 2008 Salam was appointed minister of culture in Fouad Siniora's government and returned to parliament at the 2009 election.

Following Mikati's resignation as premier on 23 March 2013, the 14 March Alliance nominated Salam to replace him. He won 124 of a possible 128 votes from parliament and on 6 April 2013 President Suleiman tasked him with forming a government. However, it was not until 15 Feb. 2014 that he was sworn into office.

Career in Office

Having spent almost a year negotiating the composition of his government, Salam's main task was to organize legislative elections that were initially scheduled for Nov. 2014. However, parliament's term was subsequently extended to 2017, given its deadlock over electing a new state president, in whose place Salam had assumed acting responsibilities on 25 May 2014. Salam has since been confronted by political rivalries, serious sectarian tensions, economic problems and a refugee crisis caused by the continuing conflict in neighbouring Syria. Inconclusive efforts to elect a new president have also continued for a record period extending into 2016.

DEFENCE

There were 14,000 Syrian troops in the country in early 2005, but in March 2005 Lebanon and Syria agreed that the troops would be redeployed to the Bekaa Valley in the east of the country. They were subsequently all withdrawn from Lebanon. The United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL), created in 1978, had a strength of 1,990 in June 2006. Following the conflict between Israel and Lebanon of July–Aug. 2006 the Security Council established UNIFIL II, a more powerful peacekeeping force deployed to maintain the ceasefire, support the Lebanese armed forces and aid humanitarian efforts. In June 2015 UNIFIL II comprised 10,410 uniformed personnel from 37 countries.

Conscription was reduced from 12 months to six in 2005, and was finally abolished in Feb. 2007.

Defence expenditure in 2012 totalled US$1,735m. (US$419 per capita), representing 4.2% of GDP.

Army

The strength of the Army was 57,000 in 2011 and includes a Presidential Guard and five special forces regiments. There is an internal security force, run by the Ministry of the Interior, some 20,000 strong.

Navy

A force of 1,100 personnel (2011) operate 11 patrol and coastal combatants. An additional seven inshore patrol craft are operated by customs.

Air Force

The Air Force had (2011) 1,000 personnel. Equipment in 2011 included four fighter aircraft and nine multi-role helicopters.

INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

A Treaty of Brotherhood, Co-operation and Co-ordination with Syria of May 1991 provides for close relations in the fields of foreign policy, the economy, military affairs and security. The treaty stipulates that Lebanese government decisions are subject to review by six joint Syrian–Lebanese bodies.

ECONOMY

Agriculture accounted for 5.9% of GDP in 2009, industry 23.4% and services 70.7%.

Overview

The economy is services-based and dominated by the financial sector. Services contribute four-fifths of GDP. In 2009 the worth of the banking sector was equivalent to 350% of GDP. Remittances are also vital, contributing US$7.5bn. in 2012.

The economy has suffered as a result of ongoing unrest and conflict in the Middle East since 2011, especially in the wake of the civil war in Syria and the rise of the Islamic State jihadist insurgency. The resulting influx of refugees has put great strain on Lebanon's public services, jobs market and health care capacity. In addition, tourism has declined and trade routes have been disrupted. Growth measured 2.5% in 2013, while the fiscal deficit grew by US$2.6bn. between 2012 and 2014. High unemployment, especially among the young and unskilled, is a particularly pressing concern.

Currency

The unit of currency is the Lebanese pound (LBP) of 100 piastres. Inflation was 4.8% in 2013 and 1.9% in 2014. In July 2005 foreign exchange reserves totalled US$10,627m., gold reserves were 9.22m. troy oz and total money supply was £Leb.3,005.7bn. The Lebanese pound has been pegged to the US dollar since Sept. 1999 at £Leb.1,507.5 = 1 US$.

Budget

The fiscal year is the calendar year.

In 2009 budgetary central government revenue totalled £Leb.11,877bn. and expenditure £Leb.15,361bn. Tax revenues in 2009 were £Leb.8,995bn. Main items of expenditure by economic type in 2009 were interest (£Leb.5,784bn.) and compensation of employees (£Leb.3,264bn.).

VAT of 10% was introduced in 2002.

Performance

Total GDP was US$45.7bn. in 2014. Real GDP growth was 2.8% in 2012, 2.5% in 2013 and 2.0% in 2014.

Banking and Finance

The Bank of Lebanon (Governor, Riad Salameh) is the bank of issue. In Jan. 2008 there were 66 functioning banks (45 domestic and 21 foreign) of which 51 were commercial, 11 were investment and/or private and four were Islamic. Commercial bank deposits in May 2011 totalled US$110.5bn.

There is a stock exchange in Beirut (closed 1983–95).

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Lebanon's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2011 accounted for 5.0 tonnes per capita.

Electricity

Installed capacity in 2011 was 3.2m. kW. Production in 2011 was 16.37bn. kWh and consumption per capita 3,842 kWh. Supply fails to meet demand and power cuts are frequent.

Minerals

There are no commercially viable deposits.

Agriculture

In 2002 there were around 170,000 ha. of arable land and 143,000 ha. of permanent crop land. Crop production (in 1,000 tonnes), 2002: potatoes, 397; tomatoes, 270; olives, 184; oranges, 155; apples, 150; cucumbers and gherkins, 132; wheat, 119; grapes, 102; melons and watermelons, 100.

Livestock (2002): goats, 409,000; sheep, 298,000; cattle, 88,000; pigs, 21,000; chickens, 33m.

Forestry

The forests of the past have been denuded by exploitation and in 2010 covered 0.14m. ha., or 13% of the total land area. Timber production was 26,000 cu. metres in 2011.

Fisheries

The catch in 2011 was an estimated 3,800 tonnes, mainly from sea fishing.

INDUSTRY

In 2001 industry accounted for 21.9% of GDP, with manufacturing contributing 10.3%. Industrial production, 2001 (in 1,000 tonnes): cement, 2,890; flour, 420; sulphuric acid, 357; mineral water, 276.8m. litres.

Labour

The labour force in 2013 was 1,628,000 (1,203,000 in 2003). 51.6% of the population aged 15–64 was economically active in 2013. In the same year 6.2% of the population was unemployed.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

Trade, 2010, in US$1m.: imports (c.i.f.), 17,970; exports (f.o.b.), 4,254. Main imports, 2010 (in US$1m.), were: machinery and transport equipment (4,100); mineral fuels, lubricants and related materials (3,674); manufactured goods (2,736). Main exports, 2010 (in US$1m.), were: gold (830); arms and ammunition (333); non-metallic mineral manufactures (273). In 2010 major import sources (in US$1m.) were: USA (1,919); China (1,639); Italy (1,394). Major export markets in 2010 (in US$1m.) were: Switzerland (503); UAE (419); France (349).

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

There were 6,970 km of roads in 2005, including 170 km of motorway. Registered vehicles in 2011 numbered 1,525,738. In 2007 there were 4,281 road accidents resulting in 487 deaths.

Rail

Railways are state-owned. There is 222 km of standard gauge track.

Civil Aviation

Beirut International Airport was served in 2003 by nearly 30 airlines. It handled 5,960,414 passengers (5,913,225 on international flights) in 2012 and 84,911 tonnes of freight. The national airline is the state-owned Middle East Airlines. In 2003 scheduled airline traffic of Lebanese-based carriers flew 20m. km, carrying 935,000 passengers (all on international flights).

Shipping

Beirut is the largest port, followed by Tripoli, Jounieh and Saida (Sidon). In Jan. 2009 there were 46 ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 140,000 GT.

Telecommunications

In 2010 there were 887,800 landline telephone subscriptions (equivalent to 210.0 per 1,000 inhabitants) and 2,874,800 mobile phone subscriptions (or 680.0 per 1,000 inhabitants). In 2011, 52.0% of the population were internet users. In March 2012 there were 1.4m. Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The population in penal institutions in Dec. 2012 was 5,094 (118 per 100,000 of national population). The International Centre for Prison Studies estimated in 2014 that 66.2% of prisoners had yet to receive a trial. The death penalty is still in force. It was last used in 2004 when three people were executed. In 2015 the World Justice Project Rule of Law Index, which provides data on how the rule of law is experienced by the general public across eight categories, ranked Lebanon 62nd of 102 countries for criminal justice and 78th for civil justice.

Education

There are state and private primary and secondary schools. In 2007 there were 450,566 pupils with 32,412 teaching staff at primary schools; and 368,359 pupils with 40,919 teaching staff in secondary education. The Lebanese University, founded in 1951, is the only public university. Private universities include the American University of Beirut, founded in 1866 as the Syrian Protestant College; the Lebanese American University, established in 1924; and the Lebanese International University, established in 2001. In 2007 there were 187,055 students in tertiary education and 21,778 academic staff. Adult literacy was 90% in 2007. In 2007 public expenditure on education came to 2.7% of GNI and 9.6% of total government spending.

There is a Lebanese Academy of Fine Arts, which is part of the University of Balamand.

Health

There were 162 hospitals in 2008. The provision of hospital beds was 36 per 10,000 inhabitants in 2005. There were 9,876 doctors in 2007, and 4,316 dentists, 4,990 pharmacists and 1,699 nurses in 2008.

RELIGION

In 2010 an estimated 61.3% of the population were Muslims according to the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life (roughly similar numbers of Sunnis and Shias) and 38.3% Christians (mainly Catholics). Christians were in the majority at the time of the last census in 1932. In Feb. 2016 there were two cardinals.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

There are five UNESCO sites in Lebanon. Four were entered on the list in 1984: the ruins of Anjar, a city founded by the Muslim Arab caliph Walid I at the beginning of the 8th century; Baalbek, the most impressive ancient site in Lebanon and one of the most important Roman ruins in the Middle East; Byblos, the site of multi-layered ruins of one of the most ancient cities of Lebanon, dating back to Neolithic times; and Tyre, which has important archaeological remains, principally from Roman times. The Qadisha Valley and Bcharre district, inscribed in 1998, has been the site of monastic communities since the earliest years of Christianity. Its cedar trees, among the most highly prized building materials of the ancient world and an example of which adorns the national flag, are survivors of a sacred forest.

Press

In 2009 there were 14 paid-for daily newspapers with a combined circulation of 244,000 and two free dailies. The newspapers with the highest circulation are An-Nahar and As-Safir.

Tourism

In 2009 there were 1,844,000 non-resident tourists (excluding Syrians, Palestinians, students and same-day visitors), up from 1,333,000 in 2008.

Festivals

Major annual cultural events are the Al Bustan Festival of music, dance and theatre in Feb.–March; Hamra Festival in June; Baalbek International Festival, which reopened in 1997 after an absence of 23 years, in June–Aug.; Beiteddine Festival in July–Aug.; Tyre Festival; Byblos Festival; and the Beirut Film Festival.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

The Basotho nation was constituted in the 19th century under the leadership of Moshoeshe I, bringing together refugees from disparate tribes scattered by Zulu expansionism in southern Africa. After war with land-hungry Boer settlers in 1856 (and again in 1886), Moshoeshe appealed for British protection. This was granted in 1868, and in 1871 the territory was annexed to the Cape Colony (now Republic of South Africa), but in 1883 it was restored to the direct control of the British government through the High Commissioner for South Africa. In 1965 full internal self-government was achieved under King Moshoeshe II. On 4 Oct. 1966 Basutoland became an independent and sovereign member of the British Commonwealth as the Kingdom of Lesotho. Chief Leabua Jonathan, leader of the Basotho National Party and prime minister from 1965, suspended the constitution when the elections of 1970 were declared invalid. On 20 Jan. 1986, after a border blockade by the Republic of South Africa, Chief Jonathan was deposed in a bloodless military coup led by Maj.-Gen. Justin Lekhanya who granted significant powers to the king. King Moshoeshe II was deposed in Nov. 1990 and replaced by King Letsie III. Lekhanya was deposed in May 1991. A democratic constitution was promulgated in April 1993. The elections in May 1998 were won by the ruling Lesotho Congress for Democracy. In Sept. 1998 an army mutiny prompted intervention from South Africa to support the government.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Lesotho is an enclave within South Africa. The area is 30,355 sq. km (11,720 sq. miles).

The census in 2006 showed a total population of 1,876,633 (963,835 females); density, 61.8 per sq. km. In 2006 the population was 77.2% rural. In 2011 the estimated population was 1,894,194.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 2.14m.

There are ten districts, all named after their chief towns, except Berea (chief town, Teyateyaneng). Area and population:

Region	Area (in sq. km.)	2011 estimated population
Berea	2,222	273,832
Butha-Buthe	1,767	105,403
Leribe	2,828	331,117
Mafeteng	2,119	183,507
Maseru	4,279	389,627
Mohale's Hoek	3,530	181,196
Mokhotlong	4,075	105,538
Qacha's Nek	2,349	63,910
Quthing	2,916	129,533
Thaba-Tseka	4,270	130,532

In 2011 the capital, Maseru, had an estimated population of 178,345. Other major towns (with 2011 estimated populations) are: Teyateyaneng, 61,578; Maputsoe, 48,243; Mafeteng, 30,602; Botha-Bothe, 30,115; Mohale's Hoek, 25,308.

The official languages are Sesotho and English.

The population is more than 98% Basotho. The rest is made up of Xhosas, approximately 3,000 expatriate Europeans and several hundred Asians.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2008 estimated births, 59,000; deaths, 35,000. Rates, 2008 estimates: birth (per 1,000 population), 28.9; death, 16.9. Annual population growth rate, 2000–08, 1.0%. Life expectancy has declined since 1990, largely owing to the huge number of people in the country with HIV, although it is now starting to rise again. It was 59.4 years in 1990 but fell to 43.7 in 2005. However, by 2013 it had risen gone back up to 49.4 years. Lesotho is also one of the few countries to have seen a rise in child and infant mortality since 1990. The number of deaths per 1,000 live births among children under five rose from 85 in 1990 to 114 in 2000 although it fell back to 100 in 2012. Similarly the infant mortality rate (the number of deaths per 1,000 live births among babies under one year of age) went up from 68 in 1990 to 80 in 2000 before falling back down to 74 in 2012. In 2013, 22.9% of all adults between 15 and 49 were infected with HIV—the second highest rate after Swaziland. Fertility rate, 2008, 3.3 births per woman.

CLIMATE

A mild and temperate climate, with variable rainfall, but averaging 29" (725 mm) a year over most of the country. The rain falls mainly in the summer months of Oct. to April, while the winters are dry and may produce heavy frosts in lowland areas and frequent snow in the highlands. Temperatures in the lowlands range from a maximum of 90°F (32.2°C) in summer to a minimum of 20°F (−6.7°C) in winter.

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

Lesotho is a constitutional monarchy with the King as Head of State. Following the death of his father, Moshoeshe II, Letsie III succeeded to the throne in Jan. 1996.

The 1993 constitution provided for a National Assembly comprising an elected 80-member lower house and a Senate of 22 principal chiefs and 11 members nominated by the King. For the elections of May 2002 a new voting system was introduced, increasing the number of seats in the National Assembly to 120, elected for a five-year term as before, but with 80 members in single-seat constituencies and 40 elected by proportional representation.

National Anthem

'Lesotho fatsela bontat' a rona' ('Lesotho, land of our fathers'); words by F. Coillard, tune by L. Laur.

RECENT ELECTIONS

Parliamentary elections were held on 28 Feb. 2015. Democratic Congress won 47 of 120 seats, All Basotho Convention 46, Lesotho Congress for Democracy 12, Basotho National Party 7, Popular Front for Democracy 2 and Reformed Congress of Lesotho 2. Four other parties won a single seat each.

CURRENT LEADERS

Pakalitha Bethuel Mosisili

Position

Prime Minister

Introduction

Pakalitha Bethuel Mosisili, leader of the Lesotho Congress for Democracy (LCD), began a new term as premier in March 2015, having previously served from May 1998 until June 2012. He succeeded Tom Thabane, who had replaced Mosisili in 2012.

Early Life

Mosisili was born on 14 March 1945 in the Qacha's Nek District in Lesotho. He attended the University of Botswana, Lesotho and Swaziland (UBLS) from 1966–70, gaining a BA and a teaching qualification. He studied for an MA at the University of Wisconsin in the USA from 1975–76, before claiming a further BA from the University of South Africa (1977–78). In 1982 he gained a master's degree in education from the Simon Fraser University in Canada.

In 1967, whilst at UBLS, Mosisili joined the Basutoland Congress Party (BCP) and was an active member of its youth league.

In 1970 he was detained under emergency regulations and sent to a maximum-security prison for 16 months.

Mosisili's political career began in 1993 when he was elected to parliament representing Qacha's Nek. He was appointed minister of education and training, sports, culture and youth affairs. In Feb. 1995 he became deputy prime minister following the death of Selometsi Baholo the previous year. He took responsibility for the home affairs and local government portfolios, roles he retained until the 1998 elections. In Feb. 1998 he succeeded Prime Minister Dr Ntsu Mokhehle as leader of the LCD.

Career in Office

The victory of the LCD at the elections of May 1998 led to opposition accusations of vote rigging. Mass rioting culminated in protesters seizing the palace grounds. Mosisili called on the Southern African Development Community (SADC) for military assistance to prevent a coup and troops remained in Lesotho until May 1999. In 2001 the government charged 33 protest leaders with treason. The SADC continued to provide military support and was again called in following more opposition allegations of electoral fraud after the LCD's re-election in 2002. In 2004 the first local elections since independence were held, but were boycotted by the opposition.

Mosisili pledged to tackle Lesotho's severe food shortages, high unemployment rates and rapidly escalating HIV/AIDS problem. However, poverty remained far-reaching and food output was affected by deaths of farmers from AIDS and by long periods of drought. In Feb. 2004 Mosisili declared a state of emergency and requested international food aid. In March 2004 the first phase of the Lesotho Highlands Water Project was opened, with the long-term aim of supplying water to large areas of southern Africa.

Mosisili aimed to address unemployment by encouraging foreign investment, emphasizing Lesotho's low corporate tax rates and eager work-force. However, thousands were left jobless when the textile industry collapsed after the World Trade Organization scrapped the global textile quota system in 2005. He also sought to diversify the economy, focusing on mining, electronics and industrial equipment manufactures. In 2005 his government opted to privatize the electricity system, having earlier done the same to telecommunications in 2000.

In Nov. 2006 Mosisili dissolved parliament following a split in the ruling LCD in which 18 parliamentary deputies left the party to form an opposition All Basotho Convention (ABC). The LCD won the election of Feb. 2007, although with a smaller majority than in 2002. In April 2009 he survived an apparent assassination attempt by gunmen in the capital, Maseru, for which seven suspected mercenaries were charged in April 2010. In parliamentary elections in May 2012 the LCD won the most seats but failed to secure a majority. Unable to form a working coalition, Mosisili accepted defeat and King Letsie III appointed Tom Thabane as the new premier. It marked the first time in Lesotho's history that regime change had come via the ballot box.

Thabane's tenure was marred by internal security fears, especially after political divisions led to clashes between military and police personnel in 2014. Thabane fled the country, claiming the military was plotting a coup. Early elections were called in Feb. 2015, and although no outright winner emerged Mosisili was able to form a coalition. He was sworn in on 17 March, facing the challenge of restoring calm and stability to the nation.

DEFENCE

South African and Batswanan troops intervened after a mutiny by Lesotho's armed forces in Sept. 1998. The foreign forces were withdrawn in May 1999.

The Royal Lesotho Defence Force has about 2,000 personnel. Defence expenditure totalled US$54m. in 2013 (US$28 per capita), representing 2.1% of GDP.

ECONOMY

In 2009 agriculture accounted for 7.7% of GDP, industry 32.9% and services 59.4%.

Overview

Lesotho's economy is heavily integrated with that of South Africa. Its only significant natural resource is water, exported to South Africa via the Lesotho Highlands Water Project. Subsistence agriculture dominates, although the textiles sector also has a significant role in generating employment and exports. The economy is heavily dependent on Southern African Customs Union (SACU) receipts and workers' remittances. Lesotho is a member of the Common Monetary Area together with South Africa, Namibia and Swaziland.

Following several sluggish years, economic growth exceeded 4% in three consecutive years from 2006 to 2008 before slowing to 3.8% in 2009 as a result of the global slowdown. The crisis resulted in a loss of textile and diamond exports and a drop in SACU revenues and remittances. Growth averaged 5.4% per annum between 2010 and 2013, driven largely by the construction sector. However, there is significant income inequality, with the rural population suffering from high unemployment and poverty. According to the 2010 Human Development Report, 43% of the population lived below the international poverty line of US$1.25 (PPP) per day.

Inflation has remained in single digits, but the economy is vulnerable to volatility in SACU revenues. Long-term prosperity relies on finding new growth engines, accelerating structural reforms and developing a more dynamic private sector.

Currency

The unit of currency is the loti (plural maloti) (LSL) of 100 lisente, at par with the South African rand, which is legal tender. Total money supply in July 2005 was 1,659m. maloti and foreign exchange reserves were US$539m. Inflation was 5.0% in 2013 and 3.8% in 2014.

Budget

The fiscal year is 1 April–31 March. Revenues in 2008–09 were 8,818m. maloti and expenditures 6,462m. maloti. Tax revenue accounted for 88.0% of revenues in 2008–09; wages and salaries accounted for 36.0% of expenditures and grants 11.9%.

The standard rate of VAT is 14%.

Performance

Real GDP growth was 5.3% in 2012, 3.6% in 2013 and 3.4% in 2014. Total GDP in 2013 was US$2.2bn. Lesotho ranks among the countries most reliant on remittances from abroad, which accounted for 29% of total GDP in 2010. In particular remittances from South Africa contributed 21% of Lesotho's GDP.

Banking and Finance

The Central Bank of Lesotho (Governor, Rets'elisitsoe Adelaide Matlanyane) is the bank of issue, founded in 1982 to succeed the Lesotho Monetary Authority. There are four commercial banks (First National Bank of Lesotho, Lesotho Post Bank, Nedbank Lesotho and Standard Lesotho Bank). Gross national savings were estimated at 12.2% of GNI in 2010, compared to 25.8% of GNI in 2009. The decline in savings mainly reflected lower private sector savings as household disposable income fell during the year. Foreign debt was US$726m. in 2010, representing 28.4% of GNI.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Lesotho's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2011 were the equivalent of 0.2 tonnes per capita.

Electricity

Capacity (2011 estimate) 80,000 kW. Production in 2011 was 549m. kWh (all hydro-electric). Consumption in 2011 was 723m. kWh.

Minerals

Diamonds are the main product; 2009 output was 91,815 carats (up from 721 carats in 2002). The huge increase was owing to the start of commercial operations at Letseng Diamonds mine in 2004. Gravel and crushed rock production (2009 estimate), 300,000 cu. metres.

Agriculture

Agriculture employs two-thirds of the workforce. The chief crops were (2002 production in 1,000 tonnes): maize, 108; potatoes, 90; wheat, 45; sorghum, 38; dry beans, 7. Soil conservation and the improvement of crops and pasture are matters of vital importance. In 2002 there were an estimated 330,000 ha. of arable land and 4,000 ha. of permanent crop land. There were 2,000 tractors in 2002.

Livestock (2003 estimates): sheep, 850,000; cattle, 540,000; goats, 650,000; asses, 154,000; horses, 100,000; chickens, 2m.

Forestry

In 2010 Lesotho's total forest area was 44,000 ha., or 1% of the land area. Timber production was 2.10m. cu. metres in 2011.

Fisheries

The catch in 2010 was 45 tonnes, exclusively from inland waters.

INDUSTRY

Important industries are food products, beverages, textiles and chemical products. In 2009 industry accounted for 33% of GDP, with manufacturing contributing 16%.

Labour

The labour force in 2013 was 871,000 (798,000 in 2003). 67.4% of the population aged 15–64 was economically active in 2013. In the same year 24.6% of the population was unemployed.

Lesotho had 15,000 people living in slavery according to the Walk Free Foundation's 2013 Global Slavery Index.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Lesotho is a member of the Southern African Customs Union (SACU) with Botswana, Namibia, South Africa and Swaziland.

Imports and Exports

Trade, 2008, in US$1m.: imports (c.i.f.), 1,066; exports (f.o.b.), 245.

The principal imports in 2008 (in US$1m.) were: machinery and transport equipment (208); food (177); miscellaneous manufactured articles (152). The principal exports in 2008 (in US$1m.) were: machinery and transport equipment (100); miscellaneous manufactured articles (65); food (33).

South Africa accounted for 95% of imports in 2008 and 83% of exports. Other significant trading partners are Japan and Germany for imports and the USA for exports.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

The road network in 2002 totalled 7,091 km, of which 19.8% were paved. In 2002 there were 4,800 passenger cars (2.1 per 1,000 inhabitants) plus 13,000 trucks and vans. There were 402 deaths in 2007 as a result of road accidents.

Rail

A branch line built by the South African Railways, one mile long, connects Maseru with the Bloemfontein–Natal line at Marseilles for transport of cargo.

Civil Aviation

There are direct flights from Maseru's Moshoeshoe International Airport to Johannesburg. In 2004 it handled 37,162 passengers (36,045 on international flights).

Telecommunications

In 2010 there were 38,600 landline telephone subscriptions (equivalent to 17.8 per 1,000 inhabitants) and 987,400 mobile phone subscriptions (or 454.8 per 1,000 inhabitants). There were 38.6 internet users per 1,000 inhabitants in 2010.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The legal system is based on Roman-Dutch law. The Lesotho High Court and the Court of Appeal are situated in Maseru, and there are Magistrates' Courts in the districts.

The population in penal institutions in 2012 was 2,564 (121 per 100,000 of national population).

Education

Education levels: pre-school, 3 to 5 years; first level (elementary), 6 to 12; second level (secondary or teacher training or technical training), 7 to 13; third level (university or teacher training college). Free primary education was introduced in 2000. Lesotho has the highest proportion of female pupils at secondary schools in Africa, with 56% in 2007. In 2006 there were 424,855 pupils in primary schools with 10,513 teaching staff, 93,996 pupils in secondary schools with 3,725 teaching staff and 8,500 students in higher education with 638 academic staff. The National University of Lesotho was established in 1975 at Roma; enrolment in 2006-07, 8,566 students. There are eight government-supported technical and vocational training institutions as well as a teacher training college, the Lesotho College of Education. The adult literacy rate in 2008 was 90% (among the highest in Africa).

In 2005 public expenditure on education came to 13.8% of GDP and 29.8% of total government spending (one of the highest percentages of any country).

Health

In 2003 there were 89 physicians, 16 dentistry personnel and 1,123 nursing and midwifery personnel. There were 13 hospital beds per 10,000 inhabitants in 2006.

RELIGION

A study by the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life estimated that there were 1.08m. Protestants in 2010 and 999,000 Catholics, with most of the remainder of the population being religiously unaffiliated.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

Lesotho has one site on the UNESCO World Heritage List, shared with South Africa: Maloti-Drakensberg Park (added to the list in 2013), a transboundary site composed of the Sehlabathebe National Park in Lesotho and the uKhahlamba Drakensberg Park in South Africa.

Press

There were 14 non-daily newspapers and periodicals in 2008, but no dailies.

Tourism

In 2010 there were a record 425,870 non-resident visitors, up from 343,743 in 2009 and 293,073 in 2008.

Festivals

The Morija Arts & Cultural Festival is held annually at Morija, where missionaries first arrived in Lesotho in 1833.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

The Republic of Liberia was created on the Grain Coast for freed American slaves. In 1822 a settlement was formed near the spot where Monrovia now stands. On 26 July 1847 the state was constituted as the Free and Independent Republic of Liberia.

On 12 April 1980 President Tolbert was assassinated and his government overthrown in a coup led by Master-Sergeant Samuel Doe. At the beginning of 1990 rebel forces entered Liberia from the north and fought their way successfully southwards to confront President Doe's forces in Monrovia. The rebels comprised the National Patriotic Front of Liberia (NPFL) led by Charles Taylor, and the hostile breakaway Independent National Patriotic Front led by Prince Johnson. A peacekeeping force dispatched by the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) disembarked at Monrovia on 25 Aug. 1990. On 9 Sept. President Doe was assassinated by Johnson's rebels. ECOWAS installed a provisional government led by Amos Sawyer. Charles Taylor declared himself president, as did the former vice-president, Harry Moniba. A succession of ceasefires was negotiated and broken. An ECOWAS-sponsored peace agreement was signed on 17 Aug. 1996 in Abuja, providing for the disarmament of all factions by the end of Jan. 1997 and the election of a president on 31 May 1997. By the end of Jan. 1997 some 20,000 out of approximately 60,000 insurgents had surrendered their arms. It is estimated that up to 200,000 people died in the civil war and up to 1m. were made homeless. Charles Taylor was elected president in July 1997. In Feb. 2002 Taylor declared a state of emergency after an attack by a group of rebels on the town of Kley, where thousands of refugees from Sierra Leone were encamped.

In Aug. 2003 the UN called for the immediate deployment of an ECOWAS peacekeeping force, to be replaced by a full UN force on 1 Oct. Nigerian peacekeepers arrived on 4 Aug. 2003. Taylor relinquished power to his vice-president, Moses Blah, and to a transitional government on 11 Aug. In Nov. 2005 Ellen Johnson-Sirleaf won presidential elections to become Africa's first elected female head of state. In May 2012 Charles Taylor received a 50-year prison sentence for war crimes from the UN-sponsored Special Court for Sierra Leone.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Liberia is bounded in the northwest by Sierra Leone, north by Guinea, east by Côte d'Ivoire and southwest by the Atlantic Ocean. The total area is 97,036 sq. km. At the last census, in 2008, the population was 3,476,608; density, 36 per sq. km.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 4.50m. Liberia's population has doubled since the mid-1990s.

In 2007, 59.5% of the population lived in urban areas. English is the official language spoken by 20% of the population. The rest belong in the main to three linguistic groups: Mande, West Atlantic and the Kwa. These are in turn subdivided into 16 ethnic groups: Bassa, Bella, Gbandi, Mende, Gio, Dey, Mano, Gola, Kpelle, Kissi, Krahn, Kru, Lorma, Mandingo, Vai and Grebo.

The population of Monrovia (the capital) was 970,824 in 2008 including its suburbs.

There are 15 counties, whose areas, populations and capitals are as follows:

County	Sq. km	2008
		population	Chief town
Bomi	1,942	84,119	Tubmanburg
Bong	8,769	333,481	Gbarnga

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2008 births, estimate, 145,000; deaths, 40,000. 2008 rates (per 1,000 population), estimate: birth, 38.3; death, 10.5. Annual population growth rate, 2000–08, 3.7%. Life expectancy at birth (2013): 59.6 years for men and 61.5 years for women. Infant mortality in 2010 was at 74 per 1,000 live births. Fertility rate, 2008, 5.9 births per woman.

CLIMATE

An equatorial climate, with constant high temperatures and plentiful rainfall, although Jan. to May is drier than the rest of the year. Monrovia, Jan. 79°F (26.1°C), July 76°F (24.4°C). Annual rainfall 206" (5,138 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

A constitution was approved by referendum in July 1984 and came into force on 6 Jan. 1986. Under it the National Assembly consisted of a 26-member Senate and a 64-member House of Representatives. For the elections of 2005 the number of seats in the Senate was increased to 30 and in 2010 a further nine seats were added to the House of Representatives, bringing the total to 73. The executive power of the state is vested in the President, who may serve up to two six-year terms.

National Anthem

'All hail, Liberia, hail!'; words by President Daniel Warner, tune by O. Luca.

RECENT ELECTIONS

In the first round of presidential elections held on 11 Oct. 2011 Ellen Johnson-Sirleaf of the Unity Party (UP) received 43.9% of the vote, followed by Winston Tubman of the Congress for Democratic Change with 32.7% and Prince Yormie Johnson of the National Union for Democratic Progress with 11.6%. There were 13 other candidates. Turnout was 71.6%. With no candidate receiving an absolute majority a run-off was held on 8 Nov. 2011. Tubman claimed that the first round had been rigged and called on his supporters to boycott the run-off, in which turnout was consequently only 38.6%. Sirleaf gained 90.7% of the vote.

In the elections to the House of Representatives also on 11 Oct. 2011 the UP won 24 seats; the Congress for Democratic Change, 11; the Liberal Party, 7; the National Union for Democratic Progress, 6; the National Democratic Coalition, 5; the Alliance for Peace and Democracy, 3; the National Patriotic Party, 3; and the Movement for Progressive Change, 2. Three parties won one seat each and independents nine. Elections for half of the seats in the Senate were also held on 11 Oct. 2011. As a result the UP held 10 of the 30 seats; the National Patriotic Party, 6; the Congress for Democratic Change, 3; the Alliance for Peace and Democracy, 2; and the National Union for Democratic Progress, 2. Four parties held one seat each and independents three.

CURRENT LEADERS

Ellen Johnson-Sirleaf

Position
President

Introduction

Ellen Johnson-Sirleaf became Africa's first elected female president in Jan. 2006, having defeated the former footballer, George Weah, in a run-off. A US-educated economist, she returned from exile to attempt to resurrect Liberia's shattered economy after 14 years of civil war. She was re-elected in presidential polling held in Oct.–Nov. 2011, pledging to continue her reform and anti-corruption agenda.

Early Life

Ellen Johnson-Sirleaf was born in Monrovia, Liberia on 29 Oct. 1938. She was educated at the College of West Africa in Monrovia from 1948–55, before graduating in accountancy in 1964 from the University of Wisconsin in the USA. From 1967 she served as special assistant to the secretary of the treasury in Liberia before undertaking an MA in public administration at America's Harvard University from 1969–71. Returning to Liberia, Sirleaf became assistant minister of finance in the administration of William R. Tolbert, Jr. Following public criticisms of Tolbert's presidency she resigned and left the country, taking up a post as a loan officer for several Latin American countries at the World Bank. In 1977 she was invited to return home to become deputy minister of finance for fiscal and banking affairs. In Aug. 1979 she replaced James T. Philips as minister of finance.

Shortly after a coup d'état and Tolbert's assassination on 12 April 1980, the new military leader, Sgt Samuel Doe, appointed Sirleaf president of the Liberia Bank for Development and Investment. However, she resigned in Dec. 1980 and returned to the World Bank, before becoming vice-president of Citibank in Nairobi, Kenya in mid-1981. She stood in Liberia's general elections in Oct. 1985, at which Doe was controversially elected president. Sirleaf was elected senator but was sentenced to ten years in jail as part of Doe's crackdown on 'opponents' following a failed coup in Nov. 1985. Pardoned and released in June 1986, she again left Liberia for the USA, where she worked for the Equator Bank in Washington, D.C., followed by the UN Development Programme (UNDP) in New York.

While in the USA, Sirleaf joined other Liberian exiles in criticizing Doe and helped raise funds for a fellow exile, Charles Taylor, to lead the National Patriotic Front of Liberia (NPFL) into Liberia from the Côte d'Ivoire in 1989. It triggered a devastating civil war that led to the deaths of over 200,000 people by the time a ceasefire was declared in Aug. 1996. Disillusioned with Taylor, Sirleaf resigned as director of the UNDP's Bureau for Africa (a post she held from July 1992) and stood against him on behalf of the Unity Party in presidential elections in 1997. She received only 10% of the vote (against 75% for Taylor) and was later charged with treason by him. Forced into exile again, she became active in various humanitarian projects, including investigations into the 1994 Rwandan genocide for the Organization for African Unity and serving on the board of the International Crisis Group and the Nelson Mandela Foundation. Liberia again descended into civil war but Sirleaf returned after Taylor was forced into exile in Aug. 2003 (to be later imprisoned in 2012 by the International Criminal Court for abetting war crimes in neighbouring Sierra Leone). She headed the governance reform commission until resigning in March 2005 to enter the presidential race.

During her campaign, Sirleaf criticized the transitional government's inability to fight corruption. She went through to a run-off against George Weah, a former World Footballer of the Year who was representing the Congress for Democratic Change, and on 11 Nov. the national elections commission declared Sirleaf the winner. Although Weah accused her of fraud, her victory was confirmed on 23 Nov. Independent observers declared the vote to be free, fair and transparent and her inauguration took place on 16 Jan. 2006.

Career in Office

In her inaugural speech, Sirleaf vowed to wage a war on corruption, promising that leading civil servants and ministers would have to declare their assets. She also pledged to work towards reconciliation by bringing former opponents into a government of national unity, and spoke of establishing peaceful relations with neighbouring West African states. She appointed a number of women to ministerial positions and controversially nominated a Nigerian soldier to head Liberia's army. While rebuilding the country's shattered economy—with a road network in ruins, no national telephone network, no national electricity grid and no piped water—has remained a major challenge, the World Bank and other international bodies have praised her government's efforts in office. A Truth and Reconciliation Commission was inaugurated with a mandate to investigate human rights abuses during the long civil war, and she has made progress in confronting poor governance and corrupt officialdom.

In Nov. 2010 Sirleaf appointed a 22-member acting cabinet after placing their predecessors on 'mass administrative leave'. Several ministers were subsequently reappointed to their posts. She retained the presidency in Nov. 2011 when she was re-elected in a second round of voting, but there was a low turnout after rival candidate William Tubman boycotted the process because of alleged electoral fraud.

In Oct. 2011 Sirleaf was jointly awarded the Nobel Peace Prize.

Her presidency from 2014 was dominated by efforts to contain the spread of an epidemic of the deadly ebola virus. The outbreak had killed over 4,000 people by May 2015 when the World Health Organization provisionally declared Liberia free of the disease, although isolated cases were subsequently confirmed later in the year. Furthermore, the crisis disrupted business and commerce and threatened to undermine the country's post-civil war economic revival.

DEFENCE

In June 2003 UN Secretary-General Kofi Annan called for an international peacekeeping force to restore peace after fighting broke out between government forces and Liberians United for Reconciliation and Democracy (LURD). An ECOWAS peacekeeping force of over 3,000 troops was deployed initially, but this has been replaced by the United Nations Mission in Liberia (UNMIL), totalling 5,934 uniformed personnel in June 2015.

The Armed Forces of Liberia (AFL) were created in 2007 to replace the Liberian Army, which was demobilized in 1999. In 2009 there were approximately 2,100 troops. The AFL became operational in June 2013 when a Liberian platoon was deployed to Mali as part of the African-led International Support Mission in Mali (AFISMA).

Defence expenditure totalled US$13m. in 2011 (US$3 per capita), representing 0.8% of GDP.

ECONOMY

Agriculture accounted for 39% of GDP in 2012, industry 16% and services 45%.

Overview

Liberia is one of the world's poorest countries and relies heavily on foreign aid despite possessing rich natural resources. Years of civil war and government mismanagement destroyed much of the economy's human and physical capital, especially in the capital city of Monrovia. However, with the country's transition towards democratically-elected government since the early years of the century, its economy has benefited from a period of post-war reconstruction.

In 2007, four years after the end of the second civil war, real GDP growth rose to 12.7%, supported by continued recovery in agriculture, mining and services. Growth then averaged 7% per year between 2008 and 2013, driven largely by commodities exports (principally iron ore and rubber). Foreign direct investment (FDI) has been strong in the iron ore and palm oil sectors, while construction activity has experienced rapid growth since the late 2000s. The agricultural and manufacturing sectors, however, have been hampered by low productivity and poor infrastructure.

An outbreak of the ebola virus from March 2014 had a severe impact on economic and social progress, although the disease has been progressively contained. The related cost of healthcare provision strained government finances, while fear of an epidemic led to a slowdown in economic activity.

In the short term, the authorities must find the finances to support ebola-affected households and fund health services. In the medium term, job creation, infrastructure rehabilitation and tackling corruption are key priorities. Slower global demand for commodities and weakened FDI inflows following the ebola outbreak also pose challenges to the economic outlook.

Currency

US currency is legal tender. There is a Liberian dollar (LRD), in theory at parity with the US dollar. Between 1993 and March 2000 different notes were in use in government-held Monrovia and the rebel-held country areas, but on 27 March 2000 a set of new notes went into circulation to end the years of trading in dual banknotes. Inflation was 7.6% in 2013 and 9.9% in 2014. Total money supply was L$4,316m. in July 2005 and foreign exchange reserves were US$21m.

Budget

The fiscal year begins on 1 July. Revenue in 2010–11 was US$334.6m.; expenditure was US$423.2m. Tax revenue accounted for 80.5% of revenues in 2010–11; current expenditure accounted for 71.3% of expenditures.

Performance

Real GDP growth was 8.2% in 2012 and 8.7% in 2013, but then only 0.7% in 2014. Total GDP was US$2.0bn. in 2014.

Banking and Finance

The National Bank of Liberia opened on 22 July 1974 to act as a central bank. The Governor of the bank is Milton Weeks. There were only three banks in operation in Jan. 2004. External debt was US$228m. in 2010, representing 28.3% of GNI.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Liberia's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy were the equivalent of 0.2 tonnes per capita in 2011.

Electricity

Installed capacity in 2011 was estimated at 197,000 kW. Production in 2011 was approximately 353m. kWh. Consumption per capita in 2011 was about 87 kWh.

Minerals

2010 estimates: gold production 666 kg and diamond production 26,591 carats.

Agriculture

In 2007 the agricultural population was approximately 2.31m., of which about 853,000 were economically active. There were an estimated 385,000 ha. of arable land in 2007 and 215,000 ha. of permanent crops. Principal crops (2003 estimates) in 1,000 tonnes: cassava, 480; sugarcane, 255; bananas, 110; rice, 110; rubber, 108; palm oil, 42; plantains, 40; taro, 26; yams, 20. Coffee, cocoa and palm kernels are produced mainly by the traditional agricultural sector.

Livestock (2003 estimates): cattle, 36,000; pigs, 130,000; sheep, 210,000; goats, 220,000; chickens, 6m.

Livestock products (2003 estimates) in tonnes: meat, 23,000; milk, 1,000; eggs, 4,000.

Forestry

Forest area was 4.33m. ha. (45% of the land area) in 2010. In 2011, 7.74m. cu. metres of roundwood were cut. There are rubber plantations.

Fisheries

Fish landings in 2011 were an estimated 9,500 tonnes, mainly from sea fishing.

INDUSTRY

There are a number of small factories. Production of cement, cigarettes, soft drinks, palm oil and beer are the main industries.

Labour

In 2010 the labour force was 1,374,000 (52.3% males). Liberia had 30,000 people living in slavery according to the Walk Free Foundation's 2013 Global Slavery Index.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

Imports in 2008 were US$865m. and exports US$262m. Main import sources in 2004 were South Korea, 38.1%; Japan, 21.9%; Singapore, 12.6%. Major export destinations in 2004 were the USA, 61.4%; Belgium, 29.5%; China, 5.3%.

Main imports are food and live animals, petroleum and petroleum products, and machinery and transport equipment. Main exports are rubber, and logs and timber.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

There were about 10,600 km of roads in 2002 (only 6.2% of which were paved). In 2007 there were 7,400 passenger cars in use and 2,800 lorries and vans.

Rail

There is a total of 490 km single track. A 148-km freight line connects iron mines to Monrovia. There is a line from Bong to Monrovia (78 km). The railways were out of use for many years because of the civil wars but there is now some traffic, both freight and passenger. However, large sections of track have been dismantled.

Civil Aviation

There are two international airports (Roberts International and Sprigg Payne), both near Monrovia. In 2010 there were services to Abidjan, Accra, Addis Ababa, Banjul, Brussels, Casablanca, Conakry, Freetown, Lagos and Nairobi as well as internal flights.

Shipping

There are ports at Buchanan, Greenville, Harper and Monrovia. Over 2,000 vessels enter Monrovia each year. The Liberian government requires only a modest registration fee and an almost nominal annual charge and maintains no control over the operation of ships flying the Liberian flag. In Jan. 2009 there were 2,203 ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 80.15m. GT (a figure only exceeded by Panama's fleet). Of the 2,203 vessels registered, 741 were container ships, 669 oil tankers, 404 bulk carriers, 262 general cargo ships, 83 liquid gas tankers, 40 chemical tankers and four passenger ships.

Telecommunications

In 2009 Liberia had just 2,200 main (fixed) telephone lines, but there were 1,058,000 mobile phone subscribers. No other country had such a high ratio of mobile phone subscriptions to fixed telephone lines in 2009. There were an estimated 5.1 internet users per 1,000 inhabitants in 2009.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

Liberia is governed by a dual system of statutory law. The modern sector is regulated by Anglo-American common law with the indigenous sector following customary law based on unwritten tribal practices. Following a 2003 proposal by UNMIL (United Nations Mission in Liberia), a scheme to rebuild the post-civil war justice system was introduced. However, reforms are progressing at a slow rate and the judiciary remains severely dysfunctional.

The International Centre for Prison Studies estimated in 2014 that 83.0% of prisoners had yet to receive a trial. In 2015 the World Justice Project Rule of Law Index, which provides data on how the rule of law is experienced by the general public across eight categories, ranked Liberia 92nd of 102 countries for criminal justice and 81st for civil justice.

The population in penal institutions in 2012 was 1,930 (46 per 100,000 of national population).

Education

Schools are classified as: (1) Public schools, maintained and run by the government; (2) Mission schools, supported by foreign Missions and subsidized by the government, and operated by qualified Missionaries and Liberian teachers; (3) Private schools, maintained by endowments and sometimes subsidized by the government.

Adult literacy in 2009 was estimated at 59.1%.

Health

In 2004 there were 103 physicians (approximately one for every 33,300 inhabitants), 13 dentists, 613 nurses, 422 midwives and 35 pharmacists. The John F. Kennedy Memorial Hospital in Monrovia is the country's leading health care institution. The ebola outbreak of 2014–15 resulted in 4,809 deaths.

RELIGION

In 2010 there were an estimated 3.4m. Christians (mainly Protestants) and 480,000 Muslims (mainly Sunnis) according to the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life.

CULTURE

Press

There were seven paid-for daily newspapers in 2008 with a combined circulation of 55,000, plus 24 paid-for non-dailies.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Libya's earliest inhabitants were the semi-nomadic Berbers, whose descendants still live throughout North Africa's Atlas Mountains. Phoenician merchants from the Levant began to settle in what is today Libya from around 1000 BC and founded Carthage in what is now Tunisia in 814 BC. Carthage became the leading port in the western Mediterranean, extending its influence over Libya and most of coastal North Africa for the next five centuries. The port of Oea (now Tripoli) was founded by Phoenicians around 500 BC. Greek traders settled in the Cyrenaica region (eastern Libya) in the seventh century BC, founding Cyrene in 630 BC. Roman settlements appeared in Libya in the third century BC, growing in importance following Rome's sacking of Carthage in 146 BC. The port of Leptis Magna was founded in Tripolitania in the first century AD, becoming a major centre of commerce until it fell to the Vandals early in the fifth century.

The first of several waves of Arab conquerors arrived in 630, spreading the Islamic faith, initially along the coastal fringes. Libya became part of the powerful Umayyad and Abbasid Caliphates, the latter centred on Baghdad where it reached its apotheosis under Harun al Rashid (786–809). From 971 until 1045 Libya, along with present-day Algeria and Tunisia, were ruled by the Zirid amirs who were loyal to the Fatimid Caliphs of the Nile Valley. Bedouin Arabs from the Nile Valley, known as the Banu Hilal, entered the region in around 1000 spreading Islam and the Arabic language throughout Libya over the next three centuries.

By the beginning of the 15th century the Libyan, or Barbary, coast had become infamous as a haven for pirates. Habsburg Spain occupied Tripoli in 1510 but it fell to Ottoman corsairs in 1551. Direct control from Istanbul was superseded by rule through local Turkish governors (known as beys). In 1711 Ahmed Karamanli, an Ottoman cavalry officer, seized power and declared Libyan independence. Direct Ottoman rule was re-established in 1835 when Sultan Mahmud II made Libya a province of the Sublime Ports.

On 29 Sept. 1911 Italy declared war on the ailing Ottoman Empire and occupied Tripoli four days later. Italian control was confirmed following the signing of the Treaty of Ouchy in 1912 but local resistance, particularly by the Sanusi Order in Cyrenaica, confined Italian power to the coastal cities of Tripoli, Benghazi, Tobruk and Derna.

During the Second World War the British army expelled the Italians and their German allies, placing Tripolitania and Cyrenaica under British military administration and Fezzan under French control. This continued under a UN directive until 1951 when Libya gained independence. The former Amir of Cyrenaica, Muhammad Idris al Senussi, was crowned king.

The discovery of oil in 1959 brought rapid economic growth but resentment grew as wealth remained in the hands of the elite. Idris was deposed in Sept. 1969 by a group of army officers, 12 of whom formed the Revolutionary Command Council which, chaired by Col. Muammar Gaddafi, proclaimed the Libyan Arab Republic. In 1977 the Revolutionary Command Council was superseded by a more democratic People's Congress, though Gaddafi remained head of state. Throughout the 1980s Libya found itself at odds with its neighbours while deteriorating relations with the USA and other Western countries culminated in the US bombing of Tripoli in April 1986, a punishment for Gaddafi's alleged support of international terrorism. A US trade embargo was also enforced that year.

In 1992 the UN imposed sanctions after Libya refused to surrender suspects in the 1988 bombing of a Pan Am flight over Lockerbie in Scotland. In April 1999 Libya handed over two suspects to face trial under Scottish law in the Netherlands. In Jan. 2001 Abdelbaset Ali Mohamed Al-Megrahi was found guilty of murder and sentenced to life imprisonment. The UN suspended sanctions in 1999 but they were not lifted formally until Sept. 2003. The USA lifted its remaining sanctions in Sept. 2004 after Col. Gaddafi pledged to end his weapons of mass destruction programme. Libya's auction of oil and gas exploration licences in Jan. 2005 led to the return of US energy companies and full diplomatic ties between the two countries were resumed in May 2006.

In Aug. 2009 Al-Megrahi was released from prison on compassionate grounds following a ruling by the Scottish courts. He was said to be suffering terminal cancer. His subsequent enthusiastic reception in Libya raised tensions with the USA.

In Feb. 2011 Gaddafi faced popular demands, originating in Benghazi and spreading to other cities, for him to step down. In March he began a military campaign to seize back the east of the country from insurgents. In response, the UN, with the backing of the Arab League, authorized a no-fly zone over the country and air strikes as required in an attempt to protect civilians. In May the International Criminal Court issued an arrest warrant for Gaddafi, citing his 'widespread and systematic attacks' on civilians. In Aug. rebel forces seized control of Tripoli and a National Transitional Council (NTC) became the de facto government as Gaddafi went into hiding. The following month, rebels launched a fresh assault on Gaddafi's home town of Sirte, one of the last remaining pockets of loyalist support. On 20 Oct. 2011 Gaddafi was found hiding in the city by National Transitional Council troops and killed. One of Gaddafi's sons, Mutassim Gaddafi, a senior army officer and security adviser, was also killed. The death of the Muammar Gaddafi brought an end to 42 years of violent rule and on 23 Oct. 2011 in Benghazi the NTC formally announced the liberation of the country.

In Aug. 2012 the NTC handed power to the General National Congress (GNC), which itself was replaced in June 2014 by a newly-elected parliament. However, from Sept. 2014—and amid a climate of ongoing civil unrest—there were two competing governments: the GNC (dominated by Islamist factions) in Tripoli and its internationally-recognized successor, based in Tobruk. Then in Dec. 2015 a UN-brokered agreement was signed setting out plans for a new government of national accord to serve as the sole legitimate government, although its implementation remained uncertain as of March 2016. Meanwhile, in Feb. 2015 Egypt launched air strikes against Islamic State targets in the country.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Libya is bounded in the north by the Mediterranean Sea, east by Egypt and Sudan, south by Chad and Niger and west by Algeria and Tunisia. The area is 1,759,540 sq. km. The population at the 2006 census was 5,657,692; density, 3.2 per sq. km. Population estimate, Jan. 2012: 5,363,000. The United Nations population estimate for 2012 was 6,283,000. In 2011, 78.1% of the population lived in urban areas. The population is largely a mixture of Arab and Berber ethnicities. Among foreign residents the largest groups are from other African nations.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 6.28m.

Libya is divided into 22 districts (sha'biyat). Capitals and populations (2006 census) are as follows:

	Capital	Population
Al Butnan	Tubruq (Tobruk)	157,747
Al Jabal al Akhdar	Al Bayda	206,180
Al Jabal al Gharbi	Gharyan	302,705
Al Jifarah	Al' Aziziyah	451,175
Al Jufrah	Hun	52,092
Al Kufrah	Al Jawf	48,328
Al Marj	Al Marj	184,531
Al Marqab	Al Hums	427,886
Al Wahah	Ajdabiya	179,155
An Nuqat al Khams	Zuwarah	287,359
Ash Shati'	Birat	78,563
Az Zawiyah	Az Zawiyah	290,637
Benghazi	Benghazi	674,951

Surt	Surt	141,495
Tarabulus (Tripoli)	Tarabulus (Tripoli)	1,063,571
Wadi al Hayat	Awbari	76,258

The two largest cities are Tripoli, the capital (population of 1,063,571 in 2006), and Benghazi (912,000 in 2000).

The official language is Arabic.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

Estimates, 2008: births, 147,000; deaths, 26,000. Estimated rates, 2008 (per 1,000 population): births, 23.3; deaths, 4.1. Life expectancy (2013), 73.5 years for men and 77.3 for women. Annual population growth rate, 2000–08, 2.0%; infant mortality, 2010, 13 per 1,000 live births; fertility rate, 2008, 2.7 births per woman.

CLIMATE

The coastal region has a warm temperate climate, with mild wet winters and hot dry summers, although most of the country suffers from aridity. Tripoli, Jan. 52°F (11.1°C), July 81°F (27.2°C). Annual rainfall 16" (400 mm). Benghazi, Jan. 56°F (13.3°C), July 77°F (25°C). Annual rainfall 11" (267 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

Following the uprising in 2011 that culminated in the capture and killing of Libya's incumbent leader, Col. Gaddafi, the National Transitional Council (NTC)—formed in Feb. 2011—formally announced the country's 'liberation' in Oct. and appointed an executive committee to serve as the de facto interim government.

A panel to draft a new constitution was elected in Feb. 2014. Once the new constitution has won approval by referendum, parliamentary elections are required to be held within six months. However, as of March 2016 the country remained riven by civil unrest and political instability.

National Anthem

'Libya, Libya, Libya'; words by Al Bashir Al Arebi, tune by Mohammed Abdel Wahab. Originally the Kingdom of Libya's national anthem from 1951–69, 'Libya, Libya, Libya' became the country's new national anthem following the death of Muammar Gaddafi in 2011.

RECENT ELECTIONS

Elections to the General National Congress were held in July 2012. The National Forces Alliance won 39 seats, the Justice and Construction Party (the Muslim Brotherhood's political party in Libya) 17, the National Front Party 3, National Centrist Party 2, Union for Homeland 2 and Wadi Al-Hayah Gathering 2. 15 other parties won one seat each and 120 seats went to independents.

In June 2014 elections intended to create a new parliament replacing the General National Congress took place. As political party lists were banned under the new electoral system, all candidates ran as independents. Nonetheless, the liberal faction held a majority over the Islamists in the newly created 200-seat 'House of Representatives'. However, in Nov. 2014 the Supreme Court declared the elections unconstitutional. Both the House of Representatives and the General National Congress continue to claim legitimacy as Libya's legal government.

CURRENT GOVERNMENT

In early May 2016 Libya had three competing governments—the House of Representatives and the General National Congress

(based in Tobruk and Tripoli respectively since Aug. 2014) and the Government of National Accord (based in Tripoli since April 2016). Despite signing a UN-brokered deal to create the Government of National Accord, the other regimes remained in place in May 2016.

Prime Minister of the UN-backed Government of National Accord: Fayež Serraj; b. 1960 (since April 2016).

Prime Minister of the House of Representatives: Abdullah al-Thamay; b. 1954 (since March 2014).

Prime Minister of the General National Congress (acting): Khalifa al-Ghawi (since March 2015).

CURRENT LEADERS

Fayež Serraj

Position

UN-backed Prime Minister

Introduction

Fayež Serraj was named prime minister of the UN-backed Government of National Accord (GNA) on 5 April 2016. His administration is recognized by Western powers as Libya's only legitimate government, to replace two rival administrations: the new General National Congress (GNC), based in Tripoli, and the elected House of Representatives, in the eastern city of Tobruk.

Early Life

Fayež Serraj was born on 20 Feb. 1960 in Tripoli. An architect by profession, Serraj entered politics after Muammar Gaddafi was deposed in 2011. In July 2012 he joined the interim General National Congress tasked with facilitating the transition to democracy. He was elected to the successor House of Representatives in June 2014, before it fled to Tobruk in Aug. after militias set up the new rival GNC in Tripoli.

In Dec. 2015 the GNC and House of Representatives signed a UN-mediated agreement establishing the GNA, headed by Serraj. He travelled to Tripoli in March 2016, although as of early May the GNA's rivals were yet to formally recognize its authority.

Career in Office

Serraj is tasked with leading the fight against Islamic State and paving the way for democratic elections. He must also address a banking crisis, a steep rise in the cost of living and the high number of people displaced by civil war.

Abdullah al-Thamay

Position

Rival Prime Minister

Introduction

Abdullah al-Thamay became premier in March 2014 after Ali Zeidan was ousted. His government (based in Tobruk) was internationally recognized until the establishment of a UN-brokered government in April 2016.

Early Life

Al-Thamay, born in Jan. 1954 in Kano, Nigeria, served in the military and in Aug. 2013 was appointed defence minister by Zeidan. After the General National Congress (GNC) ousted Zeidan, Al-Thamay became prime minister on 11 March 2014.

Career in Office

Within weeks of taking office, Al-Thamay tendered his resignation after a violent attack on his family. In May the GNC elected Ahmed Maiteeq as premier, but his election was contested by the Supreme Judicial Council and on 9 June the Supreme Court reinstated al-Thamay. In Aug. 2014 the Islamist-backed Libya Dawn militia captured Tripoli so al-Thamay's government moved to Tobruk. Al-Thamay again resigned but a new House of Representatives re-elected him in Sept. that year. This administration won backing from regional powers including the UAE and Egypt, as well as the USA and the EU. The rival Tripoli administration was supported by Qatar, Turkey and Libya Dawn.

Against a troubled backdrop, little government business was done. A UN-brokered deal signed by the rival administrations in Dec. 2015 established a new presidential council and national unity government. However, as of early May 2016 Al-Thamay was yet to formally cede power to the new UN-supported premier, Fayež Serraj.

Khalifa al-Ghawi

Position

Rival Prime Minister

Introduction

On 31 March 2015 Khalifa al-Ghawi was appointed interim prime minister of Libya's Tripoli-based government—one of two rival governments at the time (the other based in Tobruk).

Early Life

Al-Ghawi, an engineer and businessman, joined the Islamist-dominated Tripoli-based government as a deputy to the premier, Omar al-Hasi, in Sept. 2014. Al-Hasi was dismissed from office in March 2015 and al-Ghawi was appointed to succeed him.

Career in Office

Al-Ghawi continued al-Hasi's accommodation of Ansar al-Sharia (considered an Islamic State-linked terrorist organization by the USA and the UN). In Dec. 2015 he signed a UN-brokered deal with the Tobruk administration to form a new presidential council and national unity government. However, by early May 2016 he was yet to cede power, despite alleged splits within his own camp.

DEFENCE

Defence expenditure in 2013 was estimated US$4,771m. (US$795 per capita), representing 5.0% of GDP. The former Libyan Army effectively ceased to exist as an organized force in 2011 as the civil war escalated. Much of the equipment was damaged or destroyed during the conflict.

ECONOMY

Petroleum and natural gas contributed 71.6% to GDP in 2007; followed by public administration, defence and services, 6.9%; finance, insurance and real estate, 6.2%; and construction, 4.3%.

Libya featured among the ten most corrupt countries in the world in a 2015 survey of 168 countries carried out by the anti-corruption organization Transparency International.

Overview

Libya has one of the highest GDP per capita rates in Africa, but remains hampered by political turmoil and the challenges of reconstruction following the 2011 uprising. The country had enjoyed solid growth in the first decade of the century, supported by international investment. In 2003 UN sanctions were lifted after Libya admitted complicity in the 1988 Lockerbie bombing and in 2004 US sanctions were lifted after the country agreed to abandon its nuclear weapons programmes.

Libya suffered a recession in 2009 following the global downturn. There was subsequently a greater economic contribution from non-oil industries in the wake of increased government spending and the liberalization of the trade, tourism and service sectors. Following the Feb. 2011 revolution, GDP contracted by 61% but quickly rebounded, supported by an oil-financed consumption boom. The hydrocarbon sector accounted for about 96% of total fiscal revenue in 2013 (although only 2% of total employment). However, severe disruptions in production and exports, which began in mid-2013 as militant groups blockaded oil facilities, then reversed the post-revolution economic improvements.

Establishing political stability is essential for development, and economic diversification remains paramount in the medium to long term. Corruption and unemployment must also be addressed, with the youth jobless rate estimated at around 50%.

Currency

The unit of currency is the Libyan dinar (LYD) of 1,000 millemes. The dinar was devalued 15% in Nov. 1994, and alongside the official exchange rate a new rate was applied to private sector imports. Foreign exchange reserves were US$29,315m. in June 2005. Total money supply in May 2005 was 11,552m. dinars. There was inflation of 2.6% in 2013 and 2.8% in 2014.

Budget

In 2010 revenues totalled 62,037m. dinars and expenditures 46,961m. dinars. Oil revenue accounted for 81.6% of revenues in 2010.

Performance

Total GDP in 2014 was US$41.1bn. The economy grew by 5.0% in 2010, but the Libyan armed conflict resulted in the economy contracting by 62.1% in 2011. The country began to recover the following year, with real GDP growth of 104.5%—the highest percentage increase of any country in 2012. However, there was negative growth of 13.6% in 2013 and 24.0% in 2014 as internal turmoil returned to the country.

Banking and Finance

A National Bank of Libya was established in 1955; it was renamed the Central Bank of Libya in 1972. All foreign banks were nationalized by Dec. 1970. In 1972 the government set up the Libyan Arab Foreign Bank. The Agricultural Bank was set up to give loans and subsidies to farmers and to assist them in marketing their crops. Following the popular uprising against Col. Gaddafi in 2011, international sanctions were imposed on the central bank and its subsidiaries. As of March 2016 the competing governments in Tripoli and Tobruk each had their own Central Bank governors.

A stock exchange was opened in Tripoli in March 2007.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Libya's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2011 were the equivalent of 7.1 tonnes per capita. An Environmental Performance Index compiled in 2016 ranked Libya 119th of 180 countries, with 63.3%. The index examined various factors in nine areas—agriculture, air quality, biodiversity and habitat, climate and energy, fisheries, forests, health impacts, water and sanitation, and water resources.

Electricity

Installed capacity in 2011 was an estimated 8.9m. kW. Production was 27.61bn. kWh in 2011 (down from 32.75bn. kWh in 2010) and consumption per capita 4,517 kWh.

Oil and Gas

Oil accounts for 30% of Libya's GDP. Oil production in 2014 was 23.3m. tonnes, down from 71.1m. tonnes in 2012 although up slightly from 22.5m. tonnes in 2011 when the country was affected even more by civil war for much of the year. Proven reserves (2014) 48.4bn. bbls, the highest of any African country. Some analysts believe total reserves may be as high as 100bn. bbls. The National Oil Corporation (NOC) is the state's organization for the exploitation of oil resources. Libya's first oilfields were discovered in 1959, but the offshore sector remains relatively unexplored although the decision to abandon programmes for developing weapons of mass destruction in 2003 led to greatly increased interest among foreign oil companies. Oil export revenues more than doubled between 1998 and 2003. Production increased by a third between 2002 and 2008, although it has since fallen.

Proven natural gas reserves totalled 1.5trn. cu. metres in 2012. Production (2012), 12.2bn. cu. metres.

Water

Since 1984 a US$20bn. project has been under way to bring water from aquifers underlying the Sahara to the inhabited coastal areas of Libya. This scheme, called the 'Great Man-Made River', is intended, on completion, to bring 6,000 cu. metres of water a day along some 5,000 km of pipes. Phase I was completed in Aug. 1991; Phase II of the project (covering the west of Libya) was completed in Sept. 1996 and work on Phase III was completed in 2009. The river is providing Libya's main centres of population with clean water as well as making possible the improvement and expansion of agriculture. The whole project is more than three-quarters complete.

Minerals

Iron ore deposits have been found in the south.

Agriculture

Only the coastal zone, which covers an area of about 17,000 sq. miles, is really suitable for agriculture. Of some 25m. acres of productive land, nearly 20m. are used for grazing and about 1m. for static farming. Agriculture employs around 17% of the workforce. The sub-desert zone produces the alfalfa plant. The desert zone and the Fezzan contain some fertile oases. In 2002 there were around 1.82m. ha. of arable land and 0.34m. ha. of permanent crops. 470,000 ha. were irrigated in 2002. There were about 40,000 tractors in 2002 and 3,400 harvester-threshers.

Cyrenaica has about 10m. acres of potentially productive land and is suitable for grazing. Certain areas are suitable for dry farming; in addition, grapes, olives and dates are grown. About 143,000 acres are used for settled farming; about 272,000 acres are covered by natural forests. The Agricultural Development Authority plans to reclaim 6,000 ha. each year for agriculture. In the Fezzan there are about 6,700 acres of irrigated gardens and about 297,000 acres are planted with date palms.

Production (2003 estimates, in 1,000 tonnes): watermelons, 218; potatoes, 195; onions, 180; tomatoes, 160; olives, 150; dates, 140; wheat, 125; barley, 80; oranges, 42.

Livestock (2003 estimates): 4.1m. sheep, 1.3m. goats, 130,000 cattle, 47,000 camels, 25m. chickens.

Forestry

Forest area in 2010 was 0.22m. ha. (0.1% of the land area). In 2011, 1.08m. cu. metres of roundwood were cut.

Fisheries

The catch in 2009 was 52,110 tonnes, entirely from marine waters.

INDUSTRY

Industry employs nearly 30% of the workforce. Small-scale private sector industrialization in the form of partnerships is permitted. Output (in 1,000 tonnes): cement (2010 estimate), 7,000; residual fuel oil (2011), 2,011; distillate fuel oil (2011), 1,828; jet fuels (2011), 499.

Labour

The labour force in 2010 was 2,379,000 (72.0% males). Libya had 18,000 people living in slavery according to the Walk Free Foundation's 2013 Global Slavery Index.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

In 1986 the USA applied a trade embargo on the grounds of Libya's alleged complicity in terrorism. Many of the economic sanctions were suspended in April 2004, and in June 2006 Libya was removed from Washington's list of state sponsors of terror. In 1992 UN sanctions were imposed for Libya's refusal to deliver suspected terrorists for trial in the UK or USA, but these were formally lifted in 2003.

Imports and Exports

In 2006 imports were valued at US$13.2bn. and exports at US$37.5bn. Some 80% of GDP derives from trade. Oil accounts for over 95% of exports. Main import suppliers in 2000 were Italy (24%), Germany (12%), Tunisia (9%) and the UK (7%); main export markets were Italy (33%), Germany (24%), Spain (10%) and France (5%).

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

There were 100,024 km of roads in 2002 (57.2% paved). In 2007 there were 1,388,200 passenger cars in use (225 per 1,000 inhabitants), plus 310,500 lorries and vans.

Rail

Although there have not been any operational railways since 1965, some routes were under construction at the outbreak of the civil conflict in Feb. 2011. However, the projects were then abandoned. Talks were held in early 2013 between Chinese and Russian companies and the Libya Rail Implementation Authority when Libya was starting to show signs of a recovery but as of early 2016 the projects were on hold again.

Civil Aviation

The UN ban on air traffic to and from Libya enforced since April 1992 was lifted in April 1999 following the handing over for trial of two suspected Lockerbie bombers. The national flag carrier, Libyan Airlines, was grounded in March 2011 as a result of the Libyan revolution but has now resumed operations. However, in Dec. 2014 all Libya-based carriers were added to the EU aviation safety blacklist, which either banned or restricted Libyan airlines from operating in the European Union.

Shipping

In Jan. 2009 there were 28 ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 239,000 GT.

Telecommunications

There were 1.23m. fixed telephone lines in 2010 (193.3 per 1,000 inhabitants). Mobile phone subscribers numbered 9.53m. in 2009. There were 108.0 internet users per 1,000 inhabitants in 2009. Fixed internet subscriptions totalled 772,500 in 2009 (123.3 per 1,000 inhabitants). In June 2012 there were 560,000 Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The Civil, Commercial and Criminal codes are based mainly on the Egyptian model. Matters of personal status of family or succession matters affecting Muslims are dealt with in special courts according to the Muslim law. All other matters, civil, commercial and criminal, are tried in the ordinary courts, which have jurisdiction over everyone.

There are civil and penal courts in Tripoli and Benghazi, with subsidiary courts at Misratah and Darnah; courts of assize in Tripoli and Benghazi, and courts of appeal also in Tripoli and Benghazi.

The population in penal institutions in Jan. 2013 was 5,328 (81 per 100,000 of national population). The death penalty is in force; there were at least four executions in 2009 and 18 in 2010. However, there have been no judicial executions since 2010 although there have been widespread reports of extrajudicial executions. The International Centre for Prison Studies estimated in 2014 that 90.0% of prisoners had yet to receive a trial.

Education

In 2006 there were 755,338 primary school pupils and 732,614 secondary level pupils. In 2009 the government launched a five-year US$9bn. plan to reform higher education and scientific research through strengthening international ties and improving the information technology network as well as creating a National Authority for Scientific Research. There are 12 state universities in Libya (of which Al Fateh University in Tripoli and Garyounis University in Benghazi are the largest), eight other higher education institutions and eight oil/bank training centres/petroleum training and qualifying institutes. In 2003 there were 375,028 tertiary level students and 15,711 academic staff. Adult literacy in 2009 was estimated at 88.9%.

Health

There were 7,070 physicians, 850 dentistry personnel and 27,160 nursing and midwifery personnel in 2004. Provision of hospital beds in 2006 was 37 per 10,000 population.

RELIGION

Islam is declared the State religion, but the right of others to practise their religion is provided for. In 2010 an estimated 96.6% of the population were Muslim (almost all Sunnis) according to the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

Libya has five sites on the UNESCO World Heritage List: the Archaeological Site of Leptis Magna (inscribed on the list in 1982); the Archaeological Site of Sabratha (1982); the Archaeological Site of Cyrene (1982); the Rock-art Sites of Tadrart Acacus (1985); and the Old Town of Ghadamès (1986).

Press

In 2008 there were six daily newspapers with a combined circulation of 100,000.

Tourism

In 2007 there were 106,000 non-resident visitors, down from 125,000 in 2006.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Liechtenstein is a sovereign state with a history dating back to 1342 when Count Hartmann III became ruler of the county of Vaduz. Additions were later made to the count's domains and by 1434 the territory reached its present boundaries. On 23 Jan. 1719 Emperor Charles VI constituted the two counties as the Principality of Liechtenstein. In 1862 the constitution established an elected diet. After the First World War, Liechtenstein was represented abroad by Switzerland. Swiss currency was adopted in 1921. On 5 Oct. 1921 a new constitution based on that of Switzerland extended democratic rights, but in March 2003 the people of Liechtenstein voted in a referendum to give their prince the power to govern without reference to elected representatives.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Liechtenstein is bounded on the east by Austria and the west by Switzerland. Total area 160 sq. km (61.8 sq. miles). The population (Dec. 2013) was 37,129 (18,729 females), including 12,519 resident foreigners, giving a density of 232 per sq. km.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 38,000.

The population of Liechtenstein is predominantly rural. Population of Schaan (2013), 5,925; Vaduz (2013), 5,372.

The official language is German.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

In 2011 there were 395 births and 248 deaths (rates of 10.9 per 1,000 population and 6.8 respectively). The annual population growth rate was 0.7% over the period 2007–12.

CLIMATE

There is a distinct difference in climate between the higher mountains and the valleys. In summer the peaks can often be foggy while the valleys remain sunny and warm, while in winter the valleys can often be foggy and cold whilst the peaks remain sunny and comparatively warm. Vaduz, Jan. 0°C, July 20°C. Annual rainfall 1,090 mm.

Liechtenstein is a constitutional monarchy ruled by the princes of the House of Liechtenstein.

The reigning Prince is Hans-Adam II, b. 14 Feb. 1945; he succeeded his father Prince Francis Joseph, 13 Nov. 1989 (he exercised the prerogatives to which the Sovereign is entitled from 26 Aug. 1984); married on 30 July 1967 to Countess Marie Kinsky von Wchinitz und Tettau. Offspring: Hereditary Prince Alois (b. 11 June 1968), married Duchess Sophie of Bavaria on 3 July 1993 (offspring: Prince Joseph Wenzel, b. 24 May 1995; Marie Caroline, b. 17 Oct. 1996; Georg Antonius, b. 20 April 1999; Nikolaus Sebastian, b. 6 Dec. 2000); Prince Maximilian (b. 16 May 1969), married Angela Brown on 29 Jan. 2000 (offspring: Alfons, b. 18 May 2001); Prince Constantin (b. 15 March 1972), married Countess Marie Kálnoky de Köröspatak on 17 July 1999 (offspring: Moritz, b. 27 May 2003; Georgina, b. 23 July 2005; Benedikt, b. 18 May 2008); Princess Tatjana (b. 10 April 1973), married Philipp von Lattorff on 5 June 1999 (offspring: Lukas, b. 13 May 2000; Elisabeth, b. 25 Jan. 2002; Marie, b. 18 Jan. 2004; Camilla, b. 4 Nov. 2005; Anna, b. 3 Aug. 2007; Sophie, b. 30 Oct. 2009; Maximilian, b. 17 Dec. 2011). The monarchy is hereditary in the male line.

The present constitution of 5 Oct. 1921 provided for a unicameral parliament (Landtag) of 15 members elected for four years, but this was amended to 25 members in 1988. Election is on the basis of proportional representation. The prince can call and dismiss the parliament, and following a referendum held on 16 March 2003, dismiss the government and veto bills. On parliamentary recommendation, he appoints the ministers. According to the constitution, the Government is a collegial body consisting of five ministers including the prime minister. Each minister has an Alternate who takes part in the meetings of the collegial Government if the minister is unavailable. Any group of 1,000 persons or any three communes may propose legislation (initiative). Bills passed by the parliament may be submitted to popular referendum. A law is valid when it receives a majority approval by the parliament and the prince's signed concurrence. The capital is Vaduz.

National Anthem

'Oben am jungen Rhein' ('Up above the young Rhine'); words by H. H. Jauch; tune, 'God save the Queen'.

RECENT ELECTIONS

At the elections on 1 and 3 Feb. 2013 the opposition Progressive Citizens' Party (FBP) gained 10 seats (40.0% of votes cast); the Patriotic Union (VU), 8 (33.5% of votes); the Independents, 4 (15.3%); the Free List (FL), 3 (11.1% of votes). Turnout was 79.8%.

CURRENT LEADERS

Hans-Adam II

Position
Prince

Introduction

Hans-Adam II succeeded his father, Francis Joseph II, as Prince of Liechtenstein in 1989. A successful banker with a large personal fortune, in March 2003 he was granted extensive legal rights which effectively made him Europe's only absolute monarch. He handed day-to-day responsibility for running the country to his son, Crown Prince Alois, in 2004.

Early Life

Hans-Adam, whose full name is Johannes Adam Pius Ferdinand Alois Josef Maria Marko d'Aviano von und zu Liechtenstein, was born on 14 Feb. 1945. The eldest son of the ruling Prince Francis Joseph II, he was brought up with his three brothers and one sister in Vaduz castle. He was schooled in Austria and Vienna, worked for a short while at a London bank and studied at the St Gallen School of Economics and Social Sciences, graduating with a master's degree in 1969.

In 1970 he was named head of the Prince of Liechtenstein Foundation, a position he retained until 1984. In 1972 his father put him in charge of running the royal estate, during which time he won a reputation for sound management and an interest in the wider economic sphere. In Aug. 1984 Franz Joseph transferred much of his executive power to Hans-Adam, who formally acceded to the throne on his father's death in Nov. 1989.

Career in Office

Hans-Adam has striven to maintain Liechtenstein's strong economy, consolidating its position as an offshore financial centre. In 1990 he successfully concluded membership talks with the United Nations. A year later, despite having previously declared his support for European unity, he ruled out a bid for membership of the European Union.

In March 2003 Hans-Adam called a national referendum on constitutional amendments which would award him the right to dissolve the government, appoint judges and unilaterally veto legislation. In return he proposed that his right to rule by emergency decree would be reduced to six months, his entitlement to nominate government officials be terminated and that the future of the monarchy be subject to referendum. He threatened to leave for Vienna if the proposals were rejected, a move many Liechtensteiners feared would severely diminish the country's economic standing. Despite the presence of a strong pro-democracy group within Liechtenstein and the threat that the nation might lose its membership of the Council of Europe if the motion was passed, the reforms won 64.3% backing.

In Aug. 2004 Hans-Adam formally transferred responsibility for day to day affairs to his son, Alois. However, he reiterated he had no intention of abdicating the throne. In July 2012 voters rejected by a large margin a proposal to end the ruling prince's political power to veto the results of national referendums. In Nov. 2014 Liechtenstein celebrated the 25th anniversary of Hans-Adam's accession to the throne.

ECONOMY

Liechtenstein is one of the world's richest countries with a well-diversified economy. Low taxes and bank secrecy laws have made Liechtenstein a successful financial centre.

Overview

Liechtenstein is a diversified and highly industrialized economy, with the world's third highest GDP per capita ratio after Qatar and Luxembourg. Industry and manufacturing comprise the largest sector, producing mainly capital- and research-intensive products and generating close to 40% of GDP. Much of the economy's wealth has been derived from its status as an offshore financial centre, with many international businesses establishing 'letter-box' offices in the state to take advantage of the 20% maximum tax rate. Financial services account for a third of Liechtenstein's GDP and over 15% of employment, and around 90% of financial business is conducted for non-residents. The country's earlier blacklisting by the OECD as an 'uncooperative tax haven' was removed in May 2009 after it committed to tackling money laundering.

Liechtenstein has limited natural resources and imports around 90% of its energy requirements. It has shared a common economic area with Switzerland since the conclusion of a customs treaty in 1923, after which it adopted the Swiss franc as the official currency. With its small domestic base, the economy has sought to capture foreign markets through global integration. Liechtenstein became a member of the European Free Trade Association in 1991, the European Economic Area in 1995 and the Schengen Area in 2011. As of 2015 around half of the workforce commuted into Liechtenstein daily.

Currency

Swiss currency has been in use since 1920 and became legal tender in 1924.

Budget

Budget (in 1,000 Swiss francs), 2008: revenue, 1,103,000; expenditure, 1,229,600. There is no public debt.

Performance

Real GDP growth was -5.0% in 2009. Total GDP in 2012 was US$5.5bn.

Banking and Finance

There were 16 banks in 2010. Combined total assets were 52,466.4m. Swiss francs in 2010.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Electricity

In 2011 the consumption of electricity was 398,000 MWh (imported 326,000 MWh; produced in Liechtenstein 72,000 MWh).

Agriculture

In 2013 there were 3,567 ha. of agricultural land. In 2009, 1,005 ha. (26.9% of all agricultural land—the highest proportion of any sovereign country) was set aside for organic farming. The rearing of cattle on the Alpine pastures is highly developed. In 2009 there were 6,078 cattle (including 2,993 dairy cows), 3,963 sheep, 1,811 pigs, 495 horses and 452 goats. Total production of dairy produce in 2009 was 13,308 tonnes.

Forestry

In 2010 there were 7,000 ha. of forest (43% of the land area). Timber production in 2011 was 26,000 cu. metres.

INDUSTRY

Liechtenstein has a broadly diversified economic structure with a significant emphasis on industrial production. The most important branches of the heavily export-oriented industry are mechanical engineering, plant construction, manufacturing of precision instruments, dental technology and the food-processing industry.

Labour

The workforce was 32,435 in 2007, including employees commuting from abroad (16,242 in 2007). The farming population went down from 70% in 1930 to 1.1% in 2007. The rapid change-over has led to the immigration of foreign workers (Austrians, Germans, Italians, Swiss).

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Liechtenstein has been in a customs union with Switzerland since 1923.

Imports and Exports

Value of the imports and exports of goods, excluding trade with and through Switzerland: imports, 2008, 2,461m. Swiss francs; exports, 2008; 4,245m. Swiss francs. Machinery, electronic goods and fabricated metals are both the leading imports and leading exports. Most trade is with other European countries.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

There are 400 km of roads. Postal buses are the chief means of public transportation within the country and to Austria and Switzerland. There were 28,102 cars in 2013. There were 403 road accidents in 2012 (one fatal).

Rail

The 10 km of main railway passing through the country is operated by Austrian Federal Railways.

Telecommunications

Liechtenstein had 18,559 main telephone lines in 2012 and 36,080 mobile phone subscriptions. In 2009 there were 751.9 fixed broadband subscriptions per 1,000 inhabitants and 452.2 mobile broadband subscriptions per 1,000 inhabitants.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The principality has its own civil and penal codes. The lowest court is the county court, Landgericht, presided over by one judge, which decides minor civil cases and summary criminal offences. The criminal court, Kriminalgericht, with a bench of five judges is for major crimes. Another court of mixed jurisdiction is the court of assizes (with three judges) for misdemeanours. Juvenile cases are treated in the Juvenile Court (with a bench of three judges). The superior court, Obergericht, and Supreme Court, Oberster Gerichtshof, are courts of appeal for civil and criminal cases (both with benches of five judges). An administrative court of appeal from government actions and the State Court determines the constitutionality of laws.

The death penalty was abolished in 1989. Some persons convicted by Liechtenstein are held in Austrian prisons.

Police

The principality has no army. In 2009 there were 88 police officers (excluding civilian staff, auxiliary police officers, village policemen and Swiss customs officers).

Education

In 2009 there were 16 primary, three upper, seven secondary and two grammar schools, with approximately 5,000 pupils and 640 teachers. There is a university, a music school and an art school.

Health

There is an obligatory sickness insurance scheme. In 2008 there was one hospital, but Liechtenstein has an agreement with the Swiss cantons of St Gallen and Graubünden and the Austrian Federal State of Vorarlberg that her citizens may use certain hospitals. In 2008 there were 87 physicians, 27 dentists and two pharmacies.

RELIGION

Religious affiliation at the 2010 census: Roman Catholic, 75.9%; Protestant, 8.5%; Muslim, 5.4%; other religion, 2.2%; no religion, 5.4%; not stated, 2.6%.

CULTURE

Press

In 2008 there were two daily newspapers (Liechtensteiner Vaterland and Liechtensteiner Volksblatt) with an estimated total circulation of 20,000.

Tourism

In 2014, 62,305 overnight tourists visited Liechtenstein.

DIPLOMATIC REPRESENTATIVES

In 1919 Switzerland agreed to represent the interests of Liechtenstein in countries where it has diplomatic missions and where Liechtenstein is not represented in its own right. In so doing Switzerland always acts only on the basis of mandates of a general or specific nature, which it may either accept or refuse, while Liechtenstein is free to enter into direct relations with foreign states or to set up its own additional diplomatic missions.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Lithuania has been inhabited since the 10th millennium BC, with agriculture developing in the 3rd millennium BC. Baltic tribes settled in the area around 2000 BC. In the 13th century AD their lands came under threat from two German religious orders, the Teutonic Knights and the Livonian Brothers of the Sword, prompting several of the tribes to establish a defensive union. The union defeated the Livonians in 1236 and in 1250 its leader, Mindaugas, signed a peace treaty with the Teutonic Order.

In 1253 Lithuania was proclaimed a state, with Mindaugas its crowned head. In the second half of the 13th century the Grand Duchy of Lithuania suffered internal unrest and was repeatedly raided by the Turks and Mongols of the Golden Horde. In the 14th century, led by Grand Duke Gediminas, Lithuania repulsed the threat from the Golden Horde and expanded eastwards. Gediminas established relations with the Christian church while retaining pagan beliefs.

In 1386 Lithuania's ruler Jogaila married Jadwiga, queen of Poland, and became king of Poland. During the 14th century Lithuania was Christianized. Lithuania continued its expansion and by 1430 extended from the Baltic to the Black Sea. Lithuania and Poland were allied from 1447 and from 1501 they shared the same leader. In 1569 the Lublin Union legislated for a Lithuanian-Polish commonwealth. Polish culture was increasingly influential and Polish became the official state language in 1696. The constitution promulgated on 3 May 1791 is generally regarded as Europe's first national constitution (and the world's second after the USA). However, its democratic and egalitarian tone provoked Prussia and Russia.

During partitions of the Polish-Lithuanian Commonwealth by Russia, Prussia and Austria in 1772, 1793 and 1795, Lithuania was divided between Russia and Prussia. From 1795 Russia ruled most of Lithuania, including its capital, Vilnius. Uprisings were quelled in 1831 and 1863. In the second half of the 19th century, a cultural awakening interacted with an independence movement. On 5 Dec. 1905 at the Great Seimas (Congress) of Vilnius, Lithuanian representatives demanded political autonomy within the Russian Empire. The demand failed but in its aftermath pro-independence political parties were formed.

During the First World War Lithuania was occupied by Germany. Following the Russian revolution, heavy fighting occurred between Soviet Russian, German, Polish and Lithuanian forces in Feb. 1918. In Nov. 1918, after Germany's surrender, Lithuania declared full independence. In April 1919 the Soviets withdrew and the reformed Lithuanian government established a democratic republic. Lithuanian independence was recognized by the Treaty of Versailles later that year. Territorial disputes led to Lithuania supporting an uprising in the Memelland (under French jurisdiction from 1920) in Jan. 1923. In May 1924 Memelland became an autonomous part of Lithuania. There was also continued conflict with Poland over ownership of Vilnius. Following the establishment of a Polish-controlled mini-state around the city in 1922, Lithuania maintained a formal state of war with Poland.

In Dec. 1926 an internal coup deposed Lithuania's elected government and a non-democratic regime was installed. In 1938, under Polish pressure, diplomatic relations with Poland were restored. The secret protocol of the Soviet-German non-aggression pact of 1939 assigned the greater part of Lithuania to the Soviet sphere of influence. Soviet troops occupied Lithuania in June 1940 and it became part of the USSR on 3 Aug. 1940. Following the German invasion of the USSR in 1941, Lithuania was occupied by Germany. Lithuanian armed groups fought against or with German troops, according to regional and ideological loyalties. Pogroms took place against the Jewish population, which had risen to 250,000 following influxes of refugees from Poland. In 1944 the USSR reclaimed Lithuania as a Soviet Republic, with the agreement of the USA and Britain. An estimated 350,000 Lithuanians were deported to Siberia. In 1949 the Soviets closed most Lithuanian churches. More deportations occurred in 1956, when Poles and Russians were encouraged to move to Vilnius.

In 1988 the Lithuanian Movement for Reconstruction (Sąjūdis) drew up a programme of democratic and national rights. In the same year the ruling communists relaxed anti-nationalist measures and legalized a multi-party system. On 11 March 1990 the newly elected Lithuanian Supreme Soviet declared independence, a move rejected by the USSR. Initially despatched to Vilnius to enforce conscription, Soviet army units occupied key buildings in the face of mounting popular unrest. On 13 Jan. 1991 the army fired on demonstrators. A referendum held in Feb. 1991 produced a 90.5% vote in favour of independence. The USSR recognized Lithuania's independence on 6 Sept. 1991, with all Russian troops withdrawn by Aug. 1993. The 1992 Lithuanian constitution provided for a presidency and Algirdas Brazauskas won the first presidential elections the following year. Lithuanian became the official language in Jan. 1995, prompting protests from some Polish and Russian speakers. Lithuania joined NATO on 29 March 2004 and became a member of the EU on 1 May 2004.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Lithuania is bounded in the north by Latvia, east and south by Belarus, and west by Poland, the Russian enclave of Kaliningrad and the Baltic Sea. The total area is 65,300 sq. km (25,212 sq. miles), including 2,265 sq. km (875 sq. miles) of inland waters, and the population (2011 census) 3,043,429 (1,640,825 females); density, 48.3 per sq. km. In Jan. 2014 the population was estimated at 2,943,472.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 2.88m.

In 2011, 67.1% of the population lived in urban areas. Of the 2011 census population, Lithuanians accounted for 84.2%, Poles 6.6%, Russians 5.8% (9.4% in 1989), Belarusians 1.2% and Ukrainians 0.5%.

There are ten counties (with capitals of the same name): Alytus; Kaunas; Klaipėda; Marijampolė; Panevėžys; Šiauliai; Taurage; Telšiai; Utena; Vilnius.

The capital is Vilnius (2011 census population, 535,631). Other large towns are Kaunas (315,933 in 2011), Klaipėda (162,360), Šiauliai (109,328) and Panevėžys (99,690).

The official language is Lithuanian, but ethnic minorities have the right to official use of their language where they form a substantial part of the population. All residents who applied by 3 Nov. 1991 received Lithuanian citizenship, requirements for which are ten years' residence and competence in Lithuanian.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2009: births, 36,682; deaths, 42,032; marriages, 20,542; divorces, 9,270; infant deaths, 181. Rates (per 1,000 population): birth, 11.0; death, 12.6; marriage, 6.2; divorce, 2.8. The population started to decline in 1993, a trend which is set to continue. Annual population growth rate, 2000–05, –0.5%. In 2002, 8,386 births were registered to unmarried mothers and there were 18,907 legally induced abortions. Life expectancy at birth in 2007 was 65.9 years for males and 77.7 years for females. In 2006 the most popular age range for marrying was 25–29 for males and 20–24 for females. Infant mortality, 2010, five per 1,000 live births; fertility rate, 2008, 1.3 births per woman (one of the lowest rates in the world). In 2002 there were 7,086 emigrants and 5,110 immigrants.

Lithuania has one of the world's highest suicide rates, at 33.3 per 100,000 inhabitants in 2012 (a rate of 59.5 among males but only 10.9 among females). The male suicide rate is the highest in any country.

CLIMATE

Vilnius, Jan. –2.8°C, July 20.5°C. Annual rainfall 520 mm. Klaipėda, Jan. –0.6°C, July 19.4°C. Annual rainfall 770 mm.

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

A referendum to approve a new constitution was held on 25 Oct. 1992. Parliament is the 141-member Seimas. Under a new electoral law passed in July 2000, 71 of the parliament's 141 members will defeat rivals for their seats if they receive the most votes in a single round of balloting. Previously they had to win 50% of the votes or face a run-off against the nearest competitor. The parliament's 70 other seats are distributed according to the proportional popularity of the political parties at the ballot box.

The Constitutional Court is empowered to rule on whether proposed laws conflict with the constitution or existing legislation. It comprises nine judges who serve nine-year terms, one third rotating every three years.

CURRENT LEADERS

Dalia Grybauskaitė

Position

President

Introduction

Dalia Grybauskaitė was sworn in as the first female president of Lithuania on 12 July 2009 after a landslide election victory. She left her job as EU commissioner for financial programming and budget to stand as an independent candidate, backed by the incumbent centre-right government. Renowned as a tough negotiator and skilled economist, she took office during the worst economic crisis since the dissolution of the Soviet Union. Her re-election in May 2014, albeit with a reduced vote share, marked the first time in the country's history that a president had been returned for two consecutive terms.

Early Life

Grybauskaitė was born on 1 March 1956 in Vilnius, the then capital of the Lithuanian Soviet Socialist Republic, and went on to study political and economic science at Zhdanov University (now St Petersburg State University).

After graduating, Grybauskaitė returned to Lithuania and embarked on a career as a lecturer at the department of political economy at Vilnius Higher Party School, in which role she worked for seven years. She received her doctorate in economic sciences from the Moscow Academy of Social Sciences in 1988.

Following the dissolution of the USSR and Lithuanian independence, Grybauskaitė completed a special course for leaders at Georgetown University in Washington in 1991. She subsequently entered government, going on to head departments in the ministries of international economic relations and foreign affairs between 1991 and 1994. She was Lithuania's representative when it entered into the European Union Free Trade Agreement in 1993.

She continued her involvement with the EU in 1994, when she was appointed envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary at the Lithuanian mission to the EU. She continued her diplomatic work when she moved to the Lithuanian embassy in the USA.

In 1999 Grybauskaitė was appointed vice-minister of finance and foreign affairs in the cabinet of Prime Minister Andrius Kubilius. In this role she was responsible for conducting negotiations with international institutions including the World Bank and the IMF. In 2001 she was made minister of finance in the government of Algirdas Brazauskas.

Lithuania acceded to the EU on 1 May 2004, with Grybauskaitė appointed EU commissioner responsible for managing the EU budget and embarking on an ambitious programme of reform. In 2005 she criticized the UK's presidency of the EU, stating that the 'main obstacle' to reaching agreement on budgetary reform was Britain's insistence that it retain its rebate.

On 26 Feb. 2009 Grybauskaitė ended months of speculation by announcing her intention to stand in the forthcoming presidential elections. A popular figure across party lines, her entry into the race rendered the election a foregone conclusion, with opposition candidates either withdrawing or remaining in the race only to develop support ahead of elections to the European parliament. In the event, Grybauskaitė gained 69.1% of the vote, against 11.8% for her nearest challenger, Algirdas Butkevičius.

Career in Office

Grybauskaitė's victory was broadly popular, with several media commentators comparing the optimism that her election inspired with that seen in the United States on the inauguration of President Obama. In her inaugural address she promised to invest in local government and to narrow the gap between rich and poor in Lithuanian society, although she supported austerity measures to reduce the long-term impact of the prevailing economic crisis. She has also said that the reinforcement of Lithuania's energy security was among her top priorities and that she would seek to secure the provision of extra funds from the EU to develop energy links with the West and reduce dependence on Russia.

In Dec. 2012, following parliamentary elections in Oct., Grybauskaitė approved Algirdas Butkevičius, the leader of the opposition Social Democrats and a former rival for the presidency, as prime minister at the head of a new coalition government. She won a second term as president by winning the elections of May 2014.

Despite her close association with the EU, Grybauskaitė had initially promised that greater integration into Europe would not come at the price of deteriorating bilateral relations with Russia and that she would adopt a less confrontational approach to issues of international relations. However, in the wake of Russian intervention in Ukraine and annexation of Crimea in 2014, she said in Aug. that year that Russia was 'practically in a war with Europe'.

On 1 Jan. 2015 she oversaw Lithuania's adoption of the euro single currency.

Algirdas Butkevičius

Position

Prime Minister

Introduction

Leader of the Social Democratic Party of Lithuania (LSDP), Algirdas Butkevičius became prime minister in Dec. 2012 at the head of a coalition government. While espousing fiscal responsibility, he was expected to moderate the austerity programme of the previous government.

Early Life

Born on 19 Nov. 1958 in Paežeriai in Radviliškis district, Butkevičius graduated in engineering economics from the Vilnius Civil Engineering Institute in 1984 and worked in the Vilkaviškis district for the industrial association Žemūktechnika from 1982–85. From 1985–90 he was an architect and inspector for the state construction and architecture unit. In 1991 he gained a diploma in technical management from the Lithuanian Management Academy and in 1995 was awarded a master's degree in management from the Kaunas University of Technology.

After serving as deputy governor of Vilkaviškis district from 1991–95, Butkevičius spent a year as director of research and marketing for the private company, AB Vilkauta. He joined the LSDP in 1992 and was chairman of the party's Vilkaviškis branch from 1995–97. He sat on the Vilkaviškis municipal council from 1990–97 and again from 2000–02. Elected to parliament in 1996, he chaired its budget and finance committee from 2001–04. In 2004 he was appointed finance minister, serving for five months in the administration of Prime Minister Brazauskas. He resigned in April 2005 in protest at government proposals to introduce a corporate turnover tax. From 2006–08 he was minister for transport and communications under Prime Minister Kirkilas, overseeing Lithuania's participation in the 'east-west corridor' project to develop a transport network from Sweden to Vilnius.

After the LSDP lost power in 2008, Butkevičius was elected party chairman in March 2009 and unsuccessfully contested the presidency later that year. After four years of stringent austerity by the government of Andrius Kubilius, Butkevičius campaigned ahead of the 2012 parliamentary election on a platform of observing fiscal discipline and keeping the budget deficit under control while relaxing wage restraints to boost the economy. In Oct. 2012 the LSDP became the biggest party in parliament and entered negotiations to form a coalition government.

Career in Office

Butkevičius took office on 13 Dec. 2012 at the head of a four-party centre-left coalition after prolonged disagreement with President Grybauskaitė, who opposed the inclusion in the coalition of Labour Party members facing allegations of misconduct.

On the economic front Butkevičius has had to combat high unemployment and low economic growth, while keeping to agreed borrowing targets.

In foreign affairs he initially signalled his intention to build better relations with Russia, although Moscow's perceived aggression towards Ukraine from 2014 raised concerns over the long-term security of the Baltic states and prompted the reinforcement of NATO's military presence in the region. Butkevičius has also encouraged closer integration with the European Union. In July 2013 Lithuania took over the rotating six-month EU presidency for the first time since its accession in 2004. Then, on 1 Jan. 2015, having earlier gained the agreement of his coalition partners to target accession to the eurozone, he oversaw Lithuania's adoption of the single currency.

DEFENCE

Conscription ended on 1 July 2009 but was reintroduced in 2015 in view of Russia's military intervention in Ukraine. Conscripts between the ages of 19–26 are subjected to nine months of service. In 2013 defence expenditure totalled US$355m. (US$101 per capita), representing 0.8% of GDP.

Army

The Land Forces numbered 8,200 in 2011 and included one rapid reaction brigade. Reserves numbered 6,700 in 2011 and there were also 4,700 active reservists in the National Defence Voluntary Forces. There was a paramilitary riflemen union numbering 9,600 and a state border guard service of 5,000 operates under the ministry of internal affairs.

A joint Polish/Lithuanian battalion (LITPOLBAT), which was a component of the EU's rapid reaction forces, was disbanded in 2007. However, it is being replaced with a Lithuanian/Polish/Ukrainian Brigade (LITPOLUKRBRIG).

Navy

In 2011 the Navy numbered 530 personnel (120 conscripts). It operates several vessels including four patrol and coastal combatants. Lithuania, Estonia and Latvia have established a joint naval unit 'BALTRON' (Baltic Naval Squadron), with bases at Klaipėda in Lithuania, Tallinn in Estonia, and Liepāja, Riga and Ventspils in Latvia.

In addition there is a 540-strong Coast Guard.

Air Force

The Air Force consisted of 980 personnel (plus 190 civilians) in 2011. There are no combat-capable aircraft.

The joint Baltic Regional Air Surveillance Network (BALTNET), established in co-operation between the air forces of Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania, has its co-ordination centre in Karmėlava in Lithuania.

INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

Lithuania held a referendum on EU membership on 10–11 May 2003, in which 91.0% of votes cast were in favour of accession, with 9.0% against. It became a member of NATO on 29 March 2004 and the EU on 1 May 2004.

ECONOMY

Agriculture accounted for 3.4% of GDP in 2009, industry 26.9% and services 69.7%.

Overview

Recession in the early years of transition to a market economy from a command structure was more pronounced in Lithuania than in other Baltic states, partly because its export sector had closer ties to the Russian market. From 1995 to 1998 the economy grew at a strong and stable rate, but the country fell into recession in 1999 following the 1998 Russian financial crisis. However, in 2000 Lithuania rebounded and enjoyed one of the highest annual growth rates of any transition economy.

Most enterprises have been privatized and the government has maintained a stable macroeconomic policy while strengthening economic ties with other countries. It is a member of the World Trade Organization and joined the European Union in May 2004. It has attracted significant foreign investment from EU partners, particularly the Nordic countries, and in 2015 the World Bank ranked Lithuania 20th of 189 economies for the ease of doing business.

Core exports are mineral products (29.8% of total exports in 2014), food and agricultural products (17.8%) as well as machinery and equipment (12.1%). In 2014, 55% of exports went to the EU. Russia's share of Lithuanian exports declined from 30% in 1997 to 21% in 2014, although 21.6% of imports (mostly of energy) still came from Russia. Thriving exports and domestic consumer demand ensured average growth of 8% per annum in the four years before the 2008 global financial crisis. Between 1998 and 2008 real per capita incomes rose from about two-fifths to two-thirds of the EU average, principally driven by strong exports. Meanwhile, unemployment fell from 17.4% in 2001 to a record low of 4.3% in 2007. However, the downturn prompted by the 2008 crisis was severe. A contraction in domestic demand was compounded by Lithuania's main export partners also falling into recession. The economy shrank by 14.8% in 2009, while unemployment surged to 18.3% by June 2010.

In the boom years a large structural deficit had been accumulated, putting public finances under strain during the crisis (the government deficit peaking at 9% of GDP in 2010). With the currency fixed against the euro at that time, and lending from the international bond markets unforthcoming, the government implemented a package of austerity measures in Dec. 2009. Public spending was cut by 30%, public sector wages fell by between 20–30%, pensions were cut by up to 11%, VAT rose from 18% to 21%, corporate tax went from 15% to 20% and there were significant tax rises on alcohol and pharmaceuticals. The measures resulted in savings equivalent to 9% of GDP, negating the need to call on the assistance of the IMF, while the government deficit fell to 0.7% of GDP by 2014. The economy experienced a strong recovery in 2011, recording 6% growth, thanks largely to a resurgence in exports. However, growth was less buoyant between 2011 and 2014, averaging 4% annually, and the unemployment rate remained high, measuring 11% in 2014. The ongoing eurozone crisis is the main threat to Lithuania's economic prospects, particularly following the country's adoption of the euro as the national currency in Jan. 2015. A further challenge has been posed by tensions between Russia and Ukraine, which saw Russia impose an agricultural imports embargo on EU members in Aug. 2014 (Lithuanian food imports to Russia then accounting for some 4% of GDP). The country has also been hit by falling world prices for its export products in 2014 and 2015.

Currency

On 1 Jan. 2015 the euro (EUR) replaced the litas (LTL) as the legal currency of Lithuania at the irrevocable conversion rate of 3-45280 litai to one euro. Inflation, which reached a high of 1,161% in the early 1990s, was 11.1% in 2008 but has since fallen—it was 1.2% in 2013 and 0.2% in 2014.

Total money supply was 13,884m. litai in July 2005, foreign exchange reserves were US$3,411m. and gold reserves 186,000 troy oz.

Budget

Budgetary central government revenue and expenditure (in 1m. litai):

	2009	2010	2011
Revenue	17,487	19,032	20,724
Expenditure	21,691	22,423	23,091

Principal sources of revenue in 2011: taxes on goods and services, 11,859m. litai; grants, 4,419m. litai; taxes on income, profits and capital gains, 2,317m. litai. Main items of expenditure by economic type in 2011: grants, 6,395m. litai; compensation of employees, 5,106m. litai; social benefits, 3,369m. litai. There is a flat income tax rate of 15%.

Lithuania's budget deficit in 2014 was 0.7% of GDP (2013, 2.6%; 2012, 3.1%). The required target set by the EU is a budget deficit of no more than 3%.

VAT is 21%.

Performance

Between 2000 and 2006 growth averaged 7.2%. In 2007 and 2008 the economy continued to grow, by 11.1% and 2.6% respectively, although Lithuania was then one of the countries most affected by the economic crisis in 2009, with the GDP contracting by 14.8%. There was a slight recovery in 2010 when the economy grew by 1.6%, continuing in 2011 when it expanded by 6.1%. There was then growth in 2012 of 3.8%, in 2013 of 3.3% and in 2014 of 2.9%. Total GDP in 2014 was US$48.4bn.

Banking and Finance

The central bank and bank of issue is the Bank of Lithuania (Governor, Vitas Vasiliauskas). A programme to restructure and privatize the state banks was started in 1996. In 2007 there were 11 commercial banks and foreign bank branches, the central credit union of Lithuania and 66 credit unions in operation. The largest private bank in Lithuania is SEB Vilniaus bankas, which controls approximately 36% of the total banking assets in the country. In 2006 it was estimated that total assets of domestic commercial banks amounted to 59bn. litai.

Foreign debt amounted to US$29,602m. in 2010, up from US$11,433m. in 2005 and US$4,723m. in 2000. Lithuania's foreign debt in 2010 was equivalent to 83.0% of GNI (up from 42.0% in 2000).

A stock exchange opened in Vilnius in 1993. In Nov. 2007 its capitalization was €6.8bn. The trading turnover in 2006 was €1.6bn.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

In 2011, 20.3% of energy consumption came from renewables (wind power, solar power, hydro-electric power, tidal power, geothermal energy and biomass), compared to the European Union average of 13.0%. A target of 23% has been set by the EU for 2020.

Environment

Carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy were the equivalent of 4.3 tonnes per capita in 2011.

Electricity

Installed capacity was estimated at 3.51m. kW in 2011; production was 4.82bn. kWh in 2011. A nuclear power station (with two reactors) in Ignalina was responsible for 70.2% of total output in 2007. At the time no other country had such a high percentage of its electricity generated through nuclear power. However, as a condition of entry into the European Union the government agreed to close down Ignalina. The process to close the first reactor began on 31 Dec. 2004. The whole facility was shut down on 31 Dec. 2009. Plans to build a successor near the old site are being reconsidered after 64.8% opposed the idea in a consultative referendum held in Oct. 2012. Prior to the closure of Ignalina, Lithuania was one of the countries most reliant on nuclear energy. Electricity consumption per capita in 2011 was 3,798 kWh.

Oil and Gas

Oil production started from a small field at Kretinga in 1990. Reserves were 12m. bbls in 2011. Oil production in 2009 was 0.8m. bbls. Lithuania relies on Russia for almost all of its oil and gas.

Minerals

Output of minerals in 2006 (1,000 cu. metres): dolomite, 1,600; limestone, 900; peat, 400. Quarrying of gravel, clay and sand totalled 8.7m. cu. metres in 2006.

Agriculture

In 2013 agriculture employed about 7.4% of the total number of employed persons. As of 1 June 2010 the average farm size was 13.8 ha.; the utilized agricultural land area was 2,890,928 ha. In 2012 there were 2,260,500 ha. of arable land and 31,800 ha. of permanent crops. In 2013, 95,500 persons were employed in agriculture.

Output of main agricultural products (in 1,000 tonnes) in 2013: wheat, 2,869; sugar beets, 967; barley, 687; rapeseed, 542; potatoes, 426; oats, 164; rye, 97; cabbage, 77. Value of agricultural production, 2013 (in 1m. litai), was 8,800.2 of which from individual farm holdings, 6,353.1; and from agricultural partnerships and enterprises, 2,447.1.

Livestock, as of 1 Jan. 2014 (in 1,000): cattle, 713.5 (of which dairy cows, 315.7); pigs, 754.6; sheep and goats, 113.4; horses, 22.2; poultry, 9,761.6.

There were 118,000 tractors in use in 2008.

Animal products, 2013 unless otherwise indicated (in 1,000 tonnes): meat (2012), 207.4; milk, 1,723.1; eggs, 772m. units.

Forestry

In 2010 forests covered 2.2m. ha., or 34% of the land area, and consist of conifers, mostly pine. Of the total area under forests 1% was primary forest in 2010, 75% other naturally regenerated forest and 24% planted forest. Timber production in 2011, 7.00m. cu. metres.

Fisheries

In 2011 the fishing fleet comprised 171 vessels of a combined 45,960 gross tonnes. Total catch in 2010 amounted to 149,851 tonnes (mainly from sea fishing), down from 187,513 tonnes in 2007 although up from 44,002 tonnes in 1997.

INDUSTRY

Industrial output in 2006 included (in 1,000 tonnes): petrol, 2,303; cement, 1,100; sulphuric acid, 730; sugar, 97; woollen fabrics, 22.5m. sq. metres; cotton fabrics, 20.4m. cu. metres; linen, 12.8m. sq. metres; television picture tubes, 1,240,000 units; TV sets, 711,300 units; bicycles, 330,000 units.

Labour

In 2013 the number of employed persons was 1.3m. (71.4% in private enterprises and 28.6% in the public sector). Employed population by activity (as a percentage): wholesale and retail trade, repair of motor vehicles and motorcycles, 17.6; manufacturing, 15.4; education, 9.7; construction, 7.7; transportation and storage, 7.3; human health and social work activities, 6.6; real estate activities, 1.2. Employment skills in 2013 included 41.0% with tertiary education and 55.0% with upper secondary and post-secondary non-tertiary education. There were a total of 3,080 working days lost to strike action in 2012 (31,601 in 2008; legal strikes did not take place in 2009–11 or in 2013). In 2013 average gross monthly earnings were 2,231.7 litai; legal minimum wage was 1,000 litai in 2013.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Foreign investors may purchase up to 100% of the equity companies in Lithuania.

Individual laws on three free economic zones (namely the laws on Šiauliai, Klaipėda and Kaunas) have been cleared by Lithuania's Parliament, the Seimas.

Imports and Exports

Imports and exports for calendar years in US$1m.:

	2006	2007	2008	2009	2010
Imports c.i.f.	19,388.4	24,445.1	31,294.7	18,340.6	23,378.0
Exports f.o.b.	14,135.2	17,162.4	23,769.9	16,496.3	20,813.9

Leading import suppliers, 2006: Russia, 24.2%; Germany, 14.9%; Poland, 9.5%; Latvia, 4.8%. Principal export markets, 2006: Russia, 12.8%; Latvia, 11.1%; Germany, 8.6%; Estonia, 6.5%.

Main imports are machinery and apparatus, crude petroleum, road vehicles, and chemicals and chemical products. Main exports are mineral products, electrical equipment, textiles and textile articles, transport equipment, TV sets, chemical products and prepared foodstuffs.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

In 2007 there were 80,715 km of roads (including 309 km of motorways), of which 28.6% were paved. There were 1,587,900 passenger cars in use in 2007 (470 per 1,000 inhabitants), plus 14,000 buses and coaches, 14,500 lorries and vans, and 35,300 motorcycles and mopeds. There were 6,448 traffic accidents in 2007, with 740 fatalities.

Rail

In 2011 there were 1,767 km of railway track in operation in Lithuania. The majority of rail traffic was diesel propelled, although 122 km of track was electrified. In 2011, 4.7m. passengers and 52.3m. tonnes of freight were carried.

Civil Aviation

The main international airport is based in the capital, Vilnius. Other international airports are at Kaunas and Palanga. FlyLAL–Lithuanian Airlines, formerly Lithuania's largest airline, ceased operations in 2009. Air Lituania, founded in 2013, was the national flag carrier until it ceased operations in May 2015. In 2015 a number of international airlines ran regular scheduled flights to Lithuania. Vilnius handled 1,308,065 passengers in 2009 and 4,336 tonnes of freight. Kaunas handled 456,698 passengers in 2009 and Palanga 105,195.

Shipping

The ice-free port of Klaipėda plays a dominant role in the national economy and Baltic maritime traffic. It handled 29,880,000 tonnes of cargo in 2008 (22,218,000 tonnes loaded and 7,662,000 tonnes discharged); container traffic totalled 373,000 TEUs (twenty-foot equivalent units) in 2008. A 412 ha. site at the port is dedicated a Free Economic Zone, which offers attractive conditions to foreign investors.

In Jan. 2009 there were 52 ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 348,000 GT. In Jan. 2009 the Lithuanian-controlled fleet comprised 64 vessels of 1,000 GT or over, of which 37 were under the Lithuanian flag and 27 under foreign flags.

Telecommunications

A majority stake in Lithuanian Telecom (the only fixed telephone service provider) was sold to the Finnish and Swedish consortium SONERA in 1998 and by Jan. 2003 the telecommunications market was fully liberalized. In 2010 there were 733,700 landline telephone subscriptions (equivalent to 220.8 per 1,000 inhabitants) and 4,891,000 mobile phone subscriptions (or 1,471.6 per 1,000 inhabitants). There were 621.2 internet users per 1,000 inhabitants in 2010. Fixed internet subscriptions totalled 636,000 in 2009 (190.3 per 1,000 inhabitants). In March 2012 there were 983,000 Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The general jurisdiction court system consists of the Supreme Court, the Court of Appeal, five county courts and 54 district courts. Specialized administrative courts were established in 1999. In 2006 there were 732 judges: 469 in district courts, 144 in county courts, 27 in the Court of Appeal, 34 in the Supreme Court, 43 in the administrative county courts and 15 in the High Administrative Court.

75,474 crimes were reported in 2006, of which 43% were solved. In 2006 there were 294 murders. 14,717 persons were convicted of offences in 2006. There were 8,079 prisoners in 2006, 7,082 of whom had been convicted. The death penalty was abolished for all crimes in 1998.

Education

Education is compulsory from seven to 16. In 2002–03 there were 686 pre-school establishments with 90,860 pupils and 2,172 general schools with 49,286 teachers and 594,313 pupils, in the following categories:

Type of School	No. of Schools	No. of Pupils
Nursery	148	12,219
Primary	683	35,819
Junior	25	2,326
Basic	645	118,415
Special	67	7,212
Secondary	574	400,566
Adult	27	17,318

119,548 students (70,777 females) attended 19 institutions of higher education and 22,367 (13,735 females) attended vocational colleges in 2002–03. The adult literacy rate in 2009 was estimated at 99.7% (99.7% for both males and females).

In 2006 public expenditure on education represented 5.0% of GNI and 14.4% of total government expenditure.

Health

In 2006 there were 13,510 physicians, 2,249 dentists, 26,140 nurses and midwives and 2,184 pharmacists. There were 196 hospitals with 31,031 beds in 2002.

Welfare

The social security system is financed by the State Social Insurance Fund. In 2013, 616,801 persons were eligible for state social insurance old-age pensions (including anticipatory old-age pensions), 215,616 for work incapacity/disability pensions and 266,378 for widow's/widower's (including orphan's) pensions. In 2013 the average state social insurance old-age pension was 822 litai (monthly).

In 2014 the retirement age for men was 63 years and for women 61 years. Prior to 2012 the retirement age was 62 years 6 months for men and 60 years for women. It is rising gradually for both sexes until men and women will both retire at 65 in 2026. The average number of persons entitled to the state social insurance old-age pension in 2013 was 598,700.

RELIGION

Under the Constitution, the state recognizes traditional Lutheran churches and religious organizations, as well as other churches and religious organizations if their teaching and rituals do not contradict the law. According to the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life, in 2010 there were an estimated 2.76m. Catholics and 170,000 Orthodox Christians; a further 330,000 people had no religious affiliation. In Feb. 2016 there was one cardinal.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

Lithuania has four sites (two shared) on the UNESCO World Heritage List: Vilnius Historic Centre (inscribed on the list in 1994) and Kernavė Archaeological Site (2004).

Lithuania shares the Curonian Spit (2000) with the Russian Federation as a UNESCO site. A sand-dune spit between Zelenogradsk, Kaliningrad Region, and Klaipėda, Lithuania, the Spit was subject to massive protective engineering in the 19th century. Lithuania also shares the Struve Geodetic Arc (2005). The Arc is a chain of survey triangulations spanning from Norway to the Black Sea that helped establish the exact shape and size of the earth and is shared with nine other countries.

Press

In 2014 there were 239 newspapers (ten paid-for dailies and 229 paid-for non-dailies). The papers with the highest readership are Lietuvos rytas and Vakaro žinios.

Tourism

In 2010 accommodation establishments received 1,552,900 guests (up from 1,325,600 in 2005), of whom 840,400 were foreigners (681,500 in 2005). The leading countries of origin of non-resident overnight visitors in 2010 were: Poland (135,900), Russia (105,900), Germany (105,800) and Belarus (71,400). Lithuania had 908 accommodation establishments in 2010 with 50,087 beds, including 342 hotels with 23,137 beds.

Festivals

The Lithuanian Song and Dance Celebration is held every four years, focusing international attention on the country's culture. There is also a Kaunas Jazz Festival and the Pažaislis Classical Music Festival (also in Kaunas). The main rock festivals are the summer festivals, Be2gether at Norviliškės near the Belarusian border and Rock Nights at Zarasai. Major film festivals include Cinema Spring in Vilnius and the Kaunas International Film Festival. The annual Klaipėda Sea Festival attracts nearly half a million visitors each year.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Celtic tribes, with origins in the Danube basin, settled in the Ardennes hills and surrounding plains from at least 1000 BC. The Romans advanced north into the region (then part of Gaul) from around 50 BC and controlled much of it over the next five centuries from garrisons such as that at Trier. Frankish clans from the middle Rhine valley spread across present-day Luxembourg from around the 5th century AD and intermarried with the Gallo-Romans. Anglo-Saxon missionaries were active in the region during the 7th century, and a Benedictine monastery was founded at Echternach in 698. From the early 9th century the region was controlled by Charlemagne, the Roman Emperor in the West, who ruled from Hungary to the Atlantic Ocean. The empire's division, following the signing of the Treaty of Verdun in 843, enabled the rise of several feudal states, one of which became Luxembourg; the castle of Lutzilinburhurch was founded by Count Sigefroi in 963 on an outcrop overlooking the river Alzette.

Subsequent Counts of Luxembourg were influential in the wider European arena. From 1353, under Wenzel I, Luxembourg expanded to its greatest extent, covering four times the area of the present state. The House of Luxembourg subsequently went into decline and from 1443 was ruled by the Burgundians from their capital, Brussels. In 1477 Luxembourg became one of the 17 provinces of the Netherlands to come under Habsburg rule, initially under Maximilian of Austria and later under Charles of Ghent, who became the King of Spain in 1516 and Holy Roman Emperor in 1520. Luxembourg was ruled as part of the Spanish Netherlands for much of the next 200 years, although there were brief periods of French dominance under Louis XIV in the 1680s and 1690s. The transfer of the Spanish Netherlands to Austrian rule in 1715 heralded a period of relative tranquility for Luxembourg, which lasted until the territory was occupied by French revolutionary forces in the 1790s.

The 1815 Congress of Vienna made Luxembourg a grand duchy, which subsequently came under the jurisdiction of the house of Orange-Nassau, the ruling house of the Netherlands. At the same time it became part of the German Confederation. In 1839 the Walloon-speaking area was joined to Belgium, which had achieved independence in 1831, giving the Lëtzebuergesch-speaking provinces autonomy. At the London Conference of 1867 the European powers declared Luxembourg a neutral territory and in 1890 the union with the Netherlands was ended. Full independence was confirmed in the same year when Adolf of Nassau-Weilburg became grand duke, founding the present line of rulers.

Luxembourg was invaded and occupied by Germany in both the First and Second World Wars. In June 1942 the Grand Duchy staged a general strike against occupation. In 1948 a Benelux customs union formed by Belgium, the Netherlands and Luxembourg allowed for standardization of prices, taxes and wages and the free movement of labour among the three countries. Luxembourg joined NATO in 1949 and was one of six founding countries of the European Economic Community in 1957. On 24 Dec. 1999 Prime Minister Jean-Claude Juncker announced Grand Duke Jean's decision to abdicate the throne on 7 Oct. 2000. He was succeeded by Prince Henri who assumed the title of Grand Duke.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Luxembourg has an area of 2,586 sq. km (999 sq. miles) and is bounded on the west by Belgium, south by France and east by Germany. A census took place on 1 Feb. 2011; the population was 512,353. On 1 Jan. 2013 the population was 537,039 (including 238,800 foreigners); density, 208 per sq. km. The percentage of foreigners living in Luxembourg has increased dramatically in recent years, from 26% in 1986 to 45% in 2013 (the highest percentage in the EU). The main countries of origin of foreigners living in Luxembourg are Portugal (88,200 in Jan. 2013), France (35,200) and Italy (18,300).

In 2011, 85.4% of the population were urban. The capital, Luxembourg, has (Jan. 2013) 103,641 inhabitants; Esch-sur-Alzette, the centre of the mining district, 31,898; Differdange, 22,769; Dudelange, 19,292; Pétange, 16,762; Sanem, 14,832; Hesperange, 14,027.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 567,000.

Luxembourgish (Lëtzebuergesch) is spoken by most of the population, and since 1984 has been an official language with French and German.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2010 rates per 1,000 population; birth, 11.6; death, 7.4; marriage, 3.5; divorce, 2.1. Nearly half of annual births are to foreigners. In 2013 the most popular age range for marrying was 30–34 for males and 25–29 for females. Life expectancy at birth in 2013 was 78.0 years for males and 83.0 years for females. Annual population growth rate, 2005–10, 2.1%. Infant mortality, 2010, two per 1,000 live births (one of the lowest rates in the world); fertility rate, 2013, 1.7 births per woman. In 2012 Luxembourg received 2,055 asylum applications.

CLIMATE

In general the country resembles Belgium in its climate, with rain evenly distributed throughout the year. Average temperatures are Jan. 0.8°C, July 17.5°C. Annual rainfall 30.8" (782.2 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

The Grand Duchy of Luxembourg is a constitutional monarchy.

The reigning Grand Duke is Henri, b. 16 April 1955, son of the former Grand Duke Jean and Princess Joséphine-Charlotte of Belgium; succeeded 7 Oct. 2000 on the abdication of his father; married Maria Teresa Mestre 14 Feb. 1981. Offspring: Prince Guillaume, b. 11 Nov. 1981 (married Countess Stéphanie Marie Claudine Christine de Lannoy, b. 18 Feb. 1984, on 19 Oct. 2012); Prince Félix, b. 3 June 1984 (married Claire Lademacher, b. 21 March 1985, on 17 Sept. 2013; offspring, Amalia, b. 15 June 2014); Prince Louis, b. 3 Aug. 1986 (married Tessy Antony, b. 28 Oct. 1985, on 29 Sept. 2006; offspring, Gabriel, b. 12 March 2006; Noah, b. 21 Sept. 2007); Princess Alexandra, b. 16 Feb. 1991; Prince Sébastien, b. 16 April 1992.

The constitution of 17 Oct. 1868 was revised in 1919, 1948, 1956, 1972, 1979, 1983, 1988 and more than 20 occasions since then.

The separation of powers between the legislature and the executive is not very strong, resulting in much interaction between the two bodies. Only the judiciary is completely independent.

The 12 cantons are divided into four electoral districts: the South, the East, the Centre and the North. Voters choose between party lists of candidates in multi-member constituencies. The parliament is the Chamber of Deputies, which consists of a maximum of 60 members elected for five years. Voting is compulsory for all citizens between the age of 18 and 75 and there is universal suffrage. Seats are allocated according to the rules of proportional representation and the principle of the smallest electoral quote. There is a Council of State of 21 members appointed by the Sovereign. Membership is for a maximum period of 15 years, with retirement compulsory at the age of 72. It advises on proposed laws and any other question referred to it.

The head of state takes part in the legislative power, exercises executive power and has a part in the judicial power. The constitution leaves to the sovereign the right to organize the government, which consists of a Minister of State, who is Prime Minister, and of at least three Ministers. Direct consultation by referendum is provided for in the Constitution.

CURRENT LEADERS

Xavier Bettel

Position

Prime Minister

Introduction

Xavier Bettel became prime minister in Dec. 2013, taking over from Jean-Claude Juncker who had held the position for 18 years. A barrister and long-standing member of the centre-right Democratic Party (DP), he headed the first government since 1979 not to be led by the Christian Social Party (CSV).

Early Life

Bettel was born on 3 March 1973 in Luxembourg City. He graduated in public and European law from the University of Nancy, France, and undertook further studies in maritime law at Aristotle University in Thessaloniki, Greece. He entered parliament as a DP member in 1999 and qualified as a barrister in 2001.

Re-elected to parliament in 2004 and 2009, he served on its legal affairs committee and was chairman of the DP parliamentary group between 2009 and 2011. Also active in municipal politics, he was variously a councillor, alderman and mayor of Luxembourg City between 2011 and 2013.

In snap legislative elections in Oct. 2013 (prompted by a phone-tapping scandal that engulfed the ruling CSV in mid-2013), the DP, in coalition with the Socialist Workers' Party and the Greens, emerged as narrow victors. Bettel was charged with forming a government by Grand Duke Henri, and was sworn in as prime minister on 4 Dec. 2013.

Career in Office

Bettel pledged to cut the budget deficit and preserve Luxembourg's triple-A international credit rating by cutting public spending and raising VAT. The government promised not to introduce a wealth tax on individuals or an inheritance tax, but in Nov. 2014 it became embroiled in a controversy over tax concessions by the previous administration to multinational companies. As the country's first openly gay premier, Bettel was expected to promote socially liberal policies and in June 2014 he supported parliament's vote to legalize same-sex marriage. In June 2015 proposals to allow foreign residents to vote in national elections, to lower the voting age to 16 and to introduce term limits in government were all rejected in a constitutional referendum.

DEFENCE

There is a volunteer light infantry battalion of (2009) 900, of which only the career officers are professionals. In recent years Luxembourg soldiers and officers have been actively participating in peacekeeping missions, mainly in the former Yugoslavia. There is also a Gendarmerie of 600. In 2000 the Gendarmerie and the police force merged to form the Police Grand-Ducale. NATO maintains a squadron of E-3A Sentries.

In 2013 defence expenditure totalled US$249m. (US$484 per capita), representing 0.4% of GDP.

ECONOMY

Services accounted for 86% of GDP in 2012 and industry 14%.

According to the anti-corruption organization Transparency International, Luxembourg ranked equal 10th in the world in a 2015 survey of the countries with the least corruption in business and government. It received 81 out of 100 in the annual index.

Luxembourg gave US$423m. in international aid in 2014, which at 1.06% of GNI made it the second most generous developed country as a percentage of its gross national income, after Sweden. Luxembourg was one of only five industrialized countries to meet the UN target of 0.7%.

Overview

Luxembourg has a service-based economy dominated by the financial sector, which contributed 36% of GDP in 2013. The country hosts Europe's largest investment fund industry and second largest money market sector. Other dynamic sectors include telecommunications, audio-visual and multimedia and air transport. Steel production has historically been an economic driver and the traditionally small industrial sector has diversified to include chemical, plastics, rubber and other manufactured products.

Given its large financial sector, Luxembourg was badly damaged by the global financial crisis. Gross investment decreased by 23% in 2009, two major banks were bailed out, three smaller banks failed and unemployment increased. This led to the economy's worst performance for 30 years, contracting by 5.4% in that year. However, despite a further shallow recession in 2012, a fiscal stimulus package spurred GDP growth of 4.4% in 2013.

Key challenges include addressing vulnerabilities in the financial sector, increasing employment, providing for an ageing population and coping with eurozone volatility.

Currency

On 1 Jan. 1999 the euro (EUR) became the legal currency in Luxembourg at the irrevocable conversion rate of 40.3399 Luxembourg francs to 1 euro. The euro, which consists of 100 cents, has been in circulation since 1 Jan. 2002. On the introduction of the euro there was a 'dual circulation' period before the Luxembourg franc ceased to be legal tender on 28 Feb. 2002. Inflation was 1.7% in 2013 and 0.7% in 2014. Euro banknotes in circulation on 1 Jan. 2002 had a total value of €5.6bn.

Foreign exchange reserves were US$285m. in Sept. 2009 (none in 2002) and gold reserves 73,000 troy oz. Total money supply was €84,140m. in March 2009.

Budget

Budgetary central government revenue and expenditure for calendar years in €1m.:

	2009	2010	2011
Revenue	10,488.9	11,276.8	11,732.7
Expenditure	11,072.5	11,677.6	12,169.0

Principal sources of revenue in 2011: taxes on income, profits and capital gains, €4,978.0m.; taxes on goods and services, €4,822.4m. Main items of expenditure by economic type in 2011: grants, €5,483.1m; compensation of employees, €2,571.7m.

Luxembourg registered a budget surplus of 1.4% of GDP in 2014. There had been surpluses of 0.7% in 2013 and 0.2% in 2012. The required target set by the EU is a budget deficit of no more than 3%.

VAT is 17%, with reduced rates of 14%, 8% and 3%. Income taxes and business taxes have been reduced to preserve competitiveness in the international environment. The normal tax rate for companies at 1 Jan. 2013 was 29.22%, compared with 40.3% in 1996.

Performance

In terms of GDP per head, Luxembourg ranks among the richest countries in the world with a purchasing power parity (PPP) per capita GDP of 79,258 current international dollars in 2009. The economy shrank by 0.7% in 2012 but recovered to grow by 4.4% in 2013 and 5.6% in 2014.

Total GDP in 2014 was US$64.9bn.

Banking and Finance

Luxembourg's Central Bank (formerly the Monetary Institute) was established in July 1998 (Director-General, Gaston Reinesch). In Dec. 2004 there were 162 banks. German banks make up nearly a third of all the banks. Total deposits in 2004 were €560.7bn.; net assets in unit trusts, €504.0bn.; net assets in investment companies, €600.3bn. There is a stock exchange.

In 2004 the financial sector accounted for 18.1% of gross added value at basic prices and the banks showed a net profit of €2.9bn. The total number of approved insurance companies in 2004 was 95, with reinsurance companies numbering 271; the amount of premiums due was €8,737.5m.

Luxembourg's gross external debt amounted to US$2,197,354m. in June 2012.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

In 2011 just 2.9% of energy consumption came from renewables (wind power, solar power, hydro-electric power, tidal power, geothermal energy and biomass), compared to the European Union average of 13.0%. A target of 11% has been set by the EU for 2020.

Environment

Carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2011 were the equivalent of 23.1 tonnes per capita (compared to the European average of 7.1 tonnes per capita).

Electricity

Apart from hydro-electricity and electricity generated from fossil fuels, Luxembourg has no national energy resources. Installed capacity in 2011 was 1.7m. kW. Production was 3,717m. kWh in 2011 and consumption per capita 15,879 kWh.

Agriculture

The contribution of agriculture, viticulture and forestry to the economy has been gradually declining over the years, accounting for only 0.5% of gross added value at basic prices in 2004.

However, the actual output of this sector has nearly tripled during the past 30 years, a trend common to many EU countries. There were 4,975 workers engaged in agricultural work (including wine-growing and forestry) in 2004. In 2007 there were 2,303 farms with an average area of 63.4 ha.; 130,884 ha. were under cultivation in 2007.

Production, 2007 (in tonnes) of main crops: grassland and pasturage, 749,101; maize, 197,508; forage crops, 129,096; bread crops, 77,435; potatoes, 19,968; colza (rape), 18,302. Production, 2007 (in 1,000 tonnes) of meat, 26.8; milk, 274.2. In 2007–08, 142,000 hectolitres of wine were produced. Total tractors and other agriculture vehicles, 2008: 15,238.

Livestock (15 May 2007): 4,334 horses; 191,928 cattle; 83,255 pigs; 9,339 sheep.

Forestry

In 2010 there were 87,000 ha. of forests (33% of the total land area). In 2011, 261,000 cu. metres of roundwood were cut.

INDUSTRY

The largest companies by market capitalization in Luxembourg in April 2015 were Altice, a telecommunications company (US$28.1bn.); SES, a telecommunications company (US$18.6bn.); and Tenaris, a manufacturer and supplier of steel pipe products (US$16.9bn.).

In 2004 there were 3,038 industrial enterprises, of which 1,972 were in the building industry. Production, 2007 (in tonnes): rolled steel products, 2,933,000; steel, 2,858,000. The world's largest steel producer, ArcelorMittal, has its headquarters in Luxembourg. Created in June 2006 through the merger of Arcelor and Mittal Steel, it produces in excess of 100m. tonnes of steel annually and accounts for approximately 10% of world steel output. The steel industry mainly relies on imported ore.

Labour

The labour force in 2013 was 260,000 (195,000 in 2003). 68.7% of the population aged 15–64 was economically active in 2013. Of those in employment in 2013, 84.0% worked in services, 11.7% in industry and 1.4% in agriculture. In that year 44.2% of the labour force was female. 42.4% of the labour force had a secondary education as the highest level and 43.0% had a tertiary education. The government fixes a legal minimum wage.

Retirement is at 65. In Dec. 2015 the unemployment rate was 6.1% (unchanged since 2014 but up from 5.9% in 2013 as a whole). More than 150,000 people cross into Luxembourg every day from neighbouring France, Germany and Belgium to work, principally in the financial services industry.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

On 1 Jan. 2008 there were 2,894 km of roads of which 147 km were motorways. Motor vehicles registered at 1 Jan. 2008 numbered 394,917 including 321,520 passenger cars, 27,043 trucks, 1,455 coaches and 14,946 motorcycles. In 2009 there were 47 fatalities in road accidents.

Rail

In 2011 there were 275 km of railway (standard gauge) of which 262 km were electrified; passenger-km totalled 349m. in 2011.

Civil Aviation

Findel is the airport for Luxembourg. 1,643,000 passengers and 856,450 tonnes of freight were handled in 2007. The national carrier is Luxair, in which the state has a 39.05% stake directly along with a further 21.81% indirectly through the Banque et Caisse d'Epargne de l'Etat (State and Savings Bank). Cargolux has developed into one of the major international freight carriers. In 2006 scheduled airline traffic of Luxembourg-based carriers flew 93m. km, carrying 928,000 passengers (all on international flights).

Shipping

A shipping register was set up in 1990; 143 vessels were registered in Dec. 2006.

Telecommunications

In 2013 there were 267,600 main (fixed) telephone subscriptions. Mobile phone subscribers numbered 788,400 in 2013 (1,486.4 per 1,000 persons). In the same year 93.8% of the population aged 16–74 were internet users. The fixed broadband penetration rate in Dec. 2010 was 33.5 subscribers per 100 inhabitants. In March 2012 there were 190,000 Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The Constitution makes the Courts of Law independent in performing their functions, restricting their sphere of activity, defining their limit of jurisdiction and providing a number of procedural guarantees. The Constitution has additionally laid down a number of provisions designed to ensure judges remain independent of persons under their jurisdiction, and to ensure no interference from the executive and legislative organs. All judges are appointed by Grand-Ducal order and are irremovable.

The judicial organization comprises three Justices of the Peace (conciliation and police courts). The country is, in addition, divided into two judicial districts—Luxembourg and Diekirch.

District courts deal with matters such as civic and commercial cases. Offences which are punishable under the Penal Code or by specific laws with imprisonment or hard labour fall within the jurisdiction of the criminal chambers of District Courts, as the Assize Court was repealed by law in 1987. The High Court of Justice consists of a Supreme Court of Appeal and a Court of Appeal.

The judicial organization of the Grand-Duchy does not include the jury system. A division of votes between the judges on the issue of guilt/innocence may lead to acquittal. Society before the Courts of Law is represented by the Public Prosecutor Department, composed of members of the judiciary directly answerable to the government.

In 1999 a new Administrative Tribunal, Administrative Court and Constitutional Court were established.

The population in penal institutions in Jan. 2013 was 656 (122 per 100,000 of national population).

Education

The adult literacy rate in 2004 was 100%. Education is compulsory for all children between the ages of four and 15 (including two years of pre-primary school attendance). In 2006–07 there were 13,672 children in pre-primary school (pre-nursery education, 3,671; nursery education, 10,001) with 1,227 teachers; 33,136 pupils in primary schools; 34,970 pupils in secondary schools. In higher education (2003–04) the Higher Institute of Technology (IST) had 358 students and there were 401 students in teacher training. In 2006–07 the University Centre of Luxembourg had 3,180 students. Many students go abroad, predominantly to France, Germany and Belgium. In 2006–07, 7,222 students pursued university studies abroad.

In 2005 public expenditure on education came to 3.8% of GDP.

Health

In 2004 there were 1,591 doctors (411 GPs and 840 specialists) and 340 dentists. There were 17 hospitals and 3,045 hospital beds in 2004. In 2007 Luxembourg spent 7.1% of its GDP on health.

Welfare

The official retirement age is 65 years for both men and women. To be eligible, a pensioner must have paid 120 months contributions. The maximum old-age pension is €7,884.73 per month. The minimum pension varies from €851.55 to €1,703.10 per month. A minimum pension is paid with at least 20 years of coverage.

Unemployment benefit is 80% (85% if the insured has a dependent child) of the basis salary during the previous three months, up to 2.5 times the social minimum wage. Recent graduates receive 70% of the social minimum wage whereas self-employed persons receive 80% of the social minimum wage.

RELIGION

According to the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life, an estimated 64.7% of the population in 2010 were Roman Catholics and 27.5% had no religious affiliation. There are small Protestant, Jewish, Greek Orthodox, Russian Orthodox and Muslim communities as well.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

Luxembourg has one site on the UNESCO World Heritage List: the City of Luxembourg—its Old Quarters and Fortifications (inscribed on the list in 1994).

Press

There were eight paid-for daily newspapers in 2008 with an average circulation of 117,000 and two free dailies with an average circulation of 127,000; there were also 15 non-dailies. The German-language Luxemburger Wort has the highest circulation, with an average of 72,000 copies in 2008. In the 2013 World Press Freedom Index compiled by Reporters Without Borders, Luxembourg was ranked fourth out of 179 countries.

Tourism

In 2010 there were 907,000 overnight tourists and 2,256,000 overnight stays; there were 7,751 hotel rooms in 2010. Tourists spent US$4,108m. in 2010 (excluding passenger transport). Camping is widespread; there were 739,000 overnight stays at campsites in 2010.

Festivals

The Festival International Echternach (May–June) and the Festival of Wiltz (June–July) are annual events. Both feature a variety of classical music, jazz, theatre and recitals.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

The history of Macedonia can be traced to the reign of King Karan (808–778 BC), but the country was at its most powerful at the time of Philip II (359–336 BC) and Alexander the Great (336–323 BC). At the end of the 6th century AD Slavs began to settle in Macedonia. There followed a long period of internal fighting but the spread of Christianity led to consolidation and the creation of the first Macedonian Slav state, the Kingdom of Samuel, 976–1018. In the 14th century it fell to Serbia, and in 1355 to the Turks. After the Balkan wars of 1912–13 Turkey was ousted and Serbia received part of the territory, the rest going to Bulgaria and Greece. In 1918 Yugoslav Macedonia was incorporated into Serbia as South Serbia, becoming a republic in the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia. Claims to the historical Macedonian territory have long been a source of contention with Bulgaria and Greece. Macedonia declared its independence on 18 Sept. 1991. In April 1999 the Kosovo crisis which led to NATO air attacks on Yugoslavian military targets set off a flood of refugees into Macedonia, though subsequently most returned home.

In March 2001 there were a series of clashes between government forces and ethnic Albanian separatists near the border between Macedonia and Kosovo. As violence escalated Macedonia found itself on the brink of civil war. In May 2001 the new national unity government gave ethnic Albanian rebels a 'final warning' to end their uprising. As the crisis worsened, a stand-off within the government between the Macedonian and the ethnic Albanian parties was only resolved after the intervention of Javier Solana, the EU's foreign and security policy chief. A number of Macedonian soldiers were killed in clashes with the rebels, and following reverses in the military campaign the commander of the Macedonian army, Jovan Andrevski, resigned in June 2001. In Aug. 2001 a peace accord was negotiated.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Macedonia (referred to within the United Nations as the Former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia) is bounded in the north by Serbia, in the east by Bulgaria, in the south by Greece and in the west by Albania. Its area is 25,713 sq. km, including 490 sq. km of inland water. According to the 2002 census final results, the population on 1 Nov. 2002 was 2,022,547. The main ethnic groups in 2002 were Macedonians (1,297,981), Albanians (509,083), Turks (77,959), Roma (53,879), Serbs (35,939) and Vlachs (9,695). Estimate, Dec. 2013, 2,065,769; density, 82 per sq. km. Ethnic Albanians predominate on the western side of Macedonia. Minorities are represented in the Council for Inter-Ethnic Relations. In 2011, 59.4% of the population lived in urban areas.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 2.08m.

Macedonia is divided into 84 municipalities. The major cities (with 2013 population estimates) are: Skopje, the capital, 497,900; Kumanovo, 72,800; Bitola, 72,400; Prilep, 65,400; Tetovo, 55,600.

The official language is Macedonian, which uses the Cyrillic alphabet. Around 25% of the population speak Albanian.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

In 2011: live births, 22,770; deaths, 19,465; marriages, 14,736; divorces, 1,753; infant deaths, 172. Rates (per 1,000 population): live births, 11.1; deaths, 9.5; marriages, 7.2; divorces, 0.9. Infant mortality, 2011 (per 1,000 live births), 7.6. Expectation of life at birth in 2007 was 71.7 years for males and 76.5 years for females. Annual population growth rate, 2005–10, 0.2%. In 2004 the most popular age range for marrying was 25–29 for males and 20–24 for females. Fertility rate, 2011, 1.6 births per woman.

Migration within the Republic of Macedonia, 2004: 9,326. International (external) migration: emigrated persons, 669; immigrated persons 1,381. Net migration in 2004 was 712.

CLIMATE

Macedonia has a mixed Mediterranean-continental type climate, with cold moist winters and hot dry summers. Skopje, Jan. –0.4°C, July 23.1°C.

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

At a referendum held on 8 Sept. 1991 turnout was 74%; 99% of votes cast were in favour of a sovereign Macedonia. On 17 Nov. 1991 parliament promulgated a new constitution which officially proclaimed Macedonia's independence. This was replaced by a constitution adopted on 16 Nov. 2001 which for the first time included the recognition of Albanian as an official language. It also increased access for ethnic Albanians to public-sector jobs.

The President is directly elected for five-year terms. Candidates must be citizens aged at least 40 years. The parliament is a 123-member single-chamber Assembly (Sobranie), elected by universal suffrage for four-year terms. There is a Constitutional Court whose members are elected by the assembly for non-renewable eight-year terms, and a National Security Council chaired by the President. Laws passed by the Assembly must be countersigned by the President, who may return them for reconsideration, but cannot veto them if they gain a two-thirds majority.

National Anthem

'Denes nad Makedonija se radja novo sonce na slobodata' ('Today a new sun of liberty appears over Macedonia'); words by V. Maleski, tune by T. Skalovski.

RECENT ELECTIONS

Parliamentary elections were held on 27 April 2014. The ruling Internal Macedonian Revolutionary Organization-Democratic Party for Macedonian National Unity (VMRO-DPMNE) won 61 seats with 43.0% of votes cast. The Social Democratic Union of Macedonia (SDSM) took 34 seats with 25.3% of the vote, the Democratic Union for Integration (DUI) 19 with 13.7%, the Democratic Party of Albanians (DPA) 7 with 5.9%, Citizens Option for Macedonia (GROM) 1 with 2.8% and National Democratic Revival (NDP) 1 with 1.6%. Turnout was 63.0%.

Presidential elections were held on 13 April 2014. CURRENT LEADERS

Gjorgje Ivanov

Position
President

Introduction

Gjorgje Ivanov was sworn into office on 12 May 2009 after winning the second round of the presidential election on 5 April. Although his duties are largely ceremonial, Ivanov is supreme commander of the army and has decision-making powers on foreign policy and the judiciary.

Early Life

Gjorgje Ivanov was born on 2 May 1960 in Valandovo. He graduated in law from Ss. Cyril and Methodius University of Skopje in 1982 and was appointed assistant law professor in 1995. In 1998 he became an associate professor in political theory and political philosophy at the same time as completing his doctorate.

In 1999 Ivanov was made a professor of post-graduate studies at the University of Athens before joining the political science departments of the University of Bologna and the University of Sarajevo the following year. He returned to his alma mater in 2001 to take up the post of director of political studies. In 2008 Ivanov received his political science professorship and was appointed as chair of the Macedonian Higher Education Accreditation Council.

On 25 Jan. 2009 the ruling conservative VMRO-DPMNE announced Ivanov as its presidential candidate for the 2009 election. In the first round of voting on 22 March 2009 he took 35% of the vote and then won with 63% in a second round.

Career in Office

Ivanov pledged to continue Macedonia's campaign for membership of the European Union and NATO. In Dec. 2011 the International Court of Justice ruled against Greece's obstruction of Macedonia's bid to join the military alliance in their dispute over the country's name (see GREECE: Key Historical Events on page 544). He also aimed to diffuse ongoing tensions with Macedonia's ethnic Albanian minority. However, in March 2012 there were violent clashes between youths from both communities in Skopje.

In elections in June 2011 Ivanov's VMRO-DPMNE was returned to office under Prime Minister Nikola Gruevski but without a parliamentary majority. In Dec. 2012 differences over the state budget led the SDSM to boycott parliamentary proceedings. The European Union, which said that there was a 'need for more inclusive and constructive politics', mediated between the government and opposition resulting in an agreement in March 2013 to end the stand-off. Meanwhile, a European Union report in April acknowledged Macedonia's continued progress towards EU membership.

In April 2014 Ivanov was re-elected to a second term as president, taking 55% of the vote in a run-off, and the VMRO-DPMNE retained power in parliamentary polling. However, 2015 saw a further souring of relations between the VMRO-DPMNE and the SDSM, as well as a resurgence of inter-ethnic rivalry and violence.

DEFENCE

The President is the C.-in-C. of the armed forces. Compulsory national military service was abolished in 2006.

Defence expenditure in 2012 totalled US$129m. (US$62 per capita), representing 1.3% of GDP.

The European Union's first ever peacekeeping force (EUFOR) officially started work in Macedonia on 1 April 2003, replacing the NATO-led force that had been in the country since 2001. EUFOR left the country in Dec. 2003.

Army

Army strength was 9,760 in 2007. There is a paramilitary police force of 7,600.

Navy

In 2007 the Marine Wing operated four river patrol craft.

Air Force

The Army Air Force numbered 1,130 in 2007, and had four combat-capable aircraft (in storage) and ten attack helicopters.

INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

On 13 Sept. 1995 under the auspices of the UN, Macedonia and Greece agreed to normalize their relations.

ECONOMY

Agriculture accounted for 11.3% of GDP in 2010, industry 27.8% and services 60.9%.

Overview

Between 2004 and 2013 the economy grew by an annual average of 3.3%, reaching a high of 8.2% in 2005. The main export is textiles, accounting for over 50% of export revenue. The production of iron, steel, wine and vegetables is also important.

Unemployment officially stood at 29.0% in 2013, although a large informal sector skews both employment and GDP statistics. Macroeconomic stability has been maintained by prudent monetary policies that keep the domestic currency pegged to the euro.

Currency

The national currency of Macedonia is the denar (MKD), of 100 deni. Foreign exchange reserves were US$910m. in July 2005, gold reserves 197,000 troy oz and total money supply was 29,745m. denars. Inflation was 2.8% in 2013 but there was deflation of 0.1% in 2014.

Budget

In 2009 revenues totalled 128,498m. denars and expenditures 139,393m. denars. Tax revenue accounted for 85.5% of revenues in 2009; current expenditure accounted for 90.4% of expenditures.

Performance

In 2001 political turmoil in the country resulted in the economy contracting by 4.5%. There was then a slight recovery in 2002, with a growth rate of 0.9%. In the financial crisis of 2009 the economy contracted by 0.4%, but recovered to grow by 3.4% in 2010 and 2.3% in 2011. Real GDP shrank again in 2012 by 0.5% but then grew by 2.7% in 2013 and 3.8% in 2014. Total GDP in 2014 was US$11.3bn.

Banking and Finance

The central bank and bank of issue is the National Bank of Macedonia. Its Governor is Dimitar Bogov (since May 2011). Privatization of the banking sector was completed in 2000. There were 16 banks in 2012. The three largest banks by total assets in Dec. 2012 were Komercijalna Banka (82.8bn. denars), Stopanska Banka (75.4bn. denars) and NLB Tutunska Banka (59.6bn. denars); between them they control more than half the assets of all banks in Macedonia, which totalled 352.9bn. denars in Dec. 2012.

External debt was US$5,804m. in 2010, representing 65.1% of GNI.

A stock exchange opened in Skopje in 1996.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Macedonia's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy were the equivalent of 4.2 tonnes per capita in 2011.

Electricity

Installed capacity in 2011 was 1.6m. kW. Output in 2011: 6.76bn. kWh, of which 1.43bn. kWh were from hydro-electric plants. Consumption per capita was 4,485 kWh in 2011.

Oil and Gas

A 230-km long pipeline bringing crude oil to Macedonia from Thessaloniki in Greece opened in July 2002. Built at a cost of over US$130m., it has the capacity to provide Macedonia with 2.5m. tonnes of crude oil annually.

Minerals

Macedonia is relatively rich in minerals, including lead, zinc, copper, iron, chromium, nickel, antimony, manganese, silver and gold. Output in 2009, unless otherwise indicated (in tonnes): lignite, 7,454,000; copper ore, 3,767,000; gypsum, 155,000; lead concentrate, 52,000; copper concentrate, 35,430; zinc concentrate, 32,000.

Agriculture

In 2002 the agricultural population numbered 833,000 persons, of whom 109,000 were economically active. In 2004 there were 560,264 ha. of arable land, 703,830 ha. of pasture and 44,000 ha. of permanent crops. In 2004, 101,004 ha. of arable land were owned by agricultural organizations and 459,260 ha. by individual farmers. There were 65,338 tractors in use in 2004.

Crop production, 2004 (in 1,000 tonnes): wheat, 356; grapes, 194; potatoes (2003), 175; barley, 149; wine, 142; maize (2003), 141; watermelons, 115; chillies and green peppers (2003), 111; tomatoes (2002), 109; lucerne, 98; apples, 82; cabbage (2002), 71; sugar beets, 47; onions (2003), 31; cucumbers and gherkins, 27; plums, 26. In 2004, 119,000 tonnes of wine were produced.

Livestock, 2004 (in 1,000): sheep, 1,432; cattle, 255; pigs, 158; horses, 40; chickens, 2,725. Livestock products, 2004 (in 1,000 tonnes): beef, 9; pork and pork products, 9; mutton, 7; poultry, 3; cow's milk, 213m. litres; sheep's milk, 49m. litres; eggs (total), 340m.

Forestry

Forests covered 1.00m. ha. in 2010 (39% of the land area), chiefly oak and beech. 597,000 cu. metres of timber were cut in 2011.

Fisheries

Total catch in 2012 was 249 tonnes, entirely from inland waters.

INDUSTRY

In 2013 there were 71,290 business entities, with the main sectors of activity as follows: wholesale and retail trade, and repair of motor vehicles and motorcycles, 25,429 entities; manufacturing, 7,918; transportation and storage, 6,095; professional, scientific and technical activities, 5,817. Production, 2004 (in tonnes): cement, 585,000; distillate fuel oil, 359,000; residual fuel oil, 282,000; petrol, 146,377; sulphuric acid (2001), 101,058; ferroalloys, 72,082; detergents, 14,507.

Labour

The labour force in 2013 was 946,000 (861,000 in 2003). 64.2% of the population aged 15–64 was economically active in 2013. The unemployment rate in 2013 was 29.0% (31.0% in 2012).

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

In 2009 imports (c.i.f.) were valued at US$5,403m. and exports (f.o.b.) at US$2,692m.

Leading imports in 2009 (in US$1m.) were: manufactured goods (1,202); machinery and transport equipment (1,038); chemicals and related products (566). Leading exports in 2009 (in US$1m.) were: articles of apparel and clothing accessories (584); iron and steel (169); fruit and vegetables (143).

In 2009 major import sources (in US$1m.) were: Germany (518); Russia (495); Greece (439). Major export markets in 2009 (in US$1m.) were: Serbia (652); Germany (450); Greece (290).

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

In 2007 there were 221 km of motorways, 690 km of other main roads, 3,774 km of regional roads and 9,155 km of local roads. There were 248,800 passenger cars in use in 2007, plus 2,300 buses and coaches, and 26,600 lorries and vans. In the same year there were 4,037 road accidents with 173 fatalities.

Rail

In 2009 there were 699 km of railways (234 km electrified). 1.5m. passengers and 2.9m. tonnes of freight were transported in 2009. The former Macedonian Railways was reorganized in 2007 with two new entities being created—Macedonian Railways Infrastructure (PE Makedonski Železnici Infrastructure, or MŽ-I), which is responsible for the maintenance and operation of the infrastructure, and Macedonian Railways Transport (MŽ Transport AD, or MŽ-T), which is responsible for the operation of passenger and freight services.

Civil Aviation

There are international airports at Skopje and Ohrid. A new Macedonia-based carrier, Aeromak, has been established to replace MAT Macedonian Airlines, the former flag carrier which ceased operations in 2009. In 2009 Skopje handled 602,298 passengers (658,366 in 2008) and 2,326 tonnes of freight.

The much smaller airport at Ohrid handled 36,652 passengers in 2009 (44,413 in 2008).

Telecommunications

In 2011 there were 413,500 landline telephone subscriptions (equivalent to 200.3 per 1,000 inhabitants) and 2,257,100 mobile phone subscriptions (or 1,093.6 per 1,000 inhabitants). In 2011, 56.7% of the population were internet users. In 2002 the Hungarian firm Matav acquired a 51% stake in MakTel, the state monopoly telecommunications provider, in the most significant economic development in the country's history. The deal was worth €618.2m. (US$568.4m.) over two years. In March 2012 there were 880,000 Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

Courts are autonomous and independent. Judges are tenured and elected for life on the proposal of the Judicial Council, whose members are themselves elected for renewable six-year terms. The highest court is the Supreme Court. There are 27 courts of first instance and three higher courts.

The population in penal institutions in Sept. 2011 was 2,515 (122 per 100,000 of national population). Macedonia was ranked 51st of 102 countries for criminal justice and 38th for civil justice in the 2015 World Justice Project Rule of Law Index, which provides data on how the rule of law is experienced by the general public across eight categories.

Education

The literacy rate was 96.1% in 2003 (98.2% among males and 94.1% among females). Education is free and compulsory for nine years. In 2004, 36,392 children attended 51 pre-school institutions and 486 infant schools of elementary education. In 2004–05 there were 227,254 pupils enrolled in 1,012 primary schools, 95,268 in 96 secondary schools and (2001–02) 343,587 students in higher education. There are universities at Skopje (Cyril and Methodius, founded in 1949; 36,509 students and 1,314 academic staff in 2004–05) and Bitola (founded 1979; 10,043 students and 233 academic staff in 2004–05). There are two private universities at Skopje (1,075 students and 41 academic staff in 2004–05) and Tetovo (1,737 students and 86 academic staff in 2004–05).

In 2002 public expenditure on education came to 3.5% of GDP.

Health

In 2004 there were 4,490 doctors, 1,134 dentists, 322 pharmacologists and 63 hospitals with 9,699 beds.

Welfare

In 2004 social assistance was paid to 67,260 households. Child care and special supplements went to 46,203 children, and 16,970 underage and 95,053 adults received social benefits. There were 260,075 pensioners in 2004.

RELIGION

Macedonia is traditionally Orthodox but the church is not established and there is freedom of religion. A study by the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life estimated that there were 1.33m. Orthodox Christians in 2010 and 810,000 Muslims (mainly Sunni). In 1967 an autocephalous Orthodox church—the Macedonian Orthodox Church—split off from the Serbian Orthodox Church. Its head is the Archbishop of Ohrid and Macedonia, whose seat is at Skopje.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

The Former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia has one site on the UNESCO World Heritage List: Ohrid Region with its Cultural and Historic Aspect and its Natural Environment (inscribed on the list in 1979 and 1980), a rich repository of Byzantine art and architecture.

Press

There were 12 daily newspapers in 2008 with a circulation of 295,000 copies. Dnevnik is the most popular with a daily circulation of 50,000 copies in 2008.

There are four news agencies in Macedonia: the Macedonian Information Agency (national); and Macedonian Information Centre, Makfax and Net Press (privately owned). Net Press is exclusively an internet news agency.

Tourism

There were 261,696 foreign tourists in 2010, the highest total since 1991. The main countries of origin of non-resident tourists in 2010 were: Serbia (13.7%), Greece (10.3%), Turkey (7.7%) and Albania (6.5%).

Festivals

The main festivals are Days of Macedonian Music in Skopje (March), the Balkan Festival of Folk Songs and Dances in Ohrid (July), the Ohrid Summer Festival focusing on music and drama (July–Aug.) and the Skopje Jazz Festival (Oct.).

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

The island was settled by people of African and Indonesian origin when it was visited by the Portuguese explorer, Diego Diaz, in 1500. The island was unified under the Im erina monarchy between 1797 and 1861. A French protectorate was established in 1895. Madagascar became a French colony on 6 Aug. 1896 and achieved independence on 26 June 1960.

In Feb. 1975 Col. Richard Ratsimandrava, head of state, was assassinated. The 1975 constitution instituted a 'Democratic Republic' allowing for only one political party. After six months of anti-government unrest an 18-month transitional administration was agreed. A new constitution instituted the Third Republic in Sept. 1992.

Following the presidential election of Dec. 2001 the opposition candidate Marc Ravalomanana claimed victory, although the High Constitutional Court called for a run-off. On 22 Feb. 2002 Ravalomanana declared himself president and imposed a state of emergency. However, incumbent Didier Ratsiraka and his government set up a rival capital in Toamasina. In April 2002 both men agreed to a recount of votes to solve the dispute. Ravalomanana was declared president.

Re-elected in 2006, the suppression of political opponents led to an army mutiny against Ravalomanana in early 2009. As civil unrest increased, he resigned the presidency and handed power to the military which installed Andry Rajoelina, Ravalomanana's chief political rival, as president. In Aug. 2010 Ravalomanana was sentenced in absentia (he was living in exile in South Africa at the time) to life imprisonment for ordering the killing of opposition supporters.

A new constitution was promulgated in Dec. 2010 and in Nov. 2011 the South African Development Community brokered a deal to establish a unity government, including representatives from opposition parties, under Rajoelina's leadership. Long-delayed presidential elections held in Dec. 2013 were won by Hery Rajaonarimampianina after Rajoelina and Ravalomanana both agreed not to stand. In May 2015 the country entered a new period of constitutional turmoil as parliament attempted to impeach Rajaonarimampianina on charges of misrule, although the Constitutional Court declared the move invalid.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Madagascar is situated 400 km (250 miles) off the southeast coast of Africa, from which it is separated by the Mozambique Channel. Its area is 587,041 sq. km (226,658 sq. miles), including 5,500 sq. km (2,120 sq. miles) of inland water. At the 1993 census the population was 12,092,157 (50-45% female); density, 20.6 per sq. km. The estimate for 2011 was 20,696,100; density, 35.6 per sq. km. 69.8% of the population lived in rural areas in 2010.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 24.24m.

The indigenous population is of Malayo-Polynesian stock, divided into 18 ethnic groups of which the principal are Merina (24%) of the central plateau, the Betsimisaraka (13%) of the east coast and the Betsileo (11%) of the southern plateau. Foreign communities include Europeans (mainly French), Indians, Chinese, Comorians and Arabs.

Malagasy, French and (since 2007) English are all official languages.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2008 estimates: births, 686,000; deaths, 176,000. Rates, 2008 estimates (per 1,000 population): births, 35.9; deaths, 9.2. Infant mortality, 2010 (per 1,000 live births), 43. Expectation of life in 2013 was 63.2 years for males and 66.2 for females. Annual population growth rate, 2000–08, 2.8%. Fertility rate, 2008, 4.7 births per woman.

CLIMATE

A tropical climate, but the mountains cause big variations in rainfall, which is very heavy in the east and very light in the west. Antananarivo, Jan. 70°F (21.1°C), July 59°F (15°C). Annual rainfall 54" (1,350 mm). Toamasina, Jan. 80°F (26.7°C), July 70°F (21.1°C). Annual rainfall 128" (3,256 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

Following the coup that brought Andry Rajoelina to power in March 2009, Madagascar's bicameral parliament was suspended. A new constitution was promulgated on 10 Dec. 2010, having won 74.2% support at a referendum held in Nov. 2010. However, the referendum was boycotted by the three main opposition parties and turnout was 52.6%, with registered voters accounting for only about a third of the population. On the day of the vote there was an unsuccessful army mutiny against the rule of Rajoelina.

The new constitution reduced the minimum age requirement for the presidency from 40 years to 35 (allowing the then 36-year old Rajoelina to stand in the next presidential election). It also demanded that presidential candidates should be resident in the country in the six months leading up to an election, which effectively ruled out Rajoelina's exiled predecessor, Marc Ravalomanana, from standing against him. Rajoelina's critics argued the constitution was designed to bolster the interim president's personal standing.

After several failed attempts to establish a roadmap back to democracy, a South African Development Community-sponsored agreement was reached in Sept. 2011 for a new transitional government. It was to be led by Rajoelina until elections, initially scheduled for March 2012, could be held. In the event, the presidential poll was delayed until Oct. 2013, with elections to the 151-member National Assembly coming two months later.

National Anthem

'Ry tanindrazanay malala ô!' ('O our beloved Fatherland'); words by Pastor Rahajason, tune by N. Raharisoa.

RECENT ELECTIONS

Presidential elections were held on 25 Oct. and 20 Dec. 2013. In the second round run-off, Hery Rajaonarimampianina won with 53.5% of the vote against Jean Louis Robinson with 46.5%. There were 30 further candidates in the first round. Turnout was 61.8% in the first round and 50.8% in the run-off. Although Robinson claimed that the poll was fraudulent, international observers expressed their satisfaction with the elections process. In parliamentary elections also held on 20 Dec. 2013, Party of Andry Rajoelina (the party supporting the outgoing interim president) won 49 of the 151 seats, Ravalomanana Movement 20 and Vondrona Politika 13. Independents won 25 seats and the remaining seats went to a number of smaller parties.

CURRENT LEADERS

Hery Rajaonarimampianina

Position
President

Introduction

Hery Rajaonarimampianina was elected president in Dec. 2013. An economist and former finance minister, his main challenge was to restore political and economic stability after years of turmoil.

Early Life

Rajaonarimampianina was born on 6 Nov. 1958 in Antananarivo. Graduating in economics and finance from the capital's university in 1982, he went on to study accounting at the University of Quebec at Trois-Rivières, Canada. He returned to Madagascar in 1991 and became director of research at the National Institute of Accountancy and Business Administration, a position he held until 1995. He continued to teach at both the Institute and the University of Antananarivo.

As a practising chartered accountant, he oversaw the finances of various national and international aid and infrastructure projects. He also spent five years as president of the Order of Chartered Accountants and Statutory Auditors of Madagascar. In 2009 he was appointed minister of finance in the transitional authority that assumed power under the leadership of Andry Rajoelina after a coup in 2009 that toppled President Ravalomanana.

It proved a challenging appointment as the majority of the island's international donors withdrew funding in the wake of the coup. Rajaonarimampianina was nonetheless credited with helping to contain inflation and maintain core public services. In 2012 he announced his intention to contest the presidency under the banner of 'Hery Vaovao ho an'i Madagasikara' (New Force for Madagascar). Backed by Rajoelina, he emerged victorious in a run-off on 20 Dec. 2013 against Jean Louis Robinson, a government minister in the Ravalomanana era.

Career in Office

The elections were considered broadly free and fair and international organizations including the African Union lifted suspensions and sanctions imposed since 2009. Rajaonarimampianina said that his priorities were national solidarity and reconciliation. He promised to restore security, fight corruption and establish an independent judiciary.

However, without a solid support base in parliament, Rajaonarimampianina incurred increasing opposition in the legislature. In May 2015 parliament voted to impeach him on the grounds of misuse. The Constitutional Court dismissed the move as invalid before he then survived a no-confidence vote in parliament (necessitating a two-thirds majority in favour of the motion) in July.

DEFENCE

There is conscription (including civilian labour service) for 18 months. Defence expenditure totalled US$72m. in 2013 (US$3 per capita), representing 0.7% of GDP.

Army

Strength (2011) approximately 12,500 and gendarmerie 8,100.

Navy

In 2011 the Navy had a strength of 500 (including some 100 marines).

Air Force

Personnel (2011) 500. There are no combat-capable aircraft.

ECONOMY

In 2009 agriculture contributed 29.1% of GDP, industry 16.0% and services 54.9%.

Overview

Agriculture, fishing and forestry employ 80% of the workforce and contribute a quarter of GDP. The country is rich in natural resources (notably cobalt, nickel and ilmenite) and mining is increasingly important. However, growth remains below the annual average in sub-Saharan Africa.

A domestic political crisis saw tourism decline by 50% in 2009 and investor confidence fall. In 2010 the textile industry suffered a sharp contraction when its duty-free access to the US market ended after Madagascar's failure to comply with the USA's African Growth and Opportunity Act. Parts of the country have returned to a barter economy, with 77% of population living in poverty.

Currency

In July 2003 then President Marc Ravalomanana announced that the Ariary (MGA) would become the official currency, replacing the Malagasy franc (MGFr). The Ariary became legal tender on 1 Aug. 2003 at a rate of 1 Ariary = 5 Malagasy francs. The Ariary is subdivided into five Iraimbilanja.

In July 2005 foreign exchange reserves were US$435m. and total money supply was 1,324.0bn. ariarys. Inflation was 5.8% in 2013 and 6.1% 2014.

Budget

Revenues totalled 2,402bn. ariarys in 2011 and expenditures 2,769bn. ariarys. Tax revenue accounted for 90.8% of revenues in 2011; current expenditure accounted for 78.0% of expenditures.

VAT is 20%.

Performance

Total GDP in 2014 was US$10.6bn. There was a recession in 2002 with the economy contracting by 12.4% as a result of the six-month long political crisis, but a recovery followed in 2003 and 2004 with real GDP growth of 9.8% and 5.3%. The economy grew by 3.0% in 2012, 2.3% in 2013 and 3.3% in 2014.

Banking and Finance

A Central Bank, the Banque Centrale de Madagascar, was formed in 1973, replacing the former Institut d'Émission Malgache as the central bank of issue. The Governor is Alain Hervé Rasolofondraibe. All commercial banking and insurance was nationalized in 1975 and privatized in 1988. Of the six other banks, the largest are the Bankin'ny Tantsaha Mpamokatra and the BNI—Crédit Lyonnais de Madagascar.

External debt was US$2,295m. in 2010, representing 26.6% of GNI.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Madagascar's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2011 were the equivalent of 0.1 tonnes per capita.

Electricity

Installed capacity was estimated at 0.5m. kW in 2011. Production in 2011 was 1,438m. kWh, with consumption per capita 66 kWh.

Oil and Gas

Several oil blocks both on land and offshore were discovered in 2005.

Minerals

Mining production in 2009 (estimates) included: ilmenite concentrate, 160,000; salt, 75,000 tonnes; chromite, 60,000 tonnes; graphite (2008 estimate), 5,000 tonnes. There have also been discoveries of precious and semi-precious stones in various parts of the country, in particular sapphires, topaz and garnets. Madagascar is believed to have the world's largest reserves of sapphires.

Agriculture

75–80% of the workforce is employed in agriculture. There were an estimated 2.95m. ha. of arable land in 2007 and 0.6m. ha. of permanent crops. 890,000 ha. were irrigated in 2007. The principal agricultural products in 2003 were (in 1,000 tonnes): rice, 2,800; cassava, 2,367; sugarcane, 2,236; sweet potatoes, 509; potatoes, 298; bananas, 290; mangoes, 210; tomatoes, 210; taro, 200; maize, 181; coconuts, 84; oranges, 83; dry beans, 70. Rice is produced on some 40% of cultivated land. Madagascar is the world's largest producer of vanilla.

Cattle breeding and agriculture are the chief occupations. There were, in 2003, 10.5m. cattle, 1.6m. pigs, 1.2m. goats, 650,000 sheep and 24m. chickens.

Forestry

In 2010 the area under forests was 12.55m. ha., or 22% of the total land area. The forests contain many valuable woods, while gum, resins and plants for tanning, dyeing and medicinal purposes abound. Timber production was 13.38m. cu. metres in 2011.

Fisheries

The catch of fish in 2010 was 128,836 tonnes (mainly from marine waters).

INDUSTRY

Industry, hitherto confined mainly to the processing of agricultural products, is now extending to cover other fields.

Labour

The labour force in 2013 was 11,688,000 (8,182,000 in 2003). 89.7% of the population aged 15–64 was economically active in 2013. In the same year 3.6% of the population was unemployed.

Madagascar had 19,000 people living in slavery according to the Walk Free Foundation's 2013 Global Slavery Index.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

Trade, 2010, in US$1m.: imports (c.i.f.), 2,546; exports (f.o.b.), 1,082. Leading imports in 2010 (in US$1m.) were: machinery and transport equipment (752); manufactured goods (634); mineral fuels, lubricants and related materials (386). Leading exports in 2010 (in US$1m.) were: articles of apparel and clothing accessories (303); food and live animals (248); machinery and transport equipment (120).

In 2010 main import sources (in US$1m.) were: France (368); China (310); South Africa (197). Main export markets in 2010 (in US$1m.) were: France (359); Germany (79); China (57).

In 2002 there were about 65,663 km of roads, 11.6% of which were paved. There were 146,300 passenger cars, 280,800 buses and coaches and 83,800 lorries and vans in 2008. 550 people died in road accidents in 2006.

Rail

In 2005 there were 854 km of railways, all metre gauge. In 2005, 100,000 passengers and 300,000 tonnes of freight were transported.

Civil Aviation

There are international airports at Antananarivo (Ivato) and Mahajanga (Ambovo). The national carrier is Air Madagascar, which is 90.6% state-owned. In 2013 it carried 539,000 passengers (303,000 on domestic flights), serving six international and 22 domestic destinations. In 2012 Antananarivo handled 890,632 passengers (586,532 on international flights) and 22,276 tonnes of freight.

Shipping

The main ports are Toamasina, Mahajanga, Antsiranana and Toliary. In Jan. 2009 there were 19 ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 18,000 GT.

Telecommunications

In 2011 there were 130,100 landline telephone subscriptions (equivalent to 6.5 per 1,000 inhabitants) and 8,159,600 mobile phone subscriptions (or 382.8 per 1,000 inhabitants). There were 17.0 internet users per 1,000 inhabitants in 2010. Fixed internet subscriptions totalled 8,300 in 2009 (0.4 per 1,000 inhabitants). In June 2012 there were 233,000 Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The Supreme Court and the Court of Appeal are in Antananarivo. In most towns there are Courts of First Instance for civil and commercial cases. For criminal cases there are ordinary criminal courts in most towns.

The population in penal institutions in June 2010 was 18,647 (93 per 100,000 of national population). 53.0% of prisoners had yet to receive a trial according to 2014 estimates by the International Centre for Prison Studies. In 2015 the World Justice Project Rule of Law Index, which provides data on how the rule of law is experienced by the general public across eight categories, ranked Madagascar 78th of 102 countries for criminal justice and 90th for civil justice. The death penalty, which was last used in 1958, was abolished in Jan. 2015.

Education

Education is compulsory from six to 14 years of age. In 2007 there were 78,743 teaching staff for 3,837,343 pupils in primary schools, 835,539 pupils at secondary level with 34,320 teaching staff and 58,313 students at tertiary level with 3,032 academic staff. Adult literacy rate in 2008 was 71%. In 2007 public expenditure on education came to 3.4% of GNI and 16.4% of total government spending.

Health

There were three hospital beds per 10,000 population in 2005. In 2004 there were 5,201 physicians, 410 dentistry personnel and 5,661 nursing and midwifery personnel. In 2005 government expenditure on health came to 9.6% of total government spending.

Welfare

In 2006 social security accounted for 10.4% of government expenditure.

RELIGION

In 2010 there were an estimated 8.11m. Protestants and 7.26m. Catholics according to the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life, with folk religionists numbering 900,000 and 1.4m. people having no religious affiliation.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

Tsingy de Bemaraha Strict Nature Reserve joined the UNESCO World Heritage List in 1990. The undisturbed forests, lakes and mangrove swamps are the habitat for rare and endangered lemurs and birds. The Royal Hill of Ambohimanga was added in 2001, a royal city and burial site and a symbol of Malagasy identity. The rainforests of Atsinanana, comprising six national parks in the eastern part of the island, were inscribed on the list in 2007.

Press

In 2008 there were 13 daily newspapers with a total circulation of 115,000.

Tourism

In 2011, 225,005 non-resident tourists arrived by air (excluding same-day visitors), up from 196,052 in 2010 although down from the peak of 375,010 in 2008.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

The area was dominated by the Twa and Fulani tribes until the 1st century AD when Bantu-speaking tribes made inroads. The explorer David Livingstone reached Lake Nyasa, now Lake Malaŵi, in 1859 and it was the land along the lake's western shore that became, in 1891, the British Protectorate of Nyasaland. In 1884 the British South Africa Company applied for a charter to trade. Pressure on land, the colour bar and other grievances generated Malaŵian resistance. In 1893 it was renamed the British Central African Protectorate. This became Nyasaland in 1907. By the mid-1940s a nationalist movement had emerged, spearheaded by the Nyasaland African Congress. In 1953 Nyasaland was joined with Southern Rhodesia (Zimbabwe) and Northern Rhodesia (Zambia) to form the Federation of Rhodesia and Nyasaland, under British control. This union was dissolved in 1963. Nyasaland was self-governing until on 6 July 1964 it became independent, adopting the name Malaŵi. In 1966 Malaŵi was declared a republic and Dr Hastings Banda became the first president, establishing a one party dictatorship which lasted for 30 years. In 1994 Malaŵi returned to multi-party democracy.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Malaŵi lies along the southern and western shores of Lake Malaŵi (the third largest lake in Africa), and is otherwise bounded in the north by Tanzania, south by Mozambique and west by Zambia. Area (including the inland water areas of Lake Malombe, Chilwa, Chiuta and the Malaŵi portion of Lake Malaŵi, which total 24,208 sq. km), 118,484 sq. km (45,747 sq. miles).

Census population (2008), 13,077,160 (6,718,227 females); density, 138.7 per sq. km. The United Nations population estimate for 2008 was 13,905,000. In 2011, 20.3% of the population were urban.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 17.22m.

Population of main towns (2008): Lilongwe, 674,448; Blantyre, 661,256; Mzuzu, 133,968; Zomba, 88,314. Population of the regions (2008): Northern, 1,708,930; Central, 5,510,195; Southern, 5,858,035.

The official languages are Chichewa, spoken by over 58% of the population, and English.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2008 estimates: births, 597,000; deaths, 182,000. Estimated rates, 2008 (per 1,000 population): births, 40.2; deaths, 12.3. Annual population growth rate, 2000–08, 2.8%. Expectation of life at birth in 2013 was 55.1 years for males and 55.4 for females. Infant mortality, 2010, 58 per 1,000 live births; fertility rate, 2008, 5.5 births per woman.

CLIMATE

The tropical climate is marked by a dry season from May to Oct. and a wet season for the remaining months. Rainfall amounts are variable, within the range of 29–100" (725–2,500 mm), and maximum temperatures average 75–89°F (24–32°C), and minimum temperatures 58–67°F (14.4–19.4°C). Lilongwe, Jan. 73°F (22.8°C), July 60°F (15.6°C). Annual rainfall 36" (900 mm). Blantyre, Jan. 75°F (23.9°C), July 63°F (17.2°C). Annual rainfall 45" (1,125 mm). Zomba, Jan. 73°F (22.8°C), July 63°F (17.2°C). Annual rainfall 54" (1,344 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

The President is also head of government. Malaŵi was a one-party state, but following a referendum on 14 June 1993, in which 63% of votes cast were in favour of reform, a new constitution was adopted on 17 May 1994 which ended Hastings Banda's life presidency and provided for the holding of multi-party elections. At these Bakili Muluzi was elected president with 47.2% of votes cast, beating President Banda and two other opponents. There is a National Assembly of 193 members, elected for five-year terms in single-seat constituencies.

National Anthem

'O God Bless our Land of Malaŵi'; words and tune by M.-F. Sauka.

RECENT ELECTIONS

At presidential elections of 20 May 2014 Peter Mutharika of the Democratic Progressive Party (DPP) won with 36.4% of the vote, ahead of Lazarus Chakwera of the Malaŵi Congress Party (MCP—until 1993 the only legal party) with 27.8%, incumbent president Joyce Banda of the People's Party (PP) with 20.2% and Atupele Muluzi of the United Democratic Front (UDF) with 13.7%. There were eight other candidates who all received less than 1% of the vote. Turnout was 70.7%.

At parliamentary elections held on the same day the DPP won 50 seats, the MCP 48, the PP 26 and the UDF 14. The Alliance for Democracy (AFORD) and Chipani cha Pfuko took one seat each, with independents winning the remaining 52 seats. One seat remained vacant.

CURRENT LEADERS

Peter Mutharika

Position

President

Introduction

Peter Mutharika was sworn into office on 31 May 2014 after being declared winner of a disputed presidential election. Although widely regarded as part of the Democratic Progressive Party's old guard, owing to his familial ties to the late Bingu wa Mutharika, Mutharika has been keen to portray himself as a reformer.

Early Life

Arthur Peter Mutharika was born in Malaŵi's Thyolo district in 1940. He graduated in law from the University of London in the UK in 1965 and then attended Yale University in the USA, earning a master's degree and a doctorate in law (in 1966 and 1969, respectively). Unable to return to Malaŵi as his brother, Bingu wa Mutharika, was being targeted by the Malaŵi Young Pioneers (the paramilitary wing of the then dominant Malaŵi Congress Party), Mutharika undertook various advisory and teaching posts at universities around the world, including the University of Dar es Salaam in Tanzania and Washington University in the USA.

Returning to Malaŵi after the establishment of democratic elections, Mutharika advised his brother during his successful presidential re-election campaign in 2009 and also won a seat for himself in the National Assembly. Tipped as Bingu wa's successor, Mutharika was given charge of high profile portfolios, including justice and constitutional affairs, education, science and technology, and foreign affairs. In Aug. 2011 the governing body of the Democratic Progressive Party endorsed his candidacy for the 2014 presidential elections. This fuelled tensions with Vice President Joyce Banda and led to treason charges against Mutharika in March 2013 for allegedly plotting a coup to prevent Banda from taking power following Bingu wa's death a year earlier. Nonetheless, on 31 May 2014 Mutharika won the presidential election.

Career in Office

Mutharika's main challenges included cutting the country's dependence on international aid while maintaining national unity. His first budget, published in Sept. 2014, aimed to regain donor confidence and encourage political stability. His opponents have criticized him for failing to act against those implicated in a corruption scandal in which up to US$250m. of public money was fraudulently siphoned off, and for ignoring increasing security problems. Presidential immunity should shield him from the treason charges against him relating to Joyce Banda.

DEFENCE

All services form part of the Army. Defence expenditure totalled US$25m. in 2013 (US$2 per capita), representing 0.7% of GDP.

Army

Personnel (2011) 5,300. In addition there is a paramilitary mobile police force totalling 1,500.

Navy

The small Navy, based at Monkey Bay on Lake Malaŵi, numbered 220 personnel in 2011.

Air Wing

The Air Wing acts as infantry support and numbered 200 in 2011 with no combat-capable aircraft.

ECONOMY

Agriculture accounted for 30% of GDP in 2010, industry 20% and services 50%.

Overview

Malaŵi enjoyed solid annual GDP growth between 2006 and 2010, averaging 7.1% compared to 2% in 2005. This reflected improved government finances, a reform programme, strong mining revenues and healthy construction and manufacturing activity.

However, between 2010 and 2013 weak agricultural returns, mismanaged macroeconomic policies (leading to the devaluation of the kwacha by 10% in 2011 and 34% in 2012) and stricter rules governing foreign exchange transactions hampered economic performance. Corruption has also been a problem and in 2013 it was revealed that over US$30m. of government money had gone missing. The contribution of uranium mining to GDP declined from 4.4% in 2013 to 0.2% in 2014 after production at the Kayelekera mine was halted after a fall in the commodity price.

Heavy dependence on agriculture (which accounted for over 30% of GDP in 2012 and 80% of foreign exchange earnings) makes the economy vulnerable to weather shocks and natural disasters. In Aug. 2006 the IMF's Heavily Indebted Poor Countries initiative redirected government spending towards farming programmes, boosting agricultural development. Tobacco, tea, cotton, coffee and sugar are the primary exports, with tobacco accounting for 80% of the total.

Social indicators are poor. In 2012 GNI per capita was US$320, and Malaŵi has relied heavily on assistance from the World Bank, IMF and other international donors. However, education, environmental conditions and healthcare all show signs of improvement. For instance, the HIV/AIDS prevalence rate fell from 15.8% in 2000 to 10.8% in 2012.

Challenges to long-term sustainability are numerous. Energy constraints mean that only 9% of the population have access to electricity, while a weak balance-of-payments threatens exchange rate and price stability, and prospects are uncertain for international tobacco consumption.

Currency

The unit of currency is the kwacha (MWK) of 100 tambala. Foreign exchange reserves were US$119m. in June 2005, gold reserves 13,000 troy oz and total money supply was K.29,579m. In May 2012 Malaŵi ended its currency peg to the dollar and adopted a floating exchange rate regime, which led to the devaluing of the kwacha by 34%. Inflation, which was 83-1% in 1995, had been brought down to 7-4% by 2010 but more recently was 21-3% in 2012, 28-3% in 2013 and 23-8% in 2014.

Budget

The fiscal year runs from 1 July–30 June. In 2008–09 revenues were K.187-40bn. and expenditures K.223-50bn. Tax revenue accounted for 62-4% of revenues in 2008–09; current expenditure accounted for 82-0% of expenditures.

VAT is 16-5%.

Performance

Real GDP growth was 1-9% in 2012, 5-2% in 2013 and 5-7% in 2014. Total GDP was US$4-3bn. in 2014.

Banking and Finance

The central bank and bank of issue is the Reserve Bank of Malaŵi (founded 1964). The Governor is Charles Chuka. In 2002 there were four commercial banks, one development bank, three merchant banks and a savings bank.

Foreign debt was US$922m. in 2010, representing 18-5% of GNI.

There is a stock exchange in Blantyre.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2011 were the equivalent of 0-1 tonnes per capita.

Electricity

The Electricity Supply Commission of Malaŵi is the sole supplier. Installed capacity was 0-5m. kW in 2011. Production was estimated at 1,978m. kWh in 2011; consumption per capita was estimated at 127 kWh. Only 7% of the population has access to electricity and power cuts are frequent.

Oil and Gas

Malaŵi does not produce any oil or natural gas and imports all its fuel products. There are plans for an oil pipeline to be constructed linking Nsanje in the south of the country with the port of Beira in neighbouring Mozambique. However, as at Oct. 2015 progress had stalled following the failure to find investors for the project.

Minerals

Mining operations have been limited to small-scale production of coal, limestone, rubies and sapphires, but companies are now moving in to start exploration programmes. Bauxite reserves are estimated at 29m. tonnes and there are proven reserves of clays, diamonds, glass and silica sands, gold, graphite, limestone, mercurate, phosphates, tanzanite, titanium and uranium. Output in 2007: crushed stone, 226,351 tonnes; coal, 58,550 tonnes; limestone, 42,088 tonnes; gemstones, 3,710 kg.

Agriculture

Malaŵi is predominantly an agricultural country. Agricultural produce contributes 90% of export earnings. There were an estimated 3-0m. ha. of arable land in 2007 and 120,000 ha. of permanent crops. Maize is the main subsistence crop and is grown by over 95% of all smallholders. Tobacco is the chief cash crop, employing 12% of the workforce and generating a quarter of tax earnings. Also important are groundnuts, cassava, millet and rice. There are large plantations which produce sugar, tea and coffee. Production (2003 estimates, in 1,000 tonnes): maize, 1,901; sugarcane, 1,900; cassava, 1,774; potatoes, 1,100; plantains, 200; groundnuts, 158; dry beans, 94; bananas, 93; rice, 87; tobacco, 70; sorghum, 45; tea, 45.

Livestock in 2003: goats, 1-7m.; cattle, 750,000; pigs, 456,000; sheep, 115,000; chickens, 15m.

Forestry

In 2010 the area under forests was 3-24m. ha., or 34% of the total land area. Timber production in 2011 was 6-87m. cu. metres.

Fisheries

Landings in 2010 were 98,299 tonnes, entirely from inland waters. The annual catch has doubled since 2002, when it was 41,329 tonnes.

INDUSTRY

Index of industrial production in 2001 (1984 = 100): total general industrial production, 101-9; of this goods for the domestic market were at 73-2 and export goods were at 101-5. Electricity and water were at 231-7.

Labour

The labour force in 2010 was 6,708,000 (51-5% female). Approximately 80% of the economically active population in 2010 were engaged in agriculture.

Malaŵi had 0-11m. people living in slavery according to the Walk Free Foundation's 2013 Global Slavery Index.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

In 2010 imports (c.i.f.) amounted to US$2,173m. and exports (f.o.b.) US$1,066m.

Principal imports in 2010 (in US$1m.) were: chemicals and related products (532); machinery and transport equipment (515); manufactured goods (347). Principal exports in 2010 (in US$1m.) were: tobacco and tobacco products (585); uranium ores and concentrates (114); tea (81).

In 2010 major import sources (in US$1m.) were: South Africa (654); China (198); India (165). Major export markets in 2010 (in US$1m.) were: Belgium (133); Canada (118); Egypt (98).

Trade Fairs

The annual Malaŵi International Trade Fair takes place in Blantyre, the commercial capital.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

The road network consisted of 15,451 km in 2003, of which 45-0% were paved. There were 53,300 passenger cars and 59,800 vans and trucks in 2007.

Rail

In 2005 Malaŵi Railways operated 797 km on 1,067 mm gauge, providing links to the Mozambican ports of Beira and Nacala. In 2009 passenger-km travelled came to 44m. and freight tonne-km to 47m.

Civil Aviation

The national carrier is Malawian Airlines, which is 49% owned by Ethiopian Airlines. It was founded in 2013 following the liquidation of the former flag carrier, Air Malawi. In 2003 scheduled airline traffic of Malaŵi-based carriers flew 4m. km, carrying 109,000 passengers (68,000 on international flights). The main international airports is Lilongwe (Lilongwe International Airport). The airport at Blantyre (Chileka) also has some international flights. Lilongwe handled 261,267 passengers in 2012 (198,620 on international flights) and 3,932 tonnes of freight.

Telecommunications

In 2011 there were 173,500 landline telephone subscriptions (equivalent to 11-3 per 1,000 inhabitants) and 3,855,800 mobile phone subscriptions (or 250-7 per 1,000 inhabitants). In 2011, 3-3% of the population were internet users. In June 2012 there were 140,000 Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

Justice is administered in the High Court and in the magistrates' courts. Traditional courts were abolished in 1994. Appeals from magistrates' courts lie to the High Court, and appeals from the High Court to Malaŵi's Supreme Court of Appeal.

The population in penal institutions in Dec. 2012 was 12,236 (76 per 100,000 of national population). In 2015 the World Justice Project Rule of Law Index, which provides data on how the rule of law is experienced by the general public across eight categories, ranked Malaŵi 48th of 102 countries for criminal justice and 50th for civil justice.

Education

The adult literacy rate in 2009 was estimated at 73.7% (80.6% among males and 67.0% among females). Fees for primary education were abolished in 1994. In 2007 the number of pupils in primary schools was 2,943,248 (44,048 teaching staff). The primary school course is of eight years' duration, followed by a four-year secondary course. In 2007 there were 574,003 pupils in secondary schools. English is taught from the 1st year and becomes the general medium of instruction from the 4th year.

The University of Malaŵi (consisting of four colleges and one polytechnic) had 6,257 students and 676 academic staff in 2007. A university at Mzuzu opened in 1998 and provides courses for secondary school teachers. In 2007 there were 6,458 students in higher education and 861 academic staff.

In 2009 public expenditure on education came to 2.8% of GDP.

Health

In 2004 there were 266 physicians and 7,264 nursing and midwifery personnel. In 2007 there were 11 hospital beds per 10,000 inhabitants.

RELIGION

According to estimates by the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life, in 2010 the population was 82.7% Christian (mainly Protestants) and 13.0% Muslim.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

Malaŵi has two sites on the UNESCO World Heritage List: Lake Malaŵi National Park (inscribed on the list in 1984); and the Chongoni Rock-Art area (2006).

Press

There were two paid-for dailies and nine paid-for non-dailies in 2008. The two dailies are The Nation (average circulation of 15,000 copies daily in 2008); and The Daily Times (7,000 copies daily in 2008).

Tourism

There were 755,031 non-resident tourists in 2009 (excluding same-day visitors), up from 742,457 in 2008.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Excavations at Niah in Sarawak, East Malaysia have uncovered evidence of human settlement from 38,000 BC (the oldest relic of homo sapiens in southeast Asia). There are numerous sites in the north of Peninsular Malaysia where evidence of hunter-gatherers has been dated to around 10,000 BC. These Hoabinhians were spread across the region from present-day Myanmar to southern China between 12,000 and 3,000 BC. After 3,000 BC Mon-Khmer speaking immigrants moved south into Peninsular Malaysia and introduced a more advanced Neolithic culture, engaging in simple farming. The indigenous people known as Orang Asli, who still live in the remoter, mountainous areas of the northern Malay Peninsula, are considered to be descendants of the Neolithic farmers. Indian traders first visited the Malay Peninsula in the 1st century BC and introduced political ideas, art forms and the Sanskrit language. Hinduism and Buddhism gained a foothold and were practised alongside traditional animist beliefs.

Various Hinduized city-states were established, one of which was located in Kedah. In the 7th century AD Kedah came under the control of the Hinduized Srivijaya empire, centred on Palembang in Sumatra. Srivijaya rule ended in the late 13th century when Sumatra fell to a Javan invasion, after which the king of Sukothai sent forces south into the Malay Peninsula. The Sumatran kingdom of Melayu next ruled over the southern part of the Peninsula, followed by the Madjapahit, the last Hindu empire of Java. In the mid-15th century Melaka emerged as the key trading port in the region—it was host to indigenous Malays, Sumatrans, Javans, Gujaratis, Arabs, Persians, Filipinos and Chinese—and grew rapidly in prosperity. A pattern of government was established in Melaka that became the basis of Malay identity and it was emulated by subsequent Malay kingdoms. Gujarati sailors introduced Islam to the region through Melaka in the 15th century. In 1511 the port was captured by the Portuguese navigator Alfonso de Albuquerque (who had seized Goa in western India the previous year), and who sought to dominate the route by which precious spices were shipped to Europe.

The sultan of Melaka fled to Johor and some of the Muslim mercantile elite relocated to Brunei in northwest Borneo. Sultanates also emerged in Pahang and Perak, which subsequently received large numbers of immigrants from Indonesian islands, notably Acehnese, Bugis and Minangkabau settlers, who displaced the Orang Asli from their coastal communities and drove them to the Malay Peninsula's interior. Conflict arose between the sultanates of Johor and Aceh and the Portuguese as they vied for control over the Straits of Melaka. In the late 16th century the northern Peninsular states of Kedah, Kelantan and Terengganu came under the control of the Thai state of Phetburi. The early 17th century saw the arrival of Dutch traders in the strait of Melaka. As part of the United Netherlands East India Company (Vereenigde Oostindische Compagnie, VOC) they made an alliance with Johor to besiege Melaka, capturing it in 1641. The Dutch brokered a peace deal between Aceh and Johor in the same year, ushering in an era of relative peace and prosperity for Johor under Laksamana Tun Abdul Jamil.

In the late 17th century the Malay Peninsula came under the influence of Bugis merchants from the Indonesian island of Sulawesi, who began settling in Selangor to trade in tin. The Bugis were formidable warriors, renowned for their navigational and commercial skills. By the 1740s they controlled many of the key shipping routes across the Indonesian archipelago and influenced all areas of government in Johor and the Riau archipelago, although Sultan Suliaman was permitted to remain as a figurehead.

British Influence

In the mid-18th century Johor and Melaka became entrepôts for the trade in tea between China and Europe. Ships owned by the British East India Company (EIC) began plying the Melaka straits in greater numbers. The British foothold in India allowed them to expand eastwards, and their control of India's poppy fields enabled them to dominate the lucrative opium trade. In 1786 Francis Light of the EIC leased the island of Penang from the Sultan Abdullah of Kedah who hoped the British would provide protection against attacks from Siam or Burma. Penang grew swiftly, luring trade away from Melaka (which remained in Dutch control) and Johor-Riau. The British sought to increase their control over the maritime route to China and Sir Thomas Stamford Raffles was ordered to establish an entrepôt in the southern reaches of the Melaka Straits. In 1819 he signed a treaty with Sultan Husein Syah of Johor and founded Singapore. Five years later the British formally acquired Melaka from the Dutch. From 1826 Penang, Singapore and Melaka were ruled by the British authorities in India under a joint administration known as the Straits Settlements. By 1831 the population of Singapore had reached 18,000 (a large proportion were Chinese immigrants) and the following year the port replaced Penang as the capital of the Straits Settlements. Meanwhile, the northern provinces of Kedah and Perak came under the influence of the Siamese Chakri dynasty.

The discovery of tin deposits at Larut (western Malay Peninsula) in the 1850s led to large-scale immigration by Chinese miners and labourers. They organized themselves into hui (brotherhoods), which eventually became powerful political and economic organizations. Vast profits could be made from tin and there were clashes between rival developers. At the same time, piracy was on the increase in the Melaka straits, and merchants asked the British to intervene and restore order. A series of agreements in 1874 introduced the British Residential system to Perak, Selangor and Sungei Ujung. In each region, a British Resident functioned as an adviser to the Malay Sultan on all aspects of administration apart from matters relating to the Islamic faith and Malay tradition.

Colonial Rule

In 1896 the three states and Pahang were grouped together as the Federated Malay States, presided over by a British Resident-General at Kuala Lumpur in the heart of the tin-mining district. By the end of the century, a British colonial infrastructure was taking shape in the form of public buildings, municipal services, rubber plantations and road and rail construction, which required a stream of cheap workers. Tamils from south India and Sri Lanka arrived as indentured (and later as licensed) labourers. Negotiations between the British and Siamese in the early years of the 20th century led to British control over the northern states of Kedah, Perlis, Kelantan and Terengganu. A rubber boom followed the expansion of the motor car industry in Europe and North America. Rubber plants, originally from the forests of Brazil and introduced to Malaysia in the 1880s, were planted in every state in Malaysia by 1908 and by 1913 rubber had eclipsed tin as the country's chief export.

Sabah, Sarawak and Brunei, which had come under the control of the North Borneo Chartered Company and was granted protectorate status in 1888, experienced slower economic development than British Malaya but gold, antimony and coal were mined and oil was discovered at Miri in 1910. The colony was hit hard by the global depression of 1929–31 and widespread unemployment in the mines and plantations caused the repatriation of Chinese and Indian workers. Rubber, tin and oil made Malaya a focus for Imperial Japan from early in the Second World War. When Pearl Harbor and Hong Kong came under attack from Japanese forces in Dec. 1941, other Japanese divisions came ashore at Kota Bharu and Miri. British forces retreated south to Singapore, but the 'impregnable' island capitulated within a few weeks, on 15 Feb. 1942. Japanese troops quickly took over from British colonial officers and controlled Malaya from Singapore (Shonan), meting out harsh treatment to the Chinese population. Thailand allied itself with Japan and was granted control of the northern Malay states in 1943.

Post-War Period

Returning in 1946, the British reorganized the colony into the Malayan Union. The Malay elite, fearing an end to their privileges as a consequence of equal rights for Chinese and Indian subjects, campaigned via the United Malays National Organization (UMNO, led by Datuk Onn) to demand the continuation of the sultanates. The British were forced to compromise and established the Federation of Malaya in Feb. 1948, consisting of the nine Malay states, Melaka and Penang and administered by a High Commissioner in Kuala Lumpur. Within months the Federation was under attack by the Chinese-dominated Malayan Communist Party (MCP) which had grown during the Japanese occupation, when it controlled various anti-Japanese National Salvation Organizations. In 1950 the High Commissioner, Sir Henry Gurney, responded to guerrilla attacks by the MCP by putting Malaya on a war-footing, including tightening security, recruiting soldiers from other colonies and dispersing the Chinese squatter settlements that harboured the MCP. More than 500,000 Chinese were resettled by the mid-1950s. The Communist insurrection, known by the British as 'the Emergency', hastened the transition to Malayan independence and local elections were held in Penang in late 1951. Four years later the first federal-level election was won convincingly by the Alliance Party, a loose coalition of Malay, Chinese and Indian parties, led by Tuanku (Prince) Abdul Rahman. On 31 Aug. 1957 the Federation of Malaya became an independent state with Tuanku Abdul Rahman as the first prime minister.

The concept of Malaysia as a broader federation including Sabah, Sarawak, Singapore and the British protectorate of Brunei, was first suggested by Abdul Rahman in 1961. It was opposed by neighbouring Indonesia and the Philippines, but public support in Sabah and Sarawak led to Malaysia's formation in Sept. 1963, although Brunei declined to join. The new nation faced continuing hostility from Indonesia, led by Ahmed Sukarno, over the sovereignty of Borneo. Disagreements with Singapore's Prime Minister Lee Kuan Yew ended with Singapore declaring independence in 1965. Tension arose between the Chinese and Malay communities over the use of the Malay language and Malay fears about Chinese economic dominance. The 1969 elections were fought on the highly emotional issues of education and language. When the Alliance party failed to obtain a majority, rioting and serious inter-ethnic violence followed and an emergency government was set up, led by Deputy Prime Minister Abdul Razak. Parliamentary rule was restored in 1971 when Razak launched the New Economic Policy—a series of five-year plans to eradicate poverty and restructure society to improve ethnic relations, specifically by encouraging ethnic Malays, the bumiputera, to shift from subsistence agriculture into the mainstream economy.

Mahathir Mohamad was the first non-royal or non-aristocrat to become prime minister of Malaysia, winning the 1981 elections for the UMNO and leading the National Front coalition to further victories in 1986, 1990, 1995 and 1999. Mahathir shifted the economy away from dependence on commodities and towards manufacturing, services and tourism, aided by substantial Japanese and east Asian investment in manufacturing. The prolonged spell of economic growth and stability was broken by the 1997–98 recession but Mahathir refused to accept financial aid from the International Monetary Fund. In Sept. 1998 Mahathir dismissed Anwar Ibrahim, his finance minister, deputy prime minister and heir apparent. Anwar was found guilty of corruption charges in 1999 and sentenced to prison for six years. In 2002 Mahathir announced that he would resign from the presidency of UMNO and he stepped down as prime minister on 31 Oct. 2003, to be succeeded by Abdullah Ahmad Badawi. Badawi won a landslide victory in the March 2004 general elections for the National Front. In Sept. 2004 Anwar was unexpectedly released after being acquitted by the Federal Court. Najib Razak succeeded Badawi in 2009, winning re-election in 2013.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

The federal state of Malaysia comprises the 13 states and three federal territories of Peninsular Malaysia, bounded in the north by Thailand, and with the island of Singapore as an enclave on its southern tip; and, on the island of Borneo to the east, the state of Sabah (which includes the federal territory of the island of Labuan), and the state of Sarawak, with Brunei as an enclave, both bounded in the south by Indonesia and in the northwest and northeast by the South China and Sulu Seas.

The area of Malaysia is 330,803 sq. km (127,724 sq. miles), and the 2010 census population 28,334,135; density, 85.7 per sq. km. Malaysia's national waters cover 515,256 sq. km. In 2011, 73.0% of the population lived in urban areas.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 30.33m.

The growth of the population has been:

Year	Peninsular Malaysia	Sarawak	Sabah/Labuan	Total Malaysia
1980	10,944,844	1,235,553	955,712	13,136,109

Other large cities are Seberang Perai, Kajang, Klang, Subang Jaya, Petaling Jaya and Selangor.

Putrajaya, a planned new city described as an 'intelligent garden city', became the administrative capital of Malaysia in 1999 and was created a federal territory on 1 Feb. 2001.

Malay (Bahasa Malaysia) is the official language of the country—50% of the population are Malays. The government promotes the use of the national language to foster national unity. However, the people are free to use their mother tongue and other languages. English as the second language is widely used in business. In Peninsular Malaysia Chinese dialects and Tamil are also spoken. In Sabah there are numerous tribal dialects and Chinese (Mandarin and Hakka dialects predominate). In Sarawak Mandarin and numerous tribal languages are spoken. In addition to Malays, 25% of the population are Chinese, 11% other indigenous ethnic groups, 7% Indians and 7% others.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2007 estimated births, 481,000; deaths, 120,000. 2007 rates (per 1,000 population): birth, 18.1; death, 4.5. Life expectancy, 2007: males, 71.9 years; females, 76.6 years. Annual population growth rate, 2000–08, 1.9%. Infant mortality, 2010, five per 1,000 live births; fertility rate, 2007, 2.3 births per woman. Today only 6% of Malaysians live below the poverty line, compared to 50% in the early 1970s. Malaysia was ranked 111th in a gender gap index of 145 countries compiled by the World Economic Forum for its Global Gender Gap Report 2015. The annual index considers economic, political, education and health criteria.

CLIMATE

Malaysia lies near the equator between latitudes 1° and 7° North and longitudes 100° and 119° East. Malaysia is subject to maritime influence and the interplay of wind systems which originate in the Indian Ocean and the South China Sea. The year is generally divided into the South-East and the North-East Monsoon seasons. The average daily temperature throughout Malaysia varies from 21°C to 32°C. Humidity is high.

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

The Constitution of Malaysia is based on the Constitution of the former Federation of Malaya, but includes safeguards for the special interests of Sabah and Sarawak. It was amended in 1983. The Constitution provides for one of the Rulers of the Malay States to be elected from among themselves to be the Yang di-Pertuan Agong (Supreme Head of the Federation). He holds office for a period of five years. The Rulers also elect from among themselves a Deputy Supreme Head of State, also for a period of five years.

CURRENT LEADERS

Tuanku Abdul Halim Muadzam Shah ibni Sultan Badlishah

Position

King (Yang di-Pertuan Agong)

Introduction

Tuanku (His Majesty) Abdul Halim was installed as the 14th Yang di-Pertuan Agong on 13 Dec. 2011 following his election to the five-year post by the Conference of Rulers in Oct. 2011. He had previously held the largely ceremonial role from 1970–75.

Early Life

Born on 28 Nov. 1927 in Anak Bukit, Kedah, he studied from 1946–48 at the Sultan Abdul Hamid College, Alor Star following his early education. On 6 Aug. 1949 he was appointed Raja Muda (his apparent) to his father, the Sultan of Kedah.

In 1952 Tuanku Abdul Halim attended Wadham College, Oxford, where he obtained a diploma in social science and public administration. On his return to Malaya, he joined the Kedah Administrative Service, serving with the Alor Star district office and the state treasury.

On his father's death in 1958, Tuanku Abdul Halim became the 28th Sultan of Kedah and was crowned on 20 Feb. 1959. In Sept. 1965 he was selected as deputy Yang di-Pertuan Agong by the Conference of Rulers and on 21 Sept. 1970 was appointed to the throne as the fifth Yang di-Pertuan Agong. During his tenure, until Sept. 1975, he presided over the first transition between civilian governments when the prime minister, Tunku Abdul Rahman, resigned in favour of his deputy, Tun Abdul Razak.

In Nov. 2006 Tuanku Abdul Halim was elected deputy Yang di-Pertuan Agong for the second time and at a meeting of the Conference of Rulers on 14 Oct. 2011 he was selected to serve a second term as King (becoming the first of the nine hereditary state rulers to do so).

Career in Office

The role of Yang di-Pertuan Agong is mainly ceremonial although royal assent is necessary for all laws passed in parliament and the appointment of members of the cabinet and the judiciary. Tuanku Abdul Halim also serves as the nominal commander-in-chief and as the Islamic head of a large population of Malay Muslims.

Dato' Sri Haji Mohd Najib bin Tun Haji Abdul Razak

Position

Prime Minister

Introduction

Dato' Sri Haji Mohd Najib bin Tun Haji Abdul Razak became prime minister on 3 April 2009, replacing Abdullah bin Haji Ahmad Badawi, who left office following the poor showing of the Barisan Nasional (National Front Coalition) at the general election of March 2008. Najib had replaced Badawi as head of the United Malays National Organization (UMNO), the senior party in the coalition, in March 2009. Najib won a further term after electoral victory in May 2013.

Early Life

Najib was born on 23 July 1953 in Kuala Lipis, Pahang, into a political family. His father was independent Malaysia's second prime minister and his uncle was its third. Najib was educated at St John's Institution, Kuala Lumpur, and at Malvern College in England before graduating from the University of Nottingham in 1974 with a bachelor's degree in industrial economics.

In 1976 he became Malaysia's youngest member of parliament when he stood uncontested for his late father's seat of Pekan. In his first year as an MP, Najib was appointed deputy minister of energy, telecommunications and posts. He was later appointed deputy minister of education and deputy minister of finance.

In 1981 he joined UMNO's Supreme Council and the following year became the Menteri Besar (Chief Executive) of Pahang state.

Najib became vice president of UMNO Youth in 1982, a post he also held from 1987–93. Having lost his Pekan parliamentary seat, he regained it at the elections of 1986 and was appointed minister of culture, youth and sports. He went on to hold several other cabinet portfolios including defence and education. On 7 Jan. 2004 Najib was selected as Badawi's deputy and given the defence portfolio. In July 2004 he stood unopposed for the vice presidency of UMNO.

Although Barisan Nasional won the election of 2008, it was with a much reduced majority. Badawi named Najib as his likely successor and on 17 Sept. 2008 Najib was handed the finance portfolio as part of a gradual power transfer. On 26 March 2009 he stood unopposed for the UMNO presidency, ensuring him the post of prime minister when Badawi resigned on 2 April 2009.

Career in Office

In his first term Najib promised reform but was confronted with a severe economic downturn, a divided UMNO and the increasing unpopularity of a government accused by opponents of corruption and complacency. On the economic front he unveiled details in March 2010 of a new model intended to more than double per capita income by 2020, promote greater private-sector investment and revise a controversial ethnically-based affirmative action policy. However, he also generated controversies relating to allegations of an ongoing political conspiracy against former deputy prime minister Anwar Ibrahim (who was later jailed for five years in Feb. 2015), the murder of a Mongolian woman in which several associates (including his wife) were implicated, and problems with the national service programme that he devised and in which several conscripts died.

At the parliamentary election of 5 May 2013 Najib nonetheless led Barisan Nasional to victory again (but with less than 50% of the popular vote—its worst electoral performance), winning 133 seats to the 89 of the People's Front coalition. He was sworn in for a second term as prime minister the following day.

Although Najib had promised in 2012 to repeal the long-standing Internal Security Act—legislation widely regarded as draconian—it has remained in place, and in April 2015 parliament approved further controversial anti-terrorism measures allowing detention without trial and tougher penalties for sedition. Najib has also been implicated in a financial scandal involving 1Malaysia Development Berhad, a state investment fund (although in Jan. 2016 the attorney general controversially cleared him of any wrongdoing), while his government has drawn considerable domestic criticism for its handling of the disappearance in March 2014 in unknown circumstances of a Malaysian Airlines passenger plane en route to China.

DEFENCE

The Constitution provides for the Head of State to be the Supreme Commander of the Armed Forces who exercises his powers in accordance with the advice of the Cabinet. Under their authority, the Armed Forces Council is responsible for all matters relating to the Armed Forces other than those relating to their operational use. The Ministry of Defence has established bilateral defence relations with countries within as well as outside the region. Malaysia is a member of the Five Powers Defence Arrangement with Australia, New Zealand, Singapore and the UK.

The Malaysian Armed Forces has participated in 25 UN peacekeeping missions in Africa, the Middle East, Indo-China and Europe.

Since 2004 a lottery system has been in place to choose conscripts to serve three months of national service. In 2013 defence expenditure totalled US$5,000m. (US$169 per capita), representing 1.5% of GDP.

Army

Strength (2011) about 80,000. There is a paramilitary Police General Operations Force of 18,000 and a People's Volunteer Corps of 240,000 of which some 17,500 are armed.

Navy

The Royal Malaysian Navy is commanded by the Chief of the Navy from the integrated Ministry of Defence in Kuala Lumpur. The main base is at Lumut, with other bases at Kuantan, Labuan, Sandakan, Semporna, Sepanggar and Tanjung Pengelih. Further bases are under construction at Langkawi and Sejingkat. The peacetime tasks include fishery protection and anti-piracy patrols. In 2011 the fleet included two submarines, ten frigates and four corvettes. The two Scorpene-class submarines were jointly built by French and Spanish firms and were delivered in Sept. 2009 and July 2010 respectively. A Naval aviation squadron operates six helicopters.

Navy personnel in 2011 totalled 14,000 including 160 Naval Air personnel. There were 1,000 naval reserves.

In addition, there is a maritime enforcement agency some 4,500 strong and 2,100 marine police.

Air Force

Formed in 1958, the Royal Malaysian Air Force is equipped primarily to provide air defence and air support for the Army, Navy and Police. Its secondary role is to render assistance to government departments and civilian organizations.

Personnel (2011) totalled 15,000, with 67 combat-capable aircraft including F-5Es, MiG-29s and British Aerospace Hawks. There were 600 Air Force reserves.

ECONOMY

In 2013 agriculture accounted for 9.1% of GDP, industry 39.9% and services 51.0%.

Overview

Malaysia's economy is classified as upper middle income and is highly open to trade and investment. Growing by 7% per annum on average in the quarter-century to 2008, the economy developed from a dependency on tin, rubber and raw materials in the 1970s to become a leading exporter of electrical appliances, electronic parts, palm oil and natural gas. The electrical and electronics industry accounted for 34.1% of total exports in 2011.

In 1998 Malaysia was hit hard by twin currency and banking crises, shrinking the economy by 7.4%. The government sought to boost growth via spending on large infrastructure projects. When global recession cut export demand in 2001, the country managed to avoid recession by introducing a US$1.9bn. fiscal stimulus package. The recovery subsequently moderated, with export growth and GDP growth both slowing. The financial system remained sound, but gross household debt increased by 12.3% to 76% of GDP between 2008 and 2011.

Owing to its openness, the economy is at risk from ongoing low growth in major advanced economies and from exposure to the European banking crisis. Long-term sustainability depends on the implementation of labour reforms to boost productivity and competition. The government introduced a New Economic Model in 2010, designed to implement reforms by 2020, driven by private sector growth and underpinned by sustainability and more equitable wealth distribution.

The population living on the poverty line (measured at US$8.50 per day at 2012 prices) declined from 50% in the 1960s to less than 2% in 2013, while those living in relative poverty fell from 49.3% in 1970 to 1.7% in 2012. Real wages for the lowest-earning 40% grew by an average of 6.3% per year from 2009 to 2012. Pockets of poverty nonetheless remain and income inequality is relatively high compared to other developing economies.

Currency

The unit of currency is the Malaysian ringgit (RM) of 100 sen. For seven years it was pegged to the US dollar at 3·8 ringgit = 1 US$, but since the revaluation of the Chinese yuan on 21 July 2005 it has been allowed to operate in a managed float. Foreign exchange reserves were US$92,217m. and gold reserves 1·17m. troy oz in Sept. 2009. Inflation rates (based on IMF statistics):

2005	2006	2007	2008	2009	2010	2011	2012	2013	2014
3·0%	3·6%	2·0%	5·4%	0·6%	1·7%	3·2%	1·7%	2·1%	3·1%

Total money supply in April 2009 was RM179,274m.

Budget

Budgetary central government revenue and expenditure (in RM1m.):

	2008	2009	2010
Revenue	159,793	158,639	159,653
Expenditure	150,664	154,485	149,763

Taxes accounted for 68·6% of revenues in 2010; compensation of employees accounted for 31·2% of expenditures, grants 18·6% and use of goods and services 15·9%.

There is a sales tax of 6–10%.

Performance

Malaysia was badly affected by the Asian financial crisis, with the economy contracting by 7·4% in 1998. The country narrowly avoided a recession in 2001 but failed to do so in the global financial crisis of 2009. Real GDP growth rates (based on IMF statistics):

2005	2006	2007	2008	2009	2010	2011	2012	2013	2014
5·0%	5·6%	6·3%	4·8%	-1·5%	7·5%	5·3%	5·5%	4·7%	6·0%

Total GDP in 2014 was US$338·1bn.

Banking and Finance

The central bank and bank of issue is the Bank Negara Malaysia (Governor, Dr Zeti Akhtar Aziz). In 2002 there were 47 domestic commercial banks, merchant banks and finance companies. Total deposits of commercial banks, finance companies and merchant banks at 31 Dec. 2005 were RM140·6bn. The largest commercial bank is Malayan Banking Berhad (Maybank), with assets in 2009 of RM238·3bn. The Islamic Bank of Malaysia began operations in July 1983. In Jan. 2006 there were 54 banks licensed by the Labuan Offshore Financial Services Authority (LOFSA).

External debt amounted to US$81,497m. in 2010, up from US$51,855m. in 2005 and US$41,765m. in 2000—this was equivalent to 35·4% of GNI, compared to 48·5% in 2000.

Malaysia attracted a record US$12,306m. worth of foreign direct investment in 2013, up from US$10,074m. in 2012.

There is a stock exchange at Kuala Lumpur, known as Bursa Malaysia.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Malaysia's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2011 were the equivalent of 6·8 tonnes per capita.

Electricity

Installed capacity in 2011 was 28·7m. kW. In 2011, 124,893m. kWh were generated (117,269m. kWh thermal and 7,624m. kWh hydro-electric). Consumption per capita in 2011 was 4,355 kWh.

Oil and Gas

Oil reserves, 2012, 3·7bn. bbls. Oil production, 2012, was 29·7m. tonnes. In 2007 exports of oil stood at 16·4m. tonnes. Natural gas reserves, 2012, 1·3trn. cu. metres. Production of natural gas in 2013 was 69·1bn. cu. metres. In April 1998 Malaysia and Thailand agreed to share equally the natural gas jointly produced in an offshore area (the Malaysian–Thailand Joint Development Area) which both countries claim as their own territory.

Minerals

In 2004 mining contributed 7·0% of GDP. Production in 2004 (in tonnes): aggregate, 51,236,000; limestone, 19,968,000; sand and gravel, 18,371,000; iron ore, 663,732; silica sand, 631,402; coal, 389,176; kaolin, 326,928; ilmenite concentrate, 61,471; gold, 4,221 kg.

Agriculture

In 2002 agriculture contributed 9·2% of GDP. There were an estimated 1·80m. ha. of arable land in 2002 and 5·79m. ha. of permanent crops. In 2002 approximately 365,000 ha. were irrigated. Production in 2003 (in 1,000 tonnes): palm kernels, 3,550; rice, 2,145; sugarcane, 1,600; coconuts, 740; rubber, 589; bananas, 500; cassava, 370; pineapples, 255. Livestock (2002): pigs, 1·82m.; cattle, 748,000; goats, 248,000; sheep, 118,000; buffaloes, 154,000; chickens, 161m. Oil palms account for 75% of Malaysia's agricultural area. Malaysia's output of palm kernels is the highest of any country.

Forestry

In 2010 there were 20·46m. ha. of forests, or 62% of the total land area, down from 22·38m. ha. in 1990 and 21·59m. ha. in 2000. Of the total area under forests 19% was primary forest in 2010, 72% other naturally regenerated forest and 9% planted forest. Timber production in 2011 was 20·69m. cu. metres.

Fisheries

Total catch in 2010 amounted to 1,433,427 tonnes, almost entirely from sea fishing. There were 31,503 licensed motorized fishing vessels in 2010, up 44% from 21,871 in 2005; non-motorized vessels fell from 170 to 89 in the same period.

INDUSTRY

The leading companies by market capitalization in Malaysia in March 2015 were: Malayan Banking Berhad (Maybank) (US$23·5bn.); Tenaga Nasional Berhad, an electric utility company (US$21·9bn.); and Public Bank Berhad (US$19·8bn.).

In 2013 industry accounted for 39·9% of GDP, with manufacturing contributing 22·8%. Production figures for 2012 (in 1,000 tonnes): cement, 21,726; palm oil, 18,785; distillate fuel oil (2007), 8,891; petrol (2007), 5,029; residual fuel oil (2007), 2,006; refined sugar, 1,595; wheat flour, 976; plywood, 4,232,000 cu. metres; radio sets, 28·4m. units; cigarettes, 26·1bn. units; TV sets, 13·1m. units; pneumatic tyres (2006), 9·2m. units.

Labour

In July 2015 the workforce was 14,225,800, of whom 13,765,900 were employed. Unemployment was 3·2% in July 2015 (2·8% in July 2014). It is estimated that Malaysia has some 2m. illegal workers.

Malaysia had 25,000 people living in slavery according to the Walk Free Foundation's 2013 Global Slavery Index.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Privatization policy permits foreign investment of 25–30% generally; total foreign ownership is permitted of export-oriented projects.

Imports and Exports

In 2006 imports totalled US$124,144m. and exports US$160,842m. The trade surplus in 2006 was US$36·7bn., up from US$18·1bn. in 2002.

Main imports, 2006: electrical machinery, apparatus and appliances, 31·9%; manufactured goods, 11·6%; petroleum and petroleum products, 8·3%; chemicals and related products, 7·8%. Chief exports, 2006: electrical machinery, apparatus and appliances, 21·3%; office machines and computers, etc., 17·4%; telecommunications, sound recording and reproducing equipment, 9.0%; petroleum and petroleum products, 8.9%.

The principal import sources in 2006 were: Japan (13.2%), USA (12.5%), China (12.1%), Singapore (11.7%). The leading export markets were: USA (18.8%), Singapore (15.4%), Japan (8.9%), China (7.2%).

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

Total road length in 2004 was 109,333 km, of which 82.8% were paved. In 2006 there were 7,024,000 passenger cars in use, 60,000 buses and coaches, 836,600 lorries and vans, and 7,458,100 motorcycles and mopeds. There were 6,287 deaths as a result of road accidents in 2006, which at 24.1 per 100,000 people ranks among the highest rates in the world.

Rail

Length of route in 2011, 2,250 km, of which 350 km were electrified. The Malayan Railway carried 39.5m. passengers and 5.4m. tonnes of freight in 2010; the Sabah State Railway carried 594,000 passengers and 89,000 tonnes of freight in 2011. A railway from Kuala Lumpur to the international airport opened in 2002 and carried 3.9m. passengers in 2009. There are two metro systems in Kuala Lumpur with a combined length of 56 km.

Civil Aviation

There are a total of 19 airports of which five are international airports and 14 are domestic airports at which regular public air transport is operated. International airports: Kuala Lumpur, Penang, Kota Kinabalu, Kuching and Langkawi. Domestic airports: Johor Bharu, Alor Star, Ipoh, Kota Bharu, Kuala Terengganu, Kuantan, Melaka, Sandakan, Lahad Datu, Tawau, Labuan, Bintulu, Sibul and Miri. There are 39 Malaysian airstrips of which ten are in Sabah, 15 in Sarawak and 14 in peninsular Malaysia.

In 2003, 40 international airlines operated through Kuala Lumpur (KLIA-Sepang). Malaysia Airlines, the national airline, operates domestic flights within Malaysia and international flights to nearly 40 different countries. In 2014 it suffered two disasters when one of its planes went missing in flight and another was shot down over Ukraine. Following these events its primary shareholder, Khazanah (the sovereign wealth fund that manages the commercial assets of the government), sought to buy out the 31% of shares it did not already own and to de-list the airline from the stock exchange. Its stated aim was to restructure the company and return it to profit before re-listing it by 2019. A low-cost airline, AirAsia, began operations in Nov. 1996; its sister budget long-haul carrier, Air Asia X, started flying in Nov. 2007. Air Asia and its subsidiaries (AirAsia India, Indonesia AirAsia, Malaysia AirAsia, AirAsia Philippines and Thai AirAsia) now rank among Asia's half dozen largest airlines, total passenger numbers having doubled from 22.7m. to 45.6m. between 2009 and 2014. In 2005 scheduled airline traffic of Malaysian-based carriers flew 282.7m. km, carrying 23,026,000 passengers. In 2012 Kuala Lumpur handled 39,887,866 passengers (27,612,088 on international flights) and 702,226 tonnes of freight. Kota Kinabalu handled 5,848,135 passengers in 2012 and Penang 4,767,815.

Shipping

The major ports are Port Kelang, Pulau Pinang, Johor Pasir Gudang, Tanjung Beruas, Miri, Rajang, Pelabuhan Sabah, Port Dickson, Kemaman, Teluk Ewa, Kuantan, Kuching and Bintulu. Port Kelang, the busiest port, handled 152,348,000 freight tons of cargo in 2008; container throughput in 2008 was 7,974,000 TEUs (twenty-foot equivalent units), making it Malaysia's busiest container port. In Jan. 2009 there were 457 ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 6.43m. GT. Of the 457 vessels registered, 189 were general cargo ships, 130 oil tankers, 45 container ships, 34 liquid gas tankers, 26 passenger ships, 20 chemical tankers and 13 bulk carriers. The Malaysian-controlled fleet comprised 307 vessels of 1,000 GT or over in Jan. 2009, of which 242 were under the Malaysian flag and 65 under foreign flags.

Telecommunications

In 2013 there were 4,536,000 main (fixed) telephone lines. In the same year mobile phone subscribers numbered 42,996,000 (1,446.9 per 1,000 persons). 67.0% of the population were internet users in 2013. In March 2012 there were 12.4m. Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The highest judicial authority and final court of appeal is the Federal Court. There are also two High Courts, one for Peninsular Malaysia and one for the States of Sabah and Sarawak, as well as a system of subordinate courts (comprising Magistrate Courts and Sessions Courts).

The Federal Court comprises the Chief Justice—the head of the Malaysian judiciary—the President of the Court of Appeal, the Chief Judges of the two High Courts and four other judges. It has jurisdiction to determine the validity of any law made by Parliament or by a State legislature and disputes between States or between the Federation and any State. It also has jurisdiction to hear and determine appeals from the High Courts.

The death penalty is authorized, and was reportedly used at least twice in 2014 and at least once in 2015. The population in penal institutions in June 2013 was 39,144 (132 per 100,000 of national population). In 2015 the World Justice Project Rule of Law Index, which provides data on how the rule of law is experienced by the general public across eight categories, ranked Malaysia 30th of 102 countries for criminal justice and 37th for civil justice.

Education

School education is free; tertiary education is provided at a nominal fee. There are six years of primary schooling starting at age seven, three years of universal lower secondary, two years of selective upper secondary and two years of pre-university education. During the Seventh Plan period (1996–2000), a number of major changes were introduced to the education and training system with a view to strengthening and improving the system. These efforts were aimed at improving the quality of output to meet the manpower needs of the nation, particularly in the fields of science and technology. In addition, continued emphasis will be given to expand educational opportunities for those in the rural and remote areas. Under the Seventh Plan, the Education Ministry allocated RM8,437,200 on this education programme and RM1,661,600 for training purposes.

In 2005 there were 3,133,399 pupils at primary schools with 194,872 teaching staff, 2,489,117 pupils with 146,503 teaching staff at secondary schools and (2006) 749,165 students and 39,809 academic staff at higher education institutions.

Adult literacy was 92% in 2008.

In 2006 public expenditure on education came to 4.7% of GNI.

Health

In the period 2000–10 there were 9.4 physicians for every 10,000 population, 27.3 nursing and midwifery personnel per 10,000 population and 1.7 pharmaceutical personnel per 10,000. In 2013 there were 132 government hospitals, nine government special medical institutions and 214 private hospitals. In the same year there were 1,039 government health clinics and 6,801 private medical clinics. The government healthcare facilities had a total of 39,728 beds in 2013 and the private healthcare facilities 14,033 beds.

Welfare

The Malaysian social security system (SOCSO) administers and executes two types of scheme—the Employment Injury Insurance Scheme (which provides protection to employees who suffer from employment injury including occupational disease/illness) and the Invalidity Pension Scheme (which provides 24-hours coverage to employees against invalidity or death). There is no provision for entitlement for unemployment benefits. Under the Minimum Retirement Age Act 2012 the minimum retirement age for private sector workers is now 60, the same as for public sector employees.

RELIGION

Malaysia has a multi-racial population divided between Islam, Buddhism, Taoism, Hinduism and Christianity. Under the Federal constitution, Islam is the official religion of Malaysia but there is freedom of worship. A study by the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life estimated that in 2010 there were 18.1m. Muslims (almost exclusively Sunnis), 5.0m. Buddhists, 2.7m. Christians and 1.7m. Hindus. Of the Christians in 2010, 51% were Catholics and 48% Protestants.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

There are four sites in Malaysia that appear on the UNESCO World Heritage List: the Gunung Mulu National Park (inscribed on the list in 2000) with its limestone caves; Kinabalu Park/Mount Kinabalu (2000); the historic cities of Melaka and Georgetown (2008) in the Straits of Malacca; and the Archaeological Heritage of the Lenggong Valley (2012), one of the longest records of early man in a single locality and the oldest outside the African continent.

Press

The Malaysian Media Agencies are comprised of the press, magazine and press agencies/local media, which are further divided into home and foreign news. In 2014 there were 25 daily newspapers (24 paid-for and one free) with a combined circulation of 2,758,000. The dailies with the highest circulation are the Chinese-language Sin Chew Daily and the Malay-language Hairan Metro.

Tourism

In 2009, 23,646,000 international tourists visited Malaysia (up from 22,052,000 in 2008), making it the ninth most popular tourist destination; receipts from tourism in 2009 totalled US$15,772m.

Festivals

National Day (31 Aug.) is celebrated in Kuala Lumpur at the Dataran Merdeka and marks Malaysia's independence. The Rainforest World Music Festival has been held annually in July in Kuching, Borneo since 1998.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Divehi-speaking people (a language related to Sinhalese) have lived on the Maldives since at least AD 400. Visited by Middle Eastern merchants from around AD 1000, the archipelago became an Islamic sultanate in 1153. Portuguese explorers occupied the island of Malé (the modern capital) from 1558 until they were expelled by Muhammad Thakurufaanu Al-Azam in 1573. The Dutch, who replaced the Portuguese as the dominant power in Ceylon in the mid-1600s, controlled Maldivian affairs until 1796, although the sultanate held sway over local administration. Thereafter the Maldives came under British protection (formalized in an agreement in 1887) until complete independence was achieved on 26 July 1965. A republic was declared on 11 Nov. 1968.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

The republic, some 650 km to the southwest of Sri Lanka, consists of 1,192 low-lying (the highest point is 2.4 metres above sea-level) coral islands, grouped into 19 atolls and two cities. 199 are inhabited. Area 298 sq. km (115 sq. miles). In 2014 the census population was 402,071; density, 1,349 per sq. km.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 364,000.

In 2011, 41.3% of the population lived in urban areas. Capital, Malé (2014 census population, 153,904).

The official and spoken language is Divehi.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2006 births, 5,827; deaths, 1,084. Birth rate, 2006, per 1,000 population, 19.5; death rate, 3.6. Annual population growth rate, 2005–10, 1.8%. Life expectancy at birth in 2007 was 69.7 years for males and 72.7 years for females. Infant mortality, 2010, 14 per 1,000 live births; fertility rate, 2008, 2.0 births per woman. The Maldives has had the largest reduction in its fertility rate of any country in the world over the past quarter of a century, having had a rate of 6.1 births per woman in 1990. It has also made some of the best progress in recent years in reducing child mortality. The number of deaths per 1,000 live births among children under five was reduced from 94 in 1990 to 11 in 2012.

CLIMATE

The islands are hot and humid, and affected by monsoons. Malé: average temperature 81°F (27°C), annual rainfall 59" (1,500 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

The present constitution came into effect on 1 Jan. 1998. There is a Citizens' Majlis (Parliament) which consists of 85 members all of whom are directly elected for a term of five years. Political parties were not permitted until the introduction of a multiparty system in June 2005. In a referendum held on 18 Aug. 2007 voters supported the retention of a presidential system, with 62.0% of votes cast in favour and 38.0% for a switch to a parliamentary system. The President of the Republic is elected by the Citizens' Majlis.

National Anthem

'Gavmii mi ekuverikan matii tibegen kuriime salaam' ('In national unity we salute our nation'); words by M. J. Didi, tune by W. Amaradeva.

RECENT ELECTIONS

The Maldives' second multi-party presidential elections were initially held on 7 Sept. 2013. The result was annulled owing to irregularities and a re-run held on 9 Nov. Turnout in the first round was 87.2%. Mohamed Nasheed ('Anni') (Maldivian Democratic Party; MDP) won 46.9% of the vote, Abdulla Yameen (Progressive Party of Maldives) 29.7% and Qasim Ibrahim (Jumhooree Party) 23.3%. As no candidate obtained the 50% required for victory a run-off was held on 16 Nov. 2013, which Abdulla Yameen won with 51.4% of the vote against 48.6% for Mohamed Nasheed. Turnout in the second round was 91.4%.

Parliamentary elections were held on 22 March 2014. The Progressive Party of Maldives won 33 of 85 seats, Maldivian Democratic Party 26, Jumhooree Party 15, Maldives Development Alliance 5 and Adhaalath Party 1. Five seats went to independent candidates. The ruling Progressive Coalition—consisting of the Progressive Party of Maldives, Jumhooree Party and Maldives Development Alliance—secured a combined total of 53 seats.

CURRENT LEADERS

Abdulla Yameen

Position

President

Introduction

Abdulla Yameen became president on 16 Nov. 2013 after his electoral victory against Mohamed Nasheed, who had been favourite to win the poll.

Early Life

Abdulla Yameen Abdul Gayoom was born on 21 May 1959 in Malé. His elder half-brother, Maumoon Abdul Gayoom, was president from 1978 to 2008. Abdulla Yameen graduated in business administration from the American University of Beirut, Lebanon, in 1982 and subsequently earned a master's degree in public policy from Claremont Graduate University in Los Angeles, USA.

After stints at the ministry of finance and the Maldives Monetary Authority, he joined the ministry of economic development. He was its director general when he entered parliament in 1993 and was then appointed as minister. In June 1997 he was named chairman of the State Electric Company Limited (STELCO) and went on to head several other government enterprises. From July 2005 until April 2007 he was minister of higher education, employment and social security, while in Sept.–Nov. 2008 he was briefly minister of tourism and civil aviation.

Following the introduction of pluralist politics in 1995, Abdulla Yameen was a key figure in the development of the Dhivehi Rayyithunge Party (DRP) but left to form the People's Alliance (PA). In 2011 he left the PA to join the Progressive Party of Maldives (PPM), led by his half-brother. Running on a PPM ticket, Abdulla Yameen secured 29.7% of the vote in the first round of the presidential poll on 9 Nov. 2013. In the second round he won 51.4% and was inaugurated on 17 Nov. 2013.

Career in Office

His main economic challenges included creating jobs and stabilizing the rupiah. He was also confronted with escalating gang violence and drug usage against a backdrop of increasing social conservatism and Islamic influence. In 2015 growing political unrest was aggravated by the imprisonment early in the year of former rival president Mohamed Nasheed on terrorism charges and the adoption of new security legislation in Oct., which opposition politicians viewed as a means of suppressing criticism of Abdulla Yameen and the government. Also in Oct. Vice-President Ahmed Adeeab, who had only recently been appointed, was arrested for suspected treason and involvement in an earlier assassination plot against the president.

DEFENCE

In 2008 military expenditure totalled US$43m. (US$111 per capita), representing 3.4% of GDP.

ECONOMY

Fisheries accounts for approximately 7% of GDP, industry 15% and services 78%.

Overview

The economy grew by 6.5% in 2011. Despite declining in the wake of the global financial crisis, tourism accounted for approximately 30% of total GDP. Fishing is the second largest industry. Economic diversification is hindered by a lack of cultivable land and skilled labour.

High levels of public spending caused a balance of payments crisis. In 2009 the IMF approved a stand-by arrangement, while the government created new taxes to boost revenues. In 2011 a goods and services tax for tourists came into force, and a business profit tax followed in 2012.

With 80% of the Maldives below sea level, the effects of climate change pose serious long-term risks to the country and its economy.

Currency

The unit of currency is the rufiyaa (MVR) of 100 laari. Inflation was 4.0% in 2013 and 2.5% in 2014. Gold reserves were 2,000 troy oz in July 2005, foreign exchange reserves were US$218m. and total money supply was 3,163m. rufiyaa.

Budget

In 2012 budgetary central government revenue totalled 9,832.2m. rufiyaa; expenditure totalled 14,215.9m. rufiyaa. Tax revenue accounted for 68.3% of revenues in 2012; current expenditure accounted for 74.0% of expenditures.

Performance

After shrinking by 8.7% in 2005 as a consequence of the devastation wreaked by the tsunami, the economy rebounded spectacularly in 2006 with a real GDP growth rate of 19.6%, driven by the return of tourists, reconstruction efforts and new development. The economy grew by 1.6% in 2012 but shrank by 4.8% in 2013. It then recovered in 2014, experiencing growth of 6.1%. Total GDP in 2014 was US$3.1bn.

Banking and Finance

The Maldives Monetary Authority (Governor, Azeema Adam), established in 1981, is endowed with the regular powers of a central bank and bank of issue. There is one domestic commercial bank (Bank of Maldives) and branches of four foreign banks.

External debt totalled US$1,229m. in 2010 and represented 86.6% of GNI.

There is a stock exchange in Malé.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy were the equivalent of 2.7 tonnes per capita in 2011.

Electricity

Installed capacity was 78,000 kW in 2011. Production in 2011 was 274m. kWh; consumption per capita in 2011 was 824 kWh.

Minerals

Inshore coral mining has been banned as a measure against the encroachment of the sea.

Agriculture

There were approximately 3,000 ha. of arable land in 2011 and 3,000 ha. of permanent crops. Principal crops in 2011 (estimates, in 1,000 tonnes): bananas, 7; coconuts, 4. Various other types of fruit, vegetables, roots and tubers, and nuts are also produced.

Fisheries

The total catch in 2010 was 94,953 tonnes. The Maldives has the highest per capita consumption of fish and fishery products of any country in the world. In the period 2008–10 the average person consumed 158 kg (348 lb) a year, or more than eight times the average for the world as a whole.

INDUSTRY

The main industries are fishing, tourism, shipping, lacquerwork and garment manufacturing.

Labour

The labour force in 2013 was 190,000 (115,000 in 2003). 68.9% of the population aged 15–64 was economically active in 2013. In the same year 11.3% of the population was unemployed.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

In 2008 imports (c.i.f.) were valued at US$1,387.5m. and exports (f.o.b.) at US$126.4m. Tuna is the main export commodity. It is exported principally to Thailand, Sri Lanka and some European markets. Main import suppliers in 2008 were Singapore (21.3%), UAE (18.0%), India (10.4%), Malaysia (7.7%), Sri Lanka (5.9%). Leading export destinations were Thailand (49.0%), Sri Lanka (9.5%), France (8.8%), Italy (8.3%), UK (7.6%).

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

In 2007 there were 3,060 passenger cars in use (10 per 1,000 inhabitants), 26,780 motorcycles and mopeds, 2,870 lorries and vans, and 74 buses and coaches.

Civil Aviation

The former national carrier Air Maldives collapsed in April 2000 with final losses in excess of US$50m. The national airline is now Maldivian, which was founded in 2000 and initially operated domestic flights only. It began to serve international destinations in Asia in 2008. In 2003 there were 1,833,620 passenger arrivals, 21m. pieces of cargo and 100,352 pieces of mail handled at Malé's international airport. There are four domestic airports.

Shipping

In Jan. 2009 there were 58 ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 130,000 GT.

Telecommunications

There were 48,000 fixed telephone lines in 2010 (152.0 per 1,000 inhabitants). Mobile phone subscribers numbered 494,400 in 2010. There were 283.0 internet users per 1,000 inhabitants in 2010. Fixed internet subscriptions totalled 20,100 in 2009 (64.4 per 1,000 inhabitants). In March 2012 there were 120,000 Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

Justice is based on the Islamic Sharia.

There were 994 sentenced inmates in penal institutions in 2012 (307 per 100,000 of national population).

Education

Adult literacy in 2006 was 98%. Education is not compulsory. In 2004 there were 81 government schools (57,139 pupils), 176 community schools (38,043 pupils) and 337 private schools (104,214 pupils) with a total of 5,239 teachers. In 2005 public expenditure on education came to 7.8% of GDP and 15.0% of total government spending.

Health

In 2003 there were 236 beds at the Indira Gandhi Memorial Hospital in Malé, six regional hospitals (226 beds) and 27 health centres. In 2003 there were 315 doctors and 785 nurses, 251 pharmacists and 409 midwives.

RELIGION

The State religion is Islam—adherence to it is legally required of citizens.

CULTURE

Press

In 2008 there were six paid-for daily newspapers and around 200 independent newspapers and periodicals in total.

Tourism

Tourism is the major foreign currency earner. There were a record 1,125,202 tourist arrivals in 2013 (958,027 in 2012), mainly from China, Germany, the United Kingdom and Russia. Tourist spending in 2013 totalled US$2,424m.

MALI

In May 2012 Tuareg and Islamic militant groups declared the northern Azawad region an independent Islamic state. In Sept. 2012 the government in Bamako agreed to host 3,000 ECOWAS troops in a bid to displace the rebels. The following month Mali was readmitted to the African Union, having been suspended following the March coup.

In Jan. 2013 President Traoré appealed to France for assistance after an escalation in militant operations. French forces quickly seized the cities of Gao and Tombouctou (Timbuktu), dislodging the rebels from their principal strongholds.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Mali is bounded in the west by Senegal, northwest by Mauritania, northeast by Algeria, east by Niger and south by Burkina Faso, Côte d'Ivoire and Guinea. Its area is 1,248,574 sq. km (482,077 sq. miles) and it had a population of 14,528,662 at the 2009 census; density, 11.6 per sq. km. In 2011, 36.6% of the population were urban.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 17.60m.

The areas, populations and chief towns of the regions are:

Region	Sq. km	2009 census population	Chief town
Gao	170,572	542,304	Gao
Kayes	119,743	1,993,615	Kayes
Kidal	151,430	67,739	Kidal
Koulikoro	95,848	2,422,108	Koulikoro
Mopti	79,017	2,036,209	Mopti
Ségou	64,821	2,338,349	Ségou
Sikasso	70,280	2,643,179	Sikasso
Tombouctou	496,611	674,793	Tombouctou
Capital District	252	1,810,366	Bamako

In 2009 the capital, Bamako, had a population of 1,810,000. The second largest town, Sikasso, had a population of 227,000 in 2009.

The Bambara, Khassonké, Malinké and Soninké, all of which belong to the broader Mandé group, make up 50% of the population; the other leading groups are the Fula (17%), Voltaic (12%), Songhai (6%), and Tuareg and Moor (10%). The official language is French; Bambara is spoken by about 68% of the population.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2008 estimates: births, 541,000; deaths, 200,000. Rates, 2008 estimates (per 1,000 population): births, 42.6; deaths, 15.7. Infant mortality, 2010 (per 1,000 live births), 99. Expectation of life in 2013 was 55.1 years for males and 54.9 for females. Mali was one of only two countries where the life expectancy at birth for males in 2013 was higher than for females (the other being Swaziland). Annual population growth rate, 2000–08, 2.4%; fertility rate, 2008, 6.5 children per woman.

CLIMATE

A tropical climate, with adequate rain in the south and west, but conditions become increasingly arid towards the north and east. Bamako, Jan. 76°F (24.4°C), July 80°F (26.7°C). Annual rainfall 45" (1,120 mm). Kayes, Jan. 76°F (24.4°C), July 93°F (33.9°C). Annual rainfall 29" (725 mm). Tombouctou, Jan. 71°F (21.7°C), July 90°F (32.2°C). Annual rainfall 9" (231 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

A constitution was approved by a national referendum in 1974; it was amended by the National Assembly on 2 Sept. 1981. The sole legal party was the Union démocratique du peuple malien (UDPM).

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Mali's power reached its peak between the 11th and 13th centuries when its gold-based empire controlled much of the surrounding area. The country was annexed by France in 1904. As French Sudan it was part of French West Africa. The country became an autonomous state within the French Community on 24 Nov. 1958, and on 4 April 1959 joined with Senegal to form the Federation of Mali. The Federation achieved independence on 20 June 1960, but Senegal seceded on 22 Aug. and Mali proclaimed itself an independent republic on 22 Sept. There was an army coup on 19 Nov. 1968, which brought Moussa Traoré to power. Ruling the country for over 22 years, he wrecked the economy. A further coup followed in March 1991.

In Jan. 1991 a ceasefire was signed with Tuareg insurgents in the north and in April 1992 a national pact was concluded providing for a special administration for the Tuareg north.

Under President Alpha Oumar Konaré, two elections for the National Assembly were held. The first (April 1997) was cancelled by the constitutional court and the second, in July 1997, was boycotted by opposition parties. Amadou Toumani Touré, a former military ruler, won presidential elections held in April and May 2002. In July 2005 severe food shortages led to more than 1m. people facing starvation. In March 2012 Touré was ousted in a military coup. A civilian interim government was nominally established the following month, with Dioncounda Traoré installed as president. However, after allegations of a counter-coup by supporters of Touré, the military reasserted control in May. In Aug. a government of national unity was sworn in to oversee the transition to civilian government.

A national conference of 1,800 delegates agreed a draft constitution enshrining multi-party democracy in Aug. 1991, and this was approved by 99-76% of votes cast at a referendum in Jan. 1992. Turnout was 43%.

The President is elected for not more than two terms of five years.

There is a National Assembly, consisting of 147 deputies (formerly 116) plus 13 Malinese living abroad.

A Constitutional Court was established in 1994.

In May 2012 the rebel National Movement for the Liberation of Azawad (MNLA) and Ansar Dine, an Islamist militant group, declared Azawad—a region in the north covering over half of Mali's total land area—a breakaway Islamic state. The unilateral declaration went unrecognized by Bamako and the international community. Relations between the MNLA and Ansar Dine soon strained. By the end of June 2012 Ansar Dine had militarily defeated the MNLA to claim control of the region.

'A ton appel, Mali' ('At your call, Mali'); words by S. Kouyate, tune by B. Sissoko.

RECENT ELECTIONS

Presidential elections were held on 28 July 2013 with the two leading candidates proceeding to a run-off. In the second round of voting, held on 11 Aug. 2013, former prime minister Ibrahim Boubacar Keïta was elected president with 77-6% of votes cast against 22-4% for Soumaïla Cissé. Turnout was 51-5% in the first round and 45-8% in the second.

Parliamentary elections were held in two rounds on 24 Nov. and 15 Dec. 2013. The Rally for Mali (RPM) won 66 seats (11 in 2007), Union for the Republic and Democracy 17, Alliance for Democracy in Mali (ADEMA) 16, Alternative Forces for Renewal and Emergence 6, African Solidarity for Democracy and Independence 5, Convergence for the Development of Mali 5, National Congress for Democratic Initiative 4, Alliance for the Solidarity of Mali 3, Party for Economic and Social Development 3, Party for National Rebirth 3, Patriotic Movement for Renewal 3, Alliance for Democracy and Progress 2, Malian Union-African Democratic Rally 2, Movement for the Independence, Renaissance and Integration of Africa 2 and Social Democratic Convention 2. Four other parties won one seat each and four seats went to independents. President Keïta's party, the RPM, subsequently formed a coalition with ADEMA and a number of other small parties.

CURRENT LEADERS

Ibrahim Boubacar Keïta

Position

President

Introduction

Ibrahim Boubacar Keïta became president in Sept. 2013. He is a former prime minister and president of the National Assembly, as well as leader of the Rally for Mali (RPM), which he founded in 2001.

Early Life

Keïta, nicknamed 'IBK', was born in Jan. 1945 in Koutiala. He studied at the Lycée Janson-de-Sailly in Paris and the Lycée Askia-Mohamed in Bamako, before reading history, political science and international relations at the University of Dakar and University of Paris I. He worked as a researcher at the French National Centre for Scientific Research and taught Third World politics at the University of Paris I. Returning to Mali in 1986, he worked with the European Development Fund and the non-governmental organization, Terres des Hommes.

In the 1990s Keïta founded the Alliance for Democracy (ADEMA) and was a key figure in ADEMA candidate Alpha Oumar Konaré's successful 1992 presidential campaign. Konaré subsequently appointed him ambassador to Côte d'Ivoire, Gabon, Burkina Faso and Niger, as well as minister of external affairs, Maliens abroad and African integration. In 1994 Keïta was named prime minister and in the same year became president of ADEMA. In 2000 rifts emerged within the party and Keïta resigned both as premier and ADEMA leader. The following year he founded the RPM.

Keïta ran unsuccessfully for the presidency in 2002 but did win a seat in the National Assembly. He was subsequently elected its president. In 2007 he again lost out on the presidency but kept his seat in the assembly, serving on its commission for foreign affairs. He was also a member of the parliament of the Economic Community of West African States. In 2013 he entered the presidential race for the third time and defeated Soumaïla Cissé in a run-off in Aug. He was sworn in the next month.

Career in Office

Keïta's presidency followed an ECOWAS-supported interim government with its roots in a March 2012 military coup that ousted Amadou Toumani Touré as president. A key challenge for Keïta has been to address the tenuous security situation in the north, which since Jan. 2012 has seen a rebellion by Tuareg separatists and militant Islamic groups. He has pushed forward plans to give greater independence to the regions, declaring that 'national reconciliation is our most pressing priority', but separatist violence has nonetheless continued in the north. In Nov. 2015 suspected Islamist gunmen attacked a hotel in Bamako, killing 19 people before security forces ended the assault.

Mali recorded its first fatality from the ebola virus outbreak in West Africa in Oct. 2014.

DEFENCE

There is selective conscription for two years. In 2013 military expenditure totalled US$301m. (US$19 per capita), representing 2.6% of GDP.

A UN peacekeeping force, the United Nations Multidimensional Integrated Stabilization Mission in Mali (MINUSMA), has been deployed in the country since 1 July 2013 to restore stability in the north of the country following the Tuareg rebellion of early 2012.

Army

Strength in 2011 was an estimated 7,350. There are also paramilitary forces of 4,800.

Navy

There is a Navy of around 50 operating three patrol craft although their serviceability is in doubt.

Air Force

Personnel (2011) total 400. There were four combat-capable aircraft and four attack helicopters in 2011.

ECONOMY

Agriculture accounted for 39% of GDP in 2009, industry 21% and services 40%.

Overview

The economy is heavily dependent on agriculture, which accounted for 40.7% of GDP in 2014 and provides income to some 80% of the population.

In the 15 years from 1996, GDP growth averaged over 5% per year and macroeconomic stability was maintained during the global financial crisis from 2008. Per capita income rose from US$240 in 1994 to US$707 in 2014. Exports are based mainly on gold, cotton and livestock, making the economy vulnerable to drought and falls in commodities demand and prices. Being landlocked, Mali's international trade is dependent on ports in neighbouring countries.

The government aims to establish the country as a tourism destination. It received 200,000 visitors in 2011, each spending on average at least US$100 a day, to make the sector the economy's third biggest revenue-raiser. However, increasing militant activity in the aftermath of the March 2012 coup resulted in only 10,000 visitors entering the country in the course of that year and a decline in GDP growth from 2.7% in 2011 to zero in 2012. Political insecurity and civil conflict also saw the poverty rate, which had fallen from 55.6% in 2001 to 43.6% in 2010, increase to 45% in 2013. Higher gold prices, declining oil import costs and favourable harvests then boosted GDP to 7.2% in 2014, up from 1.7% in 2013.

Currency

The unit of currency is the franc CFA (XOF), which replaced the Mali franc in 1984. It has a parity rate of 655.957 francs CFA to one euro. Total money supply in June 2005 was 573,692m. francs CFA and foreign exchange reserves were US$827m. There was deflation of 0.6% in 2013 but inflation of 0.9% in 2014.

Budget

Budgetary central government revenue and expenditure in 1bn. francs CFA:

	2007	2008	2009
Revenue	778.6	752.4	909.5
Expenditure	509.4	525.7	620.7

Principal sources of revenue in 2009 were: taxes on goods and services, 265.7bn. francs CFA; grants, 184.6bn. francs CFA. Main items of expenditure by economic type in 2009 were: compensation of employees, 213.5bn. francs CFA; use of goods and services, 190.2bn. francs CFA.

VAT is 18%.

Performance

Real GDP growth was 0.0% in 2012, 1.7% in 2013 and 7.2% in 2014. Total GDP in 2014 was US$12.0bn.

Banking and Finance

The bank of issue and the central bank is the regional Central Bank of West African States (BCEAO). The Governor is Tiémoko Meyliet Koné. In 2002 there were eight commercial and two development banks.

External debt was US$2,326m. in 2010, representing 26.1% of GNI.

There is a stock exchange in Bamako.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy were the equivalent of less than 0.1 tonnes per capita in 2011.

Electricity

Installed capacity in 2011 was 0.5m. kW. Production in 2011 was estimated at 1,702m. kWh, approximately 41% of it hydro-electric. Consumption per capita was an estimated 93 kWh in 2011.

Minerals

Gold (42,364 kg in 2009) is the principal mineral produced. There are also deposits of iron ore, uranium, diamonds, bauxite, manganese, copper, salt, limestone, phosphate, gypsum and lithium.

Agriculture

About 80% of the population depends on agriculture, mainly carried on by small peasant holdings. Mali is second only to Egypt among African cotton producers. In 2002 there were an estimated 4.66m. ha. of arable land and 40,000 ha. of permanent cropland. There were around 2,600 tractors in 2002 and 650 harvester-threshers. Production in 2003 included (estimates, in 1,000 tonnes): millet, 815; rice, 693; sorghum, 650; seed cotton, 464; maize, 365; sugarcane, 300; cotton lint, 250; cottonseed, 185; groundnuts, 170; sweet potatoes, 74, tomatoes, 50.

Livestock, 2003 estimates: goats, 11.46m.; sheep, 7.97m.; cattle, 7.31m.; asses, 700,000; camels, 470,000; horses, 170,000; chickens, 29m.

Livestock products, 2003 estimates (in 1,000 tonnes): beef and veal, 113; goat meat, 46; lamb and mutton, 36; poultry meat, 34; goat's milk, 227; cow's milk, 179; sheep's milk, 117; eggs, 10.

Approximately 138,000 ha. were irrigated in 2002.

Forestry

In 2010 forests covered 12.50m. ha., or 10% of the total land area. Timber production in 2011 was 5.85m. cu. metres.

Fisheries

In 2010 an estimated 100,000 tonnes of fish were caught, exclusively from inland waters.

INDUSTRY

The main industries are food processing, followed by cotton processing, textiles and clothes. Cement and pharmaceuticals are also produced.

Labour

The labour force in 2013 was 5,748,000 (3,310,000 in 2003). 67.0% of the population aged 15–64 was economically active in 2013. In the same year 8.1% of the population was unemployed.

Mali had 0.10m. people living in slavery according to the Walk Free Foundation's 2013 Global Slavery Index.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

The following table shows the value of Mali's foreign trade (in US$1m.):

	2006	2007	2008
Imports c.i.f.	1,819.8	2,184.8	3,338.9
Exports f.o.b.	1,526.1	1,440.6	1,918.3

Principal import commodities are machinery and equipment, foodstuffs, construction materials, petroleum and textiles. Principal export commodities are cotton and livestock (between them accounting for three-quarters of Mali's annual exports) and gold.

The main import suppliers are France and its former colonies (in particular Côte d'Ivoire), western Europe and China. Main export markets are also France and its former colonies, western Europe and China.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

There were 18,912 km of roads in 2005, of which 19.0% were paved. In 2007 there were 87,000 passenger cars (seven per 1,000 inhabitants), 26,800 lorries and vans, and 10,000 motorcycles and mopeds.

Rail

Mali has a railway from Kayes to Koulikoro by way of Bamako, a continuation of the currently non-operational Dakar–Kayes line in Senegal; total length, 2005, 643 km (metre gauge). In 2005, 179,000 passengers and 1.7m. tonnes of freight were transported.

Civil Aviation

There is an international airport at Bamako (Senou), which handled 533,054 passengers (446,793 on international flights) and 7,538 tonnes of freight in 2012. In 2003 Trans African Airlines operated services to Abidjan, Brazzaville, Cotonou, Dakar, Lomé and Pointe-Noire. There were also international flights to Accra, Addis Ababa, Banjul, Bobo-Dioulasso, Casablanca, Conakry, Douala, Kano, Lagos, Libreville, N'Djaména, Niamey, Nouakchott, Ouagadougou, Paris and Tripoli. In 2001 scheduled airline traffic of Mali-based carriers flew 1m. km, carrying 46,000 passengers (all on international flights).

Shipping

For about seven months in the year small steamboats operate a service from Koulikoro to Tombouctou and Gao, and from Bamako to Kouroussa.

Telecommunications

In 2013 there were 126,000 fixed telephone lines; mobile phone subscribers numbered 19,749,000 in the same year (129.1 per 100 persons). There were 27,677 fixed internet subscriptions in 2013. In June 2012 there were 141,000 Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The Supreme Court was established at Bamako in 1969 with both judicial and administrative powers. The Court of Appeal is also at Bamako, at the apex of a system of regional tribunals and local juges de paix.

The population in penal institutions in Sept. 2011 was 5,817 (36 per 100,000 of national population). The International Centre for Prison Studies estimated in 2014 that 52.8% of prisoners had yet to receive a trial.

Education

The adult literacy rate in 2006 was 26%. In 2007 there were 1,510 teaching staff for 54,591 children in pre-primary schools, 33,230 teaching staff for 1,716,956 pupils in primary schools, 15,013 teaching staff for 533,849 secondary school pupils and 50,787 students in tertiary education with 976 academic staff. During the period 1990–95 only 19% of females of primary school age were enrolled in school but by 2007 this had risen to 56%.

In 2005 public expenditure on education came to 4.1% of GDP.

Health

In 2010 there was one hospital bed per 10,000 population. In the same year there were eight physicians for every 100,000 persons and 43 nurses and midwives per 100,000.

RELIGION

The state is secular, but predominantly Sunni Muslim. According to the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life, an estimated 3.2% of the population in 2010 were Christians and 2.7% folk religionists.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

Mali has four sites on the UNESCO World Heritage List: Old Towns of Djenné (inscribed on the list in 1988), a market centre established in 250 BC and an important Islamic centre in the 16th century—its buildings are all mudbrick, plastered annually with adobe; Tombouctou (1988), an important Islamic centre containing the Koranic Sankore University and the famous Djingareyber Mosque; the Cliff of Bandiagara (Land of the Dogons) (1989), for its natural and architectural wonders; and the Tomb of Askia (2004).

Press

In 2008 there were 12 daily newspapers with an estimated combined circulation of 40,000.

Tourism

There were 169,000 non-resident tourists in 2010; tourist revenue totalled US$296m. in the same year.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Neolithic settlements date from 5200 BC and the megalithic temples at Ġgantija on the island of Gozo, constructed around 3500 BC, are considered the second oldest man-made religious structures in the world. Subsequent Bronze Age settlements (the Tarxien Cemetery culture) show similarities with ones discovered on Sicily. Phoenicians, possibly from Tyre in modern-day Lebanon, began colonizing Malta during the 7th century BC.

The islands came under Carthaginian control from around 400 BC and were used as a naval base in the First Punic War. Part of the Roman Empire for almost 300 years from 218 BC, Malta prospered by exporting textiles. Visigoths seized power during the 5th century AD and Arab conquest in 870 led to the building of new settlements, including the future capital Mdina, as well as the creation of irrigation schemes.

Roger I, the Norman king of Sicily, seized power in 1090 and introduced Christianity, although Islam and the Arabic language continued to prosper. The islands remained subject to the rulers of Sicily, including the dynasties of Anjou and Aragon, until 1530. In that year, Charles V, King of Spain and Holy Roman Emperor, gave Malta to the Knights of St John, who had been forced out of Rhodes by Ottoman Turks in 1522. The knights were charged a yearly rent of a Maltese falcon.

The arrival of Napoleonic troops in 1798 heralded sweeping religious reforms but there was a popular uprising against rising taxes and other aspects of French control. The arrival of British naval forces precipitated a French retreat in 1800. The Maltese requested the protection of the British Crown in 1802 on condition that key rights and privileges be preserved. The Knights of St John attempted to regain control of the islands but Malta was annexed by the British in 1814 under the terms of the Treaty of Paris. It became an important staging post for naval and commercial shipping—it was headquarters of the Royal Navy's Mediterranean Fleet—and played a key role in the First World War, hosting a large garrison and the region's largest hospital.

In 1921 Malta became self-governing, with power shared between British and Maltese ministers.

During 1940–41 the islands were hit by sustained German and Italian bombing that killed more than 300. After the Second World War the political scene was split between those who wanted full integration with Great Britain and those favouring independence. In a referendum in 1956 there was majority support for integration, although the results were deemed inconclusive owing to a boycott by the Nationalist Party. Changes to the constitution allied to Giorgio Borg Olivier's election as prime minister in 1962 paved the way for independence on 21 Sept. 1964.

Dom Mintoff's Malta Labour Party emerged victorious in the 1971 general election, Mintoff having previously served as premier from 1955–58. He ushered in an era of non-alignment, during which Malta forged ties with the Eastern Bloc, China and Libya (until a falling-out over oil rights). Playing off East against West, he secured greatly increased revenues for British use of Malta's military facilities in 1972. The island became a republic in 1974 and its British naval base closed in 1979. Moves towards European integration began in 1987 after the Nationalist Party's electoral success and on 1 May 2004 Malta joined the European Union.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

The three Maltese islands and minor islets lie in the Mediterranean 93 km (at the nearest point) south of Sicily and 288 km east of Tunisia. The area of Malta is 246 sq. km (94.9 sq. miles); Gozo, 67 sq. km (25.9 sq. miles) and the virtually uninhabited Comino, 3 sq. km (1.1 sq. miles); total area, 316 sq. km (121.9 sq. miles). The census population in 2011 was 417,432 (Malta island, 386,057; Gozo and Comino, 31,375); density, 1,321 per sq. km.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 419,000.

In 2011, 94.8% of the population were urban. Chief town and port, Valletta, population 5,748 (2011 census). Other towns: Birkirkara, 21,749; Mosta, 19,750; St Paul's Bay, 16,395; Qormi, 16,394; Zabbar, 14,916.

The constitution provides that the national language and language of the courts is Maltese, but both Maltese and English are official languages. Italian is also spoken.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2009: births, 3,713; deaths, 3,221; marriages, 2,353; emigrants, 9,708 (1,771 Maltese); immigrants, 8,147 (1,190 returning Maltese). 2009 rates per 1,000 population: birth, 9.4; death, 7.8; marriage, 5.7. Abortion is illegal, as was divorce until Oct. 2011. Parliament voted in July 2011 to legalize divorce following a vote in favour of the reform by 52.7% to 47.3% in a referendum held in May. Until then Malta had been one of only three countries still to outlaw divorce (the others being the Philippines and the Vatican). In 2013 the most popular age range for marrying was 25–29 for both males and females. Life expectancy at birth in 2013: 77.5 years for males and 82.0 years for females. Annual population growth rate, 2005–10, 0.5%. Infant mortality in 2010: five per 1,000 live births; fertility rate, 2013, 1.4 births per woman.

CLIMATE

The climate is Mediterranean, with hot, dry and sunny conditions in summer and very little rain from May to Aug. Rainfall is not excessive and falls mainly between Oct. and March. Average daily sunshine in winter is six hours and in summer over ten hours. Valletta, Jan. 12.8°C (55°F), July 25.6°C (78°F). Annual rainfall 578 mm (23").

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

Malta is a parliamentary democracy. The constitution of 1964 provides for a President, a House of Representatives of members elected by universal suffrage and a Cabinet consisting of the Prime Minister and such number of Ministers as may be appointed. The Constitution makes provision for the protection of fundamental rights and freedom of the individual, and for freedom of conscience and religious worship, and guarantees the separation of executive, judicial and legislative powers. The House of Representatives currently has 70 members (65 directly elected). Malta uses the single transferable vote system.

National Anthem

'Lil din l'art helwa, l'omm li tatna isimha' ('Guard her, O Lord, as ever Thou hast guarded'); words by Dun Karm Psaila, tune by Dr Robert Samut.

RECENT ELECTIONS

At the elections of 9 March 2013 the electorate was 315,357; turnout was 93.3%. The opposition Labour Party (LP; formerly the Malta Labour Party or MLP) gained 39 seats with 54.8% of votes cast; the Nationalist Party (NP), 30 with 43.3%.

European Parliament

Malta has six representatives. At the May 2014 elections turnout was 74.8% (78.8% in 2009). The LP won 3 seats with 53.4% of votes cast (political affiliation in European Parliament: Progressive Alliance of Socialists and Democrats); and the NP 3 with 40.0% (European People's Party).

CURRENT LEADERS

Marie-Louise Coleiro Preca

Position

President

Introduction

Marie-Louise Coleiro Preca was unanimously elected president by parliament in April 2014. She is scheduled to serve a five-year term.

Early Life

Coleiro Preca was born on 7 Dec. 1958 in Qormi. She graduated in international legal and humanistic studies from the University of Malta and went on to earn a doctorate in law.

Coleiro Preca joined the then Malta Labour Party (MLP) in the early 1980s and had various party roles before serving as its general secretary from 1982–91. She is the only woman to have held such a senior post in any major Maltese political party. She was also a member of the National Bureau of Socialist Youths, led the Women's Section of the party (1996–2001), was a founding member of the Ġużè Ellul Mercer Foundation (an educational organization) and published the MLP's now-defunct weekly newspaper.

In 1998 she was elected to parliament in a seat she has successfully defended at every subsequent election. While the MLP was in opposition, she served as shadow minister for social policy and as a member of the parliamentary permanent committee for social affairs. In 2008 she unsuccessfully contested the party leadership, losing out to Joseph Muscat.

Following the renamed Labour Party's triumph at the 2013 general election, she was appointed family and social solidarity minister. On 1 March 2014 Coleiro Preca accepted Prime Minister Muscat's invitation to become president and was sworn into office on 4 April 2014, having gained the approval of parliament.

Career in Office

The presidency is a largely ceremonial role but Coleiro Preca maintains a number of her former roles. She remains, for instance, in charge of the national strategy against poverty and the food aid programme. As president, she signed into law a controversial civil union bill shortly after taking office in April 2014 following its approval by parliament.

Joseph Muscat

Position

Prime Minister

Introduction

Joseph Muscat became prime minister in March 2013. A former member of the European Parliament (MEP), Muscat is considered a modernizer and centrist.

Early Life

Joseph Muscat was born on 22 Jan. 1974 in Pietà, Malta. In 1997 he graduated from the University of Malta with a master's degree in European studies, management and public policy. From 1997–99 he worked as a market intelligence manager, and from 2000–04 as an investment adviser. He was a journalist on the Malta Labour Party (MLP) radio station from 1992–96 and assistant head of news on its television channel from 1996–97.

He served as financial secretary of the Labour Youth Forum from 1994–97 and was its acting chairperson in 1997. He also served on the national executive of the MLP from 1994–2001 and, under Alfred Sant's Labour government, was a member of the national commission for fiscal morality from 1997–98.

After Labour returned to opposition, Muscat was the party's education spokesman between 2001–03. In 2003 he helped formulate the party's opposition to EU accession. When Malta joined the European Union in 2004, Muscat was elected as an MEP. In this capacity he served on the committee for economic and monetary affairs, advocating a reduction in mobile phone roaming charges. In 2006 he produced a report into new regulations for EU financial services. During this period he completed academic research into multinationals and small businesses in Malta, receiving his PhD from the UK's Bristol University in 2007.

In June 2008 Muscat successfully contested the leadership of the MLP after Alfred Sant resigned. Muscat surrendered his seat in the European Parliament in Oct. 2008 in favour of leading the opposition in Malta. He espoused a more inclusive brand of politics and abbreviated the party's name to the Labour Party (LP). Following gains at the 2009 European Parliamentary elections, he fought the 2013 general election on a platform of lower electricity charges, less bureaucracy, protection for whistle-blowers and reforms to reinvigorate the small business sector. He emerged from the polls on 9 March 2013 with a majority of nine seats.

Career in Office

Muscat took office on 11 March 2013. He has faced the challenge of building economic confidence at a time of continued financial uncertainty among Malta's European neighbours. He has also urged other EU countries to take more action to prevent boat tragedies in the Mediterranean waters around Malta in the wake of the increasing surge of foreign migrants trying to access southern Europe by sea from North Africa and the Middle East.

DEFENCE

The Armed Forces of Malta (AFM) are made up of a Headquarters and three Regiments. In 2011 they had a strength of 1,954 personnel. An Emergency Volunteer Reserve Force was introduced in 1998 on a small scale (120 in 2011). There were also 53 individual reserves in 2011. In addition to infantry and light air defence artillery weapons, the AFM are equipped with helicopters, light fixed-wing and trainer aircraft. There is no conscription.

Apart from normal military duties, AFM are also responsible for Search and Rescue, airport security, surveillance of Malta's territorial and fishing zones, harbour traffic control and anti-pollution duties.

In 2013 defence expenditure totalled US$60m. (US$145 per capita), representing 0.6% of GDP.

Navy

There is a maritime squadron organized into five divisions that operated eight patrol and coastal combatants in 2011.

Air Force

The Air Wing, which mainly serves as a support branch of the ground forces and the maritime squadron, operates eight fixed-wing aircraft and five helicopters.

INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

Malta held a referendum on EU membership on 9 March 2003, in which 53.6% of votes cast were in favour of accession, with 46.4% against. It became a member of the EU on 1 May 2004.

ECONOMY

Services accounted for 65% of GDP in 2009, industry 32% and agriculture 3%.

Overview

Malta is the smallest economy in the eurozone. After joining the EU in 2004, GDP growth was stimulated by a public investment boom largely financed by EU grants. Fiscal policy was directed towards reducing the budget deficit, which had expanded to 56% of GDP by the late 1990s. By 2006 the government had brought the general deficit down to 2.5% of GDP, allowing Malta to join the eurozone on 1 Jan. 2008.

The global financial crisis led to a downturn from late 2008, with manufacturing and tourism the worst hit sectors. However, the economy rebounded strongly in 2010 and has weathered the eurozone debt crisis better than many of its partners, supported by strong private consumption, a stable banking sector and growth in tourism and services exports. Unemployment fell to 5.8% in Jan. 2015, compared to a eurozone average of 11.4%, while fiscal adjustments saw the general government deficit stabilize at around 2.1% of GDP. The IMF has praised government efforts to liberalize the economy but stressed the need to curb public debt and enhance competitiveness. Since becoming an EU member, Malta has seen an inflow of migrants from North Africa, which has put additional strain on economic resources.

Currency

On 1 Jan. 2008 the euro (EUR) replaced the Maltese lira (MTL) as the legal currency of Malta at the irrevocable conversion rate of Lm0.4293 to one euro. There was inflation of 1.0% in 2013 and 0.8% in 2014. Foreign exchange reserves stood at US$2,390m. in March 2005, gold reserves were 4,000 troy oz in May 2005 and total money supply was Lm1,413m. in July 2005.

Budget

In 2012 revenues were €2,738.0m. and expenditures €2,963.9m. Direct taxes accounted for 34.1% of revenues in 2012 and indirect taxes 33.6%; current expenditure accounted for 91.6% of expenditures.

Malta's budget deficit in 2014 was 2.1% of GDP (2013, 2.6%; 2012, 3.6%). The required target set by the EU is a budget deficit of no more than 3%.

The standard rate of VAT is 18.0% (reduced rates, 7% and 5%).

Performance

Real GDP growth was 2.5% in 2012, 2.4% in 2013 and 3.5% in 2014. Total GDP in 2013 was US$9.6bn.

Banking and Finance

The Central Bank of Malta (Governor, Josef Bonnici) was founded in 1968. In Jan. 2004 there were 16 licensed credit institutions carrying out domestic and international banking activities. In addition 13 local financial institutions licensed in terms of the Financial Institutions Act 1994 also provide services that range from exchange bureau related business to merchant banking.

Gross external debt amounted to US$44,388m. in June 2012.

There is a stock exchange in Valletta.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

In 2011 just 0.4% of energy consumption came from renewables (wind power, solar power, hydro-electric power, tidal power, geothermal energy and biomass), compared to the European Union average of 13.0%. A target of 10% has been set by the EU for 2020.

Environment

Malta's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2011 were the equivalent of 18.4 tonnes per capita.

Electricity

Electricity is generated at two interconnected thermal power stations located at Marsa (267 MW) and Delimara (304 MW). The primary transmission voltages are 132,000, 33,000 and 11,000 volts while the low-voltage system is 400/230V, 50Hz with neutral point earthed. Installed capacity was 571,000 kW in 2013. Production in 2011 was 2.2bn. kWh; consumption per capita was 5,146 kWh.

Oil and Gas

Malta's large offshore area, made up of geological extensions of southeast Sicily, east Tunisia and northwest Libya, contains significant hydrocarbon reserves. Active exploration is at present being carried out by TGS-NOPEC, Pancontinental Oil & Gas and TM Services Ltd in offshore areas. Discussions are also under way with oil companies with a view to awarding new licenses. The policy of Malta in the oil and gas sector is to intensify exploration by offering oil companies competitive terms and returns that are commensurate with the risk undertaken.

Agriculture

Malta is self-sufficient in fresh vegetables, pork, poultry, eggs and fresh milk. The main crops are potatoes (the spring crop being the country's primary agricultural export), vegetables and fruits, with some items such as tomatoes serving as the main input in the local canning industry. In 2001 there were about 1,524 full-time farmers and 12,589 part-time. There were around 11,959 agricultural holdings and 943 intensive livestock farm units. In 2001 there were 9,000 ha. of arable land and 1,000 ha. of permanent crops.

Agriculture contributes around 2.6% of GDP annually. 2001 production figures (in 1,000 tonnes): potatoes, 25; tomatoes, 18; melons, 12; wheat, 10; onions, 7; cauliflowers, 6.

Livestock in 2001: cattle, 18,417; pigs, 80,481; sheep, 10,376; chickens, 1.9m.

Livestock produce accounted for 60.7% of the total value of agricultural production during 2001.

Fisheries

In 2012 the fishing fleet comprised 1,043 vessels of 7,998 GT. Total catch in 2013 was 2,356 tonnes.

INDUSTRY

Besides manufacturing (food, clothing, chemicals, electrical machinery parts and electronic components and products), the mainstays of the economy are ship repair and shipbuilding, agriculture, small crafts units, tourism and the provision of other services such as the freeport facilities. The majority of state-aided manufacturing enterprises operating in Malta are foreign-owned or with foreign interests. The Malta Development Corporation is the government agency responsible for promoting investment, while the Malta Export Trade Corporation serves as a catalyst to the export of local products.

Labour

The labour force in 2013 was 187,000 (162,000 in 2003). 63.4% of the population aged 15–64 was economically active in 2013. In the same year 6.5% of the population was unemployed. 30.5% of the labour force in 2013 had a secondary education as the highest level and 23.7% had a tertiary education.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports are being liberalized. Marsaxlokk is an all-weather freeport zone for transhipment activities. The Malta Export Trade Corporation promotes local exports.

Imports and Exports

In 2010 imports (c.i.f.) amounted to US$4,245.8m. and exports (f.o.b.) US$3,357.5m.

Principal imports in 2010 (in US$1m.) were: machinery and transport equipment (1,923.1); food (480.6); chemicals and related products (465.1). Principal exports in 2010 (in US$1m.) were: machinery and transport equipment (2,029.7); miscellaneous manufactured articles (388.8); food and live animals (271.9).

Main import suppliers (in US$1m.) in 2010 were: Italy (985.0); UK (352.3); Germany (348.0); France (337.4). Main export markets in 2010 (in US$1m.) were: Singapore (495.2); USA (370.4); Hong Kong (344.4); Germany (311.2).

Trade Fairs

The Malta Trade Fairs Corporation organizes the International Fair of Malta (early July).

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

In 2004 there were 3,096 km of roads, including 185 km of highways. 87.5% of roads are paved. Malta has one of the densest road networks in the world. Motor vehicles in use in 2007 included 203,900 passenger cars, 23,600 vans and lorries, 10,600 motorcycles and mopeds, and 690 buses and coaches. There were 1,209 casualties in traffic accidents in 2007, including 14 fatalities (equivalent to 3.4 fatalities per 100,000 population, giving Malta the lowest death rate in road accidents of any industrialized country).

Civil Aviation

The national carrier is Air Malta, which is 98% state-owned. There were scheduled services in 2003 to around 30 different countries. In 2012 there were 32,286 aircraft movements at Malta International Airport. A total of 3,658,972 passengers and 16,487 tonnes of cargo were handled. In 2003 scheduled airline traffic of Maltese-based carriers flew 22m. km and carried 1,309,000 passengers (all on international flights).

Shipping

There is a car ferry between Malta and Gozo. In Jan. 2009 there were 1,487 ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 31.65m. GT; Malta's fleet was the sixth largest in terms of the number of ships and the eighth largest on the basis of gross tonnage. Of the 1,487 vessels registered, 498 were general cargo ships, 464 bulk carriers, 346 oil tankers, 78 container ships, 56 passenger ships, 24 liquid gas tankers and 21 chemical tankers.

The Malta Freeport plays an important role in the economy as it is effectively positioned to act as a distribution centre in the Mediterranean.

Telecommunications

In 2013 there were 231,331 main (fixed) telephone lines; mobile phone subscribers numbered 556,652 in 2013 (129.8 per 100 persons). There were 135,758 fixed internet subscriptions in 2012 and 149,788 wireless broadband subscriptions. In March 2012 there were 192,000 Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

There were 17,584 recorded offences committed in 2013, down from a peak of 18,578 in 2005.

In Jan. 2003 total police strength was 1,841 including 107 officers (92 males and 15 females) and 1,734 other ranks (250 females).

Malta abolished the death penalty for all crimes in 2000.

Education

Adult literacy rate, 2005, 92.4% (male, 91.2%; female, 93.5%).

Education is compulsory between the ages of 5 and 16 and free in government schools from kindergarten to university. Kindergarten education is provided for three- and four-year old children. The primary school course lasts six years. In 2003 there were 19,300 children enrolled in 77 state primary schools. There are education centres for children with special needs, but they are taught in ordinary schools if possible.

Secondary schools, trade schools and junior lyceums provide secondary education in the state sector. At the end of their primary education, pupils sit the 11+ examination to start a secondary education course. Pupils who qualify are admitted in the junior lyceum, while the others attend secondary schools. In 2003–04, 11 junior lyceums had a total of 9,700 students (5,600 girls and 4,100 boys). About 8,200 pupils attend secondary schools. Five centres providing secondary education for under-performing students have a registered student population of about 900, of which 500 are boys. Secondary schools and junior lyceums offer a five-year course leading to the Secondary Education Certificate and the General Certificate of Education, Ordinary Level.

At the end of the five-year secondary course, students may opt to follow a higher academic or technical or vocational course of one to four years. The academic courses generally lead to Intermediate and Advanced Level examinations set by the British universities. The Matriculation Certificate, which qualifies students for admission to university, is a broad-based holistic qualification covering—among others—the humanities and the sciences, together with systems of knowledge.

About 35% of the student population attend non-state schools, from kindergarten to higher secondary level. In Oct. 2003 there were about 25,700 pupils attending non-state schools, 800 of whom were at post-compulsory secondary level, 17,100 were in schools run by the Roman Catholic Church, while 8,500 students were attending private schools. Under an agreement between the government and the Church, the government subsidizes Church schools and students attending these schools do not pay any fees.

More than 9,800 students (including 750 from overseas) were following courses at the University in 2003. University students receive a stipend.

A post-compulsory vocational college, the Malta College of Arts, Science and Technology, provides vocational and technical courses up to degree level. In Oct. 2003 about 9,000 students (47% of which were females) were following post-compulsory education in state colleges and institutes.

In 2008 public expenditure on education came to 5.9% of GDP.

Health

In 2006 there were 1,564 doctors, 190 dentists, 790 pharmacists and 2,411 nurses and midwives. There were eight hospitals (three private) with 2,122 beds in 2003. There are also nine health centres.

Welfare

Legislation provides a national contributory insurance scheme and also for the payment of non-contributory allowances, assistances and pensions. It covers the payment of marriage grants, maternity benefits, child allowances, parental allowances, disabled child allowance, family bonus, sickness benefit, injury benefits, disablement benefits, unemployment benefit, contributory pensions in respect of retirement, invalidity and widowhood, and non-contributory medical assistance, free medical aids, social assistance, a carers' pension and pensions for the visually impaired, disabled or severely disabled persons and the aged.

As of 2015 the statutory retirement age was 62 for both sexes. It is gradually rising and will be 65 for both sexes in 2026.

RELIGION

97% of the population belong to the Roman Catholic Church, which is established by law as the religion of the country, although full liberty of conscience and freedom of worship are guaranteed. In Feb. 2016 there was one cardinal.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

Malta has three sites on the UNESCO World Heritage List (all inscribed on the list in 1980): Hal Saflieni Hypogeum, a prehistoric underground necropolis; the City of Valletta, a highly concentrated centre marked by the influences of Romans, Byzantines and Arabs and the Knights of St John; and the Megalithic Temples of Malta (reinscribed in 1992), seven temples on Malta and Gozo containing Bronze Age structures.

Press

In 2008 there were two English paid-for dailies (The Times and The Malta Independent) and two Maltese dailies (In-Nazzjon and L-Orizzont). There were seven paid-for non-dailies and six Sunday newspapers (three in English and three in Maltese).

Tourism

Tourism is a major component of the Maltese economy. In 2010 there were 1,336,000 staying foreign tourists, spending US$1,130m.;

31% of tourists in 2010 were from the UK and 16% from Italy. Cruise passenger visits totalled 491,201 in 2010 (more than double the 2000 total of 170,782).

Festivals

Major festivals include the Malta Song Festival; Carnival Festivals at Valletta (Feb.); History and Elegance Festival at Valletta (April); National Folk Singing; Malta International Arts Festival; Malta Jazz Festival; International Food and Beer Festival (June/July); Festa Season (June–Sept.); Malta International Choir Festival (Nov.).

MARSHALL ISLANDS

Republic of the Marshall Islands

Capital: Majuro

Population estimate, 2015: 53,000

GNI per capita, 2014: (PPP$) 4,674

Internet domain extension: .mh

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

The Pacific archipelago was populated by emigrants from southeast Asia from around 2000 BC and first documented by Portuguese mariners in 1528. The islands owe their name to the English seafarer, John Marshall, who visited in 1788. They became part of the protectorate of German New Guinea in 1886 and administrative affairs were managed by private German and Australian interests. Japan seized control in 1914 and received a League of Nations mandate over the islands in 1919. The Marshall Islands were occupied by Allied forces in 1944 and became part of the UN Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands on 18 July 1947 (administered by the USA). On 21 Oct. 1986 the islands gained independence. A Compact of Free Association with the USA that came into force at the time was extended by 20 years in May 2004.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

The Marshall Islands lie in the North Pacific Ocean north of Kiribati and east of Micronesia, and consist of an archipelago of 31 coral atolls, five single islands and 1,152 islets strung out in two chains, eastern and western. Of these, 25 atolls and islands are inhabited. The land area is 181 sq. km (70 sq. miles). At the 2011 census the population was 53,158 (27,243 males); density, 294 per sq. km.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 53,000.

The capital is Majuro (also known as Dalap-Uliga-Darrit) on Majuro Atoll (2011 population, 27,797) in the eastern chain. The largest atoll in the western chain is Kwajalein (2011 population, 11,408) containing the only other town, Ebeye. In 2011, 73.8% of Marshall Islanders lived on these two atolls. The two archipelagic island chains of Bikini and Enewetak are former US nuclear test sites; Kwajalein is now used as a US missile test range. The islands lay claim to the US territory of Wake Island. In 2011 the population was 72.1% urban. About 88% of the population are Marshallese, a Micronesian people.

English is universally spoken and is the official language. Two major Marshallese dialects from the Malayo-Polynesian family and Japanese are also spoken.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2006 births, estimate, 1,576; deaths, 318. 2006 rates per 1,000 population, estimates: birth, 30.3; death, 6.1. Infant mortality rate, 2010, 22 per 1,000 live births. Life expectancy, 2008: male, 68.9 years; female, 73.0. Annual population growth rate, 1998–2008, 1.6%; fertility rate, 2008, 3.7 births per woman.

CLIMATE

Hot and humid, with wet season from May to Nov. The islands border the typhoon belt. Jaluit, Jan. 81°F (27.2°C), July 82°F (27.8°C). Annual rainfall 161" (4,034 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

Under the constitution which came into force on 1 May 1979, the Marshall Islands form a republic with a President as head of state and government, who is elected for four-year terms by the parliament. The parliament consists of a 33-member House of Assembly (Nitijela), directly elected by popular vote for four-year terms. There is also a 12-member appointed Council of Chiefs (Iroij) which has a consultative and advisory capacity on matters affecting customary law and practice.

National Anthem

'Forever Marshall Islands'; words and tune by Amata Kabua.

RECENT ELECTIONS

At the House of Assembly elections on 16 Nov. 2015, 33 non-partisan members were elected. Although candidates are officially non-partisan and their party affiliation may change after the elections, many of them belong either to the Kien Eo Am party/KEA ('Your Government') or the Aelon Kein Ad party/AKA ('Our Island'). An indirect presidential election was held on 27 Jan. 2016. The sole candidate Hilda Heine won with 24 votes.

CURRENT GOVERNMENT

President: Hilda Heine; b. 1951 (ind.; took office on 28 Jan. 2016).

In March 2016 the government comprised:

CURRENT LEADERS

Hilda C. Heine

Position
President

Introduction

Former education minister Hilda Heine was elected president in Jan. 2016, following the one-week tenure of Casten Nemra.

Early Life

Born on 6 April 1951 in Majuro Atoll, Hilda Heine studied at the University of Oregon, USA and attained a master's degree in education from the University of Hawaii in 1974. She was a teacher and counsellor at Marshall Islands High School, Majuro, until 1982, and held administrative posts in education until 1990. From 1990–92 she served as president of the College of the Marshall Islands and from 1993–95 was secretary of education at the ministry of education in Majuro.

From 1995 she worked on a series of projects associated with the non-governmental Pacific Resources for Education and Learning (PREL), including initiatives to promote leadership in education. In 2000 she founded Women United Together Marshall Islands (WUTMI) to campaign for women's rights. From 2001–04 she worked as a researcher for PREL in Hawaii and in 2004 received her doctorate in education from the University of Southern California.

After serving as director for policy and capacity building for PREL, Hawaii from 2004–05, and as programme director at the Pacific Comprehensive Assistance Center, PREL, Hawaii from 2006–12, Heine successfully stood for the senatorial seat of Aur Atoll in 2012. The following year she was appointed minister of education. Following a closely-fought general election in Jan. 2016, coalition wrangling led to President Nemra losing a vote of no confidence after only a week in office. Heine was then elected to succeed him.

Career in Office

Heine took office on 28 Jan. 2016 and on 3 Feb. announced a state of emergency in response to a drought. Environmental problems are expected to feature prominently among her main challenges, alongside the need to further develop infrastructure, education and employment.

DEFENCE

The Compact of Free Association gives the USA responsibility for defence in return for US assistance. In 2003 the US lease of Kwajalein Atoll, a missile testing site, was extended by 50 years.

ECONOMY

Agriculture accounts for approximately 15% of GDP, industry 13% and services 72%.

Overview

The Marshall Islands are dependent on foreign aid. The main sources of revenue come from subsidies under the 1986 Compact of Free Association with the USA (renegotiated in 2002 and 2003) and the leasing of land for US missile testing. The economy experienced moderate growth in the early 2000s but contracted in 2008 and 2009. Growth resumed from 2010–14, driven by the fisheries and export sectors along with scheduled infrastructure projects. Unemployment, particularly among young people, remains high, contributing to increased levels of emigration to the USA, made easier under the Compact agreement.

The economy is particularly vulnerable to external shocks owing to its geographical isolation, narrow production base and reliance on foreign aid. The planned steady decline in Compact grants means that fiscal consolidation and structural reform to stimulate the private sector as the primary engine of growth are needed to ensure long-term sustainability. Tourism, which currently employs around 10% of the labour force, has the potential to drive future foreign exchange earnings.

Emigration and climate change constitute long-term challenges. Parts of the island are at risk of being engulfed by rising sea levels, with many of the islands' atolls only one metre above the water level.

Currency

US currency is used. Inflation was 1.9% in 2013 and 1.1% in 2014.

Budget

Revenue in 2010 was US$109.2m.; expenditure was US$101.7m. Under the terms of the Amended Compact, which entered force in 2004 as a follow-up to the Compact of Free Association, the USA provides approximately US$70m. a year in aid. The fiscal year begins on 1 Oct.

Performance

Total GDP in 2014 was US$187m.; GDP per capita in 2012 was US$3,508. Real GDP growth was 4.7% in 2012, 3.0% in 2013 and 0.5% in 2014.

Banking and Finance

There are three banks: the Bank of Marshall Islands, the Marshall Islands Development Bank and the Bank of Guam.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Electricity

Total installed capacity (2011 estimate), 17,000 kW. Production (2011 estimate), 114m. kWh.

Minerals

High-grade phosphate deposits are mined on Ailinglaplap Atoll. Deep-seabed minerals are an important natural resource.

Agriculture

A small amount of agricultural produce is exported: coconuts, tomatoes, melons and breadfruit. Other important crops include copra, taro, cassava and sweet potatoes. Pigs and chickens constitute the main livestock. In 2012 there were approximately 2,000 ha. of arable land and 7,000 ha. of permanent crop land.

Forestry

There were 13,000 ha. of forest in 2010, or 70% of the total land area.

Fisheries

Total catch in 2010 amounted to 59,730 tonnes. There is a commercial tuna-fishing industry with a processing plant on Majuro. Seaweed is cultivated. Fisheries offer some of the best opportunities for economic growth.

INDUSTRY

The main industries are copra, fish, tourism, handicrafts (items made from shell, wood and pearl), mining, manufacturing, construction and power.

Labour

In 2004 the labour force was estimated at 17,342. Approximately 34% were unemployed in 2004. In 2007, 37% of employed people worked in the private sector. In the same year 35% of workers were employed in public administration, 18% in wholesale and retail trade, 12% in extra-territorial organizations and bodies and 8% in construction. Agriculture, hunting, forestry and fishing accounted for just 3%.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

The Amended Compact between the Marshall Islands and the USA is the major source of income, and accounts for about 70% of total GDP.

Imports and Exports

Imports (mainly oil) were US$133.3m. in 2009–10; exports, US$32.3m. By far the most important trading partner is the USA. Main imports are mineral fuels and lubricants, and machinery and transport equipment. Main exports are: copra, coconut, and chilled and frozen fish.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

There are paved roads on major islands (Majuro, Kwajalein); roads are otherwise stone-, coral- or laterite-surfaced. In 2004 there were 1,555 passenger cars and 159 trucks and buses.

Civil Aviation

There were two international airports and 30 airfields on 24 atolls and islands in 2004. The main airport is Majuro International. In 2003 there were flights to Guam, Honolulu, Johnston Island, Kiribati and Micronesia as well as domestic services. The national carrier is Air Marshall Islands.

Shipping

Majuro is the main port. In Jan. 2009 there were 1,125 ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 41·58m. GT (a figure exceeded only by the fleets of Panama, Liberia and The Bahamas). Of the 1,125 vessels registered, 434 were oil tankers, 311 bulk carriers, 192 container ships, 110 general cargo ships, 56 liquid gas tankers, 15 chemical tankers and seven passenger ships. The ship's register of the Marshall Islands is a flag of convenience register.

Telecommunications

In 2014 there were 2,361 main (fixed) telephone lines. There is a US satellite communications system on Kwajalein and two Intelsat satellite earth stations (Pacific Ocean). The National Telecommunications Authority provides domestic and international services. Mobile phone subscribers numbered 15,500 in 2014. An estimated 11·7% of the population were internet users in 2013.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The Supreme Court is situated on Majuro. There is also a High Court, a District Court and 23 Community Courts. A Traditional Court deals with disputes involving land properties and customs.

Education

In 2008–09 there were 8,000 pupils enrolled in primary schools and 5,000 pupils in secondary schools. There is a College of the Marshall Islands and a subsidiary of the University of the South Pacific on Majuro. In 2004 public expenditure on education came to 11·8% of GDP.

Health

There were two hospitals in 2003, with a total of 140 beds. In 2010 there were four doctors for every 10,000 people, and 17 nurses and midwives per 10,000. There were two dentists per 10,000 population in 2008.

RELIGION

The population is mainly Protestant (primarily the United Church of Christ). Other Churches and denominations include Assemblies of God, Roman Catholics, Latter-day Saints (Mormons), Bukot Nan Jesus and Baptists.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

The Marshall Islands have one site on the UNESCO World Heritage List: Bikini Atoll (inscribed on the list in 2010), the site used by the US military to carry out 67 nuclear tests between 1946 and 1958.

Press

There is a weekly publication called The Marshall Islands Journal. Since 2007 it has also had an online edition.

Tourism

In 2011, 4,559 non-resident tourists (excluding same-day visitors) arrived by air. Tourism offers one of the best opportunities for economic growth.

Festivals

Custom Day and the Annual Canoe Race are the main festivals.

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

A referendum was held on 25 June 2006 to approve a new constitution. Turnout was 76.5%; 96.99% of votes cast were in favour.

The constitution imposes a limit of two five-year terms for a president, to be elected by popular vote. It also sets a maximum age of 75 for a president. There is a 56-member Senate (53 elected and three appointed) and a 147-member National Assembly.

Following a coup d'état in Aug. 2008 a transitional government took power, headed by an 11-member High Council of State (all of whom came from the military). The junta retained the constitution and vowed to protect the country's democratic institutions. In April 2009 Gen. Mohamed Ould Abdel Aziz—the leader of the coup—stood down as head of government to run in the presidential elections of July 2009, which he won by a large margin.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Mauritania became a French protectorate in 1903 and a colony in 1920. It achieved full independence on 28 Nov. 1960. Mauritania was made a one-party state in 1964.

The 1980s were marked by territorial disputes with Morocco and Senegal. Seizing power in 1984, Lieut.-Col. Maaouya Ould Sid'Ahmed Taya prepared the way for a new constitution allowing for a multi-party political system, which also gave extensive powers to the president. A coup attempt against Ould Taya failed in June 2003. But in Aug. 2005, while out of the country, he was overthrown in a bloodless coup by a group of army officers who set up a Military Council for Justice and Democracy. Under the leadership of Col. Ely Ould Mohammed Vall, the Council pledged to hold democratic elections within two years. In June 2006 a new constitution was approved, limiting the president to two 5-year terms. Sidi Mohamed Ould Cheikh Abdallahi won presidential elections in March 2007 but was ousted in a coup in Aug. 2008.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Mauritania is bounded west by the Atlantic Ocean, north by Western Sahara, northeast by Algeria, east and southeast by Mali, and south by Senegal. The total area is 1,030,700 sq. km (398,000 sq. miles) of which 47% is desert. The population at the 2013 census was 3,537,368; density, 3.4 per sq. km. The United Nations population estimate for 2013 was 3,873,000. In 2011, 41.7% of the population lived in urban areas.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 4.07m.

RECENT ELECTIONS

Presidential elections took place on 21 June 2014. Incumbent president Mohamed Ould Abdel Aziz was re-elected with 81.9% of the vote against Biram Dah Ebeid with 8.7%, Boydiel Ould Houmeid 4.5%, Ibrahim Moctar Sarr 4.4% and Lalla Meryem Mint Moulaye Idriss 0.5%. Turnout was 56.5%. The National Forum for Democracy and Unity (a coalition of opposition parties) boycotted the election.

Much-delayed elections for the National Assembly were held on 23 Nov. and 21 Dec. 2013. The Union for the Republic (UPR) gained a majority in parliament, winning 75 seats of the 146 seats, Tewassoul 16, El Wiam Party 10, People's Progressive Alliance (APP) 7, Union for Democracy and Progress 6, El Karam Party 6, Alliance for Justice and Democracy/Movement for Renewal (APJD/MPR) 4, El Vadila Party 3, Party of Unity and Development 3, Ravah Party 3, and Republican Party for Democracy and Renewal also 3. Six other parties gained one seat each. Tewassoul was the only member of an 11-party opposition alliance known as the Coordination of the Democratic Opposition (COD) to participate. The remaining ten parties, which did not consider the incumbent president legitimate, boycotted the election.

Introduction

Gen. Mohamed Ould Abdel Aziz was elected president of Mauritania in July 2009, having called elections after seizing power in a coup against his predecessor Sidi Mohamed Ould Cheikh Abdallahi in Aug. 2008. Aziz led the country at the head of a governing council until April 2009. He was returned for a second five-year term in June 2014 in an election boycotted by most opposition parties.

Early Life

Ould Abdel Aziz was born on 20 Dec. 1956 in Akjoujt, Mauritania, half way between the coastal capital and the Sahara desert. He was born into the Oulad Bou Sbaa Berber-Arab tribe, from which a number of powerful Mauritanian figures have emerged. In 1977 he attended officer training at the Royal Military Academy in Meknès, Morocco. After a stint in the army, he returned to the Military Academy in 1980 to receive training in logistics.

From 1978 Mauritania had a string of de facto governments following the overthrow of the civilian president Ould Daddah. Aziz became a staff officer in 1982 and in 1984 was appointed aide-de-camp to Col. Maaouya Ould Sid'Ahmed Taya, the nation's de facto military leader. After further training at the École Militaire Inter-Arme (EMIA), Aziz attained the rank of captain and, at Ould Taya's request, established an elite presidential guard (BASEP).

In 1992 Aziz became the army chief of staff, continuing to serve Ould Taya. In 1998, by then a lieutenant colonel, he once again took charge of BASEP. After defeating coups in 2003 and 2004, for which he received the country's highest military award, Aziz was a leading figure in the 2005 coup that overthrew Ould Taya. Aziz emerged as a driving force for the restoration of civilian government and in March 2007 Ould Abdallahi was elected president in open elections.

Abdallahi named Aziz (still head of BASEP) commander of the armed forces, and even sent Aziz to meet King Mohammed of Morocco in an official state visit. In 2008 Aziz became a general. However, relations between the military and the civilian government grew strained as the economic situation deteriorated and Islamic political forces gained strength. The government began a curb of military power and in Aug. 2008 announced a restructuring of the military. In response, the army ousted Abdallahi. As head of a military-dominated interim council, Aziz announced new elections to be held in June 2009. In March 2009 Aziz announced his intention to run for president in the elections, rescheduled for July.

Career in Office

His assumption of office in Aug. 2009 was attacked by France (the former colonial power), the African Union (AU), the USA and Algeria. However, he was received warmly in neighbouring Morocco and in Libya.

The AU continued to impose sanctions in 2010, including a travel ban in AU countries for military personnel who had supported the coup and a seizure of their assets in AU banks. Aziz's electoral pledges included re-establishing civilian governance, improving national unity and consolidating republican institutions. In July 2010 his government adopted new anti-terrorism legislation to give security forces greater powers.

There were opposition demonstrations in May 2012 calling on Aziz to resign, and in Oct. he was wounded in a shooting incident, apparently by troops at a military checkpoint. Described officially as an accident, other sources claimed it was a coup attempt.

Parliamentary elections held over two rounds in Nov. and Dec. 2013 were boycotted by most opposition groups and resulted in a landslide victory for the ruling pro-Aziz Union for the Republic and allied parties. In Jan. 2014 Aziz took office as chair of the African Union for a year-long term. In June that year he was re-elected as state president with nearly 82% of the vote.

DEFENCE

Conscription is authorized for two years. Defence expenditure in 2013 totalled US$145m. (US$42 per capita), representing approximately 3% of GDP.

Army

There are six military regions. Army strength was 15,000 in 2011. In addition there was a Gendarmerie of about 3,000 and a National Guard of 2,000.

Navy

The Navy, some 620 strong in 2011, has bases at Nouâdhibou and Nouakchott.

Air Force

Personnel (2011), 250 with 15 aircraft (none combat-capable) and three helicopters.

ECONOMY

In 2010 agriculture accounted for 16.8% of GDP, industry 44.0% and services 39.2%.

Overview

Mauritania is a developing economy with limited agrarian resources but extensive mineral deposits (especially gold and copper) and rich fishing grounds. Mining accounts for nearly 75% of exports and represented 30.1% of GDP in 2013. Fishing generated 12% of GDP. In Oct. 2013 the country took an important step towards protecting its fishery resources by signing a partnership agreement with the European Union.

Oil was discovered in 2001, with production in the country's main oilfield starting five years later. However, technical difficulties resulted in output falling from 75,000 bbls per day in early 2006 to 23,000 by the end of the year. Oil's contribution to GDP declined from 7.3% in 2008 to 2.3% in 2013 and deposits are expected to run out by 2025.

The economy was hit hard by the global recession in 2008, aggravated by a fuel crisis and a military coup that led to the suspension of donor assistance. However, despite a severe drought in 2011, GDP rebounded to average 6.1% from 2012–14. The business climate weakened, though, with the country ranked 173rd out of 193 nations in the World Bank's 2014 Doing Business report, compared to 159th in 2012. Whilst some progress has been made in alleviating poverty, it remains a significant problem. According to the United Nations Development Programme, Mauritania's human development index in 2014 remained below the sub-Saharan average.

Long-term challenges include diversifying the economy away from mining and cutting dependence on food imports. The government must also aim to improve job security, with over half of all jobs considered vulnerable.

Currency

The monetary unit is the ouguiya (MRO) which is divided into five khoums. The ouguiya was devalued in Oct. 1992 by 28% and again in July 1998 by 18%. Inflation was 4.1% in 2013 and 3.5% in 2014. Total money supply in March 2004 was 34,318m. ouguiya, foreign exchange reserves were US$390m. and gold reserves 12,000 troy oz.

Budget

Revenues were 188.5bn. ouguiya in 2009 and expenditures 242.9bn. ouguiya.

The standard rate of VAT is 14%.

Performance

The economy grew by 6.0% in 2012, 5.5% in 2013 and 6.9% in 2014. Mauritania's total GDP in 2014 was US$5.1bn.

Banking and Finance

The Central Bank (created 1973) is the bank of issue (Governor, Abdel Aziz Ould Dahi). In 2010 there were ten commercial banks. Bank deposits totalled 35.2bn. ouguiya in 2009.

In 2010 external debt totalled US$2,461m., equivalent to 67.0% of GNI.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

In 2011 carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy were the equivalent of 0.5 tonnes per capita.

Electricity

Installed capacity was estimated at 196,000 kW in 2011. Production in 2011 was 744m. kWh; consumption per capita was 232 kWh.

Oil and Gas

Oil was discovered off the coast of Mauritania in 2001. Production began in Feb. 2006. For the rest of 2006 production averaged 31,000 bbls a day but by 2012 it had declined to 7,000 bbls a day.

Minerals

There are reserves of copper, gold, phosphate, gypsum, platinum and diamonds. Iron ore, 11.2m. tonnes of which were mined in 2006, accounts for about 69% of exports. Prospecting licences have also been issued for diamonds.

Agriculture

Only 1% of the country receives enough rain to grow crops, so agriculture is mainly confined to the south, in the Senegal river valley. In 2007 the agricultural population numbered 1,598,000 of whom 674,000 were economically active. There were an estimated 450,000 ha. of arable land in 2007 and 12,000 ha. of permanent crops. Production (2006, in 1,000 tonnes): sorghum, 84; rice, 70; dates, 20; maize, 17; dry beans, 10 (estimate); dry peas, 10 (estimate); yams, 3 (estimate); millet, 2; potatoes, 2 (estimate).

Herding is the main occupation of the rural population and accounted for 11% of GDP in 2005. In 2006–07 there were 17.15m. sheep and goats; 1.37m. cattle; 1.35m. camels; 4.3m. chickens (estimate).

Forestry

There were 0.24m. ha. of forests in 2010, chiefly in the southern regions, where wild acacias yield the main product, gum arabic. In 2011, 1.88m. cu. metres of roundwood were cut.

Fisheries

Total catch in 2010 was 276,238 tonnes, of which 95% came from marine waters. Mauritania's coastal waters are among the world's most abundant fishing areas, earning it significant amounts of hard currency through licensing agreements. The fishing sector accounts for an estimated 20% of Mauritania's national budget.

INDUSTRY

Manufacturing accounted for 7.9% of GDP in 2012. Manufactures include fish processing, chemicals and plastics, building materials, and paper and packaging materials.

Labour

The labour force in 2013 was 1,242,000 (885,000 in 2003). 55.0% of the population aged 15–64 was economically active in 2013. In the same year 31.1% of the population was unemployed.

Slavery was only abolished in Mauritania in 1981, making it the last country where it was still being practised legally. Nonetheless, the practice remains widespread and there were 0.15m. people living in slavery according to the Walk Free Foundation's 2013 Global Slavery Index.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

In Feb. 1989 Mauritania signed a treaty of economic co-operation with the four other Maghreb countries—Algeria, Libya, Morocco and Tunisia.

Imports and Exports

In 2007 imports were valued at US$1,376.6m. and exports at US$1,302.4m. Main imports in 2007 were petroleum products (30.6% of total imports), foodstuffs and capital goods. Main exports in 2007 were iron ore (41.3% of total exports), oil and fish products. Main import suppliers in 2007 were France (15.9%), Brazil (6.0%), China (5.8%) and Belgium (4.5%). Principal export markets in 2006 were China (26.3%), Italy (11.8%), France (10.2%) and Belgium (6.8%).

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

There were about 11,066 km of roads in 2006, of which 26.8% were paved. In 2002 there were 7,100 passenger cars and 5,700 commercial vehicles.

Rail

A 704-km railway links Zouérate with the port of Point-Central, 10 km south of Nouâdhibou, and is used primarily for iron ore exports. In 2008 it carried 11.1m. tonnes of freight and 100,000 passengers.

Civil Aviation

There are international airports at Nouakchott, Nouâdhibou and Néma. In 2003 scheduled airline traffic of Mauritania-based carriers flew 1m. km, carrying 116,000 passengers (14,000 on international flights). Mauritania Airlines International, founded in 2010, is the national flag carrier.

Shipping

The major ports are at Point-Central (for mineral exports), Nouakchott and Nouâdhibou.

Telecommunications

In 2013 there were 54,000 active fixed telephone subscriptions and 3,988,000 active mobile phone subscriptions (102.5 per 100 persons). In the same year an estimated 6.2% of the population were internet users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

There are courts of first instance at Nouakchott, Atâr, Kaédi, Aïoun el Atrouss and Kiffa. The Appeal Court and Supreme Court are situated in Nouakchott. Islamic jurisprudence was adopted in 1980.

The population in penal institutions in 2012 was 1,602 (45 per 100,000 of national population).

Education

Basic education is compulsory for all children between the ages of six and 14. In 2007 there were 483,776 pupils and 11,379 teaching staff in primary schools, 102,130 secondary level pupils with 3,843 teaching staff and 11,794 tertiary level students with (2006) 353 academic staff. The University of Nouakchott, founded in 1981, is the leading tertiary education institution. Adult literacy rate in 2008 was 57%.

Public expenditure on education came to 2.8% of GNI in 2006.

Health

In 2006 there were four hospital beds per 10,000 persons. There were 477 physicians, 73 dentists, 1,636 nurses and 328 midwives in 2005.

In 2006, 60% of the population had access to improved drinking water sources.

RELIGION

Over 99% of Mauritians are Sunni Muslim, mainly of the Qadiriyyah sect.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

Mauritania has two sites on the UNESCO World Heritage List: Banc d'Arguin National Park (inscribed on the list in 1989), a coastal park of dunes and swamps; and the Ancient Ksour of Ouadane, Chinguetti, Tichitt and Oualata (1996), Islamic trading and religious centres in the Sahara.

Press

In 2008 there were four daily newspapers with a circulation of 9,000.

Tourism

There were 29,000 foreign tourists in 2007–08; spending by tourists in 2007 totalled US$39m.

MAURITIUS

founded by Dr Maurice Cure, began to organize protests and strikes on the plantations.

A new constitution in 1947 paved the way for internal self-government ten years later. In 1958 the MLP, led by Dr Seewoosagur Ramgoolam, won the first elections under universal suffrage. Full independence was achieved after Ramgoolam led the MLP, allied to the Independence Forward Bloc and the Muslim Action Committee, to victory at the 1967 election. On 12 March 1968 Mauritius became independent within the British Commonwealth and Ramgoolam was sworn in as the first prime minister.

In the 1970s and 1980s sugar exports declined and the country became a centre for textile production and upmarket tourism. Mauritius achieved republic status in March 1992 and secured a seat on the United Nations Security Council for the first time in 2000.

Navin Rangoolam (son of Dr Seewoosagur Ramgoolam) served as prime minister between 1995 and 2000 and won further terms at the head of the Social Alliance in 2005 and 2010. He oversaw a period of economic expansion driven by tourism, international finance and business outsourcing. He was succeeded as premier in 2014 by Sir Anerood Jugnauth, who had previously served as prime minister from 1983–95 and 2000–03. He was also president from 2003 until 2012.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Mauritius, the main island, lies 800 km (500 miles) east of Madagascar. Rodrigues is 560 km (350 miles) to the east. The outer islands are Agalega and the St Brandon Group. Area and population:

Island	Area in sq. km	2011 census population
Mauritius	1,865	1,196,383
Rodrigues	104	40,434
Outer Islands	71	274
Total	2,040	1,237,091

Port Louis is the capital (128,851 inhabitants in 2010). Other towns: Beau Bassin-Rose Hill, 110,687; Vacoas-Phoenix, 106,404; Curepipe, 84,487; Quatre Bornes, 77,495. In 2010, 58.3% of the population were rural. July 2014 population estimate: 1,261,208.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 1.27m.

The majority of the population are Indo-Mauritians (people of Indian descent). The Afro-Mauritians are the other major group, and there are also Sino-Mauritians (of Chinese origin) and Franco-Mauritians (descendants of French settlers). Mauritius has no indigenous population.

The official language is English, although French is widely used. Creole and Bhojpuri are vernacular languages.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2007: births, 17,034 (rate of 13.5 per 1,000 population); deaths, 8,498 (6.7 per 1,000); marriages, 11,547 (9.2 per 1,000); divorces, 1,302 (1.0 per 1,000). In 2007 the suicide rate was 15.7 per 100,000 population among men and 4.7 per 100,000 among women. Population growth rate in 2007 was 0.65%. In 2007 the most popular age range for marrying was 25–29 for males and 20–24 for females. Life expectancy at birth in 2007 was 69.1 years for males and 75.8 for females. Infant mortality, 2010, 13 per 1,000 live births; fertility rate, 2007, 2.0 births per woman.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

The uninhabited, volcanic Indian Ocean island of Mauritius was visited by Middle Eastern and Malay seafarers from the ninth century and documented by Portuguese mariners between 1507 and 1512. In 1598 the Dutch admiral, Wybrand van Warwyck, established a settlement and named the island after Prince Maurice of Nassau—the stadthouder, or military chief, of Holland and Zeeland. The colony proved a useful staging post as the Dutch developed trade links with India, Southern Africa and the East Indies, but it was abandoned in favour of the Cape Colony in 1710. By then the Dutch settlers had cleared tracts of forest, introduced new species and, as of 1662, had caused the extinction of the island's iconic flightless bird, the dodo.

French traders, who had established settlements in Madagascar, Bourbon (Réunion) and Rodrigues, landed on Mauritius in 1715 and renamed it Ile de France. Mahé de La Bourdonnais, who arrived in 1735, began cultivating sugarcane using East African slave labour. He developed Port Louis as the capital of the island and several other French possessions to the east. British forces took control of Ile de France in 1810 and it became an important link in a secure shipping route between Britain and India. While English was adopted as the language of education, French cultural influences persisted.

Following the abolition of slavery in 1835, hundreds of thousands of indentured labourers were transported from India. By 1850 the island was the British Empire's largest producer of sugarcane but workers faced harsh conditions. Malaria, cholera and rabies were widespread and cyclones frequently destroyed housing and crops. Mauritius acquired its first elected legislative council in 1885, although voting restrictions ensured the plantation owners remained dominant. Although the indentured labour system was abolished in 1910, working conditions were slow to improve. In 1936 the Mauritian Labour Party (MLP),

CLIMATE

The sub-tropical climate is humid. Most rain falls in the summer. Rainfall varies between 40" (1,000 mm) on the coast to 200" (5,000 mm) on the central plateau, though the west coast only has 35" (875 mm). Mauritius lies in the cyclone belt, whose season runs from Nov. to April, but is seldom affected by intense storms. Port Louis, Jan. 73°F (22.8°C), July 81°F (27.2°C). Annual rainfall 40" (1,000 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

The present constitution came into effect on 12 March 1968 and was amended on 12 March 1992. The head of state is the President, elected by a simple majority of members of the National Assembly. The role of President is largely a ceremonial one.

The 69-seat National Assembly consists of 62 elected members (three each for the 20 constituencies of Mauritius and two for Rodrigues) and seven additional seats in order to ensure a fair and adequate representation of each community within the Assembly. The government is headed by the Prime Minister and a Council of Ministers. Elections are held every five years on the basis of universal adult suffrage.

National Anthem

'Glory to thee, Motherland'; words by J. G. Prosper, tune by P. Gentile.

RECENT ELECTIONS

Parliamentary elections were held on 10 Dec. 2014. The Alliance of the People/Alliance Lepep (consisting of the Militant Socialist Movement, the Mauritian Social Democrat Party and the Muvman Liberater) won 51 seats with 49.8% of votes cast, followed by the Alliance of Unity and Modernity (consisting of the Mauritian Labour Party and the Mauritian Militant Movement) with 16 seats (38.5% of votes cast) and the Rodrigues People's Organisation with two seats (1.1%). Turnout was 74.1%.

CURRENT LEADERS

Sir Anerood Jugnauth

Position

Prime Minister

Introduction

One of the dominant figures of post-independence Mauritius, Sir Anerood Jugnauth has served as both president and prime minister. He was first elected premier in 1982 and his most recent tenure began in Dec. 2014.

Early Life

Sir Anerood Jugnauth was born in Vacoas-Phoenix on 29 March 1930. He attended Regent College in Quatre Bornes before working as a teacher and a government clerk. He went on to study law in the UK, being called to the Bar in 1954.

In 1963 he became a member of the National Assembly (then the Legislative Assembly) for the first time as a member of the Independent Forward Bloc. He joined the Mauritian Militant Movement (MMM) in 1971 and soon rose to become head, serving as leader of the opposition from 1976–82 until assuming the premiership for the first time.

Shortly afterwards he left the MMM to found the Militant Socialist Movement (MSM). Jugnauth led his new party to victory at elections in 1983 and remained as prime minister for the next 12 years, winning two further mandates in that time. Under his tenure, the economy thrived amid a liberalization programme and a reduction in dependency on the sugarcane industry.

Jugnauth and the MSM suffered a resounding defeat at elections in 1995 but he returned as prime minister five years later on the back of a power-sharing deal with Paul Bérenger, leader of the MMM. During this tenure he encouraged the growth of technology industries in Mauritius and adopted a punitive policy towards drug offending. He resigned in 2003 to become president—a largely ceremonial role—as agreed in the deal with the MMM. He was re-elected president by parliament in 2008 and held the office until 2012.

In Dec. 2014 Jugnauth received his sixth mandate as prime minister, succeeding his political rival Navin Ramgoolam.

Career in Office

Jugnauth was sworn in on 17 Dec. 2014, vowing to bolster the economy. Early in his latest term he met with officials from the Seychelles to discuss a strengthening of ties in the interests of mutual maritime security. In March 2015 he hosted a visit by India's Prime Minister Narendra Modi, during which India offered Mauritius a US$500m.-credit line for infrastructure development while also highlighting fears that a bilateral tax treaty was being abused by some Indian citizens for tax evasion purposes.

DEFENCE

The Police Department is responsible for defence. Its strength was (2008) 8,000. In addition there is a special mobile paramilitary force of approximately 1,400, a Coast Guard of about 700 and a helicopter unit of about 100.

Defence expenditure totalled US$83m. in 2013 (US$63 per capita), representing 0.7% of GDP.

ECONOMY

Agriculture accounted for 4.3% of GDP in 2009, industry 29.1% and services 66.6%.

Overview

The economy remained resilient in the face of the global economic slowdown and was ranked eighth freest in the world in the 2013 Heritage Foundation index. At the beginning of the century the economy was badly hit by the loss of long-standing preferential trading agreements for its sugar and textiles industries. Nonetheless, sugarcane remains important, accounting for 90% of cultivable land and 15% of total exports. Meanwhile, the revised Cotonou Agreement signed with the EU in 2010 restored some of the sector's trading privileges.

The government has sought to diversify the economy, with two-thirds of GDP now generated by the services sector. The financial services sector alone has attracted over US$1bn. worth of investment and tourism is also important. The country benefits from advanced digital infrastructure and state-of-the-art telecommunications; over 32,000 companies are located on the island, taking advantage of government incentives and the geographical proximity to India.

Annual GDP growth averaged 4.4% between 2007 and 2011, among the highest rates in Africa. Fishing and fish processing are emerging industries that offer potential for future growth.

Currency

The unit of currency is the Mauritius rupee (MUR) of 100 cents. There are Bank of Mauritius notes, cupro-nickel coins, nickel-plated steel coins and copper-plated steel coins. Inflation was 3.5% in 2013 and 3.2% in 2014. In July 2005 foreign exchange reserves were US$1,365m. and gold reserves totalled 62,000 troy oz. Total money supply was Rs 22,646m. in June 2005.

Budget

Budgetary central government revenue in 2012 was Rs 75,047m. (Rs 70,432m. in 2011); expenditure was Rs 71,509m. (Rs 72,147m. in 2011). Principal sources of revenue, 2012: taxes on goods and services, Rs 47,511m.; taxes on income, profits and capital gains, Rs 14,634m.; grants, Rs 2,398m. Main items of expenditure in 2012 were: grants, Rs 25,228m.; compensation of employees, Rs 20,871m.; interest, Rs 10,129m. Since 2015 the fiscal year, which was previously the calendar year, has run from 1 July–30 June.

VAT is 15%.

Performance

Real GDP growth was 3.2% in both 2012 and 2013 and then 3.6% in 2014. Total GDP in 2014 was US$12.6bn. Thanks to tourism, financial services and the traditional industries of sugar and textiles, Mauritius is now one of Africa's richest and most developed countries.

Banking and Finance

The Bank of Mauritius (founded 1967) is the central bank. The Governor is Ramesh Basant Roi. In 2015 there were 23 banks and one development bank. Since 2005 there has been no distinction between onshore and offshore banks. Non-bank financial intermediaries are the Post Office Savings Bank, the State Investment Corporation Ltd, the Mauritius Leasing Company, the National Mutual Fund, the National Investment Trust and the National Pension Fund. KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

The first settlers of the New World arrived in Alaska from Asia about 15,000 years ago. From about 2000 BC the people of Ancient Mexico began to settle in villages and to cultivate maize and other crops. From about 1000 BC the chief tribes were the Olmec on the Gulf Coast, the Maya in the Yucatán peninsula and modern day Chiapas, the Zapotecs and Mixtecs in Oaxaca, the Tarascans in Michoacán and the Toltecs in central Mexico. One of the largest and most powerful cities in ancient Mexico was Teotihuacán, which in the 6th century AD was one of the six largest cities in the world. By the time the Spanish conquistadores arrived in 1519, the dominant people were the Mexica, more commonly known as the Aztecs, whose capital Tenochtitlán became Mexico City after the conquest.

Hernán Cortés landed on the Gulf Coast in 1519 and by 1521 his small band of Spaniards, assisted by an army of indigenous peoples, had destroyed the Aztec state. The land conquered by Cortés was named New Spain, and was ruled by the Spanish Crown for three centuries. The new colony was the personal property of the King, whose representative, the Viceroy, was charged with extracting the maximum income for the Crown. The mainstays of the colonial economy were silver and land. Rich silver mines were discovered and large estates (haciendas) were formed. Spain controlled trade with the colonies and discouraged manufacturing to maximize profits for the King. Acapulco became Spain's sole port for trade with Asia.

One early result of the Conquest was a collapse of the indigenous population caused by social dislocation and European diseases. In 1520 the native population was probably 20m. By 1540 it had fallen to 6.5m. and by 1650 the figure was just over 1m.

The beginning of the end of Spanish rule came on 16 Sept. 1810 when the parish priest of Dolores, Miguel Hidalgo y Costilla, called for independence (the 'grito de Dolores') and led a popular army against the Spaniards. Hidalgo's revolution failed as did that of the insurrectionary José María Morelos y Pavón. Independence from Spain was declared in the Plan of Iguala on 24 Feb. 1821 when Agustín de Iturbide proclaimed himself Emperor of Mexico. He ruled for two years.

There followed half a century of coups and counter coups. Spain invaded Tampico in 1829. Texas declared secession in 1836. The Mexican dictator Antonio de Santa Anna marched north but was defeated by the Texans. France invaded Veracruz in 1838 (the 'Pastry War'). In 1846 the USA declared war on Mexico. The war was ended in 1848 by the Treaty of Guadalupe which forced Mexico to cede a huge swathe of its territory to the USA. Liberals and conservatives fought the War of the Reform from 1858–61. The liberal government of Benito Juárez abolished the fueros (clerical and military privileges) and hereditary titles, confiscated the church's lands and attempted far-reaching land reform. This was followed by the French Intervention (1862–67), which installed the Habsburg Archduke Maximilian of Austria as Emperor of Mexico. The French were resisted stubbornly by President Juárez but the republicans were forced into the resource-poor and sparsely populated north. Napoleon III withdrew his troops from Mexico in 1867 despite a pledge to support Maximilian, allowing the republicans to take back the country virtually unopposed. Asserting Mexico's independence, Juárez ordered the execution of Maximilian.

From 1876–1910, a period known as the porfiriato, Mexico was ruled (with one interlude from 1880–84) by Gen. Porfirio Díaz. Díaz imposed a degree of stability and order. He encouraged foreign investment, which funded a rapid expansion of the railways and an export-led economic boom. The economy faltered in the first decade of the 20th century. Díaz was deposed in 1911 by Francisco Madero, whose Plan of San Luís Potosí launched the Mexican Revolution.

Madero was deposed and assassinated in 1913. There followed a civil war fought by the armies of Venustiano Carranza, Pancho Villa and Emiliano Zapata. A new constitution was written in 1917. Zapata was ambushed and killed in 1919 and Carranza was assassinated in 1920. Villa retired the same year but was assassinated in 1923.

In the 1920s Mexico was ruled by Alvaro Obregón and Plutarco Elías Calles. Obregón's assassination in 1928 led to the formation of the National Revolutionary Party (PRN), later the Institutional Revolutionary Party (PRI), which ruled Mexico for the rest of the century. Lázaro Cárdenas was president from 1934–40. He nationalized the oil industry and accelerated the distribution of land to the peasantry. The election of Miguel Alemán in 1946 was opposed unsuccessfully by the last military rebellion in Mexico's history. Alemán's pro-business administration began a long period of relative economic prosperity, the 'Mexican Miracle'.

However, by the late 1960s the Mexican economic and political system was under increasing strain. An uprising led by students ended in a bloody massacre in the Tlatelolco district of Mexico City in 1968. Successive PRI presidents made gestures towards democratization and effective opposition gradually developed. Financial and economic problems in the 1980s increased the pressure on the political system. The crisis came in 1988 when the PRI candidate, Carlos Salinas de Gortari, defeated Cuauhtémoc Cárdenas, son of the former president and candidate of the Democratic Revolutionary Party (PRD), in a rigged election. Salinas took Mexico into the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA) with the USA and Canada in 1992. Salinas' choice as the PRI's presidential candidate, Luís Donaldo Colosio, was assassinated in Tijuana on 23 March 1994. He was replaced by Ernesto Zedillo. In the same year the Zapatista National Liberation Army (EZLN) led an uprising in Chiapas, which is ongoing.

In 2000 Vicente Fox Quesada of the National Action Party (PAN) was elected to the presidency. Fox attempted to address two key issues: Mexico's economic and financial weakness and illegal migration to the USA. However, the PRI majority in Congress blocked Fox's fiscal reforms and the Bush administration was unwilling to support Fox's proposal to liberalize immigration. In the 2006 presidential elections the conservative Felipe Calderón and the socialist Andrés Manuel López Obrador both claimed victory. Calderón was finally declared the winner more than two months after the election, but in Nov. López Obrador proclaimed himself the 'legitimate' president. Nevertheless, Calderón was sworn in as scheduled in Dec. 2006. The PRI returned to power when Enrique Peña Nieto was elected president in 2012.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Mexico is bounded in the north by the USA, west and south by the Pacific Ocean, southeast by Guatemala, Belize and the Caribbean Sea, and northeast by the Gulf of Mexico. It comprises 1,964,375 sq. km (758,464 sq. miles), including uninhabited islands (5,127 sq. km) offshore.

Population at recent censuses: 1970, 48,225,238; 1980, 66,846,833; 1990, 81,249,645; 2000, 97,483,412; 2005, 103,263,388; 2010, 112,336,538 (57,481,307 females). Population density (2010), 57.2 per sq. km. Dec. 2012 population estimate, 115,639,915. 78.1% of the population were urban in 2011.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 127.02m.

Much of the population still lives in poverty, with the gap between the modern north and the backward south constantly growing.

CLIMATE

Latitude and relief produce a variety of climates. Arid and semi-arid conditions are found in the north, with extreme temperatures, whereas in the south there is a humid tropical climate, with temperatures varying with altitude. Conditions on the shores of the Gulf of Mexico are very warm and humid. In general, the rainy season lasts from May to Nov. Mexico City, Jan. 55°F (12.9°C), July 61°F (16.2°C). Annual rainfall 31" (787.6 mm). Guadalajara, Jan. 63°F (17.0°C), July 72°F (22.1°C). Annual rainfall 39" (987.6 mm). La Paz, Jan. 62°F (16.8°C), July 86°F (29.9°C). Annual rainfall 7" (178.3 mm). Annual rainfall 23" (585.4 mm). Puebla de Zaragoza, Jan. 52°F (11.4°C), July 62°F (16.9°C). Annual rainfall 36" (900.8 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

A new constitution was promulgated on 5 Feb. 1917 and has occasionally been amended. Mexico is a representative, democratic and federal republic, comprising 31 states and a federal district, each state being free and sovereign in all internal affairs, but united in a federation established according to the principles of the Fundamental Law. The head of state and supreme executive authority is the President, directly elected for a non-renewable six-year term. The constitution was amended in April 2001, granting autonomy to 10m. indigenous peoples. The amendment was opposed both by the National Congress of Indigenous Peoples and Zapatista rebels who claimed it would leave many indigenous people worse off.

There is complete separation of legislative, executive and judicial powers (Art. 49). Legislative power is vested in a General Congress of two chambers, a Chamber of Deputies and a Senate. The Chamber of Deputies consists of 500 members directly elected for three years, 300 of them from single-member constituencies and 200 chosen under a system of proportional representation. In 1990 Congress voted a new Electoral Code. This established a body to organize elections (IFE), an electoral court (TFE) to resolve disputes, new electoral rolls and introduce a voter's registration card. Priests were enfranchised in 1991.

The Senate comprises 128 members. In each of the 31 states and the Federal District the party coming first wins two seats and the party coming second wins one seat, making 96 in total. An additional 32 seats are filled through proportional representation from national party lists. Members of both chambers are not immediately re-eligible for election. Congress sits from 1 Sept. to 31 Dec. each year; during the recess there is a permanent committee of 15 deputies and 14 senators appointed by the respective chambers.

National Anthem

'Mexicanos, al grito de guerra' ('Mexicans, at the war-cry'); words by F. González Bocanegra, tune by Jaime Nunó.

CURRENT LEADERS

Enrique Peña Nieto

Position
President

Introduction

Enrique Peña Nieto of the Institutional Revolutionary Party (PRI) became president in Dec. 2012. His election brought to an end the 12-year presidency of the National Action Party (PAN).

Early Life

Peña Nieto was born in July 1966 in the city of Atlacomulco to an electrical engineer father and a teacher mother. He graduated in law from the Universidad Panamericana, Mexico City, and received a master's degree in business from the Monterrey Institute of Technology.

Peña Nieto began his political career as secretary of the Citizen Movement of Zone 1, a group affiliated to the PRI-aligned National Confederation of Popular Organisations. He worked in several PRI-linked organizations, serving as a delegate to the National Front for Organisations and Citizens and, from 1993–98, as private secretary to the state of México's secretary for economic development. In 1999 Peña Nieto was financial co-ordinator for the successful state gubernatorial campaign of Arturo Montiel Rojas. In 2001 Rojas appointed Peña Nieto under-secretary of the interior and he went on to hold senior roles overseeing family, health and social security programmes.

In 2003 he was elected deputy of the XIII Local District in Atlacomulco. Two years later he successfully campaigned as the PRI candidate for the state of México governorship, overseeing a reduction in the state's debt during his eight years in office. He ran for national president in 2012, winning with 39% of the vote.

Career in Office

Peña Nieto inherited a stagnant economy and high unemployment. His campaign pledges included the privatization of Mexico's state-owned oil company, PEMEX, a clamp-down on corruption and a reduction in the murder rate in Mexico City by 50% by the end of his six-year term. His early efforts to confront the country's illicit drugs trade and its associated violence were rewarded in July 2013 with the arrest of a high-profile drug cartel leader wanted in both Mexico and the USA. In Aug. 2014 Congress approved major reforms to the energy sector to end the long-standing state oil monopoly and open up the energy sector to additional foreign investment.

However, the economy has continued to underperform. Also, Mexico's ongoing crime and security concerns were further exacerbated in Sept. 2014 by the disappearance and suspected murder of 43 trainee teachers in the state of Guerrero, with apparent local police involvement. This sparked public outrage and increasing disenchantment with Peña Nieto's presidency ahead of congressional elections in June 2015. Despite losing ground in the polling, the PRI and its partners retained a majority in the 500-seat Chamber of Deputies. However, the government's credibility was further dented the following month as another notorious drug trade figure escaped from a high-security prison for the second time since 2001 (although he was subsequently recaptured in Jan. 2016).

DEFENCE

Conscription is for 12 months. In 2013 defence expenditure totalled US$5,775m. (US$50 per capita), representing 0.5% of GDP.

Army

Enlistment into the regular army is voluntary, but there is also one year of conscription (four hours per week) by lottery. Strength of the regular army (2011) 212,000. Reserve forces (National Military Service conscripts) numbered 87,344 in 2011. In addition there is a rural defence militia of 18,000.

Navy

The Navy is primarily equipped and organized for offshore and coastal patrol duties. It includes seven frigates. Naval Aviation, 1,250 strong, operated seven combat-capable aircraft in 2011.

Naval personnel in 2011 totalled 56,500, including Naval Aviation. In addition there were 19,500 marines.

Air Force

The Air Force had (2011) a strength of 11,750 with 76 combat-capable aircraft, including PC-7s and F-5Es.

ECONOMY

Agriculture accounted for 3.3% of GDP in 2013, industry 34.5% and services 62.2%.

Overview

Mexico, an upper-middle income country with average gross per capita income in 2014 of US$9,870, has the second largest economy in Latin America, after Brazil. The economy benefits from its proximity to the USA, providing cheap labour for US firms. Mexico's share of US manufacturing imports increased from 10% to 13% between 2010 and 2014, aided by declining unit labour costs. However, a reliance on the US market (which absorbs 80% of all Mexican exports) leaves the country susceptible to any downturn in US economic fortunes.

Mexico is the world's seventh largest producer of oil and has a heavy dependence on that sector, which provides a third of state revenues. In Dec. 2013 the government announced plans to attract private investment into the industry, ending the state's 75-year monopoly in oil and gas production and distribution.

The economy expanded by an average of 4.4% between 2010 and 2012 but was only 1.6% in 2013 and 2.1% in 2014. This decline in growth was in part the result of weaknesses in industrial production in the USA along with a reduction in oil production and financial market volatility. Future significant expansion will require growth in private consumption and investment.

Public sector revenue in 2015 grew owing to a sharp increase in income taxes, reflecting the deferred impact of tax reforms enacted at the end of 2013. Public debt, meanwhile, was estimated at 49% of GDP in 2015. The current account deficit (measuring 4% of GDP in 2015) is almost entirely covered by foreign direct investment inflows. Mexico also benefits from a flexible credit line with the IMF.

An ambitious structural reform agenda has been in place since 2012, bolstering expectations of a positive medium-term outlook. In particular, energy sector reforms have opened the hydrocarbons and electricity industries to private capital, while the telecommunications sector has been subjected to greater competition.

Tackling poverty remains a significant challenge. While less than 3% of Mexico's population lives below the poverty threshold as defined by the World Bank, as of 2013 the government estimated that 33% lived in 'moderate poverty' and 9% in extreme poverty. Furthermore, there is a high degree of income inequality—the World Bank estimates that the richest 10% of the population earns over 40% of national income. According to the OECD, Mexico is second only to Chile in Latin America in terms of economic disparity between the extremely poor and extremely rich. Corruption, crime and the weak rule of law hamper growth prospects, with drug-related violence a particular area of concern.

Currency

The unit of currency is the Mexican peso (MXN) of 100 centavos. A new peso was introduced on 1 Jan. 1993: 1 new peso = 1,000 old pesos. The peso was devalued by 13.94% in Dec. 1994. Foreign exchange reserves were US$82,023m. and gold reserves 288,000 troy oz in Sept. 2009. Inflation rates (based on OECD statistics):

2005	2006	2007	2008	2009	2010	2011	2012	2013	2014
4.0%	3.6%	4.0%	5.1%	5.3%	4.2%	3.4%	4.1%	3.8%	4.0%

Total money supply in Aug. 2009 was 1,391.5bn. new pesos.

Budget

In 2008 revenues were 2,857.1bn. new pesos and expenditures 2,865.3bn. new pesos.

VAT is 16% (11% in the frontier region).

Performance

Real GDP growth rates (based on OECD statistics):

2005	2006	2007	2008	2009	2010	2011	2012	2013	2014
3.2%	5.0%	3.1%	1.2%	-4.5%	5.1%	4.0%	3.8%	1.6%	2.1%

In 2014 total GDP was US$1,294.7bn.

Banking and Finance

The Bank of Mexico, established 1 Sept. 1925, is the central bank of issue (Governor, Agustín Carstens). It gained autonomy over monetary policy in 1993. Exchange rate policy is determined jointly by the bank and the Finance Ministry. Banks were nationalized in 1982, but in May 1990 the government approved their reprivatization. The state continues to have a majority holding in foreign trade and rural development banks. In 1999 Congress approved the removal of regulations limiting foreign holdings to 49%.

In 2007 there were 38 commercial banks (including seven development banks) and 81 representative offices of foreign banks. Mexico's largest banks are BBVA Bancomer with assets of US$85.0bn. in June 2009, followed by Banamex with assets of US$74.9bn. and Santander with assets of US$48.7bn. Most of Mexico's leading banks are now foreign-owned.

Foreign debt was US$200,081m. in 2010, representing 19.5% of GNI.

Mexico received US$22.8bn. worth of foreign direct investment in 2014, down from a record US$44.6bn. in 2013.

There is a stock exchange in Mexico City.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Mexico's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2011 were the equivalent of 3.9 tonnes per capita.

Electricity

Installed capacity, 2011, 61.6m. kW. Output in 2011 was 295.84bn. kWh and consumption per capita 2,474 kWh. In 2010 there were two nuclear reactors in operation.

Oil and Gas

Oil production in 2013, 141.8m. tonnes. Mexico had reserves in 2012 amounting to 11.4bn. bbls. Revenues from oil exports provide about a third of all government revenues. Natural gas production was 58.5bn. cu. metres in 2012 with 400bn. cu. metres in proven reserves.

Minerals

Output (in 1,000 tonnes): iron ore (2006), 14,568; lignite (2007), 10,456; salt (2005), 9,508; gypsum and anhydrite (2006), 6,076; silica (2005), 2,121; coal (2007), 2,058; sulphur (2005), 1,590; fluorite (2005), 876; aluminium (2005), 574; zinc (2005), 476; copper (2005), 429; feldspar (2005), 373; barite (2005), 269; lead (2005), 134; manganese (2005), 133; silver (2005), 2.9; gold (2005), 30,356 kg. Mexico is the biggest producer of silver in the world.

Agriculture

In 2007 Mexico had an estimated 24.5m. ha. of arable land and around 2.4m. ha. of permanent cropland. There were 5.4m. ha. of irrigated land in 2006. There were 238,830 tractors and some 22,500 harvester-threshers in 2007. In 2007 agriculture, fishing and forestry contributed 3.6% of GDP. In 1992 the Mexican constitution was amended to permit the voluntary privatization of ejidos, communal land in which each member farms an independent plot, to combat the low productivity resulting from the fragmentation of farming units, some 58% of which were less than 5 ha. in 1991.

Sown areas, 2003 (in 1,000 ha.) included: maize, 7,781; beans, 1,948; sorghum, 1,879; coffee beans, 744; wheat, 627; sugarcane, 639; barley, 384; chick-peas, 150; chillies and green peppers, 141; safflower seeds, 85; rice, 50. Production in 2003 (in 1,000 tonnes): sugarcane, 45,126; maize, 19,652; sorghum, 6,462; oranges, 3,970; wheat, 3,000; tomatoes, 2,148; bananas, 2,027; chillies and green peppers, 1,854; lemons and limes, 1,825; potatoes, 1,735; mangoes, 1,503; beans, 1,400; barley, 1,109; avocados, 1,040.

Livestock (2003): cattle, 30.80m.; sheep, 6.56m.; pigs, 18.10m.; goats, 9.50m.; horses, 6.26m.; mules, 3.28m.; asses, 3.26m.; chickens, 540m. Production, 2003 (in 1,000 tonnes): beef and veal, 1,496; pork and pork products, 1,043; horse, 79; goat meat, 42; lamb and mutton, 40; poultry meat, 2,204; cow's milk, 9,842; goat's milk, 148; eggs, 1,882; cheese, 130; honey, 56.

Forestry

Forests extended over 64.80m. ha. in 2010, representing 33% of the land area, containing pine, spruce, cedar, mahogany, logwood and rosewood. There are 14 forest reserves (nearly 0.8m. ha.) and 47 national park forests of 0.75m. ha. Timber production was 43.71m. cu. metres in 2011.

Fisheries

The total catch in 2010 was 1,523,889 tonnes, of which 1,407,479 tonnes came from sea fishing.

INDUSTRY

The leading companies by market capitalization in Mexico in March 2015 were: América Móvil, S.A.B. de C.V. (a mobile phone company), US$45.4bn.; Wal-Mart de México, S.A.B. de C.V. (general retailers, formerly Cifra), US$43.8bn.; and Femsa (a beverages company), US$32.5bn.

In 2013 the manufacturing industry provided 17.5% of GDP. Output (in 1,000 tonnes): cement (2008), 37,139; petrol (2007), 21,563; distillate fuel oil (2007), 18,011; residual fuel oil (2007), 17,252; crude steel (2009), 13,957; sugar (2002), 5,073; pig iron (2009), 3,925; wheat flour (2012), 3,224; cigarettes (2012), 36.2bn. units; soft drinks (2012), 19,502.0m. litres; beer (2007), 8,051.0m. litres. Car production has increased from 994,000 in 1999 to 1,810,000 in 2012.

Labour

The labour force in 2013 was 54,476,000 (41,785,000 in 2003). 64.9% of the population aged 15–64 was economically active in 2013. Of those in employment in 2013, 62.4% worked in services, 23.6% in industry and 13.4% in agriculture. In the same year 37.2% of the labour force was female. In 2011, 45.0% of the labour force had a secondary education as the highest level and 23.3% had a tertiary education. Unemployment rate, Dec. 2015, 4.5%. The daily minimum wage for general workers at Jan. 2014 ranged from 63.77 new pesos to 67.29 new pesos.

Mexico had 0.1m. people living in slavery according to the Walk Free Foundation's 2013 Global Slavery Index.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

In Sept. 1991 Mexico signed the free trade Treaty of Santiago with Chile, envisaging an annual 10% tariffs reduction from Jan. 1992. The North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA), between Canada, Mexico and the USA, was signed on 7 Oct. 1992 and came into effect on 1 Jan. 1994. A free trade agreement was signed with Costa Rica in March 1994. Some 8,300 products were free from tariffs, with others to follow over ten years. The Group of Three (G3) free trade pact with Colombia and Venezuela came into effect on 1 Jan. 1995. A free trade agreement was signed with the European Union in 1999.

Imports and Exports

Trade for calendar years in US$1m.:

	2003	2004	2005	2006	2007
Imports c.i.f.	170,546	196,809	221,819	256,086	281,927
Exports f.o.b.	164,907	187,980	214,207	249,961	271,821

Of imports in 2007, 49.6% came from the USA, 10.6% from China, 5.8% from Japan, 4.5% from South Korea and 3.8% from Germany. Of exports in 2007, 82.2% went to the USA, 2.4% to Canada, 1.5% to Germany, 1.4% to Spain and 1.1% to Colombia.

The in-bond (maquiladora) assembly plants generate the largest flow of foreign exchange. Although originally located along the US border when the programme was introduced in the 1960s, they are now to be found in almost every state. In 2009 there were over 5,200 'foreign to Mexico' manufacturing companies, employing more than 1.6m. people. Manufactured goods account for 90% of trade revenues.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

The total road length in 2007 was 360,075 km, of which 6,565 km were motorways, 40,631 km other main roads, 73,874 km secondary roads and 239,005 km other roads. In 2005 there were 14,074,669 passenger cars, 7,111,172 trucks and vans and 264,726 buses and coaches. There were 5,398 fatalities as a result of road accidents in 2007.

Rail

The National Railway, Ferrocarriles Nacionales de México, was split into four companies in 1995 as a preliminary to privatization. It ceased operations in 1999. The rail network comprises 26,717 km of 1,435 mm gauge. In 2010 railways carried 40.2m. passengers and 104.6m. tonnes of freight. There is a 202 km metro in Mexico City with 11 lines. There are light rail lines in Guadalajara (24 km) and Monterrey (32 km).

Civil Aviation

There is an international airport at Mexico City (Benito Juárez) and 55 other international and 29 national airports. Each of the larger states has a local airline which links it with main airports. The national carrier is Aeroméxico, which was privatized in 1988 and in 2014 carried 17,190,000 passengers (11,894,000 on domestic flights). Two former flag carriers, Aviaca and Mexicana, both ceased operations in 2010 (in April and Aug. respectively). In 2012 Mexico City handled 29,491,553 passengers (19,678,042 on domestic flights). Cancún was the second busiest airport for passengers in 2012, with 14,555,184 (9,855,771 on international flights). Guadalajara handled 7,448,214 passengers (4,966,411 on domestic flights).

Shipping

Mexico had 114 ports and terminals in 2007 (66 ocean navigation), of which the most important are Altamira, Progreso, Tampico, Tuxpan and Veracruz on the Gulf coast and Manzanillo on the Pacific coast. Mexico's busiest port is Manzanillo, which handled 22.11m. tonnes of cargo in 2008 (7.74m. tonnes loaded and 14.37m. tonnes discharged). A law to privatize port operations was passed in 1993.

In Jan. 2009 there were 81 ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 879,000 GT.

Telecommunications

Telmex (Teléfonos de México), a former state-run company privatized in 1991 and a wholly owned subsidiary of América Móvil, is the leading provider of fixed-line telephone services and broadband, with around 80% of the market. In 2011 there were 19,997,000 fixed telephone lines and 94,583,000 mobile phone subscribers (792.4 per 1,000 persons). The leading mobile phone operator is Telcel (part of América Móvil), which has about 70% of the market. In 2013 there were 13,539,000 fixed internet subscriptions and 16,865,000 wireless broadband subscriptions. In Dec. 2011 there were 31.0m. Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

Magistrates of the Supreme Court are appointed for six years by the President and confirmed by the Senate; they can be removed only on impeachment. The courts include the Supreme Court with 21 magistrates, 12 collegiate circuit courts with three judges each and nine unitary circuit courts with one judge each, and 68 district courts with one judge each.

The penal code of 1 Jan. 1930 abolished the death penalty, except for the armed forces. Mexico abolished the death penalty for all crimes in Dec. 2005—the last execution had been in 1961.

There were 24,374 murders in 2010 (a rate of 22 per 100,000 population), up from 8,867 in 2007, 14,006 in 2008 and 19,803 in 2009. The population in penal institutions in June 2013 was 246,226 (210 per 100,000 of national population). Following the collapse of the main Colombian drug cartels in the 1990s, Mexican cartels are estimated to control 70% of illicit foreign drugs entering the US market. In 2009, 9,616 people died in drug-related killings in Mexico.

Mexico was ranked 93rd of 102 countries for criminal justice and 82nd for civil justice in the 2015 World Justice Project Rule of Law Index, which provides data on how the rule of law is experienced by the general public across eight categories.

Education

Adult literacy was 93.4% in 2009 (male, 94.9%; female, 92.1%). Primary and secondary education is free and compulsory, and secular, although religious instruction is permitted in private schools.

In 2002–03 there were:

	Establishments	Teachers	Students (in 1,000)
Pre-school	74,758	163,282	3,636
Primary	99,463	557,278	14,857
Secondary	29,749	325,233	5,660
Baccalaureate	9,668	202,161	2,936
Vocational training	1,659	31,683	359
Medium/Professional	664	17,280	167
Higher education	2,539	192,593	1,932
Postgraduate education	1,283	21,685	138

In 2006 public expenditure on education came to 4.8% of GDP and 22.0% of total government spending (the highest share in the OECD).

Health

There were 3,039 hospitals in 2003, with a total provision of 73,446 beds. In the period 2000–10 there were 28.9 physicians for every 10,000 population, 39.8 nursing and midwifery personnel per 10,000 population and 14.2 dentistry personnel per 10,000. In 2008 Mexico spent 5.9% of its GDP on health. In 2006, 70% of Mexicans were considered overweight (one of the highest rates in the world) and 30% obese (having a body mass index over 30).

Welfare

As of 1 July 1997 all workers had to join the private insurance system, while the social insurance system was being phased out. At retirement, employees covered by the social insurance system before 1997 can choose to receive benefits from either the social insurance system or the private insurance system. The official retirement age is 65 years but to be eligible, a pensioner must have paid 1,250 weeks of contributions. The guaranteed minimum pension in 2011 was 2,095.99 new pesos.

Unemployment benefit exists under a labour law which requires employers to pay a dismissed employee a lump sum equal to three months' pay plus 20 days' pay for each year of service. Social security pays an unemployment benefit of between 75% and 95% of the old-age pension for unemployed persons aged 60 to 64.

RELIGION

In 2010 there were an estimated 96.3m. Roman Catholics according to the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life, giving Mexico the second largest Catholic population after Brazil. In Feb. 2016 there were five cardinals. The Church is separated from the State, and the constitution of 1917 provided strict regulation of this and all other religions. In 1991 Congress approved an amendment to the 1917 constitution permitting the recognition of churches by the state, the possession of property by churches and the enfranchisement of priests. Church buildings remain state property. There were also an estimated 9.4m. Protestants and 2.0m. other Christians in 2010. A further 5.3m. people in 2010 were religiously unaffiliated.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

Mexico has 33 UNESCO World Heritage sites. They are (with year entered on list): the Sian Ka'an nature reserve; the historic centre of Mexico City and the canal and island network of Xochimilco; Puebla's historic centre; the pre-Hispanic city of Teotihuacán, now a major archaeological site; the Historic Centre of Oaxaca and archaeological site of Monte Alban; and Palenque—lying in the foothills of the Altos de Chiapas, the Maya ruins of Palenque are surrounded by waterfalls, rainforest and fauna (all 1987); the historic town of Guanajuato and adjacent disused silver mines; and the pre-Hispanic city of Chichen-Itza, Yucatan (both 1988); the historic centre of Morelia, on the southern Pacific coast (1991); the pre-Hispanic city of El Tajin, Veracruz (1992); the El Vizcaino whale sanctuary; the historic centre of Zacatecas, once a major silver mining centre; and the Sierra de San Francisco rock paintings (all 1993); the 14 early 16th-century monasteries on Popocatepetl, to the southeast of Mexico City (1994); the Maya town of Uxmal, Yucatán, with its preserved pyramids and sculptures; and the historic monuments zone of Querétaro (both 1996); the Hospicio (Hospice) Cabañas, Guadalajara (1997); the historic monuments zone of Tlacotalpan; and the archaeological zone of Paquimé, Casas Grandes in Chihuahua (both 1998); the historic fortified town of Campeche; and Xochicalco's archaeological monuments zone, Morelos state (both 1999); the Ancient Maya City of Calakmul, Campeche (2002 and 2014); the Franciscan Missions in the Sierra Gorda of Querétaro (2003); Luis Barragán House and Studio in Mexico City (2004); the islands and protected areas of the Gulf of California (2005 and 2007); the Agave landscape and ancient industrial facilities of Tequila (2006); the Central University City Campus of the Universidad Nacional Autónoma de México (2007); the Monarch Butterfly Biosphere Reserve (2008); the fortified town of San Miguel and Sanctuary of Jesús Nazareno de Atotonilco (2008); Camino Real de Tierra Adentro, also known as the Silver Route, between Mexico City and the USA; the Prehistoric Caves of Yagul and Mitla in the Central Valley of Oaxaca (both 2010); El Pinacate and Gran Desierto de Altar Biosphere Reserve (2013), a 714,566 ha. site comprising various desert and volcanic landforms; and the Aqueduct of Padre Tembleque Hydraulic System (2015).

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Spain acquired sovereignty over the Caroline Islands in 1886 but sold the archipelago to Germany in 1899. Japan occupied the Islands at the beginning of the First World War and in 1921 they were mandated to Japan by the League of Nations. Captured by Allied Forces in the Second World War, the Islands became part of the UN Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands created on 18 July 1947 and administered by the USA. The Federated States of Micronesia came into being on 10 May 1979. American trusteeship was terminated on 3 Nov. 1986 by the UN Security Council and on the same day Micronesia entered into a 15-year Free Association with the USA. An amended 20-year Compact of Free Association was signed into law on 17 Dec. 2003, guaranteeing US$1.8bn. to Micronesia in grants for a government trust fund.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

The Federated States lie in the North Pacific Ocean between 137° and 163° E, comprising 607 islands with a total land area of 701 sq. km (271 sq. miles). The 2010 census population was 102,843; density, 147 per sq. km.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 104,000.

In 2011, 22.8% of the population lived in urban areas.

The areas and populations of the four major groups of island states (east to west) are as follows:

State	Area (sq. km)	Population (2010 census)	Headquarters
Kosrae	110	6,616	Tofol
Pohnpei	345	36,196	Kolonia
Chuuk	127	48,654	Weno
Yap	119	11,377	Colonia

Kosrae consists of a single island. Its main town is Lelu (2,160 inhabitants in 2010). Pohnpei comprises a single island (covering 334 sq. km) and eight scattered coral atolls. Kolonia (6,074 inhabitants in 2010) was the national capital until 1989. The new capital, Palikir (6,647 inhabitants in 2010), lies approximately 10 km southwest in the Palikir valley. Chuuk consists of 542 islets in a 7,190 sq. km reef-fringed lagoon (36,152 inhabitants in 2010); the state also includes coral atolls (12,502 inhabitants in 2010), the most important being the Mortlock Islands. The chief town is Weno (13,856 inhabitants in 2010). Yap comprises a main group of four islands (covering 100 sq. km with 7,371 inhabitants in 2010) and 15 outer islands (4,006 inhabitants), the main ones being Ulithi and Woleai. Colonia is its chief town (3,126 inhabitants in 2010).

English is used in schools and is the official language. Trukese, Pohnpeian, Yapese and Kosrean are also spoken.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2009 estimates: births, 2,800; deaths, 700. Rates, 2009 estimates (per 1,000 population): birth, 25; death, 6. Infant mortality rate (2010), 34 per 1,000 live births. 2013 life expectancy, 68.0 years for men and 69.9 years for women. Population growth rate, 2005–10, –0.5%; fertility rate, 2013, 3.3 births per woman.

CLIMATE

Tropical, with heavy year-round rainfall, especially in the eastern islands, and occasional typhoons (June–Dec.). Kolonia, Jan. 80°F (26.7°C), July 79°F (26.1°C). Annual rainfall 194" (4,859 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

Under the Constitution founded on 10 May 1979, there is an executive presidency and a 14-member National Congress, comprising ten members elected for two-year terms from single-member constituencies of similar electorates, and four members elected one from each State for a four-year term by proportional representation. The Federal President and Vice-President first run for the Congress before they are elected by members of Congress for a four-year term.

National Anthem

'Patriots of Micronesia'; words anonymous, tune adapted from J. Brahms' 'Academic Festival Overture'.

RECENT ELECTIONS

The last election for Congress was held on 3 March 2015. Only non-partisans were elected. Peter M. Christian was elected president by Congress on 11 May 2015.

CURRENT GOVERNMENT

President: Peter M. Christian; b. 1947 (took office 11 May 2015).

Vice-President: Yosiwo P. George.

In March 2016 the government comprised:

Secretary of Education: Kalwin Kephias. Finance and Administration: Sihna Lawrence. Foreign Affairs: Lorin Robert. Health and Social Affairs (acting): Arthy Nena. Justice: Joses R. Gallen. Resources and Development: Marion Henry. Transportation, Communications and Infrastructure: Lukner Weilbacher. Chief Public Defender: Lorrie Johnson-Asher.

CURRENT LEADERS

Peter Christian

Position
President

Introduction

Peter M. Christian was elected president of the Federated States of Micronesia (FSM) in May 2015 and is scheduled to serve a four-year term. He has spent over 35 years in public service.

Early Life

Christian was born on 16 Oct. 1947 in Pohnpei, the administrative centre of Micronesia. From 1968 he studied at the University of Hawaii in Manoa as a recipient of the East-West Center Scholarship.

In 1979 he became the youngest of the 14 elected non-partisan senators in the new National Congress. During his time in Congress he variously advised or chaired committees responsible for resources and development, transportation and communication, and ways and means. He also served as speaker of the Congress from 2003–07. From 2003–04 he was chief negotiator for the Amended Compact of Free Association with the USA and chaired the FSM Task Force from 2007–08. This latter group oversaw the creation of the FSM Petroleum Corporation (PetroCorp) to manage the nation's energy requirements and oversee the exit of the multinational Exxon Mobil Corporation from the country.

Having been re-elected as senator for Pohnpei in 2011, he subsequently announced his intention to run for president in 2015.

Career in Office

Christian came to office with Micronesia facing serious economic and environmental challenges. He signed up to the newly inaugurated SIDS Dock, an organization of small island developing nations—many of which are under threat from rising sea levels and increasingly frequent extreme weather events—backed by the United Nations to support efforts in climate change adaptation. He then attended the UN Paris Climate Change talks in Dec., urging UN Secretary-General Ban Ki-moon to declare a global emergency.

In foreign relations, he has pursued close ties with Japan (which formerly governed the country) and has also established diplomatic relations with Kazakhstan. He has secured funding for an assortment of national projects from China, the United Arab Emirates-Pacific Partnership Fund and the UN Environmental Programme.

ECONOMYOverview

Following independence in 1986, the country signed a Compact of Free Association with the USA, providing it with grants upon which it still relies heavily. From 1987 to 2003 these grants made up half of GDP, although a renegotiated Compact Agreement, signed in 2003 and worth US$3.5bn, steadily lowers aid payments until 2023. The agreement included the creation of a trust fund in a bid to make Micronesia self-reliant, although the global downturn from 2008 led to lower financial returns than anticipated.

The economy had experienced flat or negative GDP growth from 2001–08. Compact-related spending cuts reduced public sector employment, stimulating migration to the USA (where citizens can work without a visa), while higher fuel and food import costs put further pressure on state finances.

The economy returned to growth in 2008–09 and grew by an annual average of 1.5% from 2009–12, driven mainly by the construction, fisheries and public administration sectors. However, it then contracted in 2013 and 2014 as low demand for new construction impacted on services and industry.

Despite a small population and aid packages from the USA and Japan, Micronesia's unemployment rate is high and the gap between rich and poor is pronounced. The private sector's share of the economy has remained unchanged at around 25% since the early 1990s and contributes little to GDP growth. This, along with declining Compact grants, poses challenges to long-term growth prospects as Micronesia attempts to lessen its dependence on foreign aid, stem migration and increase revenues from tourism.

Currency

US currency is used. Foreign exchange reserves were US$50m. and total money supply was US$23m. in June 2005. Inflation was 2.1% in 2013 and 0.9% in 2014.

Budget

Under the terms of the Amended Compact, which entered force in 2004 as a follow-up to the Compact of Free Association, the USA provides approximately US$130m. a year in aid. Consolidated general government revenue (2009–10), US$202.5m.; expenditure, US$199.1m. The financial year runs from 1 Oct.–30 Sept.

Performance

In 2014 total GDP was US$318m.; real GDP growth stood at zero in 2012, but the economy then shrank by 3.9% in 2013 and 1.6% in 2014.

Banking and Finance

There are three commercial banks: Bank of Guam, Bank of Hawaii and Bank of the Federated States of Micronesia. There is also a Federated States of Micronesia Development Bank and a regulatory Banking Board.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCESElectricity

Electricity production in 2011 was 66m. kWh.

Minerals

The islands have few mineral deposits except for high-grade phosphates.

Agriculture

Agriculture consists mainly of subsistence farming: coconuts, breadfruit, bananas, sweet potatoes and cassava. A small amount of crops are produced for export, including copra, tropical fruits, peppers and taro. Production (2008 estimates, in 1,000 tonnes): coconuts, 41; cassava, 12; sweet potatoes, 3; bananas, 2. Livestock (2008 estimates): pigs, 33,000; cattle, 14,000; goats, 4,000. In 2007 there were approximately 2,500 ha. of arable land and 18,000 ha. of permanent crops.

Forestry

The total forest area was 64,000 ha. in 2010 (92% of the land area)

Fisheries

In 2009 the catch amounted to 27,706 tonnes, almost entirely from marine waters. Fishing licence fees are a primary revenue source, making up around 7% of GDP.

INDUSTRY

The chief industries are construction, fish processing, tourism and handicrafts (items from shell, wood and pearl).

Labour

In 2007 just over half the labour force were government employees. In 2007, 41.7% of employees worked in public administration, 21.1% in wholesale and retail trade and repairs and 7.0% in transport, storage and communications. Agriculture, hunting, forestry and fishing accounted for 1.7% of employees. The unemployment rate was 16.2% in 2010.

INTERNATIONAL TRADEImports and Exports

Total imports (c.i.f.) in 2007, US$142.7m.; exports (f.o.b.), US$16.2m. Main import suppliers, 2007: US mainland, 41.2%; Guam, 14.4%; Singapore, 8.7%. Main export markets, 2007: Guam, 22.5%; US mainland, 17.2%; Northern Mariana Islands, 4.3%. The main imports are mineral products, foodstuffs and beverages, machinery, mechanical and electrical appliances, animals and animal products, and vegetable products. Main exports: marine products, kava, handicrafts and souvenirs, citrus fruits and garments.

COMMUNICATIONSRoads

In 2004 there were 240 km of roads (42 km paved).

Civil Aviation

There are international airports on Pohnpei, Chuuk, Yap and Kosrae. There were 12 operational airports and airfields in total in 2012. Services are provided by United Airlines. In 2013 there were international flights to Guam, Honolulu, Manila, the Marshall Islands and Palau in addition to domestic services.

Shipping

The main ports are Kolonia (Pohnpei), Colonia (Yap), Lepukos (Chuuk), Okat and Lelu (Kosrae). In Jan. 2009 there were 11 ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 9,000 GT.

Telecommunications

There were an estimated 38,000 mobile phone subscriptions in 2009 (343.2 per 1,000 inhabitants) and 8,700 fixed telephone lines; in the same year there were an estimated 15,350 internet users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

There is a Supreme Court headed by the Chief Justice with two other judges, and a State Court in each of the four states with 13 judges in total.

Education

In 2007 there were 18,512 pupils in primary schools with 1,113 teaching staff; and 14,742 pupils in secondary schools. The College of Micronesia in Pohnpei, initially founded as the Micronesian Teacher Education Center in 1963, is the only institute of higher education and now has campuses on all four major island groups, including the Fisheries and Maritime Institute on the Yap Islands.

In 2001–02 total expenditure on education came to 6.7% of GNP.

Health

In 2006 there were 33 hospital beds per 10,000 population. There were 72 physicians, 13 dentists and 305 nursing staff in 2007.

RELIGION

The population is predominantly Christian. Yap is mainly Roman Catholic; Protestantism is prevalent elsewhere.

CULTURE

Tourism

In 2012 there were 38,263 foreign visitors, up from 35,378 in 2011 although down from 44,738 in 2010.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

In antiquity the territories that make up Moldova were inhabited by the Dacians. In 1359 the region was subsumed into the Principality of Moldavia, founded by Dragoș of Bedeu. From the 16th to 19th centuries Russia and the Ottoman Empire wrestled for influence. In 1812 the Treaty of Bucharest gave Russia control of eastern Moldavia, or Bessarabia (the area between the River Prut and the Dniester, which corresponds to much of present-day Moldova). The Ottomans ruled western Moldavia. In 1918 Romania absorbed Bessarabia, while the Soviet Union controlled the territory east of the Dniester from 1924. Bessarabia reverted from Romanian rule to become part of the Moldavian Socialist Republic within the USSR in 1940.

In Dec. 1991 Moldova became a member of the Commonwealth of Independent States, a decision ratified by parliament in April 1994. Fighting took place in 1992 between government forces and separatists in the (largely Russian and Ukrainian) area east of the River Nistru (Transnistria). An agreement signed by the presidents of Moldova and Russia on 21 July 1992 brought to an end the armed conflict and established a 'security zone' controlled by peacekeeping forces from Russia, Moldova and Transnistria. On 21 Oct. 1994 a Moldo-Russian agreement obliged Russian troops to withdraw from the territory of Moldova over three years but the agreement was not ratified by the Russian Duma. On 8 May 1997 an agreement between Transnistria and the Moldovan government to end the separatist conflict stipulated that Transnistria would remain part of Moldova as it was territorially constituted in Jan. 1990. In 1997 some 7,000 Russian troops were stationed in Transnistria. In the autumn of 1999 Ion Sturza's centre-right coalition collapsed, along with privatization plans for the wine and tobacco industries. In April 2001 a Communist, Vladimir Voronin, was elected president. In Aug. 2009 the Communist government fell to a coalition of four opposition parties after earlier disputed elections and a failure to elect a new president.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Moldova is bounded in the east and south by Ukraine and on the west by Romania. The area is 33,848 sq. km (13,067 sq. miles). At the last census, in 2004, the population was 3,938,679 (52.2% female). Population estimate, Jan. 2012: 4,077,000; density, 120 per sq. km.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 4.07m.

In 2011, 47.7% of the population lived in urban areas. Ethnicity (2004): Moldovans accounted for 69.6%, Ukrainians 11.3%, Russians 9.3%, Gagauz 3.9%, Bulgarians 2.0%, Roma (Gypsy) 1.9% and others 2.0%.

Apart from Chișinău, the capital (population estimate of 667,600 in 2012), major towns are Tiraspol (147,800 in 2012), Bălți (144,300 in 2012) and Bender (Tighina) (93,300 in 2012). The official Moldovan language (i.e. Romanian) was written in Cyrillic prior to the restoration of the Roman alphabet in 1989. It is spoken by 62% of the population; the use of other languages (Russian, Gagauz) is safeguarded by the Constitution.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2007: births, 37,973; deaths, 43,050. Rates, 2007 (per 1,000 population): births, 10.6; deaths, 12.0. In 2006 the most popular age at first marriage was 20–24 for both males and females. Life expectancy at birth in 2007 was 65.0 years for males and 72.6 years for females. Annual population growth rate, 2000–05, –0.2%. Infant mortality, 2010, 16 per 1,000 live births; fertility rate, 2008, 1.3 births per woman (one of the lowest rates in the world). In the period 2000–06, 48.5% of the population were classified as living below the national poverty line.

CLIMATE

The climate is temperate, with warm summers, crisp, sunny autumns and cold winters with snow. Chișinău, Jan. –7°C, July 20°C. Annual rainfall 677 mm.

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

A declaration of republican sovereignty was adopted in June 1990 and in Aug. 1991 the republic declared itself independent. A new constitution came into effect on 27 Aug. 1994, which defines Moldova as an 'independent, democratic and unitary state'. At a referendum on 6 March 1994 turnout was 75.1%; 95.4% of votes cast favoured 'an independent Moldova within its 1990 borders'. The referendum (and the Feb. parliamentary elections) were not held by the authorities in Transnistria. In a further referendum on 4 June 1999, on whether to switch from a parliamentary system to a presidential one, turnout was 58% with the majority of the votes cast being in favour of the change.

Parliament (Parlamentul) has 101 seats and is elected for four-year terms. There is a 4% threshold for election; votes falling below this are redistributed to successful parties. The President is now elected for four-year terms by parliament, after the constitution had been amended to abolish direct presidential elections. A referendum in 2010 on a proposal to revert to direct popular elections for the presidency failed to garner sufficient turnout to be considered valid.

The 1994 constitution makes provision for the autonomy of Transnistria and the Gagauz (Gagauz Yeri) region. Work began in July 2003 on the drafting of a new constitution to resolve the conflict between Moldova and Transnistria. The proposal, known as the ‘Kozak Plan’, was drafted by Russia, and involved the creation of an asymmetric federal Moldovan state, with Moldova holding a majority and Transnistria being a minority part of the federation. The proposal also stipulated the presence of Russian troops in Transnistria for a transitional period but not later than 2020. It was, however, opposed by the European Union and the USA and subsequently rejected by Vladimir Voronin, the then Moldovan president.

Transnistria. In the predominantly Russian-speaking areas of Transnistria a self-styled ‘Dniester Republic’ was established in Sept. 1991, and approved by a local referendum in Dec. 1991. A Russo-Moldovan agreement of 21 July 1992 provided for a special statute for Transnistria and a guarantee of self-determination should Moldova unite with Romania. The population at the 2004 census was 555,347. Romanian here is still written in the Cyrillic alphabet. At a referendum on 24 Dec. 1995, 81% of votes cast were in favour of adopting a new constitution proclaiming independence.

On 17 June 1996 the Moldovan government granted Transnistria a special status as ‘a state-territorial formation in the form of a republic within Moldova’s internationally recognized border’.

At elections to the Supreme Council held on 12 Dec. 2010, which were not internationally recognized as legitimate, Renewal won 25 of 43 seats, Republic Party 16, Breakthrough 1 and Pridnestrovie Communist Party also 1. In a referendum held on 17 Sept. 2006, 97.2% of votes cast were in favour of independence and possible future union with Russia, although no international organization or foreign country recognized the referendum. Elections for president were held on 11 Dec. 2011. Turnout was 58.9%. Yevgeny Shevchuk won 38.6% of the vote, Anatoly Kaminsky 26.3% and incumbent Igor Smirnov 24.7%. In the run-off held on 25 Dec. 2011, Shevchuk won 73.9% and Kaminsky 19.7%. Turnout was 52.5%.

Following the Crimean crisis in early 2014 the president of the Transnistrian parliament, Mikhail Burla, requested that the Russian government pass a law that would allow the region’s accession to the Russian Federation.

President: Yevgeny Shevchuk; b. 1968.

Gagauz Yeri. This was created an autonomous territorial unit by Moldovan legislation of 13 Jan. 1995. In 2004 the census population was 155,646. There is a 35-member Popular Assembly directly elected for four-year terms and headed by a Governor, who is a member of the Moldovan cabinet. At the elections of 9 and 23 Sept. 2012 independents took 25 seats, the Party of Communists of the Republic of Moldova 7, the Liberal Democrat Party of Moldova 2 and the Party of Socialists of the Republic of Moldova 1.

Governor: Irina Vlah; b. 1974.

National Anthem

The Romanian anthem was replaced in 1994 by a traditional tune, ‘Lîmbă noastră’ (‘Our Tongue’); words by Alexei Mateevici, tune by Alexandru Cristi.

RECENT ELECTIONS

On 16 Dec. 2011 the only presidential candidate, Marian Lupu failed to obtain the requisite 61 votes from parliament to be elected after the communists boycotted the vote. On 12 Jan. 2012 the Constitutional Court ruled the elections invalid owing to violations of secret voting procedures. Nicolae Timofti was then elected president on 16 March 2012, with 62 votes in the 101-seat parliament, bringing an end to nearly three years of political deadlock.

Parliamentary elections were held on 30 Nov. 2014. The Party of Socialists of the Republic of Moldova (which was contesting its first-ever election) won 25 seats with 20.5% of the vote, the Liberal Democratic Party of Moldova 23 with 20.2%, the Party of Communists 21 with 17.5%, the Democratic Party of Moldova 19 with 15.8% and the Liberal Party 13 with 9.7%. Turnout was 55.8%.

CURRENT GOVERNMENT

In March 2016 the government comprised:

President: Nicolae Timofti; b. 1948 (ind.; since 23 March 2012).

Prime Minister: Pavel Filip; b. 1966 (Democratic Party of Moldova; since 20 Jan. 2016).

Deputy Prime Ministers: Gheorghe Brega; Gheorghe Balan; Octavian Calmîc (also Minister of Economics); Andrei Galbur (also Minister of Foreign Affairs and European Integration).

CURRENT LEADERS

Nicolae Timofti

Position

President

Introduction

Nicolae Timofti was sworn into office on 23 March 2012 after the Constitutional Court confirmed the results of the previous week’s parliamentary poll. He secured his appointment with 62 votes in the 101-seat parliament—one vote more than the minimum required—ending nearly three years of political deadlock.

Early Life

Nicolae Timofti was born on 22 Dec. 1948 in Ciutuleşti, north-eastern Moldova. Graduating in law from Moldova State University, Chişinău, in 1972, he completed two years national service in the Soviet Army. Having then pursued a legal career, in 2003 he was appointed to the Chişinău court of appeal and two years later was posted to the supreme court of justice. In 2011 he became president of the supreme council of magistrates.

In 1996 he joined the court of appeal and later became its president. In 2003 he was appointed to the Chişinău court of appeal and was made a member of the supreme council of magistrates. Two years later he was posted to the supreme court of justice and in 2011 became president of the supreme council of magistrates.

Timofti was nominated for the presidency in early 2012 by the pro-European ruling Alliance for European Integration coalition. On 16 March 2012 he was elected into office by parliament, though the vote was boycotted by the opposition Communist Party. He was the first permanently-appointed president since the end of Vladimir Voronin’s tenure in 2009.

Career in Office

Timofti, considered by many as a neutral figure in Moldovan politics, pledged to fight corruption and support democratic and free-market reforms. Nonetheless, some critics accuse him of failing to overhaul the notoriously corrupt judiciary while holding senior judicial positions.

Timofti has supported Moldova’s application for EU membership (progress towards which saw the signature of an Association Agreement in June 2014) and has sought to maintain relations with Russia, despite the latter’s hostility to closer Moldovan-EU ties and concerns over Russian territorial designs on the breakaway region of Transnistria.

In March 2013 the prime minister, Vladimir Filat, resigned after his government lost a confidence vote. The foreign minister, Iurie Leancă, was then sworn in as acting prime minister in April 2013 before parliamentary elections in Nov. 2014 returned a majority for pro-EU parties, although the pro-Russian Party of Socialists of the Republic of Moldova emerged as the largest single group. In Feb. 2015 Timofti designated a new prime minister, Chiril Gaburici of the Liberal Democratic Party. He subsequently resigned in June and was replaced the following month by Valeriu Streleț, also a Liberal Democrat. However, in Oct. parliament dismissed his government in a no-confidence vote and Gheorghe Brega of the Liberal Party briefly took over as acting prime minister before Timofti nominated Ion Sturza, a former premier, in his place in Dec. However, in Jan. 2016 Sturza withdrew his candidacy, as did his successor Ion Padurar, before Timofti's next nominee, Pavel Filip, and his government were confirmed in office.

DEFENCE

Conscription is for 12 months (three months for higher education graduates). In 2013 military expenditure totalled US$24m. (US$7 per capita), representing 0.3% of GDP.

Russian troops remained in Transnistria after Moldova gained independence, but in Nov. 1999 the Organization for Security and Co-operation in Europe (OSCE) passed a resolution at its summit requiring Russia to withdraw its troops to Russia by Dec. 2002, unconditionally and under international observation. This deadline was extended to Dec. 2003 but around 1,500 Russian troops still remained in the region in 2015 as part of a joint peacekeeping force.

Army

Personnel, 2011, 3,231 (1,934 conscripts). In 2011 there was also a paramilitary Interior Ministry force of 2,379, riot police numbering 900 and combined forces reserves of 58,000.

Air Force

Personnel (including air defence), 2011, 826 (259 conscripts).

ECONOMY

Agriculture accounted for 10.1% of GDP in 2009, industry 13.1% and services 76.8%.

Overview

After poor performance throughout the 1990s, the economy began to recover in 2000. Growth was robust from 2000–07, averaging 5.7% until a contraction of 6% in 2009 following the global downturn.

There was a resurgence in 2010 and the economy was among the fastest-growing in Central and Eastern Europe in 2011, driven by private domestic demand and buoyant agricultural exports. In 2012 the economy contracted again, by 0.8%, following a drought and weak external demand from the eurozone. However, a record harvest the following year helped restore momentum. Nevertheless, high unemployment, political instability, volatile commodity prices and the fragile global economy pose risks to long-term recovery.

Currency

A new unit of currency, the leu (MDL), replaced the rouble in Nov. 1993. Inflation was 0.0% in 2009, down from a peak of 2,198% in the early 1990s. More recently it was 4.6% in 2013 and 5.1% in 2014. Foreign exchange reserves were US$506m. in July 2005. Total money supply in June 2005 was 6,523m. lei.

Budget

In 2011 budgetary central government revenue totalled 18,639m. lei and expenditure 18,702m. lei. Principal sources of revenue in 2011 were: taxes 15,053m. lei; grants, 1,565m. lei. Main items of expenditure by economic type in 2011: grants, 8,856m. lei; compensation of employees, 3,502m. lei.

VAT is 20% (reduced rates, 8% and 6%).

Performance

Between 2002 and 2008 Moldova's economy grew by an average 6.4%. With the global economic downturn the economy contracted by 6.0% in 2009 but then expanded by 7.1% in 2010 and 6.8% in 2011. It shrank by 0.7% in 2012 before recovering strongly, growing by 9.4% in 2013 and then 4.6% in 2014.

In 2002 the level of GDP was estimated to be only 38% of that in 1989. Total GDP was US$8.0bn. in 2014 (excluding Transnistria). The private sector accounts for over 50% of official GDP. Moldova ranks among the countries most reliant on remittances from abroad, which accounted for 23% of total GDP in 2009.

Banking and Finance

The central bank and bank of issue is the National Bank (Governor, Dorin Drăguțanu). At June 2002 there were 21 commercial banks and one savings bank. Foreign debt was US$4,615m. in 2010, representing 73.5% of GNI. There is a stock exchange in Chișinău.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Moldova's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2011 were the equivalent of 1.8 tonnes per capita.

Electricity

Installed capacity in 2011 was 503,000 kW. Production was 1.02bn. kWh in 2011; consumption per capita in 2011 was 1,174 kWh.

Minerals

There are deposits of lignite, phosphorites, gypsum and building materials.

Agriculture

There were 387,400 people employed in agriculture in 2008. Land under cultivation in 2008 was 2.5m. ha., of which 0.3m. ha. was accounted for by private subsidiary agriculture and 668,600 ha. by farms. In 2008 there were 1.82m. ha. of arable land and 303,000 ha. of permanent crops. The agricultural and food sector accounts for 38% of Moldova's total exports.

Output of main agricultural products (in 1,000 tonnes) in 2008: maize, 1,479; wheat, 1,286; sugar beets, 961; grapes, 636; sunflower seeds, 372; barley, 353; potatoes, 271.

Livestock (2008): 853,000 sheep and goats, 299,000 pigs, 232,000 cattle, 17m. chickens.

Livestock products, 2008 (in 1,000 tonnes): milk, 542; meat, 78; eggs, 541m. units.

Forestry

In 2010 forests covered 0.39m. ha., or 12% of the total land area. Timber production in 2011 was 352,000 cu. metres.

Fisheries

The catch in 2010 (exclusively freshwater fish) was 1,633 tonnes.

INDUSTRY

There are canning plants, wine-making plants, woodworking and metallurgical factories, a factory of ferro-concrete building materials, footwear, dairy products and textile plants. Manufacturing accounted for 14.8% of GDP in 2007. Production (in tonnes): cement (2011 estimate), 1,400,000; crude steel (2011), 320,600; flour (2007), 113,300; canned fruit and vegetables (2007), 94,000; granulated sugar (2007), 74,000; footwear (2007), 3.8m. pairs; 5.0bn. cigars and cigarettes (2007); wine (2008), 397.9m. litres.

Labour

The labour force in 2013 was 1,218,000 (1,472,000 in 2003). 46.0% of the population aged 15–64 was economically active in 2013. In the same year 5.1% of the population was unemployed.

Moldova had 33,000 people living in slavery according to the Walk Free Foundation's 2013 Global Slavery Index.

Principauté de Monaco
(Principality of Monaco)

Capital: Monaco

Population estimate, 2015: 38,000

GDP per capita, 2014: US$187,650

Internet domain extension: .mc

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Monaco's natural harbour was settled by Phoenicians, Greeks and Ligurians and later by Saracens. A fortress, built where the palace now stands, was captured by the Grimaldi family of Genoa in 1297. It was passed on through the male line until 1731, when control of Monaco passed to Louise Hippolyte, daughter of Antoine I and wife of Jacques de Goyon Matignon, who took the name of Grimaldi. The Principality was placed under the protection of the Kingdom of Sardinia by the Treaty of Vienna in 1815, and under that of France in 1861. Prince Rainier III succeeded his grandfather, Louis II, in 1949 and ruled the Principality until his death on 6 April 2005 when his son, Prince Albert II, inherited the throne.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Monaco is bounded in the south by the Mediterranean and elsewhere by France (Department of Alpes Maritimes). The area is 1.97 sq. km (0.8 sq. miles), making it the second smallest sovereign country—only the Vatican City is smaller. The Principality is divided into four districts: Monaco-Ville, la Condamine, Monte-Carlo and Fontvieille. Population (2008 census), 31,109; there were 6,687 Monegasques (22%), 8,785 French (28%) and 5,778 Italian (19%). In Dec. 2011 the population was estimated at 36,371.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 38,000.

The population is 100% urban.

The official language is French.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2008: births, 970; deaths, 545. 2005 marriages, 161; divorces, 69. Rates per 1,000 population, 2008: birth, 31.2; death, 17.5; marriage (2005), 5.0; divorce (2005), 2.1. Annual population growth rate, 1998–2008, 0.4%; fertility rate, 2008, 1.5 births per woman. Infant mortality per 1,000 live births (2010), 3.

CURRENT LEADERS

Albert II

Position
Prince

Introduction

Albert II became ruler of Monaco on 6 April 2005 following the death of his father, Prince Rainier III, who had ruled the principality for 56 years. Albert II has maintained the status quo, upholding the low-tax regime that has made Monaco a haven for the super-rich.

Early Life

Albert Alexandre Louis Pierre Grimaldi was born in Monaco on 14 March 1958, the second child and only son of Prince Rainier III and Grace Kelly, a US cinema actress. He attended the Lycée Albert Ier, then the principality's sole secondary school, where he developed a passion for sport. Having received his baccalaureate diploma in 1976, Albert enrolled the following year at Amherst College in Massachusetts, USA, and graduated with a degree in political science in 1981. From Sept. 1981–April 1982 he served in the French Navy as a sub-lieutenant on the aircraft carrier Jeanne d'Arc. On 14 Sept. 1982 his mother was killed in a car crash in the mountains near Monaco. Subsequently, he became vice-president of the Princess Grace-USA Foundation, which grants scholarships to talented young musicians, actors and dancers. In the same year he also became president of the Monaco Red Cross.

During the mid-1980s Albert undertook work experience at an investment bank and an international law firm in New York, as well as the French luxury goods group, Moët-Hennessy, in Paris. Back in Monaco he chaired the principality's prestigious Yacht Club, the International Television Festival and Monaco's Athletic Federation. Albert also became increasingly involved in the Olympic movement, both as an administrator (as a member of the International Olympic Committee in 1985 and president of Monaco's Olympic Committee in 1993) and competitor (in the principality's bobsleigh team at four Winter Olympics between 1988 and 2002).

During the 1990s he began to increase his involvement in the day-to-day administration of Monaco. In 1997 he organized the 700th anniversary celebrations of the Grimaldi family's control over the principality. He also assisted his father and the government in preparing reports that strongly denied allegations by French parliamentarians in 2000 that Monaco's lax policies had facilitated money laundering.

Long described in the press as the world's 'most eligible bachelor', Albert's unmarried status became a matter of political concern, casting doubt on the succession of the Grimaldi family and the independence of the principality. A change to the constitution was formulated in April 2002, however, allowing the throne to continue through the female line. On 31 March 2005 the Palace of Monaco announced that Albert would take over the duties of his father as Regent, after Prince Rainier III, who had been admitted to hospital, was no longer able to rule. Following the death of his father on 6 April 2005, he became Sovereign Prince of Monaco, and was enthroned on 12 July.

Career in Office

In his first public statement as Prince Albert II, he said that the death of his father, who had governed for 56 years, had left the people of the principality feeling orphaned and united in a profound sense of loss. He has retained the territory's famously low-tax regime and continued to develop tourism, as well as nurturing Monaco's precision engineering, fish canning, banking and pharmaceutical industries. In July 2011 he married Charlene Wittstock, a former Olympic swimmer for South Africa.

ECONOMY

Overview

With sparse natural resources, Monaco's tiny economy is primarily geared towards tourism and finance. These together account for 95% of GDP. Tourism provides 15% of revenues, focused around Monte Carlo's casino and the Formula 1 Grand Prix hosted every May. Many foreign companies are attracted by low corporate taxes. Having been identified as a tax haven by the IMF in 2003, Monaco was subsequently placed on the OECD's blacklist of uncooperative tax havens. However, in 2009 it was delisted following its commitment to implement standards of transparency and effective exchange of information. In Oct. 2014 Monaco joined with 83 other nations to counter offshore tax avoidance and evasion in a multilateral convention.

Although not a member of the European Union, Monaco is closely associated with its economic structures, and EU states account for over 50% of its trade. Customs, postal services, telecommunications and banking are governed via an economic and customs union with France under EU rules. As a result, Monaco was exposed to the downturn in France and other European economies in the wake of the global financial crisis. Having fallen by 11.5% in 2009, GDP grew again by 2.5% in 2010, although the budget recorded a deficit of 1.9% of GDP that year. In 2013 growth then surpassed pre-crisis levels, expanding by 9.3%.

Living standards are high and per capita GDP was among the highest in the world in 2013 at €64,082.

Currency

On 1 Jan. 1999 the euro (EUR) replaced the French franc as the legal currency in Monaco at the irrevocable conversion rate of 6.55957 French francs to one euro. The euro, which consists of 100 cents, has been in circulation since 1 Jan. 2002. On the introduction of the euro there was a 'dual circulation' period before the franc ceased to be legal tender on 17 Feb. 2002.

Budget

Revenues in 2009 totalled €744.21m. and expenditures €805.53m.

Performance

In 2011 total GDP was US$6.1bn.

Banking and Finance

There were 36 banks in 2012 of which 18 were Monegasque banks.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Electricity

More than 97% of the electricity consumed is imported from France. In 2010 electricity consumption totalled 552,993 MWh.

Oil and Gas

In 2004, 61 GWh of gas were supplied to 3,935 customers; output capacity was 21 MW.

INDUSTRY

The main industry is tourism. There is some production of cosmetics, pharmaceuticals, glassware, electrical goods and precision instruments.

Labour

There were 49,610 persons employed in Jan. 2012. 45,442 worked in the private sector; 4,168 in the public sector. 32,401 French citizens worked in Monaco in 2012 (of which 29,778 in the private sector and 2,623 in the public sector).

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

There is a customs union with France. Imports for 2012 totalled €761m.; exports, €696m. Main imports: pharmaceuticals, perfume, clothing, paper, synthetic and non-metallic products, and building materials.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

There were 77 km of roads in 2007. In 2004 there were 33,275 vehicles. Monaco has the densest network of roads of any country in the world. In 2004, 5,141,964 people travelled by bus.

Rail

The 1.7 km of main line passing through the country are operated by the French National Railways (SNCF). In 2011, 5.45m. people arrived at or departed from Monaco railway station.

Civil Aviation

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Temujin became khan of Hamag Mongolia in 1190. Having united by conquest various Tatar and Mongolian tribes he was confirmed as 'Universal' ('Genghis', 'Chingiz') khan in 1206. The expansionist impulse of his nomadic empire (Beijing captured in 1215; Samarkand in 1220) continued after his death in 1227. Tamurlaine (died 1405) was the last of the conquering khans. In 1368 the Chinese drove the Mongols from Beijing, and for the next two centuries Sino-Mongolian relations alternated between war and trade. In 1691 Outer Mongolia accepted Manchu rule. The head of the Lamaist faith became the symbol of national identity, and his seat ('Urga', later Ulan Bator and since 1990 more commonly known as Ulaanbaatar) was made the Mongolian capital. When the Manchu dynasty was overthrown in 1911 Outer Mongolia declared its independence under its spiritual ruler and turned to Russia for support against China. Soviet and Mongolian revolutionary forces set up a provisional government in March 1921. On the death of the spiritual ruler a people's republic and new constitution were proclaimed in May 1924. With Soviet help Japanese invaders were fended off during the Second World War. The Mongols then took part in the successful Soviet campaign against Inner Mongolia and Manchuria. On 5 Jan. 1946 China recognized the independence of Outer Mongolia. Until 1990 sole power was in the hands of the (Communist) Mongolian People's Revolutionary Party (MPRP), but an opposition Mongolian Democratic Party, founded in Dec. 1989, achieved tacit recognition and held its first congress in Feb. 1990. Following demonstrations and hunger-strikes, on 12 March the entire MPRP Politburo resigned and political opposition was legalized.

The country's first democratic elections were held in 1992, with the first direct presidential election a year later. A state of emergency was declared in 2008 amid violent protests in Ulaanbaatar in response to claims of election-rigging by the MPRP government. By 2011 the economy was among the fastest-growing in the world on the back of a minerals boom.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Mongolia is bounded in the north by the Russian Federation, and in the east and south and west by China. Area, 1,564,100 sq. km (603,900 sq. miles). Population (2010 census), 2,647,545. Density in 2010 was 1.7 per sq. km, making Mongolia the most sparsely populated country in the world. In 2011, 62.5% of the population were urban. More Mongolians live in China than in Mongolia (5.8m. according to China's 2010 census).

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 2.96m.

The population is predominantly made up of Mongolian peoples (78.8% Khalkh). There is a Turkic Kazakh minority (3.7% of the population) and 21 Mongol minorities. The official language is Khalkh Mongol, which uses a modified Cyrillic alphabet.

The republic is administratively divided into 21 provinces (aimag) and the capital, Ulaanbaatar (Ulan Bator). The provinces are sub-divided into 334 districts or counties (suums).

SOCIAL STATISTICS

Births, 2005, 45,326; deaths, 16,480. 2001 rates: birth, 17.8 per 1,000 population; death, 6.5 per 1,000; marriage, 5.9 per 1,000; divorce, 0.6 per 1,000. Annual population growth rate, 2000–05, 1.3%. Infant mortality rate, 2010, 26 per 1,000 live births. Expectation of life in 2007 was 63.0 years for males and 69.6 for females. Fertility rate, 2008, 2.0 births per woman. Mongolia has had one of the most impressive reductions in its fertility rate of any country in the world over the past quarter of a century, having had a rate of 4.2 births per woman in 1990.

CLIMATE

A very extreme climate, with six months of mean temperatures below freezing, but much higher temperatures occur for a month or two in summer. Rainfall is very low and limited to the months from mid-May to mid-Sept. Ulaanbaatar, Jan. -14°F (-25.6°C), July 61°F (16.1°C). Annual rainfall 8" (208 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

The constitution of 12 Feb. 1992 abolished the 'People's Democracy', introduced democratic institutions and a market economy and guarantees freedom of speech.

The President is directly elected for renewable four-year terms.

Since June 1992 the legislature has consisted of a single-chamber 76-seat parliament, the Great Hural (Ulsyn Ich-Chural), which elects the Prime Minister.

National Anthem

RECENT ELECTIONS

At the parliamentary elections of 28 June 2012 the Democratic Party (DP) won 31 of the 76 available seats with 35.3% of the vote, the Mongolian People's Party (known as the Mongolian People's Revolutionary Party from 1924–2010), 25 with 31.3%, the Justice Coalition (comprising a faction of the former Mongolian People's Revolutionary Party and the Mongolian National Democratic Party) 11 with 22.3% and the Civic Will–Green Party 2 with 5.5%. Independents won three seats and five remained vacant. Turnout was 65.2%.

In presidential elections on 26 June 2013 incumbent president Tsakhiagiin Elbegdorj (Democratic Party) won with 50.2% of the vote, against Badmaanyambuugiin Bat-Erdene (Mongolian People's Party) with 42.0% of the vote and Natsagiin Udval (Mongolian People's Revolutionary Party, established in 2010 by a breakaway faction of the Mongolian People's Party) 6.5%. Turnout was 98.7%.

Parliamentary elections were scheduled to take place on 29 June 2016.

CURRENT LEADERS

Tsakhiagiin Elbegdorj

Position

President

Introduction

Tsakhiagiin Elbegdorj took office on 18 June 2009, the first president not to have been a member of the Mongolian People's Revolutionary Party (MPRP). Campaigning on a platform of change and anti-corruption that appealed to urban voters, he won the election with just over 51% of the vote on 24 May 2009, beating MPRP candidate and incumbent president Nambaryn Enkhbayar. He was re-elected in June 2013.

Early Life

Elbegdorj was born on 30 March 1963 in the district of Zereg. In 1988 he graduated from the Military Political Institute in Ukraine (then part of the USSR) and went on to attain a master's degree in public administration from Harvard University in the USA.

Elbegdorj was active in the fight against communism and in 1989 helped establish a recognized pro-democracy movement. The following year he founded Mongolia's first independent newspaper, Democracy. A few months later he was elected to government and was a key figure in drafting a new constitution, adopted in Jan. 1992. In 1996, as leader of the Democratic Party (DP), Elbegdorj led the Democratic Union Coalition to victory in parliamentary elections, paving the way for the country's first peaceful power transition.

Elbegdorj was elected prime minister in April 1998 but a banking scandal forced his resignation shortly afterwards. After the 2004 elections he was again appointed to the premiership, heading a fragile MPRP-DP coalition. During his tenure, he announced measures to boost tourism, reorganized domestic political structures, loosened control of the news media and oversaw the replacement of Russian by English as Mongolia's second language. In Jan. 2006 he was again forced to resign when the MPRP withdrew from the coalition, sparking public demonstrations in Ulaanbaatar.

At elections in May 2009 Elbegdorj won by only a narrow margin over the incumbent president. Nevertheless, the MPRP accepted the result, producing a peaceful outcome after fears of a repeat of the violence that followed the DP's claims of fraud at the 2008 parliamentary polling.

Career in Office

On taking office Elbegdorj faced the challenges of working with a parliament dominated at the time by the MPRP and tackling high levels of corruption and unemployment. He also aimed to spread the profits of Mongolia's mineral wealth more widely. On the foreign stage, he was expected to cultivate Western ties to counterbalance the influence of neighbouring Russia and China.

Following parliamentary elections in June 2012, Elbegdorj's DP was returned as the largest party but without an overall majority. This heralded the formation in Aug. of a DP-led government including the Justice Coalition, with DP chairman Norov Altankhuyag as prime minister. Elbegdorj secured his own re-election in June 2013, having again campaigned on an anti-corruption and liberalizing agenda.

In Nov. 2014 Altankhuyag was ousted after losing a parliamentary vote of no confidence over a mounting economic crisis exacerbated by collapsing commodity prices, and was succeeded as premier later in the month by Chimed Saikhanbileg.

Chimed Saikhanbileg

Position

Prime Minister

Introduction

Chimed Saikhanbileg became prime minister on 21 Nov. 2014 after his predecessor, Norov Altankhuyag, was ousted after a parliamentary vote of no confidence on 5 Nov. Saikhanbileg had previously been minister of the Cabinet Office and was a former minister for education.

Early Life

Saikhanbileg was born in 1969 in Dornod. He was schooled in the capital, Ulaanbaatar, before graduating in history from Russia's Moscow State University for the Humanities in 1991. He later received a law degree from the National University of Mongolia in 1995 and a master's degree in the same subject from George Washington University in Washington, D.C., USA in 2002.

An aspiring career politician, in 1991 Saikhanbileg became an officer in the Mongolian Youth Federation (MYF) and acted as its secretary in Ulaanbaatar until 1997. In 1996 he was elected to parliament for the DP, serving until 2000 and re-entering parliament in 2008. From 1997–2002 he served as national president of the MYF, and was minister for education from 1998–2000. Between 2000 and 2008 he worked in private legal practice and as a government press officer. In 2008 he was re-elected to parliament, becoming leader of the DP caucus. From 2012–14 he was minister of the Cabinet Office.

Career in Office

Saikhanbileg was elected to the premiership in Nov. 2014 by parliament, claiming 44 of 46 available votes. However, the poll was boycotted by 32 members of the opposition Mongolian People's Party (MPP), who claimed that Saikhanbileg was equally culpable in the Altankhuyag government's failure to tackle the slowing economy, attract foreign investment and monetize rich mineral resources. The MPP nonetheless joined the new coalition government comprising Saikhanbileg's DP and the Justice Coalition.

Needing to rejuvenate the mining sector, which has been affected by disputes and delays to projects, Saikhanbileg promptly began negotiating with the International Monetary Fund to secure financial support. He also signed a trade deal with Japan, including a US$308m. loan to finance a new international airport in Ulaanbaatar.

Ahead of elections scheduled for June 2016, Saikhanbileg dismissed the six MPP ministers in his coalition cabinet in Aug. 2015—a move endorsed by the DP-controlled parliament but opposed by President Elbegdorj—and replaced them in Sept. with new appointments.

DEFENCE

Conscription is for one year for males aged 18–25 years. Defence expenditure in 2013 totalled US$133m. (US$41 per capita), representing 1.1% of GDP.

Army

Strength (2011) 8,900 (3,300 conscripts). There is a border guard of 6,000, 1,200 internal security troops and 300 Construction Troops.

Air Force

The Air Force had a strength of 800 in 2011 with three aircraft (none combat-capable) and 13 helicopters.

ECONOMY

In 2009 agriculture accounted for 19.6% of GDP, industry 33.0% and services 47.4%.

Overview

Traditionally nomadic and pastoral, Mongolia has made substantial progress since the turn of the century towards creating a private sector-led, open economy. The country is rich in mineral resources, especially copper and gold. It has also received significant international loans for the development of its energy and transport sectors.

The economy was nevertheless hit hard by the effects of the global financial crisis. Foreign direct investment fell 17% in 2012 to US$3.8bn. from US$4.6bn. in 2011. With minerals accounting for 89% of total exports and with 92.6% of them destined for China, a sharp contraction in Chinese demand weakened overall growth. In 2013 the private sector's contribution to GDP fell from over 80% to just 50%. However, robust agricultural production and healthy performance in the construction, transportation and technology sectors helped Mongolia achieve growth of 11.6% in 2013, down from a high of 17.5% in 2011 although up from 6.4% in 2010. The poverty rate fell from 38.7% in 2010 to 27.4% in 2012.

In a bid to improve macroeconomic stability, the government announced a fiscal consolidation plan in 2013. Nevertheless, a substantial balance of payments imbalance leaves Mongolia exposed to changing conditions in the international economy.

Currency

The unit of currency is the tugrik (MNT) of 100 möngö. The tugrik was made convertible in 1993. In March 2005 foreign exchange reserves were US$276m. and gold reserves totalled 112,000 troy oz. Total money supply was 222,085m. tugriks in Dec. 2004. Inflation, which reached a high of 268% in 1993, was just 0.9% in 2002. It was 8.6% in 2013 but rose to 12.9% in 2014.

Budget

In 2010 revenues were 2,451.1bn. tugriks and expenditures 2,376.2bn. tugriks; taxes accounted for 78.8% of revenue, and wages and salaries 24.9% of expenditure.

VAT is 10%.

Performance

The economy grew by 12.3% in 2012, 11.6% in 2013 and 7.8% in 2014. This spectacular growth can be attributed to factors including increased exploitation of coal and mineral deposits, and subsequently a substantial rise in incoming foreign investment. Total GDP in 2014 was US$12.0bn.

Banking and Finance

The Bank of Mongolia (Governor, Naidansuren Zoljargal) is the bank of issue. In 2013 there were 14 licensed banks, the largest being the Trade and Development Bank (TDB), Khan Bank and Golomt Bank.

External debt was US$2,444m. in 2010, representing 44.3% of GNI.

A stock exchange opened in Ulaanbaatar in 1992.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

In 2011 carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy accounted for 2.7 tonnes per capita.

Electricity

Installed capacity was estimated at 0.9m. kW in 2011. Production, 2011, 4.54bn. kWh; consumption per capita in 2011 was 1,739 kWh. Mongolia imports electricity from Russia to meet increasing demand.

Minerals

There are large deposits of coal, chromium, cobalt, copper, emeralds, gold, iron, molybdenum, phosphates, tin, wolfram and fluorspar; production of the latter in 2011, 461,000 tonnes. There are major coal mines near Ulaanbaatar and Darhan. A huge gold and copper mine at Oyu Tolgoi began production in July 2013. In 2010 hard coal production was 19.44m. tonnes; lignite production, 5.72m. tonnes. Copper production, 2012, 121,660 tonnes; gold production, 2012, 5,995 kg.

Agriculture

The prevailing Mongolian style of life is pastoral nomadism. Livestock production comprises 79.5% of the total agricultural production. In 2003 there were 10.8m. sheep, 2.0m. horses, 1.8m. cattle and 257,000 camels. The number of goats rose from 5.5m. to 10.7m. between 1992 and 2003 as production of cashmere has increased along with the market economy. The winter of 2009–10 was extremely harsh, resulting in the loss of some 7.8m. animals, representing 17% of Mongolia's livestock. In spite of this, livestock outnumber humans by 14 to 1.

In 2007 there were around 851,000 ha. of arable land and 2,000 ha. of permanent crop land. In 2003 output of major crops was 165,000 tonnes of wheat and 79,000 tonnes of potatoes. Vegetables produced in 2003 included (in tonnes): turnips, 25,000; cabbage, 15,000; carrots, 10,000. Livestock products, 2003 (in 1,000 tonnes): milk, 292; meat, 153. There were 48 tractors and seven harvester-threshers per 10,000 ha. of arable land in 2006.

Forestry

Forests, chiefly larch, cedar, fir and birch, occupied 10.90m. ha. in 2010 (7% of the land area). Timber production was 815,000 cu. metres in 2011.

Fisheries

The catch in 2009 was 90 tonnes, entirely from inland waters.

INDUSTRY

Industry is still small in scale and local in character. The food industry accounts for 25% of industrial production. The main industrial centre is Ulaanbaatar; others are at Darhan and Erdenet. Production figures: cement (2009), 235,000 tonnes; lime (2009), 43,000 tonnes; bread (2003), 22,000 tonnes; carpets (2003), 663,000 sq. metres; sawnwood (2002), 300,000 cu. metres.

Labour

The labour force in 2013 was 1,302,000 (1,024,000 in 2003). 65.6% of the population aged 15–64 was economically active in 2013. In the same year 5.0% of the population was unemployed.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Mongolia is dependent on foreign aid. Total foreign assistance to Mongolia exceeds US$300m. annually. Japan is the largest bilateral donor.

Imports and Exports

In 2006 imports (f.o.b.) were valued at US$1,356.7m. and exports (f.o.b.) at US$1,545.2m. Main exports, 2006: copper concentrate, 42.7%; gold, 18.1%; refined copper, 7.2%. Minerals account for over 80% of Mongolia's exports. Principal import suppliers in 2006: Russia, 36.9%; China, 27.2%; Japan, 6.6%; South Korea,

5-6%. Main export markets, 2006: China, 67.8%; Canada, 11.1%; USA, 7.7%; Russia, 2.9%.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

The total road network covered 49,250 km in 2002, including 11,121 km of highway. There are 1,185 km of surfaced roads running around Ulaanbaatar, from Ulaanbaatar to Darhan, at points on the frontier with the Russian Federation and towards the south. Truck services run where there are no surfaced roads. Vehicles in use in 2007 included 110,200 passenger cars and 37,300 lorries and vans. In 2008 passenger transport totalled 1,215m. passenger-km and freight 782m. tonne-km. In 2007 there were 562 fatalities as a result of road accidents.

Rail

The Trans-Mongolian Railway (1,815 km of 1,520 mm gauge in 2011) connects Ulaanbaatar with the Russian Federation and China. There are spur lines to Erdenet and to the coal mines at Baganuur, Nalayh and Sharyn Gol and the fluorspar mine at Bor-Öndör. A separate line connects Choybalsan in the east with Borzaya on the Trans-Siberian Railway. In 2011, 3.8m. passengers and 18.4m. tonnes of freight were carried.

Civil Aviation

MIAT-Mongolian Airlines operates internal services, and in 2003 flew from Ulaanbaatar to Beijing, Berlin, Frankfurt, Hohhot, Irkutsk, Moscow, Seoul and Tokyo. In 2003 scheduled airline traffic of Mongolian-based carriers flew 9m. km, carrying 289,000 passengers (139,000 on international flights). In 2012 Ulaanbaatar handled 1,096,649 passengers and 6,143 tonnes of freight.

Shipping

There is a steamer service on the Selenge River and a tug and barge service on Hövsgöl Lake.

Telecommunications

In 2013 there were 175,698 main (fixed) telephone lines; mobile phone subscribers numbered 3,526,000 in 2013 (124.2 per 100 persons). An estimated 17.7% of the population were internet users in 2013. In March 2012 there were 459,000 Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The Procurator-General is appointed, and the Supreme Court elected, by parliament for five years. There are also courts at province, town and district level. Lay assessors sit with professional judges. The death penalty is retained but has been subject to a moratorium since Jan. 2010; it was last used in 2008.

The population in penal institutions in Oct. 2012 was 8,193 (287 per 100,000 of national population). Mongolia was ranked 57th of 102 countries for criminal justice and 41st for civil justice in the 2015 World Justice Project Rule of Law Index, which provides data on how the rule of law is experienced by the general public across eight categories.

Education

Adult literacy was 97.8% in 2003 (male, 98.0%; female, 97.5%). Schooling begins at the age of seven. In 2007 there were 94,702 children in pre-primary education and 3,262 teaching staff; 239,262 pupils and 7,572 teaching staff in primary education; and 328,009 pupils and 16,605 teaching staff in secondary schools. There were 142,411 students in tertiary education in 2007 and 8,754 academic staff. In 2003 there were eight state and three private universities, and 38 public and 134 private institutes and colleges.

In 2007 public expenditure on education came to 5.2% of GNI.

Health

In 2003 there were 385 state hospitals with the equivalent of 73 beds per 10,000 inhabitants. There were 6,823 physicians, 469 dentists, 612 midwives and 7,802 nurses in 2002.

RELIGION

Tibetan Buddhist Lamaism is the prevalent religion; the Dalai Lama is its spiritual head. In 2009 there were 457 registered places of worship; 239 of these were Buddhist, 161 Christian and 44 Muslim.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

Mongolia has four sites (one shared) on the UNESCO World Heritage List: the Orkhon Valley Cultural Landscape (inscribed on the list in 2004), an extensive area on both banks of the Orkhon River including the archaeological remains of Kharkhorum, the 13th and 14th century capital of Genghis Khan's vast Empire; the Petroglyphic Complexes of the Mongolian Altai (2011), numerous rock carvings and funerary monuments that date back to 11,000 BC; and Great Burkhan Khaldun Mountain and its surrounding sacred landscape (2015), believed to be the place of birth and burial of Genghis Khan. The fourth site falls under joint Mongolian and Russian jurisdiction: Uvs Nuur Basin (2003), an important saline lake system supporting a rich wildlife, especially the snow leopard and Asiatic ibex.

Press

In 2008 there were 15 paid-for daily newspapers with a combined circulation of 61,000 and 115 paid-for non-dailies with a circulation of 197,000. The leading paid-for dailies are Udriin Sonin (Daily News) and Onoodor.

Tourism

In 2011 there were 458,000 non-resident visitors to Mongolia; visitor numbers have doubled since 2003 and trebled since 2000.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Montenegro emerged as a separate entity on the break-up of the Serbian Empire in 1355. Owing to its mountainous terrain, it was never effectively subdued by Turkey. It was ruled by Bishop Princes until 1851, when a royal house was founded. The Treaty of Berlin (1828) recognized the independence of Montenegro and doubled the size of the territory.

The assassination of Archduke Franz Ferdinand of Austria in Sarajevo on 28 June 1914 precipitated the First World War. In the winter of 1915–16 the Serbian army was forced to retreat to Corfu, where the government aimed at a centralized, Serb-run state. But exiles from Croatia and Slovenia wanted a South Slav federation. This was accepted by the victorious Allies as the basis for the new state. The Croats were forced by the pressure of events to join Serbia and Montenegro on 1 Dec. 1918. From 1918–29 the country was known as the Kingdom of the Serbs, Croats and Slovenes. The remains of King Nicholas I, who was deposed in 1918, were returned to Montenegro for reburial in Oct. 1989.

A constitution of 1921 established an assembly but the trappings of parliamentarianism could not bridge the gulf between Serbs and Croats. The Croat peasant leader Radić was assassinated in 1928; his successor, Vlatko Maček, set up a separatist assembly in Zagreb. On 6 Jan. 1929 the king suspended the constitution and established a royal dictatorship, redrawing provincial boundaries without regard for ethnicity. In Oct. 1934 he was murdered by a Croat extremist while on an official visit to France.

During the regency of Prince Paul, the government pursued a pro-fascist line. On 25 March 1941 Paul was persuaded to adhere to the Axis Tripartite Pact. On 27 March he was overthrown by military officers in favour of the boy king Peter. Germany invaded on 6 April. Within ten days Yugoslavia surrendered; king and government fled to London. Resistance was led by a royalist group and the communist-dominated partisans of Josip Broz, nicknamed Tito. Having succeeded in liberating Yugoslavia, Tito set up a Soviet-type constitution but he was too independent for Stalin, who sought to topple him. However, Tito made a rapprochement with the west and it was the Soviet Union under Khrushchev that had to extend the olive branch in 1956. Yugoslavia was permitted to evolve its 'own road to socialism'. Collectivization of agriculture was abandoned; and Yugoslavia became a champion of international 'non-alignment'. A collective presidency came into being with the death of Tito in 1980.

Dissensions in Kosovo between Albanians and Serbs, and in parts of Croatia between Serbs and Croats, reached crisis point after 1988. On 25 June 1991 Croatia and Slovenia declared independence. Fighting began in Croatia between Croatian forces and Serb irregulars from Serb-majority areas of Croatia. On 25 Sept. the UN Security Council imposed a mandatory arms embargo on Yugoslavia. A three-month moratorium agreed at EU peace talks on 30 June having expired, both Slovenia and Croatia declared their independence from the Yugoslav federation on 8 Oct. After 13 ceasefires had failed, a fourteenth was signed on 23 Nov. under UN auspices. A Security Council resolution of 27 Nov. proposed the deployment of a UN peacekeeping force if the ceasefire was kept. Fighting, however, continued. On 15 Jan. 1992 the EU recognized Croatia and Slovenia as independent states. Bosnia and Herzegovina was recognized on 7 April 1992 and Macedonia on 8 April 1993. A UN delegation began monitoring the ceasefire on 17 Jan. and the UN Security Council on 21 Feb. voted to send a 14,000-strong peacekeeping force to Croatia and Yugoslavia. On 27 April 1992 Serbia and Montenegro created a new Federal Republic of Yugoslavia.

On 30 May, responding to further Serbian military activities in Bosnia and Croatia, the UN Security Council voted to impose sanctions. In mid-1992 NATO committed air, sea and eventually land forces to enforce sanctions and protect humanitarian relief operations in Bosnia. At a joint UN-EC peace conference on Yugoslavia held in London on 26–27 Aug. some 30 countries and all the former republics of Yugoslavia endorsed a plan to end the fighting in Croatia and Bosnia, install UN supervision of heavy weapons, recognize the borders of Bosnia and Herzegovina and return refugees. At a further conference at Geneva on 30 Sept. the Croatian and Yugoslav presidents agreed to make efforts to bring about a peaceful solution in Bosnia, but fighting continued. Following the Bosnian-Croatian-Yugoslav (Dayton) agreement all UN sanctions were lifted in Nov. 1995.

In July 1997 Slobodan Milošević switched his power base to become president of federal Yugoslavia. The former Yugoslav foreign minister, Milan Milutinović, succeeded Milošević as Serbian President. Meanwhile, in Montenegro, the pro-western Milo Đukanović succeeded a pro-Milošević president.

Following the break-up of Yugoslavia, in March 1998 a coalition government was formed between the Socialist Party of Slobodan Milošević and the ultra-nationalist Serb Radical Party.

Kosovo

In 1998 unrest in Kosovo, with its largely Albanian population, led to a bid for outright independence. Violence flared resulting in what a US official described as 'horrendous human rights violations', including massive shelling of civilians and destruction of villages. A US-mediated agreement to allow negotiations to proceed during an interim period of autonomy allowed for food and medicine to be delivered to refugees; American support for a degree of autonomy (short of independence), accepted in principle by President Milošević, lifted the immediate threat of NATO air strikes. Further outbreaks of violence in early 1999 were followed by the departure of the 800-strong team of international 'verifiers' of the fragile peace. Peace talks in Paris broke down without a settlement though subsequently Albanian freedom fighters accepted terms allowing them broad autonomy. The sticking point on the Serbian side was the international insistence on having 28,000 NATO-led peacemakers in Kosovo to keep apart the warring factions. Meanwhile, the scale of Serbian repression in Kosovo persuaded the NATO allies to take direct action. On the night of 24 March 1999 NATO aircraft began a bombing campaign against Yugoslavian military targets. Further Serbian provocation in Kosovo caused hundreds of thousands of ethnic Albanians to seek refuge in neighbouring countries. On 9 June after 78 days of air attacks NATO and Yugoslavia signed an accord on the Serb withdrawal from Kosovo, and on 11 June NATO's peacekeeping force, KFOR, entered Kosovo.

When the general election held on 24 Sept. 2000 resulted in a victory for the opposition democratic leader Vojislav Koštunica, President Milošević demanded a second round of voting. A strike by miners at the Kolubara coal mine on 29 Sept. was followed by a mass demonstration in Belgrade on 5 Oct. when the parliament building was set on fire and on 6 Oct. Slobodan Milošević accepted defeat. He was arrested on 1 April 2001 after a 30-hour confrontation with the authorities. On 28 June he was handed over to the United Nations War Crimes Tribunal in the Hague to face charges of crimes against humanity. Prime Minister Zoran Žižić resigned the next day. On 12 Feb. 2002 the trial of Slobodan Milošević, on charges of genocide and war crimes in the Balkans over a period of nearly ten years, began at the International Criminal Tribunal in The Hague. Milošević defended himself and questioned the legitimacy of the court but died in March 2006 before his trial had ended.

On 14 March 2002 Montenegro and Serbia agreed to remain part of a single entity called Serbia and Montenegro, thus relegating the name Yugoslavia to history. The agreement was ratified in principle by the federal parliament and the republican parliaments of Serbia and Montenegro on 9 April 2002. The new union came into force on 4 Feb. 2003. Most powers in this loose confederation were divided between the two republics. After 4 Feb. 2006 Serbia and Montenegro had the right to vote for independence. Following a referendum held on 21 May 2006, Montenegro declared independence on 3 June and was recognized as such by Serbia on 15 June. Montenegro became the 192nd member state of the United Nations on 28 June 2006.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Montenegro is a mountainous country that opens to the Adriatic in the southwest. It is bounded in the west by Croatia, northwest by Bosnia and Herzegovina, in the northeast by Serbia and in the southeast by Albania. The capital is Podgorica (2011 census population, 150,977), although some capital functions have been transferred to Cetinje, the historic capital of the former kingdom of Montenegro. Its area is 13,812 sq. km. Population at the 2011 census was 620,029; population density per sq. km, 44.9. The main ethnic groups in 2011 were: Montenegrins (44.98%); Serbs (28.73%); Bosniaks (8.65%); Albanians (4.91%). 61.5% of the population lived in urban areas in 2011.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 626,000.

The official language is the Serbian language of the Iekavian dialect. The Roman and Cyrillic alphabets have equal status.

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

The President is elected by direct vote to serve a five-year term. There is an 81-member single-chamber National Assembly, elected through a party list proportional representation system to serve four-year terms. The Prime Minister is nominated by the President and has to be approved by the National Assembly.

A referendum was held on 29 Feb.–1 March 1992 to determine whether Montenegro should remain within a common state, Yugoslavia, as a sovereign republic. The electorate was 412,000, of whom 66% were in favour. The then president, Milo Đukanović, had pledged a referendum on independence in May 2002, but this was postponed with the announcement of the creation of the new entity of Serbia and Montenegro, which came into being on 4 Feb. 2003.

Montenegro held a referendum on 21 May 2006 in which 55.5% voted for independence. The margin required for victory was 55.0%. Turnout was 86.6%.

RECENT ELECTIONS

In presidential elections held on 7 April 2013 incumbent president Filip Vujanović was re-elected for a third term with 51.2% of the vote against Miodrag Lekić with 48.8%. Turnout was 63.9%.

Parliamentary elections were held on 14 Oct. 2012. The ruling Coalition for European Montenegro (consisting of the Democratic Party of Socialists of Montenegro/DPS CG, the Social Democratic Party of Montenegro and the Liberal Party of Montenegro) won 39 of 81 seats (with 45.6% of votes cast), the Democratic Front (consisting of the Movement for Changes and New Serb Democracy) 20 (22.8%), the Socialist People's Party 9 (11.1%), Positive Montenegro 7 (8.2%), Bosniak Party 3 (4.2%), FORCA for Unity 1 (1.5%), Albanian Coalition 1 (1.1%) and Croatian Civic Initiative 1 (0.4%). Turnout was 72.8%.

CURRENT LEADERS

Filip Vujanović

Position

President

Introduction

Filip Vujanović became Montenegro's president following independence in June 2006. He had served as president of Montenegro within the confederation of Serbia and Montenegro for the previous three years. Economic and structural reforms have included a programme of privatization, while closer links have been pursued with the European Union including an official application for EU membership.

Early Life

Born on 1 Sept. 1954 in Belgrade, then the capital of Yugoslavia, Vujanović was educated in Nikšić and studied law at the University of Belgrade. After graduating in 1978 he worked as a court official in Belgrade before moving south to Podgorica in 1981.

Following a period as secretary to the Podgorica district court, Vujanović worked as an attorney from 1981–93. Following the break-up of the Yugoslav Federation, Serbia and Montenegro formed the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia in 1992. In March 1993 the Montenegrin Prime Minister Đukanović appointed Vujanović as minister for justice. He served for two years, becoming a close ally of Đukanović, who adopted a pro-independence and pro-European stance. In May 1995 Vujanović took over as minister of the interior. When the ruling Democratic Party of Socialists (DPS CG) split into two factions in 1996, Vujanović backed Đukanović against his rival Momir Bulatović, a former ally of Serbian leader Slobodan Milošević.

In 1997 Đukanović was elected president of Montenegro and in Feb. 1998 Vujanović took up the premiership. While supporting Montenegro's independence campaign, he maintained good relations with Serbia. He offered his resignation in April 2002 during a constitutional crisis over ratification of a looser federation between Serbia and Montenegro.

Following legislative elections in Oct. 2002 Vujanović was appointed parliamentary speaker and stood as the DPS CG candidate for Montenegro's presidency. He won both rounds in Dec. 2002 and Feb. 2003 convincingly, but the result was declared invalid as less than 50% of the electorate voted. Parliament subsequently abolished the minimum turnout rule and Vujanović became president in March 2003 with 63% of the vote.

Career in Office

Vujanović identified Montenegro's accession to the EU and entry into NATO's Partnership for Peace programme as priorities. To these ends, he oversaw the privatization of key parts of the economy, including the banking sector and Kombinat Aluminijuma Podgorica, the country's largest industrial company. He also introduced social and judicial reforms and made a start in combating organized crime. A long-time advocate of cross-border co-operation, he opened talks on joint commercial ventures with Croatia, Slovenia and Serbia.

On 3 June 2006, following a referendum, Montenegro declared independence and on 28 June 2006 became a member of the United Nations. The country has since joined the World Bank and International Monetary Fund, and in Dec. 2008 submitted a formal application to join the EU (achieving candidate status in Dec. 2010). Its decision in Jan. 2010 to establish diplomatic relations with Kosovo, which had unilaterally declared itself independent from Serbia in 2008, has aggravated tensions with the Serbian government.

Vujanović was re-elected for a further five-year term in April 2008. In Dec. 2010 he nominated Igor Lukšić as prime minister following the resignation of Đukanović, but following parliamentary elections in Oct. 2012 Đukanović resumed the premiership at the head of a centre-left coalition. Vujanović narrowly secured a third term at the presidential election held in April 2013, defeating Miodrag Lekić of the Democratic Front.

DEFENCE

The all-professional Military of Montenegro was formed from part of the Armed Forces of Serbia and Montenegro when the two countries became independent in 2006.

Defence expenditure in 2013 totalled US$54m. (US$82 per capita), representing 1.2% of GDP.

Army

Strength (2011) 2,356. There are paramilitary forces numbering around 10,100.

Navy

Strength (2011) 402, with five patrol and coastal combatants.

ECONOMY

In 2009 agriculture accounted for 10.0% of GDP, industry 20.1% and services 69.9%.

Overview

From its independence in 2006 until the onset of the global financial crisis, Montenegro's economy experienced strong expansion. Real GDP growth averaged 9% from 2006–08, with tourism bringing large inflows of foreign direct investment and generating construction activity. The contribution of tourism to GDP rose from 15% in 2004 to 19.5% in 2012, despite a temporary decline resulting from the global crisis. In Dec. 2008 Montenegro applied to join the European Union and accession negotiations opened in 2012.

The global economic crisis prompted a deep recession. However, after contracting in 2012, GDP rebounded strongly in 2013, recording growth of 3.5% and restoring output to 2008 levels. According to the World Bank, the economy has good potential but is hindered by structural and fiscal risks.

Currency

On 2 Nov. 1999 the pro-Western government decided to make the Deutsche Mark legal tender alongside the dinar. Subsequently it was made the sole official currency, and consequently the euro (EUR) became the currency of Montenegro on 1 Jan. 2002. There was inflation of 2.2% in 2013 but deflation of 0.7% in 2014.

Budget

In 2010 consolidated general government revenue was €1,273.2m. and expenditure €1,424.2m.

VAT was raised from 17% to 19% as of 1 July 2013. The reduced rate remained at 7%.

Performance

Total GDP in 2014 was US$4.6bn. The economy shrank by 2.5% in 2012. However, it then recovered and grew by 3.3% in 2013 and 1.5% in 2014.

Banking and Finance

The Central Bank of Montenegro (Governor, Milojica Dakić) was established in Nov. 2000. Montenegro has 11 commercial banks. Foreign debt was US$1,554m. in 2010, representing 39.1% of GNI.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Electricity

Electricity production in 2012 was 2,844,456 MWh.

Minerals

Lignite production in 2012 totalled 1,785,999 tonnes; bauxite production in 2011 was 158,614 tonnes.

Agriculture

In 2011 the cultivated area was 189,100 ha. Yields (2011, in 1,000 tonnes): potatoes, 180.1; grapes, 32.8; plums, 12.1; maize, 11.7; oranges and tangerines, 7.9; wheat, 2.4. Livestock (1 Dec. 2011, 1,000 head): poultry, 470; sheep, 209; cattle, 87; pigs, 21.

Forestry

Forest area in 2010 was 0.54m. ha., covering 40% of the total land area. Timber cut in 2011: 915,000 cu. metres.

Fisheries

In 2010 the catch amounted to 1,144 tonnes, of which 53% came from marine waters.

Environment

Carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2011 were the equivalent of 25.5 tonnes per capita.

INDUSTRY

Production (2012 unless otherwise indicated, in 1,000 tonnes): crude steel (2010), 130; wheat flour, 40; steel ingots, 20; bread, 17; cigarettes, 535m. units; beer, 41.7m. litres.

Labour

In 2011 there were 163,082 people in employment, including 37,820 in wholesale and retail trade, repair of vehicles, personal and household goods; 19,195 in public administration and defence, and compulsory social security; 14,368 in manufacturing. Average gross monthly wages for 2011 were €722. Unemployment rate in 2011 was 19.7%.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

In 2013 there were 7,965 km of roads. Passenger-km in 2013 were 109m.; tonne-km of freight carried, 67m.

Rail

In 2009 there were 249 km of railway. 1.1m. passengers and 2m. tonnes of freight were carried in 2009.

Civil Aviation

The national carrier is Montenegro Airlines, which has flights to a number of cities throughout Europe. There are airports at Podgorica and Tivat, which handled 450,504 and 532,148 passengers in 2009 respectively.

Shipping

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Neolithic settlements in western North Africa date from around 6000 BC. Semi-nomadic Berber clans established a foothold in the region at the end of the second millennium BC. Phoenician and Carthaginian merchants founded coastal settlements in northern Morocco from around 500 BC. In the following centuries Roman traders established bases, including Tangier and Volubilis. Roman influence increased after the fall of Carthage in 146 BC and endured until the 5th century AD, when the region was attacked by the Vandals in AD 429 and Byzantines in AD 533.

An Arab invasion of Morocco in 682 made Islam the dominant religion although several Jewish colonies remained. The first Arab rulers established an independent Kingdom in 788 under Idris I and held sway until around 900, when Morocco fragmented into Arab and Berber tribal states. Conflict ensued with the Fatimids of Tunisia and the Umayyids of Andalusia until 1062, when the Almoravids of Marrakesh established a kingdom that stretched from Spain to Senegal.

Portuguese forces captured the port of Ceuta in 1415 and subsequently took most other Moroccan coastal towns, except Melilla and Larache which fell to Spain. The threat from Christian Portugal and Spain spurred resistance among Islamic families, culminating in the rise of Ahmed I al-Mansur, whose Sharifian dynasty unified the country between 1579 and 1603. Moors and Jews expelled from Spain settled in Morocco during this time and the country flourished.

The second Sharifian dynasty emerged in 1660 and by 1700 Moroccan forces had regained control of most ports. During the 18th and early 19th centuries the North African (Barbary) coast was notorious for piracy. The European powers vied to exploit Morocco's strategic position and resources as the century progressed, with French forces defeating Sultan Abd ar Rahman in 1844 and Spain invading in 1860.

As part of the Entente Cordiale, Britain recognized Morocco as a French sphere of influence and in 1904 Morocco was divided between France and Spain. In 1912 a Franco-Spanish agreement divided Morocco into four administrative areas: a French protectorate, the largest share of the territory, centred on Rabat; a Spanish protectorate with its capital at Tétouan; a Southern Protectorate of Morocco, administered as part of the Spanish Sahara; and the international zone of Tangier.

A revolt led by Abd al-Krim in the northern region of Rif in 1921 was crushed after five years. A nationalist movement gradually gained ground and an independence party, the Istiqlal, was formed during the Second World War. Facing growing disorder and nationalist revolts in its North African colonies, France relinquished control over Morocco in March 1956 and on 29 Oct. 1956 the international status of the Tangier Zone was abolished. Morocco became an independent kingdom on 18 Aug. 1957, with the Sultan taking the title Mohammed V.

Succeeding his father on 3 March 1961, King Hassan II tried to establish an elected House of Representatives but, following political unrest, he seized legislative and executive powers in June 1965. The country returned to partial democracy under a controversially amended constitution. Morocco annexed Western Sahara in 1975, which sparked a guerrilla war with Algerian-backed pro-independence forces (Polisario) that continued until 1991. The territory's status remains unresolved. Hassan II received plaudits for his work promoting peace in the Middle East but criticism for human rights abuses. Following his death in 1999 his son, Mohammed VI, introduced a more liberal economic and social regime but retains sweeping powers.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Morocco is bounded by Algeria to the east and southeast, Mauritania to the south, the Atlantic Ocean to the northwest and the Mediterranean to the north. Excluding the Western Saharan territory claimed and retrieved since 1976 by Morocco, the area is 446,550 sq. km. The provisional population at the 2014 census (including Western Sahara) was 33,848,242 (excluding Sahrawi refugees living in Algerian camps). Population density in 2014 (including Western Sahara), 48 per sq. km; density excluding Western Sahara, 75 per sq. km. At the 2014 census Western Sahara had a population of about 500,000 (excluding Sahrawi refugees living in Algerian camps). The Moroccan superficie is 710,850 sq. km. The population was 58.8% urban in 2011.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 34.38m.

Morocco has 12 regions, which are subdivided into 62 provinces and 13 prefectures. Regions with their census populations in 2014 (provisional) and capitals are:

Region	Population	Capital
Tangier-Tétouan-Al Hoceima	3,556,729	Tanger-Asilah (Tangier-Assilah)
Oriental	2,314,346	Oujda Angad
Fès-Meknès	4,236,892	Fès (Fez)
Rabat-Salé-Kénitra	4,580,866	Rabat
Béni Mellal-Khénifra	2,520,776	Béni Mellal
Grand Casablanca-Settat	6,861,739	Casablanca

Dakhla-Oued Eddahab ¹	142,955	Oued Eddahab

¹Laâyoune-Sakia Al Hamra and Dakhla-Oued Eddahab correspond roughly to Western Sahara.

The chief cities (with provisional populations in 1,000, 2014) are as follows:

Casablanca	3,360	Salé	890	Kénitra	431
Fez	1,112	Rabat	578	Agadir	422
Tangier	948	Meknès	520	Tétouan	381
Marrakesh	929	Oujda	494	Safi	309

The official languages are Arabic, spoken by 65% of the population, and Berber (since July 2011). Berber languages, including Tachelhit (or Soussi), Tamazight and Tarafit (or Rifia), are spoken by about half the population. French (widely used for business), Spanish (in the north) and English are also spoken.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2008 estimates: births, 645,000; deaths, 184,000. Estimated rates, 2008 (per 1,000 population): birth, 20.4; death, 5.8. Annual population growth rate, 2000–08, 1.2%. Life expectancy at birth in 2013 was 69.1 years for males and 72.7 years for females. Infant mortality, 2010, 30 per 1,000 live births; fertility rate, 2008, 2.4 births per woman.

CLIMATE

Morocco is dominated by the Mediterranean climate which is made temperate by the influence of the Atlantic Ocean in the northern and southern parts of the country. Central Morocco is continental while the south is desert. Rabat, Jan. 55°F (12.9°C), July 72°F (22.2°C). Annual rainfall 23" (564 mm). Agadir, Jan. 57°F (13.9°C), July 72°F (22.2°C). Tangier, Jan. 53°F (11.7°C), July 72°F (22.2°C). Annual rainfall 36" (897 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

The ruling King is Mohammed VI, born on 21 Aug. 1963, married to Salma Bennani on 21 March 2002; succeeded on 23 July 1999, on the death of his father Hassan II, who reigned 1961–99. Offspring: Hassan, b. 8 May 2003; Khadija, b. 28 Feb. 2007. The King holds supreme civil and religious authority, the latter in his capacity of Emir-el-Muminin or Commander of the Faithful. He resides usually at Rabat, but occasionally in one of the other traditional capitals, Fez (founded in 808), Marrakesh (founded in 1062), or at Skhirat.

In Feb. and March 2011, Morocco experienced popular protests echoing those occurring in other North African states. In response King Mohammed established a commission to bring about 'comprehensive constitutional reform'. It recommended that: the king select the prime minister from the party with the greatest parliamentary representation; the prime minister, not the king, be head of government and have the power to dissolve parliament; parliament have greater influence on civil rights, nationality issues and electoral law; women be guaranteed 'civic and social' equality with men; the Berber language become an official state language; and a reference to the king as 'sacred' be removed from the constitution. It also provides for the independence of the judiciary. On 1 July 2011 the reforms won 98.5% support in a referendum (turnout: 73.5%), although some opponents claimed electoral irregularities.

The new constitution came into effect on 29 July 2011, ahead of the parliamentary elections four months later. It replaced an earlier constitution that was approved in March 1972 and amended several times. The Kingdom of Morocco is a constitutional monarchy. Parliament consists of a House of Representatives composed of 395 deputies (up from 325 for the 2007 elections) directly elected for five-year terms. A referendum on 13 Sept. 1996 established a second House of Councillors, which since 2011 has been composed of a minimum of 90 and a maximum of 120 indirectly elected members serving six-year terms, with one-third renewed every two years. The House of Councillors has power to initiate legislation, issue warnings of censure to the government and ultimately to force the government's resignation by a two-thirds majority vote.

An electoral code of March 1997 fixed voting at 20 and made enrolment on the electoral roll compulsory. In Dec. 2002 King Mohammed VI announced that the voting age was to be lowered from 20 to 18.

CURRENT LEADERS

Mohammed VI ibn al-Hasan

Position
King

Introduction

Mohammed VI ibn al-Hasan was crowned King in July 1999 after the death of his father, King Hassan II. Less austere than his father, he has promoted modest political reforms while retaining ultimate authority. He has also encouraged private investment in key economic sectors, although there is still widespread hardship and high unemployment.

Early Life

King Mohammed VI was born on 21 Aug. 1963 in Rabat, Morocco. In 1985 he graduated from the College of Law in the Rabat Mohammed V University. In 1987 he took a degree in political science and in 1993 was awarded a law doctorate from the French University of Nice-Sophia Antipolis.

Mohammed undertook his first official royal duty aged 11 and by the time he was 20 he had led a Moroccan delegation to the Franco-African conference and negotiated with the Organization of African Unity (now the African Union) over the Western Sahara conflict.

Appointed head of the general staff of the Royal Armed Forces in 1985, he succeeded to the throne in 1999.

Career in Office

Mohammed voiced support for developing a market economy and urged increased private sector investment. However, economic liberalization has not significantly alleviated Morocco's widespread poverty or reduced unemployment. Political power remained concentrated in the monarchy until protests in early 2011—reflecting disaffection across much of the Arab world—prompted Mohammed to cede constitutional reforms in July that year, with some of the monarchy's powers being transferred to parliament and the prime minister. In line with the new constitution, Mohammed was obliged to choose Abdelilah Benkirane as his new premier following the Islamist Party of Justice and Development's victory in parliamentary elections in Nov. 2011.

In foreign policy, Mohammed has co-operated with the USA in its anti-terror initiatives since the Sept. 2001 attacks. Morocco has itself been targeted by terrorist violence, including co-ordinated suicide bombings in Casablanca in May 2003 and further incidents in 2007 and April 2011. Elsewhere, Mohammed has expressed support for Palestinian claims to their own independent state.

In 2002 the King came into conflict with Spain when Moroccan forces landed on the uninhabited island of Perejil (a Spanish possession since 1668) off the Moroccan coast. Spain launched a bloodless counter-assault before withdrawing its troops on the understanding that neither country would occupy the island. In Jan. 2006 Spain's then prime minister, Rodríguez Zapatero, became the first Spanish leader in 25 years to make an official visit to the enclaves of Melilla and Ceuta. However, a subsequent visit to the territories by Spain's King Juan Carlos in Nov. 2007 was criticized by Mohammed, and tension arose again in Aug. 2010 following incidents near the Melilla border.

Abdelilah Benkirane

Position
Prime Minister

Introduction

Abdelilah Benkirane became prime minister in Nov. 2011 after his moderate, left-leaning Islamist party won a majority at the Arab Spring-inspired legislative elections.

Early Life

Benkirane was born in al-Akkari, a working class suburb of Rabat, on 4 April 1954. In 1979 he graduated in science and mechanical engineering from Rabat's Mohammed V University. While a student he joined Chabiba Islamiya (Islamic Youth), a banned militant group, but later distanced himself from the organization.

During the early 1980s he established a private school in Rabat and taught physics there. In 1983 he jointly founded a moderate, left-leaning Islamist group, Al Jamaa Al Islamiya, which recognized the legitimacy of the monarchy. Benkirane oversaw the party's gradual development during the 1980s despite official resistance to a fully-fledged Islamist political party.

Al Jamaa Al Islamiya received a setback in 1992 when civil war broke out between Islamist and government forces in neighbouring Algeria. However, in 1997 Benkirane and other moderate Islamists joined forces with the ailing Popular Democratic and Constitutional Movement (MPDC), with the encouragement of the interior minister, Driss Basri. In elections in Nov. that year, Benkirane was elected as representative for the coastal city of Salé. The following year the MPDC changed its name to the Party of Justice and Development (PJD), putting its support behind the new socialist prime minister, Abderrahmane Youssoufi.

In the Sept. 2002 parliamentary elections Benkirane was re-elected for Salé while the PJD won in most of the districts where it was permitted to field candidates, taking 42 parliamentary seats. In May 2003 a series of suicide bombings perpetrated by the radical Islamist group, Salafia Jihadia, killed 45 in Casablanca and put all of Morocco's Islamist groups under the spotlight. Amid opposition calls for the PJD to be disbanded, Benkirane eschewed the 'Islamist' label, opting instead to describe the party as of 'Islamic reference'. He was elected PJD leader in July 2008, succeeding Saadeddine Othmani.

Echoing similar action across the Arab world, Rabat and other cities witnessed reformist protests in Feb. 2011. Following approval in a referendum, King Mohammed VI amended the constitution in July 2011 to give new powers to the prime minister, to be selected from the largest party in parliament. In elections on 25 Nov. 2011 the PJD took 107 seats, almost twice as many as the second place Istiqlal Party. Benkirane had campaigned on a platform of fighting corruption, reforming the education system and creating jobs. The PJD formed a coalition with three parties that had been part of previous governments and Benkirane was appointed premier on 29 Nov. 2011.

Career in Office

Benkirane set an ambitious goal of average GDP growth of more than 5% per year and of bringing down unemployment to below 8% by 2017. However, in May 2012 tens of thousands rallied in Casablanca demanding jobs and accusing the government of failing to deliver on promised reforms.

Following the resignation of the Istiqlal Party from the governing coalition in mid-2013, Benkirane forged a power-sharing agreement with the National Rally of Independents and the new administration was appointed by the king in Oct. that year. He has retained a high approval rating in opinion polls—around 60% in March 2015, particularly among younger Moroccans—compared to his predecessors and political opponents.

DEFENCE

Compulsory national military service was abolished in 2006. Defence expenditure in 2013 totalled US$3,730m. (US$114 per capita), representing 3.5% of GDP.

Army

The Army is deployed in two commands: Northern Zone and Southern Zone. There is also a Royal Guard of 1,500. Strength in 2011 was an estimated 175,000 (100,000 conscripts). There is also a Royal Gendarmerie of 20,000, an Auxiliary Force of 30,000 and reserves of 150,000.

Navy

The Navy includes three frigates, 49 patrol and coastal combatants and six amphibious craft.

Personnel in 2011 numbered 7,800, including 1,500 marines. Bases are located at Casablanca, Agadir, Al Hoceima, Dakhla and Tangier.

Air Force

Personnel strength (2011) 13,000, with 72 combat-capable aircraft, including F-5s and Mirage F-1s.

INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

The land border between Morocco and Algeria has been closed since 1994 following a hotel bombing in Marrakesh in which Algeria was suspected of being involved.

ECONOMY

Agriculture accounted for 16.4% of GDP in 2009, industry 28.6% and services 55.0%.

Overview

The coalition government formed at the start of 2012 in the aftermath of popular protests the previous year embarked on cutting public subsidies, reforming pensions and encouraging greater competition. Public service reform was also high on the agenda with a view to improving education and healthcare provision.

Despite the regional unrest resulting from the Arab Spring, growth averaged almost 4% per year between 2010 and 2013. Trade is focused on the European Union, which in 2010 accounted for 59.3% of exports and 57.2% of imports. In March 2012 an agreement between the EU and Morocco abolishing tariffs on a range of industrial goods came into force.

Extreme poverty stands at only 0.3% but income inequality is stubbornly high, with 13.3% of the population living just above the poverty line. Agriculture remains a key industry along with fisheries and forestry. About 33% of the rural poor are employed in the informal agricultural sector. Unemployment stood at 9.2% in 2013, but urban youth unemployment measured over 35%. The labour participation rate is among the lowest among developing economies. Long-term job creation requires an improvement in the general business environment.

Currency

The unit of currency is the dirham (MAD) of 100 centimes, introduced in 1959. Foreign exchange reserves were US$14,710m. in July 2005, gold reserves 708,000 troy oz and total money supply was DH353,598m. Inflation was 1.9% in 2013 and 0.4% in 2014.

Budget

Revenues in 2012 totalled DH228.0bn. and expenditures DH293.9bn. Tax revenue accounted for 88.0% of revenues; current expenditure accounted for 80.1% of total expenditures.

VAT is 20% (reduced rates, 14%, 10% and 7%).

Performance

Real GDP growth was 3.0% in 2012, 4.7% in 2013 and 2.4% in 2014. Total GDP in 2014 was US$110.0bn. (including Western Sahara).

Banking and Finance

The central bank is the Bank Al Maghrib (Governor, Abdellatif Jouahri), which had assets of DH226,667m. in Dec. 2011. The largest bank is Attijariwafa Bank, with assets of US$40.0bn. in Dec. 2011. Other leading banks are Banque Populaire and BMCE Bank. Morocco's external debt amounted to US$25,403m. in 2010 (equivalent to 28.1% of GNI), up from US$16,174m. in 2005.

There is a stock exchange in Casablanca.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption and flaring of fossil fuels in 2011 were the equivalent of 1.3 tonnes per capita.

Electricity

Installed capacity was 6.7m. kW in 2011. Production was 24.36bn. kWh (approximately 88% thermal) in 2011 and consumption per capita 904 kWh. Morocco aims to have over 40% of its electricity from renewables by 2020 following the opening of a new solar power station in Feb. 2016.

Oil and Gas

Natural gas reserves in 2013 were 1.4bn. cu. metres; output (2009), 44m. cu. metres. Offshore exploration for oil is currently under way.

Minerals

The principal mineral exploited is phosphate (Morocco has the largest reserves in the world), the output of which was 27.24m. tonnes in 2006. Other minerals (in tonnes, 2006) are: barytine, 628,400; salt, 506,700; zinc, 148,700; lead, 59,100; iron, 35,500; copper, 17,800; manganese, 4,815; silver, 246.

Agriculture

Agricultural production is subject to drought; about 1.35m. ha. were irrigated in 2002. 85% of farmland is individually owned. Only 1% of farms are over 50 ha.; most are under 3 ha. There were 8.40m. ha. of arable land in 2002 and 887,000 ha. of permanent crops. Main land usage, 2003 (in 1,000 ha.): wheat, 2,989; barley, 2,267; maize, 247. There were 43,226 tractors in 2001 and 3,763 harvester-threshers. Production in 2003 (in 1,000 tonnes): wheat, 5,147; sugar beets, 3,428; barley, 2,620; potatoes, 1,435; tomatoes, 1,004. Livestock, 2002: sheep, 16.34m.; goats, 5.09m.; cattle, 2.67m.; asses, 982,000; chickens, 137m. Livestock products in 2003 included (in 1,000 tonnes): milk, 1,311; meat, 598.

Forestry

Forests covered 5.13m. ha. in 2010, or 11% of the total land area. Timber production was 7.13m. cu. metres in 2011.

Fisheries

Total catch in 2010 was 1,136,240 tonnes (sea fish, 1,129,014 tonnes). Morocco's annual catch is the highest of any African country.

INDUSTRY

The leading companies by market capitalization in Morocco in March 2015 were Maroc Telecom, US$11.7bn.; and Attijariwafa Bank, US$7.7bn.

In 2006 industry contributed 27.8% of GDP, with manufacturing accounting for 16.5%. Production in 1,000 tonnes (2004 unless otherwise indicated): cement, 9,828; residual fuel oil, 2,264; distillate fuel oil, 2,254; sugar (2005), 1,059; petrol, 257; paper and paperboard (2005 estimate), 129; olive oil (2004–05), 50.

Labour

The labour force in 2013 was 12,256,000 (10,629,000 in 2003). 52.5% of the population aged 15–64 was economically active in 2013. In the same year 9.2% of the population was unemployed. Of those in employment in 2012, 39.4% worked in services, 39.2% in agriculture and 21.4% in industry. 26.9% of the labour force in 2012 was female.

Morocco had 51,000 people living in slavery according to the Walk Free Foundation's 2013 Global Slavery Index.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

Imports (c.i.f.) in 2010 were US$35,379m. and exports (f.o.b.) US$17,765m. Imports in 2006 included: machinery and transport equipment, 27.7%; mineral fuels, 21.6%; chemicals and related products, 9.7%; food and live animals, 7.0%. Exports included: apparel and clothing accessories, 25.8%; machinery and transport equipment, 17.2%; chemicals and related products, 13.4%; fish and seafood, 9.3%. Main import suppliers, 2006: France, 16.5%; Spain, 11.6%; Saudi Arabia, 6.8%; Italy, 6.4%. Main export markets, 2006: France, 28.4%; Spain, 20.8%; UK, 6.0%; Italy, 4.9%.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

In 2007 there were 57,799 km of classified roads, including 813 km of motorways and 11,251 km of main roads. By 2010 the motorway network had been extended to 1,042 km. In 2007 freight transport totalled 697m. tonne-km. In 2007 there were 1,644,500 passenger cars in use, 525,300 lorries and vans and 22,800 motorcycles and mopeds. There were 58,924 road accidents in 2007 (3,838 fatalities).

Rail

In 2010 there were 2,109 km of railways, of which 1,284 km were electrified. Passenger-km travelled in 2009 came to 4.19bn. and freight tonne-km to 4.11bn. Construction began in 2011 of Morocco's first high speed rail link, initially from Tangier to Kénitra and eventually to Casablanca. In 2003 the construction of two 38 km-long rail tunnels under the Straits of Gibraltar was agreed in principle with Morocco. However, as of 2015 there were still no firm plans to begin the project.

Civil Aviation

The national carrier is Royal Air Maroc, which in 2013 carried 5,856,000 passengers (5,170,000 on international flights). The major international airport is Mohammed V at Casablanca; there are eight other airports. Casablanca handled 7,186,331 passengers in 2012 (6,551,781 on international flights) and 50,567 tonnes of freight. Marrakesh (Menara) handled 3,373,475 passengers in 2012 and Agadir (Al Massira) 1,384,931.

Shipping

The busiest ports are Casablanca (which handled 26,572,000 tonnes of foreign cargo in 2008), Mohammedia, Nador, Tanger Med and Tangier. In Jan. 2009 there were 37 ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 341,000 GT.

Telecommunications

In 2013 there were 2,925,000 main (fixed) telephone lines; mobile phone subscribers numbered 42,424,000 in 2013 (128.5 per 100 persons). The main telecommunication company is Maroc Telecom, which was privatized in 2001. Maroc Telecom's principal competitor is Méditel. 56.0% of the population were internet users in 2013. In June 2012 there were 4.6m. Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The legal system is based on French and Islamic law codes. There are a Supreme Court, 21 courts of appeal, 65 courts of first instance, 196 centres with resident judges and 706 communal jurisdictions for petty offences.

The population in penal institutions in Jan. 2013 was approximately 72,000 (220 per 100,000 of national population). On ascending to the throne in July 1999, King Mohammed VI pardoned and ordered the release of 7,988 prisoners and reduced the terms of 38,224 others. In 2015 the World Justice Project Rule of Law Index, which provides data on how the rule of law is experienced by the general public across eight categories, ranked Morocco 86th of 102 countries for criminal justice and 54th for civil justice.

Education

The adult literacy rate in 2009 was 56.1% (68.9% among males and 43.9% among females). Education in Berber languages has been permitted since 1994; Berber languages were officially added to the syllabus in 2003. Education is compulsory from the age of six to 15. In 2008–09 pre-primary schools had an estimated 33,000 teachers for 722,000 children and there were 145,000 teachers at primary schools for 3,851,000 pupils. In 2006–07 there were 2,173,000 pupils in secondary schools. There were 20,000 teaching staff at universities for 419,000 students in 2008–09. The University of al-Karaouine, founded in Fez in 859, is considered to be the oldest university in the world. There is an English-language university at Ifrane.

In 2008 public expenditure on education came to 5.6% of GDP.

Health

In 2006 there were 18,269 physicians, 3,473 dentists, 27,658 paramedical personnel and 8,002 pharmacists. There were 133 public hospitals in 2006 with about 27,000 beds, a provision of 87 beds per 100,000 inhabitants.

RELIGION

Islam is the established state religion. 99% of the population are Sunni Muslims. There is also a small Catholic minority.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

Morocco has nine sites on the UNESCO World Heritage List: the Medina of Fez (inscribed on the list in 1981); the Medina of Marrakesh (1985); the Ksar of Ait-Ben-Haddou (1987); the Historic City of Meknès (1996); the Archaeological Site of Volubilis (1997 and 2008); the Medina of Tétouan (1997); the Medina of Essaouira/Magador (2001); the Portuguese City of Mazagan, now part of the city of El Jadida (2004); and Rabat, Modern Capital and Historic City (2012).

Press

In 2008 there were 33 paid-for daily newspapers. The leading dailies are the Arabic-language Al-Massae, Assabah and Al-Ahdath al-Maghrebia and the French-language Le Matin du Sahara et du Maghreb.

Tourism

In 2010 there were a record 9,288,000 non-resident tourists (excluding same-day visitors), up from 8,341,000 in 2009 and 8,209,000 in 2008.

Western Sahara

GENERAL DETAILS

The Western Sahara was designated a non-decolonized territory by the United Nations in 1975, its borders having been marked as a result of agreements made between France, Spain and Morocco in 1900, 1904 and 1912. Since the mid-1970s, following Spain's administrative withdrawal and Mauritania's renunciation of its territorial claims, sovereignty over the area has been in dispute between Morocco and the Algerian-backed Polisario Front (Popular Front for the Liberation of the Saguia el Hamra and Rio de Oro), which proclaimed a government-in-exile of the Sahrawi Arab Democratic Republic in Feb. 1976. Morocco has resisted autonomy proposals by the UN, which has maintained a peacekeeping mission to the territory since 1991. In Aug. 2014 it numbered 213 uniformed personnel from 35 countries.

Approximate area, 264,300 sq. km (102,000 sq. miles). Around 500,000 inhabitants are within Moroccan jurisdiction. Another estimated 100,000 Sahrawis live in refugee camps around Tindouf in southwest Algeria. The main towns are El-Aaiún (Laâyoune), the capital (provisional population of 217,732 at the 2014 census), Dakhla and Es-Semara.

Life expectancy at birth (2005–10) male, 64.3 years; female, 68.1 years. Birth rate (2005–10) per 1,000 population: 22.6; death rate: 5.9.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 573,000.

The population is Arabic-speaking, and almost entirely Sunni Muslim.

President: Mohammed Abdelaziz.

Prime Minister: Abdelkader Taleb Oumar.

Rich phosphate deposits were discovered in 1963 at Bu Craa. Morocco holds 100% of the shares of the former Spanish state-controlled company Phosboucraa. Production reached 5.6m. tonnes in 1975, but exploitation has been severely reduced by guerrilla activity. After a nearly complete collapse, production and transportation of phosphate resumed in 1978, ceased again, and then resumed in 1982. Installed electrical capacity was an estimated 58,000 kW in 2007, with production in 2007 of approximately 90m. kWh. Carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption and flaring of fossil fuels in 2008 were the equivalent of 0.8 tonnes per capita. There are about 6,100 km of motorable tracks, but only about 500 km of paved roads. There are airports at El-Aaiún and Dakhla. As most of the land is desert, less than 19% is in agricultural use, with about 2,000 tonnes of grain produced annually. Forests covered 0.71m. ha. in 2010, or 3% of the total land area. There are hospitals at El-Aaiún, Dakhla and Es-Semara.

Zambézia	105,008	3,849,455	Quelimane

The capital is Maputo (2007 population, 1,094,628). Other large cities (with 2007 populations) are Matola (671,556), Nampula (471,717) and Beira (431,583).

The main ethnolinguistic groups are the Makua/Lomwe (52% of the population), the Tsonga/Ronga (24%), the Nyanja/Sena (12%) and Shona (6%).

Portuguese remains the official language, but vernaculars are widely spoken throughout the country. English is also widely spoken.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2008 estimates: births, 877,000; deaths, 357,000. Estimated rates per 1,000 population, 2008: births, 39.2; deaths, 15.9. Infant mortality per 1,000 live births, 2010, 92. Life expectancy at birth, 2013, was 49.3 years for males and 51.0 years for females. Annual population growth rate, 2000–08, 2.6%; fertility rate, 2008, 5.1 births per woman.

CLIMATE

A humid tropical climate, with a dry season from June to Sept. In general, temperatures and rainfall decrease from north to south. Maputo, Jan. 78°F (25.6°C), July 65°F (18.3°C). Annual rainfall 30" (760 mm). Beira, Jan. 82°F (27.8°C), July 69°F (20.6°C). Annual rainfall 60" (1,522 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

On 2 Nov. 1990 the People's Assembly unanimously voted in favour of a new constitution, which came into force on 30 Nov. This changed the name of the state to 'Republic of Mozambique', legalized opposition parties, provided for universal secret elections and introduced a bill of rights including the right to strike, press freedoms and habeas corpus. The head of state is the President, directly elected for a five-year term. Parliament is a 250-member Assembly of the Republic, elected for a five-year term by proportional representation.

National Anthem

'Patria Amada' ('Beloved Motherland'); words and tune by J. Sigaulane Chemane.

RECENT ELECTIONS

In the parliamentary elections of 15 Oct. 2014 the Liberation Front of Mozambique (FRELIMO) won 144 of the 250 seats with 55.9% of the vote, the Mozambican National Resistance (RENAMO) 89 with 32.5% and the Democratic Movement of Mozambique 17 with 8.4%. Turnout was 48.6%.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Mozambique was at first ruled as part of Portuguese India but a separate administration was created in 1752. Following a decade of guerrilla activity, independence was achieved on 25 June 1975. A one-party state dominated by the Liberation Front of Mozambique (FRELIMO) was set up but armed insurgency led by the Mozambican National Resistance (RENAMO) continued until 4 Oct. 1992. The peace treaty provided for all weapons to be handed over to the UN and all armed groups to be disbanded within six months. In 1994 the country held its first multi-party elections. In early 2000 some 700 people died in the floods that made thousands homeless.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Mozambique is bounded east by the Indian Ocean, south by South Africa, southwest by Swaziland, west by South Africa and Zimbabwe and north by Zambia, Malaŵi and Tanzania. It has an

In the presidential election, also held on 15 Oct. 2014, Filipe Nyusi of FRELIMO took 57.0% of the vote against 36.6% for RENAMO's Afonso Dhlakama and 6.4% for Daviz Simango of the Democratic Movement of Mozambique. Turnout was 48.5%.

CURRENT LEADERS

Filipe Nyusi

Position

President

Introduction

Filipe Nyusi took office in Jan. 2015 as the fourth successive Liberation Front of Mozambique (FRELIMO) head of state.

Early Life

Filipe Nyusi was born on 9 Feb. 1959 in Namau, in the province of Cabo Delgado, to parents who were members of the FRELIMO movement. After fighting broke out in the mid-1960s, he became a refugee in Tanzania where he attended a FRELIMO school in Tunduru. In 1973 he received political and military training at its base in Nachingwea.

He then returned to Mozambique and completed his schooling before studying mechanical engineering at Brno University of Technology in Czechoslovakia. From 1992 he worked at Mozambique's ports and railways authority (CFM), and from 1993–95 he served as director of railways of the northern division (CFM-Norte). Between 1995 and 2007 he was its managing director. In 1999 he undertook postgraduate studies in management at the UK's Victoria University of Manchester (now the University of Manchester). In 2007 he was appointed to CFM's board of directors.

From 2008–14 Nyusi served as defence minister under President Guebuza. In Sept. 2012 he was elected to FRELIMO's central committee and in March 2014 entered the contest to be its presidential candidate. Regarded as a close ally of President Guebuza—in contrast to his main rival, former prime minister

Luisa Diogo—Nyusi achieved an outright majority of 68% in the second round of voting.

In Sept. 2014, after the Mozambican National Resistance (RENAMO) had called off its low-level insurgency, campaigning got under way for the Oct. 2014 general elections. RENAMO and the Democratic Movement of Mozambique were the leading opposition parties. Nyusi campaigned on pledges to continue developing the oil and gas industries and address wealth disparity. In a closely fought race, he emerged the victor with 57% of the vote. Following the vote, opposition parties made allegations of electoral fraud; RENAMO boycotted the first sitting of parliament but promised not to resume violence.

Career in Office

Nyusi took office on 15 Jan. 2015. His cabinet appointments were regarded as a sign that he was distancing himself from his predecessor and tending more towards consensus politics. His principal challenges are to improve living standards for the general population and manage political discontent in order to avoid a return to unrest.

DEFENCE

The President of the Republic is C.-in-C. of the armed forces. Defence expenditure totalled US$75m. in 2013 (US$3 per capita), representing 0.5% of GDP. Conscription for both men and women is for two years.

Army

Personnel numbered around 9–10,000 in 2011.

Navy

Naval personnel in 2011 were believed to total 200.

Air Force

Personnel (2011) 1,000 (including air defence units). There were two attack helicopters although their serviceability was in doubt but no combat-capable aircraft.

ECONOMY

Agriculture accounted for 31.5% of GDP in 2009, industry 23.6% and services 44.9%.

Overview

Following the end of civil war in 1992, political stability alongside fiscal and structural reform contributed to sound economic growth. Between 1993 and 2009 Mozambique had the fastest-growing non-oil economy in sub-Saharan Africa, with growth averaging 7.5% per year. However, poverty remains widespread, with the country ranked close to the bottom of the Human Development Index.

Natural disasters are an ongoing threat. Floods in Jan.–Feb. 2013 damaged crops and infrastructure, leading to inflation underpinned by rising food prices. Long-term challenges include diversifying the economy and improving education, health and infrastructure provision.

Currency

The unit of currency is the new metical (MZN) of 100 centavos, which replaced the metrical (MZM) in July 2006. The currency was revalued at a rate of 1 new metical = 1,000 meticais. Inflation was 4.2% in 2013 and 2.3% in 2014. Foreign exchange reserves were US$979m. in July 2005 and total money supply was 18,258.3bn. meticais.

Budget

In 2011 revenues were 108,208m. meticais and expenditures 121,410m. meticais.

Performance

Mozambique is one of Africa's fastest-expanding economies. There was real GDP growth of 7.1% in 2012 and 7.4% in both 2013 and 2014. Total GDP in 2014 was US$15.9bn.

Banking and Finance

Most banks had been nationalized by 1979. The central bank and bank of issue is the Bank of Mozambique (Governor, Ernesto Gouveia Gove) which hived off its commercial functions in 1992 to the newly founded Commercial Bank of Mozambique. It in turn merged in 2001 with Banco Internacional de Moçambique, which now trades as Millennium bim and is the country's largest bank. In July 2010 the Bank of Mozambique had external assets of US$2,105.0m. In 2008 there were 14 commercial banks, one microbank and six credit co-operatives. The Mozambique Stock Exchange opened in Maputo in Oct. 1999. By the late 1990s financial services had become one of the fastest-growing areas of the economy. Foreign debt was US$4,124m. in 2010, representing 43.8% of GNI.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2011 were the equivalent of 0.2 tonnes per capita.

Electricity

Installed capacity was 2.5m. kW in 2011. Production in 2011 was 16.83bn. kWh; consumption per capita was 547 kWh.

Oil and Gas

Since 2010 there have been prolific natural gas discoveries in the northern offshore Rovuma basin. In 2013 natural gas reserves were 2.8trn. cu. metres; output in 2009 was 2.9bn. cu. metres. Mozambique could potentially become one of the world's largest liquefied natural gas exporters. Both onshore and offshore foreign companies are prospecting for oil.

Minerals

There are deposits of pegamite, tantalite, graphite, apatite, tin, iron ore and bauxite. Other known reserves are: nepheline, syenite, magnetite, copper, garnet, kaolin, asbestos, bentonite, limestone, gold, titanium and tin. Mozambique also has extensive—largely unexploited—coal reserves. Output in 2005 (in 1,000 tonnes): aluminium, 554; sea salt (estimate), 80; bauxite, 10; coal, 3.

Agriculture

All land is owned by the state but concessions are given. There were an estimated 4.2m. ha. of arable land in 2002 and 0.24m. ha. of permanent crops. Around 107,000 ha. were irrigated in 2002. There were about 5,750 tractors in 2002. Production in 1,000 tonnes (2003): cassava, 6,150; maize, 1,248; sugarcane, 400; sorghum, 314; coconuts, 265; rice, 200; groundnuts, 110. Livestock, 2003 estimates: 1.32m. cattle, 392,000 goats, 180,000 pigs, 125,000 sheep, 28m. chickens.

Forestry

In 2010 there were 39.02m. ha. of forests, or 50% of the land area, including eucalyptus, pine and rare hardwoods. In 2011 timber production was 18.20m. cu. metres.

Fisheries

The catch in 2010 was 150,634 tonnes, of which 118,893 tonnes were from sea fishing.

INDUSTRY

Although the country is overwhelmingly rural, there is some substantial industry in and around Maputo (steel, engineering, textiles, processing, docks and railways). A huge aluminium smelter, Mozal, was constructed in two phases—the last phase was completed in 2003. Production exceeds its theoretical annual capacity of 506,000 tonnes and is a focal point in the country's strategy of attracting foreign investment.

Labour

The labour force in 2013 was 12,105,000 (9,332,000 in 2003). 84.5% of the population aged 15–64 was economically active in 2013. In the same year 22.5% of the population was unemployed.

Mozambique had 0.17m. people living in slavery according to the Walk Free Foundation's 2013 Global Slavery Index.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

Imports (c.i.f.) totalled US$2,869m. in 2006 (US$2,408m. in 2005). Exports (f.o.b.) totalled US$2,381m. in 2006 (US$1,783m. in 2005). Principal imports in 2003: mineral fuels, 16.5%; machinery and apparatus, 16.2%; foodstuffs, 12.3%; transport equipment, 9.0%. Principal exports in 2003: aluminium, 54.4%; electricity, 10.9%; prawns, 7.3%; cotton, 3.1%. Main import suppliers in 2003: South Africa, 37.3%; Australia, 12.1%; USA, 5.9%; India, 4.2%. Main export markets in 2003: Belgium, 43.5%; South Africa, 16.2%; Spain, 6.7%; Portugal, 3.7%.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

In 2008 there were 29,323 km of roads, of which 17.9% were paved. There were 290,600 vehicles in 2008. There were 5,438 road accidents in 2008, with 1,529 fatalities. The flooding of early 2000 washed away at least one fifth of the country's main road linking the north and the south.

Rail

The railway system consists of three separate networks, with principal routes on 1,067 mm gauge radiating from the ports of Maputo, Beira and Nacala. Total length in 2009 was 3,116 km, mainly on 1,067 mm gauge with some 762 mm gauge lines, but only 1,929 km was operational. In 2009 passenger-km travelled on the Mozambique Ports and Railways network came to 164m. and freight tonne-km to 2,078m.

Civil Aviation

There are international airports at Maputo and Beira. The national carrier is the state-owned Linhas Aéreas de Moçambique (LAM), which in 2013 carried 684,000 passengers (462,000 on domestic flights). In the same year it served ten domestic and five international destinations. In 2012 Maputo handled 839,390 passengers (454,236 on international flights) and Beira 164,324 (105,467 on domestic flights).

Shipping

The principal ports are Maputo, Beira, Nacala and Quelimane. In Jan. 2009 there were six ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 5,000 GT.

Telecommunications

There were 5,971,000 mobile phone subscribers in 2009 (260.8 per 1,000 inhabitants), up from just 51,000 in 2000. Fixed telephone lines numbered 82,400 in 2009, down from 87,400 in 2002. In 2009 there were 92,000 mobile broadband subscriptions and 12,500 fixed broadband internet subscriptions. There were 248,000 Facebook users in June 2012.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The 1990 constitution provides for an independent judiciary, habeas corpus, and an entitlement to legal advice on arrest. The death penalty was abolished in Nov. 1990.

The population in penal institutions in Oct. 2010 was 15,249 (65 per 100,000 of national population).

Education

The adult literacy rate in 2008 was 54%.

In 2007 there were 4,563,633 pupils with 70,389 teaching staff in primary schools; and 444,926 pupils with 12,064 teaching staff at secondary schools. Private schools and universities were permitted to function in 1990. There were 28,298 students and 3,009 academic staff in higher education in 2005. The largest higher education institution is the Eduardo Mondlane University, founded in 1962 and granted university status in 1968.

In 2006 public expenditure on education came to 5.8% of GNI and 21.0% of total government spending.

Health

There were (2004) 46 hospitals, 722 health centres and 479 medical posts. There were two psychiatric hospitals. In 2012 there were four doctors for every 100,000 population, 41 nurses and midwives for every 100,000 and six pharmaceutical personnel per 100,000. Private health care was introduced alongside the national health service in 1992.

RELIGION

According to estimates by the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life, in 2010 the population was 56.7% Christian and 18.0% Muslim; 7.4% were folk religionists and 17.9% religiously unaffiliated. Of the Christians in 2010, an estimated 51% were Catholics and 48% Protestants. In Feb. 2016 there were two cardinals.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

Mozambique has one site on the UNESCO World Heritage List: the Island of Mozambique (inscribed on the list in 1991), a Portuguese trading post with a style of architecture unchanged since the 16th century.

Press

There were two well-established daily newspapers in 2008 (Notícias and Diário in Maputo and Beira respectively) with a combined circulation of 13,000.

Tourism

Tourism is a potential growth area for the country. There were 3,110,000 non-resident visitors in 2009 (2,617,000 in 2008).

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

After Burma's invasion of the kingdom of Assam, the British East India Company retaliated in defence of its Indian interests and in 1826 drove the Burmese out of India. Territory was annexed in south Burma but the kingdom of Upper Burma, ruled from Mandalay, remained independent. A second war with Britain in 1852 ended with the British annexation of the Irrawaddy Delta. In 1885 the British invaded and occupied Upper Burma. In 1886 all Burma became a province of the Indian empire. There were violent uprisings in the 1930s and in 1937 Burma was separated from India and permitted some degree of self-government.

Independence was achieved in 1948. In 1958 there was an army coup, and another in 1962 led by Gen. Ne Win, who installed a Revolutionary Council and dissolved parliament.

The Council lasted until March 1974 when the country became a one-party socialist republic. On 18 Sept. 1988 the Armed Forces seized power and set up the State Law and Order Restoration Council (SLORC). Since then civil unrest has accounted for thousands of deaths. On 19 June 1989 the government changed the name of the country in English to the Union of Myanmar. Aung San Suu Kyi, leader of the opposition National League for Democracy (NLD), was put under house arrest in July 1989. In spite of her continuing detention, her party won the 1990 election by a landslide, but the military junta refused to accept the results. In 1992 Than Shwe became national leader, beginning 19 years of hard-line rule until he stepped down in 2011. Aung San Suu Kyi was freed in July 1995 but was detained again on several further occasions before being released most recently in Nov. 2010.

In Aug. 2007 the government implemented fuel price hikes that prompted public protests, led chiefly by students and political activists. Despite the authorities taking a hard line, the demonstrations were given renewed force when several thousand monks came out in support in mid-Sept. The government crackdown, during which thousands of monks were reportedly rounded up and several protesters killed, brought condemnation from the international community.

In May 2008 the Irrawaddy delta suffered a cyclone that caused massive damage, claimed an estimated 145,000 lives and left 1m. people displaced. Nonetheless, the following week the government proceeded with a referendum on a new constitution, which it claimed secured 92% support. In Nov. 2010 the pro-government Union Solidarity and Development Party won the first elections for 20 years. Thein Sein became president, overseeing a transition towards civilian rule, although the military has retained significant influence within government. Having dominated a series of by-elections in April 2012 (with Aung San Suu Kyi among those winning a seat in parliament), the NLD secured enough seats at the general election in Nov. 2015 to form the next government. Htin Kyaw became president on 1 April 2016, although Aung San Suu Kyi is the de facto leader of the NLD administration. Since 2012 there have been sporadic outbreaks of communal violence between Buddhists (the majority religious group) and Muslims. In July and Aug. 2015 widespread flooding left around 1m. people displaced.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Myanmar is bounded in the east by China, Laos and Thailand, and west by the Indian Ocean, Bangladesh and India. Three parallel mountain ranges run from north to south; the Western Yama or Rakhine Yama, the Bagu Yama and the Shaun Plateau. The total area of the Union is 676,590 sq. km (261,230 sq. miles), including 23,070 sq. km (8,910 sq. miles) of inland water. In 2014 the census population was 51,486,253; density, 78.8 per sq. km. In 2011, 34.3% of the population lived in urban areas.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 53.90m.

The administrative capital is Naypyidaw (Pyinmana); its census population was 1,160,242 in 2014. The largest city is Yangon (Rangoon), with a population of 7,360,703 in 2014. Other leading towns are Mandalay (2014 population of 1,225,546), Bago (Pegu), Hpa-an (Pha-an), Taunggyi, Monywa and Myitkyina. In Nov. 2005 the government began relocating from Yangon to the new administrative and legislative capital, Pyinmana, subsequently renamed Naypyidaw. The move was completed in Feb. 2006.

Myanmar's constitution of 2008 established a new administrative order dividing the country into one union territory (Naypyidaw), one self-administered division (Wa), five self-administered zones (Danu, Kokang, Naga, Pa Laung and Pa-O), seven states (Chin, Kachin, Kayah, Kayin, Mon, Rakhine and Shan) and seven regions (Ayeeyawadi, Bago, Magway, Mandalay, Sagaing, Taninthayi and Yangon).

Myanmar is inhabited by many ethnic nationalities. There are 135 national groups with the Bamars, comprising about 68% of the population, forming the largest group. The Shan and the Karen account for 9% and 7% of the population respectively. There are around 1m. stateless Rohingya (Muslims of South Asian descent, in a mainly Buddhist country). Myanmar has more stateless people than any other country.

The official language is Burmese; English is also in use.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2008 estimates: births, 1,020,000; deaths, 496,000. Estimated birth rate in 2008 was 21 per 1,000 population; estimated death rate, 10. Annual population growth rate, 2000–08, 0.8%. Life expectancy at birth, 2013, was 63.1 years for males and 67.2 years for females. Infant mortality, 2010, 50 per 1,000 live births; fertility rate, 2008, 2.3 births per woman.

CLIMATE

The climate is equatorial in coastal areas, changing to tropical monsoon over most of the interior, but humid temperate in the extreme north, where there is a more significant range of temperature and a dry season lasting from Nov. to April. In coastal parts, the dry season is shorter. Very heavy rains occur in the monsoon months May to Sept. Yangon, Jan. 77°F (25°C), July 80°F (26.7°C). Annual rainfall 104" (2,616 mm). Sittwe, Jan. 70°F (21.1°C), July 81°F (27.2°C). Annual rainfall 206" (5,154 mm). Mandalay, Jan. 68°F (20°C), July 85°F (29.4°C). Annual rainfall 33" (828 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

In Nov. 1997 the country's ruling generals changed the name of the government to the State Peace and Development Council (SPDC). It nominally ceded power to an elected president in Feb. 2011 and was abolished a month later.

In May 2008 an army-drafted constitution won 92.5% support in a referendum. The constitution specified that multi-party elections should be scheduled for 2010; 25% of parliamentary seats were automatically allocated to the military. It called for the creation of a National Defence and Security Council, dominated by military appointments, with the power to suspend the constitution under certain circumstances. It also laid out rules that would ban opposition leader Aung San Suu Kyi from holding public office. The constitution was formally adopted on 30 May 2008. The previous constitution, dating from 3 Jan. 1974, had been suspended since 1988. Amendments to the Political Party Registration law in Oct. 2011 allow Aung San Suu Kyi to hold public office, although under the current constitution she was not eligible to become president following the elections that took place in Nov. 2015.

The 440-member lower chamber, the House of Representatives (Pythu Hluttaw), has 330 elected seats with 110 appointed and the 224-member upper chamber, the House of Nationalities (Amyotha Hluttaw), has 168 elected seats with 56 appointed. Parliament convened in Jan. 2011 for the first time since 1988.

National Anthem

'Gba majay Bma' ('We shall love Burma for ever'); words and tune by Saya Tin.

RECENT ELECTIONS

In elections to the House of Representatives on 8 Nov. 2015 the National League for Democracy (NDL), led by Aung San Suu Kyi, won 255 of 330 elected seats. The ruling Union Solidarity and Development Party (USDP) won 30 seats, the Arakan National Party (ANP) 12 and the Shan Nationalities League for Democracy (SNLD) 12. A further 14 seats went to seven smaller parties and independent candidates, with seven vacant owing to insurgent activity. 110 seats are automatically reserved for the military. The results meant that the NDL had the parliamentary majority needed to elect its nominee to the presidency.

On 15 March 2016 parliament elected Htin Kyaw as president, winning 360 of 652 votes. Myint Swe (213 votes) and Henry Van Thio (79) became vice-presidents.

CURRENT GOVERNMENT

In April 2016 the government comprised:

President: Htin Kyaw; b. 1946 (in office since 1 April 2016).

First Vice President: Myint Swe. Second Vice President: Henry Van Thio.

CURRENT LEADERS

Htin Kyaw

Position
President

Introduction

On 15 March 2016 parliament elected Htin Kyaw to serve as the first civilian president since 1962. A loyal supporter of long-time opposition figurehead Aung San Suu Kyi, he was expected to act as her proxy as she is constitutionally barred from holding the presidential office because her children are foreign nationals.

Early Life

Htin Kyaw was born on 20 July 1946 in Kungyangon. His father, Min Thu Wun, was well-known as a poet and National League for Democracy (NDL) politician. Htin Kyaw attended the English Methodist High School where Aung San Suu Kyi was a schoolmate. In 1968 he graduated in economics from the Rangoon Institute of Economics and from 1971–72 attended the Institute of Computer Science in London, England.

In the 1970s and 1980s Htin Kyaw held government positions in the ministries of industry and foreign affairs before resigning in 1992 when the ruling military junta took a more repressive line. In Sept. 2000 he was arrested for attempting to help Aung San Suu Kyi visit the then capital, Mandalay, and was imprisoned for four months. During Aung San Suu Kyi's years under house arrest, Htin Kyaw was one of the few people allowed to visit her, and he acted as her driver in her few brief periods of freedom. In 2012 he joined the Daw Khin Kyi Foundation—established by Aung San Suu Kyi and named in honour of her mother—as a senior executive. On 10 March 2016 he was announced as the NDL's presidential nominee, and on 15 March he received 360 of 652 parliamentary votes. He became president on 1 April.

Career in Office

Htin Kyaw nominated Aung San Suu Kyi as minister in the president's office, as well as head of the departments of foreign affairs, energy and education. From these positions she was expected to be the de facto head of government. Prior to the general election of Nov. 2015 that saw the NDL sweep to power, she had commented on the constitutional bar to her assuming the presidency: 'If the NLD wins the elections and we form a government, I am going to be the leader of that government whether or not I am the president.' Meanwhile, Htin Kyaw would need to play his part in building bridges between Aung San Suu Kyi's traditional support and the military, who hold 25% of the parliamentary seats.

DEFENCE

Military expenditure in 2013 totalled US$2,400m. (US$44 per capita), representing 4.2% of GDP. A law making conscription obligatory was introduced in 2010 but has not been implemented.

Army

The strength of the Army was reported to be about 375,000 in 2011. The Army is organized into 12 regional commands. There are three paramilitary units: People's Police Force (72,000), People's Militia (35,000) and People's Pearl and Fishery Ministry (approximately 250).

Navy

Personnel in 2011 totalled about 16,000 including 800 naval infantry.

Air Force

The Air Force is intended primarily for internal security duties. Personnel (2011) approximately 15,000 operating 136 combat-capable aircraft, including Chinese F-7s and A-5s.

ECONOMY

In 2009 agriculture accounted for 38.1% of GDP, industry 24.5% and services 37.4%.

Overview

Myanmar has one of the least developed economies in the world, having suffered decades of stagnation, mismanagement and isolation under military rule. However, since the transition to an ostensibly civilian government in 2011, the economy has undergone a revival as it has begun to integrate into the world system. GDP is mainly derived from agriculture, forestry, livestock and fisheries, which employ an estimated 70% of the labour force. The construction, manufacturing and service sectors have also seen strong expansion since 2011, driven by government investment, foreign direct investment (FDI) and increased tourist arrivals. In addition, Myanmar has abundant natural resources, including offshore oil and gas deposits, and is a major source of gems.

GDP grew by an average of 7.5% per annum between 2011 and 2014, led by the government's ambitious structural reform programme and by the relaxing of long-term EU and US sanctions from April 2012. Reforms have focused on unifying multiple informal market exchange rates, reducing the fiscal deficit, increasing social spending and modernizing the financial system. FDI has expanded rapidly since 2011 and was estimated by the government at US$5bn. in 2014, principally from mainland China, Thailand and Hong Kong.

Currency

The unit of currency is the kyat (MMK) of 100 pyas. Total money supply was K.1,742,810m. in June 2005. Foreign exchange reserves were US$691m. and gold reserves 231,000 troy oz in May 2005. Myanmar adopted a managed float for the kyat in April 2012, having had a fixed exchange rate for the previous 35 years. Inflation was 30.9% in 2007, and more recently 5.7% 2013 and 5.9% in 2014. Since 1 June 1996 import duties have been calculated at a rate US$1 = K.100.

Budget

In 2005–06 revenues were K.819,534m. and expenditures K.1,008,785m. Tax revenue accounted for 58.2% of revenues in 2005–06; general public services accounted for 35.2% of expenditures and economic affairs 34.3%. The fiscal year begins on 1 April.

Performance

Real GDP growth was 7.3% in 2012, 8.4% in 2013 and 8.5% in 2014. Total GDP in 2014 was US$64.3bn.

Banking and Finance

The Central Bank of Myanmar was established in 1990. Its Governor is Kyaw Kyaw Maung. In 2010 there were four state banks (Myanma Economic Bank, Myanma Foreign Trade Bank, Myanma Agricultural and Rural Development Bank, and Myanma Investment and Commercial Bank) and 19 private banks. In Oct. 2014 Myanmar awarded licences to nine foreign banks, which were the first allowed to operate in the country for half a century. The state insurance company is the Myanmar Insurance Corporation. Deposits in state and private banks were K.903,722m. in 2006.

Before being delisted in Oct. 2006, Myanmar was the only country named in a report in June 2006 as failing to co-operate in the fight against international money laundering. The Financial Action Task Force on Money Laundering was set up by the G7 group of major industrialized nations.

Foreign debt was US$6,352m. in 2010.

A stock exchange opened in Yangon in 1996.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Myanmar's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2011 were the equivalent of 0.2 tonnes per capita.

Electricity

Total electricity generated was about 10.42bn. kWh in 2011–12; consumption per capita in 2011–12 was estimated at 199 kWh. Installed capacity was approximately 3.4m. kW in 2011–12.

Oil and Gas

Production (2007–08) of crude oil was 1.0m. tonnes; natural gas (2012), 12.7bn. cu. metres. There were proven natural gas reserves of 200bn. cu. metres in 2012. It is believed that there may be huge reserves of both offshore oil and gas yet to be discovered. A 1,060-km gas pipeline from Kyaukphyu on Myanmar's west coast to Kunming in China opened in July 2013. An oil pipeline from Kyaukphyu to Kunming was inaugurated in Jan. 2015. The two pipelines will allow China to obtain oil and gas directly from the Middle East.

Minerals

Myanmar's mineral resources include antimony, coal, copper, lead, limestone, marble, precious stones (notably jade and rubies), tin, tungsten and zinc. Production (in tonnes unless otherwise indicated): hard coal (2007–08), 1,075,000; lignite (2007–08), 414,000; gypsum (2004), 71,155; copper (2004), 31,756; jade (2004), 12,408, ruby, sapphire and spinel (2004), 6,198,915 carats. 90% of the world's rubies are mined in Myanmar.

Agriculture

In 2007 there were 10.6m. ha. of arable land and 1.1m. ha. of permanent crops. 2.2m. ha. were irrigated in 2006–07. Production (2006–07, in 1,000 tonnes): rice, 30,435; sugarcane, 8,039; pulses, 4,198; maize, 1,114; groundnuts, 1,088; onions, 918; plantains (2008 estimate), 630; sesame seeds, 614; potatoes, 508. Opium output was an estimated 670 tonnes in 2014, down from 870 tonnes in 2013. Myanmar's opium production is second only to that of Afghanistan.

Livestock (2005–06): cattle, 12.15m.; pigs, 5.79m.; buffaloes, 2.71m.; sheep and goats, 2.44m.; chickens, 85m. In 2006–07 there were 12,000 tractors.

Forestry

Forest area in 2010 was 31.77m. ha., covering 48% of the total land area. Teak resources cover about 6m. ha. (15m. acres). In 2011, 43.03m. cu. metres of roundwood were cut.

Fisheries

In 2010 the total catch was 3,063,210 tonnes (2,060,780 tonnes from sea fishing), the eighth highest in the world. The annual catch has doubled since 2003. Aquaculture production totalled 852,791 tonnes in 2010.

INDUSTRY

Production in 1,000 tonnes (unless otherwise specified): cement (2007), 618; raw sugar (2007), 160; nitrogenous fertilizers (2007), 115; paper and paperboard (2007), 45; sawnwood (2007), 1.5m. cu. metres; cigarettes (2007), 2,755m. units; clay bricks (2004, government production only), 77m. units; bicycles (2007), 53,880 units.

Labour

The estimated labour force in 2013 was 31,670,000. Agriculture provides employment to two-thirds of the population. In Jan. 2013, 37% of the population was unemployed.

Myanmar had 0.38m. people living in slavery according to the Walk Free Foundation's 2013 Global Slavery Index, the ninth highest total of any country.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

In Aug. 1991 the USA imposed trade sanctions in response to alleged civil rights violations. A law of 1989 permitted joint ventures, with foreign companies or individuals able to hold 100% of the shares.

Imports and Exports

Since 1990, in line with market-oriented measures, firms have been able to participate directly in trade.

Imports in 2006–07 totalled K.16,835.0m. and exports K.30,026.1m. Main imports, 2006–07: mineral fuels, lubricants and related materials, 24.1%; machinery and transport equipment, 20.3%; manufactured goods, 19.6%; chemicals, 10.7%. Leading import suppliers in 2006–07 were Singapore, 35.2%; China, 24.9%; Thailand, 10.4%; Japan, 5.3%. Main exports in 2006–07: gas, 38.9%; pulses, 11.6%; timber, 9.8%; precious stones and pearls, 7.4%. Main export markets, 2006–07: Thailand, 45.1%; India, 14.0%; China, 11.8%; Hong Kong, 7.7%.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

There were 27,000 km of roads in 2005, of which 11.9% were surfaced. In 2005 there were 194,411 passenger cars, 54,482 vans and lorries, 17,985 buses and coaches, and 640,313 motorcycles and mopeds. There were 1,638 deaths as a result of road accidents in 2007.

Rail

In 2005 there were 4,809 km of route on metre gauge. Passenger-km travelled in 2006–07 came to 5,307m. and freight tonne-km to 887m.

Civil Aviation

Myanmar Airways International, rebranded as Myanmar National Airlines in 2014, operates domestic services and in 2003 had international flights to Bangkok, Kuala Lumpur and Singapore. In 2003 scheduled airline traffic of Myanmar-based carriers flew 16m. km, carrying 1,117,000 passengers (691,000 on international flights).

Shipping

There are nearly 100 km of navigable canals. The Irrawaddy is navigable up to Myitkyina, 1,450 km from the sea, and its tributary, the Chindwin, is navigable for 630 km. The Irrawaddy delta has approximately 3,000 km of navigable water. The Salween, the Attaran and the G'yne provide about 400 km of navigable waters around Moulmein. In Jan. 2009 merchant shipping totalled 140,000 GT (vessels of 300 GT and over).

In 2006–07, 26.33m. passengers and 4.28m. tonnes of freight were carried on inland waterways. The ocean-going fleet of the state-owned Myanma Five Star Line in 2006–07 comprised 26 vessels; in addition there were eight chartered vessels. In 2006–07, 51,373 passengers and 10,954,800 tonnes of seaborne cargo were transported coastally and overseas. Myanmar's main port is Yangon, which handles about 90% of the country's imports and exports.

Telecommunications

In 2011 there were 521,100 landline telephone subscriptions (equivalent to 10.8 per 1,000 inhabitants) and 1,243,600 mobile phone subscriptions (or 25.7 per 1,000 inhabitants). In 2011, 1.0% of the population were internet users. Following decades of military rule, Myanmar has one of Asia's lowest phone penetration rates.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The highest judicial authority is the Chief Judge, appointed by the government. In mid-2007 there were 65,063 people (126 per 100,000 of national population) held in prisons. Amnesty International reported in 2007 that before the protests against the government resulting in hundreds more arrests there were around 1,150 political prisoners in the country's jails. In Oct. 2011 then President Thein Sein granted amnesty to more than 6,300 prisoners, although it was unclear how many of Myanmar's 2,100 political prisoners would be freed. In Jan. 2012, 651 prisoners were released, including political activists, student leaders and army dissidents. In 2015 the World Justice Project Rule of Law Index, which provides data on how the rule of law is experienced by the general public across eight categories, ranked Myanmar 96th of 102 countries for criminal justice and 94th for civil justice.

Education

Education is free in primary, middle and vocational schools; fees are charged in senior secondary schools and universities. In 2007 there were 5,013,582 pupils at primary schools with 172,209 teaching staff; and 2,686,198 pupils at secondary schools with 81,943 teaching staff. In 2006–07 there were 1,055 monastic primary schools (permitted since 1992) with 152,548 pupils, 256 monastic middle schools with 22,992 pupils and two monastic high schools with 3,887 pupils. There were 507,660 students and 10,669 academic staff in tertiary education in 2007.

In higher education in 2005–06 there were 521,702 students enrolled at 35 universities of arts and sciences, including 413,902 at the University of Distance Education. There were also 59,503 students enrolled at vocational universities in 2005–06, with 16,216 studying computers, computer science and technology, 14,516 medicine, 12,079 economics, 6,286 education, 1,738 dentistry, 1,711 technology, 1,387 nursing, 1,287 agriculture, 1,231 pharmacy and 1,077 paramedical science.

The adult literacy rate was an estimated 92.0% in 2009.

In the period 1998–2007, 13% of central government expenditure was allocated to education.

Health

In 2006–07 there were 826 government hospitals with 43,128 beds. In 2006–07 there were 20,501 doctors (65% private), 21,075 nurses, 17,703 midwives and 1,732 dentists. Spending on health in 2005 amounted to 2.2% of GDP although only 10.6% came from the state. General government expenditure on health in 2005 totalled 1.1% of total government spending.

Welfare

In 2006–07 contributions to social security totalled (K.1m.) 3,697.9 (from employers, 2,311.2; from employees, 1,386.7). Benefits paid totalled 935.7, and included: medical care, 764.7; sickness, 77.5; maternity, 41.0; death, 36.0.

RELIGION

In 2010 an estimated 80.1% of the population—mainly Barmars, Shans, Mons, Rakhines and some Kayins—were Buddhists according to the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life. The Pew Research Center estimated that a further 7.8% were Christians (mainly Protestants), 5.8% were folk religionists, 4.0% Muslims and 1.7% Hindus (the last two being mainly people of Indian origin). In Feb. 2016 the Roman Catholic church had one cardinal.

CULTURE

Press

There were six daily newspapers in 2008, with a combined circulation of 420,000. In 2013 the publication of private daily papers was permitted for the first time in nearly 50 years.

Tourism

In 2011 there were 391,000 non-resident tourists (193,000 in 2008); spending by tourists totalled US$293m. in 2011.

World Heritage Sites

There is one UNESCO site in Myanmar: Pyu Ancient Cities (2014), comprising the remains of three bricked, walled and moated cities. They reflect the Pyu Kingdoms that flourished between 200 BC and AD 900.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Namibia was first settled by people from the Khoisan language group. The earliest, the nomadic San people, were followed about 2000 years ago by the pastoral Nama, who became dominant in the south. In the 9th century AD the Damara settled the central grasslands (known as Damaraland). Other clans followed and by the 19th century three Bantu peoples were established: the Herero in northeastern and central Namibia (Kaokoland); the Ovambo around the Kunene River in the north; and the Kavango people in the east. In the far east, the Barotse expanded from Zambia to settle the Caprivi Strip while the Tswana (from Botswana) settled the edges of the Kalahari desert.

European traders and settlers arrived in the late 18th century. Walvis Bay came under Dutch (1793) then British (1797) control, and European settlement began on the coast. In the 1830s the Orlans, from South Africa, expanded into Nama and Damara territory, becoming dominant under the leadership of Jonker Afrikaner.

In 1884 the area then known as South West Africa became a German protectorate. From 1904–08 conflict between German troops and the Herero and Nama peoples saw the deaths of 80% of the Herero population and 50% of the Nama. In the aftermath, Germany introduced racial segregation and used forced labour for diamond mines. In 1915 the Union of South Africa occupied German South West Africa and on 17 Dec. 1920 the League of Nations entrusted the territory as a Mandate to the Union of South Africa. After the Second World War South Africa applied unsuccessfully to annex the territory, continuing to administer it in defiance of the UN. Indigenous opposition to South African rule intensified in the 1950s: the Ovamboland Peoples'

Organization was founded in 1958 (known as the South West Africa Peoples' Organization, or SWAPO, from 1960) and the South West Africa National Union (SWANU) in 1959.

In 1968 the UN changed the territory's name to Namibia. Following widespread strikes in 1971–72, negotiations took place between South Africa and the UN and in 1973 a multi-racial advisory council was appointed in preparation for independence. However, attempts at organizing free elections failed. In 1988, after military defeat in Angola, South Africa withdrew. UN-supervised elections took place in Nov. 1989, delivering a victory for SWAPO. After independence on 21 March 1990, Namibia joined the Commonwealth.

In April 1990 Namibia joined the UN and in June 1990 the Organization of African Unity, forerunner of the African Union. In 2004 the country suffered major flooding. It continues to face a serious AIDS epidemic, with around 20% of adults infected, though in 2007 the rate fell for the first time.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Namibia is bounded in the north by Angola and Zambia, west by the Atlantic Ocean, south and southeast by South Africa and east by Botswana. The Caprivi Strip (part of which is in the Zambezi Region and part in the Kavango East Region), about 300 km long, extends eastwards up to the Zambezi river, projecting into Zambia and Botswana and touching Zimbabwe. The area, including the Caprivi Strip and Walvis Bay, is 825,615 sq. km. South Africa transferred Walvis Bay to Namibian jurisdiction on 1 March 1994. 2011 census population, 2,113,077 (1,091,165 females); density 2.6 per sq. km. In 2011, 38.6% of the population were urban.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 2.46m.

The largest ethnic group is the Ovambo (about half the population), followed by the Kavango, Damara and Herero. Since Aug. 2013 Namibia has been administratively divided into 14 regions (previously 13). Area, population and chief towns of the 13 regions at the time of the 2011 census:

Region	Area (in sq. km)	Population	Chief town

English is the official language. Afrikaans and German are also spoken.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

Estimates, 2008: births, 59,000; deaths, 18,000. Estimated birth rate in 2008 was 27.6 per 1,000 population; estimated death rate, 8.6. Expectation of life, 2013: males, 61.7 years; females, 67.1. Annual population growth rate, 2000–08, 1.9%; infant mortality, 2010, 29 per 1,000 live births. The fertility rate dropped from 5.5 births per woman in 1994 to 3.4 births per woman in 2008.

CLIMATE

The rainfall increases steadily from less than 50 mm in the west and southwest up to 600 mm in the Caprivi Strip. The main rainy season is from Jan. to March, with lesser showers from Sept. to Dec. Namibia is the driest African country south of the Sahara.

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

On 9 Feb. 1990 with a unanimous vote the Constituent Assembly approved the Constitution which stipulated a multi-party republic, an independent judiciary and an executive President who may serve a maximum of two five-year terms. The constitution became effective on 12 March 1990 and was amended in 1999 to allow President Sam Nujoma to stand for a third term in office. The bicameral legislature consists of a 104-seat National Assembly (increased for the 2014 election from 78 in 2009), 96 members of which are elected for five-year terms by proportional representation and up to eight appointed by the president by virtue of position or special expertise, and a 42-seat National Council consisting of three members from each Regional Council elected for five-year terms.

National Anthem

'Namibia, land of the brave'; words and tune by Axali Doeseb.

RECENT ELECTIONS

Presidential and parliamentary elections held on 28 Nov. 2014 were the first in Africa to utilize electronic or e-voting. Hage Geingob (South West Africa People's Organization/SWAPO) was elected president with 86.7% of votes cast, followed by McHenry Venaani (Democratic Turnhalle Alliance/DTA) with 5.0%, Hidipo Hamutenya (Rally for Democracy and Progress/RDP) with 3.4% and Asser Mbai (National Unity Democratic Organization/NUDO) with 1.9%. There were five other candidates. Turnout was 71.8%. In the parliamentary elections SWAPO won 77 of the available 96 seats with 80.0% of the vote; DTA, 5 with 4.8%; RDP, 3 with 3.5%; All People's Party, 2 with 2.3%; United Democratic Front, 2 with 2.1%; NUDO, 2 with 2.0%; the Communist Party of Namibia, 2 with 1.5%; South West Africa National Union, 1 with 0.7%; United People's Movement, 1 with 0.7%; Republican Party, 1 with 0.7%.

CURRENT LEADERS

Hage Geingob

Position
President

Introduction

Hage Geingob became president in March 2015. A former prime minister, he promised a programme of industrialization to combat poverty.

Early Life

Born on 3 Aug. 1941 in Otjiwarongo in what was then South West Africa, Hage Geingob was educated in Otavi. After qualifying as a teacher from the Augustineum Training College in 1961, he worked briefly as a primary school teacher before moving to Botswana. When his plans to travel farther afield and work with the African National Congress were thwarted, he remained in Botswana, serving as assistant representative of the South West Africa People's Organization (SWAPO) from 1963–64.

From 1964 he studied in the USA, first at Temple University, Philadelphia and then at Fordham University, New York, graduating in 1970. He then gained a master's degree in international relations from New School, New York. He also served as SWAPO representative at the United Nations and to the Americas from 1964–71 and was political affairs officer at the UN secretariat from 1972–75. Between 1975 and 1989 he was director of the UN Institute for Namibia, an establishment that trained civil servants and researched policy.

Having risen through the SWAPO ranks, in 1989 he returned to Namibia to head its successful election campaign. He served as chairman of the constituent assembly that drew up Namibia's constitution from Nov. 1989–March 1990, and then became Namibia's first prime minister (under President Sam Nujoma). In this post, he oversaw the development of the tourism industry and a related programme of nature conservation. After being replaced as prime minister in 2002, he served from 2003–04 as executive secretary of the intergovernmental Global Coalition for Africa.

Having regained a seat in parliament in 2004, he became SWAPO's chief whip and, in 2007, its vice president. In 2008 he was named minister of trade and industry and in 2012 became prime minister for the second time. He fought the Nov. 2014 presidential election on a platform of industrialization and good governance, winning 87% of the vote.

Career in Office

Geingob has signalled his intention to create new ministries to implement reform programmes. His main challenges include developing the economy so as to reduce poverty, while also combating corruption.

DEFENCE

In 2013 defence expenditure totalled US$458m. (US$210 per capita), representing 3.6% of GDP.

Army

Personnel (2011), 9,000. There is also a 6,000-strong paramilitary police force.

Navy

A force of around 200 (2011) is based at Walvis Bay.

Air Force

The Namibian Air Force, which was established in 2005, had 24 combat-capable aircraft in 2011.

ECONOMY

Agriculture accounted for 8.0% of GDP in 2010, industry 30.0% and services 62.0%.

Overview

Mining accounts for 8% of GDP and 50% of export earnings. Rich in natural resources, the country is the fifth largest producer of uranium (producing around 8% of the world's uranium in 2012) and also boasts large deposits of zinc, copper and diamonds. A flourishing mining sector allied to high government spending saw growth average 4% from 2001 to 2011, weathering downturns in the world economy. However, mining employs only 8% of the working population.

30–40% of government revenue comes from the South African Customs Union, which pools and redistributes customs and excise generated by its member nations. With the Namibian dollar pegged to the South African rand and South Africa its main trading partner, Namibia experienced the knock-on effects of worker unrest (particularly in the mining sector) across the border in 2012. The government is trying to diversify the economy by expanding the fishing and tourism industries and pursuing closer trading ties with the EU and the USA.

HIV is a major problem, affecting 15% of the working population. A lack of education and skills means the majority of the population continues to live on subsistence farming, with unemployment running at over 30%. According to its GINI coefficient of 59.7, Namibia has one of the world's highest levels of income inequality.

Currency

The unit of currency is the Namibia dollar (NAD) of 100 cents, introduced on 14 Sept. 1993 and pegged to the South African rand. The rand is also legal tender at parity. Inflation was 5.6% in 2013 and 5.3% in 2014. In May 2005 foreign exchange reserves were US$333m. Total money supply in Dec. 2003 was N$7,851m.

Budget

The financial year runs from 1 April. In 2008–09 revenues were N$21,973m. and expenditures N$22,469m. Tax revenue constituted 91.9% of revenues in 2008–09; current expenditure accounted for 76.9% of expenditures.

Performance

Real GDP growth was 5.1% in both 2012 and 2013 and then 4.5% in 2014; total GDP in 2014 was US$13.0bn.

Banking and Finance

The Bank of Namibia is the central bank. Its Governor is Ipumbu Wendelinus Shiimi. Assets in June 2010 were N$12,717.4m. Total assets of other depository corporations (First National Bank of Namibia, Standard Bank of Namibia, Nedbank Namibia, Bank Windhoek, Agribank of Namibia, National Housing Enterprise and the Namibia Post Office Savings Bank) were N$50,990.5m. in June 2010.

Total foreign debt was US$2.0bn. in Dec. 2009.

A stock exchange (NSE) is in operation in Windhoek.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy were the equivalent of 1.5 tonnes per capita in 2011.

Electricity

Installed capacity in 2011 was 0.4m. kW. In 2011 electricity production was 1.6bn. kWh. Namibia also imports electricity to meet demand (2.4bn. kWh in 2011, mainly from South Africa). Consumption per capita in 2011 was 1,766 kWh.

Oil and Gas

Natural gas reserves in 2013 totalled 62bn. cu. metres.

Minerals

There are diamond deposits both inshore and off the coast, with production equally divided between the two. Some 1.5bn. carats of diamonds are believed to be lying in waters off Namibia's Atlantic coast. Namibia produced 2.0m. carats in 2004, exclusively of gem quality. Output in 2005 (in tonnes): salt, 573,248; zinc (metal content), 69,368; lead (metal content), 14,320; copper (metal content), 10,157; uranium (metal content), 2,855; silver (metal content), 34; gold (metal content), 2,649 kg.

Agriculture

Namibia is essentially a stock-raising country, the scarcity of water and poor rainfall rendering crop-farming, except in the northern and northeastern parts, almost impossible. There were an estimated 800,000 ha. of arable land in 2007 and 5,000 ha. of permanent crops. There were 39 tractors per 10,000 ha. of arable land in 2006. Generally speaking, the southern half is suited for the raising of small stock, while the central and northern parts are more suited for cattle. Guano is harvested from the coast, converted into fertilizer in South Africa and most of it exported to Europe. In 2007 the agricultural population was an estimated 905,000, of which some 252,000 were economically active.

Principal crops (2003, in tonnes): millet, 51,000; maize, 33,000; wheat, 8,000; grapes, 6,000; seed cotton, 5,000; sorghum, 5,000. Livestock (2003 estimates): 2.51m. cattle, 2.37m. sheep, 1.78m. goats, 3m. chickens. In 2003 an estimated 105,000 tonnes of milk and 83,000 tonnes of meat were produced.

Forestry

Forests covered 7.29m. ha. in 2010, or 9% of the land area. In 2011 timber production was 827,000 cu. metres.

Fisheries

Namibia has one of the most productive fishing grounds in the world. Fish processing is the fastest-growing sector of the economy. The catch in 2009 was 370,348 tonnes, of which more than 99% came from marine waters.

INDUSTRY

Of the estimated total of 400 undertakings, the most important branches are food production (accounting for 29.3% of total output), metals (12.7%) and wooden products (7%). The supply of specialized equipment to the mining industry, the assembly of goods from predominantly imported materials and the manufacture of metal products and construction material play an important part. Small industries (including home industries, textile mills, leather and steel goods) have expanded. Products manufactured locally include chocolates, beer, cement, leather shoes, delicatessen meats and game meat products.

Labour

Of 690,019 people in employment in 2013, 215,311 were engaged in agriculture, forestry and fishing; 79,391 in wholesale and retail trade; 57,668 in private households; 47,859 in construction; 41,797 in education; 36,767 in accommodation and food service activities; and 35,160 in administrative and support service activities. The unemployment rate in 2013 was 29.6%.

Namibia had 16,000 people living in slavery according to the Walk Free Foundation's 2013 Global Slavery Index.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Export Processing Zones were established in 1995 to grant companies with EPZ status some tax exemptions and other incentives. The Offshore Development Company (ODC) is the flagship of the Export Processing Zone regime. The EPZ regime does not restrict; any investor (local or foreign) enjoys the same or equal advantages in engaging themselves in any choice of business (allowed by law).

Imports and Exports

In 2007 imports (c.i.f.) were valued at US$4,026.0m. and exports (f.o.b.) at US$4,040.3m. Exports in 2007 (in US$1m.) included diamonds (705), zinc (624), fish (432), uranium ores and concentrates (350), machinery and transport equipment (280), meat products (153). The largest import supplier in 2006 was South Africa with 82.4%; largest export markets: UK, 25.6%; South Africa, 24.6%.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

In 2002 the total road network covered 42,237 km, including 4,550 km of national roads. In 2008 there were 107,800 passenger cars in use and 117,400 lorries and vans. There were 368 deaths as a result of road accidents in 2007.

Rail

The Namibia system connects with the main system of the South African railways at Ariamsvlei. The total length of the line inside Namibia was 2,628 km of 1,065 mm gauge in 2005. In 2002–03 railways carried 150,000 passengers and 1.9m. tonnes of freight.

Civil Aviation

The national carrier is the state-owned Air Namibia, which in 2013 carried 458,000 passengers (381,000 on international flights). In the same year it served six domestic and nine international destinations. In 2012 the major airport, Windhoek's Hosea Kutako International, handled 814,890 passengers (764,384 on international flights). Eros is used mainly for domestic flights.

Shipping

Walvis Bay, the busiest port, handled 4,960,000 tonnes of cargo in 2007–08. There is a harbour at !Nami=Nüs (formerly Lüderitz) which handles mainly fishing vessels. Merchant shipping totalled 3,000 GT in Jan. 2009.

Telecommunications

Telecom Namibia is the responsible corporation. In 2013 there were 183,000 main (fixed) telephone lines and 2,728,000 mobile phone subscribers (118.4 per 100 persons). An estimated 13.9% of the population were internet users in 2013. In June 2012 there were 172,000 Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

There is a Supreme Court, a High Court and a number of magistrates' and lower courts. An Ombudsman is appointed. Judges are appointed by the president on the recommendation of the Judicial Service Commission.

The population in penal institutions in Nov. 2011 was 4,314 (191 per 100,000 of national population).

Education

Literacy was an estimated 88.5% in 2009 (male, 88.9%; female, 88.1%). Primary education is free and compulsory. In 2007 there were 409,508 pupils at primary schools, 158,162 at secondary schools and (2006) 13,185 students at institutions of higher education.

In 2010 public expenditure on education came to 8.1% of GDP.

Health

There were 45 hospitals (11 private) and 296 health centres and clinics in 2005. In 2006 there were 33 hospital beds per 10,000 population. There were 598 physicians, 113 dentistry personnel and 6,145 nursing and midwifery personnel in 2004.

RELIGION

According to estimates by the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life, in 2010 the population was 97.5% Christian (mainly Protestants) with 1.9% not having any religious affiliation.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

Namibia has two sites on the UNESCO World Heritage List: a large collection of rock engravings at Twyfelfontein (added to the list in 2007); and Namib Sand Sea (2013), the only coastal desert in the world that includes extensive dune fields influenced by fog.

Press

There were four daily newspapers in 2008 with a combined circulation of 55,000.

Tourism

In 2011 there were 1,027,000 non-resident tourists who spent US$645m. Tourist numbers rose every year from 2003 to 2011.

NAURU

Ripublik Naoero
(Republic of Nauru)

Population estimate, 2015: 10,000

GDP per capita, 2014: US$17,857

Internet domain extension: .nr

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Nauru was originally settled by Melanesians and Polynesians. Tradition holds that among the earliest settlers were castaways from another island, probably Kiribati. The name 'Nauru' is a European corruption of 'A-nao-ero', which means 'I am going to the beach to lay my bones'. The island has had little contact with its neighbours, enabling its distinctive language to survive. By the 18th century the society was organized into 12 matrilineal tribes, each headed by a different chief.

The island was discovered by a British captain, John Fearn, in 1798 but was avoided by most ships in subsequent decades because of the region's notoriety for piracy. In the 1830s European whaling ships began using Nauru as a supply port and European settlers arrived. Though small in number, they had a profound impact by introducing alcohol, firearms and disease. An escalation in tribal conflict resulted in a war from 1878–88, killing 500 people or one third of the population. Germany annexed the island in 1888 to protect its trading interests and in the early 1900s agreed a deal to allow the British Pacific Phosphate Company to mine newly discovered phosphates.

Nauru was surrendered to Australian forces in 1914. In 1920 its administration was formally passed to the UK under a League of Nations mandate but in practice Australia continued to run the island. Australia, Britain and New Zealand set up and jointly ran the British Phosphate Commission, which controlled the phosphate mining industry. During the Second World War Japanese forces occupied from 1942–45, deporting 1,200 Nauruans to Truk (now Chuuk, in present-day Micronesia) as forced labour. Only 737 of the deportees returned. In 1947 Nauru became a UN trust, with Australia, New Zealand and the UK as trustees.

On 31 Jan. 1968 the country gained independence. The government of President Hammer DeRoburt took over the phosphate industry, continuing to run it as a communal trust. Phosphate prices rose and the country enjoyed a boom throughout the 1970s, achieving one of the world's highest rates of GDP per capita. However, mismanagement of the revenues, poor investment decisions and a lack of political accountability led to problems when prices fell in 1988. In 1993 Australia and the UK paid US$73m. compensation for environmental damage during mining. Nauru developed an offshore banking industry in the 1990s but was accused of money-laundering by the international community. In the mid-1990s the economic crisis deepened with the collapse of the Bank of Nauru and in 2000 the OECD's financial watchdog (Financial Action Task Force on Money Laundering, or FATF) blacklisted the country. In 2001 Nauru agreed to hold detained asylum seekers on behalf of Australia and has subsequently relied heavily on Australian aid.

The 21st century has seen much political turmoil. During 2003 there were six changes of president and in Sept. 2004 President Ludwig Scotty declared a state of emergency. Following regulatory tightening of the offshore banking industry, Nauru was removed from the FATF blacklist in 2005. The island continues to face severe challenges, including a health crisis arising from having one of the world's highest obesity rates.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Nauru is a coral island surrounded by a reef situated 0° 32' S. lat. and 166° 56' E. long. Area, 21.2 sq. km (8.2 sq. miles). At the 2011 census the population (provisional) totalled 10,084 (5,105 males). Population density, 476 per sq. km.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 10,000.

In 2002, 75% of the population (7,572 out of 10,065) were indigenous Nauruans. The de facto capital is Yaren.

Nauruan is the official language, although English is widely used for government purposes.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2012 births, 366; deaths, 71. Annual population growth rate, 2003–13, 0.0%; fertility rate, 2013, 2.9 births per woman. Life expectancy at birth in the period 2011–13 was 64.9 years for females and 58.0 years for males.

CLIMATE

A tropical climate, tempered by sea breezes, but with a high and irregular rainfall, averaging 82" (2,060 mm). Average temperature, Jan. 81°F (27.2°C), July 82°F (27.8°C). Annual rainfall 75" (1,862 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

A Legislative Council was inaugurated on 31 Jan. 1966. The constitution was promulgated on 29 Jan. 1968 and was amended on 17 May 1968. A 19-member Parliament (18 prior to the June 2013 election) is elected on a three-yearly basis.

National Anthem

'Nauru bwieme, ngabena ma auwe' ('Nauru our homeland, the country we love'); words by M. Hendrie, tune by L. H. Hicks.

RECENT ELECTIONS

At the parliamentary elections of 8 June 2013, Baron Waqa's supporters won 14 of the 19 seats. On 11 June 2013 he was elected president by parliament by 13 votes to 5.

CURRENT LEADERS

Baron Divavesi Waqa

Position

President

Introduction

Baron Waqa was sworn in as president on 11 June 2013 after he was elected by parliament. In line with the constitution, he is both head of government and head of state.

Early Life

Baron Divavesi Waqa was born on 31 Dec. 1959. In 1981 he gained his teacher training certificate from the Nasinu Teachers College in Suva, the capital of Fiji. Five years later he graduated in education from the University of the South Pacific in Suva.

Waqa was first elected to parliament in the 2003 general election representing the constituency of Boe, a seat he has held in each subsequent election. He was appointed minister of education in Ludwig Scotty's administration from May–Aug. 2003 and went on to hold the portfolios for health, education, telecommunications and public works in later governments.

Following his re-election to parliament in June 2013, Waqa defeated Roland Kun by 13 votes to 5 in a parliamentary ballot for the presidency.

Career in Office

Waqa's main challenge has been to tackle the failing economy, hit hard by the global financial crisis, and to arrest rising food and fuel prices. There has also been rioting and reported abuse at Nauru's controversial detention centre for refugees attempting to reach Australia, prompting expressions of concern at the United Nations about conditions at the facility.

ECONOMY

Overview

Nauru's economy was for a long time based on phosphate mining, although the depletion of deposits has seen GDP per capita recede since peaking in the 1970s and 1980s. The country is now largely dependent on external aid and imports owing to its narrow resource base. Attempts to diversify the economy into offshore banking during the 1990s proved unsuccessful and the country became a haven for money laundering, resulting in its blacklisting by international bodies until 2005. In 2001 Nauru signed an agreement with Australia to house asylum seekers on the island, generating revenues amounting to a fifth of GDP before the agreement ended in 2008. However, in Sept. 2012 Australia reopened its asylum-seeker processing centre, which has become Nauru's largest private sector employer, employing 600 people in 2013. GDP growth in 2014 was put at 10.0% by the Asian Development Bank, up from 4.5% the previous year.

In 2008 new phosphate contracts brought about the resumption of growth-driving exports. Nauru has also benefited from lucrative fishing-licence revenues, which increased by 110% in 2014. However, the long-term economic outlook depends on the diversification of the economy ahead of the complete exhaustion of phosphate reserves. Further challenges include reducing public debt and promoting sound public and private investment.

Currency

The Australian dollar is in use.

Budget

The fiscal year is 1 July–30 June. Revenues in 2005–06 were $A27.0m. and expenditures $A26.4m.

Performance

Real GDP growth was 4.9% in 2012, 4.5% in 2013 and 10.0% in 2014 according to the Asian Development Bank.

Banking and Finance

The Bank of Nauru is a state bank and there is a commercial bank, Hampshire Bank and Trust Inc.

Nauru was one of three countries named in a report in June 2005 as failing to co-operate in the fight against international money laundering. In Oct. 2005 Nauru was delisted and its formal monitoring was ended a year later. The Financial Action Task Force on Money Laundering was set up by the G7 group of major industrialized nations.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy were the equivalent of 18.1 tonnes per capita in 2011.

Electricity

Installed capacity in 2011 was 5,000 kW; production was 23m. kWh in 2011.

Minerals

A central plateau contained high-grade phosphate deposits. The interests in the phosphate deposits were purchased in 1919 from the Pacific Phosphate Company by the UK, Australia and New Zealand. In 1967 the British Phosphate Corporation agreed to hand over the phosphate industry to Nauru for approximately $A20m. over three years. Nauru took over the industry in July 1969, and the profits from the mining meant that Nauru had, for a brief period, one of the highest rates of GDP per capita in the world. However, production declined (from 1.67m. tonnes in 1985–86 to 162,000 tonnes in 2001–02) and the primary reserves were exhausted in 2003. Mining of a deeper layer of secondary phosphate began in 2006, and it is hoped that this development might resuscitate Nauru's ailing economy. Production was an estimated 84,000 tonnes in 2006. In May 1989 Nauru filed a claim against Australia for environmental damage caused by the mining. In Aug. 1993 Australia agreed to pay compensation of $A73m. In March 1994 New Zealand and the UK each agreed to pay compensation of $A12m.

Agriculture

In 2011 about 1,000 people were economically active in agriculture. In 2009 the crop of coconuts was an estimated 2,200 tonnes. Livestock (2009 estimates): pigs, 3,000.

Fisheries

The catch in 2010 was an estimated 200 tonnes.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

Imports are food, building construction materials, machinery for the phosphate industry and medical supplies. Phosphates—formed from fossilized bird droppings and used for fertilizer—have traditionally accounted for virtually all of Nauru's exports, but the reserves are now largely depleted.

Imports, 2005, $A33.7m.; exports, $A5.0m. The leading import sources in 2005 were Korea, Australia and the USA; the main export markets in 2005 were Korea, Canada and the UK.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

In 2002 there were 30 km of roads, 24 km of which were paved.

Civil Aviation

There is an airfield on the island capable of accepting medium size jet aircraft. The national carrier, Our Airline (formerly Air Nauru), is a wholly-owned government subsidiary. It has one aircraft. In 2006 it flew to Brisbane, Honiara, Tarawa and Majuro. In 2003 Our Airline flew 3m. km, carrying 156,000 passengers (all on international flights).

Shipping

Deep offshore moorings can accommodate medium-size vessels. Shipping coming to the island consists of vessels under charter to the phosphate industry or general purpose vessels bringing cargo by way of imports.

Telecommunications

There were 6,800 mobile phone subscriptions in 2012.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The highest Court is the Supreme Court of Nauru. It is the Superior Court of record and has the jurisdiction to deal with constitutional matters in addition to its other jurisdiction. There is also a District Court which is presided over by the Resident Magistrate who is also the Chairman of the Family Court and the Registrar of Supreme Court. The laws applicable in Nauru are its own Acts of Parliament. A large number of British statutes and much common law has been adopted insofar as is compatible with Nauruan custom.

Education

Attendance at school is compulsory between the age of six and 16. In 2007–08 there were 1,000 children in pre-primary schools with 40 teachers, 1,000 pupils in primary schools with 100 teachers and 1,000 pupils in secondary education with (2006–07) 30 teachers. There is a technical school and also a mission school. Scholarships are available for Nauruan children to receive secondary and higher education and vocational training in Australia and New Zealand.

In 2007 public expenditure on education came to an estimated 7.5% of total government spending.

Health

In 2004 there were ten physicians and 63 nursing and midwifery personnel.

Nauru has one of the highest percentages of overweight people of any country, with 77% of adults overweight or obese according to 2014 World Health Organization estimates.

RELIGION

In 2010 an estimated 79.0% of the population were Christians according to the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life, 8.1% folk religionists and 4.5% religiously unaffiliated.

DIPLOMATIC REPRESENTATIVES

Of Nauru in the United Kingdom

Honorary Consul: Martin W. L. Weston (Romshed Courtyard, Underriver, Nr Sevenoaks, Kent, TN15 0SD).

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Nepal is an independent Himalayan republic located between India and the Tibetan region of China. From the 8th to the 11th centuries many Buddhists fled to Nepal from India, which had been invaded by Muslims. In the 18th century Nepal was a collection of small principalities and the three kingdoms of the Malla dynasty: Kathmandu, Patan and Bhadgaon. In central Nepal lay the principality of Gurkha (or Gorkha); its ruler after 1742 was Prithvi Narayan Shah, who conquered the small neighbouring states. Fearing his ambitions, in 1767 the Mallas requested armed support from the British East India Company. In 1769 these forces were withdrawn and Gurkha was then able to conquer the Malla kingdoms and unite Nepal as one state with its capital at Kathmandu. In 1846 the Rana family became the effective rulers of Nepal, establishing the office of prime minister as hereditary. In 1860 Nepal reached agreement with the British in India whereby Nepali independence was preserved and the recruitment of Gurkhas to the British army was sanctioned.

In 1950 the Shah royal family allied itself with Nepal's abroad to end the power of the Ranas. The last Rana prime minister resigned in Nov. 1951, the king having proclaimed a constitutional monarchy in Feb. 1951. A new constitution, approved in 1959, led to confrontation between the king and his ministers; it was replaced by one less liberal in 1962. In Nov. 1990 the king relinquished his absolute power. The Maoists abandoned parliament in 1996 and launched a 'people's war' in the aim of turning the kingdom into a republic. This resulted in over 13,000 deaths over a ten-year period.

In June 2001 the king and queen, along with six other members of the royal family, were shot dead by their son and heir to the throne, Crown Prince Dipendra, allegedly following a dispute over his choice of bride. Prince Dipendra then shot himself. The former monarch's younger brother, Gyanendra, was crowned king. In Nov. 2001 King Gyanendra declared a state of emergency and ordered troops to contain a fresh outbreak of Maoist violence. The government lifted the state of emergency in Aug. 2002. In Jan. 2003 the government and Maoist rebels reached a ceasefire agreement, seen as a first step towards bringing to an end the rebels' seven-year insurgency. In Feb. 2005 King Gyanendra dismissed his government and once more declared a state of emergency, taking control of the country and suspending democracy for three years. He lifted the state of emergency on 29 April 2005. In April 2006 he agreed to a return to parliamentary democracy after more than two weeks of unrest. On 21 Nov. 2006 a peace agreement was signed between the government and the country's Maoist rebels, bringing a formal end to the decade-long insurgency. In Dec. 2007 an agreement was made to abolish the monarchy and establish Nepal as a republic.

On 28 May 2008 the newly elected Constituent Assembly officially inaugurated the Federal Democratic Republic of Nepal, with Ram Baran Yadav as president. The Assembly began the process of creating a new constitution but as of late 2015 no agreement on a draft had been reached. In April 2015 central Nepal was hit by an earthquake and several aftershocks that killed over 8,500 people and caused extensive damage.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Nepal is bounded in the north by China (Tibet) and the east, south and west by India. Area 147,181 sq. km; 2011 census population, 26,494,504 (13,645,463 females); density 180.0 per sq. km. In 2011, 19.2% of the population were urban.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 28-51m.

The country is divided into five developmental regions and 75 administrative districts. Area, population and administrative centres are:

Region	Sq. km	Population (2011)	Administrative centre
Central Region	27,410	9,656,985	Kathmandu
East Region	28,456	5,811,555	Dhankuta
West Region	29,398	4,926,765	Pokhara
Mid-West Region	42,378	3,546,682	Surkhet
Far West Region	19,539	2,552,517	Dipayal

Capital, Kathmandu; population (2011) 1,003,285. Other towns include (2011 census population): Pokhara, 264,991; Lalitpur, 226,728; Biratnagar, 204,949; Bharatpur, 147,777.

The indigenous people are of Tibetan origin with a considerable Hindu admixture. The Gurkha clan became predominant in 1559 and has given its name to men from all parts of Nepal. There are 18 ethnic groups. The official language is Nepalese but there are 20 new languages divided into numerous dialects.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2008 estimates: births, 731,000; deaths, 185,000. Estimated rates per 1,000 population, 2008: births, 25.4; deaths, 6.4. Annual population growth rate, 2000-08, 2.1%. Expectation of life was 67.3 years for males and 69.6 years for females in 2013. Infant mortality, 2010, 41 per 1,000 live births; fertility rate, 2008, 2.9 births per woman.

CLIMATE

Varies from cool summers and severe winters in the north to sub-tropical summers and mild winters in the south. The rainfall is high, with maximum amounts from June to Sept., but conditions are very dry from Nov. to Jan. Kathmandu, Jan. 10°C, July, 25°C. Average annual rainfall, 1,424 mm.

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

Following years of political turbulence an interim constitution was approved in Dec. 2006, effectively removing King Gyanendra as the head of the state.

On 23 Dec. 2007 the interim government declared the establishment of the Federal Democratic Republic of Nepal, with the abolition of the monarchy approved by parliament five days later. This change entered into force on 28 May 2008 at the first meeting of a 601-member Constituent Assembly. The Assembly was charged with drafting a new constitution but missed numerous deadlines. Elections to a new Assembly were then held in Nov. 2013 and, after further delays, a new constitution was adopted on 20 Sept. 2015 with the backing of 507 out of 598 members. It defines Nepal as a secular republic, divided into seven federal provinces (although at the time of promulgation, the provinces had yet to be named and their borders were provisional). It also tightens citizenship rights for any child whose father is not a Nepali citizen, enshrines equal rights for lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender people, and abolishes the death penalty.

The head of state is the President, who is elected for a five-year term by an 'electoral college' of the federal parliament and provincial assemblies. The bicameral federal parliament consists of the House of Representatives and the National Assembly. The House of Representatives has 275 seats, 165 of which are directly elected and the remainder filled by proportional representation. The National Assembly has 59 members—eight from each of the seven provinces plus three appointed by the government.

National Anthem

'Sayaun thunga phoolka kami eutai mala Nepali' ('From hundreds of flowers, we are one garland Nepali'); words by Byakul Maila, tune by Ambar Gurung.

RECENT ELECTIONS

In elections to the Constituent Assembly held on 19 Nov. 2013 the Nepali Congress won 196 seats of the 575 elected seats, the Communist Party of Nepal (Unified Marxist-Leninist) won 175, the Unified Communist Party of Nepal (Maoist) 80, the Rastriya Prajatantra Party Nepal 24, the Madhesi Jana Adhikar Forum (Loktantrik) 14, the Rastriya Prajatantra Party 13 and the Tarai-Madhes Loktantrik Party 11. The remaining 62 seats were shared among other parties and independents.

Communist Party of Nepal (Unified Marxist-Leninist) leader Khadga Prasad Oli was elected prime minister by parliament on 11 Oct. 2015, succeeding Sushil Koirala who had announced his resignation earlier in the month. Oli received 338 votes against 249 for Koirala.

Bidhya Devi Bhandari was elected Nepal's first female president by parliament on 28 Oct. 2015, gaining 327 votes to 214 for Kul Bahadur Gurung.

CURRENT LEADERS

Bidhya Devi Bhandari

Position

President

Introduction

Bidhya Bhandari became Nepal's first female president when she won a majority parliamentary vote on 28 Oct. 2015. She replaced Ram Baran Yadav in the largely ceremonial role, and is scheduled to hold office until 2020.

Early Life

Bidhya Devi Bhandari was born on 19 June 1961 in Bhojpur District in eastern Nepal to an influential local political family. She became involved in politics as a college student, joining the youth wing of the then Communist Party of Nepal (Marxist-Leninist) in 1979. She gained national attention at the 1994 general election when she defeated former prime minister and Nepali Congress leader Krishna Prasad Bhattarai in the Kathmandu constituency of her late husband, Madan Bhandari. He was a leading communist killed in an apparent accident less than a year earlier.

Bhandari was re-elected to the House of Representatives in 1999. She was actively involved in the 2006 demonstrations against King Gyanendra that brought about the abolition of the monarchy and establishment of democracy in Nepal. In 2008 she contested a seat at the first Constituent Assembly (CA) elections but failed to win election. She was, however, named vice-chair of the (renamed) Communist Party of Nepal (Unified Marxist-Leninist) or CPN-UML at the party convention in Feb. 2009, and retained the position at the next convention in 2014. In Nov. 2013 she became a member of the second CA under a new proportional representation system.

A close ally of Prime Minister Khadga Prasad Oli, Bhandari has long been a champion of women's rights and is credited with ensuring a one-third quota for women in parliament as decreed in the new constitution. However, she has come under fire from critics who have questioned her support for legislation barring single mothers and women married to foreigners from passing citizenship to their children.

In 2015 Bhandari was nominated by the CPN-UML as its presidential candidate. At the parliamentary vote to appoint the president, she won 327 out of 549 votes with the support of 14 other political parties.

Career in Office

Bhandari has claimed that her election is a first step towards assuring that the new constitutional 'guarantees of equality' are realized. Although it is mainly a ceremonial role, Bhandari has promised to use her presidency to champion minority and women's rights.

Khadga Prasad Oli

Position

Prime Minister

Introduction

Khadga Prasad Oli was elected prime minister on 11 Oct. 2015. A charismatic communist, he has been a key figure in the country's troubled transition from an absolute monarchy to a multiparty democracy.

Early Life

K. P. Oli was born on 22 Feb. 1952 in Terhathum, eastern Nepal. He attended Adarsha secondary school in Mechinagar, Jhapa province, and joined the local branch of the Communist Party of Nepal (CPN) in 1970. Three years later, having been promoted to chief of the Jhapa branch, he was arrested and imprisoned during a crackdown by the Panchayat regime—essentially a one-party state in which the king, Birendra Bir Bikram Shah, controlled all three branches of government as well as the civil service and military. Oli spent the next 14 years behind bars.

On his release in 1987, Oli became a key player in the CPN's pro-democracy campaign. In the multiparty general election of May 1991 that followed the dissolution of the Panchayat system, Oli was elected to parliament. He retained his seat in the 1994 election, in which the CPN-UML (Unified Marxist-Leninist) won the largest number of parliamentary seats and was able to form a minority national government led by Man Mohan Adhikari. Oli served as home affairs minister until the minority government collapsed in Sept. 1995, sparking an insurgency by the Maoist faction of the CPN that ground on for a decade, causing over 15,000 deaths and forcing more than 100,000 people from their homes. By May 2002 conditions had deteriorated to the extent that a state of emergency was declared and parliament was dissolved.

Oli served as deputy prime minister and minister of foreign affairs in the interim government that was formed in Nov. 2006. In the subsequent Constituent Assembly election in April 2008, which brought about a parliamentary republic, Oli lost his seat to the representative of the CPN's Maoist faction. Nationally, the Maoist faction won an overwhelming victory, ostensibly ending the protracted civil war. Oli managed the CPN's international department from 2009 and was re-elected to parliament for the CPN-UML in the delayed Constituent Assembly election of Nov. 2013. In Feb. 2014 he became leader of the CPN-UML. Following the adoption of Nepal's controversial new constitution, Oli was elected premier on 11 Oct. 2015, securing 89 more votes than his Nepali Congress rival, Sushil Koirala.

Career in Office

Oli faces several severe challenges, including reconstruction and rehabilitation in the wake of the devastating April 2015 earthquake. Protests and ethnic unrest, linked to the new constitution that divides Nepal into seven federal states, has led to violent clashes at the Indian border and costly blockades.

DEFENCE

The then King was formerly commander-in-chief of the armed forces, but he was stripped of the position in May 2006. The cabinet now has the power to appoint the army chief.

Defence expenditure in 2013 totalled US$238m. (US$8 per capita), representing 1.2% of GDP.

As at 31 Jan. 2013, 4,462 personnel (including 3,677 troops) were deployed in UN peacekeeping operations.

Army

Strength (2011) 95,800, and there is also a 62,000-strong paramilitary police force (15,000 armed).

Air Force

The Army's air wing has no combat-capable aircraft. Personnel, 2011, 320.

ECONOMY

Agriculture, forestry and fishing contributed 31.5% to GDP in 2009–10; followed by trade, restaurants and hotels, 14.7%; finance and real estate, 11.6%; and services, 11.1%.

Overview

Nepal is one of the poorest countries in the world. Although civil conflict came to an end in 2006, the promised new constitution, key to the peace agreement and signed by the insurgent Maoists, has yet to materialize, prolonging political instability and undermining long-term economic prospects. The impact of the conflict is evident in weak government and banking, and low levels of foreign investment (accounting for only around 0.1% of GDP).

Infrastructure is poor, with limited energy capacity and road coverage the lowest in Southeast Asia. Hydro-electric power potential for home consumption and exports to neighbouring India remains largely untapped. Resolving infrastructure issues is key to sustained economic growth.

Currency

The unit of currency is the Nepalese rupee (NPR) of 100 paisas. 50 paisas = 1 mohur. Inflation was 9.9% in 2013 and 9.0% in 2014. Foreign exchange reserves were US$1,478m. in July 2005 and gold reserves totalled 129,000 troy oz. Total money supply in March 2009 was NRs 177,682m.

Budget

Budgetary central government revenue totalled NRs 252,910m. in 2010–11 (NRs 216,250m. in 2009–10) and expenditure NRs 217,323m. (NRs 186,493m. in 2009–10). Main sources of revenue, 2010–11 (NRs 1m.): taxes, 181,255 (including: taxes on goods and services, 96,657; taxes on income, profits and capital gains, 43,121); grants, 49,327. Major items of expenditure by economic type, 2010–11 (NRs 1m.): grants, 90,074; compensation of employees, 59,472; use of goods and services, 27,133.

VAT is 13%.

Performance

Real GDP growth was 4.8% in 2012, 4.1% in 2013 and 5.4% in 2014. Nepal's total GDP in 2014 was US$19.8bn. Nepal ranks among the countries most reliant on remittances from abroad, which accounted for 25% of total GDP in 2012.

Banking and Finance

The Central Bank is the bank of issue (Governor, Chiranjibi Nepal). In 2002 there were four domestic commercial banks (Kumari Bank; Nepal Bank; Nepal Industrial and Commercial Bank; Rastriya Banijya Bank), ten joint-venture banks and four development finance organizations (Agricultural Development Bank; Nepal Development Bank; Nepal Housing Development Finance Corporation; Nepal Industrial Development Corporation).

External debt totalled US$3,702m. in 2010. As a proportion of GNI, external debt fell from 52.0% in 2000 to 23.4% in 2010.

There is a stock exchange in Kathmandu.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Nepal's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2011 were the equivalent of 0.1 tonnes per capita.

Electricity

Installed capacity was approximately 0.8m. kW in 2010–11, but Nepal has vast untapped hydro-power potential. Production in 2010–11 was 3.31bn. kWh (over 99% hydro-electric), with consumption per capita 147 kWh. Around a fifth of the electricity consumed has to be imported.

Minerals

Production (in tonnes), 2005: limestone, 263,701; red clay, 35,484; agricultural lime (2003), 13,025; coal, 9,289; talc, 5,832; salt, 2,000.

Agriculture

Agriculture is the mainstay of the economy, providing a livelihood for around 80% of the population and accounting for 35% of GDP. In 2002 there were about 3.2m. ha. of arable land and 94,000 ha. of permanent crops. Cultivated land accounts for 26.5% of land use; forest and woodland 42.4%. Crop production (2003, in 1,000 tonnes): rice, 4,155; sugarcane, 2,250; potatoes, 1,480; maize, 1,441; wheat, 1,344; millet, 288.

Livestock (2002); cattle, 6.98m.; goats, 6.61m.; buffaloes, 3.70m.; pigs, 934,000; sheep, 840,000; chickens, 21m.

Livestock products (2003 estimates, in 1,000 tonnes): buffalo meat, 130; beef and veal, 48; goat meat, 39; poultry meat, 15; buffalo's milk, 816; cow's milk, 353; goat's milk, 64; eggs, 27.

Forestry

In 2010 the area under forests was 3.64m. ha., or 25% of the total land area, down from 4.82m. ha. in 1990 and 3.90m. ha. in 2000. There are eight national parks, covering 1m. ha., five wildlife reserves (170,490 ha.) and two conservation areas (349,000 ha.). Timber production was 13.72m. cu. metres in 2011, mainly for use as fuelwood and charcoal. Expansion of agricultural land has led to widespread deforestation.

Fisheries

The catch in 2010 was an estimated 21,500 tonnes, exclusively from inland waters.

INDUSTRY

In 2008–09 manufacturing accounted for 6.8% of GDP. In 2006–07 there were 158 manufacturing establishments with 200 or more staff employing 71,409 people. Production (2007 unless otherwise stated): cement, 1,060,490 tonnes; raw sugar, 140,000 tonnes; soap (2005–06), 55,000 tonnes; jute fibres, 17,000 tonnes; paper and paperboard, 13,000 tonnes; tea, 12,200 tonnes; sawnwood, 630,000 cu. metres; plywood, 30,000 cu. metres; spirits and liqueurs (2007–08), 10.5m. litres; beer (2005–06), 26.0m. litres; cigarettes, 6,081m. units; clay bricks, 12.7m. units; shoes, 10m. pairs.

Labour

The labour force in 2013 was 15,201,000 (12,621,000 in 2003). 85.7% of the population aged 15–64 was economically active in 2013. In the same year 2.7% of the population was unemployed. Nepal had 0.26m. people living in slavery according to the Walk Free Foundation's 2013 Global Slavery Index.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

Imports (c.i.f.) in 2010 totalled US$5,127.5m. and exports (f.o.b.) US$834.0m. The main import suppliers in 2004 were: India (43.0%), China (10.0%), UAE (10.0%), Saudi Arabia (4.4%). The leading export markets in 2004 were: India (48.8%), USA (22.3%), Germany (8.5%), UK (2.8%).

Principal import commodities are petroleum products, transport equipment and parts, chemical fertilizer and raw wool. Principal export commodities are carpets, clothing, leather goods, pulses, raw jute and jute goods, and handicrafts. Hand-knotted woollen carpets are the largest overseas export item constituting almost 32% of foreign exchange earnings.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

In 2006 there were 16,834 km of roads, of which 17% were paved.

Rail

59 km (762 mm gauge) connect Jayanagar on the North Eastern Indian Railway with Janakpur. In 2003 the railways carried 1.28m. passengers.

Proposals for a 77-km long metro system in Kathmandu were submitted in 2012.

Civil Aviation

There is an international airport (Tribhuvan) at Kathmandu. The national carrier is the state-owned Nepal Airlines (formerly known as Royal Nepal Airlines). It operates domestic services and in 2003 flew to Bangalore, Bangkok, Delhi, Dubai, Hong Kong, Kuala Lumpur, Mumbai, Osaka, Shanghai and Singapore. In 2004 Kathmandu handled 2,066,950 passengers (1,140,660 on international flights) and 15.3m. tonnes of freight. In 2003 scheduled airline traffic of Nepali-based carriers flew 8m. km, carrying 356,000 passengers (279,000 on international flights).

Telecommunications

In Dec. 2011 there were 845,542 main (fixed) telephone lines in Nepal and mobile phone subscribers numbered 13,354,000 (49.2 per 100 persons). An estimated 13.3% of the population were internet users in 2013. In March 2012 there were 1.4m. Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The Supreme Court Act established a uniform judicial system, culminating in a supreme court of a Chief Justice and no more than six judges. Special courts to deal with minor offences may be established at the discretion of the government. The King previously had the power to appoint the Chief Justice, but this power passed to the prime minister under the temporary constitution signed in Dec. 2006.

The death penalty was abolished in 1997. The population in penal institutions in Aug. 2012 was 14,936 (48 per 100,000 of national population). The International Centre for Prison Studies estimated in 2014 that 58.9% of prisoners had yet to receive a trial. In 2015 the World Justice Project Rule of Law Index, which provides data on how the rule of law is experienced by the general public across eight categories, ranked Nepal 56th of 102 countries for criminal justice and 87th for civil justice.

Education

The adult literacy rate in 2009 was estimated 59.1% (72.0% among males but only 46.9% among females).

In 2007 there were 4,515,059 pupils and 112,827 teaching staff in primary schools and 1,998,990 pupils in secondary schools with (in 2008) 56,294 teaching staff. There were 320,844 students in tertiary education in 2007 with 9,932 academic staff. The oldest and largest university in Nepal is Tribhuvan University, which was established in 1959.

In 2009 public expenditure on education came to 4.7% of GDP and 19.5% of total government spending.

Health

Over the period 2000–10 Nepal had two physicians per 10,000 population and five nurses and midwives per 10,000. There were 50 hospital beds per 10,000 people in the period 2006–12.

RELIGION

Nepal is a Hindu state. Hinduism was the religion of 80.7% of the people in 2010 according to estimates by the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life, with Buddhists comprising 10.3% and Muslims 4.6%. An estimated 3.7% of the population in 2010 were folk religionists. There is also a small Christian minority.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

Nepal has four sites on the UNESCO World Heritage List: Sagarmatha National Park (inscribed on the list in 1979); Kathmandu Valley (1979 and 2006); Royal Chitwan National Park (1984); and Lumbini, the Birthplace of the Lord Buddha (1997). Several of the heritage sites were severely damaged by the earthquake of April 2015, but have since been reopened to the public.

Press

In 2008 there were 298 daily newspapers, including the official English-language Rising Nepal, 25 bi-weeklies, 1,442 weeklies and 273 fortnightlies. Press censorship was relaxed in 1991, but following the imposition of a state of emergency in 2005 the press was subjected to total censorship.

Tourism

In 2012 there were a record 803,000 non-resident tourists (up from 736,000 in 2010 and 527,000 in 2007). In 2011, 32% of tourists came from South Asia, 29% from Europe and 27% from East Asia and the Pacific. Tourist receipts amounted to US$379m. in 2012.

Festivals

Hindu, Buddhist and traditional festivals crowd the Nepali lunar calendar. Dasain (Sept./Oct.) is the longest and most widely observed festival in Nepal. The 15 days of celebration include Dashami, when family elders are honoured. Tihar (Oct./Nov.) celebrates the Hindu goddess Laxmi. During the first three days crows, dogs and cows are worshipped, followed by the spirit, or self. It concludes with Bhai Tika ('Brother's Day'). Buddha Jayanti (May/June) remembers the birth, enlightenment and death of the Buddha. Sherpas gather at Tengboche Monastery near Mount Everest in May to observe Mani Rimdu with meditation, mask dances and Buddhist ceremonies.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Flint tools found in the Maastricht area have been estimated to be 250,000 years old. The first definable culture (c. 3000 BC) was the Late Stone Age 'Funnel-neck Beaker' culture, named after the objects made by a people known for their monolithic burial monuments. The environment of the 'Low Countries' affected the behaviour of its earliest inhabitants, as demonstrated by the terpen—islands of earth and clay—built by the autochthonous Frisians (Frisii) c. 500 BC as protection from the sea.

The Romans encountered Celtic tribes to the west and south of the Rhine and Germanic tribes, such as the Frisii, to the north and east. In the 1st century BC Julius Caesar attested to the resistance of the Celtic Eburones and Aduatuci. Roman power beyond the Rhine was limited to isolated forts and client kingdoms.

In the 3rd century AD the stagnant Roman borders began to crumble as military posts were abandoned. Among the most prominent of the encroaching Germanic tribes were the Franks, who settled at first in Toxandria (modern Brabant). Like many 'barbarian' tribes, the Franks entered into agreements with Rome, settling and guarding the border region and assimilating Roman culture. The Frisians became important traders, holding strategic territory between the German (North) Sea and the Meuse and Rhine rivers. With the collapse of Roman government in Gaul and the Rhine in the 5th century, the Franks extended their power, centred on Austrasia (the central Rhine region). The spread of Christianity in the 7th century, first from the bishoprics of Arras, Tournai and Cambrai, assisted Frankish expansion into the northern Low Countries, where the missionary bishopric of Utrecht was established.

Viking raids on the North Sea coast devastated the flourishing Frisian economy. The Frisian trading centre of Dorestad was destroyed four times between 834–37 by raiders seeking Carolingian silver. Frisia came under Frankish domination during the reign of Pippin the Short, the founder of the Carolingian Empire.

The High Middle Ages saw the development of independent and semi-autonomous principalities, both secular and ecclesiastical. Great landlords established the large counties (Flanders, Hainault, Namur and Holland and Zeeland) and duchies (Brabant, Limburg and Guelders), increasing their authority and size through dynastic alliances and inheritance. The majority fell broadly under the authority of the German king, heirs to the Eastern Frankish realm, though the feudal relationship allowed the growth of a tradition of independence that became a defining characteristic of Dutch politics. The growth of population and its pressure on the land increased the need for land reclamation. Dykes were built from Friesland to Flanders to drain the bogs and marshes for pasturage and, later, agrarian use. The development of urban centres outside the feudal structure was encouraged by the strength of trade and the merchant classes.

The Burgundian era in the Low Countries was born of a series of dynastic matches, most importantly that of Duke Philip II (the Bold) of Burgundy and Margaret, Countess of Flanders and Artois in 1369. Their son, Philip III (the Good), brought most of the northern Low Countries under one lord by inheriting Brabant and Hainault-Holland in the 1430s as well as Luxembourg in 1443. Although the dukes attempted to rule through new centralized bodies, the Burgundian Low Countries were held in a personal union and did not constitute a state. The duke appointed stadhouders and governors to represent him in each of his territories. The summoning of the Estates in 1464 in Brugge (Bruges) represented the first parliamentary assembly in the Low Countries and the importance of the Nederlands in the Burgundian realm.

Burgundian Rule

The reign of Charles the Bold, or Rash (1467–77), saw the brief land connection of the realm (by the acquisition of Lorraine) and the first explicit attempt to create a unitary kingdom—an echo of the Middle Frankish Kingdom, Lotharingia. Charles failed in his bid to make himself regent of this kingdom in 1473 and his death at the Battle of Nancy left his domains to his daughter, Mary. The duchess was soon stripped of the Duchy of Burgundy by the French king and was forced to concede privileges to the provinces. Her marriage to Maximilian of Habsburg, the future Holy Roman Emperor, brought the Low Countries into personal union with Austria and, later, Spain. Mary's son, Philip the Handsome, inherited the Spanish throne through his wife, Joanna the Mad, forging a massive and disparate empire of kingdoms, principalities and lordships. Philip's son, Charles V, though born in Ghent, spent little time in the Low Countries after succeeding to the Spanish throne. They were administered by governors-general, normally taken from the ruler's family. Centralization, though consistently opposed, continued to be pressed on the inhabitants of the Low Countries. The 17 provinces were brought together formally in 1548 as the 'Burgundian Kreis' and the sovereign succession regulated by Pragmatic Sanction the following year. Brussels became the centre of government, being the location of the court and most organs of government.

Philip II (of Spain) imposed a new ecclesiastical hierarchy, sanctioned by papal bull in 1559, in an attempt to use the church as a centralizing force. The traditional resistance of the towns and provinces was given added fervour by the religious controversies attributable to the Reformation. Erasmus, a leading Dutch humanist, openly attacked the abuses and corruptions of the Church but rejected the theology of the reformers such as Martin Luther. However, the works of the radical Jean Calvin arrived in Antwerp in 1545, spreading throughout the region rapidly after their translation in 1560. Calvinism appealed to the intellectual middle classes, as well as the artisans, whose work ethic it extolled. The government focused its repressive efforts on the Anabaptists, whose refusal to swear allegiance to the prince was an affront to temporal and spiritual authority. The iconoclastic purges of 1566 provoked Philip to send the duke of Alba to restore his authority, thereby sparking full-scale revolt and the Eighty Years War (1568–1648).

The causes of the Dutch Revolt were numerous; religious tensions, resentment towards ‘Spanish’ authority, the heavy burden of taxes and absolutist government and the perceived desecration of traditional privileges were combined with years of hardship caused by climatic conditions and wars with France. However, in the earlier years of the revolt, the ‘legitimate’ casus belli claimed by the Dutch was the influence of ‘evil advisers’ around the prince—few openly rejected Philip’s sovereignty. The Geuzen, an army of beggars, pillaging and pirating in the name of William of Orange, took the port of Brielle in 1572. This began the expulsion of Spanish authority from the northern provinces, a process completed by 1574.

The conversion of William (the Silent) to Calvinism in 1572, in response to his selection as stadtholder of Holland and Zeeland, was a political move to gain support for a united Netherlands of Catholics and Protestants. The 1576 Pacification of Ghent brought together predominantly Catholic and Protestant provinces in the face of bloody repression meted out by Alba’s Council of Troubles (Council of Blood) and the notorious ‘Spanish Fury’ massacre in Antwerp. The mainly Catholic southern provinces were largely regained for Philip by the brilliant Alessandro Farnese, duke of Parma in 1578, forcing a ‘closer union’—the Union of Utrecht—in the north in 1579, committed to resisting the Spanish. This marked the birth of the United Provinces of the Netherlands, or the ‘Dutch Republic’, with power concentrated in the hands of the stadtholders, nominally representing the hereditary prince. Philip’s refusal to compromise led to his ‘forfeiture of sovereignty’ in the States-General Act of Abjuration in 1581, on the grounds of persistent tyranny.

The constitutional position of the Republic was unclear. The House of Orange was recognized as the traditional stadtholders of each province, though the lordship of the territories was tendered to both France and England in the 1580s. Maurice of Nassau, the son of William of Orange, was named stadtholder of Holland and Zeeland in 1587. Maurice’s victories over Farnese came to be called the ‘closing of the garden’, giving the United Provinces the approximate borders it has maintained to the modern day. With recognition from England and France, the government negotiated the Twelve Year Truce in 1609 with Spain, which recognized the independence of the United Provinces.

The Calvinist church divided between the followers of two prominent clerics, Jacobus Arminius (the Remonstrants) and Franciscus Gomarus (the Contra-Remonstrants). The Arminians, championed by the elite of Holland and the towns, objected to the repressive orthodoxy of the Gomarists and demanded an inclusive reformed church to protect trade and foreign relations. The execution of the Remonstrant Johan van Oldenbarnevelt, the Advocate of Holland, signified the triumph of Maurice’s Contra-Remonstrants and made permanent peace with Spain impossible. After initial Spanish success at Breda in 1621, Maurice’s successor, Frederick Henry, turned the tide, taking Maastricht in the far south. Ending the persecution of the Remonstrants, Frederick Henry augmented the authority of his princely house, even earning an honorific royal title from the French King. Lasting peace with Spain was finally won at the 1648 Treaty of Münster, which formally recognized the Dutch Republic.

Independence and the Golden Age

The 17th century has traditionally been called the Golden Age of the Dutch. From the Twelve Year Truce, the Dutch economy expanded massively, principally through trade in the Baltic and with France, Iberia and the colonies of the West and East Indies. The United East Indies Company, chartered in 1602, held quasi-sovereign authority over its colonies in Sri Lanka, India and Indonesia. Dutch banking financed the northern European markets, chiefly through foreign government bonds. The increase of wealth stimulated the arts. Prosperous life in Dutch towns was painted by Jan Vermeer and Amsterdam’s burghers by Rembrandt. Although Calvinism had been officially adopted, Catholics were left unmolested but public worship was prohibited.

After the death of Frederick Henry’s bellicose son, William II, in 1650, the republic experienced its first ‘stadtholderless’ period when the prosperous province of Holland dominated the Netherlands. Relations with Republican England deteriorated because of the execution of Charles I, who was closely related to the House of Orange. More importantly, competition for trade and shipping between the two great maritime powers caused skirmishes in America and Europe and a series of Anglo-Dutch Wars, conducted at sea. The destruction of the English fleet at Chatham in 1667 destroyed relations with Charles II, who had supported Orangist interests in the Netherlands.

The House of Orange reassumed the leadership of the Netherlands when William III took the stadtholdership of Holland in 1672 and defeated the French and the English in naval encounters. The Dutch supported William in his invasion of England—the Glorious Revolution—in 1688, claiming the throne with his wife, Mary Stuart. His death without issue in 1702 heralded the second stadtholderless period, when the councillor pensionaries of Holland asserted the province’s leadership. However, the oligarchic nature of government attracted little support, especially during Dutch humiliations at the hands of the French in the War of the Austrian Succession (1740–48). William IV of Orange was elected to all provinces in 1747, the House of Orange being seen as the natural leaders of the Dutch people.

Both William IV and William V resisted calls for a more relaxed rule. The Patriot Movement took advantage of the Dutch defeat in the Fourth Anglo-Dutch War of the 1780s to depose William V. However, Prussia’s intervention restored the stadtholder and many Patriots fled to France, then on the brink of revolution.

Revolutionary France’s invasion of Belgium (the Spanish Netherlands) in 1794 was soon extended to the United Provinces. William V fled to England and the Patriots, supported by the French, assumed control of government. The new ‘Batavian Republic’, styled after the supposedly original inhabitants, was in reality a protectorate of France. This truly republican period enabled political modernization, much of which has lasted to the modern day. An elected National Assembly was instituted (though the franchise was retained by property owners only), with new electoral constituencies to replace the old provinces. Religious toleration was adopted, with all denominations awarded equal treatment. However, the economy declined, partly because of the seizure of the Dutch colonies in the name of William V by Great Britain, which had declared war on France.

Napoleon

The republic was ended in 1806 when Napoleon incorporated the Netherlands into his empire. He installed his brother, Louis, as king of Holland. Louis adopted the cause of his new subjects, frequently defying his brother’s orders in favour of Dutch interests. Napoleon ended his brother’s reign in 1810 and brought his kingdom under French rule. Gijsbert Karel van Hogendorp, who drew up the new constitution after the French withdrawal in 1813, led the opposition to France. The new constitution provided for a constitutional monarchy, with William V's son proclaimed king (William I), as demanded by the Congress of Vienna. The northern provinces were united with Belgium and Luxembourg under the Kingdom of the Netherlands.

William I saw the revival of the economy as the first priority. Using his personal resources as well as the treasury, he invested heavily in the re-establishment of Dutch shipping, especially to the restored colonies. Domestically, William was not so successful. In 1830 Belgium proclaimed its independence, rejecting a common identity with the predominantly Protestant north—the declaration of Dutch as the sole official language had alienated the French-speaking Walloons in Brussels. Though defeated by the Dutch army, the Belgians gained their independence in 1839 thanks to French and British intervention in 1832.

In response to the European revolutions of 1848, the king granted a liberal constitution. Support for the king was bolstered by the patriotic reaction in the northern provinces to the Belgian secession. The reintroduction of the Catholic hierarchy in 1853 won over a community which made up over a third of the population.

Dutch imperialism was consolidated in the second half of the 19th century. Having lost numerous colonies in the Americas, southern Africa and India, attention focused on the Indonesian archipelago. War with Aceh in northern Sumatra, famous for its piracy, was long and bloody but secured the archipelago for the Netherlands. The division of New Guinea was settled with Germany and Great Britain in 1875. Personal union with Luxembourg came to an end on the accession of Wilhelmina in 1890, barred by Salic Law from inheriting the Grand Duchy.

European War

In 1917 universal male suffrage was granted in return for the secular parties' acceptance of funding for religious schools, thus concluding the 30-year School Conflict. Female suffrage followed in 1922. Wilhelmina, though less active in government than her father, William III, strongly advocated neutrality in the conflicts of the early 20th century, keeping the Netherlands out of the First World War. The German Kaiser, Wilhelm II, was granted asylum in the Netherlands.

The inter-war years were a period of social and political continuity. The zuilen system expanded, cementing what has been described as a bourgeois consensus, though worldwide depression hit the Netherlands hard in the 1930s. In 1932 the IJsselmeer dam was completed, transforming the Zuider Zee, an inlet of the North Sea, into a freshwater lake, the IJsselmeer.

The neutrality of the Netherlands was not respected by Germany in the Second World War, despite assurances from Hitler after the invasion of Poland. Control of the Netherlands and Belgium was seen as essential to protect the industrial centres of the Ruhr and to gain broader access to the North Sea. The Dutch armed forces were overwhelmed within a week in May 1940. The queen and government went into exile in London. Persecution of the Jews began in Oct. 1941. The first transports left in July 1942, mostly to Auschwitz. 107,000 Dutch Jews died. Dutch resistance took the form of civilian sabotage and the hiding of Jews and onkerduikers ('underdivers')—underground military operatives.

The Netherlands saw some of the bitterest fighting near the close of the war when Allied troops made airborne incursions—Arnhem Bridge in Sept. 1944—to speed victory over Germany. By the end of the war the Dutch were on the brink of famine. The destruction of the economy and much of the infrastructure caused large-scale emigration. In 1947 the Netherlands accepted US$1bn. for reconstruction from the Marshall Plan and entered the Benelux Economic Union with Belgium and Luxembourg (fully established in 1958). The Netherlands abandoned its neutrality when it joined NATO in 1949, the year it granted Indonesia independence. Further changes to Dutch overseas possessions took place in 1954 under the Statute for the Kingdom, which gave the territories in the West Indies equal status. Dutch New Guinea (Irian Jaya) was ceded to Indonesia in 1963 and Suriname was given its independence in 1974.

Dutch politics saw several important changes in the post-war years, such as the introduction of proportional representation in elections. From the end of the war until 1958, a coalition of Catholic and labour parties held power, taking the Netherlands into the Korean War in 1950. The Netherlands was a founder member of the European Coal and Steel Community (ECSC) in 1951, which later merged with the European Economic Community (EEC).

The economy grew rapidly in the late 1950s when the welfare state was greatly expanded. Social unrest in the 1960s was led by youth and labour groups. Social changes in the '70s included the demise of the traditional zuilen and the creation of new political parties across religious divides; most notable of these was the Christian Democratic Appeal (CDA). Newspapers, the voice of the zuilen, disassociated themselves from religious denominations, becoming independent commercial enterprises. The decriminalization of personal cannabis use in the 1970s indicated a policy towards drug use and abuse that focused on rehabilitation (for hard drug users) as opposed to punishment. Vocal youth action was seen most clearly in the confrontations between the police and the krakers—squatters demanding affordable housing.

Opposition to nuclear weapons grew in the 1980s, sparked by the support given by Prime Minister Andreas van Agt to placing US cruise missiles on Dutch soil. In 1986 the pressures of the Netherlands' population density led to creation of the 12th province, Flevoland, from four polders reclaimed from the IJsselmeer.

The Netherlands joined the coalition forces in the 1991 Gulf War, providing two naval frigates. Serious flooding in Gelderland and the threat of worse to come led to the evacuation of 240,000 people from the province in 1995.

The Netherlands became the first country to legalize homosexual marriage and adoption, in 2001, and euthanasia, in 2002. In April 2002, Prime Minister Wim Kok's government resigned in the wake of a report that criticized Dutch inaction in preventing the massacre at Srebrenica in 1995. During the subsequent election campaign, the right-wing politician Pim Fortuyn was assassinated by an animal rights activist who opposed Fortuyn's anti-immigration policies.

The coalition government led by Jan Peter Balkenende, formed in July, collapsed in Oct., necessitating fresh elections. Balkenende formed a new government in May 2003. In 2005 the electorate voted in a referendum against adopting a proposed EU constitution. In June 2006 Balkenende's coalition again collapsed, although he remained head of a minority government until elections in Nov. In Feb. 2007, after months of negotiations, he was sworn in for a new tenure as premier, leading a centrist coalition of three parties. It collapsed in Feb. 2010 amid tensions over troop deployment in Afghanistan. The People's Party for Freedom and Democracy (VVD) emerged from elections in June 2010 with the most seats and formed a coalition, with Mark Rutte as prime minister, with the support of the far-right Freedom Party. In April 2012 Rutte offered to resign after the Freedom Party refused to back his austerity measures. After elections in Sept. 2012 he headed a new coalition of the VVD and the Labour Party.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

The Netherlands is bounded in the north and west by the North Sea, south by Belgium and east by Germany. The area is 41,540 sq. km, of which 33,718 sq. km is land. Projects of sea-flood control and land reclamation (polders) by the construction of dams and drainage schemes have continued since 1920. More than a quarter of the country is below sea level.

The population was 13,060,115 at the census of 1971 and 16,829,289 on 1 Jan. 2014. Population growth in 2013, 0.3%.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 16.93m.

Ongoing 'rolling' censuses have replaced the former decennial counts.

In 2012 the average age for marrying was 37.0 years for males and 33.8 for females. Expectation of life, 2012, was 79.2 years for males and 82.9 for females. Infant mortality, 2012, 3.7 per 1,000 live births; fertility rate, 2012, 1.8 births per woman. Percentage of population by age in 2010: 0–14 years, 17.7%; 15–64, 67.0%; 65 and over, 15.3%. The Netherlands received 11,590 asylum applications in 2011, down from 13,333 in 2010. In 2001 the Netherlands became the first country to legalize same-sex marriage.

A UNICEF report published in 2010 showed that 6.1% of children in the Netherlands live in relative poverty (living in a household in which disposable income—when adjusted for family size and composition—is less than 50% of the national median income), the joint third lowest of any country.

CLIMATE

A cool temperate maritime climate, marked by mild winters and cool summers, but with occasional continental influences. Coastal temperatures vary from 37°F (3°C) in winter to 61°F (16°C) in summer, but inland the winters are slightly colder and the summers slightly warmer. Rainfall is least in the months Feb. to May, but inland there is a well-defined summer maximum in July and Aug.

The Hague, Jan. 37°F (2.7°C), July 61°F (16.3°C). Annual rainfall 32.8" (820 mm). Amsterdam, Jan. 36°F (2.3°C), July 62°F (16.5°C). Annual rainfall 34" (850 mm). Rotterdam, Jan. 36.5°F (2.6°C), July 62°F (16.6°C). Annual rainfall 32" (800 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

According to the Constitution (promulgated 1815; last revision, 2005), the Kingdom consists of the Netherlands and its overseas countries and territories. Their relations are regulated by the 'Statute' for the Kingdom, which came into force on 29 Dec. 1954 and was revised on 10 Oct. 2010 in recognition of the dissolution of the Netherlands Antilles, by which Curaçao and Sint Maarten became (along with Aruba) independent countries within the Kingdom and Bonaire, Saba and Sint Eustatius became autonomous special municipalities. Each part enjoys full autonomy; they are united, on a footing of equality, for mutual assistance and the protection of their common interests.

The Netherlands is a constitutional and hereditary monarchy. The royal succession is in the direct female or male line in order of birth. The reigning King is Willem-Alexander, born 27 April 1967, son of Princess Beatrix Wilhelmina Armgard and Claus von Amsberg; married to Máxima Zorreguieta on 2 Feb. 2002 (born 17 May 1971); succeeded to the crown on 30 April 2013, on the abdication of his mother. Offspring: Catharina-Amalia, born 7 Dec. 2003 (heirress apparent); Alexia, born 26 June 2005; Ariane, born 10 April 2007.

Constitutional allowances are paid to King Willem-Alexander, Queen Máxima and Princess Beatrix. The estimated amounts for 2015 were: King Willem-Alexander, €5,318,000; Queen Máxima, €911,000; Princess Beatrix, €1,430,000.

Other Members of the Royal House. Princess Beatrix, born 31 Jan. 1938; Prince Constantijn (the King's brother), born 11 Oct. 1969, married to Laurentien Brinkhorst (Princess Laurentien) on 19 May 2001 (offspring: Eloise, born 8 June 2002; Claus-Casimir, born 21 March 2004; Leonore, born 3 June 2006); Princess Margriet Francisca (sister of Princess Beatrix), born in Ottawa, 19 Jan. 1943, married to Pieter van Vollenhoven on 10 Jan. 1967 (sons: Prince Maurits, born 17 April 1968; Prince Bernhard, born 25 Dec. 1969; Prince Pieter-Christiaan, born 22 March 1972; Prince Floris, born 10 April 1975). Names in italics represent members of the Royal House.

The central executive power of the State rests with the Crown, while the central legislative power is vested in the Crown and Parliament (the States-General), consisting of two Chambers.

The upper First Chamber is composed of 75 members, elected by the members of the Provincial States. The 150-member Second Chamber is directly elected by proportional representation for four-year terms. Members of the States-General must be Netherlands subjects of 18 years of age or over. The Hague is the seat of the Court, government and Parliament; Amsterdam is the capital.

The Council of State, appointed by the Crown, is composed of a vice-president and not more than 28 members. The monarch is president, but the day-to-day running of the Council is in the hands of the vice-president. The Council has to be consulted on all legislative matters. The Sovereign has the power to dissolve either Chambers, subject to the condition that new elections take place within 40 days, and the new Chamber be convoked within three months. Both the government and the Second Chamber may propose Bills; the First Chamber can only approve or reject them without inserting amendments. The meetings of both Chambers are public, although each of them may by a majority vote decide on a secret session. A Minister or Secretary of State cannot be a member of Parliament at the same time.

The Constitution can be revised only by a Bill declaring that there is reason for introducing such revision and containing the proposed alterations. The passing of this Bill is followed by a dissolution of both Chambers and a second confirmation by the new States-General by two-thirds of the votes. Unless it is expressly stated, all laws concern only the realm in Europe, and not the overseas parts of the kingdom.

CURRENT LEADERS

Mark Rutte

Position

Prime Minister

Introduction

Mark Rutte became prime minister in Oct. 2010, heading a coalition between his People's Party for Freedom and Democracy (VVD) and the Christian Democratic Appeal (CDA) with outside support of the Party for Freedom (PVV). His premiership ended an era of alternating Labour Party and Christian Democratic governments uninterrupted since 1918. Following elections in Sept. 2012, he continued as prime minister as the VVD formed a new coalition with the Labour Party (PvdA).

Early Life

Rutte was born in The Hague on 14 Feb. 1967 and read history at Leiden University. He served as national president of the VVD youth party from 1988-91. After graduating in 1992, he was employed by the Unilever group as a human resources manager.

Rutte became a member of the VVD's national board in 1993, resigning in 1997 to focus on his business career. He was a personnel manager at Unilever subsidiary Van den Bergh Nederland until 2000, when he was promoted to Unilever's corporate human resources group. In 2002 he became director of human resources for Unilever subsidiary IgloMora Group.

Rutte worked on the VVD candidate committee at the 2002 general election. Later that year he became state secretary for social affairs and employment in the coalition government. In 2003 he entered the House of Representatives and in 2004 was appointed state secretary for higher education and science.

Despite managing a disappointing VVD municipal election campaign, in May 2006 the party elected him 'lijsttrekker' (effective leader). In June 2006 he resigned from Jan Peter Balkenende's cabinet. He won notable victories in televised debates ahead of the June 2010 general election, attracting praise for his stance on economic affairs. The VVD won the election and after months of coalition talks Rutte was appointed premier.

Career in Office

Rutte and the VVD negotiated a coalition agreement with the CDA and the right-leaning PVV. Rutte shared executive posts evenly between VVD and CDA politicians, giving the CDA the ministries of defence, the interior and finance. The PVV, whose popularity sprang from its stance on immigration, was given a stake in policy-making, although controversial leader Geert Wilders subsequently faced trial (but was acquitted in June 2011) for inciting hatred against Muslims.

Rutte pledged to cut the budget deficit from 6% to 0.9% of GDP by 2015, raise the retirement age from 65 to 66 and support nuclear power. He imposed funding cuts on universities, while immigration policy was also tightened, with a clamp-down on repeat asylum applications and low-skilled immigrants, and restrictions on the wearing of the Islamic burqa in public.

In Jan. 2011 Rutte won parliamentary approval to send personnel to Afghanistan (the Netherlands having previously withdrawn from involvement there) to train the Afghan police. In the same month he held talks with the UK prime minister, David Cameron, on re-activating the EU's Service Directive to encourage free-market reforms in the European business community.

In April 2012 Rutte and his government resigned, having failed to secure parliamentary endorsement of austerity measures following the PVV's withdrawal of support for the coalition. He stayed in office in a caretaker capacity until elections in Sept. The VVD remained the largest party, with increased representation, and entered into a coalition with the PvdA in Nov. 2012.

Rutte's government was criticized through 2013 for its tight fiscal policy, which restrained growth and delayed the Netherlands' exit from recession. In June that year he stated that the EU goal of ever closer union in all policy areas was over and that his government wanted powers over social security, working conditions and media regulation to remain at the national level.

In July 2014 he led national mourning for 193 Dutch citizens who died aboard a Malaysian passenger airliner shot down over rebel-held territory in Ukraine's civil conflict zone.

Increasing support for far-right political opinion in 2015, fuelled by the European migrant crisis, together with the continuing economic malaise contributed to the decline in the government's popularity, although the coalition defeated a no-confidence vote in parliament in Aug.

DEFENCE

Conscription ended on 30 Aug. 1996.

The total strength of the armed forces in 2011 was 37,368. Reserves: 3,189. In 2013 defence expenditure totalled US$10,350m. (US$616 per capita), representing 1.3% of GDP.

Army

Personnel in 2011 numbered 20,386. The core fighting element of the Army consists of a single element divided into two mechanized brigades and one airborne brigade. Some units in the Netherlands may be assigned to the UN as peacekeeping forces. The army is responsible for the training of these units. The 1st Netherlands Army Corps merged with a German corps to become 1 German/Netherlands Corps in 1995. It is based in Münster, Germany and is a certified NATO Response Force.

There is a paramilitary Royal Military Constabulary, 5,911 strong in 2011. In addition there were 2,686 army reservists.

Navy

The principal headquarters and main base of the Royal Netherlands Navy is at Den Helder, with a minor base at Curaçao. Command and control in home waters is exercised jointly with the Belgian Naval Component (submarines excepted).

The combatant fleet includes four diesel submarines, four destroyers and two frigates. In 2011 personnel totalled 8,502 including 2,654 in the Royal Netherlands Marine Corps.

Air Force

The Royal Netherlands Air Force (RNLAf) had 8,030 personnel in 2011. It had 72 combat-capable aircraft in 2011 (F-16s) and 29 attack helicopters. All squadrons are operated by Tactical Air Command.

INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

On 1 June 2005 the Netherlands became the second European Union member after France to reject the proposed EU constitution, with 61.54% of votes cast in a referendum against the constitution and only 38.46% in favour.

The Hague is the seat of several international organizations, including the International Court of Justice.

ECONOMY

Services accounted for 76% of GDP in 2012, industry 22% and agriculture 2%.

According to the anti-corruption organization Transparency International, the Netherlands ranked equal fifth in the world in a 2015 survey of the countries with the least corruption in business and government. It received 87 out of 100 in the annual index.

The Netherlands gave US$5.6bn. in international aid in 2014. This represented 0.64% of GNI (compared to the UN target of 0.7%).

Overview

The Dutch economy boasts one of the world's highest levels of average income as well as relatively low income inequality. Given its small domestic market, location at the heart of northwest Europe and favourable harbour facilities, the Netherlands is notably open and outward-looking. It is a leading donor of international aid with a commitment to poverty reduction in Africa.

Dutch sovereign bonds enjoy safe haven status given the country's sound fiscal policies, low interest rates and strong institutional framework. Although domestic investment is weak, a favourable tax environment for multinationals has attracted many foreign companies and significant investment inflows. The country also has one of the highest levels of labour productivity.

The Netherlands is the fifth largest exporter of goods in the world (exports of goods and services accounting for 83.1% of GDP in 2014) and boasts Europe's largest port in Rotterdam. Trade dependency is even greater because of the scarcity of industrial raw materials. Industry is geared towards processing and re-exports now account for over half of the trade balance of goods, compared to a third in 1995. Relative to Europe's bigger countries, manufacturing's share of GDP is small compared to the agricultural and service sectors. The Netherlands is a leader in horticulture and is a competitive meat and dairy product exporter.

The global financial crisis saw the economy fall into its worst recession for several decades, recording a contraction of 3.7% in 2009. Exports declined by 25% while domestic demand also contracted. State support was needed to save several financial institutions, with four of the five largest subject to restructuring programmes. Public debt rose to 62.9% of GDP in 2010 and to 70.8% in 2012, when the economy shrank by 1.6%.

Nonetheless, the Netherlands was to weather the crisis better than many of its European partners, with recovery linked to resurgent exports. In Oct. 2012 the government announced austerity measures totalling €16bn. (US$20.7bn.). Low consumer confidence, beginning in 2008, was cited as a major factor in the weak performance of the economy in the second half of 2012, when spending was affected by falling real wages and a 2% increase in VAT to 21%. Unemployment rose to 7.9% in Feb. 2014, while the budget deficit exceeded the EU's 3% limit in both 2012 and 2013. The economy remains susceptible to weaknesses in the eurozone, to which around 60% of Dutch exports go. However, trade with developing countries has tripled over the decade to 2015.

Despite a nominal 20% correction in house prices in 2008 and a decline of 27% in real terms, the real estate market has begun to stabilize; prices of owner-occupied houses were on average 3-4% higher in Oct. 2015 than in Oct. 2014. A long-term challenge is to tackle the debt-to-income ratio, which stood at around 300% in 2014, nearly double the level of the early 2000s. Household indebtedness has led to a reduction in consumption, which has in turn hampered investment and growth.

The welfare system and labour market institutions follow the German model, with extensive social security provisions and worker influence at the corporate level. The state's pension liabilities are thought to be unsustainable. To address the high health care costs of the ageing population, the Dec. 2012 Stability Programme update recommended improving cost effectiveness and merging homecare with municipal care.

Currency

On 1 Jan. 1999 the euro (EUR) became the legal currency in the Netherlands at the irrevocable conversion rate of 2.20371 guilders to 1 euro. The euro, which consists of 100 cents, has been in circulation since 1 Jan. 2002. On the introduction of the euro there was a 'dual circulation' period before the guilder ceased to be legal tender on 28 Jan. 2002. Euro banknotes in circulation on 1 Jan. 2002 had a total value of €29.7bn.

Inflation rates (based on OECD statistics):

Gold reserves were 19.69m. troy oz in Sept. 2009 and foreign exchange reserves US$10,102m. Total money supply was €217,793m. in Aug. 2009.

Budget

In 2011 central government revenues totalled €245,790m. (€244,161m. in 2010) and expenditures €268,137m. (€266,882m. in 2010). Principal sources of revenue in 2011: social security contributions, €88,798m.; taxes on goods and services, €64,742m.; taxes on income, profits and capital gains, €61,929m. Main items of expenditure by economic type in 2011: social benefits, €128,942m.; grants, €75,625m.; compensation of employees, €19,722m.

The Netherlands' budget deficit in 2014 was 2.4% of GDP (unchanged since 2013; 2012, 3.9%). The required target set by the EU is a budget deficit of no more than 3%.

VAT is 21.0% (reduced rate, 6.0%).

In 2014 total GDP was US$879.3bn.

Banking and Finance

The central bank and bank of issue is the Netherlands Bank (President, Klaas Knot), founded in 1814 and nationalized in 1948. Its Governor is appointed by the government for seven-year terms. In 2011 the capital amounted to €500m. There were 82 registered commercial banks in 2011. The largest bank in 2014 was ING Bank NV (assets of €1,481.6bn.), ahead of Rabobank and ABN Amro. In Oct. 2007 ABN Amro and a consortium led by the UK's Royal Bank of Scotland (and including Santander from Spain and the Belgian-Dutch company Fortis) agreed a merger worth US$98.5bn., representing Europe's largest banking takeover. The Dutch part of Fortis was nationalized in Oct. 2008 and its shares in ABN Amro were also transferred to the Dutch government. There is a stock exchange in Amsterdam; it is a component of Euronext, which was created in Sept. 2000 through the merger of the Amsterdam, Brussels and Paris bourses.

Gross external debt amounted to US$2,416,352m. in June 2012.

The Netherlands received US$30.3bn. worth of foreign direct investment in 2014, down from US$32.0bn. in 2013.

In Dec. 2011, 66.3% of internet users in the Netherlands were using online banking—the highest proportion of any country.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

In 2011, 4.3% of energy consumption came from renewables (wind power, solar power, hydro-electric power, tidal power, geothermal energy and biomass), compared to the European Union average of 13.0%. A target of 14% has been set by the EU for 2020.

Environment

Carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2011 were the equivalent of 14.4 tonnes per capita.

The Netherlands is one of the world leaders in recycling. In 2012, 50% of municipal waste was recycled or composted, with only 2% going to landfill.

Electricity

Installed capacity was 28.0m. kW in 2011. Production of electrical energy in 2011 was 112.80bn. kWh (92% thermal and 4% nuclear, with the remainder coming from biomass, wind and other sources); consumption per capita was 7,324 kWh. There was one nuclear reactor in operation in 2010.

Oil and Gas

Production of natural gas in 2012, 63.9bn. cu. metres. Reserves in 2012 were 1.0trn. cu. metres. The Groningen gas field in the north of the country is the largest in continental Europe. In 2009 crude oil production was 9.3m. bbls; reserves were 310m. bbls in 2011.

Minerals

In 2009, 6.0m. tonnes of salt were produced. Aluminium production in 2009 totalled 300,000 tonnes.

Agriculture

The Netherlands is one of the world's largest exporters of agricultural produce. There were 72,300 agricultural holdings in 2010. Food and live animals accounted for 12.1% of exports and 8.4% of imports in 2010. The agricultural sector (including forestry and fisheries) employs 2.5% of the workforce. In 2009 there were 1,054,700 ha. of arable land and 35,500 ha. of permanent crops. The total area of cultivated land in 2011 was 1,858,000 ha.: grassland and green fodder crops, 1,225,000 ha.; arable crops, 535,000 ha.; open ground horticulture, 89,000 ha.; glasshouse horticulture, 10,000 ha. In 2010, 212,000 people were employed in agriculture (of which family workers, 148,000; non-family workers, 64,000).

The yield of the more important arable crops, in 1,000 tonnes, was as follows:

Crop	2010	2011
Potatoes	6,843	7,333
Sugar beets	5,280	5,858
Wheat	1,370	1,175
Sown onions	1,252	1,582
Barley	204	205

Other major fruit and vegetable production in 2010 included (in 1,000 tonnes): tomatoes, 815; cucumbers, 435; carrots, 350; sweet peppers, 345; apples, 338; mushrooms, 240; pears, 195.

Cultivated areas of main flowers (2011) in 1,000 ha.: tulips, 11.9; lilies, 5.1. Total area of bulbs, 24,100 ha.

Livestock, 2011 (in 1,000) included: 12,429 pigs; 3,885 cattle; 1,088 sheep; 380 goats; 96,919 chickens.

Animal products in 2010 (in 1,000 tonnes) included: pork and pork products, 1,288; beef and veal, 388; poultry, 751; milk, 11,626; cheese, 753; butter, 133; hens' eggs, 631.

Forestry

Forests covered 0.37m. ha. in 2010, or 11% of the land area. In 2011, 982,000 cu. metres of roundwood were cut.

Fisheries

Total catch in 2010 was 389,357 tonnes (down from 495,774 tonnes in 2000), of which 387,306 tonnes were from marine waters. In 2012 the fishing fleet comprised 849 vessels of 145,451 GT.

INDUSTRY

In March 2015 the leading companies by market capitalization were: Royal Dutch Shell (Dutch/British), an oil and gas company (US$192.1bn.); Unilever (Dutch/British), a consumer goods firm (US$118.9bn.); and ING, a banking and insurance company (US$56.5bn.).

In 2011 there were 51,170 companies in the manufacturing industry (48% in textiles, paper, wood, furniture and miscellaneous industries; 20% basic metals and metal products; 11% electrical engineering and machinery; 9% food industry; 8% oil, chemicals, rubber and synthetics; 4% transport equipment). Total production value in 2010 was €270.4bn.

The largest industrial sectors by production value in 2010 were oil, chemicals, rubber and synthetics (37%); food industry (22%); textiles, paper, wood, furniture and miscellaneous industries (13%); and electrical engineering and machinery (13%). There were 809,000 employees (full-time equivalent) in manufacturing in 2008: textiles, paper, wood, furniture and other industry, 274,000; electrical engineering and machinery, 138,000; oil, chemicals, rubber and synthetics, 128,000; food industry, 117,000; basic metals and metal products, 112,000; transport equipment, 40,000.

Labour

The total labour force (15–65 years) in 2011 was 7,811,000 persons (3,492,000 women) of whom 419,000 (195,000 women) unemployed. Of the 7,392,000 employed persons, 5,709,000 were in permanent employment, 606,000 were in flexible employment and 1,077,000 were self-employed. Nearly a third of all 15–65-year-old women were working between 20 and 35 hours per week. By education level, the 2011 employed labour force included (in 1,000): primary education, 361; junior secondary education, 1,309; senior secondary education, 3,130; university education, 2,524 (bachelor, 1,639; master's or PhD, 885).

The unemployment rate was 6.6% in Dec. 2015 (down from 7.4% in 2014). Although the Netherlands has a very low unemployment rate, for every 100 people below the age of 65 who are active in the labour market, 35 are not. In 2010, 48.9% of the labour force was in part-time employment with 76.5% of all women employed working part-time.

In 2010 the average weekly working hours of employees were 34.4. In 2011 employees' average annual working hours totalled 1,379. Workers in the Netherlands put in among the shortest hours of any industrialized country.

Average annual earnings of employees in 2009 totalled €30,700 with average hourly earnings of €20.01. By type of employment hourly earnings in 2009 ranged from €12.47 in hotels and restaurants up to €33.57 in mineral extraction.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

On 5 Sept. 1944 and 14 March 1947 the Netherlands signed agreements with Belgium and Luxembourg for the establishment of a customs union. On 1 Jan. 1948 this union came into force and the existing customs tariffs of the Belgium–Luxembourg Economic Union and of the Netherlands were superseded by the joint Benelux Customs Union Tariff. It applied to imports into the three countries from outside sources, and exempted from customs duties all imports into each of the three countries from the other two.

Imports and Exports

In 2011 imports totalled €364,000m. (provisional), up from €332,000m. in 2010; exports, €405,000m. (provisional), up from €372,000m. in 2010.

Value of trade with major partners (in €1bn.):

Region/Country	Imports		Exports
	2010	2010	2011 (provisional)	2011 (provisional)
Europe	205	298	228	327
Belgium	32	41	36	49
France	14	32	17	36
Germany	59	90	61	97
Italy	7	19	8	20
Russia	14	6	17	6
UK	22	30	25	32
Africa	11	11	12	12
Americas	40	26	42	27
USA	25	17	24	17
Asia	74	32	79	34
China	31	5	31	7
Japan	9	3	10	3
Australia and Oceania	1	5	2	4

The main imports in 2011 (provisional) were (in €1bn.): machines and transport equipment, 103 (100 in 2010); mineral fuels, 79 (60); chemical products, 47 (51); manufactured goods, 39 (34); food and live animals, 32 (28); inedible raw materials except fuel, 16 (13). Main exports in 2011 (provisional) were (in €1bn.): machines and transport equipment, 112 (106 in 2010); chemical products, 71 (71); mineral fuels, 65 (51); food and live animals, 48 (45); manufactured goods, 37 (33); inedible raw materials except fuels, 21 (19). The Netherlands ranks second only behind the USA for the value of its agricultural exports.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

In 2011 the total length of the Netherlands' road network was 139,235 km (including 2,658 km of motorways). Number of vehicles (2008): private cars, 7.39m.; trucks and vans, 1.07m.; motorcycles and mopeds, 1.37m. There were 750 fatalities as a result of road accidents in 2008, equivalent to 4.6 fatalities per 100,000 population (one of the lowest death rates in road accidents of any industrialized country).

Rail

Most rail services are operated by N.V. Nederlandse Spoorwegen. Route length in 2011 was 3,013 km. Passenger-km travelled in 2009 came to 16.32bn. Goods transported in 2010 totalled 36m. tonnes. There is a metro (44 km) and tram/light rail network (154 km) in Amsterdam and in Rotterdam (76 km and 67 km). Tram/light rail networks operate in The Hague (128 km) and Utrecht (22 km). A tram link between Maastricht and Hasselt in Belgium is currently under construction; it is expected to open in 2017.

Civil Aviation

There are international airports at Amsterdam (Schiphol), Rotterdam, Maastricht and Eindhoven. The Royal Dutch Airlines (KLM) was founded on 7 Oct. 1919. In Oct. 2003 it merged with Air France to form Air France-KLM, in which the French state owns a 15.9% stake.

Airport passenger traffic reached 53.9m. in 2011: Amsterdam handled 49.8m. passengers, Eindhoven 2.6m. and Rotterdam 1.1m. Amsterdam was the fourth busiest airport in Europe in 2011 on the basis of passenger numbers and the 14th busiest in the world. In 2011, 1.6m. tonnes of freight were transported via Dutch airports.

Shipping

In Jan. 2009 there were 810 ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 7,428,000 GT. Of the 810 vessels registered, 593 were general cargo ships, 83 container ships, 47 passenger ships, 43 oil tankers, 20 chemical tankers, 18 liquid gas tankers and six bulk carriers. The Dutch-controlled fleet comprised 578 vessels of 1,000 GT or over in Jan. 2009, of which 426 were under the Dutch flag and 152 under foreign flags.

Total throughput at Rotterdam, the busiest port in the Netherlands and Europe and the third busiest in the world, was 386,957,000 tonnes in 2009 (down from a record 421,136,000 tonnes in 2008). Of the total cargo handled in 2009, 273,292,000 tonnes were incoming and 113,665,000 tonnes outgoing. Rotterdam is also the busiest container port in both the Netherlands and Europe; in 2008 it was the ninth busiest container port in the world, handling 10,784,000 TEUs (twenty-foot equivalent units). The Amsterdam ports were the second busiest in the Netherlands in 2009, handling 86,677,000 tonnes of cargo (down from 94,833,000 tonnes in 2008).

There were 6,215 km of inland waterways in 2008, including 2,686 km of canals and 823 km of canalized rivers; 271.5m. tonnes of freight were carried on inland waterways in 2009.

The Netherlands was ranked third in the World Economic Forum's Global Competitiveness Report 2009–2010 for the quality of its port facilities.

Telecommunications

In 2012 there were 7,182,000 main (fixed) telephone lines. In the same year mobile phone subscribers numbered 19,717,000 (1,179.7 per 1,000 persons). 94.0% of the population aged 16–74 were internet users in 2013. The Netherlands has one of the highest fixed broadband penetration rates, at 38.1 subscribers per 100 inhabitants in Dec. 2010. In March 2012 there were 5.8m. Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

Justice is administered by the High Court (Court of Cassation), by five courts of justice (Courts of Appeal), by 19 district courts and by 61 cantonal courts. The Cantonal Court, which deals with minor offences, comprises a single judge; more serious cases are tried by the district courts, comprising as a rule three judges (in some cases one judge is sufficient); the courts of appeal are constituted of three and the High Court of five judges. All judges are appointed for life by the Sovereign (the judges of the High Court from a list prepared by the Second Chamber of the States-General). They can be removed only by a decision of the High Court.

At the district court the juvenile judge is specially appointed to try children's civil cases and at the same time charged with administration of justice for criminal actions committed by young persons between 12 and 18 years old, unless imprisonment of more than six months ought to be inflicted; such cases are tried by three judges.

The population in penal institutions in Sept. 2012 was 13,749 (82 per 100,000 of national population), down from 21,013 in July 2006 (128 per 100,000). Owing to the declining prison population, since Feb. 2010 some Belgian prison inmates have been accommodated at Tilburg prison in the Netherlands. There are now more prison guards in the Netherlands than prisoners. 1,193,000 crimes were recorded by the police in 2010 (1,402,000 in 2002).

In 2015 the World Justice Project Rule of Law Index, which provides data on how the rule of law is experienced by the general public across eight categories, ranked the Netherlands first of 102 countries for civil justice and 14th for criminal justice.

Police

The police force is divided into 25 regions. There is also a National Police Service which includes the Central Criminal Investigation Office, which deals with serious crimes throughout the country, and the International Criminal Investigation Office, which informs foreign countries of international crimes.

Education

Statistics for the academic year 2009–10:

	Schools/ institutions	Full-time pupils/students (in 1,000) Total
Primary education	6,895	1,548
Special primary education	311	43
Special schools	323	68
Secondary education	657	935
Senior secondary vocational education	71	522
Higher professional education	43	403
University education	13	233

University student enrolment by subject in 2009–10 (with total students): behaviour and society (49,600); economics (39,600); language and culture (32,300); health (31,500); engineering and technology (30,600); law (28,100); science (20,100); cross-sector programmes (3,200); university teacher-training courses (1,700).

In 2007 there were 29,104 Open University students and 752 staff. There are 12 study centres in the Netherlands and three support centres, plus six study centres in Belgium.

In 2006 public expenditure on education came to 5.4% of GNI and 12.0% of total government spending. The adult literacy rate is at least 99%.

Health

There were 8,673 general practitioners on 1 Jan. 2007; 2,825 pharmacists and 2,197 midwives on 1 Jan. 2006; and 16,346 specialists and 13,355 physiotherapists on 1 Jan. 2005. There were 7,994 dentists in 2005. At 1 Jan. 2006 there were 117 hospitals and 50,209 licensed hospital beds (excluding mental hospitals). The 1919 Opium Act (amended in 1928 and 1976) regulates the production and consumption of 'psychoactive' drugs. Personal use of cannabis is effectively decriminalized and the sale of soft drugs through 'coffee shops' is not prosecuted provided certain conditions are met. Euthanasia became legal when the First Chamber (the Senate) gave its formal approval on 10 April 2001 by 46 votes to 28. The Second Chamber had voted to make it legal by 104 votes to 40 in Nov. 2000. The law came into effect on 1 April 2002. In 2007 euthanasia organizations recorded 2,120 instances of doctors helping patients to die. The Netherlands was the first country to legalize euthanasia. In 2007 the Netherlands spent 8.9% of its GDP on health.

Welfare

The General Old Age Pensions Act (AOW) entitles everyone to draw an old age pension from the age of 65, although this is to rise gradually to 66 by 2019 and 67 by 2024. At 31 Dec. 2010 there were 2,881,000 persons entitled to receive an old age pension, and 98,000 a pension under the General Surviving Relatives Act; 1,932,000 parents were receiving benefits under the General Child Benefit Act. In 2011 there were 825,000 persons claiming incapacity benefits and 270,000 persons claiming benefits under the Unemployment Benefits Act.

RELIGION

Entire liberty of conscience is granted to the members of all denominations. The royal family belong to the Protestant Church in the Netherlands.

Population aged 12 years and over in 2009 was: Roman Catholics, 27%; Protestant Church in the Netherlands, 9%; Calvinist, 3%; other creeds, 10%; no religion, 44%. The Dutch Reformed Church merged with the Reformed Churches in the Netherlands and the Evangelical Lutheran Church in the Kingdom of the Netherlands in May 2004 to form the Protestant Church in the Netherlands—now the second largest church body in the country. The Roman Catholic Church has one archdiocese (of Utrecht) and six dioceses. In Feb. 2016 there were two Roman Catholic cardinals. The Old Catholic Church of the Netherlands has one Archbishop (of Utrecht), one Bishop (of Haarlem) and 26 parishes. There were 1.0m. Muslims in 2010 according to estimates by the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life; there were also small numbers of Hindus, Buddhists and Jews.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

The Kingdom of the Netherlands has ten sites on the UNESCO World Heritage List: Schokland and its surroundings (inscribed on the list in 1995); the defence line at Amsterdam (1996); the mill network at Kinderdijk-Elshout (1997); the historic area of Willemstad, the inner city and harbour in Curaçao (1997); the D. F. Wouda steam pumping station (1998); Droogmakerij de Beemster (Beemster Polder) (1999); the Rietveld Schröder house in Utrecht (2000); the Seventeenth-century canal ring area of Amsterdam inside the Singelgracht (2010); and Van Nellefabriek in Rotterdam (2014).

The Netherlands shares the Wadden Sea (2009 and 2014) with Denmark and Germany. It is the largest unbroken system of intertidal sand and mud flats in the world.

Press

In 2014 there were 30 daily newspapers with a combined circulation of 3,555,000. The most widely read daily is De Telegraaf, with an average daily circulation of 513,000 copies in 2014. There were 32 newspaper online editions in 2014, when there were 7,824,000 unique monthly visitors. In the 2013 World Press Freedom Index compiled by Reporters Without Borders, the Netherlands was ranked second out of 179 countries.

Tourism

Tourism is a major sector of the economy. In 2011 international tourist spending totalled €10,400m. A total of 11,299,000 non-resident tourists stayed in holiday accommodation in 2011 (up from 10,883,000 in 2010 and 9,921,000 in 2009).

Festivals

Floriade, a world-famous horticultural show, takes place every ten years and is the largest Dutch attraction, with 2.0m. people attending the 2012 festival. The Maastricht Carnival in April attracts many visitors. The Flower Parade from Noordwijk to Haarlem occurs in late April. Koningsdag on 27 April is a nationwide celebration of King Willem-Alexander's birthday. The Oosterparkfestival, a cultural celebration of that district of Amsterdam, runs for three days in the first week of May. Liberation Day is celebrated every five years on 5 May, with the next occurrence being in 2020. An international music festival, the Holland Festival, is held in Amsterdam throughout June each year and the Early Music Festival is held in Utrecht. The North Sea Jazz Festival, the largest in Europe, takes place in The Hague. Pinkpop, one of Europe's leading rock and pop festivals, is held at Landgraaf in May or June. Each year the most important Dutch and Flemish theatre productions of the previous season are performed at the Theatre Festival in Amsterdam and Antwerp (Belgium). The Holland Dance Festival is held every other year in The Hague and the Springdance Festival in Utrecht annually. Film festivals include the Rotterdam Film Festival in Feb., the Dutch Film Festival in Sept. and the International Documentary Film Festival of Amsterdam in Dec.

OVERSEAS COUNTRIES AND TERRITORIES

Landen en gebieden overzee

These fall into two categories: Autonomous Countries within the Kingdom of the Netherlands (Aruba, Curaçao and Sint Maarten) and Autonomous Special Municipalities of the Netherlands (Bonaire, Saba and Sint Eustatius). Following the dissolution of the Netherlands Antilles on 10 Oct. 2010, Curaçao and Sint

Maarten became autonomous countries within the Kingdom of the Netherlands (a status held by Aruba since 1986) while Bonaire, Saba and Sint Eustatius were granted a status comparable to that of the municipalities within the Netherlands itself.

Aruba

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Discovered by Alonzo de Ojeda in 1499, Aruba was claimed for Spain but not settled. It was acquired by the Dutch in 1634, but apart from garrisons, was left to the indigenous Caiquetious (Arawak) Indians until the 19th century. From 1828 it formed part of the Dutch West Indies and from 1845 part of the Netherlands Antilles with which, on 29 Dec. 1954, it achieved internal self-government. Following a referendum in March 1977 the Dutch government announced on 28 Oct. 1981 that Aruba would proceed to independence separately from the other islands. Aruba was constitutionally separated from the Netherlands Antilles from 1 Jan. 1986. An agreement with the Netherlands government in June 1990 deleted references to eventual independence at Aruba's request.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

The island, which lies in the southern Caribbean 32 km north of the Venezuelan coast and 68 km west of Curaçao, has an area of 193 sq. km (75 sq. miles) and a population at the last census in Sept. 2010 of 101,484; density 526 inhabitants per sq. km. The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 104,000. The chief towns are Oranjestad, the capital (2010 census population, 28,294) and San Nicolas. Dutch is the official language, but the language usually spoken is Papiamentu, a creole language. Over half the population is of Indian stock, with the balance of Dutch, Spanish and mestizo origin.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

Population growth rate, 2009, 1.0%. Life expectancy at birth in 2010 was 75 years. Birth rate per 1,000 population (2008), 11.6; death rate, 4.9; infant mortality, 1.6.

CLIMATE

Aruba has a tropical marine climate, with a brief rainy season from Oct. to Dec.

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

Under the separate constitution inaugurated on 1 Jan. 1986, Aruba is an autonomous part of the Kingdom of the Netherlands with its own legislature, government, judiciary, civil service and police force. The Netherlands is represented by a Governor appointed by the monarch. The unicameral legislature (Staten) consists of 21 members elected for a four-year term of office.

RECENT ELECTIONS

Elections were held on 27 Sept. 2013. The Aruban People's Party (AVP) won with 13 out of 21 seats, against 7 seats for the People's Electoral Movement (MEP) and 1 seat for the Real Democracy Party (PDR).

CURRENT GOVERNMENT

Governor: Fredis Refunjol; b. 1950 (took office on 11 May 2004).

Prime Minister: Mike Eman; b. 1961 (sworn in on 30 Oct. 2009).

Curaçao

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

The Arawak Amerindians were the first people to settle the island. Spanish sailors sighted it in 1499 but it was not until 1634 that the Dutch established a presence. The Dutch West India Company built the capital, Willemstad, on a natural harbour. The island became an important centre for regional commerce, in particular the slave trade. In 1828 it was integrated into the Dutch West Indies and from 1845 was part of the Netherlands Antilles.

Economic decline took hold after slavery was outlawed by the Dutch in 1863. When oil was discovered in 1914, Royal Dutch Shell and the Dutch government combined to build a refinery. Internal self-government was granted in 1954 and in Oct. 2010 Curaçao became autonomous within the Kingdom of the Netherlands. The Netherlands Antilles was formally dissolved.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Situated around 100 km north of the Venezuelan coast, Curaçao covers 444 sq. km and at the 2011 census had a population of 150,563. Willemstad is the capital with an estimated population (2011) of 135,000. The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 157,000.

Dutch, Papiamentu (a Creole language with elements of Dutch, English, Portuguese and Spanish) and English are all official languages.

CLIMATE

Willemstad, Feb. 27-2°C, Aug. 29-4°C. Annual rainfall 553 mm.

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

At a non-binding referendum on 8 April 2005, 68% of votes cast favoured Curaçao seceding from the Netherlands Antilles and becoming a territory of the Netherlands in its own right. In Oct. 2010 the Netherlands Antilles was dissolved and Curaçao became an autonomous state within the Kingdom of the Netherlands, independent in all respects except defence and foreign affairs.

The head of state is the monarch of the Netherlands, represented by a Governor. The Prime Minister heads the Executive Council.

The Staten (parliament) is comprised of 21 members elected by popular vote every four years.

RECENT ELECTIONS

Parliamentary elections were held on 19 Oct. 2012. Pueblo Soberano (PS) won 5 seats (22.6% of the vote), Movimiento Futuro Korsou (MFK) 5 (21.2%), Partido Antiá Restrukturá (PAR) 4 (19.7%), Partido pa Adelanto i Inovashon Soshal (PAIS) 4 (17.7%), Movishon Antia Nobo (MAN) 2 (9.5%) and Partido Nashonal di Pueblo (PNP) 1 (5.9%). Turnout was a record 74.5%.

CURRENT GOVERNMENT

Governor: Lucille George-Wout; b. 1950 (took office on 4 Nov. 2013).

Prime Minister: Bernard Whiteman; b. 1954 (took office on 1 Sept. 2015).

Government Website (Papiamentu only): <http://www.gobiernu.cw>

ECONOMY

The economy is reliant on oil refining, tourism and offshore finance.

Currency

It is expected that the Caribbean guilder will eventually replace the Netherlands Antillean guilder. Inflation was 1.8% in 2008 (2.2% in 2007).

Performance

Real GDP growth was 2.1% in 2008 (1.6% in 2007).

Banking and Finance

After dissolution, the Bank of the Netherlands Antilles was renamed the Central Bank of Curaçao and Sint Maarten.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCESOil and Gas

The economy was formerly based on oil refining at the Shell refinery but following an announcement that closure was imminent, it was sold to the government in Sept. 1985 and leased to Petróleos de Venezuela to operate on a reduced scale.

INDUSTRYLabour

Unemployment stood at 9.7% in 2009.

COMMUNICATIONSRoads

In 2004 there were 75,248 registered vehicles (60,590 passenger cars).

Civil Aviation

There is an international airport (Curaçao International Airport or Hato International Airport), which handled 1,452,015 passengers in 2009.

Shipping

In 2006, 2,889 ships (including 1,304 freighters, 920 tankers and 205 cruise ships) entered Curaçao's port.

RELIGION

At the 2011 census 72.8% of the population was Roman Catholic.

CULTURE

The Historic Area of Willemstad, Inner City and Harbour was inscribed on the UNESCO World Heritage List in 1997.

Tourism

In 2011 there were 390,111 staying visitors and 400,850 cruise passenger visitors.

Sint Maarten

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Sighted by Christopher Columbus on 11 Nov. 1493, the feast day for St Martin of Tours, the island was eventually settled by the Dutch in 1631. A centre of salt mining, the British, French and Spanish competed for control with the Dutch. In 1648 the island was divided in two by the Treaty of Concordia, with the French administering the north (called St Martin) and the Dutch the south. Slaves in the south worked on cotton, sugar and tobacco plantations until the Dutch abolished slavery in 1863. Economic decline set in until Sint Maarten became a free port at the outbreak of the Second World War.

In 1954 it was incorporated into the Netherlands Antilles. In 2000 a referendum supported self-government, a status achieved in Oct. 2010 when Sint Maarten became autonomous within the Kingdom of the Netherlands.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Situated around 950 km northeast of the Venezuelan coast, Sint Maarten covers 34 sq. km and at the 2011 census had a population of 33,609. Philipsburg is the capital. The northern half of the island is the French possession of St Martin. The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 39,000.

The official languages are Dutch and English. Creole, Papiamentu and Spanish are also spoken.

CLIMATE

Feb. 25-0°C, Aug. 28-5°C. Annual rainfall averages between 931 mm and 955 mm.

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

In a referendum on 22 June 2000, 70% of votes cast were in favour of Sint Maarten becoming a self-governing country within the Kingdom of the Netherlands. This status was achieved in all respects except defence and foreign affairs in Oct. 2010 when the Netherlands Antilles was dissolved.

The head of state is the monarch of the Netherlands, represented by a Governor. The Prime Minister heads a Council of Ministers. The Staten (parliament) is comprised of 15 members elected by proportional representation every four years.

RECENT ELECTIONS

Parliamentary elections were held on 29 Aug. 2014. United People (UP) won 7 seats (42.5% of the vote), the National Alliance (NA)

4 (27.7%), the Democratic Party (DP) 2 (16.5%) and the United Sint Maarten Party 2 (11.3%). Turnout was 69.4%.

ECONOMY

Tourism is the mainstay of the economy, providing 80% of jobs. Virtually all food, energy and manufactured goods are imported.

Currency

It is expected that the Caribbean guilder will eventually replace the Netherlands Antillean guilder. Inflation was 1.8% in 2008 (2.2% in 2007).

Performance

The economy grew by 1.6% in 2008, down from 4.5% in 2007. GDP at purchasing power parity was estimated at US$794.7m. in 2008. Unemployment stood at 10.2% in the same year.

Banking and Finance

After dissolution, the Bank of the Netherlands Antilles was renamed the Central Bank of Curaçao and Sint Maarten.

INDUSTRYLabour

The labour force in June 2009 totalled 24,344, with 21,378 people in employment. The unemployment rate in June 2009 was 12.2%.

COMMUNICATIONSCivil Aviation

There is an international airport (Princess Juliana Airport), which handled 1,625,885 passengers in 2009.

Shipping

In 2013 Sint Maarten handled 1,785,670 cruise ship passengers, with 631 cruise ship calls.

RELIGION

At the 2011 census 33.1% of the population was Roman Catholic, 14.7% Pentecostal, 10.0% Methodist, 6.6% Seventh-day Adventist, 5.2% Hindu and 4.7% Baptist.

CULTURETourism

There were 466,955 stayover tourist arrivals in 2013 and 1,785,670 cruise passenger arrivals.

AUTONOMOUS SPECIAL MUNICIPALITIES OF THE NETHERLANDS

Bijzondere gemeenten van Nederland

Bonaire

Inhabited by Arawak Caquetios Indians by AD 1000, the island was sighted by Spanish sailors in 1499 and settled by the Dutch from 1623. The two nations exchanged control of the island until the Dutch established dominance in 1636, with the Dutch West India Company running the island. The British seized control from 1800–03 and also from 1807–16. Slavery was outlawed in 1862. After Nazi Germany invaded the Netherlands in 1940 Bonaire was used as an internment camp. In the post-war years tourism became the staple of the economy. When the Netherlands Antilles was dissolved on 10 Oct. 2010, Bonaire became an Autonomous Special Municipality of the Netherlands.

Bonaire is situated some 100 km north of the Venezuelan coast. It has an area of 288 sq. km and, in Jan. 2013, a population of 17,408. The capital is Kralendijk. Dutch, English and Papiamentu are all official languages.

The US dollar replaced the Netherlands Antillean guilder as the legal currency in Jan. 2011. Real GDP grew by 2.7% in 2005 and inflation was 1.3%. The mainstays of the economy are tourism (particularly diving) and the salt industry. Flamingo International Airport handled 573,792 passengers in 2006 (of whom 277,505 were in transit). In 2004 there were 6,766 registered vehicles (4,139 passenger cars). In 2006 there were 63,552 tourist arrivals. Bonaire handled 40,077 cruise ship passengers in 2005.

Lieut.-Governor: Edison Rijna (since 1 March 2014—acting until 22 Aug. 2014).

Saba

Archaeological evidence suggests the island was originally inhabited by Arawak or Carib Indians. Sighted by Columbus in 1493, there was no serious attempt at Western colonization until the Dutch West India Company sent a party of settlers in 1640. An English buccaneer, Thomas Morgan, seized the island in 1664 and it served as a centre of piracy in the 17th century. The French, English and Dutch long battled for dominance, with rum and sugar important revenue earners. The Dutch reclaimed Saba in 1816 and have maintained control ever since. After the dissolution of the Netherlands Antilles on 10 Oct. 2010, Saba became an Autonomous Special Municipality of the Netherlands.

The island has an area of 13 sq. km and a population in Jan. 2013 of 1,991. The capital is The Bottom. Dutch, English and Papiamentu are all official languages. Roman Catholicism is the dominant religion. There is a single main road plus the Juancho E. Yrausquin Airport. A ferry service operates regularly to and from Sint Maarten. Tourism is increasingly important to the economy, with some 25,000 visitors a year. Fishing is also a major revenue earner. The US dollar replaced the Netherlands Antillean guilder as the legal currency in Jan. 2011. The Saba University School of Medicine has been in operation since 1986.

Lieut.-Governor: Jonathan G. A. Johnson (took office on 2 July 2008).

Sint Eustatius

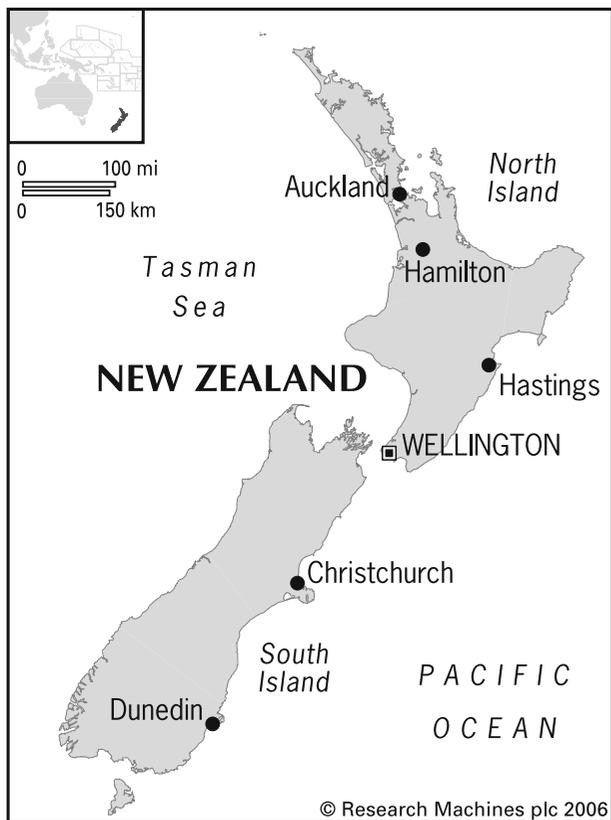

Sighted, but not landed, by Christopher Columbus in 1493, the island was settled by a delegation from Zeeland, a province of the Netherlands, in 1636. From 1678 the Dutch West India Company was directly responsible for government. A free port from 1756, it became a focus of smuggling as well as a centre of sugar production. On 16 Nov. 1766 the guns of Fort Oranje were fired to return the salute of a visiting American ship, an act generally considered as the first international recognition of the newly independent USA. Against the backdrop of the Fourth Anglo-Dutch War, the British seized control of the island but yielded power to the French within a year, who transferred sovereignty back to the Dutch in 1784. A referendum in April 2005 came out in favour of remaining within the Netherlands Antilles, but it was the only constituent island in favour of its continuation. Following the dissolution of the Netherlands Antilles on 10 Oct. 2010, Sint Eustatius became an Autonomous Special Municipality of the Netherlands.

The island covers an area of 21 sq. km and a population in Jan. 2013 of 3,897. Its capital is Oranjestad. Dutch, English and Papiamentu are all official languages. The US dollar replaced the Netherlands Antillean guilder as the legal currency in Jan. 2011. The government is the principal employer. F. D. Roosevelt Airport has six scheduled flights from St Maarten every day. The University of Sint Eustatius School of Medicine received its charter in 1999.

Lieut.-Governor: Gerald Berkel (took office on 1 April 2010).

NEW ZEALAND

Earlier on the same voyage Tasman had landed on an island off Australia which he named Van Diemen's Land, later called Tasmania.

Contact between Maori and Europeans, or 'Pakeha', followed Cook's journeys to New Zealand and mapping of the coastline, opening the way for sealing and whaling stations. Coastal trade grew throughout the first decades of the 19th century and trade routes were established between Maori and the new colony of New South Wales as early as the 1820s. The Maori adapted quickly to both a market economy—selling provisions, timber and flax—and to new technologies (notably the musket). Pakeha settlement in the decades following Cook's arrival was often on Maori terms and was used by Maori in the traditional pursuit of mana in the eyes of rivals and neighbours. Mission stations soon appeared: the Church Missionary Society established three stations in the Bay of Islands between 1814 and 1823, and were joined by a Wesleyan Missionary Society station in the Hokianga in the 1820s.

British Ascendancy

With greater contact both Maori and Pakeha saw the need to regulate Pakeha settlement. The Colonial Office in London appointed a Resident, James Busby, in 1833. In 1835, prompted by Busby, thirty-five chiefs signed a Declaration of Independence naming themselves the heads of state of a 'United Tribes of New Zealand'. Relations between Maori and Pakeha were formalized by the signing of the Treaty of Waitangi in 1840. In principle—or at least in the Maori text—this treaty guaranteed Maori chieftainship, or 'rangatiratanga', while granting governorship, or 'kawanatanga', to Queen Victoria. Until 1860 Maori outnumbered Pakeha but in practice—and in the English text—sovereignty was transferred, allowing greater British settlement and control.

Established in 1840, Auckland was chosen as the colony's capital by its first governor, Capt. William Hobson. Immigration was encouraged by the New Zealand Company with settlements at Wellington and Wanganui (1840), New Plymouth (1841), and Nelson (1842). Scottish immigrants founded Dunedin (1848); and Edward Gibbon Wakefield made plans for a model English settlement at Christchurch (1851). In 1852 representative government was established with a constitution providing for a House of Representatives and Legislative Council, as well as six provincial councils. The governor at the time, Sir George Grey, retained the right of veto and was responsible for 'Native' policy. At first, each provincial council exercised extensive powers. Their abolition in 1876 marked the beginnings of central government. The Legislative Council was disbanded in 1950 leaving New Zealand with a single-tier parliament.

Initially, voting—based on individual land ownership—excluded Maori who traditionally owned land collectively. Participation was extended to Maori in 1867 with four Maori seats. James Carroll, Apirana Ngata, Maui Pomare, and Peter Buck (Te Rangi Hiroa) were all prominent: Carroll was the first Maori to enter government. He was minister of native affairs and later acting prime minister.

Settlement was not always peaceful: war broke out in the 1840s and 1860s in the central and western North Island. British troops fought alongside local militia and friendly Maori, facing some of the earliest forms of trench and guerrilla warfare. The Native Land Court was set up in 1865 to determine the ownership of Maori land according to Pakeha law. Where Maori land and user rights existed communally, the Court sought to define parcels of land owned individually, thereby facilitating land sales.

Economic Boom

Land speculation fuelled an agricultural boom in the 1840s and 1850s providing the colony's first sustainable export commodity.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

The earliest settlers of New Zealand are thought to have come from eastern Polynesia, around the turn of the first millennium. Maori oral traditions point to discovery of the country by Kupe, who gave New Zealand its first name, Aotearoa, or 'Land of the Long White Cloud'. Oral tradition also refers to seven waka leaving a homeland known as Hawaiki in a Great Fleet. The waka are still remembered in the names of significant tribal groupings and descent lines: Aotea, Kurahaupo, Mataatua, Tainui, Takitimu, Te Arawa and Tokomaru.

By Capt. James Cook's arrival in 1769, substantial settlements existed throughout the North Island, with smaller settlements in the South Island. Sporadic warfare was common as tribes, or 'iwi', fought for resources and status, or 'mana'.

The first recorded European contact was with Dutch explorer Abel Tasman in 1642. Believing the South Island to be the beginning of a mythical continent connected to Southern Africa, he bequeathed the name 'Staten Land'. A Dutch cartographer corrected Tasman, giving the name New Zealand to compliment the larger New Holland, as Australia was known at the time.

New Zealand provided 8.6% of Britain's wool imports in 1861 and had 8.5m. sheep by 1867. The development of refrigerated shipping in the 1880s bolstered the pastoral economy through meat exports. Gold rushes in the 1860s and 1870s in Otago, the west coast of the South Island, and in Coromandel also contributed to the economy. Gold exports totalled £46m. by 1890. Wealth brought progress; the 1870s administrations of Julius Vogel and Harry Atkinson borrowed heavily to fund work schemes to encourage immigration and settlement. 1,100 miles of rail track were laid by 1879, and telegraphs linked all the main towns. The population doubled to 500,000 by 1881.

The 1880s saw the beginnings of party politics. A Liberal agenda, with policies of 'one man, one vote' and the compulsory purchase of large estates, was popular and succeeded in extending suffrage to all men. Robert Stout and John Ballance's leasehold land policies in the mid-1880s were also popular. A Liberal Party was formed in 1889 and, backed by unions and the landless, won the 1890 election with Ballance as its leader. The Conservatives formed the first genuine opposition. Richard John Seddon took over the Liberal leadership in 1892 and remained premier until his death in 1906. Among Liberal achievements were the Land and Income Tax Act 1891 and the Advance to Settlers Act 1894, which assisted 17,000 people by 1912. In 1893, New Zealand became the first country to extend the suffrage to women. Other reforms included William Pember Reeves' Industrial Conciliation and Arbitration Act of 1894 and one of the world's first national pension schemes.

In 1901 New Zealand declined the offer to join the Commonwealth of Australia and remained a British colony until 1907 when it gained Dominion status. Parliament remained subordinate to the British parliament until the adoption of the Statute of Westminster 1931 in 1947, when New Zealand became fully sovereign with the British monarch as head of state. New Zealand annexed the Cook Islands in 1901, and was granted administration of Western Samoa at the Treaty of Versailles in 1918. It administered Samoa until the 1960s. New Zealand contributed around 100,000 soldiers in the First World War from a population of little more than a million; nearly 17,000 did not return. Nearly 9,000 New Zealanders died in the influenza epidemic spread by returning soldiers, with a Maori mortality rate six times that of Pakeha. In the Second World War around 200,000 New Zealanders joined Allied forces from a population of 1.6m.

Twentieth Century

Class-based political divisions intensified in the early twentieth century. Amid industrial unrest in 1912, the Liberal government fell to a vote of no confidence. Reform took power, introducing anti-union legislation. Strikes in Waihi, Wellington and Huntly were quelled. Reform governed until 1928, assisted at first by a wartime coalition with the Liberals, and then with tacit Liberal support. Policies broadly followed the dictates of farmers, creating a national Meat Board (1922) and Dairy Board (1923).

A United-Reform coalition (1931–35) coped with world recession. Employment reached 12%; the national income fell from an estimated £150m. to £90m., and the value of exports fell by 40%. To balance the budget, cuts were made to pensions, education, health and public works. In the absence of an unemployment benefit, men were sent to rural relief camps to work on low-capital, high-labour tasks. Measures such as a Reserve Bank and currency devaluation in 1933 helped farmers but did not address the broader social distress.

Welfare State

Michael Joseph (Micky) Savage's first Labour government (1935–49) reclaimed for New Zealand its title of social laboratory of the world. It introduced one of the world's most comprehensive social welfare systems—incorporating pensions, health, education and family benefits—and increased state housing; introduced state guaranteed prices for farm produce to protect farmers from international price fluctuations; and nationalized the Reserve Bank.

After 1936 rural support rallied around a National Party formed from remnants of the United-Reform coalition. Labour retained power with support of the four Maori seats, all held by the Ratana Party. The National Party won the 1949 election, promising to increase spending power and curb union power and economic controls. National retained power for most of the post-war boom years; brief Labour administrations under Walter Nash (1957–60) and Norman Kirk (1972–75) coincided with unfavourable economic conditions. Keith Holyoake's National government (1960–72) was concerned that Britain's anticipated entry to the EEC would damage New Zealand's exports to the UK. The Equal Pay Act (1972) challenged gender-based pay discrimination. A state-funded workplace injury compensation was set up.

Maori demands for recognition of the Treaty of Waitangi grew in the 1970s. The 1975 Land March saw tens of thousands march on parliament and the occupation of Bastion Point in 1977–78 centred on land compulsorily acquired by the government in 1951. Labour established the Waitangi Tribunal in 1975 to hear Maori claims of Treaty breaches. It lacked authority until 1985 when a Labour government made its powers retrospective to 1840. Tribunal recommendations have formed the basis for negotiations between the Crown and tribal authorities.

Britain's entry into the EEC in 1973 was a set-back for an economy dependent on exports to Britain. Robert Muldoon's National government (1975–84) introduced tariff protection, wage and price freezes, and increased borrowing for 'Think Big' public works. Muldoon won a narrow victory in the 1981 election following civil unrest during the 'Springbok' rugby tour. Riot police faced massive demonstrations as many New Zealanders opposed sporting links with the South African apartheid regime. The country found a new direction in the free market policies of David Lange's Labour government, which came to power in 1984. The economic direction of Roger Douglas, 'Rogernomics', radically altered the socio-economic landscape, reducing trade barriers and selling state assets to fund debt recovery.

In international affairs the Labour government introduced the New Zealand Nuclear Free Zone, Disarmament, and Arms Control Act 1987, declaring the country nuclear free. The legislation—supported by all political parties—led to the end of New Zealand's involvement in the ANZUS military agreement with Australia and the USA. In 1973 Australia and New Zealand tried to halt French nuclear testing in the Pacific through the International Court of Justice. New Zealand sent two frigates to Mururoa Atoll in protest. The 1985 bombing of the Rainbow Warrior in Auckland harbour by French secret service agents reopened the issue.

Wrangling over economic direction in the late 1980s led to Lange's resignation. He was replaced by Geoffrey Palmer in 1989, who in turn resigned shortly before the 1990 election. He was succeeded by Mike Moore. Labour lost the 1990 election to a National Party led by Jim Bolger who was determined on free market reforms. Social welfare reform, cuts in tertiary education funding and reform of accident compensation legislation cut back state intervention. The Employment Contracts Act (1991) outlawed compulsory union membership and introduced individual contracts, weakening union power. Jenny Shipley led a leadership coup in 1997 to become the country's first female prime minister, though not the first elected female prime minister. That landmark was achieved by Helen Clark who led the Labour Party to victory in the 1999 election. In 2008 John Key led National back to power.

Electoral reform in the 1990s saw New Zealand move from a first-past-the-post system to proportional representation under the mixed-member-proportional system (MMP). Despite the debacle of the first MMP election in 1996 when a minor party (New Zealand First, formed by disgruntled National supporters) played National off against Labour for two months before forming a coalition with National, the system has provided greater representation for minorities.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

New Zealand lies southeast of Australia in the south Pacific, Wellington being 1,983 km from Sydney. There are two principal islands, the North and South Islands, besides Stewart Island, Chatham Islands and small outlying islands, as well as the territories overseas.

New Zealand (i.e. North, South and Stewart Islands) extends over 1,750 km from north to south. Area, excluding territories overseas, 267,707 sq. km. The main islands are: North Island, 114,154 sq. km; South Island, 150,416 sq. km; Stewart Island, 1,681 sq. km; Chatham Islands, 963 sq. km. The minor islands included within the geographical boundaries of New Zealand (but not within any local government area) are: Antipodes Islands, Auckland Islands, Bounty Islands, Campbell Island, Kermadec Islands, Snares Islands, Solander Island and Three Kings Island. With the exception of meteorological station staff on Raoul Island in the Kermadec Group and Campbell Island there are no inhabitants.

The Kermadec Islands were annexed to New Zealand in 1887, have no separate administration and all New Zealand laws apply to them. Situation, 29° 10' to 31° 30' S. lat., 177° 45' to 179° W. long., 1,600 km NNE of New Zealand. The largest of the group is Raoul or Sunday Island, 29 sq. km, smaller islands being Macaulay and Curtis, while Macaulay Island is 5 km in circuit.

²The census of New Zealand is normally quinquennial, but the census falling in 1931 was abandoned as an act of national economy, the census due in 1941 was not taken until 25 Sept. 1945 owing to war conditions and the census due in 2011 was not taken until 5 March 2013 owing to the Christchurch earthquake of Feb. 2011.

The latest census took place on 5 March 2013. Of the 4,353,198 people counted, 4,242,048 were usually resident in the country and 111,150 were overseas visitors.

Between 2006 and 2013 the number of people who identified themselves as being of European ethnicity rose from 64.8% to 70.0%. Pacific Island people made up 7.0% of the population in 2013 (6.6% in 2006); Asian ethnic groups went from 8.8% in 2006 to 11.1% in 2013. Permanent and long-term arrivals in 2009–10 totalled 82,106, including 15,691 from Australia, 15,340 from the UK, 6,924 from India, 5,951 from the People's Republic of China and 3,476 from the USA. Permanent and long-term departures in 2009–10 totalled 67,599, including 33,027 to Australia, 8,809 to the UK, 2,646 to the USA and 2,398 to the People's Republic of China.

Maori population: 1896, 42,113; 1936, 82,326; 1945, 98,744; 1951, 115,676; 1961, 171,553; 1971, 227,414; 1981, 279,255; 1986, 294,201; 1991, 324,000; 1996, 523,374; 2001, 526,281; 2006, 565,329; 2013, 598,602 (14.1% of the total population compared with 15.1% in 1996). In the 2013 census, 148,395 New Zealand residents (3.5%) said they could hold a conversation about everyday matters in Maori. In 2013, 21.3% of people of Maori ethnicity could hold a conversation about everyday matters in Maori.

From the 1970s organizations were formed to pursue Maori grievances over loss of land and resources. The Waitangi Tribunal was set up in 1975 as a forum for complaints about breaches of the Treaty of Waitangi, and in 1984 empowered to hear claims against Crown actions since 1840. Direct negotiations with the Crown have been offered to claimants and a range of proposals to resolve historical grievances launched for public discussion in Dec. 1994. These proposals specify that all claims are to be met over ten years with treaty rights being converted to economic assets. There have been four recent major treaty settlements: NZ$170m. each for Tainui and Ngai Tahu, the NZ$150m. Sealord fishing agreement and NZ$40m. for Whakatohea in the Bay of Plenty. The Maori Land Court has jurisdiction over Maori freehold land and some general land owned by Maoris under the Te Ture Whenua Maori Act 1993.

English Maori and New Zealand Sign Language are the official languages. In 2006 New Zealand became the first country to declare sign language as an official language.

CLIMATE

Lying in the cool temperate zone, New Zealand enjoys very mild winters for its latitude owing to its oceanic situation, and only the extreme south has cold winters. The situation of the mountain chain produces much sharper climatic contrasts between east and west than in a north-south direction. Mean daily maximum temperatures and rainfall figures (monthly values for the period 1981–2010):

	Jan (°C)	July (°C)	Annual rainfall (mm)
Auckland	23.1	14.7	1,212
Christchurch	22.7	11.3	618
Dunedin	18.9	10.0	738
Wellington	20.3	11.4	1,207

The highest temperature recorded in 2011 was 41.3°C, at Timaru on 6 Feb., and the lowest –10.2°C, at Manapouri on 26 July.

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

Definition was given to the status of New Zealand by the (Imperial) Statute of Westminster of Dec. 1931, which had received the antecedent approval of the New Zealand Parliament in July 1931. The Governor-General's assent was given to the Statute of Westminster Adoption Bill on 25 Nov. 1947.

The powers, duties and responsibilities of the Governor-General and the Executive Council are set out in Royal Letters Patent and Instructions thereunder of 11 May 1917. In the execution of the powers vested in him the Governor-General must be guided by the advice of the Executive Council.

At a referendum on 6 Nov. 1993 a change from a first-past-the-post to a proportional representation electoral system was favoured by 53.9% of votes cast.

Parliament is the House of Representatives, consisting of 121 members, elected by universal adult suffrage on the mixed-member-proportional system (MMP) for three-year terms. Following the 2014 election there were 63 general electorate members, 50 members selected from party lists and seven representing Maori electorates, plus one 'overhang' seat. The seven Maori electoral districts cover the whole country. Maori and people of Maori descent are entitled to register either for a general or a Maori electoral district. As at Sept. 2014 there were 239,441 persons on the Maori electoral roll.

CURRENT LEADERS

John Key

Position

Prime Minister

Introduction

John Key, a former currency trader, was elected prime minister in Nov. 2008. Leading the National Party to electoral victory, he ended nine years of Labour government under Helen Clark. He won further terms at elections in Nov. 2011 and Sept. 2014.

Early Life

John Phillip Key was born on 9 Aug. 1961 in Auckland, where his British father and Austrian–Jewish mother ran a restaurant. When his father died in 1967 the family were left with large debts and lived in state housing in a suburb of Christchurch. After finishing at Burnside School, he graduated in accounting from the University of Canterbury. He then studied management at Harvard University in the USA.

In 1982 Key began working as an auditor, subsequently joining a clothing manufacturer as a project manager. In 1985 he started his career in foreign exchange (forex) trading just as the NZ dollar was floated on currency markets. In 1988 he was recruited by the Bankers Trust in Auckland as head of their forex dealing team, remaining there until 1995.

Key then joined Merrill Lynch as managing director of the Asia forex group in Singapore, subsequently becoming head of Merrill's global forex group in London. In 2001 he moved to Sydney as head of the institution's debt markets. In 2008 Key was listed in the National Business Review's rich list with an estimated wealth of NZ$50m.

In 2001 he joined the National Party, winning the seat for Helensville, a newly created constituency in northwest Auckland. He won re-election in 2005, a year after joining the opposition front benches as finance spokesman, and again in 2008. In 2006 Key became party leader following the resignation of Don Brash. He led the party to victory at the general election of 8 Nov. 2008 and was sworn in as prime minister 11 days later.

Career in Office

Following the election, the National Party signed deals with ACT New Zealand, the Maori Party and United Future, offering ministerial positions outside the cabinet. Key guaranteed the continuation of a number of Maori-specific parliamentary seats. He has a reputation as a pragmatic centrist and favours privatization, but his first year in office was largely overshadowed by the longest economic recession in the country's history. In Feb. 2009 he launched an NZ$480m. strategy to help small businesses, including a 90-day probation period for workers, the lowering of provisional tax and the relaxing of tax penalties for businesses with incorrect tax returns. The plan also provided for short-term export credit and the fast-tracking of several government building projects.

In foreign affairs, there was a diplomatic rift over alleged interference by New Zealand in Fijian affairs that saw the mutual expulsion of high commissioners in 2009 before relations were restored in July 2012.

In Nov. 2010 Key declared a national state of mourning in response to a mining accident on the South Island in which 29 miners were killed. In Feb. 2011 Christchurch was struck by a 6.3-magnitude earthquake that killed at least 166 and caused damage put at US$12bn.

In parliamentary elections in Nov. 2011 the National Party increased its share of the vote and Key won a second term in office, heading a new coalition with ACT New Zealand and United Future.

In April 2013 New Zealand became the first country in the Asia-Pacific region to legalize same-sex marriage. In Aug. parliament narrowly passed legislation allowing its main intelligence agency to spy on residents and citizens in the interests of national security, despite strong opposition from domestic and international bodies. The following month an opinion poll showed that Key's popularity rating had fallen to its lowest level since he became prime minister. He nonetheless secured a third term in office as the National Party again emerged as the largest party in parliamentary elections in Sept. 2014.

In Oct. 2013 the government had announced the resumption of bilateral military co-operation, after nearly three decades, with the USA to counter the growing regional influence of China.

DEFENCE

The New Zealand Defence Force consists of three services: the Royal New Zealand Navy, the New Zealand Army and the Royal New Zealand Air Force. New Zealand forces serve abroad in Australia, Iraq and Singapore, and with UN peacekeeping missions.

Defence expenditure in 2013 totalled US$2,715m. (US$622 per capita), representing 1.5% of GDP.

Army

Personnel total in 2011: 4,905, plus reserves numbering 1,789.

Navy

The Navy includes two frigates. The main base and Fleet headquarters is at Auckland.

The Royal New Zealand Navy personnel totalled 2,161 uniformed plus 339 reserve personnel in 2011.

Air Force

Squadrons are based at RNZAF Base Auckland and RNZAF Base Ohakea. Flying training is conducted at Ohakea and Auckland. Ground training is carried out at RNZAF Base Woodbourne.

The uniform strength in 2011 was 2,607 with 186 reserves. There were six combat-capable aircraft.

ECONOMY

Finance and real estate contributed 27.6% to GDP in 2008–09; followed by trade and hotels, 15.0%; manufacturing, 13.2%; services, 11.9%; transport and communications, 10.7%; and agriculture, forestry and mining, 7.2%.

According to the anti-corruption organization Transparency International, New Zealand ranked fourth in a 2015 survey of the countries with the least corruption in business and government. It received 88 out of 100 in the annual index.

New Zealand gave US$506m. in international aid in 2014, equivalent to 0.27% of GNI (compared to the UN target of 0.7%).

Overview

Tourism and dairy exports are important sources of revenue, with Australia and China the largest export markets. Prior to the 1980s the economy was one of the most regulated and protected in the developed world. Liberalization in the 1990s stalled towards the end of the century, with public ownership of commercial enterprises increasing in the following decade.

The economy grew every year from 1991 until 2007, although since the beginning of the century much of it has been debt-financed. New Zealand then went into recession in 2008, the result of a severe drought and the end of a housing boom, exacerbated by the global economic crisis. Unemployment rose from 3.7% in 2007 to 6.9% in 2012. The effects of the financial crisis along with earthquakes in 2010 and 2011 increased net government debt from 5.5% of GDP in 2008 to 20% in 2011.

The banking sector, however, weathered the crisis well. A government stimulus package, tied to fast-growing Asian markets and the robust Australian economy resulted in GDP averaging 1.9% between 2010 and 2012. In 2012 the economy was further boosted by post-earthquake reconstruction projects and high dairy prices. Nonetheless, an overvalued exchange rate, weak business investment, low household savings and high external debt present challenges for the long term.

Currency

The monetary unit is the New Zealand dollar (NZD), of 100 cents. The total value of notes and coins on issue from the Reserve Bank in Sept. 2010 was NZ$3,979m. Inflation was 1.1% in 2013 and 1.2% in 2014.

In Aug. 2009 foreign exchange reserves were US$11,783m. and total money supply was NZ$33,640m. Gold reserves are negligible.

Budget

The government fiscal year begins 1 July; the company and personal financial year begins on 1 April. Total central government revenue for 2009–10 was NZ$74,725m. (NZ$79,506m. in 2008–09). Central government expenditure in 2009–10 was NZ$81,040m. (NZ$83,399m. in 2008–09).

In 2009–10 tax revenue was NZ$50,744m. (NZ$54,681m. in 2008–09). Social security and welfare was the leading item of expenditure in 2009–10, at NZ$21,185m. (NZ$19,382m. in 2008–09).

The gross public debt at June 2010 was NZ$69,733m. (NZ$61,953m. at June 2009).

There is a Goods and Services Tax (GST) of 15%.

Performance

There was real GDP growth of 2.9% in 2012, 2.5% in 2013 and 3.3% in 2014. Total GDP was US$185.8bn. in 2013.

Banking and Finance

The central bank and bank of issue is the Reserve Bank (Governor, Graeme Wheeler).

The financial system comprises a central bank (the Reserve Bank of New Zealand), registered banks and other financial institutions. Registered banks include banks from abroad, which have to satisfy capital adequacy and managerial quality requirements. Other financial institutions include the regional trustee banks, now grouped under Trust Bank, building societies, finance companies, merchant banks and stock and station agents. The number of registered banks in 2007 was 17, of which only two (TSB Bank Ltd and Kiwibank Ltd) were not wholly overseas-owned.

The primary functions of the Reserve Bank are the formulation and implementation of monetary policy to achieve the economic objectives set by the government, and the promotion of the efficiency and soundness of the financial system, through the registration of banks, and supervision of financial institutions.

On 30 June 2007 the assets of the Reserve Bank were NZ$21,095m. (including government securities totalling NZ$4,342m. and marketable securities totalling NZ$12,526m.).

Total overseas debt was NZ$246,462m. in June 2010.

The stock exchange in Wellington conducts on-screen trading, unifying the three former trading floors in Auckland, Christchurch and Wellington. There is also a stock exchange in Dunedin.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

New Zealand's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption and flaring of fossil fuels were the equivalent of 8.8 tonnes per capita in 2011. An Environmental Performance Index compiled in 2016 ranked New Zealand 11th of 180 countries, with 88.0%. The index examined various factors in nine areas—agriculture, air quality, biodiversity and habitat, climate and energy, fisheries, forests, health impacts, water and sanitation, and water resources.

Electricity

On 1 April 1987 the former Electricity Division of the Ministry of Energy became a state-owned enterprise, the Electricity Corporation of N.Z. Ltd. In 1994 Transpower separated out from the company to operate the national grid. The remainder of ECNZ was subsequently divided in stages into four state-owned enterprises (Contact Energy, Genesis Power Limited, Meridian Energy Limited and Mighty River Power Limited), causing a competitive wholesale electricity market to be established. Around 70% of the country's electricity is generated by renewable sources. Hydro-electric plants, mainly based in the South Island, account for some 55% with geothermal power, generated in the North Island, accounting for around 8%. The rest comes from natural gas (22%), coal, wind and landfill gas. Electricity generating capacity, 2011, 9.6m. kW. Consumption per capita was 10,081 kWh in 2011.

Electricity consumption statistics (in GWh) for years ended 31 March are:

	Residential	Commercial	Industrial	Total consumption
2003	11,723	7,734	15,431	34,889
2004	12,255	7,389	16,151	35,795
2005	12,161	7,975	16,190	36,326
2006	12,231	8,383	16,780	37,394

New Zealand also has 12 wind farms.

Oil and Gas

Crude oil production was 18m. bbls in 2009. New Zealand's annual crude petroleum imports are more than three times as much as its production. Proven reserves were 113m. bbls in 2011.

In 2008 gas fields produced 3.8bn. cu. metres. In 2013 proven natural gas reserves were 29.4bn. cu. metres.

Minerals

Coal production in 2010 was 5.33m. tonnes. There were 16 opencast and five underground mines in operation that year, responsible for 75% and 25% of total coal production respectively.

While New Zealand's best known non-fuel mineral is gold (producing about 13.44 tonnes in 2009 worth NZ$662m.) there is also production of silver, ironsand, aggregate, limestone, clay, aluminium, dolomite, pumice, salt, serpentinite, zeolite and bentonite. In addition, there are resources or potential for deposits of titanium (ilmenite beach sands), platinum, sulphur, phosphate, silica and mercury.

Agriculture

About 54% of the land area in 2012 was suitable for agriculture and grazing. The total area of farmland in use in 2010 was 14,580,000 ha.; there were 11,302,000 ha. of grazing, arable, fodder and fallow land, 127,000 ha. of land for horticulture and 1,608,000 ha. of plantations of exotic timber. In 2007, 3.2% of land was arable and 0.2% permanent cropland.

The number of farm holdings as at 30 June 2012 was as follows:

Regional Council	Number of farms	Regional Council	Number of farms
Auckland	3,480	Marlborough	1,701
Bay of Plenty	4,785	Nelson	93

Production of main crops (2011, in 1,000 tonnes): potatoes (estimate), 522; apples (estimate), 438; wheat (2011–12), 489; barley (2011–12), 439; grapes (estimate), 234; maize (2011–12), 211; pumpkins and squash (estimate), 141; tomatoes (estimate), 63; carrots and turnips (estimate), 55; cauliflower and broccoli (estimate), 37.

Livestock, 2010: sheep, 32.56m.; dairy cattle, 5.92m.; beef cattle, 3.95m.; deer, 1.12m.; pigs (2007), 367,000; goats (2007), 112,000; chickens (2000), 13m. Total meat produced in 2006–07 was 1.44m. tonnes (including 624,000 tonnes of beef and veal, and 573,000 tonnes of lamb and mutton). Meat industry products are

New Zealand's second largest export income earner, accounting for about 12% of merchandise exports. New Zealand's main meat exports are beef, lamb and mutton. About 73% of lamb, 58% of mutton and 57% of beef produced in New Zealand in 2006–07 was exported overseas. The domestic market absorbs over 99% of the pigmeat and poultry produced in New Zealand. 54% of the world's exported sheepmeat comes from New Zealand.

Production of wool for the year 2006–07 was 216,300 tonnes. Milk production for 2010–11 totalled a record 17,339m. litres. In 2011 butter production totalled an estimated 385,000 tonnes and cheese production an estimated 311,000 tonnes.

Forestry

Forests covered 8.27m. ha. in 2010 (31% of New Zealand's land area), up from 7.67m. ha. in 1990. In 2007 about 6.2m. ha. was indigenous forest and 1.8m. ha. planted productive forest. New planting was 12,000 ha. in 2011. Introduced pines form the bulk of the large exotic forest estate and among these radiata pine is the best multi-purpose tree, reaching log size in 25–30 years. Other species planted are Douglas fir and Eucalyptus species. Total roundwood production in 2006–07 was 20.04m. cu. metres. The table below shows production of rough sawn timber in 1,000 cu. metres for years ending 31 March:

	Indigenous			Exotic		All Species
	Rimu and Miro	Beech	Total (including others)	Radiata Pine	Douglas Fir	Total (including others)	Total
2004	5	8	16	3,992	178	4,206	4,222
2005	5	7	13	4,178	167	4,379	4,392
2006	0	0	12	4,038	156	4,222	4,234
2007	3	6	9	4,102	157	4,292	4,301

In 2006–07 forest industries consisted of approximately 264 sawmills, seven plywood and 11 veneer plants, and six fibreboard mills.

Production of wood pulp in the year ending 31 March 2007 amounted to 1,528,991 tonnes and of paper (including newsprint paper and paperboard) to 871,946 tonnes.

Fisheries

In 2012 the total catch was 440,683 tonnes, almost entirely from sea fishing. The total value of New Zealand's fisheries exports in 2012 was NZ$1,569m., of which frozen fish exports constituted NZ$259m.

INDUSTRY

Statistics of manufacturing industries (in NZ$1m.):

Production year	Salaries and wages paid	Closing stocks of raw materials	Closing stocks of finished goods	Sales	Purchases and other operating expenditure
2010–11	11,729	14,451	37,152	86,728	66,627
2011–12	12,107	16,124	40,447	91,261	71,331

The following is a statement of the value of the products (including repairs) of the principal industries for the year 2011–12 (in NZ$1m.):

According to the World Bank's Doing Business 2015 New Zealand is the easiest country in which to start a business.

Labour

The labour force in 2013 was 2,398,000 (2,071,000 in 2003). 77.9% of the population aged 15–64 was economically active in 2013. Of those in employment in 2013, 73.0% worked in services, 20.2% in industry and 6.4% in agriculture. In that year 47.2% of the labour force was female. The unemployment rate in 2015 was 5.8%, unchanged since 2014 but down from 6.2% in 2013. Long-term unemployment is low, with only 9.0% of the labour force in 2010 having been out of work for more than a year.

A minimum wage is set by the government annually. As of 1 April 2010 it was NZ$12.75 an hour; a new rate for those entering the labour market for the first time was introduced in April 2008—it was NZ$10.20 an hour in April 2010. In 2011 there were 12 work stoppages (31 in 2009 and 215 in 1986) with 4,850 person-days of work lost (14,088 in 2009 and 1,329,054 in 1986).

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

In 1990 New Zealand and Australia completed the Closer Economic Relations Agreement (initiated in 1983), which provides for mutual free trade in goods.

Imports and Exports

Trade in NZ$1m. for recent years ending 30 June:

	Imports (c.i.f.)	Exports, including re-exports (f.o.b.)	Balance of merchandise trade

Wine	1,177
Electrical machinery, equipment and parts	1,162
Aluminium and aluminium articles	1,144

The principal import suppliers in 2011–12 (imports c.i.f., in NZ$1m.) were: China, 7,658; Australia, 7,240; USA, 4,695; Japan, 3,229; Singapore, 2,283; Germany, 2,076. The leading export destinations in 2011–12 (exports and re-exports f.o.b., in NZ$1m.) were: Australia, 10,460; China, 6,106; USA, 4,083; Japan, 3,387; South Korea, 1,556; UK, 1,443.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

Total length of roads in 2007 was 93,748 km (65.4% paved), including 172 km of motorways. There were 10,893 km of highways, main or national roads. At 30 June 2008 motor vehicles licensed numbered 4,125,932, of which 2,788,938 were passenger cars and vans. In addition there were 577,684 trailers and caravans, 519,992 commercial vehicles, and 130,213 motorcycles and mopeds. In 2007 there were 422 deaths in road accidents.

In 2008 there were 34,590 persons employed in road transport. Total expenditure on roads (including infrastructure) by the central government and local authorities combined amounted to NZ$1,751m. in 2008.

Rail

The national rail operator is Kiwi Rail. In 2008–09 KiwiRail rolling stock included 231 diesel, electric and shunting locomotives, 4,215 freight wagons, 50 passenger carriages and 16 non-passenger coaches.

In 1994 a 24-hour freight link was introduced between Auckland and Christchurch. There were, in 2002, 3,898 km of 1,067 mm gauge railway open for traffic (506 km electrified). In 2008–09 KiwiRail carried 4.0m. tonnes of freight and 12.4m. passengers. Total income in the financial year 2008–09 was NZ$636.6m. and total expense NZ$573.3m.

Civil Aviation

There are international airports at Wellington, Auckland and Christchurch, with Auckland International being the main airport. The national carrier is Air New Zealand, which was privatized in 1989 but then renationalized in 2001, although in Nov. 2013 the government reduced its stake from 73% to 53%.

There were 4,499 aircraft registered in Dec. 2011. In 2011 there were 1,019,685 domestic and international aircraft movements. A total of 21,852,000 passenger-km were flown in 2010 by New Zealand-based carriers on scheduled services.

Shipping

In Jan. 2009 there were 29 ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 150,000 GT. The busiest port is Tauranga, which handled a record 13,748,000 tonnes of cargo in 2009–10 (up from 13,458,000 tonnes in 2008–09).

Telecommunications

The predominant telecommunications service provider is Spark New Zealand (or 'Spark'), known as Telecom New Zealand until Aug. 2014. Telecom New Zealand had been formed in 1987 and privatized in 1990. The largest mobile phone operators are Vodafone New Zealand and Telecom Mobile. In 2013 there were 1,850,000 main (fixed) telephone lines. In the same year active mobile phone subscriptions numbered 4,766,000 (1,057.8 per 1,000 persons). An estimated 82.8% of the population were internet users in 2013. The fixed broadband penetration rate was 24.9 subscribers per 100 inhabitants in Dec. 2010. In Dec. 2011 there were 2.1m. Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The judiciary consists of the Supreme Court, the Court of Appeal, the High Court and District Courts. All exercise both civil and criminal jurisdiction. The Supreme Court replaced the Privy Council in London as the court of final appeal in 2004. Special courts include the Maori Land Court, the Maori Appellate Court, Family Courts, the Youth Court, Environment Court and the Employment Court. In March 2011 there were 8,755 sentenced inmates of whom 556 were women. Of inmates in 2011, 51.2% (some 4,483) identified themselves as Maori only compared to 33.7% who identified themselves as European only. There were an all-time low 365,185 recorded offences in 2012–13, compared to 394,522 in 2011–12 and 416,324 in 2010–11. The death penalty for murder was replaced by life imprisonment in 1961. In 2015 the World Justice Project Rule of Law Index, which provides data on how the rule of law is experienced by the general public across eight categories, ranked New Zealand eighth of 102 countries for criminal justice and ninth for civil justice.

The Criminal Injuries Compensation Act, 1963, which came into force on 1 Jan. 1964, provided for compensation of persons injured by certain criminal acts and the dependants of persons killed by such acts. However, this has now been phased out in favour of the Accident Compensation Act, 1982, except in the residual area of property damage caused by escapees. The Offenders Legal Aid Act 1954 provides that any person charged or convicted of any offence may apply for legal aid which may be granted depending on the person's means and the gravity of the offence etc. Since 1970 legal aid in civil proceedings (except divorce) has been available for persons of small or moderate means. The Legal Services Act 1991 brought together in one statute the civil and criminal legal aid schemes.

Police

The police are a national body maintained by the central government. In June 2012 there were 8,940 full-time equivalent sworn officers (17.7% female).

Ombudsmen

The office of Ombudsman was created in 1962. From 1975 additional Ombudsmen have been authorized. There are currently two. Ombudsmen's functions are to investigate complaints under the Ombudsman Act, the Official Information Act and the Local Government Official Information and Meetings Act from members of the public relating to administrative decisions of central, regional and local government. In 2011–12, 10,636 complaints and other contacts were received (a 22% increase on 2010–11) and 10,250 were completed.

Education

Education is compulsory between the ages of six and 16. Early childhood services are available for education and care for children from birth to six years of age. In 2009 there were 626 kindergartens and 485 play centres (24 licence exempt). In 2009 there were 39,346 and 15,498 children on the rolls respectively. There were also 464 te kohanga reo (providing early childhood education in the Maori language) with 9,288 children, and a number of other providers of early childhood care and education.

In 2009 there were 2,027 primary schools (including full primary, contributing primary and intermediate schools), with 434,810 pupils; the number of teachers was 27,640. A correspondence school for children in remote areas (Te Kura) and those otherwise unable to attend school had 6,076 pupils and 270 teachers.

In 2009 there were 336 secondary schools with 20,439 teachers and 273,409 pupils. There were also 149 composite schools with 2,500 teachers and 43,149 pupils.

There were 469,107 (including 43,457 international) enrolments in tertiary institutions in 2009. Of the international students in 2009, 30,946 were from Asia and 4,068 from Europe. The most popular subject areas studied in 2009 by domestic students were society and culture, management and commerce, health, and engineering related technologies. New Zealand has eight state-funded universities—the University of Auckland, Auckland University of Technology, University of Waikato (at Hamilton), Victoria University of Wellington, Massey University (at Palmerston North), the University of Canterbury (at Christchurch), the University of Otago (at Dunedin) and Lincoln University (near Christchurch). The number of students attending universities in 2009 was 154,866. 180,709 students were enrolled in institutes of technology and polytechnics in 2009.

In 2008–09 public expenditure on education came to 6.4% of GDP, representing 17.9% of total government spending. The universities are autonomous bodies. All state-funded primary and secondary schools are controlled by boards of trustees. Education in state schools is free for children under 19 years of age.

The adult literacy rate is at least 99%.

Health

In 2011 there were 14,330 practising doctors. In 2011–12 there were about 14.0m. general practitioner visits and 67.7m. prescription items were dispensed. There were 23 hospital beds per 10,000 population over the period 2005–12. In 2010 New Zealand spent 10.2% of its GDP on health; public expenditure on health in 2009–10 was NZ$16.5bn.

Welfare

On 1 April 1992 the Guaranteed Retirement Income Scheme (GRI) was replaced by the national superannuation scheme which is income-tested. Eligibility has been gradually increased to 65 years. Universal eligibility is available at 70 years. At 1 April 2012 a married, civil union or de facto couple received NZ$536.80 per week, a single person living alone NZ$348.92 per week.

Social Welfare Benefits

Benefits	Number of recipients, 2012	Total expenditure (NZ$1,000), 2012
New Zealand Superannuation	598,933	9,855,488
Domestic Purposes' Benefit	112,828	2,103,922
Invalids' Benefit	87,187	1,434,904
Unemployment	57,783	945,876
Sickness	60,361	924,546
Veterans' Pension	9,549	162,239
War Pension	17,697	148,579
Orphans' Benefit/Unsupported
Child's Benefit	8,595	111,761
Widows' Benefit	6,082	81,778
Training	6,273	72,707
Total	965,288	15,841,800

Changes to the welfare system came into effect in July 2013 when three new benefits—jobseeker support, sole parent support and supported living payment—replaced most of the previous main benefits listed above.

Reciprocity with Other Countries. New Zealand has overseas social security agreements with the United Kingdom, the Netherlands, Greece, Ireland, Australia, Jersey and Guernsey, Denmark, Canada and a number of Pacific countries. The main purpose of these agreements is to encourage free movement of labour and to ensure that when a person has lived or worked in more than one country, each of those countries takes a fair share of the responsibility for meeting the costs of that person's social security coverage. New Zealand also pays people eligible for New Zealand Superannuation or veterans' pensions who live in the Cook Islands, Niue or Tokelau.

RELIGION

No direct state aid is given to any form of religion. According to the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life, in 2010 the population was an estimated 57.0% Christian with a further 36.6% being religiously unaffiliated and 2.1% Hindu. Of the Christians in 2010, an estimated 70% were Protestants and 25% Catholics. Anglicans are the largest denomination, with Roman Catholics second and Presbyterians third. For the Church of England the country is divided into seven dioceses, with a separate bishopric (Aotearoa) for the Maori. The Roman Catholic Church is divided into one Archdiocese (Wellington) and five suffragan dioceses. In Feb. 2016 there were two cardinals.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

There are three UNESCO World Heritage sites under New Zealand jurisdiction. Te Wahipounamu on South Island was listed in 1990; Tongariro National Park, on North Island, was listed in 1990 and 1993; the Sub-Antarctic Islands, consisting of the Auckland Islands, Antipodes Islands, Bounty Islands, Campbell Island and the Snares, were inscribed on the list in 1998.

Press

In 2014 there were 21 paid-for daily newspapers with a combined circulation of 519,000. The New Zealand Herald, published in Auckland, has the largest daily circulation, followed by The Dominion Post and The Press. In 2014 there were also three Sunday newspapers, with the Sunday Star-Times having the largest circulation. There were three paid-for non-dailies and 164 free non-dailies in 2014.

Tourism

There were a record 2,617,930 tourists in the year to March 2012 of whom 1,168,316 were from Australia, 222,152 were from the UK, 184,056 were from the USA and 160,268 were from China. Tourism receipts totalled NZ$22,848m. in 2010–11. Employment in tourism in 2010–11 totalled 188,100 (full-time equivalents), of whom 120,700 were directly employed in tourism and 67,400 indirectly.

Festivals

The biennial New Zealand Festival takes place in Wellington in Feb./March in even-numbered years. The biennial Christchurch Arts Festival takes place in July/Aug. in odd-numbered years.

TERRITORIES OVERSEAS

Tokelau

Tokelau is some 500 km to the north of Samoa and comprises three atolls—Atafu, Fakaofu and Nukunonu. The land area is 10.1 sq. km. Population in 2011 was 1,411. Density (2011), 140 per sq. km.

The British government transferred administrative control of Tokelau to New Zealand in 1925. Formal sovereignty over Tokelau was transferred by Britain to New Zealand in 1948. New Zealand legislation is extended to Tokelau only with its consent. In 1994 the Tokelau Administrator's powers were delegated to the General Fono (the national representative body), and when the General Fono is not in session, to the Council of Faipule. Legislation in 1996 gave the General Fono a power to make rules, including to impose taxes. Referendums on self-determination took place in Feb. 2006 and again in Oct. 2007, but both fell short of the two-thirds majority in favour needed to effect a change of status.

There are no political parties—in elections on 23 Jan. 2014, 20 independents were elected to the General Fono.

Administrator: Jonathan Kings.

Head of Government: Siopili Perez.

Coconuts (the source of copra) are the only cash crop. Pulaka, breadfruit, papayas, the screw-pine and bananas are cultivated as food crops. Livestock comprises pigs, poultry and goats.

Ross Dependency

The Ross Dependency comprises the territories between 160° E. long. and 150° W. long. and south of 60° S. lat. They were brought within New Zealand's jurisdiction in 1923. Laws for the Dependency are made periodically by regulations promulgated by the Governor-General of New Zealand.

The area is 400,000–450,000 sq. km and mostly ice-covered. In Jan. 1957 a New Zealand expedition under Sir Edmund Hillary established a base in the Dependency en route to the South Pole.

The main base—Scott Base, at Pram Point, Ross Island—is manned throughout the year with scientists and support staff, and is managed by a crown agency, Antarctica New Zealand, based in Christchurch.

SELF-GOVERNING TERRITORIES OVERSEAS

The Cook Islands

The Cook Islands lie between 8° and 23° S. lat., and 156° and 167° W. long. A British protectorate from 1888, they were annexed as part of New Zealand in June 1901 and became a self-governing territory in free association with New Zealand in 1965. The Southern group of islands comprises Aitutaki, Atiu, Mangaia, Manuae and Te au-o-tu, Mauke (Parry Is.), Mitiaro and Rarotonga, while the Northern group consists of Manihiki (Humphrey), Nassau, Palmerston (Avarua), Penrhyn (Tongareva), Pukapuka (Danger), Rakahanga (Reirson) and Suvarrow (Anchorage). The collective area is 235.4 sq. km and the population at the census of 2011 was 14,974. Density (2011), 64 per sq. km. The capital is Avarua on Rarotonga.

At the Legislative Assembly elections held on 9 July 2014 the Cook Islands Party won 13 of the 24 seats, the Democratic Party eight seats and the One Cook Islands Movement 2.

High Commissioner: Nick Hurley.

Prime Minister: Henry Puna.

The currency is the New Zealand dollar. There are four banks.

The exclusive economic zone seabed has some of the highest concentrations of manganese nodules (rich in cobalt and nickel) in the world. In 2010 forests made up 65% of total land area. Total fishing catch in 2010 was 10,019 tonnes.

Main exports are fish, pearls, and fruit and vegetables. Leading imports are petroleum and related minerals, food, and machinery and transport equipment.

There is an international airport at Rarotonga and domestic services are provided by Air Rarotonga. Two international shipping services connect Rarotonga with Auckland (in New Zealand), Samoa, Tonga and Niue. There were 11,500 mobile phone subscriptions in 2013 and 7,800 fixed telephone subscriptions.

In 2010 there were 24 early childhood education centres, 13 primary schools, four secondary schools, and 12 combined primary and secondary schools. There were 1,841 primary pupils with 123 teachers and 1,893 secondary pupils with 121 teachers in 2010. The Rarotonga Hospital is the largest hospital and the referral hospital for the outer islands.

49% of the population belonged to the Cook Islands Christian Church in 2011 and 17% were Roman Catholics.

Niue

Capt. James Cook sighted Niue in 1774 and called it 'Savage Island'. It is the largest uplifted coral island in the world. The area is 261 sq. km. The population at the census of 2011 was 1,613. Density (2011), 6 per sq. km. The capital is Alofi. Niue became a British Protectorate in 1900 and was annexed to New Zealand in 1901. Internal self-government was achieved in free association with New Zealand on 19 Oct. 1974, with New Zealand taking responsibility for external affairs and defence.

At the Legislative Assembly (Fono) elections held on 12 April 2014, all 20 members returned were non-partisan.

High Commissioner: Ross Ardern.

Prime Minister: Toke Talagi.

The main commercial crops of the island are coconuts, taro and yams. In 2010, 72% of the total land area was under forest. The total fishery catch in 2010 was 113 tonnes.

Commercial air services link Niue with New Zealand, Australia and Samoa. Niue launched its own mobile phone service in 2011.

The University of the South Pacific has a regional campus in Niue.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

There is evidence of settlement by Paleo-Indians in the region around 4000 BC. Spanish explorers, led by Gil González de Ávila, arrived in the west of present-day Nicaragua in 1523. They made contact with the Niquirano and the Chorotegano tribes, thought to have been linked to the Aztec civilization in Mexico, and the Chontal, who shared cultural traits with the Honduran Maya people. Government up to this point was through tribal monarchies and each grouping had distinct customs. In 1524 Francisco Hernández de Córdoba established Granada on Lake Nicaragua and León on Lake Managua. Many indigenous Indians were killed, died of introduced diseases or were enslaved. Estimates suggest the population fell from 1m. to less than 100,000.

In 1538 the Vice Royalty of New Spain was established, spanning Mexico and most of Central America. In 1570 present-day Nicaragua came under the authority of the Captaincy General of Guatemala. A conservative landholding elite developed around Granada, whilst León was associated with the colonial government. British pirates and adventurers took control of parts of the Mosquito Coast during the 17th century. After it declared independence from Spain in 1821, Nicaragua briefly came under the influence of the Mexican Empire, ruled by Agustín de Iturbide. From 1825–38 it was part of the Central American Federation, which unsuccessfully attempted to build a democratic union along US lines.

The 1840s and '50s saw escalating conflict between the elites of Conservative Granada and Liberal León. In 1855 the American mercenary, William Walker, arrived with 57 men to support the Liberal cause. Having defeated the national Nicaraguan army, he took Granada and proclaimed himself the country's ruler. However, his rule was short-lived and he was driven out of office by Honduran forces, with British assistance, two years later. There followed 30 years of relative stability under Conservative rule.

José Santos Zelaya's defeat of the Conservatives in 1893 led to a Liberal dictatorship, which became synonymous with economic decline. Civil war erupted in 1912, prompting the arrival of US forces. The Bryan–Chamorro Treaty of 1914 entitled the USA to a permanent option for a canal route through Nicaragua, a 99-year option for a naval base in the Bay of Fonseca on the Pacific coast and occupation of the Corn Islands on the Atlantic coast. The treaty was not abrogated until 1970 when the Corn Islands returned to Nicaragua.

The Somoza family dominated Nicaragua from 1933 to 1979. Imposing a brutal dictatorship, they plundered a large share of the national wealth. In 1962 the Sandanista National Liberation Front (FLSN; named after the murdered Liberal general, Augusto César Sandino, who fought against the US military presence in the 1920s) was formed to overthrow the Somozas. After 17 years of civil war the Sandanistas triumphed. On 17 July 1979 President Somoza fled into exile. The USA made efforts to unseat the revolutionary government by supporting the Contras (counter-revolutionary forces). It was not until 1988 that the state of emergency was lifted as part of the Central American peace process. Rebel anti-Sandanista activities had ceased by 1990 and the last organized insurgent group negotiated an agreement with the government in April 1994. In Oct. 1998 Hurricane Mitch devastated the country, killing 3,800. In Nov. 2006 presidential elections were won by Daniel Ortega of the FLSN, returning him to power after 16 years in opposition.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Nicaragua is bounded in the north by Honduras, east by the Caribbean, south by Costa Rica and west by the Pacific. Area, 131,812 sq. km (121,428 sq. km dry land). The coastline runs 450 km on the Atlantic and 305 km on the Pacific. The census population in May 2005 was 5,142,098 (density, 39.0 per sq. km). Estimate, June 2012: 6,071,000. 57.6% of the population were urban in 2011.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 6.08m.

15 administrative departments and two autonomous regions are grouped in three zones. Areas (in sq. km), populations at the 2005 census and chief towns:

The capital is Managua with (2005 census population) 908,892 inhabitants. Other cities (2005 populations): León, 139,433; Chinandega, 95,614; Masaya, 92,598; Estelí, 90,294; Tipitapa, 85,948; Matagalpa, 80,228; Granada, 79,418; Ciudad Sandino, 72,501; Juigalpa, 42,763.

The population is of Spanish and Amerindian origins with an admixture of Afro-Americans on the Caribbean coast. The majority of the population is mestizo (mixed Amerindian and white) and white. There are also Blacks and Amerindians. The official language is Spanish.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2008 estimates: births, 140,000; deaths, 27,000. Estimated rates (per 1,000 population), 2008: births, 24.6; deaths, 4.7. Annual population growth rate, 2000–08, 1.3%. 2013 life expectancy: male 71.8 years; female 77.9. Infant mortality, 2010, 23 per 1,000 live births; fertility rate, 2008, 2.7 births per woman. A law prohibiting abortion was passed in Nov. 2006.

CLIMATE

The climate is tropical, with a wet season from May to Jan. Temperatures vary with altitude. Managua, Jan. 81°F (27°C), July 81°F (27°C). Annual rainfall 38" (976 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

A new constitution was promulgated on 9 Jan. 1987 and underwent reforms in 1995, 2000 and 2014. It provides for a unicameral 92-seat National Assembly comprising 90 members directly elected by proportional representation for a five-year term, together with one seat for the previous president and one seat for the runner-up in the previous presidential election. Citizens are entitled to vote at the age of 16.

The President and Vice President are directly elected for a five-year term commencing on 10 Jan. following their date of election. Amendments that came into force in Feb. 2014 ended restrictions on presidential re-election. Previously, the president could stand for a second term in office but not consecutively (although in Oct. 2009 the Supreme Court ruled in favour of a petition brought by President Daniel Ortega to remove the barrier against consecutive terms). Also abolished was the need for a minimum required vote to avoid a presidential run-off. Candidates leading after the first round of voting had previously required at least 40% of the vote (or 35% and a 5% margin over the second-placed candidate) to claim outright victory. Other changes saw police and military figures permitted to serve in posts hitherto reserved for civilians, while the president was granted the power to issue decree-laws.

National Anthem

'Salve a ti Nicaragua' ('Hail to thee, Nicaragua'); words by S. Ibarra Mayorga, tune by L. A. Delgado.

RECENT ELECTIONS

Presidential and parliamentary elections took place on 6 Nov. 2011. In the presidential elections incumbent José Daniel Ortega Saavedra of the Sandinista National Liberation Front (FSLN) was elected with 62.5% of votes cast, defeating Fabio Gadea Mantilla (31.0%) and Arnoldo Alemán (5.9%). Despite accusations by Gadea of electoral fraud, international observers deemed irregular voting patterns not strong enough to change the results. At the parliamentary elections the Sandinista National Liberation Front won 63 seats, the Independent Liberal Party 27 and the Constitutional Liberal Party 2.

Presidential and parliamentary elections are scheduled to take place on 6 Nov. 2016.

CURRENT GOVERNMENT

President: José Daniel Ortega Saavedra; b. 1945 (FSLN; in office since 10 Jan. 2007, having previously been president from Jan. 1985–April 1990).

CURRENT LEADERS

Daniel Ortega

Position

President

Introduction

An iconic figure of the Sandinista movement since the late 1970s, Daniel Ortega first served as president from 1985–90 and was elected to further five-year terms in Nov. 2006 and Nov. 2011.

Early Life

Ortega was born in Nov. 1945 in La Libertad, Chontales to a middle-class family who opposed the Somoza family's dictatorship. After briefly attending the University of Central America in Managua, Ortega joined the Sandinista National Liberation Front (FSLN) in 1963. In 1967 he was convicted of robbing a bank to raise money for arms. He was released in 1974 in exchange for FSLN-held hostages and spent a brief spell in Cuba.

He led the FSLN in Somoza Debayle's overthrow in 1979 and joined the governing junta. The Sandinistas dominated the junta and established a national constitution and democratic elections, which Ortega won in 1984. His presidency was marked by conflict with the US-backed Contras, resulting in tens of thousands of deaths. US sanctions and high inflation weakened the economy.

At the end of his term Ortega enacted the 'Piñata' laws by which large estates were appropriated and handed to FSLN supporters. In the 1990 elections Ortega suffered a surprise defeat to a US-supported coalition of anti-Sandinista groups led by Violeta de Chamorro. Ortega retained the leadership of the FSLN but was again defeated at the 1996 elections. He survived several scandals, including allegations in 1998 by his step-daughter of sexual abuse, followed in 1999 by a furore over an immunity pact with then President Miguel Alemán, who was facing charges of corruption. Ortega made another unsuccessful bid for office in 2001.

He publicly apologized for excesses during his first presidency. His politics moderated and he increasingly embraced Catholicism. The USA openly opposed his 2006 presidential candidacy but he emerged victorious from the polls in Nov. 2006.

Career in Office

Ortega campaigned on a platform of 'unity and reconciliation', symbolized by his appointment of former Contra leader Jaime Morales as vice president. He announced plans to address poverty, affecting 80% of the population, as well as soaring inflation, crippling interest payments on public debt, a national energy shortage and endemic corruption. In Nov. 2006 the FSLN came out in support of a strict anti-abortion law.

On the international stage Ortega sought to reassure foreign investors and the private sector, many of whom feared further deterioration in US–Nicaraguan relations. He received an early boost when the Inter-American Development Bank confirmed its commitment to an assistance loan of US$100m. promised to the previous government.

Ortega committed Nicaragua to the Bolivarian Alternative for the Americas (ALBA) while guaranteeing active membership of a free trade agreement with the USA (CAFTA). He pledged to maintain good relations with the USA while simultaneously strengthening links with Iran, Cuba and China. He also signed off a major natural gas deal with Bolivia. Venezuela pledged US$60m. in debt relief and donations for social development and helped establish a 40% Nicaraguan-owned and 60% Venezuelan-owned oil company, Albanc. In Oct. 2007 the Nicaraguan and Honduran governments accepted an International Court of Justice (ICJ) ruling settling a long-running territorial dispute between them. However, in Nov. 2010 a dispute with neighbouring Costa Rica over a river border area led to the deployment of security forces by both countries. In March 2011 the ICJ ruled that all troops should be withdrawn in a judgment viewed as favouring Costa Rica. In Nov. 2012, in another territorial arbitration the ICJ controversially ruled in Nicaragua's favour to redraw its maritime border in the Caribbean with Colombia.

In 2008 doubts about Ortega's democratic credentials resurfaced and in municipal elections in Nov. opposition parties denounced the Sandinista victory as rigged. He also circumvented a constitutional barrier to his standing for re-election through a favourable Supreme Court ruling in Oct. 2010. In the Nov. 2011 presidential polls Ortega retained power with 63% of the vote, although international observers expressed concern over the official results. In late 2013 the government proposed constitutional reforms extending Ortega's executive powers and permitting limitless presidential re-election. The amendments came into force in Feb. 2014, with opponents claiming they posed a threat to democracy.

In mid-2013 parliament approved the proposed construction, with Chinese financial assistance, of a new 278-km waterway linking the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans as a rival transit passage to the Panama Canal. It was announced in Dec. 2014 that construction had begun.

DEFENCE

In 2013 defence expenditure totalled US$85m. (US$15 per capita), representing 0.8% of GDP.

Army

The present-day National Army of Nicaragua was established in 1995. Strength (2011) around 10,000.

Navy

The Nicaraguan Navy was some 800 strong in 2011.

Air Force

The Air Force has been semi-independent since 1947. Personnel (2011) 1,200, with no combat-capable aircraft.

ECONOMY

In 2012 agriculture accounted for 20.0% of GDP, industry 26.7% and services 53.3%.

Overview

Nicaragua, among the poorest countries in the Western Hemisphere, suffers from low productivity, high unemployment and large external debt. It is prone to natural disasters and has traditionally been heavily dependent on oil imports, although it is now considered one of the best countries in Latin America for investment in renewable energy. The government's National Human Development Plan (NHDP) sets out plans to accelerate growth and reduce poverty.

Tourism is important, while coffee and meat account for around 40% of exports. Leading trading partners include the USA, Venezuela and Mexico. Export demand contracted and workers' remittances declined by 5.7% as a result of the global financial crisis, although both have subsequently stabilized. Imports increased steadily between 2010 and 2012.

Currency

The monetary unit is the córdoba (NIO), of 100 centavos, which replaced the córdoba oro in 1991 at par. Inflation was 19.8% in 2008, and more recently 7.1% in 2013 and 6.0% in 2014. In July 2005 Nicaragua had foreign exchange reserves of US$628m. In June 2005 total money supply was 4,746m. córdobas.

Budget

In 2011 budgetary central government revenues were 37,696m. córdobas and expenditures 32,823m. córdobas. Taxes accounted for 84.4% of revenues in 2011; compensation of employees accounted for 36.4% of expenditures.

The standard rate of VAT is 15%.

Performance

The economy grew by 5.1% in 2012, 4.5% in 2013 and 4.7% in 2014. Total GDP in 2014 was US$11.8bn.

Banking and Finance

The Central Bank of Nicaragua came into operation on 1 Jan. 1961 as an autonomous bank of issue, absorbing the issue department of the National Bank. The President is Leonardo Ovidio Reyes Ramírez. There were six private commercial banks in 2012.

In 2010 external debt totalled US$4,786m., equivalent to 76.9% of GNI.

There is a stock exchange in Managua.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Nicaragua's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2011 were the equivalent of 0.9 tonnes per capita.

Electricity

Installed capacity in 2011 was 1.1m. kW. In 2011, 3.83bn. kWh were produced; consumption per capita in 2011 was 642 kWh.

Minerals

Production in 2011: gold, 6,395 kg; silver, 7,927 kg.

Agriculture

In 2012 there were an estimated 1.5m. ha. of arable land and 296,000 ha. of permanent cropland. Approximately 199,000 ha. were equipped for irrigation in 2012. Production (in 1,000 tonnes) in 2012: sugarcane, 6,718; maize (estimate), 471; rice (paddy) (estimate), 440; dry beans, 234; groundnuts (estimate), 200; coffee (estimate), 107; oranges (estimate), 100.

In 2013 there were an estimated 3.7m. cattle, 494,000 pigs, 269,000 horses and 21m. chickens. Livestock products (2013 estimates, in 1,000 tonnes): beef and veal, 134; chicken meat, 110; cows' milk, 765; eggs, 28.

Forestry

The forest area in 2010 was 3.11m. ha., or 26% of the land area. Timber production was 6.23m. cu. metres in 2011.

Fisheries

In 2010 the catch was 37,423 tonnes (36,480 tonnes from sea fishing).

INDUSTRY

In 2012 manufacturing accounted for 16.4% of GDP. Meat and fish is the dominant sector (20% of output by value in 2012, provisional), followed by fabrics and apparel (17%), processed food products (14%) and refined oil products (10%). Beverages, dairy products and sugar are also important.

Labour

The labour force in 2013 was 2,599,000 (2,000,000 in 2003). 65.8% of the population aged 15–64 was economically active in 2013. In the same year 5.3% of the population was unemployed.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

In 2004 Nicaragua signed the Central America-Dominican Republic-United States Free Trade Agreement (CAFTA-DR), along with Costa Rica, the Dominican Republic, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras and the USA. The agreement entered into force for Nicaragua on 1 April 2006.

Imports and Exports

In 2010 imports (c.i.f.) were valued at US$4,190.8m. and exports (f.o.b.) at US$1,847.6m.

Main import suppliers, 2010 (US$1m.): USA, 868.6; Venezuela, 742.9; China, 365.5; Costa Rica, 343.8; Mexico, 320.9. Leading export markets, 2010 (US$1m.): USA, 606.6; Venezuela, 248.6; El Salvador, 198.2; Canada, 157.4; Costa Rica, 87.1.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

Road length in 2007 was 20,333 km, of which 1,081 km were main roads. In 2007 there were 101,900 passenger cars (18 per 1,000 inhabitants), 7,700 buses and coaches, 179,900 lorries and vans and 61,200 motorcycles and mopeds. 522 fatalities were caused by road accidents in 2007.

Civil Aviation

In 2013 airports in Nicaragua handled 1,206,172 passengers. The main airport, Augusto C. Sandino International Airport at Managua, handled 1,108,933 passengers in 2009 (of which 963,715 on international flights). There were flights in 2013 from Managua to over 20 international and domestic destinations with a number of different airlines.

Shipping

In Jan. 2009 there were two ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 1,000 GT. The Pacific ports are Corinto (the largest), San Juan del Sur and Puerto Sandino through which pass most of the external trade. The chief eastern ports are El Bluff (for Bluefields) and Puerto Cabezas. Construction of a Chinese-backed 278-km canal known as the Nicaragua Canal, linking the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, began in Dec. 2014. The canal, which is set to be about four times the length of the Panama Canal, is expected to cost US$50bn. and be completed in 2019.

Telecommunications

In 2011 there were 288,000 fixed telephone lines; mobile phone subscriptions numbered 4,824,000 in 2011 (81.7 per 100 persons). In 2011, 10.6% of the population were internet users. In Dec. 2011 there were 664,000 Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The judicial power is vested in a Supreme Court of Justice at Managua, five chambers of second instance and 153 judges of lower courts.

The population in penal institutions in Dec. 2012 was 9,168 (153 per 100,000 of national population). Nicaragua was ranked 87th of 102 countries for criminal justice and 99th for civil justice in the 2015 World Justice Project Rule of Law Index, which provides data on how the rule of law is experienced by the general public across eight categories.

Education

Adult literacy rate in 2005 was 78.0% (male, 78.1%; female, 77.9%). In 2007 there were 952,964 primary school pupils (31,188 academic staff), 470,520 secondary school pupils (15,126 academic staff) and (2003) 103,577 students at tertiary level with 6,757 academic staff. The largest university is the National Autonomous University of Nicaragua, established in 1812.

In 2003 public expenditure on education came to 3.3% of GNI.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Niger has been settled for at least 6,000 years. Early cattle-herding and agricultural economies developed in the Sahara and by the 14th century the Hausa people had established city-states in the south of the region. Meanwhile Berbers dominated trade routes in the north, which came under the control of the Songhai Empire around 1515. After the fall of the Songhai Empire in the late 16th century the Bornu Empire expanded into the centre and east of the region, while the Hausa people retained the south and the Tuareg were prominent in the north. The Djerma people later became established in the southwest.

In the 19th century Fulani Muslims vied for power with the Hausas and Bornus. French forces took control of the region at the end of the century, creating the military district of Niger as part of the larger territory of Haut-Sénégal et Niger. Tuareg resistance led to a major uprising during the First World War, which was put down by combined French and British forces. France formally designated Niger as a colony in 1922.

Gradual decentralization of power began in 1946. Niger became an autonomous state in 1958 and on 3 Aug. 1960 it obtained independence, with Hamani Diori as its first president. In 1968 severe drought culminated in civil unrest. Diori was deposed in a 1974 military coup and Lieut. (later Col.) Seyni Kountché took power. Kountché gradually replaced the military government with civilians, surviving several coup attempts in the process. He was succeeded in 1987 by Ali Seibou, whose National Movement for the Development Society (MNSD), became Niger's only legal political party. A new constitution was approved in 1989 and in the early 1990s Seibou responded to pro-reform demonstrations by legalizing opposition parties.

In 1990 conflict broke out in the north between government forces and the Tuaregs, who demanded autonomy. Relations with Libya deteriorated as the Niger government suspected its neighbour of encouraging the insurgency. In 1995 a ceasefire established land rights for the Tuaregs and formalized their relationship with government. The agreement has largely held despite sporadic conflict.

In July 1991 a constitutional conference removed Seibou's powers and established a transitional government under André Salifou. Multi-party elections were held in 1993 and, following victory for the Alliance of the Forces of Change, Mahamane Ousmane was elected president. However, the MNSD won back control of the National Assembly in 1995 and tensions mounted between President Ousmane and the government. In Jan. 1996 Ousmane was deposed in a military coup and replaced by Col. Ibrahim Baré Mainassara (known as Baré).

Strict military rule was eventually relaxed and in July 1996 Baré claimed decisive victory in a disputed election. In April 1999 Baré was killed by his bodyguards and Major Daoude Wanké took power with military backing. Under international pressure, multi-party elections were held in Oct. 1999 and were declared by independent observers to be largely fair. Mamadou Tandja of the MNSD was elected president and his party won control of the National Assembly. Niger held its first local elections in July 2004, with most seats being won by parties supporting the president. The new National Assembly established amnesties for those involved in the 1996 and 1999 coups. In Dec. 2004 Mamadou Tandja won a second term as president, with Hama Amadou as prime minister.

Niger continues to suffer severe economic problems. In 2005 the government increased tax on basic goods (including food), leading to widespread protests and strikes until the government granted exemptions on some staples. Drought and locust infestations the previous year devastated harvests. After UN World Food Programme warnings that millions faced severe malnutrition, an international relief effort staved off the worst of the disaster but thousands still died of diseases associated with hunger and poverty.

In 2006 the International Court of Justice settled a land dispute with Benin by awarding Niger most of the river islands along the shared border. In April 2009 the government reached a peace agreement with the rebel Movement of Niger People for Justice after several years of troubles. The following month President Mamadou Tandja dismissed parliament and suspended the constitution after a constitutional court ruling against his attempt to hold a referendum on his running for a third presidential term. In Aug. 2009 the referendum, criticized for lacking legitimacy, supported Tandja's candidacy but elections in Oct. were boycotted by opponents. Tandja claimed a landslide victory but was removed from office in a coup in Feb. 2010, with power falling to a military junta. The presidential elections in Jan.-March 2011 signalled a peaceful return to democracy with outgoing President Salou Djibo heralding them as an example for Africa.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Niger is bounded in the north by Algeria and Libya, east by Chad, south by Nigeria, southwest by Benin and Burkina Faso, and west by Mali. Area, 1,186,408 sq. km, with a population at the 2012 census of 17,138,707; density, 14.4 per sq. km. In 2011, 17.2% of the population were urban.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 19-90m. Niger's population has more than doubled since the early 1990s.

The country is divided into the capital, Niamey, an autonomous district, and seven departments. Area, population and chief towns:

Department	Sq. km	Population (2012 census)	Chief town	Population (2012 census)
Agadez	634,209	487,620	Agadez	110,497
Diffa	140,216	593,821	Diffa	39,960
Dosso	31,002	2,037,713	Dosso	58,671
Maradi	38,581	3,402,094	Maradi	267,249
Niamey	670	1,026,848	Niamey	978,029
Tahoua	106,677	3,328,365	Tahoua	117,826
Tillabéri	89,623	2,722,482	Tillabéri	22,774
Zinder	145,430	3,539,764	Zinder	235,605

The population is composed chiefly of Hausa (53%), Djerma-Songhai (21%), Fulani (10%), Tuareg (10%) and Kanuri-Manga (4%). The official language is French. Hausa, Djerma and Fulani are national languages.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

Estimates, 2008: births, 787,000; deaths, 219,000. Estimated birth rate in 2008 was 53.5 per 1,000 population (the highest in the world); estimated death rate, 14.9. Niger has one of the youngest populations of any country, with 73% of the population under the age of 30 and 49% under 15. Infant mortality, 2010, 73 per 1,000 live births. Annual population growth rate, 2000–08, 3.6%. Expectation of life at birth, 2013, 58.3 years for males and 58.6 for females. Fertility rate, 2012, 7.6 children per woman (the highest anywhere in the world). A UNICEF report published in 2014 revealed that 77% of women aged 20–49 had been married or in union before the age of 18, the highest percentage of any country.

CLIMATE

Precipitation determines the geographical division into a southern zone of agriculture, a central zone of pasturage and a desert-like northern zone. The country lacks water with the exception of the southwestern districts and the southern zone. Niamey, 95°F (35°C). Annual rainfall varies from 22" (560 mm) in the south to 7" (180 mm) in the Sahara zone. The rainy season lasts from May until Sept., but there are periodic droughts.

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

Following a coup in Feb. 2010 a military junta suspended the constitution and dissolved the cabinet. In March 2010 the military leadership announced it had formed a transitional government and promised to return Niger to democracy. In Oct. 2010 a new constitution received 90.2% support in a referendum; turnout was 52.7%. Establishing Niger as a secular state, it reimposes a limit of two five-year terms on the presidency (a provision abandoned in the constitution promulgated the previous year), prohibits members of the military from running for office and guarantees that the government will release data on national oil and mining revenues. Legislative power rests with the unicameral National Assembly of 171 members, elected by universal suffrage for a five-year term.

National Anthem

'Auprès du grand Niger puissant' ('By the banks of the mighty great Niger'); words by M. Thiriet, tune by R. Jacquet and N. Frionnet.

RECENT ELECTIONS

In the first round of presidential elections held on 21 Feb. 2016 incumbent Mahamadou Issoufou won 48.4% of the votes, Hama Amadou (a former prime minister) 17.7%, Seyni Oumarou (a second former prime minister) 12.1% and Mahamane Ousmane (a former president) 6.3%. There were 11 other candidates. Turnout was 66.8%. In the run-off on 20 March 2016 Mahamadou Issoufou won 92.5% of the votes and Hama Amadou 7.5%. Turnout was 59.8%.

Parliamentary elections were also held on 21 Feb. 2016. The Nigerien Party for Democracy and Socialism (PNDS) won 75 seats; the Nigerien Democratic Movement for an African Federation (MODEN/FA), 25; the National Movement for the Development of Society (MNSD), 20; the Patriotic Movement for the Republic (MPR-JAMHURIYA), 13; the Nigerien Movement for Democratic Renewal—the Party for Socialism and Democracy in Niger (MNRD–PSDN), 6. 11 smaller parties each won five seats or fewer.

CURRENT LEADERS

Mahamadou Issoufou

Position
President

Introduction

Mahamadou Issoufou was sworn in as president on 7 April 2011. The veteran opposition leader defeated rival candidate Seyni Oumarou, a former ally of deposed leader Mamadou Tandja, in a run-off on 12 March 2011. The election fulfilled a pledge by the military that it would reinstate civilian rule following the ousting of Tandja in a coup in 2010. Heading the Nigerien Party for Democracy and Socialism (PNDS), Issoufou has previously served as prime minister and as president of the National Assembly. He was re-elected in March 2016.

Early Life

Issoufou was born in 1952 in the town of Dan Daji, in the Tahoua department of central Niger. He is an ethnic Hausa, the country's most populous group. Trained as a mining engineer in France, Issoufou returned to Niger to work as a technical director for French company Areva. In 1980 he was appointed national director of mines, a post he held for five years before becoming secretary-general of the Mining Company of Niger.

In Feb. 1993, at the country's first open elections, Issoufou was elected to parliament as a representative of the PNDS. Later that month he came third in presidential elections, marking the first of four failed attempts to gain the presidency. He was appointed prime minister by the successful candidate, Mahamane Ousmane, in April 1993 but resigned in Sept. 1994 in protest at Ousmane's decree diminishing prime ministerial influence.

The following year, after parliamentary elections had led to the establishment of a new coalition, he was appointed president of the National Assembly. Following a military coup in Jan. 1996 and subsequent flawed presidential elections, Issoufou spent intermittent periods under house arrest. He made two further unsuccessful bids for the presidency in 1999 and 2004.

In 2009 he was charged with misappropriating funds after the opposition called for a general strike to protest Mamadou Tandja's attempt at changing the constitution to secure a third term. Issoufou briefly fled the country, claiming that the charge against him was politically motivated. However, the ousting of Tandja and the establishment of a transitional junta allowed him to return to national politics. He gained 58% of the vote in the second round of presidential elections in March 2011, defeating Seyni Oumarou.

Career in Office

Issoufou pledged to secure a more equal distribution of the wealth from Niger's substantial uranium reserves. Among his first challenges was coping with the influx of refugees fleeing conflict in Libya and Côte d'Ivoire. An alleged assassination plot against him was then foiled in July 2011. In May 2013 there were simultaneous suicide bombings at a military barracks and a French-run uranium mining site in the north of the country by suspected Islamist militants. Issoufou announced the formation of a new government in Aug. 2013 in an effort to reinforce internal political stability and security. Nonetheless, in Dec. that year thousands of protesters staged an anti-government rally, organized by a new coalition of opposition parties, over the failure to improve living standards. In Dec. 2015 Issoufou announced that the government had foiled a plot to overthrow him and that nine senior military personnel had been arrested. Opposition figures disputed the claim, however, and accused the government of trying to manipulate the political climate ahead of elections that took place in Feb. and March 2016. Issoufou secured a second term, winning 92% of the vote in a second round run-off, although the opposition claimed that the result was fraudulent.

DEFENCE

Selective conscription for two years operates. Defence expenditure totalled US$70m. in 2012 (US$4 per capita), representing 1.1% of GDP.

Army

There are three military districts. Strength (2011) 5,200. There are additional paramilitary forces of 5,400.

Air Force

In 2011 the Air Force had 100 personnel. There are no combat-capable aircraft.

ECONOMY

Agriculture accounted for 38.1% of GDP in 2012, industry 21.1% and services 40.8%.

Overview

Niger is among the poorest countries in the world, ranking 188th out of 188 countries in the 2014 UN Human Development Index.

Long-term GDP growth has been low and volatile, averaging 2.1% per year between 1980 and 2009 while failing to keep pace with population growth. The economy is dominated by agriculture, uranium mining and development assistance, the latter financing about 45% of the national budget.

Following a military coup in Feb. 2010, a democratically elected government took office in April 2011 and announced its intention to accelerate economic development and reduce corruption. GDP grew by over 11% in 2012 owing to new investment in oil production, higher uranium production and a good harvest. However, floods in the third quarter of 2012 caused extensive structural damage and loss of life, while the country has also been affected by insecurity in neighbouring Mali.

Currency

The unit of currency is the franc CFA (XOF) with a parity of 655.957 francs CFA to one euro. In June 2005 total money supply was 170,798m. francs CFA and foreign exchange reserves were US$177m. Inflation was 2.3% in 2013. However, there was then deflation of 0.9% in 2014.

Budget

In 2012 revenue totalled 729.3bn. francs CFA and expenditure 823.6bn. francs CFA.

Performance

The economy grew by 11.8% in 2012, 4.6% in 2013 and 6.9% in 2014. Total GDP in 2014 was US$8.2bn.

Banking and Finance

The regional Central Bank of West African States (BCEAO)—Governor, Tiémoko Meyliet Koné—functions as the bank of issue. There were six commercial banks in 2002, three development banks and a savings bank.

In 2010 external debt totalled US$1,127m., equivalent to 20.5% of GNI.

There is a stock exchange in Niamey.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

In 2011 Niger's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy were the equivalent of 0.1 tonnes per capita.

Electricity

Installed capacity was approximately 0.1m. kW in 2011. Production in 2011 amounted to 295m. kWh, with consumption per capita 55 kWh.

Minerals

Large uranium deposits are mined at Arlit and Akouta. Uranium production (2010), 4,198 tonnes. Niger's uranium production is the fifth largest in the world. Phosphates are mined in the Niger valley, and coal reserves are being exploited by open-cast mining (production of hard coal in 2011 was 246,011 tonnes). Salt production in 2011 was an estimated 30,000 tonnes.

Agriculture

There were an estimated 4.49m. ha. of arable land in 2002 and 13,000 ha. of permanent crops. About 66,000 ha. were irrigated in 2002. There were about 130 tractors in 2002. Production estimates in 2003 (in 1,000 tonnes): millet, 2,500; sorghum, 797; onions, 270; sugarcane, 220; cabbage, 120; cassava, 105; groundnuts, 100; tomatoes, 100. Livestock (2003 estimates): goats, 6.9m.; sheep, 4.5m.; cattle, 2.3m.; asses, 580,000; camels, 420,000; chickens, 25m. Livestock products (in 1,000 tonnes), 2003 estimates: milk, 305; meat, 130; cheese, 15; eggs, 11.

Forestry

There were 1.20m. ha. of forests in 2010 (1% of the land area). Timber production in 2011 was 10.79m. cu. metres, mainly for fuel.

Fisheries

There are fisheries on the River Niger and along the shores of Lake Chad. In 2009 the catch was 29,884 tonnes, exclusively from inland waters.

INDUSTRY

Some small manufacturing industries, mainly in Niamey, produce textiles, food products, furniture and chemicals. Output of cement in 2011 (estimate), 72,500 tonnes.

Labour

The estimated economically active population in 2009 totalled 4,803,000 (68% males). Agriculture, fisheries and forestry remains the largest sector of employment.

Niger had 0-12m. people living in slavery according to the Walk Free Foundation's 2013 Global Slavery Index.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

In 2008 imports (c.i.f.) were valued at US$1,247.5m. and exports at US$503.1m. Main imports in 2008: machinery and transport goods, 20.2%; petroleum and petroleum products, 15.2%; cereal and cereal preparations, 11.4%; medicinal and pharmaceutical products, 9.5%. Main exports in 2008: uranium ores and concentrates, 57.5%; livestock, 9.2%; textile fibres, 6.1%; cotton fabrics, 4.5%. Main import suppliers in 2008 (as % of total): France, 13.2; China, 12.6; USA, 7.6; Netherlands, 7.2. Main export destinations in 2008 (as % of total): France, 33.3; USA, 17.6; Nigeria, 11.8; Japan, 9.9.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

In 2007 there were 18,949 km of roads including 3,912 km of paved roads. Niamey and Zinder are the termini of two trans-Saharan motor routes; the Hoggar–Air–Zinder road extends to Kano and the Tanezrouft–Gao–Niamey road to Benin. A 648-km 'uranium road' runs from Arlit to Tahoua. There were, in 2005, 57,732 passenger cars, 11,261 vans, 2,613 buses and 1,035 lorries. In 2007 there were 676 road accidents resulting in 265 fatalities.

Civil Aviation

There is an international airport at Niamey (Diori Hamani Airport), which handled 154,460 passengers in 2009 and 3,327 tonnes of freight. In 2010 there were international flights to Abidjan, Abuja, Accra, Algiers, Bamako, Casablanca, Cotonou, Dakar, Nouakchott, Ouagadougou, Paris and Tripoli as well as domestic flights; nine airlines flew to Niamey in 2010.

Shipping

Sea-going vessels can reach Niamey (300 km inside the country) between Sept. and March.

Telecommunications

There were 83,600 landline telephone subscriptions in 2010 (equivalent to 5.4 per 1,000 inhabitants) and 4,339,900 mobile phone subscriptions in 2011 (or 270.1 per 1,000 inhabitants). In 2011, 1.3% of the population were internet users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

There are Magistrates' and Assize Courts at Niamey, Zinder and Maradi, and justices of the peace in smaller centres. The Court of Appeal is at Niamey.

The population in penal institutions in 2012 was 6,899 (42 per 100,000 of national population). 54.0% of prisoners had yet to receive a trial according to 2014 estimates by the International Centre for Prison Studies.

Education

Adult literacy in 2005 was 29%. In 2007 there were 31,131 teaching staff for 1,235,065 primary school pupils and 7,852 teaching staff for 213,991 secondary school pupils. There were 11,208 students in tertiary education (1,095 academic staff) in 2006. There is a university and an Islamic university.

In 2006 public expenditure on education came to 3.3% of GNI and 17.6% of total government spending.

Health

During the period 2000–09 there were three hospital beds per 10,000 inhabitants. There were 427 physicians, 28 dentists, 1,988 nurses, 500 midwives and 22 pharmacists in 2008.

RELIGION

According to the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life, in 2010 the population was an estimated 98.4% Muslim (nearly all Sunnis). There are also small numbers of Protestants and people with no religious affiliation.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

Niger has three sites on the UNESCO World Heritage List: the Air and Ténéré Natural Reserves (inscribed on the list in 1991), part of the largest protected area in Africa (7.7m. ha.); the 'W' National Park of Niger (1996), a savannah and forested area of biodiversity; and the historic centre of Agadez (2013), a site containing numerous palatial and religious buildings.

Press

In 2008 there was one government-owned daily newspaper and 45 private non-daily newspapers.

Tourism

In 2012 there were 94,000 non-resident tourists; spending by tourists totalled US$86m. in 2011.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

The earliest evidence of human settlement in Nigeria dates from 9000 BC and by 2000 BC its inhabitants were cultivating crops and domestic animals. However, the first organized society was of the Nok people, from around 800 BC to AD 200. Traces of Nok influence are visible in Nigerian art today, particularly in areas such as Igbo, Ukwé, Esie and Benin City. By AD 1000, Nok had given way to the Kanem, thanks to the trans-Saharan trade route that ran from West Africa to the Mediterranean.

In the 11th century northern Nigeria split into seven independent Hausa city-states, Biram, Daura, Gobir, Kano, Katsina, Rano and Zaria. By the 14th century, two states had developed in the south, Oyo and Benin, with the Igbo people of the southeast living in small village communities. South of the Hausa states and west of the Niger, the Ife flourished between the 11th and 15th centuries. The importance of the Ife civilization is evident today; all Yoruba states claim that their leaders are descended from the Ife as a way of establishing legitimacy, and its ritual is imitated in their modern public ceremonies.

Most of the north was held by the Songhai empire by the early 16th century, only to be taken later in the century by Kanem-Bornu, allowing the Hausa states to retain their autonomy. At the end of the 18th century, Fulani religious groups waged war in the north, merging states to create the single Islamic state of the Sokoto Caliphate.

In the late 15th century Portuguese navigators, following the demise of the spice trade, began to purchase slaves from middlemen in the region. They were followed by British, French and Dutch traders. Wealthy traders established towns such as Bonny, Owome and Okrika. Slave trading had a profound effect on Nigeria. From the 1650s until the 1860s, it caused a forced migration of around 3-5m. people. Within Nigeria itself, the defensive measures adopted to avoid enslavement led to the reinforcement of ethnic distinctions and of the north-south divide.

After the abolition of the slave trade in Britain in 1807, attempts to find a lucrative alternative and to discourage the predominance of slavery in Nigeria (other countries continued to trade in slaves until 1875) led to a large-scale campaign to encourage the production of palm oil for export. This itself caused the development of an internal slave trade, involving slaves in the collection and manufacture of palm fruits, as well as the transportation of the oil. The British also took over the mines at Jos at the expense of the livelihoods of independent tin producers. When heavy reliance on mining exports resulted in the neglect of agricultural work, Nigeria experienced its first food shortage.

Religious missions were active at this time, with Presbyterians, Methodists, Baptists and the Church Missionary Society (CMS) operating in Lagos, Abeokuta, Ibadan, Oyo and Ogbomosho. The CMS pioneered trade on the Niger by encouraging merchants to run steamboats, partially as a means of travel for the missionaries but also to ship goods.

In 1804 Usuman dan Fodio began a 'Holy war' to reform the practice of Islam in the north, conquering the Hausa city-states, though Kanem-Bornu retained its independence. However, by the late 19th century Kanem-Bornu's power was in decline. Usuman's son, Muhammed Bello, established a state centred at Sokoto, controlling most of northern Nigeria for the rest of the century. In the south, the Oyo region was troubled by civil wars, only brought to a close when the British intervened and the Oyo Empire collapsed. Britain took Lagos as its colony in 1861.

In 1879 Sir George Goldie gained all British firms trading on the Niger, and in the 1880s took over French companies trading there, signing treaties with African leaders and enabling Britain's domination of southern Nigeria in 1884-85. In 1887, Jaja, an African trader based in the Niger Delta, was deported following his fierce opposition to European competition. Goldie's firm received a British Royal Charter as the Royal Niger Company to administer the Niger River and north Nigeria, and this monopoly of trade on the river angered Africans and Europeans alike. The Royal Niger Company also lacked sufficient power to control north Nigeria. In 1900 its charter was revoked and British forces moved in, taking Sokoto in 1903. By 1906 Britain controlled Nigeria as the Colony (Lagos), the Protectorate of Southern Nigeria and the Protectorate of Northern Nigeria, amalgamating the regions in 1914 to establish the Colony and Protectorate of Nigeria. The administration was based on existing leadership systems. Yet the appointment of African officials failed to gain wide acceptance from Nigeria's people. The British governor made all major decisions, and the traditional authority of African rulers was weakened irreparably.

British dominance met with major resistance from the Nigerian people. In the south, the tribal Yoruba group, the Ijebu, fought against colonial rule in 1892, as did the Aro in the east and the Aniocha (both Igbo groups) in the west. There were also rebellions in the north. The British forces responded with brutality, destroying the homes of many Nigerians in order to secure their capitulation.

British colonial rule brought development in the transportation and communications systems and a shift towards cash crops. Western and Christian influences prevailed, including widespread use of the English language. This influence spread far more rapidly in the south, where British control had been secure over a longer period, and this added to the growing disparity between north and south. Nigerian forces helped defeat the German army in Cameroon during the First World War, involved in an arduous campaign until 1916.

Growing unrest and widespread anticolonialism became focused in the 1920s as demands for African representation increased. In 1923 Herbert Macaulay, grandson of the first Nigerian to be ordained, established the first Nigerian political party, the Nigerian National Democratic Party. In 1944 he united the party with several others to form the National Council of Nigeria and the Cameroons (NCNC). In response to this activity, the British attempted to quell demands for an end to colonial rule by granting some political reforms. In 1947 they announced a new constitution that they claimed would give traditional authorities a stronger voice. This met with resistance, and in 1951 the British agreed to form a new constitution that would provide for elected representation on a regional basis.

Three political parties developed, the National Council of Nigeria and the Cameroons (later the National Convention of Nigerian Citizens), largely supported by the Igbo, the Action Group, with mostly Yoruba membership, and the Northern People's Congress (NPC). When the constitution failed in 1952, a new one divided Nigeria into three regions, Eastern, Western and Northern, plus the federal territory of Lagos. In 1956 the Western and Eastern regions became self-governing, as did the Northern region in 1959.

In 1960 Nigeria declared independence. Elections failed to elect any one party by a majority, and the NPC and the NCNC formed a coalition government, with Abukar Tafawa Balewa (NPC) as prime minister. Nnamdi Azikiwe, who had helped Herbert Macaulay to establish the NCNC in 1944, was governor-general. When Nigeria became a republic in 1963 Azikiwe became president.

Continuing conflict between north and south undermined the new republic. In 1966 fighting culminated in a military coup that installed Maj.-Gen. Aguiyi-Ironsi, an Igbo, as head of a military government. Another coup later in the year placed Lieut.-Col. Yakubu Gowon in power and saw many northern Igbo massacred. In May 1967 the Igbo people of the south declared their region independent from the rest of the country, naming the breakaway republic Biafra. Civil war raged for three years until federal Nigeria triumphed at the price of 1m. dead and widespread famine and destruction.

This was followed by a period of relative prosperity as oil prices rose. Foreign interest and investment flourished but government overspending and high levels of corruption and crime led to social chaos. In the 1980s recession sent oil prices down, and Nigeria found itself struggling with major debt, rising inflation and mass unemployment.

Gowon's regime was overthrown in 1975 by Gen. Murtala Muhammed whose plans for a new capital to be built at Abuja drained the economy. He was assassinated in 1976, to be succeeded by Gen. Olusegun Obasanjo who oversaw the transition to civilian rule, while juggling the need for Western aid with his support for African nationalist movements.

In 1979 elections brought Alhaji Shehu Shagari to power. Shagari's government came under popular attack for alleged corruption but he was re-elected in 1983, amidst rumours of voting irregularities. Under Shagari relations with the USA improved, heralded by a visit from President Jimmy Carter. However, dogged by worsening economic problems, Shagari was ousted in a military coup in 1983 and replaced by Gen. Muhammadu Buhari. Buhari's regime quickly fell out of favour with the public when it arrested not only the politicians blamed for the country's social and economic problems, but also journalists and academics.

A bloodless coup in 1985 brought to power Maj.-Gen. Ibrahim Babangida, who promulgated a new constitution with the aim of returning to civilian government. Babangida, however, clung to power and refused to accept electoral defeat in 1990, 1992 and 1993. Unrest eventually forced his resignation, but after just three months of rule by an interim leader, one of Babangida's long-term allies, Gen. Sani Abacha, became president and closed down all unions and political institutions. He extended his military rule for a further three years in 1995, proposing a return to civilian rule after this period. To this end five political parties were formed in 1996. However, the Abacha regime attracted international controversy when it executed writer Ken Saro-Wiwa and eight other human rights activists for alleged seditious political activity. Nigeria was suspended from the Commonwealth as a result. Further outrage followed with the arrest of former leader Obasanjo and the murder of the wife of leading political dissident, Chief Moshood Abiola, who had claimed victory at the presidential elections of 1993. Rioting and civil unrest broke out across Nigeria and Abacha's family was accused of siphoning off US$4bn. of national assets.

Abacha died in office in 1998. Maj.-Gen. Abdusalam Abubakar came to power and brought about a return to civilian rule, scrapping plans that would have extended Abacha's rule and releasing political prisoners. Abiola was scheduled to be freed as part of this process but died the day before his scheduled release. In Feb. 1999 Nigeria chose Obasanjo, the 62-year-old retired general and previous military leader, to be president.

This transition of power greatly improved Nigeria's international standing and the country was readmitted to the Commonwealth. However, tribal and religious conflict continued and fighting between the Igbo Christians and Hausa Muslims over the implementation of Islamic law has left thousands dead. Obasanjo's re-election in 2003 was accompanied by violence and rumours of ballot-rigging and bribery.

In July 2005 the Paris Club (an informal grouping of wealthy nations) wrote off around US$20bn. of Nigeria's debt. Assisted by high oil prices, Nigeria had paid off the remaining US$10bn. by April 2006, the first African nation to fully service its Paris Club debt. In April 2007 Umaru Yar'Adua won disputed presidential elections. In March 2008 Nigeria and Cameroon reached agreement on the long-running dispute over sovereignty of the Bakassi Peninsula.

In May 2010 Yar'Adua died and was succeeded by the vice-president, Goodluck Jonathan, who won the presidential election of March 2011. In Dec. 2011 he declared a state of emergency following a spate of attacks by the Islamist militia group Boko Haram. Founded in 2002, the group intensified its attacks from 2009, principally focusing on Christians in the north of the country. In May 2013 the government sent troops into three northern states in a bid to contain the militias amid growing international concern that the organization might destabilize the entire Lake Chad basin region. In April 2014 the group kidnapped 200 girls from a boarding school in Chibok, prompting an international campaign to try and recover them, while in Aug. it announced a caliphate in the northeastern territories under its control, although the government in Abuja rejected the declaration. In Feb. 2015 Nigeria entered into an alliance with Cameroon, Chad and Niger to combat the further spread of Boko Haram's influence. Former military dictator Muhammadu Buhari became president in May 2015. He had defeated Goodluck Jonathan in elections two months earlier that were held up as a positive model to the rest of Africa.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Nigeria is bounded in the north by Niger, east by Chad and Cameroon, south by the Gulf of Guinea and west by Benin. It has an area of 923,768 sq. km (356,667 sq. miles). For sovereignty over the Bakassi Peninsula see CAMEROON: Territory and Population. Census population, 2006, 140,431,790 (69,086,302 females); population density, 152.0 per sq. km. Nigeria is Africa's most populous country and the world's seventh most populous. The United Nations predicts that by 2050 it will be ranked third, after India and China. In 2011, 50.5% of the population were urban.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 182.20m. There were 36 states and a Federal Capital Territory (Abuja) in 2006.

Abuja replaced Lagos as the federal capital and seat of government in Dec. 1991.

Estimated population of the largest cities, 2010:

Lagos	10,788,000	Benin City	1,311,000
Kano	3,271,000	Ogbomosho	1,039,000
Ibadan	2,855,000	Onitsha	867,000

Port Harcourt	1,807,000	Maiduguri	827,000
Kaduna	1,476,000	Ilorin	788,000

Lagos is estimated to have overtaken Cairo in 2011 as Africa's most populous city.

There are about 250 ethnic groups. The largest linguistic groups are the Yoruba (17.5% of the total) and the Hausa (17.2%), followed by Igbo (13.3%), Fulani (10.7%), Ibibio (4.1%), Kanuri (3.6%), Egba (2.9%), Tiv (2.6%), Bura (1.1%), Edo (1.0%) and Nupe (1.0%). The official language is English, but 50% of the population speak Hausa as a lingua franca.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2008 estimates: births, 6,050,000; deaths, 2,420,000. Rates, 2008 estimates (per 1,000 population): births, 40; deaths, 16. Infant mortality, 2010, 88 (per 1,000 live births). Annual population growth rate, 2005–10, 2.7%. Life expectancy at birth, 2013, was 52.2 years for males and 52.8 years for females. Fertility rate, 2008, 5.3 children per woman.

CLIMATE

Lying wholly within the tropics, temperatures everywhere are high. Rainfall varies greatly, but decreases from the coast to the interior. The main rains occur from April to Oct. Lagos, Jan. 81°F (27.2°C), July 78°F (25.6°C). Annual rainfall 72" (1,836 mm). Ibadan, Jan. 80°F (26.7°C), July 76°F (24.4°C). Annual rainfall 45" (1,120 mm). Kano, Jan. 70°F (21.1°C), July 79°F (26.1°C). Annual rainfall 35" (869 mm). Port Harcourt, Jan. 79°F (26.1°C), July 77°F (25°C). Annual rainfall 100" (2,497 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

The constitution was promulgated on 5 May 1999, and entered into force on 29 May. Nigeria is a federation, comprising 36 states and a federal capital territory. The constitution includes provisions for the creation of new states and for boundary adjustments of existing states. The legislative powers are vested in a National Assembly, comprising a Senate and a House of Representatives. The 109-member Senate consists of three senators from each state and one from the federal capital territory, who are elected for a term of four years. The House of Representatives comprises 360 members, representing constituencies of nearly equal population as far as possible, who are elected for a four-year term. The President is elected for a term of four years and must receive not less than one-quarter of the votes cast at the federal capital territory. A president may not serve more than two consecutive four-year terms. In 2006 Olusegun Obasanjo sought to alter the constitution to allow him to run for a third term, but he failed to win backing for the amendment.

National Anthem

'Arise, O compatriots, Nigeria's call obey'; words by a collective, tune by B. Odiase.

RECENT ELECTIONS

Presidential elections held on 28 and 29 March 2015 were won by Muhammadu Buhari, the candidate for the opposition All Progressives Congress (APC) party, with 54.0% of votes cast. He defeated the incumbent president, Goodluck Johnathan of the People's Democratic Party (PDP), who took 45.0%. There were a further 12 candidates. Turnout was 43.7%. Elections had been scheduled to take place on 14 Feb. 2015, but were postponed by the Electoral Commission following logistical problems and the Boko Haram-led insurgency in northeastern states. The election marked the first time in the country's history that an opposition party had democratically taken control from the ruling party. The APC had been created in Feb. 2013 through the merger of Nigeria's three largest opposition parties along with a faction from a fourth party.

In elections to the House of Representatives also held on 28 and 29 March 2015 the APC won 225 seats, PDP 125 and others 10.

In Senate elections held on the same two days, 60 seats went to the APC and 49 to the PDP.

CURRENT LEADERS

Muhammadu Buhari

Position
President

Introduction

Muhammadu Buhari took office as president on 29 May 2015. A retired major-general in the Nigerian army, he previously spent two years as the country's head of state following a military coup on 31 Dec. 1983. His defeat of Goodluck Jonathan in the 2015 presidential election marked the first time that an incumbent Nigerian president had been defeated at the polls.

Early Life

Muhammadu Buhari was born on 17 Dec. 1942 in the northern state of Katsina. In 1961 he joined the army and in the course of his career underwent military training in the United Kingdom (1962–64), India (1973) and the USA (1979–80). In 1975, after participating in the military coup that replaced Yakubu Gowon with Murtala Muhammed, he was named military governor of what was then known as North-Eastern state. In the wake of Muhammed's assassination, he was appointed federal commissioner for petroleum resources by Olusegun Obasanjo.

Buhari returned to regular army duties with the restoration of civilian government in 1979. However, exasperation with the government's perceived mishandling of the economy led to another military coup in Dec. 1983 and the installation of Buhari as the country's head of state. Buhari's authoritarian regime was marked by economic austerity, heavy restrictions on imports, draconian drug laws, the breaking of ties with the IMF, a crackdown on dissent and also a wide-ranging campaign against corruption for which he maintains a reputation to this day. In Nigerian political life, 'Buharism' has become synonymous with the economic and social policies of that period. However, in Aug. 1985 he was ousted by the military and replaced with Ibrahim Babangida. In 1994 he was appointed executive chairman of the newly-formed Petroleum Trust Fund under Sani Abacha, a position he held until its disbandment in 1999.

In 2003 Buhari ran unsuccessfully for president against the incumbent, Olusegun Obasanjo of the People's Democratic Party (PDP). He was again defeated by the PDP candidate, Umaru Yar'Adua, in 2007, and in 2011 by Goodluck Jonathan (a result that led to several hundred deaths in widespread protests). In 2014 the All Progressives Congress nominated Buhari to contest the 2015 election against Jonathan. Buhari, a Muslim who counted on the strong support of the country's northern regions, campaigned on the promise of a tough stance against the extremist Islamist insurgency led by Boko Haram and the elimination of corruption. In an election declared clean by international observers, he gained 15.4m. votes against 12.9m. for Jonathan, who did not contest the result. Buhari was inaugurated on 29 May 2015.

Career in Office

On confirmation of his victory, Buhari called successfully for calm between supporters of the rival candidates. He wasted little time in overhauling the energy industry, splitting the state-owned Nigerian National Petroleum Corporation into two entities and announcing that he would serve as the country's petroleum resources minister. In Jan. 2016 he claimed that the Nigerian army had succeeded in degrading Boko Haram to the extent that the sect could 'no longer launch military style attacks as they had done in the past'.

DEFENCE

In 2013 defence expenditure totalled US$2,143m., equivalent to US$12 per capita and representing 0.8% of GDP.

As at 31 Aug. 2013 Nigeria had 4,880 personnel serving in UN peacekeeping operations (the fifth largest contingent of any country), notably in Liberia and Sudan.

Army

Strength (2011) 62,000. Equipment in 2011 included 266 main battle tanks.

Navy

In 2011 the fleet included one German-built frigate and 21 patrol and coastal combatants. There is a small aviation element. Naval personnel in 2011 totalled 8,000. The main bases are at Apapa (Lagos) and Calabar.

Air Force

Personnel (2011) total 10,000 although the force has a very limited operational capacity. There were 55 combat-capable aircraft in 2011 including F-7s and Aero L-39s, but the serviceability of much of the equipment is in doubt. In addition there were nine attack helicopters in 2011.

ECONOMY

Agriculture and fishing contributed 35.5% to GDP in 2009; followed by crude petroleum and mining, 28.5%; trade and hotels, 16.2%; and finance and real estate, 6.1%.

Overview

Since independence in 1960, weak and corrupt government has damaged the economy. GDP per capita is low, at approximately US$3,006 in 2013 according to World Bank figures, and 31·3% of the population lived below the poverty line that year. Unemployment was 24% in 2011.

Nonetheless, Nigeria is well-positioned to build a prosperous future, having overtaken South Africa as Africa's largest economy in April 2014. It is Africa's largest oil exporter, with the continent's greatest reserves of natural gas. Oil and gas account for 35% of GDP, with oil revenues comprising 90% of total export earnings. It was also among the pioneers in adopting and implementing the Extractive Industries Transparency Initiative (EITI) in 2011, which aims to improve governance in the hydrocarbon sector.

A ten-year rift with the IMF ended with an agreement in Jan. 1999 on a Fund-monitored reform programme, including provisions for abolishing the dual exchange rate, ending subsidies on local fuel and expanding privatization. Between 2004 and 2007, there were wide-ranging reforms, particularly in the management of public finance, governance and the banking sector. External debt was also reduced following negotiations with the Paris and London Clubs of international creditors to eradicate major arrears, with the result that foreign debt represented 3% of GDP in 2014.

Since the beginning of the 21st century Nigeria has had one of the highest GDP growth rates in sub-Saharan Africa. It averaged 10·2% between 2003 and 2010 although then only 4·9% between 2011 and 2013. The economy weathered the global financial crisis and also a 2009 domestic banking crisis resulting in part from countercyclical policies. A three-part sovereign wealth fund (comprising a stabilization fund, an infrastructure fund and an inter-generational saving fund) was launched in Oct. 2011.

Although non-oil growth, propelled by agriculture, trade and services, has compensated for shortfalls in oil revenues, the government aims to further diversify the economy in the face of declining oil prices and weak investment. However, security challenges and high levels of poverty and unemployment threaten the longer-term outlook.

Currency

The unit of currency is the naira (NGN) of 100 kobo. It was devalued by 8% in Nov. 2014. In Feb. 2015 the central bank ceased weekly foreign exchange sales designed to support the currency, so effectively implementing a further de facto devaluation of the naira. Foreign exchange reserves were US$44,786m. in May 2009 (US$7,100m. in 1998) and gold reserves were 687,000 troy oz. Inflation rates (based on IMF statistics):

2005	2006	2007	2008	2009	2010	2011	2012	2013	2014
17·9%	8·2%	5·4%	11·6%	12·5%	13·7%	10·8%	12·2%	8·5%	8·1%

In June 2009 total money supply was ₦4,247·6bn.

Budget

The financial year is the calendar year. 2011 budgetary central government revenue, ₦3,554m. (including taxes, 32·4%); expenditure, ₦3,794m. (including compensation of employees, 45·4%; use of goods and services, 17·7%).

VAT was raised from 5% to 10% in May 2007, but as a result of a general strike in protest against the increase was lowered back to 5% a month later.

Performance

Real GDP growth rates (based on IMF statistics):

2005	2006	2007	2008	2009	2010	2011	2012	2013	2014
8·7%	8·3%	9·1%	8·0%	9·0%	10·0%	4·9%	4·3%	5·4%	6·3%

Before the discovery of oil in the early 1970s Nigeria's GDP per head was around US$200. By the early 1980s it had reached around US$800, but has now declined to some US$300. Total GDP in 2014 was US$568·5bn., making Nigeria Africa's largest economy.

Banking and Finance

The Central Bank of Nigeria (CBN) is the bank of issue (Governor, Godwin Emefiele).

In 2004 a major banking reform was announced, consolidating the existing institutions at the time (nearly 100) into 25 large universal banks. However, despite attempts to strengthen the banking sector, the financial condition of the banks deteriorated. Subsequently the CBN requested technical assistance from the IMF to strengthen the banking system. Another banking crisis in 2008 prompted a ₦600bn. bailout from the Central Bank to five of the leading banks: Intercontinental Bank, Oceanic International Bank (now Ecobank), Union Bank of Nigeria, Bank PHB (now Keystone Bank) and Afribank (now Mainstreet Bank). More ambitious reforms took effect in Oct. 2010. In 2007 bank reserves at the CBN totalled ₦1,195bn. and CBN foreign assets amounted to ₦6,570bn.

Nigeria was one of three countries and territories named in a report in June 2005 as failing to co-operate in the fight against international money laundering. In June 2006 Nigeria was delisted and its formal monitoring was ended a year later. The Financial Action Task Force on Money Laundering was set up by the G7 group of major industrialized nations.

Foreign debt amounted to US$7,883m. in 2010, down from US$22,060m. in 2005 and US$31,355m. in 2000—this was equivalent to just 4·5% of GNI (down from 22·3% in 2005 and 77·9% in 2000).

Nigeria attracted US$5,609m. worth of foreign direct investment in 2013, down from a record US$8,915m. in 2011.

The Nigerian Stock Exchange is in Lagos.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Nigeria's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy were the equivalent of 0·5 tonnes per capita in 2011.

The Climate Change and Environmental Risk Atlas 2014 produced by Maplecroft, a risk analytics company, ranked Nigeria as the country facing the sixth highest economic and social risk from climate change by 2025.

Electricity

Installed capacity, 2011 estimate, 8·4m. kW. Production, 2011, 27·03bn. kWh (21% hydro-electric); consumption per capita was 165 kWh in 2011. Power cuts are frequent, with both businesses and homes having to rely on generators as demand for electricity far outweighs supply.

Oil and Gas

Nigeria's oil production is the largest of any African country and amounted to 116·2m. tonnes in 2012. Reserves in 2012 totalled 37·2bn. bbls. There are four refineries. Oil accounts for some 95% of Nigeria's export income and over three-quarters of government revenues. Most of Nigeria's oil wealth comes from onshore wells, but there are also large untapped offshore deposits.

Natural gas reserves, 2014, were 5·1trn. cu. metres; production, 43·2bn. cu. metres in 2012. In March 2007 the 678-km West Africa Gas pipeline was completed to supply natural gas to Benin, Ghana and Togo. After a series of delays resulting from vandalism and fuel quality problems, it was restarted in March 2010 and should help to reduce Nigeria's dependence on oil for government revenue.

Minerals

Production, 2005 estimates (in tonnes): limestone, 2·10m.; kaolin, 200,000; marble, 149,000. There are large deposits of iron ore, coal (reserves estimate 245m. tonnes), lead and zinc. There are small quantities of gold and uranium. Lead production was an estimated 5,000 tonnes in 2009. Tin is also mined.

Agriculture

Of the total land mass, 75% is suitable for agriculture, including arable farming, forestry, livestock husbandry and fisheries. In 2012 an estimated 35m. ha. were arable and 6-7m. ha. permanent cropland. 0.29m. ha. were equipped for irrigation in 2012. Main food crops are millet and sorghum in the north, plantains and oil palms in the south, and maize, yams, cassava and rice in much of the country. The north is, however, the main food producing area. Cocoa is the crop that contributes most to foreign exchange earnings. Output, 2010 (in 1,000 tonnes): cassava, 42,533; yams, 37,328; maize, 7,677; sorghum, 7,141; millet, 5,170; rice, 4,473; groundnuts, 3,799; beans, 3,368; taro, 2,957; plantains, 2,676; sweet potatoes, 2,168. Nigeria is the biggest producer of yams, accounting for more than two-thirds of the annual world output. It is also the leading cassava and taro producer and the second largest millet producer.

Livestock, 2011: cattle, 18.87m.; goats, 65-65m.; pigs, 6.04m.; sheep, 37.42m.; chickens, 102m. Products (in 1,000 tonnes), 2011 estimates: beef and veal, 384; goat meat, 292; pork and pork products, 243; mutton and lamb, 172; poultry meat, 300; milk, 563; eggs, 636.

Forestry

There were 9.04m. ha. of forests in 2010, or 10% of the land area, down from 17.23m. ha. in 1990 and 13.14m. ha. in 2000. Timber production in 2011 was 73.02m. cu. metres.

Fisheries

The total catch in 2010 was 616,981 tonnes, of which 323,599 tonnes came from marine waters and 293,382 tonnes from inland waters.

INDUSTRY

The largest company by market capitalization in Nigeria in April 2015 was Dangote Cement, a diversified conglomerate (US$15.6bn.).

In 2009 manufacturing accounted for 4.2% of GDP. Production, in 1,000 tonnes: cement (2008 estimate), 5,000; palm oil (2006), 1,287; residual fuel oil (2007), 1,002; distillate fuel oil (2007), 623; petrol (2007), 287; jet fuel (2007), 232; kerosene (2007), 98; paper and paperboard (2007 estimate), 19; cigarettes (2005), 1,813m. units; motorcycles (2005), 6,900 units. Also plywood (2007 estimate), 55,000 cu. metres.

Labour

The labour force in 2013 was 54,199,000 (41,222,000 in 2003). 56.2% of the population aged 15-64 was economically active in 2013. In the same year 7.5% of the population was unemployed.

Nigeria had 0.70m. people living in slavery according to the Walk Free Foundation's 2013 Global Slavery Index, the fourth highest total of any country.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

Imports (c.i.f.) in 2006 totalled US$22,903m.; exports (f.o.b.) US$59,215m. Principal imports in 2003 were: machinery and transport equipment, 38.0%; manufactured goods, 16.0%; food and livestock, 14.0%; petroleum and petroleum products, 12.3%. In 2003 crude oil amounted to 96.4% of exports by value. Other exports included ships and boats, and natural gas.

In 2006 the main import suppliers were: USA, 15.7%; China, 13.8%; UK, 11.8%; Germany, 5.6%. Leading export destinations in 2006 were: USA, 45.0%; India, 9.3%; Spain, 8.0%; France, 5.7%.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

The road network covered 193,200 km in 2004, including 15,688 km of main roads. In 2007 there were 4,560,000 passenger cars in use and 3,040,000 motorcycles and mopeds. There were 17,797 road accidents with 9,390 fatalities in 2007.

Rail

In 2005 there were 3,505 route-km of track (1,067 mm gauge). There are plans to convert the entire network to 1,435 mm gauge. In Feb. 2013 passenger services between Lagos and Kano, Nigeria's two most populous cities, were resumed after a ten-year gap. Passenger-km travelled in 2008 came to 773m. and freight tonne-km to 41m.

Civil Aviation

Lagos (Murtala Muhammed) is the major airport, and there are also international airports at Abuja, Kano and Port Harcourt. After the former national carrier, Air Nigeria, ceased operations in 2012, the country's largest airline is now Arik Air. In 2012 Murtala Muhammed International Airport handled 7,186,595 passengers and 167,702 tonnes of freight.

Shipping

In Jan. 2009 there were 107 ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 427,000 GT (up from 84 ships of 311,000 GT in Jan. 2008). The principal ports are Lagos and Port Harcourt. There is an extensive network of inland waterways.

Telecommunications

In 2010 there were 1,050,000 main (fixed) telephone lines. In the same year mobile phone subscribers numbered 87,298,000 (551.0 per 1,000 persons), up from 18,587,000 in 2005. Nigeria has now surpassed South Africa as the continent's largest mobile phone market. The largest mobile phone company is MTN Nigeria Communications. In 2012, 32.8% of the population were internet users. In June 2012 there were 5.1m. Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The highest court is the Federal Supreme Court, which consists of the Chief Justice of the Republic, and up to 15 Justices appointed by the government. It has original jurisdiction in any dispute between the Federal Republic and any State or between States; and to hear and determine appeals from the Federal Court of Appeal, which acts as an intermediate appellate Court to consider appeals from the High Court.

High Courts, presided over by a Chief Justice, are established in each state. All judges are appointed by the government. Magistrates' courts are established throughout the Republic, and customary law courts in southern Nigeria. In each of the northern States of Nigeria there are the Sharia Court of Appeal and the Court of Resolution. Muslim Law has been codified in a Penal Code and is applied through Alkali courts. The northern province of Zamfara introduced sharia, or Islamic law, in Oct. 1999, as have the other 11 predominantly Muslim northern provinces in the meantime. The death penalty is in force and was used in 2013, when four people were executed, for the first time since 2006. However, no executions took place in 2014 or 2015.

The population in penal institutions in May 2013 was 54,144 (32 per 100,000 of national population). 69.3% of prisoners had yet to receive a trial according to 2014 estimates by the International Centre for Prison Studies. Nigeria was ranked 73rd of 102 countries for criminal justice and 62nd for civil justice in the 2015 World Justice Project Rule of Law Index, which provides data on how the rule of law is experienced by the general public across eight categories.

Education

The adult literacy rate was an estimated 60.8% in 2009. Free, compulsory education for nine years is provided for all children from the age of six. However, in 2010 a total of 10.5m. children were out of school. In 2006 there were 22.86m. pupils and 565,646 teaching staff in primary schools; 6.44m. pupils and 202,082 teaching staff in secondary schools; and (2005) 1-39m. students in tertiary education with 37,031 academic staff.

Among the leading institutions of higher education are Ahmadu Bello University in Zaria—Nigeria's largest university—with around 35,000 students, and the University of Ibadan—the country's oldest university—founded in 1948.

Health

In 2009 there were 41 doctors for every 100,000 population and two dentists for every 100,000. There were 161 nurses and midwives per 100,000 people in 2008 and 13 pharmaceutical personnel per 100,000.

Nigeria has made significant progress in the reduction of undernourishment in the past 25 years. In the period 2001–03 only 9% of the population was undernourished, one of the lowest rates in sub-Saharan Africa.

An estimated 2-9m. people in Nigeria are living with HIV/AIDS, a total exceeded only in South Africa.

RELIGION

Muslims and Christians both constitute about 49% of the population; traditional animist beliefs are also widespread. Northern Nigeria is mainly Muslim; southern Nigeria is predominantly Christian and western Nigeria is evenly divided between Christians, Muslims and animists. Far more Nigerians consider their religion to be of prime importance rather than their nationality. In Feb. 2016 the Roman Catholic church had three cardinals.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

The Sukur Cultural Landscape, a hilly area in Adamawa State (northeastern Nigeria), was entered on the UNESCO World Heritage list in 1999. Osun Sacred Grove is one of the last remnants of primary high forest in southern Nigeria and was inscribed in 2005.

Press

In 2008 there were 28 paid-for daily newspapers with a combined circulation of 510,000 and 61 paid-for weeklies. The dailies with the highest circulation figures are The Sun and ThisDay.

Tourism

In 2010 there were 1,555,000 international tourist arrivals, excluding same-day visitors (up from 1,414,000 in 2009); spending by tourists in 2010 totalled US$576m.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

The first settlers arrived at the end of the Ice Age, as the glaciers retreated north. Archaeological remains in Finnmark in the north and in Rogaland in the southwest of Norway date from between 9500 to 8000 BC and suggest coastal, hunting-fishing communities. By 2500 BC a new influx of settlers brought cattle and crop farming and gradually replaced the earlier hunting-fishing communities. Although there is little evidence of the impact of the bronze and iron ages on Norway as its people had not yet found ways to exploit their natural resources for trade, links with Roman-occupied Gaul in the first four centuries AD were strong. By the time of the collapse of the Roman Empire, tribal groups had started to develop and by AD 800 had each established their own legislative and adjudicatory assemblies, known as things.

In the ninth century communities from the Vik, an area between the south coasts of Norway and Sweden, gave their name to the people collectively known as Vikings. The Norwegian Vikings sailed to the Atlantic islands, England, France, Scotland and Ireland, and also colonized Iceland. One of the many whose exploits were faithfully recorded by the saga writers was Eric the Red, who discovered Greenland. His son, Leif Erikson, voyaged across the Davis Strait, to America, becoming possibly the first European to do so.

The first steps towards centralized rule were taken by Harold Fairhair who extended his rule along the coastal region of Norway. Battles with rival chieftains culminated in about 900 when Harold was proclaimed king of the Norwegians. His successors were less assertive and by the mid-tenth century the country was effectively under the suzerainty of Harold Bluetooth, king of Denmark and Skåne. Bluetooth's grandson, Canute the Great, fought successfully to incorporate England into his North Sea Empire before setting his sights on Sweden. But the limitations of royal authority were shown on the death of Canute when the English, unchallenged, simply chose their own king while the Danish and Norwegian nobles decided that whichever of their own monarchs lived longest should take power in both countries, an agreement which for a time resulted in a Norwegian ruler for Denmark.

Viking Strength

The Viking's territorial expansion came to an end with the Norwegian King Harald Hardrada's defeat at the battle of Stamford Bridge in England in 1066. Supported by the English church, the Norwegian monarchy gained strength. By the 12th century the balance of power between the church and monarchy had become a source of civil conflict which was only resolved when Håkon IV became King in 1217. Thus began Norway's 'Golden Age' in which the unity of the kingdom was solidly established. Blood feuds were prohibited, a royal council was created, and primogeniture was introduced to secure the continuity of the monarchic line. Under Håkon's rule, both Greenland and Iceland ceded control to Norway. It was Håkon's son, Magnus VI, known as the Lawmender, who oversaw the codification of a national law system between 1274–76, elements of which have survived to this day. Under Erik II, Magnus' son, much of the royal power was divested to wealthy magnates. His succession by his brother Håkon V in 1299 marked a renewed effort to strengthen the monarchy and also a movement of political power to Oslo.

Union with Sweden came in 1319 with the coronation of Magnus VII, the son of Håkon's daughter and Duke Erik of Sweden. This was to last until 1355, when the Swedish crown passed to Magnus' son. Between 1349–50 Norway fell victim to the Black Death which killed around two-thirds of its population. The effects of this were to dramatically reduce the strength of the nobility and to undermine the cohesion of the government, as many official positions were taken up by Danes and Swedes. Newly vulnerable to the threat of encroachment by the Germans, the incentive for all three Scandinavian kingdoms to unite was strong. When the Danish king died in 1375 his widow, Margaret, claimed the throne on behalf of her five-year-old son, Olav. Acting for her son, Margaret became regent of Denmark and, on the death of Håkon, regent of Norway. Confirmed as regent of Denmark and Norway, Margaret defeated Albrecht, the German claimant to the Swedish throne, thus clearing the way to a Nordic union. With the death of her son in 1387 and unable to take the triple crown for herself, she nominated her five-year-old nephew, Erik of Pomerania, as king of all three countries. His election was formalized at Kalmar in 1397.

From 1450 the Norwegian government was based in Copenhagen and many administrative positions were taken by Germans and Danes. An attempt by the Norwegian council to gain independence in 1523 led to civil war between 1534–36 and the council's subsequent abolition. Norway was then to remain a province of Denmark, with limited control over internal affairs, until the 19th century.

In the Napoleonic Wars, Denmark and Norway were allied with Napoleon I. Napoleon's defeat at the battle of Leipzig in 1813 was followed by a successful attack on Denmark from Sweden which resulted in the Treaty of Kiel (Jan. 1814). With the signing of the treaty Norway was conceded to the Swedish throne and, despite Denmark's continued resistance, its newly written constitution came into force in Nov. 1814. Although the arrangement meant the regency and foreign policy were to be shared with Sweden, the new constitution gave Norway control over internal affairs, with a newly established political base at Christiania.

The economic damage of the Napoleonic Wars was remedied by the rapid expansion of the fishing industry and, from the 1850s onwards, agriculture. In the latter half of the century, the merchant navy grew to become the third largest in the world after the United States and Great Britain.

Independence

From the 1880s, successive steps towards self-government within the union culminated in a referendum in which the overwhelming majority of Norwegians voted for separation. In Oct. 1905 Oscar II renounced his title to the western provinces and a month later a Danish prince was confirmed as Håkon VII of free Norway. Reigning for 52 years, he was succeeded by his son.

At the outset of the First World War Norway declared its neutrality. This did not prevent the loss of almost half of its merchant navy and damage to the economy as a result of trade embargos. But despite the hardships of the 1930s' depression, industrial expansion continued.

From 1940 to 1944, during the Second World War, Norway was occupied by the Germans who set up a pro-German government under Vidkun Quisling. Apart from this wartime episode, the Labour Party held office, and the majority in the Storting (parliament), from 1935 to 1965. Norway's first post-war prime minister, Einar Gerhardsen, had spent four years in a concentration camp. He had been vice-chairman of Oslo city council until he became leader of the underground anti-Nazi movement in the early days of the occupation. As recently elected social democrat leader he was the natural choice to head the 1945 caretaker government.

The action needed to restore Norway's prosperity was self-evident: to make good the heavy losses in the merchant fleet; to increase the output of hydro-electricity; and to develop new industries. The chief worry for the social democrats was the likely impact of communists who had gained credit for leading the resistance. Talks on a possible merger of the parties were as unproductive as parallel negotiations in Denmark, but the electoral results of each party's going its own way were markedly different in the two countries. More confident of their purpose, the Norwegian social democrats took the electorate by storm, increasing their share of the popular vote in the 1945 election by close on 10%. Their advance gave them the one prize that eluded their colleagues everywhere else in Scandinavia—an absolute majority and the freedom to govern without always looking over their shoulder.

The government was supported wholeheartedly by the trade unions. In return for price controls and food subsidies which stabilized the cost of living for almost five years, and the guarantee of full employment, the unions accepted compulsory arbitration for all wage disputes. Returned in 1949 with an increased majority, the social democrats were able to point to a rise in productivity and living standards well beyond that achieved by most other Western countries. But the general increase in world prices triggered by the Korean War meant that Norway had to pay much more for essential imports. The use of subsidies to counteract price increases reached its limit when they became the largest item in the national budget. In 1950 food prices were allowed to get closer to their market level and the cost of living started on an upward curve, leading to a 30% increase over three years. Industrial investment suffered a sharp cutback.

The social democrats held on to power until the mid-sixties when a centre right coalition took over led by Per Borten. By 1969 the social democrats had recovered much of their lost ground. The centre right coalition government struggled on with a majority of two until the EEC issue broke through the normally placid surface of Norwegian politics.

Although Norway's application for membership in the EEC in 1969 was successful, a referendum held in 1972 found more than 53% of voters opposed to joining. Norway had been a member of EFTA since that organization's foundation, and continued to sign up to a series of bilateral free-trade treaties with members of the EEC, but opposition to joining the EEC remained strong. On the inception of the EU in 1992, Norway, like its Scandinavian neighbours, applied for membership. But, again, a referendum was won by the anti-European lobby.

Norway's continued reluctance to join the EU hinges on its dependence on the export of petroleum and natural gas. Since the 1960s and the discovery of vast off-shore deposits, the oil and gas export industry has contributed to making Norway one of the world's richest economies.

In 2010 relations with China came under pressure when the Norwegian Nobel committee awarded its Peace Prize to Liu Xiaobo, a jailed dissident. In July 2011 an anti-immigration extremist set off a bomb at the prime minister's office in Oslo before carrying out a gun attack at a summer camp on the island of Utøya in Tyrifjorden, organized by the youth wing of the Labour Party. A total of 77 people were killed in the two attacks.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Norway is bounded in the north by the Arctic Ocean, east by Russia, Finland and Sweden, south by the Skagerrak Straits and west by the Norwegian Sea. The total area of mainland Norway is 323,787 sq. km, including 19,539 sq. km of fresh water. Total coastline, including fjords, 25,148 km. There are more than 50,000 islands along the coastline. Exposed mountain (either bare rock or thin vegetation) makes up over 70% of the country. 25% of the land area is woodland and 4% tilled land.

Population (2001 census) was 4,520,947 (2,240,281 males; 2,280,666 females); population density per sq. km, 14.8. Estimated population, 1 Jan. 2014, 5,109,056; population density, 16.8. With the exception of Iceland, Norway is the most sparsely populated country in Europe.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 5.21m.

There are 19 counties (fylke). Land area, population and densities:

	Land area (sq. km)	Population (2001 census)	Population (2014 estimate)	Density per sq. km 2014

2010	61,442	190	33,655	41,499	23,577	10,264

Rates per 1,000 population, 2010, birth, 12.6; death, 8.5; marriage, 4.8; divorce, 2.1. Average annual population growth rate, 2000–10, 0.86% (2010, 1.28%). In 2009 there were 573 suicides, giving a rate of 11.9 per 100,000 population (men, 17.3 per 100,000; women, 6.5).

Expectation of life at birth, 2010, was 78.9 years for males and 83.2 years for females. Infant mortality, 2010, 2.8 per 1,000 live births; fertility rate, 2010, 1.95 births per woman. 55% of births are to unmarried mothers. In 2009 the average age at marriage was 37.3 years for males and 33.8 years for females (33.8 years and 31.0 years respectively for first marriages). Norway legalized same-sex marriage in Jan. 2009.

At 1 Jan. 2011 the immigrant population totalled 600,922, including 60,610 from Poland, 34,108 from Sweden, 31,884 from Pakistan and 27,827 from Iraq. In 2010 Norway received 10,064 asylum applications. Most were from Eritrea (1,711), Somalia (1,397), Afghanistan (979) and Russia (628).

A UNICEF report published in 2010 showed that 6.1% of children in Norway live in relative poverty (living in a household in which disposable income—when adjusted for family size and composition—is less than 50% of the national median income), the joint third lowest of any country.

In the Human Development Index, or HDI (measuring progress in countries in longevity, knowledge and standard of living), Norway was ranked first in the 2014 rankings published in the annual Human Development Report. Norway was ranked second in a global gender gap index of 145 countries compiled by the World Economic Forum for its Global Gender Gap Report 2015. The annual index considers economic, political, education and health criteria.

CLIMATE

There is considerable variation in the climate because of the extent of latitude, the topography and the varying effectiveness of prevailing westerly winds and the Gulf Stream. Winters along the whole west coast are exceptionally mild but precipitation is considerable. Oslo, Jan. 24.3°F (−4.3°C), July 61.5°F (16.4°C).

Annual rainfall 30.0" (763 mm). Bergen, Jan. 34.3°F (1.3°C), July 57.7°F (14.3°C). Annual rainfall 88.6" (2,250 mm). Trondheim, Jan. 26°F (−3.5°C), July 57°F (14°C). Annual rainfall 32.1" (870 mm). Bergen has one of the highest rainfall figures of any European city. The sun never fully sets in the northern area of the country in the summer and even in the south the sun rises at around 3 a.m. and sets at around 11 p.m.

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

Norway is a constitutional and hereditary monarchy.

The reigning King is Harald V, born 21 Feb. 1937, married on 29 Aug. 1968 to Sonja Haraldsen. He succeeded on the death of his father, King Olav V, on 21 Jan. 1991. Offspring: Princess Märtha Louise, born 22 Sept. 1971 (married Ari Behn, b. 30 Sept. 1972, on 24 May 2002; offspring, Maud Angelica, b. 29 April 2003; Leah Isadora, b. 8 April 2005; Emma Tallulah, b. 29 Sept. 2008); Crown Prince Haakon Magnus, born 20 July 1973 (married Mette-Marit Tjessem Høiby, b. 19 Aug. 1973, on 25 Aug. 2001; offspring, Ingrid Alexandra, b. 21 Jan. 2004; Sverre Magnus, b. 3 Dec. 2005; offspring of Crown Princess Mette-Marit from previous relationship, Marius, b. 13 Jan. 1997). The king and queen together receive an annual personal allowance of 10.8m. kroner from the civil list, and the Crown Prince and Crown Princess together 9.0m. kroner. Princess Märtha Louise relinquished her allowance in 2002. Women have been eligible to succeed to the throne since 1990. There is no coronation ceremony. The royal succession is in direct male line in the order of primogeniture. In default of male heirs the King may propose a successor to the Storting, but this assembly has the right to nominate another, if it does not agree with the proposal.

The Constitution, voted by a constituent assembly on 17 May 1814 and modified at various times, vests the legislative power of the realm in the Storting (Parliament). The royal veto may be exercised; but if the same Bill passes two Stortings formed by separate and subsequent elections it becomes the law of the land without the assent of the sovereign. The King has the command of the land, sea and air forces, and makes all appointments.

The 169-member Storting (increased from 165 for the 2005 election) is directly elected by proportional representation. The country is divided into 19 districts, each electing from 4 to 15 representatives.

The Storting, when assembled, divides itself by election into the Lagting and the Odelsting. The former is composed of one-fourth of the members of the Storting, and the other of the remaining three-fourths. Each Ting (the Storting, the Odelsting and the Lagting) nominates its own president. Most questions are decided by the Storting, but questions relating to legislation must be considered and decided by the Odelsting and the Lagting separately. In the event of the Odelsting and the Lagting disagreeing the Bill is considered by the Storting in plenary sitting, with a majority of two-thirds of the votes required for a new law to be passed. The same majority is required for alterations of the Constitution, which can only be decided by the Storting in plenary sitting. The Storting elects five delegates, whose duty it is to revise the public accounts. The Lagting and the ordinary members of the Supreme Court of Justice (the Høyesterett) form a High Court of the Realm (the Riksrett) for the trial of ministers, members of the Høyesterett and members of the Storting. The impeachment before the Riksrett can only be decided by the Odelsting.

The executive is represented by the King, who exercises his authority through the Cabinet. Cabinet ministers are entitled to be present in the Storting and to take part in the discussions, but without a vote.

CURRENT LEADERS

Erna Solberg

Position

Prime Minister

Introduction

Erna Solberg was appointed prime minister on 16 Oct. 2013. The leader of the Conservative Party since 2004, she formed a minority coalition with the anti-immigration Progress Party. She is the second woman, after Gro Harlem Brundtland, to have been elected to the office.

Early Life

Solberg was born in Bergen on 24 Feb. 1961. Politically active from a young age, she was appointed chair of the Bergen Conservative Youth organization in 1980 and headed the Bergen Conservative student association while at the city's university. Having graduated in 1986 with a doctorate in sociology, politics, statistics and social economics, she was elected to parliament in 1989.

Between 2001 and 2005, as part of the coalition government fronted by Christian Democrat Kjell Magne Bondevik, Solberg served as minister of local government and regional development. Her uncompromising stance on issues including immigration earned her the moniker 'Iron Erna'. In 2002 she became deputy leader of the Conservative Party and two years later succeeded Jan Petersen at its head. At the parliamentary elections of 2005 her party suffered its worst result since the Second World War, losing 15 of its 38 seats. Although it fared better in 2009, it remained the third largest party after Labour and the Progress Party.

Her election campaign in 2013 sought to downplay her stern reputation, focusing instead on promoting job security, healthcare and education. At the election on 9 Sept. the Conservative Party won 48 seats, only seven fewer than Labour and sufficient to form a minority coalition with the Progress Party. It was the first parliamentary election since anti-immigration extremist Anders Breivik, who had once been a Progress Party activist, killed 77 people in a gun attack in 2011, many of them young people attending a summer camp organized by the youth wing of the Labour Party on the island of Utøya.

Career in Office

Solberg leads a fragile coalition. Having balked at joining a coalition including the Progress Party, the centrist Liberal and Christian Democratic parties entered into a separate agreement to provide parliamentary support in return for influence on policy-making. These tensions were evident in Solberg's first budget, which sought to reconcile market liberalization measures with increased provision for infrastructure and foreign aid.

She pledged to reduce Norway's dependence on its North Sea oil revenue—which declined substantially in 2014–15 as a result of falling international oil prices, undermining consumer confidence and offshore investment—by promoting a more balanced economy. She also promised to privatize, in whole or in part, many companies in which the government holds a large stake.

DEFENCE

Conscription is for 19 months with a 12-month service obligation. In June 2013 Norway became the first European country to introduce mandatory military service for women, with effect from Jan. 2015. Total active armed forces personnel numbered 24,450 in 2011, including 7,500 in Central Support, Administration and Command.

In 2013 defence spending totalled US$7,523m. (US$1,593 per capita), representing 1.4% of GDP. Expenditure per capita was the highest of any European country in 2013.

Army

Strength (2011) 8,900 (including 4,400 conscripts). The Army had 52 main battle tanks in 2011 plus 390 armoured personnel carriers and 104 armoured infantry fighting vehicles.

Navy

The Royal Norwegian Navy is organized into the Fleet, Coast Guard and Naval Schools. Main naval combatants include six German-built Ula class submarines and five destroyers. The Coast Guard had 14 patrol and coastal combatants in 2011.

The personnel of the Navy totalled 3,900 in 2011, of whom 1,450 were conscripts. The main naval base is at Bergen (Håkonsvern), with a logistics base at Ramsund.

Air Force

The Royal Norwegian Air Force was established in 1944. There are seven airbases, ten air wings, two control and reporting centres, nine flying squadrons and two anti-aircraft units. Total strength (2011) is 3,650 personnel, including 850 conscripts. There were 63 combat-capable aircraft in 2011 including F-16A/Bs.

Home Guard

The Home Guard is organized in small units equipped and trained for special tasks. Service after basic training is one week a year. The Home Guard consists of the Land Home Guard (strength, 2011, 42,650 with reserves), Naval Home Guard (1,900) and Anti-Air Home Guard (1,450).

INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

In a referendum on 27–28 Nov. 1994, 52.2% of votes cast were against joining the EU. The electorate was 3,266,182; turnout was 88.9%.

ECONOMY

Services accounted for 57% of GDP in 2012, industry 42% and agriculture 1%.

Transparency International, the anti-corruption organization, ranked Norway equal fifth in the world in a survey of the countries with the least corruption in business and government in 2015. It received 87 out of 100 in the annual index.

Norway gave US$5.09bn. in international aid in 2014, which at 1.00% of GNI made it the third most generous developed country as a percentage of its gross national income, after Sweden and Luxembourg and one of only five industrialized countries to meet the UN target of 0.7%.

Overview

Norway has one of the world's highest levels of GDP per capita and one of the lowest levels of income inequality. In 2014 it was the seventh largest oil producer and third largest gas producer in the world, with hydrocarbons accounting for 22% of GDP. The country is also well endowed with other natural resources, including hydro-power, fish, forests and minerals. Unemployment stood at 3.7% in Nov. 2014.

Since emerging as a major oil and gas exporter in the mid-1970s, Norway has enjoyed solid growth, allowing the government to run large fiscal surpluses. Fiscal guidelines effective since the 2002 budget hold the central government non-oil deficit to 4% of the assets of the Government Pension Fund—Global (a sovereign wealth fund). Revenue from oil production is transferred to this fund. In 2011 Statoil (an international energy company in which the Norwegian government is the largest shareholder) made two large discoveries at the Skrugard oil field and the Aldous/Avaldsnes oil field, the latter representing one of the ten largest oil finds ever on the Norwegian continental shelf.

The economy combines free market capitalism with an advanced welfare state. GDP growth slowed in 2008 as a result of lower oil prices and the global financial crisis, heralding a recession in 2009. Recovery then began in 2010 with growth of 0.6%, followed by 1.0% in 2011 and 2.7% in 2012. However, lower oil production and weak private consumption restricted growth in 2013 to only 0.7%.

Household debt is among the highest in the OECD countries at over 200% of disposable income. The housing market was at risk of overheating before prices stabilized in mid-2013, although they remain at high levels. With gas and oil investment expected to decline after 2015, alternative sources of growth are needed to boost competitiveness and productivity. A significant policy issue is how to finance pensions for an ageing population and new pension regulations are being implemented gradually from 2010 under the Flexible Retirement Act.

Currency

The unit of currency is the Norwegian krone (NOK) of 100 øre. After Oct. 1990 the krone was fixed to the ecu in the EMS of the EU in the narrow band of 2.25%, but it was freed in Dec. 1992. Inflation rates (based on OECD statistics):

2005	2006	2007	2008	2009	2010	2011	2012	2013	2014
1.5%	2.3%	0.7%	3.8%	2.2%	2.4%	1.3%	0.7%	2.1%	2.0%

Foreign exchange reserves were US$42,214m. in Aug. 2009. Gold reserves are negligible. On 30 Sept. 2011 the nominal value of notes and coins in circulation was 49,609m. kroner.

Budget

Central government current revenue and expenditure (in 1m. kroner) for years ending 31 Dec.:

	2006	2007	2008	2009	2010
Revenue	1,100,076	1,146,478	1,310,399	1,150,070	1,217,295
Expenditure	699,677	734,785	798,146	873,414	906,804

The standard rate of VAT is 25.0% (reduced rates of 15% and 8%).

Norway had a budget surplus in 2014 of 9.1% of GDP.

Performance

Real GDP growth rates (based on OECD statistics):

2005	2006	2007	2008	2009	2010	2011	2012	2013	2014
2.6%	2.4%	2.9%	0.4%	-1.6%	0.6%	1.0%	2.7%	0.7%	2.2%

Major oil discoveries on the Norwegian continental shelf coincided with the 1974 and 1979 oil shocks, resulting in a pronounced upswing in the mainland economy which lasted until the 1986 oil price collapse. Norway only began to recover from the subsequent slump in the economy in 1993. The strong performance of the Norwegian economy in 1993–98 lifted mainland GDP by 20%, but there was a significant slowdown in 1998 when the oil price collapsed at a time when the labour market was overheated. Norway's total GDP in 2014 was US$499.8bn.

Banking and Finance

Norges Bank is the central bank and bank of issue. Supreme authority is vested in the Executive Board consisting of seven members appointed by the King and the Supervisory Council consisting of 15 members elected by the Storting. The Governor is Øystein Olsen. Total assets and liabilities at 30 Sept. 2011 were 3,375,882m. kroner.

Norway's largest commercial bank is DNB bank (with assets at 31 Dec. 2010 of 1,862bn. kroner); the second largest bank is Nordea Bank Norge. There were 16 commercial banks in 2007 (with total assets of 1,799bn. kroner) and 121 savings banks (with total assets of 1,993bn. kroner).

In June 2012 gross external debt amounted to US$618,646m.

There is a stock exchange in Oslo.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Norway's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2011 were the equivalent of 8.9 tonnes per capita. An Environmental Performance Index compiled in 2010 ranked Norway fifth in the world behind Iceland, Switzerland, Costa Rica and Sweden, with 81.1%. The index examined various factors in six areas—air pollution, biodiversity and habitat, climate change, environmental health, productive natural resources and water resources.

In 2010 there were 33 national parks (total area, 2,996,032 ha.), 2,010 nature reserves (495,771 ha.), 195 landscape protected areas (1,628,844 ha.) and 474 other areas with protected flora and fauna (42,749 ha.).

Electricity

The potential total hydro-electric power was estimated at 205,937m. kWh in 2010. Installed electrical capacity in 2011 was 31.7m. kW, 94% of it hydro-electric. Production, 2011, was 128,067m. kWh (95% hydro-electric). Consumption per capita in 2011, at 25,299 kWh, was one of the highest in the world. In 1991 Norway became the first country in Europe to deregulate its energy market. Norway is a net exporter of electricity.

Oil and Gas

There are enormous oil reserves in the Norwegian continental shelf. In 1966 the first exploration well was drilled. Production of crude oil, 2012, 87.5m. tonnes (down from a peak of 162.5bn. tonnes in 2001). Norway ranks among the world's biggest oil exporters, with net oil exports of around 1.9m. bbls a day in 2010. It had proven reserves of 7.5bn. bbls in 2012. In March 1998 Norway announced that it would reduce its output for the year by 100,000 bbls per day as part of a plan to cut global crude production. In June 2001 the Norwegian government sold a 17.5% stake in Statoil, the last major state-owned oil company in western Europe. In Oct. 2007 Statoil and the oil and gas division of Norsk Hydro (a Norwegian energy and metals company) merged to form StatoilHydro, as a result creating the world's largest offshore oil and natural gas producer.

Output of natural gas, 2014, 108.8bn. cu. metres with proven reserves of 2.1trn. cu. metres in 2012.

Minerals

Production in 2008 unless otherwise indicated (in tonnes): coal (2009), 2,640,000; aluminium, 1,368,000; ilmenite concentrate, 915,000; iron ore, 477,000; zinc, 145,469; nickel, 88,741; refined copper (2007), 34,212.

Agriculture

Norway is barren and mountainous. The arable area is in strips in valleys and around fjords and lakes.

In 2010 the agricultural area was 1,003,010 ha., of which 651,176 ha. were meadow and pasture, 145,818 ha. were sown to barley, 75,810 ha. to oats, 71,945 ha. to wheat and 13,207 ha. to potatoes. Production in 2010 (in 1,000 tonnes): hay, 2,659; barley, 541; wheat, 331; potatoes, 321; oats, 299.

Livestock, 2010 (provisional): 875,169 cattle (308,399 dairy cows), 919,046 sheep (one year and over), 97,318 pigs for breeding, 36,935 dairy goats, 3,891,109 hens, 150,000 silver fox, 105,000 blue and silver blue fox, 650,000 mink and 251,400 tame reindeer.

Forestry

In 2010 the total area under forests was 10.07m. ha., or 33% of the total land area. Productive forest area, 2010, approximately 6.77m. ha. About 80% of the productive area consists of conifers and 20% of broadleaves. In 2011, 10.29m. cu. metres of roundwood were cut.

Fisheries

The total number of fishermen in 2011 was 12,768, of whom 2,548 had another chief occupation. In 2011 the number of registered fishing vessels (all with motor) was 6,250.

The catch in 2011 totalled 2,298,903 tonnes, almost entirely from sea fishing. The catch of herring in 2011 totalled 633,103 tonnes, capelin 362,368 tonnes and cod 340,167 tonnes. 10,334 harp seals were caught in 2011. The catch of hooded seals was prohibited in 2007. Commercial whaling was prohibited in 1988, but recommenced in 1993: 533 whales were caught in 2011. Norway is the second largest exporter of fishery commodities, after China. In 2011 exports were valued at US$9.46bn.

INDUSTRY

The leading companies by market capitalization in Norway in March 2015 were: Statoil, (US$56.5bn.); Telenor Group, a telecommunications company (US$30.3bn.); and DNB, a financial services group (US$26.2bn.).

Industry is chiefly based on raw materials. Paper and paper products, industrial chemicals and basic metals are important export manufactures. In the following table figures are given for industrial establishments in 2009. The values are given in 1m. kroner.

Industries	Establishments	Number of employees	Gross value of production	Value added (in market prices)

Labour

Norway has a tradition of centralized wage bargaining. Since the early 1960s the contract period has been for two years with intermediate bargaining after 12 months, to take into consideration such changes as the rate of inflation.

The labour force averaged 2,602,000 in 2010 (1,224,000 females). The total number of employed persons in 2010 averaged 2,508,000 (1,187,000 females), of whom 1,835,000 were in full-time employment, 667,000 in part-time employment and 6,000 working unspecified hours. Of those in employment in 2013, 77.2% worked in services, 20.4% in industry and 2.1% in agriculture. 43.0% of the labour force that year had a secondary education as the highest level and 38.8% had a tertiary education. In 2013, 34.6% of those in employment worked in the public sector.

The unemployment rate in Oct. 2015 was 4.6%, up from 3.5% in 2014 as a whole.

There were 12 work stoppages in 2010 (two in 2009): 500,009 working days were lost (180 in 2009).

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

Total imports and exports in calendar years (in 1m. kroner):

	2006	2007	2008	2009	2010
Imports	411,755	468,918	504,481	430,363	466,810
Exports	782,943	795,366	953,154	717,965	792,575

Norway's trade surplus was 325,765m. kroner in 2010. Major import suppliers in 2010 (value in 1m. kroner): Sweden, 65,603-1; Germany, 57,461-5; China, 39,614-9; Denmark, 29,018-6; UK, 27,460-5; USA, 25,324-6. Imports from economic areas: EU, 295,667-6; Nordic countries, 108,068-6; OECD, 360,693-1.

Major export markets in 2010 (value in 1m. kroner): UK, 213,981-8; Netherlands, 94,720-9; Germany, 89,725-8; Sweden, 55,315-6; France, 50,532-8; USA, 39,368-0. Exports to economic areas: EU, 639,798-7; Nordic countries, 93,203-0; OECD, 721,729-5.

Principal imports in 2010 (in 1m. kroner): motor vehicles, 43,800-5 (including passenger cars and station wagons, 26,205-3); transport equipment excluding motor vehicles, 32,708-0; petroleum, petroleum products and related materials, 23,151-6; electrical machinery, apparatus and appliances, 22,784-0; metalliferous ores and metal scrap, 22,288-8; general industrial machinery and equipment, 21,925-9.

Principal exports in 2010 (in 1m. kroner): petroleum, petroleum products and related materials, 315,259-3 (including crude petroleum, 283,337-2); natural and manufactured gas, 188,010-4 (including natural gas, 163,970-3); fish, crustaceans and molluscs, and preparations thereof, 52,307-6; non-ferrous metals, 44,083-6 (including aluminium, 26,493-6); general industrial machinery and equipment, 18,423-9; chemical materials and products, 17,992-3.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

In Jan. 2011 the length of public roads (including roads in towns) totalled 93,509 km. Total road length in Jan. 2011 included: national roads, 10,496 km; provincial roads, 44,281 km; local roads, 38,732 km. Number of registered motor vehicles, 2010, included: 2,308,548 passenger cars (including station wagons and ambulances), 397,279 vans, 254,674 tractors and special purpose vehicles, 168,904 mopeds, 146,592 motorcycles, 81,330 goods vehicles (including lorries), 48,432 combined vehicles and 20,348 buses. In 2010, 9,130 injuries were sustained in road accidents, with 208 fatalities. Norway has one of the lowest death rates in road accidents of any industrialized country, at 4.3 deaths per 100,000 people in 2010.

Rail

The length of state railways in 2010 was 4,169 km (2,566 km electrified). In 2009 passenger-km travelled came to 2,669m. and freight tonne-km to 2,804m. Sales and other operating income totalled 11,179m. kroner in 2010.

There is a metro (104 km) and a tram network (146 km) in Oslo.

Civil Aviation

The main international airports are at Oslo (Gardermoen), Bergen (Flesland), Stavanger (Sola), Sandefjord (Torp) and Moss (Rygge). Norway's largest airline is SAS Norge, a subsidiary of Scandinavian Airlines (SAS). It was established in 2004 as SAS Braathens through the merger of the Norwegian part of SAS and Braathens, and was renamed SAS Norge in 2007. SAS Norge carries around 10m. passengers a year to 55 destinations. The second largest airline is the low-cost carrier Norwegian, which operates long-haul flights as well as services within Europe.

In 2010 Oslo (Gardermoen) handled 19,140,384 passengers (10,123,605 on international flights). Bergen is the second busiest airport for passenger traffic, with 5,189,714 passengers in 2010 (3,604,882 on domestic flights).

Shipping

The Norwegian International Ship Register was set up in 1987. In 2010, 525 ships were registered (400 Norwegian) totalling 13,792,000 GT. 218 tankers accounted for 6,948,000 GT. There were also 882 vessels totalling 1,917,000 GT on the Norwegian Ordinary Register. These figures do not include fishing boats, tugs, salvage vessels, icebreakers and similar special types of vessels. In Jan. 2011 Norway's merchant fleet represented 3-4% of total world tonnage. In 2009, 41m. passengers travelled on internal ferries. The warm Gulf Stream ensures ice-free harbours throughout the year.

Telecommunications

At 31 Dec. 2010 there were 1,648,927 main (fixed) telephone lines and 5,648,673 mobile phone subscribers (1,148-0 per 1,000 persons). In 2013, 66-5% of the population aged 16-74 were internet users. In March 2012 there were 2.6m. Facebook users. Since 2000 the government has been reducing its interest in Telenor, the country's largest telecommunications operator, and in March 2004 lowered its stake to 54-0%.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The judicature is common to civil and criminal cases; the same professional judges preside over both. These judges are state officials. The participation of lay judges and jurors, both summoned for the individual case, varies according to the kind of court and kind of case.

The 96 city or district courts of first instance are in criminal cases composed of one professional judge and two lay judges, chosen by ballot from a panel elected by the local authority. In civil cases two lay judges may participate. These courts are competent in all cases except criminal cases where the maximum penalty exceeds six years imprisonment. In every community there is a Conciliation Board composed of three lay persons elected by the district council. A civil lawsuit usually begins with mediation by the Board which can pronounce judgement in certain cases.

The five high courts, or courts of second instance, are composed of three professional judges. Additionally, in civil cases two or four lay judges may be summoned. In serious criminal cases, which are brought before high courts in the first instance, a jury of ten lay persons is summoned to determine whether the defendant is guilty according to the charge. In less serious criminal cases the court is composed of two professional and three lay judges. In civil cases, the court of second instance is an ordinary court of appeal. In criminal cases in which the lower court does not have judicial authority, it is itself the court of first instance. In other criminal cases it is an appeal court as far as the appeal is based on an attack against the lower court's assessment of the facts when determining the guilt of the defendant. An appeal based on any other alleged mistakes is brought directly before the Supreme Court.

The Supreme Court (Høyesterett) is the court of last resort. There are 18 Supreme Court judges. Each individual case is heard by five judges. Some major cases are determined in plenary session. The Supreme Court may in general examine every aspect of the case and the handling of it by the lower courts. However, in criminal cases the Court may not overrule the lower court's assessment of the facts as far as the guilt of the defendant is concerned.

The Court of Impeachment (Riksretten) is composed of five judges of the Supreme Court and ten members of Parliament.

All serious offences are prosecuted by the State. The Public Prosecution Authority consists of the Attorney General, 18 district attorneys and legally qualified officers of the ordinary police force. Counsel for the defence is in general provided for by the State.

The population in penal institutions in Sept. 2013 was 3,649 (72 per 100,000 of national population). Norway was ranked second of 102 countries for civil justice and fourth for criminal justice in the 2015 World Justice Project Rule of Law Index, which provides data on how the rule of law is experienced by the general public across eight categories. It ranked second in the overall 2015 Index.

Education

Free compulsory schooling in primary and lower secondary schools was extended to ten years from nine, and the starting age lowered to six from seven, in July 1997. All young people between the ages of 16 and 19 have the statutory right to three years of upper secondary education. In 2010 there were 6,579 kindergartens (children up to six years old) with 277,139 children and 87,401 staff. There were 614,020 pupils at primary and lower secondary schools in 2010; 228,170 pupils at upper secondary schools; and 20,658 students at folk high schools and vocational schools.

There are eight universities: Oslo (founded 1811), with 27,341 students in 2007; Bergen (1948), with 14,057 students; Tromsø (1972), with 5,424 students; the Norwegian University of Science and Technology (1996, formerly the University of Trondheim and the Norwegian Institute of Technology), with 19,351 students; Stavanger (2005, formerly Stavanger University College), with 8,050 students; Norwegian University of Life Sciences (1859, university since 2005—formerly the Agricultural University of Norway), with 2,817 students; Agder (2007, formerly Agder University College), with 7,801 students; and Nordland (2011, formerly Bodø University College), with 5,700 students in 2011. There are also nine specialized university institutions, 21 state university colleges and a number of private colleges. In 2010 the universities had 93,768 students and the state university colleges 89,572 students. The University of Tromsø is responsible for Sami language and studies.

In 2009 public expenditure on education came to 7.2% of GDP and 15.8% of total government spending. The adult literacy rate is at least 99%.

Health

The health care system, which is predominantly publicly financed (mainly by a national insurance tax), is run on both county and municipal levels. Persons who fall ill are guaranteed medical treatment, and health services are distributed according to need. In Aug. 2008 there were 20,035 active physicians in Norway. On 31 Dec. 2009 there were 15,205 hospital beds (excluding those in psychiatric institutions). In 2012 Norway spent 9.3% of its GDP on health. In 2010, 19% of men and 19% of women aged 16–74 smoked on a daily basis.

Welfare

Expenditure on social assistance in 2009 totalled 4,642m. kroner. On 31 Dec. 2010 there were 663,799 old age pensioners (377,170 women) and 301,088 disability pensioners (170,959 women). Maternity leave is either for 44 weeks on 100% of previous salary or 54 weeks on 80% of previous salary; unused portions may pass to the father. In Dec. 2010, 33,433 children aged one to three received cash benefit (27% of all children between one and three years of age).

RELIGION

There is freedom of religion, the Church of Norway (Evangelical Lutheran), however, being the national church. Its clergy are nominated by the King. Ecclesiastically Norway is divided into 11 dioceses, 100 deaneries and 1,298 parishes. About 80% of Norwegians belong to the Church of Norway (which had 3,848,841 members in 2009) and approximately 68% of infants were baptised in the Church in 2009. There were 431,287 members of registered and unregistered religious and philosophical communities outside the Church of Norway in 2009, subsidized by central government and local authorities, including 234,772 Christians and 92,744 Muslims. The Roman Catholics are under a Bishop at Oslo, and Prelates at Tromsø and Trondheim.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

Norway's UNESCO heritage sites (with year listed) are: the 12–13th century wooden church in Sogn og Fjordane on the west coast, the Urnes Stave Church (1979), a testimony to the city's key role in the Hanseatic League trading route between the 14–16th centuries; the 58 wooden buildings in Bergen's wharf of Bryggen (1979); the wooden houses of the copper mining village of Røros (1980), active between the 17–20th centuries; the pre-historic Rock Drawings of Alta (1995) in the Alta Fjord, near the Arctic Circle, dating from 4200 to 500 BC; Vegøyan—the Vega Archipelago (2004), a cluster of dozens of islands centred on Vega, just south of the Arctic Circle; the West Norwegian Fjords—Geirangerfjord and Naerøyfjord (2005); and Rjukan-Notodden Industrial Heritage Site (2015), comprising hydro-electric power plants, transmission lines, factories, transport systems and towns.

The Struve Geodetic Arc was inscribed in 2005. It is a chain of survey triangulations spanning from Norway to the Black Sea that helped establish the exact shape and size of the earth and is shared with nine other countries.

Press

There were 72 paid-for daily newspapers with a combined average daily circulation of 1.54m. in 2014, and 158 non-dailies with a circulation of 605,000. In 2012 there were 228 newspaper online editions, with 3.28m. unique monthly visitors. In the 2013 World Press Freedom Index compiled by Reporters Without Borders, Norway was ranked third out of 179 countries.

Tourism

In 2007 there were 3,260,000 foreign holiday and leisure visitors (excluding same-day visitors) who stayed an average of 7.4 nights each, totalling 24,252,000 nights. The main countries of origin were Sweden (761,000), Germany (548,000), Denmark (431,000) and the UK (246,000). In 2010 there were 1,128 hotels and 782 camping sites. Spending by foreign tourists totalled 30.8bn. kroner in 2007.

Festivals

The Bergen International Festival, Norway's oldest festival, is held annually in May/June and includes music, dance and theatre. The biennial Ibsen Festival (theatre) is held in Oslo in Aug./Sept. in even-numbered years. CODA (the Oslo International Dance Festival) runs for three weeks every Sept./Oct.

Svalbard

An archipelago situated between 10° and 35° E. long. and between 74° and 81° N. lat. Total area, 61,022 sq. km (23,561 sq. miles). The main islands are Spitsbergen, Nordaustlandet, Edgeøya, Barentsøya, Prins Karls Forland, Bjørnøya, Hopen, Kong Karls Land and Kvitøya. The Arctic climate is tempered by mild winds from the Atlantic.

The archipelago was probably discovered by Norsemen in 1194 and rediscovered by the Dutch navigator Barents in 1596. In the 17th century whale-hunting gave rise to rival Dutch, British and Danish-Norwegian claims to sovereignty; but when in the 18th century the whale-hunting ended, the question of the sovereignty of Svalbard lost its significance. It was again raised in the 20th century, owing to the discovery and exploitation of coalfields. By a treaty, signed on 9 Feb. 1920 in Paris, Norway's sovereignty over the archipelago was recognized. On 14 Aug. 1925 the archipelago was officially incorporated in Norway.

Total population on 1 Jan. 2011 was 2,394, of whom 2,017 lived in the two Norwegian settlements, 370 in the Russian settlement and seven in the Polish settlement. Coal is the principal product. There are two Norwegian and two Russian mining camps. In 2009, 2.6m. tonnes of coal were produced from Norwegian mines.

In 2013, 70% of households on Svalbard had one or more snow scooters but only 50% of households had a car. There are research and radio stations, and an airport near Longyearbyen (Svalbard Lufthavn) opened in 1975.

Jan Mayen

This bleak, desolate and mountainous island of volcanic origin and partly covered by glaciers is situated at 71° N. lat. and 8° 30' W. long., 300 miles north-northeast of Iceland. The total area is 377 sq. km (146 sq. miles). Beerenberg, its highest peak, reaches a height of 2,277 metres. Volcanic activity, which had been dormant, reactivated in Sept. 1970.

There exist several unverified and inconclusive reports of the island's discovery. Its present name derives from the Dutch whaling captain Jan Jacobsz May, who mapped the island in 1614. Jan Mayen was subsequently established as a whaling base for the Dutch Noordsche Compagnie. The island was abandoned in 1638 owing to the near extinction of the local whale population, and remained uninhabited, though occasionally visited by seal hunters and trappers, until 1921 when Norway established a radio and meteorological station. On 8 May 1929 Jan Mayen was officially proclaimed as incorporated into the Kingdom of Norway. Its relation to Norway was finally settled by law of 27 Feb. 1930. A LORAN station (1959) and a CONSOL station (1968) have been established.

Bouvet Island

Bouvetøya

This uninhabited volcanic island, mostly covered by glaciers and situated at 54° 25' S. lat. and 3° 21' E. long., was discovered in 1739 by a French naval officer, Jean Baptiste Loziert Bouvet, but no flag was hoisted until, in 1825, Capt. Norris raised the Union Jack. In 1928 Great Britain waived its claim to the island in favour of Norway, which in Dec. 1927 had occupied it. A law of 27 Feb. 1930 declared Bouvetøya a Norwegian dependency. The area is 49 sq. km (19 sq. miles). Since 1977 Norway has had an automatic meteorological station on the island.

Peter I Island

Peter I Øy

This uninhabited island, situated at 68° 48' S. lat. and 90° 35' W. long., was sighted in 1821 by the Russian explorer, Admiral von Bellingshausen. The first landing was made in 1929 by a Norwegian expedition which hoisted the Norwegian flag. On 1 May 1931 Peter I Island was placed under Norwegian sovereignty, and on 24 March 1933 it was incorporated as a dependency. The area is 156 sq. km (60 sq. miles).

Queen Maud Land

Dronning Maud Land

On 14 Jan. 1939 the Norwegian Cabinet placed that part of the Antarctic Continent from the border of Falkland Islands dependencies in the west to the border of the Australian Antarctic Dependency in the east (between 20° W. and 45° E.) under Norwegian sovereignty. The territory had been explored only by Norwegians and hitherto been ownerless. In 1957 it was given the status of a dependency.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

The ancestors of present day Oman are believed to have arrived in two waves of migration, the first from Yemen and the second from northern Arabia. In the 9th century maritime trade flourished and Sohar became the greatest sea port in the Islamic world. In the early 16th century the Portuguese occupied Muscat. The Ya'aruba dynasty introduced a period of renaissance in Omani fortunes both at home and abroad, uniting the country and bringing prosperity; but, on the death in 1718 of Sultan bin Saif II, civil war broke out over the election of his successor. Persian troops occupied Muttrah and Muscat but failed to take Sohar which was defended by Ahmad bin Said, who expelled the Persians from Oman after the civil war had ended. In 1744 the Al bu Said family assumed power and has ruled to the present day. Oman remained largely isolated from the rest of the world until 1970 when Said bin Taimur was deposed by his son Qaboos in a bloodless coup.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Situated at the southeast corner of the Arabian peninsula, Oman is bounded in the northeast by the Gulf of Oman and southeast by the Arabian Sea, southwest by Yemen and northwest by Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates. There is an enclave at the northern tip of the Musandam Peninsula. An agreement of April 1992 completed the demarcation of the border with Yemen, and an agreement of March 1990 finalized the border with Saudi Arabia.

With a coastline of 1,700 sq. km from the Strait of Hormuz in the north to the borders of the Republic of Yemen, the Sultanate is strategically located overlooking ancient maritime trade routes linking the Far East and Africa with the Mediterranean.

The Sultanate of Oman occupies a total area of 309,500 sq. km and includes different terrains that vary from plain to highlands and mountains. The coastal plain overlooking the Gulf of Oman and the Arabian Sea forms the most important and fertile plain in Oman.

The Kuria Muria islands were ceded to the UK in 1854 by the Sultan of Muscat and Oman. On 30 Nov. 1967 the islands were retroceded to the Sultan of Muscat and Oman, in accordance with the wishes of the population. They are now known as the Halaniyat Islands.

Population at the census of Dec. 2010, 2,773,479 (1,612,411 males); density 9.0 per sq. km. The population comprised 1,957,336 Omanis and 816,143 expatriates.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 4.49m.

In 2011, 73.3% of the population lived in urban areas. The census population of the capital, Muscat, in 2010 was 775,878.

The official language is Arabic; English is in commercial use.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2008 estimates: births, 61,000; deaths, 8,000. Estimated rates, 2008 (per 1,000 population): births, 22.0; deaths, 2.7. Expectation of life at birth, 2013, was 74.8 years for males and 79.0 years for females. Average annual population growth rate, 2000–08, 1.8%. Fertility rate, 2008, 3.0 births per woman, down from 7.8 in 1988.

Oman has achieved some of the most rapid advances ever recorded. Infant mortality declined from 200 per 1,000 live births in 1960 to eight per 1,000 live births in 2010, and as recently as 1970 life expectancy was just 40.

CLIMATE

Oman has a desert climate, with exceptionally hot and humid months from April to Oct., when temperatures may reach 47°C. Light monsoon rains fall in the south from June to Sept., with highest amounts in the western highland region. Muscat, Jan. 28°C, July 46°C. Annual rainfall 101 mm. Salalah, Jan. 29°C, July 32°C. Annual rainfall 98 mm.

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

Oman is a hereditary absolute monarchy. The Sultan legislates by decree and appoints a Cabinet to assist him. The Basic Statute of the State was promulgated on 6 Nov. 1996.

The present Sultan is Qaboos bin Said Al Said (b. Nov. 1940). He does not have any children and has not publicly named an heir or a designated successor.

In 1991 a new consultative assembly, the Majlis al-Shura, replaced the former State Consultative Chamber. The Majlis consists of 85 elected members. It debates domestic issues, but has no legislative or veto powers. There is also an upper house, the Majlis al-Dawla, which consists of 85 appointed members; it too has advisory powers only.

In Dec. 2002 the Sultan of Oman extended voting rights to all citizens over the age of 21.

CURRENT LEADERS

Qaboos bin Said

Position
Sultan

Introduction

Qaboos has been the Sultan since 23 July 1970 when he deposed his father, Said bin Taimur. He has carried out an ambitious social and economic modernization programme, opening Oman to the outside world through accession to the League of Arab States, Gulf Co-operation Council and United Nations and pursuing a moderate regional foreign policy while preserving a long-standing political and military relationship with the United Kingdom. He is nominally prime minister, minister of defence, minister of foreign affairs, minister of finance and chairman of the central bank.

Early Life

Born in Salalah on 18 Nov. 1940, Qaboos attended a private school in England from the age of 16. In 1960 he went to the British Royal Military Academy at Sandhurst as an officer cadet. He subsequently served in the British army on operational duty and then studied in England before returning to Oman.

Career in Office

Concerned at his father's reactionary regime and inability to channel Oman's new oil wealth into the country's development, Qaboos led a coup in 1970. He then undertook a range of infrastructure projects, including the construction of roads, hospitals, schools, communications systems, and industrial and port facilities. He also abrogated his father's more extreme moralistic laws. His regime has since remained stable despite periods of labour unrest, an alleged Islamist extremist plot in 2005 to overthrow the government and protests in 2011 demanding employment and political reform against a background of wider disaffection spreading across the Arab world.

Although the Sultan continues to legislate by decree, he is advised by an appointed Cabinet, an elected consultative assembly (Majlis al-Shura) and an appointed upper house (Majlis al-Dawla). In March 2004 Qaboos appointed Oman's first female Cabinet minister. In Feb. 2013 the government approved an increase in the minimum wage and limits on the employment of foreign workers to ease popular discontent at the level of unemployment.

There have been growing concerns over the ageing Sultan's health, in turn generating speculation about Oman's political future given the lack of an heir or designated successor.

DEFENCE

Military expenditure in 2013 totalled US$9,246m. (US$2,931 per capita), representing 11.7% of GDP.

Army

Strength (2011) 25,000. In addition there are 6,400 Royal Household troops. A paramilitary tribal home guard numbers 4,000.

Navy

The main naval base is at Wudam. Naval personnel in 2011 totalled 4,200. There is a wholly separate Royal Yacht Squadron with 150 personnel in 2011.

Air Force

The Air Force, formed in 1959, had 54 combat-capable aircraft in 2011 including F-16s, Jaguars and British Aerospace Hawks.

Personnel (2011) 5,000.

ECONOMY

Oil and natural gas (excluding petroleum products), contributed 41.0% to GDP in 2009; followed by manufacturing (including petroleum products), 10.3%; trade, restaurants and hotels, 10.2%; and finance and real estate, 9.9%.

Overview

Oman is a high-income country reliant on crude oil and natural gas. Oil accounted for around 50% of GDP in 2014 and over 70% of government receipts and export earnings. However, oil reserves are expected to be severely depleted by 2030, although gas reserves are predicted to last longer.

Annual GDP growth averaged 5.6% from 2008 to 2013, but declined to 2.9% in 2014. The general government debt-to-GDP ratio was 25% in 2000 but, with buoyant oil prices from 2010 to 2014, it fell to around 5%. However, a combination of high state spending (partly to maintain social stability) and reduced revenues owing to weak oil prices is expected to see debt rise again in the short- to mid-term.

Oman Vision 2020 is the national programme for diversification, designed to reduce dependency on hydrocarbons and expand the manufacturing, tourism and services sectors. To this end, it envisages improving infrastructure and developing human resources with the aim of increasing the non-oil contribution to GDP to 81% by 2020.

Currency

The unit of currency is the Rial Omani (OMR). It is divided into 1,000 baiza. The rial is pegged to the US dollar. In July 2005 foreign exchange reserves were US$4,511m. and gold reserves totalled 1,000 troy oz (291,000 troy oz in April 2002). Total money supply was RO 1,067m. in May 2005. Inflation was 1.2% in 2013 and 1.0% in 2014.

Budget

In 2012 revenues were RO 14,080.3m. and expenditures RO 13,555.0m. Oil revenue accounted for 74.1% of revenues in 2012; current expenditure accounted for 64.7% of expenditures.

Performance

Real GDP growth was 5.8% in 2012, 4.7% in 2013 and 2.9% in 2014. Total GDP in 2014 was US$81.8bn.

Banking and Finance

The bank of issue is the Central Bank of Oman, which commenced operations in 1975 (President, Hamood Sangour Al Zadjali). All banks must comply with BIS capital adequacy ratios and have a minimum capital of RO 20m. (minimum capital requirement for foreign banks established in Oman is RO 3m.). In 2002 there were 15 commercial banks (of which nine were foreign) and three specialized banks. The largest bank is BankMuscat SAOG, with assets of RO 1.3bn.

Total foreign debt was US$3,472m. in 2005.

There is a stock exchange in Muscat, which is linked with those in Bahrain and Kuwait.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Oman's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption and flaring of fossil fuels in 2011 were the equivalent of 17.7 tonnes per capita.

Electricity

Installed capacity was 4.9m. kW in 2011. Production in 2011 was 21.35bn. kWh, with consumption per capita 7,060 kWh.

Oil and Gas

The economy is dominated by the oil industry. Oil in commercial quantities was discovered in 1964 and production began in 1967. Production in 2012 was 45.8m. tonnes. In 2007 exports of oil stood at 30.3m. tonnes. Total proven reserves in 2012 were 5.5bn. bbls. It was announced in Aug. 2000 that two new oilfields in the south of the country had been discovered, with a potential combined daily production capacity of 12,200 bbls. Earlier in 2000 oil began to be pumped from two further recently-discovered oilfields.

Gas is likely to become the second major source of income for the country. Oman's proven natural gas reserves were 900bn. cu. metres in 2012. Natural gas production was 29.0bn. cu. metres in 2012.

Minerals

Production in 2009 (in 1,000 tonnes): sand and gravel, 77,114; limestone, 7,948; chromite, 636 (up from 19 in 2004); marble, 588; gypsum, 333; quartz, 198. The mountains of Oman are rich in mineral deposits; these include chromite, coal, asbestos, manganese, gypsum, limestone and marble.

Agriculture

Agriculture and fisheries are the traditional occupations of Omanis and remain important to the people and economy of Oman to this day. The country now produces a wide variety of fresh fruit, vegetables and field crops. The country is rapidly moving towards its goal of self-sufficiency in agriculture with the total area under cultivation standing at over 70,000 ha. and total output more than 1m. tonnes. This has not been achieved without effort. In a country where water is a scarce commodity it has meant educating farmers on efficient methods of irrigation and building recharge dams to make the most of infrequent rainfall. In 2002 there were an estimated 38,000 ha. of arable land and 43,000 ha. of permanent crops. Approximately 62,000 ha. were irrigated in 2002. In 2002, 35.2% of the economically active population were engaged in agriculture.

The coastal plain (Batinah) northwest of Muscat is fertile, as are the Dhofar highlands in the south. In the valleys of the interior, as well as on the Batinah coastal plain, date cultivation has reached a high level, and there are possibilities of agricultural development. Agricultural products, 2004 estimates (in 1,000 tonnes): dates, 239; tomatoes, 43; bananas, 33; watermelons, 27. Vegetable and fruit production are also important, and livestock are raised in the south where there are monsoon rains. Camels (125,000 in 2004) are bred by the inland tribes. Other livestock, 2004: sheep, 355,000; cattle, 315,000; goats, 1m.; chickens, 3.4m.

Fisheries

The catch was 163,927 tonnes in 2010, exclusively sea fish.

INDUSTRY

Apart from oil production, copper smelting and cement production, there are light industries, mainly food processing and chemical products. The government gives priority to import substitute industries.

Labour

In 2013 the labour force totalled 1,985,000 with the unemployment rate standing at 7.9%. Males constituted 85.9% of the workforce in 2013. In 2014 there were 232,980 persons in government service and 197,510 Omanis in the private sector. The employment of foreign labour is being discouraged following 'Omanization' regulations of 1994. However, in 2014 expatriate workers totalled 1,570,132. Omanis constitute only 15% of private sector workers. Following the unrest of early 2011 the private sector monthly minimum wage for national workers was increased in Feb. 2011 from RO 140 to RO 200. There is no minimum wage for foreign workers.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Oman, along with Bahrain, Kuwait, Qatar, Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates entered into a customs union in Jan. 2003.

Imports and Exports

Imports and exports in US$1m.:

	2003	2004	2005	2006	2007
Imports c.i.f.	6,801	8,796	8,970	11,038	16,025
Exports f.o.b.	12,196	13,381	18,692	21,586	24,692

Main import suppliers, 2006: United Arab Emirates, 25.5%; Japan, 17.1%; India, 5.2%; USA, 5.2%. In 2004 crude oil exports made up approximately 68% of total exports. Main export markets in 2006 were: China, 26.5%; South Korea, 16.0%; Thailand, 12.4%; United Arab Emirates, 9.5%.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

A network of adequate graded roads links all the main sectors of population, and only a few mountain villages are not accessible by motor vehicles. In 2005 there were about 42,300 km of roads (16,500 km paved) including 953 km of dual carriageway. In 2007 there were 453,400 passenger cars in use (174 per 1,000 inhabitants), 113,300 vans and lorries, and 26,400 buses and coaches. In 2007 there were 8,816 road accidents and 798 deaths.

Civil Aviation

The national airline is Oman Air, which in 2007 had 15 aircraft and served 26 destinations. Oman formerly had a 50% share in Gulf Air with Bahrain, but withdrew in May 2007. In 2009 Seeb International Airport (Muscat) handled 4,556,502 passengers (3,983,413 international) and 64,418 tonnes of freight.

Oman's two major airports, Muscat International and Salalah (mainly domestic flights) are both currently being upgraded and expanded.

Shipping

In Mutrah a deep-water port (named Mina Qaboos) was completed in 1974. In 2008 it handled 6.3m. tonnes of foreign cargo. In Jan. 2009 there were seven ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 17,000 GT.

Telecommunications

In 2013 there were 351,000 main (fixed) telephone lines in Oman; mobile phone subscriptions numbered 5,617,000 in 2013 (1,546.5 per 1,000 persons). An estimated 60% of the population were internet users in 2012. In March 2012 there were 422,000 Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The population in penal institutions in 2013 was 1,300 (36 per 100,000 of national population). The death penalty is in force, and was used in 2015 when there were two executions.

Education

Adult literacy was 87% in 2008. In 2003–04 there were 1,022 schools, up from just three when Qaboos bin Said became Sultan in 1970. The total number of pupils in state education in 2003–04 was 576,472 (139,082 in basic education and 437,390 in general education) with 32,345 teachers (13,939 in basic education and 18,406 in general education). Oman's first university, the Sultan Qaboos University, opened in 1986 and in 2003–04 there were 12,437 students. It remains the only public university although a number of private universities and colleges have opened in the meantime.

In 2006 public expenditure on education came to 4.2% of GNI and 31.1% of total government spending (the highest percentage of any country).

Health

In 2003 there were 49 hospitals with 4,501 beds. There were also 129 health centres. In 2002 there were 3,478 doctors, 297 dentists, 594 pharmacists and 8,004 nursing staff.

RELIGION

In 2010, 85.9% of the population were Muslims according to estimates by the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life. Most Omanis are Ibadhis, a distinct branch of Islam that is neither Sunni nor Shia. The Pew Research Center estimated that 6.5% of the population were Christians in 2010 and 5.5% Hindus.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

The four sites on the UNESCO World Heritage List under Omani jurisdiction are (with the year entered on the list): Bahla Fort (1987); the archaeological sites of Bat, Al-Khutm and Al-Ayn, a collection of settlements and necropolises of the 3rd millennium BC (1988); the Frankincense Trail, a group of archaeological sites representing the production and distribution of frankincense (2000); and the five ancient Aflaj irrigation systems (2006). A fifth site, the Arabian Oryx Sanctuary, was removed from the list after the Omani government decided to reduce the size of the protected area by 90%.

Press

In 2008 there were seven daily newspapers with a combined circulation of 239,000.

Tourism

Non-resident tourists staying at hotels and similar establishments numbered 1,276,000 in 2009 (down from 1,378,000 in 2008 although up from 1,182,000 in 2007).

Festivals

National Day (18 Nov.); Spring Festival in Salalah (July–Aug.); Ramadan (June–July in 2016 and May–June in 2017).

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

The Neolithic settlement of Mehrgarh in Balochistan, western Pakistan dates from around 7000 BC. Continuously occupied for over 4,000 years, it was a precursor to the Indus Valley civilization, which flourished between 3300 and 1700 BC. Indus Valley settlements spread across much of present-day Pakistan and northwest India, from the Arabian Sea to the foothills of the Himalayas, centring on the cities of Mohenjo-Daro and Harappa. The civilization's decline coincided with the arrival of Indo-European-speaking tribes, including the Aryans, from central Asia. Taxila in northern Pakistan became a centre for the development of Vedic/Hindu culture from the 6th century BC.

Under the influence of the Persian Achaemenid Empire from around 550 BC, most of present-day Pakistan was ruled by Darius the Great from Persepolis after 515 BC. Alexander the Great, conqueror of the Persian Empire, invaded northern Pakistan in 326 BC but was superseded by the Maurya dynasty from around 300 BC. Its emperor, Ashoka the Great, ruled over central Asia and much of the Indian sub-continent between 273 and 232 BC. The Indus Valley came under Greco-Bactrian control from around 180 BC, bringing about a fusion of classical Greek culture and Buddhism. Invasions by Scythians and Parthians were followed by the arrival of the Yuechi from the steppes of western China. They established the Buddhist Kushan dynasty in the 1st century AD. Centred on Peshawar, it linked the Silk Road with the Arabian Sea and the Ganges Valley.

Arab settlers introduced Islam early in the 8th century. In 712 Muhammad ibn Qasim conquered Sindh province and incorporated it into the Umayyad Caliphate, ruled from Baghdad. Over the next three centuries the southern provinces of Multan and Balochistan were also absorbed. In 1005 Peshawar was conquered by the Turkic-Afghan warlord, Sultan Mahmud of Ghazni, who went on to take Punjab, Kashmir and Balochistan. The Ghaznavid Dynasty made Lahore one of its key cities—the easternmost outpost of Islam—though it was destroyed during Genghis Khan's Mongol invasion of 1219.

In the late 13th century northern and eastern Pakistan came under the influence of Islamic sultanates. Centred on Delhi, they gradually gained control of most of the Indian subcontinent. Timur-i Lang seized Persia, Afghanistan and western Pakistan in the 1380s, absorbing them into a vast central Asian empire. Babur, the founder of the Moghul dynasty in the early 16th century, initially made Kabul his capital, before power transferred to Lahore, Delhi and Agra. While most of the Indian subcontinent remained part of a united Moghul empire between the 16th and 19th centuries, the northwestern fringe was attacked by Persians in the 1730s and Sindh and Punjab were incorporated into Ahmad Shah Durrani's Afghan state from 1747.

The British, who established a protectorate in Bengal in 1757 and subsequently controlled much of the sub-continent, attempted to secure the anarchic northwest against Russian expansion in the first Afghan War (1838–42). Although Sindh and the Punjab were absorbed into British India in the 1840s, Balochistan and Afghanistan remained independent. Following Britain's failure to win these mountainous regions in the second Afghan War (1878–80), the North-West Frontier Province was created in 1901 as a semi-autonomous region.

Hindu-Muslim tensions escalated and in the 1930s the poet Muhammad Iqbal proposed a separate Muslim nation, an idea taken up by Muhammad Ali Jinnah, leader of the Muslim League. Following the League's victories in most of the majority-Muslim constituencies in the 1946 elections, the British agreed to the formation of East and West Pakistan under the 1947 Independence of India Act. Jinnah became West Pakistan's governor-general in the new capital, Karachi.

The partition of India saw 14m. people leaving their homes, with violence claiming 500,000 lives on both sides of the border. The signing over to India of Kashmir in Oct. 1947 was disputed by Pakistan. War broke out until a UN-brokered ceasefire and temporary border was agreed in 1949. In 1951 Pakistan's first prime minister, Liaquat Ali Kahn, was assassinated. The popularity of the Muslim League declined and Pakistan became increasingly unstable.

1958 saw the first of several periods of martial law, followed by the rule of Field Marshal Mohammad Ayub Khan (until 1969) and Gen. Agha Mohammad Yahya Khan (until 1971). Discontent in East Pakistan with the federal government led to calls by the Awami League for full autonomy. Following East Pakistan's declaration of independence as Bangladesh in March 1971, West Pakistan sent in troops, sparking civil war. Hundreds of thousands died and 10m. refugees fled to India. The surrender of Pakistan's forces to the Indian army in Dhaka on 16 Dec. 1971 cleared the way to an independent Bangladesh.

A new constitution in 1973 provided for a federal parliamentary government with a president and prime minister. Zulfikar Ali Bhutto, representing the Pakistan People's Party (PPP), became premier. Considered by traditionalists to be insufficiently Islamic, in July 1977 Gen. Mohammad Zia ul-Haq led an army coup against Ali Bhutto, who was hanged for conspiracy to murder. His daughter, Benazir, led the PPP to victory in the elections in 1988 but was dismissed on charges of corruption and incompetence in 1990. Reinstated as prime minister following elections in 1993, President Farooq Leghari overthrew her administration in 1996.

Indo-Pakistani relations have foundered over Kashmir. In May 1998 Pakistan carried out five nuclear tests in the deserts of Balochistan in response to India's tests earlier in the month. US President Bill Clinton invoked sanctions but Pakistan carried out a sixth test. On 11 June, following India's example, Pakistan announced a unilateral moratorium on nuclear tests. On 12 Oct. 1999 Gen. Pervez Musharraf seized power in a coup, overthrowing the democratically-elected government of Nawaz Sharif after Sharif tried to dismiss Musharraf as army chief of staff. Sharif was convicted of corruption and sentenced to life imprisonment.

Negotiations with India over Kashmir began in July 1999. In May 2001 India ended its six-month long ceasefire but invited Pakistan for further talks, prompting hopes of avoiding more violence. Following the attacks on New York and Washington of 11 Sept. 2001 Pakistan found itself central to the war against terrorism. Neighbouring Afghanistan was believed to be sheltering Osama bin Laden and the USA persuaded Musharraf to allow its forces to use Pakistani air bases. In return the USA lifted its remaining sanctions. In Dec. 2001 suicide bombers attacked the Indian parliament. Although no-one claimed responsibility, the Indian authorities suspected Kashmiri separatists, heightening Indo-Pakistani tensions. Musharraf's subsequent crackdown on militants helped to reduce tension between the two countries.

An attack on an Indian army base in Indian-occupied Kashmir in May 2002, killing 31, was linked to terrorists infiltrating from Pakistan. Musharraf drew widespread criticism for failing to combat terrorism in the region. In Nov. 2003 Pakistan and India agreed to another ceasefire along Kashmir's Line of Control. Relations gradually improved and in April 2005 bus services resumed across the divided territory for the first time in 60 years.

In Oct. 2005 Pakistan-administered Kashmir was struck by an earthquake which killed 73,300 people and left 3m. homeless. In 2006 there was an upsurge in violence by tribal groups in Balochistan demanding greater autonomy. Bomb blasts rocked Karachi and Islamabad in early 2007 and 68 passengers were killed in an explosion on a train travelling between Lahore and New Delhi. Musharraf's decision to suspend the chief justice of the Supreme Court, Iftikhar Mohammad Chaudhry, for alleged abuse of power in March 2007 sparked riots in Karachi.

In July 2007 security forces stormed Islamabad's Red Mosque, considered to have close links with militant groups. At the end of a week-long siege, over 100 people were killed and 250 injured. In Oct. 2007 Musharraf won the presidential election, though the Supreme Court refused to confirm the result until it had ruled on Musharraf's eligibility to stand while still head of the army. The court dismissed challenges to the result the following month. Meanwhile, fighting intensified in Waziristan, a stronghold of Islamic militant groups.

The assassination of Benazir Bhutto in Dec. 2007 ahead of elections in Jan. 2008 threw the already fragile political climate into turmoil. The election was rescheduled for Feb. when the leading opposition parties, including Bhutto's, won a resounding victory against pro-Musharraf parties and formed a coalition government. Musharraf's presidency was severely weakened as a result and he eventually resigned in Aug. 2008. In Sept. 2008 Asif Ali Zardari was elected his successor. His term in office has seen continued fighting between government forces and Islamic militant groups linked with several high-profile attacks including the Mumbai bombings of Nov. 2008 and an assault on the visiting Sri Lankan cricket team in March 2009. In Oct. 2009 the military launched an offensive against Taliban forces in the South Waziristan region, resulting in large numbers of deaths.

Flooding in Aug. 2010 killed 1,600 people and affected 20m. altogether. In May 2011 US special forces killed Osama bin Laden in the Pakistani town of Abbottabad. The operation was carried out in secret, raising tensions between Islamabad and Washington amid suspicions that figures within Pakistan had been providing refuge and support for bin Laden and his al-Qaeda network. In Oct. 2012 the Taliban earned international condemnation after shooting a 14-year-old girl, education activist Malala Yousafzai, as she made her way to school at Mingora in Khyber Pakhtunkhwa. The Taliban sparked renewed outrage in Dec. 2014 when almost 150 people—most of them children—died in an attack on a school in Peshawar.

In June 2013 Nawaz Sharif became prime minister for an unprecedented third time after his Pakistan Muslim League-N won the previous month's parliamentary elections. In Feb. 2014 the former president, Pervez Musharraf, was put on trial for treason. Legal proceedings were ongoing as of March 2016.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Pakistan is bounded in the west by Iran, northwest by Afghanistan, north by China, east by India and south by the Arabian Sea. The area (excluding the disputed area of Kashmir) is 796,100 sq. km (307,380 sq. miles), including 25,220 sq. km (9,740 sq. miles) of inland water. 2011 provisional census population (excluding three districts of Balochistan, the agency of South Waziristan in the Federally Administered Tribal Areas, and the autonomous states Azad-Kashmir and Gilgit-Baltistan), 192,288,944. The United Nations population estimate for 2011 was 173,670,000. In 2011, 36.2% lived in urban areas. There were 1.5m. refugees in 2015, mostly from Afghanistan, the second highest number in any country (after Turkey) and 11% of the global total.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 188.93m.

The estimated population of the principal cities in 2012 was as follows:

Karachi	15,069,000	Gujranwala	1,908,000	Peshawar	1,580,000
Lahore	7,978,000	Multan	1,771,000	Islamabad	1,161,000
Faisalabad	3,231,000	Hyderabad	1,649,000	Quetta	988,000
Rawalpindi	2,275,000

The country is divided into four provinces and two territories (areas in sq. km): Balochistan (347,190)¹; Khyber Pakhtunkhwa (74,521)¹; Punjab (205,345)¹; Sindh (140,914)¹; Federal Capital Territory Islamabad (906)²; Federally Administered Tribal Areas (27,220)².

¹Province. ²Territory.

English, the official language, is used in business, higher education and in central government; Urdu is the national language and the lingua franca, although only spoken as a first language by about 8% of the population. Around 48% of the population speak Punjabi.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

Estimates, 2008: births, 5,324,000; deaths, 1,224,000. Estimated birth rate in 2008 was 30.1 per 1,000 population; estimated death rate, 6.9. Infant mortality (per 1,000 live births), 70 (2010). Formal registration of marriages and divorces has not been required since 1992. Expectation of life in 2013 was 65.7 years for men and 67.5 years for women. Annual population growth rate, 2000–08, 2.2%. Fertility rate, 2008, 4.0 births per woman.

CLIMATE

A weak form of tropical monsoon climate occurs over much of the country, with arid conditions in the north and west, where the wet season is only from Dec. to March. Elsewhere, rain comes mainly in the summer. Summer temperatures are high everywhere, but winters can be cold in the mountainous north. Islamabad, Jan. 50°F (10°C), July 90°F (32.2°C). Annual rainfall 36" (900 mm). Karachi, Jan. 61°F (16.1°C), July 86°F (30°C). Annual rainfall 8" (196 mm). Lahore, Jan. 53°F (11.7°C), July 89°F (31.7°C). Annual rainfall 18" (452 mm). Multan, Jan. 51°F (10.6°C), July 93°F (33.9°C). Annual rainfall 7" (170 mm). Quetta, Jan. 38°F (3.3°C), July 80°F (26.7°C). Annual rainfall 10" (239 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

Under the 1973 constitution, the President was elected for a five-year term by a college of parliamentary deputies, senators and members of the Provincial Assemblies. Parliament is bicameral, comprising a Senate of 104 members and a National Assembly of 342. In the Senate, each of the four provinces is allocated 14 seats, while the federally administered tribal areas and the federal capital are assigned eight and two seats respectively. In addition, each province is conferred four seats for technocrats and four for women. Two seats, one for technocrats and another for women, are reserved for the federal capital. The National Assembly is directly elected for five-year terms. 272 members are elected in single-seat constituencies, there are ten seats for non-Muslim minorities and 60 seats for women.

Following the 1999 coup Gen. Musharraf announced that the Constitution was to be held 'in abeyance' and issued a 'Provisional Constitution Order No. 1' in its place. In Aug. 2002 he unilaterally amended the constitution to grant himself the right to dissolve parliament.

During the period of martial law from 1977–85 the Constitution was also in abeyance, but not abrogated. In 1985 it was amended to extend the powers of the President, including those of appointing and dismissing ministers and vetoing new legislation until 1990. Legislation of 1 April 1997 abolished the President's right to dissolve parliament, appoint provincial governors and nominate the heads of the armed services.

Gen. Pervez Musharraf, Chief of the Army Staff, assumed the responsibilities of the chief executive of the country following the removal of Prime Minister Nawaz Sharif on 12 Oct. 1999. He formed a National Security Council consisting of six members belonging to the armed forces and a number of civilians with expertise in various fields. A Federal Cabinet of Ministers was also installed working under the guidance of the National Security Council. Also formed was the National Reconstruction Bureau, a think tank providing institutional advice and input on economic, social and institutional matters. The administration declared that it intended to first restore economic order before holding general elections to install a civilian government. The Supreme Court of Pakistan allowed the administration a three-year period, which expired on 12 Oct. 2002, to accomplish this task. Elections were held on 10 Oct. 2002. On 30 April 2002 a referendum was held in which 97.7% voted in favour of extending Musharraf's rule by a further five years. Turnout was around 50%. He amended the constitution in Aug. 2002 to formally extend his mandate by five years. The constitution was further amended in Dec. 2003 to enhance Musharraf's power and allow a vote of confidence in his presidency.

In March 2007 Musharraf announced his intention to stand for a five-year presidential term. The Supreme Court rejected his candidacy while opposition parties challenged his constitutional right to hold the presidency and head the military. In Sept. 2007 the Supreme Court's earlier judgement was overturned and the following month Musharraf was granted a further term of office by the national parliament and provincial assemblies. However, the Supreme Court refused to sanction the appointment until the surrounding legal questions had been resolved. In Nov. 2007 Musharraf suspended the constitution and imposed martial rule. Several prominent members of the judiciary and opposition leaders, including Benazir Bhutto and Imran Khan, were arrested or jailed. The Constitution was reinstated in Dec. but judicial freedom was severely compromised by the dismissal of senior court officials. Amendments were introduced to extend the military's power to try citizens and facilitate the arrest of political opponents. Following Musharraf's resignation in Aug. 2008, ousted Chief Justice Iftikhar Chaudry was reinstated in March 2009. The 2007 amendments to the constitution were subsequently revoked in July 2009 and in Aug. the Supreme Court ruled that Musharraf's actions had been illegal.

RECENT ELECTIONS

Parliamentary elections held on 11 May 2013 represented the first civilian transfer of power in Pakistan following the successful completion of a five-year term by a democratically-elected government. Turnout was 55.0%. The Pakistan Muslim League-N (PML-N, led by Nawaz Sharif) gained 125 of the National Assembly's 272 elected seats and received 32.7% of votes cast; the Pakistan People's Party (PPP, led by Bilawal Bhutto) won 31 seats and received 15.0% of the vote; Pakistan Movement for Justice (PTI, led by Imran Khan) gained 28 seats with 16.8%; the United National Movement (MQM) won 18 seats with 5.4%; and the Assembly of Islamic Clergy (JUI-F) gained 10 seats with 3.1%. The remaining seats went to smaller parties and non-partisans.

In indirect elections held on 30 July 2013 Mamnoon Hussain (PML-N) was elected president by federal and provincial lawmakers, winning 432 votes against 77 for Wajihuddin Ahmed (PTI).

CURRENT LEADERS

Mamnoon Hussain

Position

President

Introduction

Mamnoon Hussain was sworn in as president on 9 Sept. 2013. A loyal supporter of Prime Minister Nawaz Sharif, Hussain was best known prior to his nomination as a businessman. His election marked the first time in Pakistani history that power was handed directly from one democratically-elected president to another.

Early Life

Mamnoon Hussain was born on 23 Dec. 1940 in Agra, in what was then British India. His Urdu-speaking family moved to Karachi after the partition of India in 1947, where they established a textile business. Hussain studied at the city's Institute of Business Administration before joining the Pakistan Muslim League-N (PML-N) party in 1970. Working for the family business, he became president of the Karachi Chamber of Commerce and Industry.

His first foray into politics came with his surprise appointment by Nawaz Sharif, then in the second of his three terms as prime minister, as governor of Sindh province (of which Karachi is the capital) in 1999. Hussain's tenure, however, lasted only a few months as a military coup led by Gen. Pervez Musharraf overthrew Sharif's government. Hussain contested the 2002 general election but failed to win a seat, returning instead to his business interests.

His unwavering loyalty to Sharif during the former premier's exile from power was key to his return to political prominence. Nominated to represent the ruling PML-N in the July 2013 presidential election, Hussain's confirmation in the role was a formality as he secured 432 votes against 77 for his only rival, Wajihuddin Ahmed.

Career in Office

Hussain came to power with the country in the midst of an energy crisis and struggling to stabilize its economy. He has since been confronted with a Taliban insurgency gaining ground, strained relations with the USA over drone strikes in Pakistani sovereign territory and a powerful earthquake that struck the north of Pakistan (bordering Afghanistan) in Oct. 2015, killing hundreds and injuring many more.

Nawaz Sharif

Position

Prime Minister

Introduction

Nawaz Sharif became prime minister in June 2013. A wealthy industrialist, he has been a key political figure in the country for over 30 years. Head of the Pakistan Muslim League (PML-N), he was previously prime minister from 1990–93 and 1997–99.

Early Life

Sharif was born on 25 Dec. 1949 in Lahore, Punjab, where his father Muhammad Sharif had founded the Ittefaq Group/Sharif Group conglomerate. Sharif studied at the Government University College (Lahore) before graduating from Punjab University Law College. He then joined the Ittefaq Group.

He entered provincial politics in the 1970s and joined the PML around the time that the Ittefaq steel business was nationalized by Zulfikar Ali Bhutto. In 1981, during the rule of Gen. Zia ul-Haq who returned the steel business to the family, Sharif joined the Punjab Advisory Council, serving as finance minister and, from 1985, chief minister. As leader of the PML, the largest party in the Islamic Democratic Alliance, he unsuccessfully ran against Benazir Bhutto in the 1988 general election.

In 1990 Bhutto was dismissed by President Ghulam Ishaq Khan for alleged corruption. Sharif was subsequently elected prime minister and pursued a privatization programme. He also drew international attention to the Kashmir conflict, announced a nuclear development programme and introduced a number of Islamic laws.

In 1993 Ishaq Khan dismissed Sharif and Bhutto returned, only to be dismissed again in 1996.

Sharif was re-elected premier in a landslide victory. During his second tenure he brought in constitutional amendments curbing the president's power. After he attempted to block the appointment of five Supreme Court judges, a constitutional crisis ensued that ended in the resignation of the president, Farooq Leghari, and the suspension of the Chief Justice.

In 1998 Sharif ordered nuclear tests that prompted sanctions from the West, pushing the country close to bankruptcy. In 1999 he signed the Lahore Declaration with India in a bid to avert a nuclear arms race. His second premiership ended in a bloodless military coup led by Gen. Pervez Musharraf. Sharif was subsequently convicted of hijacking, terrorism and corruption. Facing the death sentence, he agreed to go into exile for ten years and retreat from political life after the Saudi Arabian authorities helped negotiate a deal.

In 2007 Sharif returned to Pakistan and a year later contested the 2008 elections, during which Benazir Bhutto was assassinated. The Pakistan People's Party, led by Bhutto's widower Asif Ali Zardari, triumphed at the polls, and Zardari and Sharif together impeached Musharraf in Aug. 2008. Sharif successfully reinstated several judges and the courts overturned his previous convictions. He led the PML-N to victory at the 2013 general election.

Career in Office

Sharif campaigned on pledges to stem electricity shortages, improve infrastructure, rebuild the economy, nurture better relations with India and fight corruption. Other major challenges included reining in the stifling political influence of the Pakistani military and countering insurgent Taliban attacks.

In Sept. 2013 Sharif accepted a US$6.7bn. IMF loan in return for economic reforms, including further privatization. In early 2014 he launched several power generation projects and peace talks were initiated with the Taliban despite ongoing violence. These talks collapsed in June 2014 following a terrorist assault on Karachi international airport, after which the army launched a new offensive in the tribal region of North Waziristan. However, retaliatory action by the Taliban has continued, particularly an attack on a military-run school in Peshawar in Dec. 2014 that killed 145 people, the great majority of whom were children, and an assault on a Shia mosque in Shikarpur in Jan. 2015 claiming over 60 lives. Relations with India remained frigid in the wake of the election as prime minister in May 2014 of Narendra Modi, a Hindu nationalist. However, in Dec. 2015 Modi made a stopover in Lahore for unscheduled direct talks with Sharif that were welcomed as a positive step towards a rapprochement by domestic and international commentators.

DEFENCE

A Council for Defence and National Security was set up in Jan. 1997, comprising the President, the Prime Minister, the Ministers of Defence, Foreign Affairs, Interior, Finance and the military chiefs of staff. The Council advised the government on the determination of national strategy and security priorities, but was disbanded in Feb. 1997. The Council was revived in Oct. 1999 following the change of government but was to have a wider scope and not restrict itself to defence matters.

Defence expenditure in 2013 totalled US$5,890m. (US$30 per capita), representing 2.5% of GDP. Expenditure is increasingly targeted at developing counter-insurgency capabilities as a result of the threat from Taliban forces along the border with Afghanistan.

As at 31 Aug. 2013 Pakistan had 8,262 personnel serving in UN peacekeeping operations (the largest contingent of any country).

Nuclear Weapons

Pakistan began a secret weapons programme in 1972 to reach parity with India, but was restricted for some years by US sanctions. The Stockholm International Peace Research Institute estimates that Pakistan possesses 100–120 nuclear warheads. In May 1998 Pakistan carried out six nuclear tests in response to India's tests earlier in the month. Pakistan, known to have a nuclear weapons programme, has not signed the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban-Treaty, which is intended to bring about a ban on any nuclear explosions. According to Deadly Arsenals, published by the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, Pakistan has both chemical and biological weapon research programmes.

Army

Strength (2011) 550,000. There were also up to 304,000 personnel in paramilitary units: National Guard, Frontier Corps and Pakistan Rangers.

Most armoured equipment is of Chinese origin including over 2,400 main battle tanks. There is an aviation corps with fixed-wing aircraft and 42 attack helicopters in 2011.

Navy

In 2011 the combatant fleet included five French-built diesel submarines, three midget submarines for swimmer delivery and ten frigates. The Naval Air wing operated seven combat-capable aircraft in 2011.

The principal naval base and dockyard are at Karachi. There are secondary bases at Gwadar, Jiwani, Ormara and Pasni. Naval personnel in 2011 totalled 22,000 (including an estimated 1,400 marines and some 2,000 Marine Security Agency personnel).

Air Force

The Pakistan Air Force came into being on 14 Aug. 1947. It has its headquarters at Peshawar and is organized within three air defence sectors, in the northern, central and southern areas of the country. There is an Air Force Academy at Raisalpur, which includes a College of Aeronautical Engineering.

Total strength in 2011 was 453 combat-capable aircraft and 70,000 personnel. Equipment included F-7s, Mirage IIIs, Mirage 5s, F-16s, Q-5s and JF-17s.

INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

Following Gen. Musharraf's coup in Oct. 1999, Pakistan was suspended from the Commonwealth's councils although the suspension was ended in May 2004. Pakistan was again suspended in Nov. 2007 after then President Musharraf declared emergency rule but it was readmitted in May 2008.

ECONOMY

Agriculture accounted for 21.2% of GDP in 2010, industry 25.4% and services 53.4%.

Overview

Pakistan's service-based economy has significant growth potential. Boasting a strategic geographical location in Asia, a large population and diverse natural resources, there is untapped potential for trade. However, the country faces serious economic, governance and security challenges if it is to achieve its development goals. Frequent energy black-outs and water shortages regularly undermine production and state-run energy firms are notoriously inefficient. Rising expenditure has increased government debt, which stood at 64% of GDP in 2013, and the government has become dependent on foreign aid to compensate for low tax revenues. Inflation is persistently high, averaging 10.6% between 2003 and 2012.

Although growth in the agricultural sector has been falling since the 1980s, it contributes over 20% of GDP and accounts for 40% of jobs. Pakistan is one of the world's largest producers of raw cotton, but historically textile exports have added little value. The official unemployment figure was 6.6% in 2013, although this does not take into account the significant informal economy.

In 2007–08 international oil and food prices rose sharply, with negative effects on Pakistan. A stabilization programme supported by the IMF was initiated in Nov. 2008 to avoid a default on debt payments. Severe flooding in July 2010 affected more than 20m. people and disrupted 500,000 ha. of cropped land. A US$451m. emergency assistance package was provided by the IMF. The World Bank estimated the damage at US$9.7bn. and committed US$1bn. towards recovery. In 2011 more floods affected over 6m. people.

Although growth has been erratic since 2008, the country has avoided recession. Between 2010 and 2013 it averaged 3.4% per year, driven by buoyant service and manufacturing sectors and sound macroeconomic management. In May 2014 the IMF indicated that the government's reform programme was on track to deliver improvements in the balance of payments and increased central bank reserves. In addition, efforts to broaden the tax base have boosted revenues, although the revenue-to-GDP ratio remains low at around 10%.

To secure sustainable, long-term growth, the government needs to address political instability, structural problems in the energy sector, poor infrastructure and a volatile security situation, while also improving basic human development indicators.

Currency

The monetary unit is the Pakistan rupee (PKR) of 100 paisas. Gold reserves in Sept. 2009 were 2.10m. troy oz; foreign exchange reserves, US$10,418m. Inflation rates (based on IMF statistics):

2005	2006	2007	2008	2009	2010	2011	2012	2013	2014
9.3%	8.0%	7.8%	12.0%	18.1%	10.1%	13.7%	11.0%	7.4%	8.6%

The rupee was devalued by 3.65% in Sept. 1996, 8.5% in Oct. 1996 and 8.7% in Oct. 1997, and by 4.2% in June 1998 in response to the financial problems in Asia. In June 2008 total money supply was Rs3,359.3bn.

Budget

The financial year ends on 30 June. Budgetary central government revenues totalled Rs2,271.0bn. in 2010–11; expenditures totalled Rs3,219.2bn. in 2010–11. Taxes accounted for 73.9% of revenues in 2010–11; interest accounted for 26.6% of expenditures, and goods and services 19.7%.

There is a general sales tax of 16%.

Performance

Real GDP growth rates (based on IMF statistics):

2005	2006	2007	2008	2009	2010	2011	2012	2013	2014
9.0%	5.8%	5.5%	5.0%	0.4%	2.6%	3.6%	3.8%	3.7%	4.0%

Pakistan's total GDP in 2014 was US$243.6bn.

Banking and Finance

The State Bank of Pakistan is the central bank (Governor, Ashraf Mahmood Wathra); it came into operation as the Central Bank on 1 July 1948 and was nationalized in 1974 with other banks. Private commercial bank licences were reintroduced in 1991.

The State Bank of Pakistan is the issuing authority of domestic currency, custodian of foreign exchange reserves and bankers for the federal and provincial governments and for scheduled banks. It also manages the rupee public debt of the federal and provincial governments. The National Bank of Pakistan acts as an agent of the State Bank where the State Bank has no offices of its own.

In Feb. 1994 the State Bank of Pakistan was granted more autonomy to regulate the monetary sector of the economy.

In Dec. 1999 the Supreme Court ruled that Islamic banking methods, whereby interest is not permitted, had to be used from 1 July 2001. However, the decision was repealed in June 2002. The State Bank offered three options for the implementation of Islamic banking practices: i) banks to establish an independent Islamic bank; ii) the opening of subsidiaries of existing commercial banks; iii) the establishment of new branches to execute Islamic banking procedures.

In Sept. 2003 total assets of public sector commercial banks amounted to Rs980,300m., total assets of local private banks to Rs1,122,400m., total assets of foreign banks to Rs276,900m. and total assets of all commercial banks amounted to Rs2,379,600m. In Dec. 2005 total deposits of scheduled banks (stocks) equalled Rs2,661,697m. and net foreign assets amounted to Rs523,044m.

There were 37 commercial banks in Sept. 2003 (five state-owned and 15 foreign) with assets of Rs2,380bn. The largest bank is HBL Pakistan, with assets in 2013 of Rs1,715bn. In 2002 there were 45 leasing banks, operating in accordance with Sharia demands. There is a Federal Bank for Co-operatives.

In 2010 external debt totalled US$1,127m., equivalent to 31.3% of GNI.

There are stock exchanges in Islamabad, Karachi and Lahore.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Pakistan's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy were the equivalent of 0.8 tonnes per capita in 2011.

Electricity

Installed capacity in 2011–12 was 22.80m. kW, of which 15.45m. kW was thermal, 6.56m. kW was hydro-electric and 0.79m. kW was nuclear. In 2010 there were two nuclear reactors in use. Production in 2011–12 was 95.09bn. kWh, of which 64% was thermal and 30% was hydro-electric. Pakistan has vast untapped hydro potential but at present supply fails to meet demand and power cuts are frequent. Consumption per capita in 2011–12 was 541 kWh.

Oil and Gas

Crude petroleum production in 2009 was 24m. bbls. Reserves in 2011 were 313m. bbls. Exploitation is mainly through government incentives and concessions to foreign private sector companies. Natural gas production in 2012 was 41.5bn. cu. metres with 600bn. cu. metres of proven reserves. The French oil company Total agreed a US$3bn. deal with the government in July 2003 for exploration in the Arabian Sea.

Water

Pakistan's Indus Basin irrigation system is the largest and oldest in the world. It includes a network of 43 independent canal systems and two storage reservoirs. Total length of main canals is 58,000 km which serve 35m. acres of cultivatable land.

Currently three major surface water projects are under way, as are flood control schemes and programmes to check the problems of waterlogging and salinity.

Minerals

Production (tonnes, 2005): limestone, 14.86m.; coal, 3.37m.; rock salt, 1.65m.; gypsum, 552,496; fire clay, 253,501; dolomite, 199,653; chromite, 46,359; barytes, 42,087; china clay, 37,732; fuller's earth, 17,001; bauxite, 6,504. Other minerals of which useful deposits have been found are copper, magnesite, sulphur, marble, antimony ore, bentonite, celestite, fluorite, phosphate rock, silica sand and soapstone.

Agriculture

The north and west are covered by mountain ranges. The rest of the country consists of a fertile plain watered by five big rivers and their tributaries. Agriculture is dependent almost entirely on the irrigation system based on these rivers. Area irrigated, 2002, about 17.80m. ha. Agriculture employs around half of the workforce. In 2002 there were an estimated 21.45m. ha. of arable land and 672,000 ha. of permanent crops.

Pakistan is self-sufficient in wheat, rice and sugar. Areas harvested, 2003: wheat, 8.07m. ha.; seed cotton, 3.00m. ha.; rice, 2.21m. ha.; chick-peas, 1.68m. ha.; sugarcane, 1.09m. ha.; maize, 0.88m. ha. Production, 2003 (1,000 tonnes): sugarcane, 52,056; wheat, 19,210; rice, 6,751; seed cotton, 5,071; cottonseed, 3,337; potatoes, 1,946; cotton lint, 1,690; onions, 1,400; oranges, 1,400; maize, 1,275; mangoes, 1,036; chick-peas, 672; dates, 650.

A Land Reforms Act of 1977 reduced the upper limit of land holding to 100 irrigated or 200 non-irrigated acres. A new agricultural income tax was introduced in 1995, from which holders of up to 25 irrigated or 50 unirrigated acres are exempt. Of about 5m. farms, 12% are of less than 10 ha.

Livestock, 2003 (in 1m.): goats, 52.8; buffaloes, 24.8; sheep, 24.6; cattle, 23.3; asses, 4.1; camels, 0.8; chickens, 155.0.

Livestock products, 2003 (in 1,000 tonnes): beef and veal, 445; poultry meat, 375; goat meat, 373; mutton and lamb, 174; buffalo's milk, 18,520; cow's milk, 8,620; goat's milk, 640; eggs, 354; wool, 40.

Forestry

The area under forests in 2010 was 1.69m. ha., some 2% of the total land area. Timber production in 2011 totalled an estimated 32.65m. cu. metres.

Fisheries

In 2010 the catch totalled 453,264 tonnes, mainly from marine waters.

INDUSTRY

The leading company by market capitalization in Pakistan in March 2015 was Oil & Gas Development Company Limited (OGDCL) (US$7.7bn.).

Industry is based largely on agricultural processing, with engineering and electronics. Government policy is to encourage private industry, particularly small businesses. The public sector, however, is still dominant in large industries. Steel, cement, fertilizer and vegetable ghee are the most valuable public sector industries.

Production in 1,000 tonnes (in 2006–07 unless otherwise stated): cement (2007 estimate), 21,000; raw sugar (2007), 4,355; distillate fuel oil, 3,697; residual fuel oil, 3,324; cotton yarn (2005–06), 2,547; petrol, 1,337; paper and paperboard (2007), 1,010; pig iron (2005–06), 768; clays, 358; coke, 326; soda ash (2005), 260; caustic soda, 242; woven cotton fabrics, 965m. sq. metres; bicycles, 486,350 items; tractors (2007), 54,610 items.

Labour

The labour force in 2013 was 63,649,000 (45,607,000 in 2003). 56.4% of the population aged 15–64 was economically active in 2013. In the same year 5.1% of the population was unemployed. Of those in employment in 2011, 45.1% worked in agriculture, 33.7% in services and 21.2% in industry.

Pakistan had 2.13m. people living in slavery according to the Walk Free Foundation's 2013 Global Slavery Index, the third highest total of any country.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Most foreign exchange controls were removed in Feb. 1991. Tax exemptions are available for companies set up before 30 June 1995.

Imports and Exports

Trade in US$1m.:

	2005	2006	2007	2008	2009
Imports c.i.f.	25,097	29,826	32,594	42,327	31,584
Exports f.o.b.	16,050	16,933	17,838	20,279	17,555

Major imports in 2009 (as % of total value): petroleum and petroleum products, 26.2; machinery and transport equipment, 22.9; chemicals and related products, 16.9; manufactured goods, 10.6. Major exports in 2009: textile yarn, fabrics and finished articles, 37.1; clothing and apparel, 19.1; rice, 10.1; petroleum and petroleum products, 4.1.

Major import suppliers in 2009 (as % of total): China, 12.0; Saudi Arabia, 11.1; UAE, 10.6; Kuwait 5.7; USA, 5.7. Major export markets in 2009: USA, 18.3; UAE, 8.8; Afghanistan, 7.8; China, 5.7; UK, 5.4.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

In 2006 there were 260,420 km of roads, of which 65.4% were paved. There are ten motorways providing links between Pakistan's major cities. These include the M-1 from Islamabad to Peshawar, the M-2 from Islamabad to Lahore, the M-4 from Faisalabad to Multan and the M-9 from Karachi to Hyderabad. In 2007 there were 1,440,100 passenger cars in use, 187,100 vans and lorries, 170,400 buses and coaches and 2,684,300 motorcycles. There were 10,466 road accidents involving injury in 2007, with 5,465 fatalities.

All traffic in Pakistan drives on the left. All cars must be insured and registered. Minimum age for driving: 18 years.

Rail

In 2011 Pakistan Railways had a route length of 7,791 km (of which 293 km electrified) mainly on 1,676 mm gauge, with some metre gauge line. Passenger-km travelled in 2011 came to 20.6bn. and freight tonne-km to 1.8bn.

Civil Aviation

There are international airports at Karachi, Islamabad, Lahore, Peshawar and Quetta.

The national carrier is the state-owned Pakistan International Airlines, or PIA. It operates scheduled services to 46 international and 24 domestic destinations. In 2006, 88,302,000 revenue-km were flown. The revenue passengers carried totalled 5.73m. in 2006 and revenue tonne-km came to 1,801m. Operating revenues of the corporation stood at Rs70,587m. in 2006 and operating expenditure at Rs79,164m.

Shipping

In Jan. 2009 there were 16 ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 384,000 GT. The busiest port is Karachi. In 2008–09 cargo traffic totalled a record 38,732,000 tonnes (13,364,000 tonnes loaded and 25,368,000 tonnes discharged). In 2008–09, 2,386 vessels were handled at the port of Karachi. There are also ports at Port Qasim, which handled 25,023,000 tonnes in 2008–09, and Gwadar.

Telecommunications

The telephone system is government-owned. In 2013 there were an estimated 6.4m. main (fixed) telephone lines. In the same year mobile phone subscriptions numbered an estimated 127.7m. An estimated 10.9% of the population were internet users in 2013. In March 2012 there were 6.4m. Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The Federal Judiciary consists of the Supreme Court of Pakistan, which is a court of record and has threefold jurisdiction; original, appellate and advisory. There are four High Courts in Lahore, Peshawar, Quetta and Karachi. Under the Constitution, each has power to issue directions of writs of Habeas Corpus, Mandamus, Certiorari and others. Under them are district and sessions courts of first instance in each district; they have also some appellate jurisdiction. Below these are subordinate courts and village courts for civil matters and magistrates for criminal matters.

The Constitution provides for an independent judiciary, as the greatest safeguard of citizens' rights. There is an Attorney-General, appointed by the President, who has right of audience in all courts and the Parliament, and a Federal Ombudsman.

A Federal Sharia Court at the High Court level has been established to decide whether any law is wholly or partially un-Islamic. In Aug. 1990 a presidential ordinance decreed that the criminal code must conform to Islamic law (Sharia), and in May 1991 parliament passed a law incorporating it into the legal system.

538,048 crimes were reported in 2007. Execution of the death penalty for murder, in abeyance since 1986, was resumed in 1992. The first judicial execution in four years was carried out in Nov. 2012, although there have been frequent reports of extrajudicial executions since 2008. There were just seven judicial executions reported in 2014, but 326 in 2015. There were 10,556 murders in 2007. The population in penal institutions in Dec. 2012 was 74,944 (39 per 100,000 of national population). The International Centre for Prison Studies estimated in 2014 that 69.1% of prisoners had yet to receive a trial. In 2015 the World Justice Project Rule of Law Index, which provides data on how the rule of law is experienced by the general public across eight categories, ranked Pakistan 94th of 102 countries for criminal justice and 91st for civil justice.

Education

In 1998 the landmark National Education Policy (1998–2010) was launched with the aim of eradicating illiteracy and spreading basic education. The policy stressed vocational and technical education, disseminating a common culture based on Islamic ideology. The follow-up National Education Policy 2009 reinforced the position that education and training 'should enable the citizens of Pakistan to lead their lives according to the teachings of Islam'. In 2010 the constitution was amended by the addition of an article declaring: 'The state shall provide free and compulsory education to all children of the age of five to sixteen in such a manner as may be determined by law.' The adult literacy rate in 2008 was 54%. Adult literacy programmes are being strengthened.

In 2007 there were 17.98m. primary schools pupils (450,027 teaching staff), 9.15m. secondary school pupils (197,082 teaching staff in 2004) and 955,000 students in tertiary education (52,245 academic staff). There are 70 public and 58 private universities of which Quaid-i-Azam University in Islamabad and the University of the Punjab in Lahore are considered to be the most prestigious.

Public expenditure on education came to 2.8% of GNI and 11.2% of total government spending in 2007.

Health

In 2002 there were 906 hospitals and 4,590 dispensaries (with a total of 98,264 beds) and 862 maternity and child welfare centres. There were 126,350 doctors, 70,698 nurses and midwives and 15,790 dentists in 2005.

Welfare

The official retirement age is 60 (men), 55 (women) or 50 (miners). To qualify for a pension, 15 years of contributions are needed. The minimum old age and survivor pension is Rs3,600 per month (as of 2014).

Medical services, provided mainly through social security facilities, cover cash and medical benefits such as general medical care, specialist care, medicines, hospitalization, maternity care and transportation.

RELIGION

Pakistan was created as a Muslim state. Around 85–90% of Muslims are Sunni and 10–15% Shia according to estimates by the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life. Religious groups: Muslims, 93%; Christians, 2%; Hindus, Parsees, Buddhists, Qadianis and others. Pakistan has the second highest number of Muslims, after Indonesia. There is a Minorities Wing at the Religious Affairs Ministry to safeguard the constitutional rights of religious minorities.

CULTURE

There is a Pakistan National Council of the Arts, a cultural organization to promote art and culture in Pakistan and abroad.

World Heritage Sites

There are six sites under Pakistani jurisdiction which appear on the UNESCO World Heritage List. They are (with year entered on list): the archaeological ruins at Moenjodaro (1980), Taxila (1980), the Buddhist ruins at Takht-i-Bahi and the neighbouring city remains at Sahr-i-Bahlol (1980), Thatta (1981), the Fort and Shalimar Gardens in Lahore (1981) and Rohtas Fort (1997).

Press

In 2007 there were 400 paid-for dailies and 1,200 paid-for non-daily periodicals. Average combined circulation of all dailies in 2007 was 9,935,000. The most popular daily papers in 2008 were Jang, with a circulation of 450,000, and Express, with a circulation of 375,000. The most widely read English-language paper is Dawn, with an average daily circulation of 225,000 copies in 2008.

Tourism

In 2010 there were 906,800 non-resident tourists including 288,200 from the UK, 120,400 from the USA, 110,900 from Afghanistan, 46,200 from Canada and 43,700 from India. 54% of tourists in 2010 visited Punjab and 29% Sindh.

Festivals

Pakistan is rich in culture. Famous festivals include the Eid Festival, Eid-e-Milad un Nabi (Birthday of Prophet Muhammad), the Basnat Festival, Shab-e-Baraat Festival and the Independence Day Festival.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Spain acquired sovereignty over the Palau Islands in 1886 but sold the archipelago to Germany in 1899. Japan occupied the islands in 1914 and in 1921 they were mandated to Japan by the League of Nations. Captured by Allied Forces in 1944, the islands became part of the UN Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands created on 18 July 1947 and administered by the USA. Following a referendum in July 1978 in which Palauans voted against joining the new Federated States of Micronesia, the islands became autonomous from 1 Jan. 1981. A referendum in Nov. 1993 favoured a Compact of Free Association with the USA. Palau became an independent republic on 1 Oct. 1994.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

The archipelago lies in the western Pacific and has a total land area of 488 sq. km (188 sq. miles). It comprises 26 islands and over 300 islets. Only nine of the islands are inhabited, the largest being Babelthuap (396 sq. km), but most inhabitants live on the small island of Koror (18 sq. km) to the south. In Oct. 2006 the capital moved from Koror to Melekeok, a newly built town in eastern Babelthuap. The total population of Palau at the time of the 2012 census was 17,501 (9,217 males and 8,284 females), giving a density of 35.9 per sq. km. In 2005 approximately 73% of the population were Palauans and 16% Filipinos.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 21,000.

In 2011, 84.3% of the population lived in urban areas. Some 6,000 Palauans live abroad. The local language is Palauan; both Palauan and English are official languages.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2012 births, 268; deaths, 164. Rates, 2012 (per 1,000 population): births, 12.7; deaths, 7.8; infant mortality (2012), 12 per 1,000 live births. Annual population growth rate, 2003–13, 0.6%. Expectation of life at birth, 2010: males, 61 years; females, 68. Fertility rate, 2013, 1.7 births per woman.

CLIMATE

Palau has a pleasantly warm climate throughout the year with temperatures averaging 81°F (27°C). The heaviest rainfall is between July and Oct.

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

The Constitution was adopted on 2 April 1979 and took effect from 1 Jan. 1981. The Republic has a bicameral legislature, the Olbiil Era Kelulau (National Congress), comprising a 13-member Senate and a 16-member House of Delegates (one from each of the Republic's 16 states), both elected for a term of four years as are the President and Vice-President. Customary social roles and land and sea rights are allocated by a matriarchal 16-clan system.

National Anthem

'Belau loba klesiich er a kelulul' ('Palau is coming forth with strength and power'); words anonymous, tune Y. O. Ezekiel.

RECENT ELECTIONS

At the elections on 6 Nov. 2012 Tommy Remengesau, Jr was elected president with 58.0% of votes cast against 42.0% for incumbent president Johnson Toribiong. At the legislative elections that were also held on 6 Nov. 2012 only non-partisans were elected.

CURRENT GOVERNMENT

President: Tommy Remengesau, Jr; b. 1956 (in office since 17 Jan. 2013, having previously been president from Jan. 2001–Jan. 2009).

Vice-President and Minister of Justice: Antonio Bells.

In March 2016 the cabinet consisted of:

Minister of Community and Cultural Affairs: Baklai Temengil. Education: Sinton Soalablai. Finance: Elbuchel Sadang. Health: Gregorio Ngirmang. Natural Resources, Environment and Tourism: Flemming Umiich Sengebau. Public Infrastructure, Industries and Commerce: Charles Obichang. Minister of State for Foreign Affairs: Billy Kuarto.

CURRENT LEADERS

Tommy Remengesau, Jr

Position
President

Introduction

Tommy Remengesau, Jr first became president in Jan. 2001 and was re-elected in Nov. 2004. Out of office from 2009, he won a third term in Nov. 2012. The US-educated career politician prioritized improvements in basic services and higher levels of foreign investment.

Early Life

Tommy Esang Remengesau, Jr was born on 28 Feb. 1956 on the island of Koror, Palau, in the US-administered Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands (TTPI). The eldest son of Thomas O. Remengesau, Sr (who served as president from 1988–89), he graduated in criminal justice from Grand Valley State College in Michigan, USA in 1978. On his return to Palau, Remengesau began work at the Olbiil Era Kelulau (OEK), Palau's National Congress. In 1984 he became the youngest Palauan to be elected a senator in the OEK. Re-elected in 1988, he served on the committee on ways and means, playing a key role in reducing Palau's budget deficit and securing financial stability.

In 1992 Remengesau was elected vice-president and the following year Palauan voters approved a Compact of Free Association with the USA. With responsibility for the finance portfolio, Remengesau was credited with reforming the financial system and preparing the new sovereign state (established in 1994) for membership of the IMF and the World Bank Group. He won the 2000 presidential elections, claiming 52% of the vote against Peter Sugiyama.

Career in Office

Remengesau set out to reduce his country's dependence on the USA and announced plans to increase revenue from tourism. He pledged to achieve these aims while protecting the country's natural environment, particularly the coral reef, and preserving the island's resources. In 2006 he launched the Micronesia Challenge, which encouraged neighbouring countries to follow Palau's conservation commitments.

Remengesau began a new four-year term following the election of Nov. 2004, in which he claimed 66.5% of the vote against Polycarp Basilius. In Oct. 2006 the institutions of government began relocating to a new capital, Melekeok, in eastern Babelthup. In 2008 Remengesau announced he would seek a seat in the Senate, having held the presidency for the maximum two consecutive terms allowed by the constitution. However, his campaign was unsuccessful and he came 11th in the election. He was succeeded as president by Johnson Toribiong in Jan. 2009.

In April 2009 an investigation found that Remengesau was guilty of incorrectly filing the financial details of properties in which he had an interest. He was charged with 19 counts of violating Palau's code of ethics in 2002 and 2003, accusations he described as 'selective persecution'. In April 2010 Associate Justice Kathleen Salii fined Remengesau US$156,400, equivalent to an eighth of the amount initially recommended by prosecutor Michael Copeland.

Remengesau was elected to a further four-year term as president in Nov. 2012, having defeated Toribiong on a platform of encouraging foreign investment and improving services for grassroots communities. He took office on 17 Jan. 2013. In 2014 he announced a ban on all commercial fishing in Palau's exclusive economic zone, creating a marine sanctuary to prevent overexploitation.

ECONOMY

Overview

The economy is dependent on tourism and foreign aid, with tourism contributing about half of GDP and grants a quarter. The USA provides assistance under a Compact of Free Association, giving Washington responsibility for Palau's defence and security matters. Grants under the Compact, guaranteed until 2024, increased in 2010 ahead of a gradual decline. The IMF has stressed the importance of tax reforms as tax revenues are among the lowest in the Pacific region.

The global downturn caused a 20% decline in tourism arrivals in 2008–09 but the sector had rebounded strongly by 2012. However, over-reliance on tourism, aid and imports poses risks to an otherwise favourable economic outlook.

Currency

US currency is used. There was inflation of 2.8% in 2013 and 4.0% in 2014.

Budget

The fiscal year begins on 1 Oct. Revenues for 2008–09 were US$81.3m. and expenditures US$95.0m. Grants accounted for 53.5% of revenues in 2008–09 and tax revenue 36.5%; current expenditure accounted for 77.6% of expenditures in 2008–09.

Performance

Total GDP in 2014 was US$251m. The economy grew by 3.2% in 2012, but contracted by 1.8% in 2013. It recovered in 2014 with growth of 4.9%.

Banking and Finance

The National Development Bank of Palau is situated in Koror. Other banks include the Bank of Guam, the Bank of Hawaii and Bank Pacific.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Electricity

Electricity production was approximately 96m. kWh in 2011; installed capacity was about 52,000 kW in 2011.

Agriculture

Subsistence farming is one of the major economic activities. In 2012 approximately 2,000 people were economically active in agriculture. Agricultural products include bananas, coconuts, copra, cassava, sweet potatoes, taro and yams. There were about 1,000 ha. of arable land in 2012 and 2,000 ha. of permanent crop land.

Forestry

Forests covered 0.04m. ha. in 2010, or 88% of the land area.

Fisheries

In 2012 the catch totalled an estimated 900 tonnes, mainly tuna.

INDUSTRY

There is little industry, but the principal activities are food-processing and boat-building.

Labour

In 2005 the total labour force numbered 10,203 (6,214 males and 3,989 females), of whom 9,777 were employed (5,982 males and 3,795 females).

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Imports and Exports

Imports (2011–12) US$135.6m.; exports (2011–12) US$20.9m. The main trading partner is Japan for exports and the USA for imports.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

There were 146 km of roads in 2007 including the 85-km US-funded two-lane highway around Babelthup, providing a link between the old capital of Koror and the new capital of Melekeok.

Civil Aviation

The main airport is on Koror (Roman Tmetuchl International Airport, near Airai). In 2010 there were scheduled flights to Guam, Manila, Seoul, Taipei and Yap (Micronesia). A new Palau-based carrier, Palau Airways, was founded in 2011 and launched scheduled passenger services between Koror and Taipei in May 2012, but it halted its operations in April 2013.

Shipping

There is a port at Malakal.

Telecommunications

In 2011 there were 6,916 main (fixed) telephone lines and 15,445 mobile phone subscribers.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

There is a Supreme Court and various subsidiary courts. The population in penal institutions in 2010 was 79 (378 per 100,000 national population).

Education

In 2007 there were 1,544 pupils at primary schools and 2,448 at secondary schools. In 2006 there were 21 primary schools (19 public and two private) and six secondary schools (one public and five private). There were 727 students at Palau Community College in 2002–03. The adult literacy rate is 92%.

In 2002 government expenditure on education came to an estimated 10.3% of GDP.

Health

There were 26 doctors, 117 nurses and one midwife in 2006 and five dentists and one pharmacist in 2007. Palau has the highest incidence of overweight or obese adults of any nation according to World Health Organization estimates in 2014, at 78.4%.

RELIGION

The majority of the population is Roman Catholic.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

Rock Islands Southern Lagoon was added to the UNESCO World Heritage List in 2012. It covers hundreds of large and small forested limestone islands, channels, tunnels, caves, arches and coves scattered within a marine lagoon protected by a barrier reef. The site is of exceptional aesthetic beauty and home to diverse and abundant marine life.

Press

There are three local newspapers—Island Times, Tia Belau and Palau Horizon—although none are published daily.

Tourism

Tourism is a major industry, particularly marine-based. There were 83,795 visitor arrivals in 2009 (down from a record 94,895 in 2004). Of the visitor arrivals in 2009, 68,329 were for tourist purposes. Visitors to Palau in 2009 included: 27,180 from Japan; 16,571 from the Republic of China; 13,193 from the Republic of Korea.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Ceramic objects unearthed on Panama's Pacific coast suggest the area was settled from 2,500 BC. Maize cultivation began in southern Panama around 1,500 BC and by 300 BC it supported numerous large, permanent villages. Public architecture was in evidence by AD 500, along with pottery (Gran Cocle), gold ornaments and elaborate burial chambers. From AD 750 present-day Panama was widely settled by Chibchan, Chococo and Cueva peoples, and there was trade with other groups across central America.

A Spanish adventurer, Rodrigo de Bastidas, explored the isthmus of Panama in 1501, followed by Christopher Columbus the following year. Nuestra Señora de la Asunción de Panamá (present-day Panama City) was founded in 1519. The first European settlement on the Pacific Ocean, it was a staging post for later Spanish conquests across central and south America. A part of the New Kingdom of Granada, from 1549 Panama was ruled by the Audiencia of Bogotá. It was a key port for shipping gold, silver and other treasures from the western fringe of South America to Spain.

In the late 1690s the isthmus saw an ill-fated attempt by the Kingdom of Scotland to establish a colony called New Caledonia. Poor planning, insufficient resources, a lack of opportunities for trade and crippling diseases led to the scheme's demise at the hands of Spanish forces in 1700. Panama was formally incorporated into the Viceroyalty of New Granada in 1739, which encompassed present-day Colombia, Ecuador and Venezuela.

An independence movement for New Granada was precipitated by the Napoleonic invasion of Spain in 1808. Antonio Nariño, who took part in an uprising at Bogotá in 1810, and Simón Bolívar became leading revolutionary figures. Bolívar's victory at Boyacá in 1819 was followed by the Spanish surrender of Cartagena in 1821. Panama was incorporated into the new independent Republic of Colombia, which included Venezuela and (from 1822) Ecuador under Bolívar's leadership. Rebellions against rule from Bogotá took place in 1830 and 1840, before the Bidlack-Mallarino Treaty of 1846 granted the USA rights to both build a railway across Panama (completed in 1855) and intervene militarily in the event of disturbances.

While Colombia was embroiled in the Thousand Day War (1899–1902) Panama again sought independence, with separatists such as José Agustín Arango favouring direct negotiation with the USA over plans for a Panama Canal. The USA chose to back the revolution and Panama declared independence on 3 Nov. 1903. A subsequent treaty granted the USA the use, occupation and control of a Canal Zone, with full sovereign rights in perpetuity. In return the USA guaranteed the independence of the republic. The Canal was opened on 15 Aug. 1914.

US domination of Panama provoked frequent anti-American protests. In 1968 Col. Omar Torrijos Herrera took power in a coup and attempted to negotiate a more advantageous treaty with the USA. Two new treaties between Panama and the USA were agreed in Aug. 1977 and signed in Sept. of the same year. One dealt with the operation and defence of the Canal until the end of 1999 and the other guaranteed permanent neutrality.

Torrijos vacated his position as chief of government in 1978 but remained head of the National Guard until his death in an air crash in 1981. Subsequently, Gen. Manuel Noriega, Torrijos' successor as head of the National Guard, became the strong man of the regime. His position was threatened by internal political opposition and economic pressure applied by the USA but in Oct. 1989 a US-backed coup attempt failed. On 15 Dec. Gen. Noriega declared a 'state of war' with the USA. On 20 Dec. the USA invaded. Gen. Noriega surrendered on 3 Jan. 1990. Accused of drug dealing, he was convicted by a court in Miami. All remaining US troops left the country when the Panama Canal was handed back to Panama at the end of 1999.

In a referendum in 2006, voters backed a US$5.2bn. plan to widen the Panama Canal, potentially doubling its capacity. The conservative retail tycoon Ricardo Martinelli won a landslide victory in the April 2009 presidential election, promising to take a tough stance on crime and rising prices.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Panama is bounded in the north by the Caribbean Sea, east by Colombia, south by the Pacific Ocean and west by Costa Rica. The area is 75,001 sq. km. Population at the census of 2010 was 3,405,813 (1,693,229 females); density, 44.9 per sq. km. The population was 75.5% urban in 2011.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 3.93m.

The largest towns (2010) are Panama City, the capital, on the Pacific coast (430,299) and its suburb San Miguelito (315,019). Other large towns are Las Cumbres, Tocumen, David, Arraiján and Colón.

The areas and populations of the nine provinces and the three province-level indigenous regions, plus their capitals, are:

Province	Sq. km	Census 2010	Capital
Bocas del Toro	4,601	125,461	Bocas del Toro
Chiriquí	6,477	416,873	David

¹Includes the indigenous sub-province of Kuna de Wargandí.

²Indigenous region. ³Includes the indigenous sub-province of Kuna de Madungandí. ⁴Includes the province of Panamá Oeste, established in 2014.

The population is a mix of African, American, Arab, Chinese, European and Indian immigrants. The official language is Spanish.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2006 births, 65,764; deaths, 14,358; marriages, 10,747; divorces, 2,866. Birth rate, 2006 (per 1,000 population), 20.0; death rate, 4.4. Annual population growth rate, 2000–05, 2.5%. Expectation of life at birth, 2007, was 73.0 years for males and 78.2 years for females. In 2006 the most popular age range for marrying was 25–29 for both males and females. Infant mortality, 2010, 17 per 1,000 live births; fertility rate, 2006, 2.4 births per woman.

CLIMATE

Panama has a tropical climate, unvaryingly with high temperatures and only a short dry season from Jan. to April. Rainfall amounts are much higher on the north side of the isthmus. Panama City, Jan. 79°F (26.1°C), July 81°F (27.2°C). Annual rainfall 70" (1,770 mm). Colón, Jan. 80°F (26.7°C), July 80°F (26.7°C). Annual rainfall 127" (3,175 mm). Balboa Heights, Jan. 80°F (26.7°C), July 81°F (27.2°C). Annual rainfall 70" (1,759 mm). Cristóbal, Jan. 80°F (26.7°C), July 81°F (27.2°C). Annual rainfall 130" (3,255 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

The 1972 constitution, as amended in 1978, 1983, 1994 and 2004, provides for a President, elected for five years, two Vice-Presidents and a 72-seat Legislative Assembly (since reduced to 71 seats) to be elected for five-year terms by a direct vote. As a result of the amendment of 2004 there has only been one Vice-President since the election of May 2009. To remain registered, parties must have attained at least 50,000 votes at the last election. A referendum held on 15 Nov. 1992 rejected constitutional reforms by 64% of votes cast. Turnout was 40%. In a referendum on 30 Aug. 1998 voters rejected proposed changes to the constitution which would allow for a President to serve a second consecutive term.

CURRENT LEADERS

Juan Carlos Varela

Position
President

Introduction

Juan Carlos Varela Rodríguez was elected president in May 2014. His scheduled five-year term was expected to be dominated by efforts to tackle government corruption.

Early Life

Born in Panama City on 12 Dec. 1963 into one of the country's wealthiest families, he graduated in industrial engineering from Georgia Institute of Technology in the USA in 1985 and began working in politics in the 1990s. He was head of the Panameñista Party's election campaign for the state presidency in 1994 and became party president in 2006. He has also held senior posts within his family's Varela Hermanos drinks business.

In 2009 Varela was the Panameñista Party's presidential candidate but joined forces with rival contender Ricardo Martinelli of the Democratic Change party in order to secure the position of vice-president. He also served as foreign minister. Domestically, he was behind a popular programme that aimed to provide US$100 a month to those over the age of 70 who did not have alternative retirement income.

The relationship between Martinelli and Varela broke down in 2011 amid allegations of corruption. Varela denied receiving funds from bank accounts linked to an international gambling ring, instead accusing Martinelli of being behind the story in an attempt to derail Varela's presidential aspirations. Martinelli dismissed him as foreign minister after he refused to back a referendum to allow the president to serve consecutive terms. Varela subsequently became a staunch critic of Martinelli, accusing him of corruption and racketeering.

Career in Office

In May 2014 Varela won the race for the presidency, defeating José Domingo Arias of Martinelli's Democratic Change. Having campaigned on a platform of greater honesty and transparency in government, he was sworn in on 1 July and allied himself with the Democratic Revolutionary Party to secure majority congressional backing.

Bequeathed a Panama Canal expansion project that had already overrun its budget by US$1.6bn., Varela pushed back its completion deadline to early 2016. Meanwhile, he backed up his promise to fight corruption by suspending a Supreme Court judge following charges including money-laundering and illicit enrichment.

On the international stage, he oversaw the restoration of diplomatic relations with Venezuela in July 2014 after President Nicolás Maduro had cut ties with Panama in March on the grounds that the country was in an 'open conspiracy' with the USA against him. Varela also strongly opposed Colombia's decision to list Panama as a tax haven, a designation that allowed Bogotá to impose higher taxes on Colombian-held assets in the country.

DEFENCE

The armed forces were disbanded in 1990 and constitutionally abolished in 1994. Divided between both coasts, the National Maritime Service, a coast guard rather than a navy, numbered around 600 personnel in 2011. In addition there is a paramilitary police force of 11,000 and a paramilitary national air service of 400 with no combat capable aircraft. In 2013 defence expenditure totalled US$637m. (US$179 per capita), representing 1.5% of GDP. For Police see JUSTICE below.

ECONOMY

Agriculture accounted for 5.3% of GDP in 2010, industry 16.8% and services 77.9%.

Overview

Panama is an upper-middle income country in Latin America and has been one of the fastest-growing economies in the world since the turn of the century. The annual growth rate averaged 6.8% between 2001 and 2014—more than double the regional average—mainly driven by buoyant transportation, commerce and tourism sectors, as well as a developed financial services industry.

Given its geographical location between North and South America, Panama is strategically important for shipping and trade. Most of the country's economic activities are centred on its Canal and the Colón Free Zone, at the Canal's Atlantic entrance. 80% of GDP is derived from related sectors, including transportation, packaging, importing and exporting, and the country is a consistently attractive destination for foreign direct investment. Public investment is expected to decrease in the short term after completion of major infrastructure projects, such as the Canal expansion (which was scheduled to be finished in May 2016) and the country's first Metro line (which opened in 2014).

The poverty rate fell from 39.9% to 26.2%, and extreme poverty from 15.6% to 11.3%, between 2007 and 2012. However, many challenges remain. Nationally extreme poverty is below 4% in urban areas and around 27% in rural areas, while in the indigenous people's regions poverty is recorded at over 70% and extreme poverty at above 40%.

The banking system is highly integrated with international markets. The national currency is pegged to the US dollar, making it vulnerable to global trends. Panama and the USA entered a Free Trade Agreement in June 2007. This was approved by the Panamanian National Assembly the following month and by the US Congress in Oct. 2011.

Currency

The monetary unit is the balboa (PAB) of 100 centésimos, at parity with the US dollar. The only paper currency used is that of the USA. US coinage is also legal tender. Inflation was 4.0% in 2013 and 2.6% in 2014. In July 2005 foreign exchange reserves were US$1,018m. and total money supply was 1,587m. balboas.

Budget

Revenues in 2007 were 4,433m. balboas (tax revenue, 48.1%) and expenditures 4,432m. balboas (current expenditure, 78.1%).

VAT is 7%.

Performance

Real GDP growth was 10.8% in 2012—the highest rate of any Latin American or Caribbean country in that year. In 2013 the economy grew by 8.4% and in 2014 by 6.2%. Total GDP in 2014 was US$46.2bn.

Banking and Finance

There is no statutory central bank. Banking is supervised and promoted by the Superintendency of Banks (formerly the National Banking Commission); the Superintendent is Alberto Diamond. Government accounts are handled through the state-owned Banco Nacional de Panama. In 2007 there were two other state banks, 39 banks operating under general licence, 34 under international licence and 11 as representative offices. In Aug. 2007 the combined assets of those banks operating under general and international licences totalled US$50,500m.; their combined deposits were US$36,500m.

Foreign debt was US$11,412m. in 2010, representing 45.8% of GNI.

There is a stock exchange in Panama City.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Panama's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2011 were the equivalent of 5.0 tonnes per capita.

Electricity

In 2011 capacity was 2.4m. kW. Production was 7.9bn. kWh in 2011 (52% hydro-electric and 48% thermal), with consumption per capita 2,118 kWh.

Minerals

Limestone, clay and salt are produced. There are known to be copper deposits.

Agriculture

In 2002, 19.3% of the economically active population were engaged in agriculture. In 2002 there were approximately 548,000 ha. of arable land and 147,000 ha. of permanent crops. Production in 2002 (in 1,000 tonnes): sugarcane, 1,441; bananas, 500; rice, 245; plantains, 105; maize, 76; melons and watermelons, 63; oranges, 47; potatoes, 26; yams, 26; pineapples, 23; tomatoes, 21; cassava, 20.

Livestock (2003 estimates): 1,550,000 cattle, 305,000 pigs, 175,000 horses and 14m. chickens.

Livestock products (2002, in 1,000 tonnes): beef and veal, 54; pork and pork products, 18; poultry meat, 89; milk, 178; eggs, 26.

Forestry

Forests covered 3.25m. ha. in 2010 (44% of the land area). There are great timber resources, notably mahogany. Production in 2011 totalled 1.30m. cu. metres.

Fisheries

In 2010 the catch totalled 163,488 tonnes (mainly shrimp), almost entirely from sea fishing.

INDUSTRY

The main industry is agricultural produce processing. Other areas include chemicals and paper-making. Cement production (2008 estimate), 1,843,000 tonnes; sugar (2005), 157,280 tonnes.

Labour

The labour force in 2013 was 1,799,000 (1,414,000 in 2003). 69.9% of the population aged 15–64 was economically active in 2013. In the same year 4.1% of the population was unemployed.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

The Colón Free Zone, the largest free zone in the Americas, is an autonomous institution set up in 1953. More than 2,500 companies were operating there in 2007.

Imports and Exports

Imports and exports in US$1m.:

	2002	2003	2004	2005	2006
Imports f.o.b.	3,035.3	3,122.3	3,592.2	4,152.8	4,817.7
Exports f.o.b.	759.6	805.0	891.1	963.2	1,021.8

Main imports: machinery and apparatus, mineral fuels, chemicals and chemical products. Main exports: marine products, bananas, melons.

Chief import suppliers, 2006: USA, 27%; Curaçao, 10%; Costa Rica, 5%; Japan, 5%. Principal export markets, 2006: USA, 39%; Spain, 8%; Netherlands, 7%; Sweden, 6%.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

In 2006 there were 13,365 km of roads, of which 34.1% were paved. The road from Panama City westward to the cities of David and Concepción and to the Costa Rican frontier, with several branches, is part of the Pan-American Highway. The Trans-Isthmian Highway connects Panama City and Colón. In 2007 there were 436,200 passenger cars, 174,500 lorries and vans and 20,100 buses and coaches. There were 425 road accident fatalities in 2007.

Rail

The 1,435 mm gauge Ferrocarril de Panama, which connects Ancón on the Pacific with Cristóbal on the Atlantic along the bank of the Panama Canal, is the principal railway. Traffic in 2004 amounted to 77,000 passengers and 700,000 tonnes of freight. The United Brands Company runs 376 km of railway, and the Chiriquí National Railroad 171 km.

Civil Aviation

There is an international airport at Panama City (Tocumén International). The national carrier is COPA, which flew to 15 different countries in 2003. In 2003 scheduled airline traffic of Panama-based carriers flew 43m. km and carried 1,313,000 passengers (all on international flights). In 2005 Tocumén International handled 2,710,857 passengers and 100,063 tonnes of freight.

Shipping

Panama, a nation with a transcendental maritime career and a strategic geographic position, is the shipping world's preferred flag for ship registry. The Ship Registry System equally accepts vessels of local or international ownership, as long as they comply with all legal parameters. Ship owners also favour Panamanian registry because fees are low. The Panamanian merchant fleet is the largest in the world. In Jan. 2009 there were 6,842 ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 180.87m. GT (representing 22.9% of the world total). Of the 6,842 vessels registered, 2,198 were bulk carriers, 2,174 general cargo ships, 1,078 oil tankers, 798 container ships, 221 chemical tankers, 201 liquid gas tankers and 172 passenger ships.

All the international maritime traffic for Colón and Panama runs through the Canal ports of Cristóbal, Balboa and Manzanillo International.

Panama Canal

The Panama Canal Commission is concerned primarily with the operation of the Canal. In Oct. 2002 a new toll structure was adopted based on ship size and type.

Although most of the world's shipping fleet can use the Canal the percentage that is able to is gradually declining as many new ships are too wide for the Canal. A referendum was held in Oct. 2006 on whether to expand the canal and double its capacity. The US$5.25bn. plan was approved by 78% of voters. The expansion work began in Sept. 2007 and was expected to be completed in May 2016.

Administrator of the Panama Canal Authority: Jorge Quijano.

Particulars of the ocean-going commercial traffic through the Canal are given as follows:

Fiscal year ending 30 Sept.	No. of vessels transiting	Cargo in long tons	Tolls revenue (in US$1)
2008	13,138	209,705,000	1,316,031,000
2009	12,849	197,896,000	1,436,810,000
2010	12,582	204,816,000	1,480,554,000

Most numerous transits by flag (fiscal year 2010): Panama, 2,636; Liberia, 1,989; The Bahamas, 849; Marshall Islands, 703; Hong Kong, 646.

Telecommunications

Panama had 5,677,000 mobile phone subscriptions in 2009 (1,643.7 per 1,000 inhabitants) and 537,100 fixed telephone lines. There were 277.9 internet users per 1,000 inhabitants in 2009. In Dec. 2011 there were 896,000 Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The Supreme Court consists of nine justices appointed by the executive. There is no death penalty. The police force numbered 11,000 in 2011, and includes a Presidential Guard.

The population in penal institutions in Aug. 2013 was 15,126 (411 per 100,000 of national population). 62.5% of prisoners had yet to receive a trial according to 2014 estimates by the International Centre for Prison Studies. In 2015 the World Justice Project Rule of Law Index, which provides data on how the rule of law is experienced by the general public across eight categories, ranked Panama 90th of 102 countries for criminal justice and 61st for civil justice.

Education

Adult literacy was 94% in 2008. Elementary education is compulsory for all children from six to 14 years of age. In 2007 there were 446,176 pupils with 18,183 teaching staff at primary schools and 260,694 pupils with 16,847 teaching staff at secondary schools. In 2006 there were 130,838 students and 11,528 academic staff in tertiary education. The University of Panama (Universidad de Panamá), founded in 1935 in Panama City, is the leading higher education institution.

In 2008 public expenditure on education came to 3.8% of GDP.

Health

In 2002 there were 61 hospitals with a provision of 25 beds per 10,000 persons. There were 4,203 physicians, 897 dentists, 3,451 nurses and 612 pharmacists.

RELIGION

80% of the population is Roman Catholic and 14% Protestant. The remainder of the population follow other religions (notably Islam). There is freedom of religious worship and separation of Church and State. Clergymen may teach in schools but may not hold public office. In Feb. 2016 there was one Roman Catholic cardinal.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

Panama has five sites on the UNESCO World Heritage List: the Fortifications on the Caribbean side of Panama: Portobelo-San Lorenzo (inscribed on the list in 1980); Darien National Park (1981); the Archaeological Site of Panamá Viejo and the Historic District of Panamá (1997 and 2003); and the Coiba National Park (2005).

Panama shares a UNESCO site with Costa Rica: the Talamanca Range-La Amistad Reserves (1983 and 1990), an important cross-breeding site for North and South American flora and fauna.

Press

In 2008 there were seven dailies with a combined circulation of 233,000.

Tourism

In 2011 there were 1,473,000 non-resident tourists (1,324,000 in 2010); spending by tourists totalled US$2,925m. in 2011 (US$2,552m. in 2010).

Festivals

Leading festivals include: the National Folkloric Festival, held annually (Sept.) in Guararé since 1949; the Panama Jazz Festival

(Jan.); the International Fair of the Sea, held in Bocas del Toro province in Sept.; and the International Fair of Changuinola, also in Bocas del Toro in Sept.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

The region was settled by Asian peoples around 50,000 years ago, when New Guinea was still part of the main Australian landmass. 10,000 years ago, at the end of the last ice age, the waters of the Torres Strait cut off New Guinea from Australia, giving rise to separate development of the indigenous peoples. Plant-based agriculture developed about 9,000 years ago in the New Guinea highlands. 2,500 years ago a large migration of Austronesian-speaking peoples settled the coastal areas. These communities developed animal husbandry, pottery and fishing and there is evidence of trade with the southeast Asian mainland. The rugged topography meant that contact between communities was limited and they retained their separate languages and customs. This heterogeneity continued down the centuries, so that today Papua New Guinea has an estimated 1,000 different cultural groups. Spanish and Portuguese explorers reached the island in the early 16th century and the Portuguese are thought to have introduced the kaukau (sweet potato), which became a staple crop. Spain laid claim to the western half of the island in 1545, naming it 'New Guinea' because of the supposed resemblance of its inhabitants to the people of Africa's Guinea coast.

From the late 18th century the British and Dutch competed for control of the island. In 1828 the Dutch claimed the western half as part of the Dutch East Indies, while the eastern half came under British influence. Following an abortive annexation attempt by Australian colonists, Britain declared a protectorate over the southern coast and islands adjacent to the eastern half of New Guinea on 6 Nov. 1884. Germany colonized the northern portion of the eastern half, along with New Britain, New Ireland and Bougainville, an arrangement formalized by the 1885 Anglo-German Agreement.

In 1888 Britain formally annexed the area under its control as British New Guinea and passed its administration to Australia in 1902. On 1 Sept. 1906 the Australian administration renamed it the Territory of Papua, Papua being a Malay word used to describe the Melanesian inhabitants' curly hair. The northeastern section of the island remained a German colony until the outbreak of the First World War in 1914, when Australian armed forces occupied it. For the next seven years it was under their administration and remained so after 1921, when it became a League of Nations mandated territory. In the Second World War, Allied and Japanese forces fought a prolonged military campaign on the island. It began with a Japanese victory at the Battle of Rabaul, New Britain in Feb. 1942 and continued throughout the war, with Japanese troops in occupation for much of the time until the Allies' victory in Aug. 1945.

In 1947 the northeastern part of the island became the UN Trust Territory of New Guinea, before merging in 1949 with the Territory of Papua to become the Territory of Papua New Guinea. A legislative council was established in 1953, succeeded by a house of assembly in 1964. On 1 Dec. 1973 Australia granted Papua New Guinea self-government. After a vigorous debate over questions of land-reform and citizenship, a constitution was passed and on 16 Sept. 1975 Papua New Guinea became fully independent. It also became a member of the Commonwealth, recognizing the British monarch as its own. In the same year the new state ignored a unilateral declaration of independence by the island of Bougainville and suppressed its campaign of civil disobedience. In 1988 an armed campaign by tribes claiming traditional land rights against the Australian owner of the massive Panguna copper field escalated into a civil war for Bougainville's secession. Fighting lasted nine years and cost an estimated 20,000 lives before a permanent truce was signed in April 1998. Bougainville gained autonomy in 2005 and is expected to hold a referendum on full independence in the future.

Political volatility caused frequent changes of government in Papua New Guinea during its first three decades of independence. In 2002, following violence in the general election, the electoral system was changed to encourage stable government. The deployment of Australian police on the island in 2003 caused resentment and from 2005, under a new agreement between the two governments, they operated in smaller numbers and with reduced powers. Despite its considerable mineral resources, the country's economy has stagnated in recent years; the difficulty of establishing land ownership has contributed to this, as has the need to protect the environment in what remains a largely subsistence culture. In 2006 the United Nations downgraded Papua New Guinea's status to least developed nation.

In 2011–12 Papua New Guinea experienced a leadership crisis between Sir Michael Somare and Peter O'Neill. In Aug. 2011, with Prime Minister Somare having been out of the country for five months on medical leave, the government declared the post vacant and O'Neill was elected by parliament, replacing acting prime minister Sam Abal. However, in Dec. the Supreme Court ruled the declaration and the election of O'Neill illegal. It also ordered the reinstatement of Somare. Although Somare and a new cabinet were sworn in, O'Neill refused to step down and the power struggle triggered a failed mutiny by rebel soldiers in Jan. 2012. Having the support of the civil service, the police, the defence force and most MPs, O'Neill remained effectively in control of the country. In May 2012 the Supreme Court once again ruled that Somare should be recognized as the legitimate prime minister. O'Neill's government subsequently ordered the arrest of the chief justice on charges of sedition. The prime minister's office was again declared vacant owing to Somare's continued absence. At the end of the month O'Neill was re-elected unopposed and sworn in as prime minister for the third time.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Papua New Guinea extends from the equator to Cape Baganowa in the Louisiade Archipelago to 11° 40' S. lat. and from the border of West Irian to 160° E. long. with a total area of 462,840 sq. km. According to the 2011 census the population was 7,275,324 (3,772,864 males); density, 15.7 per sq. km.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 7.62m.

In 2011, 12.6% of the population lived in urban areas (the second lowest percentage in the world). In 2011 population of Port Moresby (National Capital District) was 364,125. Other main towns are Lae, Madang, Mount Hagen, Wewak, Goroka and Kimbe. The areas, populations and capitals of the provinces are:

CLIMATE

There is a monsoon climate, with high temperatures and humidity the year round. Port Moresby is in a rain shadow and is not typical of the rest of Papua New Guinea. Jan. 82°F (27.8°C), July 78°F (25.6°C). Annual rainfall 40" (1,011 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

The constitution took effect on 16 Sept. 1975. The head of state is the British sovereign, who is represented by a Governor-General, nominated by parliament for six-year terms. A single legislative house, known as the National Parliament, is made up of 111 members: 89 district representatives and 22 provincial representatives (MPs). The members are elected by universal suffrage; elections are held every five years. All citizens over the age of 18 are eligible to vote and stand for election. Voting is by secret ballot and follows the limited preferential system. The Prime Minister, nominated by parliament and appointed by the Governor-General, selects ministers for the National Executive Council. The government cannot be subjected to a vote of no confidence in the first 18 months of office. The 20 provincial assemblies, comprising elected national MPs, appointed members and elected local government representatives, are headed by a Governor, normally the provincial representative in the National Parliament.

National Anthem

'Arise, all you sons of this land'; words and tune by T. Shacklady.

RECENT ELECTIONS

Parliamentary elections were held between 23 June and 17 July 2012. CURRENT LEADERS

Peter O'Neill

Position

Prime Minister

Introduction

Peter O'Neill was elected by MPs to succeed Sir Michael Somare in Aug. 2011. After Somare refused to acknowledge the result, there were two rival administrations in late 2011. Having been confirmed in office, O'Neill, a businessman and former treasury minister, pledged to fight corruption and develop the nation's infrastructure and services.

Early Life

Born on 13 Feb. 1965 in Pangia District in the Southern Highlands Province, O'Neill graduated in accountancy and commerce from the University of Papua New Guinea in 1988. He practised as a chartered accountant before going into the real estate business. From 1993–97 he was executive chairman of Pangia Enterprises and from 1997–99 served as executive chairman of Pacific Finance, which managed state-owned enterprises including the PNG Banking Corporation and the National Provident Fund.

O'Neill came in for criticism when several of these public enterprises failed, though his supporters praised his financial management and efforts to improve transparency. In 1999 he became executive chairman of Remington Technologies and in 2002 was elected to parliament for the People's National Congress (PNC), representing the constituency of Ialibu-Pangia. From 2002–03 he served as minister for labour and industrial relations and from 2003–04 was minister for public service and leader of government business.

As head of the PNC, he led the opposition from 2004–07. In 2007 he was appointed minister for public service in Somare's National Alliance Party-led coalition government and from 2010–11 also took on the finance and treasury portfolios. In office, he supported the liquefied natural gas projects undertaken in partnership with foreign companies. On 2 Aug. 2011, during Somare's prolonged absence from government for medical treatment, MPs from across the political spectrum elected O'Neill prime minister by 70 votes to 24.

Career in Office

O'Neill's early months were dominated by political instability as Somare challenged the legality of his election. In Dec. 2011 Somare formed a rival administration after the Supreme Court found in favour of the ex-incumbent. Somare's government was initially recognized by Governor-General Sir Michael Ogie but he later reversed his decision and declared O'Neill's premiership to be legitimate. By early 2012 O'Neill had gained widespread recognition, although Somare pursued his legal challenge. In May 2012 the Supreme Court ruled that Somare was still the country's legitimate leader. The chief justice was charged with sedition and a group of police blockaded parliament. However, given that Somare had missed three consecutive sessions of parliament, the prime minister's office was again declared vacant. Having been elected unopposed by 56 of the 109 members of parliament, O'Neill was sworn in as the country's prime minister for the third time on 31 May 2012.

In parliamentary elections held in June and July 2012, the PNC was returned as the largest party, effectively ending the year-long feud with Somare and his supporters. O'Neill promised to act against corruption and to manage a natural gas and minerals boom in the national interest. He faced demands to develop the education and health sectors and to improve the national infrastructure. In Nov. 2012 he proposed an amendment to the constitution (which was approved in Feb. 2013) to extend a ban on votes of no confidence from 18 to 30 months after a government is elected. In Jan. 2013 the People's Party announced that it would merge with the PNC, increasing O'Neill's parliamentary representation. Also that month he banned ministers and officials from travelling abroad on government business without approval, claiming that public money had been abused.

In July 2013 it was agreed that asylum seekers who had arrived by boat in Australia would be sent to Papua New Guinea for assessment and, if their cases were upheld, they would be resettled there. In return, Australia promised to provide substantial aid.

It was reported in Jan. 2014 that arrest warrants served against O'Neill and other ministers by the National Fraud and Anti-Corruption Directorate had been dismissed by a district court. O'Neill had brought an injunction against the warrants, claiming they were part of an opposition coup attempt. However, in June a further arrest warrant was issued after the Directorate accused O'Neill of authorizing fraudulent government payments, and in Nov. 2014 he was referred to a judicial tribunal over allegations of misconduct in office. Investigations into his conduct continued through 2015 as he remained dogged by scandals.

DEFENCE

The Papua New Guinea Defence Force had a total estimated strength of 3,100 in 2011 consisting of land, maritime and air elements. The Land Element, the senior of the three services, had around 2,500 personnel in 2011. The Maritime Operations Element, with around 400 personnel in 2011, has four patrol boats and two landing craft. There is an Air Operations Element, 200 strong in 2011, but it does not possess any combat capable aircraft.

Defence expenditure in 2013 totalled US$84m. (US$13 per capita), representing 0.5% of GDP.

ECONOMY

Agriculture, forestry and fishing contributed 34.8% to GDP in 2008; followed by mining and quarrying, 25.1%; construction, 10.4%; and public administration, defence and services, 8.4%.

Overview

Papua New Guinea, among the poorest of the Pacific nations, rebounded from economic crisis in the late 1990s to enjoy a decade of uninterrupted growth from 2002. The country has large deposits of oil, gas, gold, copper, timber and silver, as well as abundant fisheries. However, the majority of the scattered rural population engage in subsistence activities and tourism remains underdeveloped.

Prudent macroeconomic management preceding the global downturn allowed annual GDP growth to average 7.3% between 2008 and 2012. A significant driver of the economy is the PNG LNG (liquefied natural gas) Project, approved in 2009. Production started ahead of schedule in April 2014. As a result, GDP growth for 2015 was forecast to reach 12%. Acute poverty persists, though, with gender inequality and high rates of HIV/AIDS, malaria and tuberculosis posing significant challenges to long-term growth.

Currency

The unit of currency is the kina (PGK) of 100 toea. The kina was floated in Oct. 1994. Foreign exchange reserves were US$543m. in July 2005, gold reserves 63,000 troy oz and total money supply was K2,765m. Inflation, which averaged 12.3% between 1995 and 2000, was 5.0% in 2013 and 5.3% in 2014.

Budget

In 2009 revenues totalled K6,651.0m. (tax revenue, 74.8%) and expenditures K6,688.0m. (current expenditure, 62.3%).

VAT is 10%.

Performance

Real GDP growth was 8.1% in 2012, 5.5% in 2013 and 8.5% in 2014. Total GDP in 2014 was US$16.9bn.

Banking and Finance

The Bank of Papua New Guinea (Governor, Loi Martin Bakani) assumed the central banking functions formerly undertaken by the Reserve Bank of Australia on 1 Nov. 1973. In 2010 there were four commercial banks: ANZ Papua New Guinea, Bank South Pacific, Maybank (PNG) Ltd and Westpac Papua New Guinea. They had combined assets of K18.3bn. at the end of 2010. There were also 22 savings and loan societies, eight finance companies and two microfinance institutions in 2010.

Foreign debt was US$5,882m. in 2010, representing 62.9% of GNI.

There is a stock exchange in Port Moresby.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2011 were the equivalent of 0.5 tonnes per capita.

Electricity

Installed capacity was an estimated 0.7m. kW in 2011. Production in 2011 was 3.53bn. kWh, around 28% of it hydro-electric. Consumption per capita was an estimated 503 kWh.

Oil and Gas

Natural gas reserves in 2012 were 400bn. cu. metres; output in 2009 was 271m. cu. metres. Crude oil production (2009), 16m. bbls. Oil comes predominantly from the Iagifu field in the Southern Highlands. There were 88m. bbls of proven oil reserves in 2011.

Minerals

In 2004 the mineral sector produced 20.8% of GDP. Copper is the main mineral product. Gold, copper and silver are the only minerals produced in quantity. The Misima open-pit gold mine was opened in 1989 but its resources were depleted by the end of 2001. The Porgera gold mine opened in 1990 with an expected life of 20 years. Major copper deposits in Bougainville have proven reserves of about 800m. tonnes; mining was halted by secessionist rebel activity. Copper and gold deposits in the Star Mountains of the Western Province are being developed by Ok Tedi Mining Ltd at the Mt Fubilan mine. Production of gold commenced in 1984 and of copper concentrates in 1987. In 2005 Ok Tedi Mining Ltd produced 192,978 tonnes of copper and 16 tonnes of gold. Gold mining also began at Lihir in 1997. In 2005 total gold production was 67 tonnes; silver production in 2002 was 64 tonnes.

Agriculture

In 2002 agriculture employed 73% of the economically active population. In 2002 there were approximately 220,000 ha. of arable land and 650,000 ha. of permanent cropland. Minor commercial crops include pyrethrum, tea, peanuts and spices. Locally consumed food crops include sweet potatoes, maize, taro, bananas, rice and sago. Tropical fruits grow abundantly. There is extensive grassland. The sugar industry has made the country self-sufficient in this commodity while a beef-cattle industry is being developed.

Production (2002, in 1,000 tonnes): bananas, 860; coconuts, 513; sweet potatoes, 490; sugarcane, 370; palm oil, 316; yams, 280; taro, 250; cassava, 130.

Livestock (2003 estimates): pigs, 1.8m.; cattle, 90,000; chickens, 4m.

Forestry

The forest area totalled 28.73m. ha. in 2010 (63% of the land area). 91% of forest area is primary forest. Timber production is important for both local consumption and export. Timber production was 10.01m. cu. metres in 2011.

Fisheries

Tuna is the major resource. In 2010 the fish catch was 224,507 tonnes (94% sea fish).

INDUSTRY

Secondary and service industries are expanding for the local market. The main industries are food processing, beverages, tobacco, timber products, wood and fabricated metal products. Industry accounted for 45.2% of GDP in 2006, with manufacturing contributing 6.1%. Production (2002): palm oil, 370,000 tonnes; copra, 110,000 tonnes; wood-based panels, 79,000 cu. metres; sawnwood, 70,000 cu. metres.

Labour

In 2012 the economically active population numbered 3.19m. persons. The rate of unemployment was 2.3%.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Australian aid in 2014–15 amounted to $A450.6m. The 'Pactra II' agreement of 1991 established a free trade zone with Australia and protects Australian investments.

Imports and Exports

Imports in 2008 were US$3,550m. (US$2,945m. in 2007); exports were US$5,805m. (US$4,683m. in 2007).

The main imports in terms of value are machinery and transport equipment, manufactured goods, and food and live animals; and the main exports crude petroleum, gold and logs.

Of imports in 2001, Australia furnished 60.0%; Japan, 8.5%; Singapore, 7.8%; USA, 7.1%. Of exports in 2001, Singapore took 27.5%; Japan, 13.2%; Australia, 10.6%; China, 4.4%.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

In 2002 there were 19,600 km of roads, only about 690 km of which were paved. There were 38,200 passenger cars in use in 2007 and 11,300 lorries and vans.

Civil Aviation

Jacksons International Airport is at Port Moresby. The state-owned national carrier is Air Niugini, which carried 1.5m. passengers in 2013 (1.1m. on domestic flights). In 2010 there were scheduled international flights to Brisbane, Cairns, Hong Kong, Honiara, Manila, Nadi, Singapore, Sydney and Tokyo.

Shipping

There are 12 entry and four other main ports served by five major shipping lines; the Papua New Guinea Shipping Corporation is state-owned. In Jan. 2009 there were 55 ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 44,000 GT.

Telecommunications

In 2009 there were 133.7 mobile phone subscriptions for every 1,000 inhabitants and 8.9 fixed telephone lines per 1,000 inhabitants. In the same year there were an estimated 18.6 internet users per 1,000 inhabitants. In 2004 the government rejected a bid by a South African joint venture to acquire a 51% stake in the state-owned telecommunications company Telikom PNG.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The judicial system consists of a Supreme Court, a National Court, and district and local courts. The Supreme Court sittings are usually held with three or five judges. The death penalty for wilful murder was abolished in 1970 but reintroduced in 1991, although there have not been any executions since 1954.

The population in penal institutions in Dec. 2010 was 4,268 (61 per 100,000 of national population).

Education

The education system has three levels: primary, secondary and tertiary. However, there are no legal provisions regarding either free or compulsory education. In 2008 there were 9,457 elementary and primary schools with 1,138,356 pupils and 33,082 teachers, 94,192 pupils in 208 secondary schools (3,700 teachers) and 30,181 students in institutes of vocational and similar education. There are six universities: the University of Papua New Guinea (UPNG), Port Moresby; the Papua New Guinea University of Technology, Lae; Divine Word University, Madang; Pacific Adventist University, Boroko; the University of Goroka; and the Papua New Guinea University of Natural Resources and Environment, Rabaul. UPNG, founded in 1965, has two campuses in the capital, five provincial open campuses and 13 study centres. In 2002 there were also ten colleges, eight nursing schools and three academic institutes.

Adult literacy rate was an estimated 60.1% in 2009 (63.6% among males and 56.5% among females).

Government expenditure on education totalled K2,155m. in 2013.

Health

In 2008 there were 392 medical officers, 123 dentists and 3,777 nurses and midwives. There were 36 hospitals and 698 clinics plus health centres in 2010.

RELIGION

The Constitution provides for freedom of religion. In 2010 there were an estimated 4.69m. Protestants and 2.06m. Catholics according to the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life.

CULTUREWorld Heritage Sites

There is one UNESCO site in Papua New Guinea: Kuk Early Agricultural Site (inscribed on the list in 2008).

Press

In 2008 there were two daily newspapers (the Papua New Guinea Post-Courier and the National) and a number of weeklies and monthlies. The Papua New Guinea Post-Courier is the oldest (1969) and most widely read, with a daily circulation of 30,000 (2007).

Tourism

In 2011 there were 165,000 non-resident tourists (excluding same-day visitors), up from 146,000 in 2010 and 126,000 in 2009.

Festivals

Alongside the major Christian festivals several cultural shows are held, in Enga (late July), at Mount Hagen (Western Highlands; late Aug.) and at Goroka (Eastern Highlands; mid-Sept.). The Tumbuan Mask Festival takes place at Rabaul (July) and the Hiri Moale Festival in Port Moresby (Sept.) was established to preserve the trading expeditions between the Motu-Koitabu people and the Erema (Kerema). Independence Day is celebrated on 16 Sept.

Bougainville

The region of Bougainville, as part of New Guinea, became a United Nations Trust Territory in 1947 under the jurisdiction of Australia. Bougainville declared independence in 1975 but the uprising was suppressed and the islands became part of the North Solomons Province of the newly independent Papua New Guinea. Following tensions between landowners and Rio Tinto, the owners of the Panguna copper mine, conflict between separatists and Papua New Guinea began in 1989, lasting nearly a decade. A ceasefire was agreed in 1998, overseen by the United Nations. The Bougainville Peace Agreement was signed in Aug. 2001, allowing for the creation of an autonomous government and a referendum on full independence 10–15 years later. After the promulgation of a constitution, elections were held for the autonomous government in May–June 2005. A referendum on independence is expected to take place in 2019.

Area, 9,300 sq. km (3,600 sq. miles); population (2011), 249,358. The autonomous region consists of the main Bougainville island, Buka island and several smaller island groups. The government is currently based at Buka but the capital city will eventually revert to the former capital, Arawa.

In presidential elections held in May 2015 John Momis was re-elected to a second term, defeating eight other candidates. He received 51,382 votes against 18,466 for his nearest rival, Ismael Toroama.

Agriculture is the mainstay of Bougainville's economy. Major crops include cocoa (production in 2006, 16,000 tonnes) and copra (12,472 tonnes). However, the region is still reliant on grants and donors, raising only 20% of its 2007 budget internally. New exploration for minerals is banned but the government is considering reopening Panguna. There is an airport at Buka.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Paraguay was occupied by the Spanish in 1537 and became a Spanish colony as part of the viceroyalty of Peru. The area gained its independence, as the Republic of Paraguay, on 14 May 1811. Paraguay was then ruled by a succession of dictators. A devastating war fought from 1865 to 1870 between Paraguay and a coalition of Argentina, Brazil and Uruguay reduced Paraguay's population from about 600,000 to 233,000. Further severe losses were incurred during the war with Bolivia (1932–35) over territorial claims in the Chaco inspired by the unfounded belief that minerals existed in the territory. A peace treaty by which Paraguay obtained most of the area her troops had conquered was signed in July 1938.

A new constitution took effect in Feb. 1968 under which executive power is discharged by an executive president. Gen. Alfredo Stroessner Mattiauda was re-elected seven times between 1958 and 1988. Since then, Paraguay has had more or less democratic government. On 23 March 1999 Paraguay's vice president Luis María Argaña was assassinated. The following day, Congress voted to impeach President Raúl Cubas who was said to be implicated in the murder. He then resigned. The victory of Fernando Lugo of the Patriotic Alliance for Change in the April 2008 presidential election brought to an end the 61-year rule of the Colorado Party, at the time the world's longest-ruling party.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Paraguay is bounded in the northwest by Bolivia, northeast and east by Brazil and southeast, south and southwest by Argentina. The area is 406,752 sq. km (157,042 sq. miles).

The 2002 census population was 5,163,198 (2,603,242 males), giving a density of 12.7 per sq. km. Estimate 2012: 6,379,000. In 2011, 62.1% lived in urban areas.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 6.64m.

In 2002 the capital, Asunción, had a population of 512,112. Other major cities (2002 census populations) are: Ciudad del Este, 222,274; San Lorenzo, 204,356; Luque, 185,127.

There are 17 departments and the capital city. Area and population (2010 estimates):

Department	Area in sq. km	Population
Asunción (city) ¹	117	518,200

The population is mixed Spanish and Guaraní Indian. There are 89,000 unassimilated Indians of other tribal origin in the Chaco and the forests of eastern Paraguay. The official languages are Spanish and Guaraní: 24.8% of the population speak only Guaraní; 51.5% are bilingual (Spanish/Guaraní); and 7.6% speak only Spanish.

Mennonites, who arrived in three groups (1927, 1930 and 1947), are settled in the Chaco and eastern Paraguay. There are also Korean and Japanese settlers.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2006 births, 112,659; deaths, 19,298. Rates, 2006 (per 1,000 population): birth, 18.7; death, 3.2. Annual population growth rate, 2000–05, 2.0%. CURRENT LEADERS

Horacio Cartes

Position

President

Introduction

Horacio Cartes became president in Aug. 2013, having entered politics just four years earlier. Attracting foreign investment was a key plank of his government's policy.

Early Life

Born on 5 July 1956 in Asunción, Cartes attended the city's Cristo Rey High School and studied at the Spartan School of Aeronautics in Oklahoma, USA. Returning to Paraguay in 1975, he worked at his father's company, Aerocentro S.A., before becoming an entrepreneur. From the mid-1970s he developed a range of commercial interests that included currency exchange, livestock and cigarette manufacture. In the mid-1980s he was investigated on suspicion of currency fraud and spent several years as a fugitive. In 1989 he was briefly imprisoned before the charges against him were dropped.

In 1992 his currency exchange business became the Banco Amambay and from 2001 he was president of the highly successful Club Libertad football club. In the aftermath of the 2008 elections, when Fernando Lugo's left-liberal alliance ousted the conservative National Republican Association–Colorado Party (ANR–PC) from government for the first time in 61 years, Cartes joined the ANR–PC and founded the Colorado Honor Movement (HC) within it. In 2012 the HC initially supported the controversial impeachment of President Lugo, although Cartes later distanced himself from the proceedings.

Having successfully campaigned to liberalize the eligibility rules for party leadership, he won nomination as the ANR–PC's presidential candidate in Dec. 2012. He fought the 2013 general election on pledges to improve education, reduce the deficit and tackle corruption in state-run institutions. After a robust campaign, during which he caused controversy with anti-homosexuality statements and was forced to deny allegations of criminal conduct, he won a decisive victory in April, gaining 46% of the vote to the Liberal Party's 37%.

Career in Office

Cartes took office in Aug. 2013 promising to combat poverty and develop the economy. During his early months in office he vetoed a proposed 10% tax on soybean exports, introduced a fiscal responsibility law that limited budget growth and invited tenders for infrastructure projects. Following a Supreme Court ruling on disclosure of state salaries, he directed that public bodies should make such information available.

In Dec. 2013 he cleared the way for Paraguay's readmission to the regional trade organization MERCOSUR (from which it had been suspended following Lugo's impeachment) by ratifying Venezuela's membership—a step that also facilitated the restoration of diplomatic relations between Venezuela and Paraguay.

The major domestic priorities facing Cartes have been tackling social unrest and corruption, and reducing poverty while controlling public debt.

DEFENCE

The army, navy and air forces are separate services under a single command. The President of the Republic is the active C.-in-C. Conscriptio is for 12 months (two years in the navy).

In 2013 defence expenditure totalled US$364m. (US$55 per capita), representing 1.2% of GDP.

Army

Strength (2011) 7,600 (1,500 conscripts). In addition there is a paramilitary Special Police Force numbering 14,800 (4,000 conscripts).

Navy

Personnel in 2011 totalled 1,950 (of which 850 conscripts) including 900 marines (of which 200 conscripts) and 100 naval aviation.

Air Force

The air force had a strength of 1,100 in 2011 (200 conscripts). There were six combat-capable aircraft in 2011.

ECONOMY

In 2012 agriculture accounted for 17.4% of GDP, industry 28.1% and services 54.5%.

Overview

Agriculture and foreign trade underpin Paraguay's economy. The country is the world's sixth largest producer of soybeans and a major exporter of hydro-electric power. The economy experienced an average annual growth rate of 5% in the decade to 2015, including a leap of 14.2% in 2013 (its highest level since the 1970s), which reflected an improved fiscal outlook—on the back of restored confidence in public institutions, structural reform and debt reduction—and strong exports. Soybeans, beef and hydro-electric energy together accounted for 62% of all exports in the year to Aug. 2015, despite uncertainty in commodity prices and fluctuating energy production caused by changing climate conditions.

There is a large informal component of the economy and the lack of infrastructure to serve basic needs is a growing concern. Human development indicators are below the Latin America and Caribbean average, with 33.8% of the population living in poverty in 2015 and unemployment standing at 5.2%. The government has introduced reforms in response to these challenges, including free access to primary health care and basic education, and is aiming to diversify the economy by offering business-friendly tax incentives.

Currency

The unit of currency is the guaraní (PYG), notionally divided into 100 céntimos. In July 2005 total money supply was 4,733.6bn. guaranís and foreign exchange reserves were US$1,109m. Inflation was 2.7% in 2013 and 5.0% in 2014.

Budget

Budgetary central government revenue and expenditure in 1bn. guaranís:

	2009	2010	2011
Revenue	13,877.9	16,242.2	18,969.3
Expenditure	12,057.1	13,076.6	15,716.9

Principal sources of revenue in 2011: taxes on goods and services, 8,811.8bn. guaranís; taxes on income, profits and capital gains, 2,610.6bn. guaranís; taxes on international trade and transactions, 1,704.0bn. guaranís. Main items of expenditure by economic type in 2011: compensation of employees, 8,046.9bn. guaranís; grants, 2,534.6bn. guaranís; social benefits, 1,965.2bn. guaranís.

VAT is 10% (reduced rate, 5%).

Performance

The economy shrank by 1.2% in 2012. However, in 2013 real GDP growth was 14.2%—the highest rate of any Latin American or Caribbean country that year. There was then growth of 4.4% in 2014. Total GDP in 2014 was US$30.9bn.

Banking and Finance

The Central Bank is a state-owned autonomous agency with the sole right of note issue, control over foreign exchange and the supervision of commercial banks (President, Carlos Fernández Valdovinos). There is a Superintendencia de Bancos under Nelson Valiente Saucedo. In 2002 there were five commercial banks and 11 foreign banks.

Foreign debt was US$4,938m. in 2010, representing 25.3% of GNI.

There is a stock exchange in Asunción.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Paraguay's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption and flaring of fossil fuels were the equivalent of 0.6 tonnes per capita in 2011.

Electricity

Installed capacity was 8.8m. kW in 2011. Output (2011), 57.63bn. kWh (almost exclusively hydro-electric); consumption per capita in 2011 was 1,750 kWh. Paraguay is the fourth largest exporter of electricity (after France, Germany and Canada), with 46.1bn. kWh in 2011.

Minerals

The country is poor in minerals. Limestone, gypsum, kaolin and salt are extracted. Deposits of bauxite, iron ore, copper, manganese and uranium exist. 2006 estimated output: kaolin, 66,000 tonnes; limestone, 16,000 tonnes.

Agriculture

In 2002, 33.4% of the economically active population were engaged in agriculture. In 2002 there were approximately 3.02m. ha. of arable land and 95,000 ha. of permanent crops.

Output (in 1,000 tonnes), 2002: cassava, 4,430; soybeans, 3,300; sugarcane, 3,210; maize, 867; wheat, 359; oranges, 207; seed cotton, 124; sweet potatoes, 124; watermelons, 115; rice, 105. Yerba maté, or strongly flavoured Paraguayan tea, continues to be produced but is declining in importance.

Livestock (2003 estimates): 8.81m. cattle, 3.25m. pigs, 410,000 sheep, 360,000 horses and 16m. chickens.

Forestry

The area under forests in 2010 was 17.58m. ha., or 44% of the total land area. Timber production was 10.73m. cu. metres in 2011.

Fisheries

In 2011 the catch totalled an estimated 17,000 tonnes, exclusively from inland waters.

INDUSTRY

Paraguay is one of the least industrialized countries in Latin America. Industries include meat packing, sugar processing, cement, textiles, brewing, wood products and consumer goods. In 2012 industry accounted for 28.1% of GDP, with manufacturing contributing 11.6%.

Labour

The labour force in 2013 was 3,132,000 (2,485,000 in 2003). 73.4% of the population aged 15–64 was economically active in 2013. In the same year 5.0% of the population was unemployed.

Paraguay had 20,000 people living in slavery according to the Walk Free Foundation's 2013 Global Slavery Index.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

In 2002 there were around 29,500 km of roads, of which 53.9% were paved. Passenger cars numbered 240,700 in 2007, there were 248,100 lorries and vans, 12,800 buses and coaches, and 134,900 motorcycles and mopeds. There were 845 fatalities as a result of road accidents in 2007.

Rail

The President Carlos Antonio López (formerly Paraguay Central) Railway runs from Asunción to Encarnación, on the Río Alto Paraná, with a length of 441 km (1,435 mm gauge), and connects with Argentine Railways over the Encarnación-Posadas bridge opened in 1989. In 2003 freight carried came to 210,000 tonnes.

Civil Aviation

There is an international airport at Asunción (Silvio Pettirossi). The main Paraguay-based carrier is TAM Airlines (formerly TAM Mercosur). In 2003 scheduled airline traffic of Paraguay-based carriers flew 6m. km, carrying 299,000 passengers (288,000 on international flights). In 2014 Asunción (Silvio Pettirossi) handled 915,425 passengers (840,459 on international flights) and 10,954 tonnes of freight.

Shipping

Asunción, the chief port, is 1,500 km from the sea. In Jan. 2009 there were 32 ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 44,000 GT.

Telecommunications

In 2013 there were 437,643 main (fixed) telephone lines; mobile phone subscribers numbered 7,053,000 in 2013 (103.7 per 100 persons). In the same year there were 115,772 fixed broadband subscriptions and 374 wireless broadband subscriptions. In March 2012 there were 1.0m. Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The 1992 constitution confers a large measure of judicial autonomy. The highest court is the Supreme Court with nine members. Nominations for membership must be backed by six of the eight members of the Magistracy Council, which appoints all judges, magistrates and the electoral tribunal. The Council comprises elected representatives of the Presidency, Congress and the bar. There are special Chambers of Appeal for civil and commercial cases, and criminal cases. Judges of first instance deal with civil, commercial and criminal cases in six departments. Minor cases are dealt with by Justices of the Peace.

The Attorney-General represents the State in all jurisdictions, with representatives in each judicial department and in every jurisdiction.

The population in penal institutions in Sept. 2012 was 7,901 (118 per 100,000 of national population). 75.1% of prisoners had yet to receive a trial according to 2014 estimates by the International Centre for Prison Studies. The death penalty was abolished for all crimes in 1992.

Education

Adult literacy was 95% in 2007. Education is free and nominally compulsory. In 2005 there were 933,995 pupils at primary schools (with 33,434 teaching staff in 2004) and 529,309 at secondary level (with 44,440 teaching staff in 2004). There were 156,167 students in tertiary education in 2005. Paraguay's leading institute of higher education is the National University of Asunción (Universidad Nacional de Asunción), the country's oldest university, founded in 1889.

In 2007 public expenditure on education came to 4.0% of GDP and 11.9% of total government spending.

Health

In 2003 there were 1,117 health establishments (including 84 hospitals) with 7,167 beds. In 2012 there were 12 physicians per 10,000 people, ten nurses and midwives per 10,000 population and two dentists for every 10,000.

RELIGION

Religious liberty was guaranteed by the 1967 constitution. Article 6 recognized Roman Catholicism as the official religion of the country. In 2010 there were 6.25m. Christians (of which about 92% Catholics and 7% Protestants) according to estimates by the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life and 110,000 folk religionists.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

Paraguay has one site on the UNESCO World Heritage List: the Jesuit Missions of La Santísima Trinidad de Paraná and Jesús de Tavarangue (inscribed on the list in 1993).

Press

In 2008 there were eight daily newspapers with a combined circulation of 135,000.

Tourism

In 2011 there were 524,000 foreign tourists, spending US$281m.

PERU

The Spanish adventurer, Francisco Pizarro, landed on the Ecuadorian coast in 1532 and moved south. Relations between the Spanish and the Incas quickly soured and Emperor Atahualpa was captured following the battle of Cajamarca. He was executed in 1533 and a year later Pizarro conquered the city of Cusco. Lima was founded in 1535 and in 1542 it became the seat of the Viceroyalty of Peru, which for a time had jurisdiction over all the Spanish colonies in South America. The Spanish conquistadors amassed vast wealth and power by controlling the trade in Andean gold and silver, while the Incas became increasingly marginalized. Revolts against Spanish rule occurred in the 1780s but concerted demands for independence came only after the French Revolution and Napoleon's conquest of Spain in 1808.

José de San Martín of Argentina (who had ended Spanish rule in Chile in 1818) and Simón Bolívar of Venezuela proclaimed Peruvian independence on 28 July 1821 but it was only confirmed in Dec. 1824, when Antonio José de Sucre defeated Spanish troops at Ayacucho. After independence Peru and its neighbours engaged in various territorial disputes. Chile's victory over Peru and Bolivia in the War of the Pacific (1879–83) resulted in Peru ceding the department of Tarapaca and the provinces of Tacna and Arica to Chile. Gen. Andrés Bello became president in 1885 and tried to breathe life into the crippled economy by encouraging foreign management of the railways and guano (fertilizer) exports.

A businessman, Augusto Leguía, who became president for four years in 1908, pushed through economic reforms. He became increasingly authoritarian during his second term of office (1919–30), and in 1924 Dr Victor Raúl Haya de la Torre founded the Alianza Popular Revolucionaria Americana (APRA), which called for radical reform. The party was banned by Leguía and then outlawed by his successor, Sanchez Cerro, during the 1930s. Peru sided with the Allies during the Second World War and in 1945 Luis Bustamante y Rivero was elected president, with APRA backing. Splits soon emerged and Manuel Odría led a military coup three years later. An inconclusive election in 1962 enabled Gen. Ricardo Pérez Godoy to seize power, although he was deposed in a coup led by Gen. Nicolás Lindley López a year later. There followed a period of civilian rule but the military staged yet another coup in 1968. In 1978–79 a constituent assembly drew up a new constitution, after which a civilian government was installed.

Peru was plagued by political violence between the early 1980s and the late 1990s with 69,000 people killed by Maoist Shining Path insurgents, the smaller Tupac Amaru Revolutionary Movement and government forces. On 5 April 1992 President Alberto Fujimori suspended the constitution, dissolved parliament and implemented drastic economic reforms to tackle rampant inflation. A new constitution was promulgated on 29 Dec. 1993. But while Peru enjoyed stability and economic growth, continuing autocratic rule put some politicians above the law. Embroiled in a bribery and corruption scandal, President Fujimori's discredited administration came to an end in Nov. 2000 when he resigned while out of the country.

A caretaker government under Valentín Paniagua presided over new presidential and congressional elections in April 2001. A new government led by President Alejandro Toledo took office in July 2001. The Toledo government consolidated Peru's return to democracy and presided over a period of strong economic growth, although great inequalities persisted. Alan García, who had been president for five years in the second half of the 1980s, narrowly won a run-off election in April 2006 and was sworn in as president for a second term in July 2006.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Hunter-gatherers lived in Peru from at least 9000 BC. Irrigation canals discovered recently in the Andean foothills of northern Peru date farming from around 3400 BC. The Chavin culture in central and northern Peru between 900 BC and 200 BC left monumental temples and intricate artwork across a wide area. The Paracas culture emerged on the southern coast in around 300 BC and evolved into the Nazca culture, famed for its exquisite textiles. Further north, the coastal Moche culture flourished between around 100 BC and AD 700, producing distinctive metalwork and pottery. The following centuries saw the rise of inland, Andean cultures and powerful city states such as Chanca, Sipan and Cajamarca.

The Inca civilization is thought to have its origins in a Quechua-speaking tribe that settled in the Cusco Valley from about 1200. By the mid-15th century, under Emperor Tupac Yupanqui (1471–93) and subsequently under Huayna Capac, the empire stretched along the Andes from Ecuador to Chile. The Inca's road network was an engineering masterpiece, as were the terraced fields and cities such as the famed Machu Picchu.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Peru is bounded in the north by Ecuador and Colombia, east by Brazil and Bolivia, south by Chile and west by the Pacific Ocean. Area, 1,285,216 sq. km (including the area of the Peruvian part of Lake Titicaca).

In 2008 Peru lodged a claim with the International Court of Justice (ICJ) for a large area of Pacific waters extending from its territorial border with Chile and incorporating valuable fishing grounds. In Jan. 2014 the ICJ awarded Peru some 50,000 sq. km of additional waters, although many of the most lucrative fishing areas remain under Chilean jurisdiction. For an account of the border dispute with Ecuador, see ECUADOR: Territory and Population.

Census population, 2007, 27,412,157; density, 21.3 per sq. km. In 2011 the population was 77.3% urban. In 2013 the population was estimated at 30,565,000.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 31.38m.

The country is administratively divided into 25 regions and an autonomous province of Lima (with capitals): Amazonas (Chachapoyas), Ancash (Huaráz), Apurímac (Abancay), Arequipa (Arequipa), Ayacucho (Ayacucho), Cajamarca (Cajamarca), Callao (Callao), Cusco (Cusco), Huancavelica (Huancavelica), Huánuco (Huánuco), Ica (Ica), Junín (Huancayo), La Libertad (Trujillo), Lambayeque (Chiclayo), Lima (Huacho), Lima province (Lima), Loreto (Iquitos), Madre de Dios (Puerto Maldonado), Moquegua (Moquegua), Pasco (Cerro de Pasco), Piura (Piura), Puno (Puno), San Martín (Moyobamba), Tacna (Tacna), Tumbes (Tumbes), Ucayali (Pucallpa).

The largest cities (with 2007 census populations) are: Lima, 8,472,935; Arequipa, 784,651; Trujillo, 682,834; Chiclayo, 524,442; Piura, 377,496; Iquitos, 370,962.

Mestizos (mixed Amerindian and White) account for about 47% of the population, Amerindians 32%, European descendants 18.5%, Afro-Peruvians 2%, and Asian Peruvians and others (mainly Chinese and Japanese) 0.5%.

The official languages are Spanish (spoken by 83.9% of the population in 2007), Quechua (13.2%) and Aymara (1.8%).

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2009 births (estimate), 604,000; 2009 deaths (estimate), 144,000. Rates per 1,000 population (2009): birth, 21; death, 5. Annual population growth rate, 2005–10, 1.1%; infant mortality, 2010, 15 per 1,000 live births. Life expectancy, 2013: males, 72.2 years; females, 77.6. Fertility rate, 2013, 2.4 births per woman.

CLIMATE

There is a very wide variety of climates, ranging from tropical in the east to desert in the west, with perpetual snow in the Andes. In coastal areas, temperatures vary very little, either daily or annually, though humidity and cloudiness show considerable variation, with highest humidity from May to Sept. Little rain is experienced in that period. In the Sierra, temperatures remain fairly constant over the year, but the daily range is considerable. There the dry season is from April to Nov. Desert conditions occur in the extreme south, where the climate is uniformly dry, with a few heavy showers falling between Jan. and March. Lima, Jan. 74°F (23.3°C), July 62°F (16.7°C). Annual rainfall 2" (48 mm). Cusco, Jan. 56°F (13.3°C), July 50°F (10°C). Annual rainfall 32" (804 mm). El Niño is the annual warm Pacific current that develops along the coasts of Peru and Ecuador. El Niño in 1982–83 resulted in agricultural production down by 8.5% and fishing output down by 40%. El Niño in 1991–94 was unusually long. El Niño in 1997–98 resulted in a sudden rise in the surface temperature of the Pacific by 9°F (5°C) and caused widespread damage and loss of life.

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

The 1980 constitution provided for a legislative Congress consisting of a Senate and a Chamber of Deputies, and an Executive formed of the President and a Council of Ministers appointed by him. Elections were to be every five years with the President and Congress elected, at the same time, by separate ballots.

On 5 April 1992 President Fujimori suspended the 1980 constitution and dissolved Congress.

A referendum was held on 31 Oct. 1993 to approve the twelfth constitution, including a provision for the president to serve a consecutive second term. 52.2% of votes cast were in favour. The constitution was promulgated on 29 Dec. 1993. In Aug. 1996 Congress voted for the eligibility of the President to serve a third consecutive term of office.

Congress has 130 members, elected for a five-year term by proportional representation. All citizens over the age of 18 are eligible to vote. Voting is compulsory.

CURRENT LEADERS

Ollanta Humala Tasso

Position

President

Introduction

Ollanta Humala became president in July 2011. Leader of the Peruvian Nationalist Party, he was elected after two rounds of voting, defeating Keiko Fujimori, daughter of former president Alberto Fujimori. Humala was backed by the Gana Perú coalition and succeeded Alan García. He was due to leave office in July 2016 following elections in April in which he was ineligible to stand.

Early Life

Born in Lima in June 1962, Humala is the son of Isaac Humala who developed the ethno-nationalist ideology called 'ethnocacerism'. Ollanta Humala studied in Lima before joining the military. He trained initially as a paratrooper and amphibious combatant at the School of the Americas in Panama. In 1992, as head of a detachment in Tingo María, he was involved in operations against the rebel group Shining Path, for which he was later accused of human rights abuses. By 2000 he had been promoted to lieutenant-colonel.

Also in 2000, he led an uprising (along with his brother) in a bid to force out President Alberto Fujimori and leading military commanders. Following Fujimori's resignation the interim government pardoned Humala and awarded him the Peru Cross for Military Merit.

From 2000–04 Humala worked for the ministry of defence and in 2001 completed a master's degree in political sciences from the Pontifical Catholic University of Peru. He became the military attaché to the Peruvian embassy in Paris in 2003 and studied for a doctorate in international law at the Sorbonne. In 2004 he was posted to South Korea. While there his name was linked to an uprising in Peru against President Alejandro Toledo.

In 2005 Humala founded the Peruvian Nationalist Party (PNP). With support from the Union for Peru (UPP), he ran for the presidency in 2006 but lost support over questions about his past and his left-wing sympathies. From 2006–11 he fought off several legal cases related to previous coups. In 2011, backed by the Gana Perú coalition, he ran for the presidency again, defeating Keiko Fujimori.

Career in Office

In 2006 Humala had defined himself as 'anti-neoliberal' and 'anti-global capitalist' but in 2011 he adopted a more moderate profile. He distanced himself from associations with Venezuela's then president, Hugo Chávez, and stood on a platform of energy self-sufficiency, a more equitable distribution of wealth and increased taxes on mining. On coming to power, he chose a moderate cabinet, quelling worries in business circles and the Lima stock market. He announced social programmes including a non-contributory basic pension for the elderly, a public childcare programme and more scholarships to promote university education. The minimum wage was also increased.

Large-scale mining projects, such as the Conga copper and gold mine, offered potentially lucrative future revenue sources. However, popular opposition to mining schemes was widespread and protests led in Dec. 2011 to the resignation of Prime Minister Salomon Lerner, his replacement by Óscar Valdés and a major cabinet reshuffle. There were further violent anti-mining clashes in the southern Cusco region in May 2012 and in northern provinces in July, prompting the government to declare temporary states of emergency. Also in July that year, following the resignation of the unpopular Óscar Valdés and his administration in response to the unrest, Humala appointed Juan Jiménez Mayor as prime minister. However, in Sept. 2013, as thousands joined a general strike against the government's economic policies, he reshuffled the cabinet, swearing in César Villanueva Arévalo as the new premier in Oct. However, Villanueva resigned four months later following a conflict with the finance minister over an increase to the minimum wage. Housing, construction and sanitation minister René Cornejo was subsequently sworn in as premier, but he too resigned in July 2014, after which labour and employment promotion minister Ana Jara Velásquez was appointed. Having been censured by Congress over a spying scandal, she too was removed from office in April 2015. Her replacement, Pedro Cateriano, who had previously held the defence portfolio, became the seventh prime minister since Ollanta Humala took office as president in 2011.

A free trade agreement with the European Union came into effect in March 2013.

DEFENCE

Conscription was abolished in 1999. In 2013 defence expenditure totalled US$2,844m. (US$95 per capita), representing 1.3% of GDP.

Army

There are four military regions. In 2011 the Army comprised 74,000 personnel and 188,000 reserves. In addition there is a paramilitary national police force of 77,000 personnel.

Navy

The principal ship of the Navy is the former Netherlands cruiser Almirante Grau, built in 1953. Other combatants include six diesel submarines (two in refit) and eight Italian-built frigates.

Callao is the main base, where the dockyard is located and most training takes place. There are a number of smaller bases, both on the coast and inland.

Naval personnel in 2011 totalled 24,000 including 1,000 Coast Guards, about 800 Naval Air Arm and 4,000 Marines.

Air Force

The operational force is divided into five regions—North, Lima, South, Central and Amazon.

In 2011 there were some 17,000 personnel and 78 combat-capable aircraft (including Cessna A-37s, Mirage 2000s and MiG-29s) and 18 attack helicopters.

ECONOMY

Agriculture produced 7.4% of GDP in 2012, industry 36.8% and services 55.8%.

Overview

Peru is an upper-middle income country and was one of Latin America's fastest-growing economies in the decade to 2014. During this period, the average annual growth rate was 6.1%, while inflation—which averaged 2.9%—was the lowest in Latin America. The cycle of high growth and low inflation resulted from prudent macroeconomic policies, a programme of structural reform and favourable external conditions. Prior to the early 2000s Peru's growth had been slow, in part because of a spill-over from emerging market crises and commodity price weaknesses, along with high debt levels and hyperinflation dating back to the 1990s.

Economic growth has decelerated since 2014 as a consequence of deteriorating external conditions, a corresponding drop in domestic confidence and lower investment. In 2014 gross domestic investment and exports decreased by 4.8% and 1.0% respectively in real terms. However, the 2014 GDP growth rate still stayed above the regional average (2.4% compared to 0.8%).

Prolonged growth saw the poverty rate fall from 55.6% in 2005 to 22.7% in 2014. The proportion of the population living below the official extreme poverty line also decreased in the same period, from 15.8% to 4.3%. Extreme poverty is now concentrated in a relatively small swathe of rural districts.

To achieve sustainable and balanced economic growth, the government aims to further develop infrastructure, promote employment and expand access to basic services such as education, health and social security. It must also continue to reduce extreme poverty (principally by developing the rural economy) while avoiding serious environmental degradation.

Currency

The monetary unit is the nuevo sol (PEN), of 100 céntimos, which replaced the inti in 1991 at a rate of 1m. intis = 1 nuevo sol. Inflation, which had been over 7,000% in 1990, was 2.8% in 2013 and 3.2% in 2014. Foreign exchange reserves were US$14,773m. in July 2005, gold reserves totalled 1.12m. troy oz and total money supply was 24,565m. nuevos soles.

Budget

Central government revenue and expenditure (in 1m. sols), year ending 31 Dec.:

	2007	2008	2009
Revenue	67,324	74,356	67,932
Expenditure	57,165	62,424	67,245

Principal sources of revenue in 2009 were: taxes on goods and services, 26,325m. sols; taxes on income, profits and capital gains, 20,352m. sols; social security contributions, 6,659m. sols. Main items of expenditure by economic type in 2009 were: grants, 24,157m. sols; use of goods and services, 13,727m. sols; compensation of employees, 12,233m. sols.

In Dec. 2005 the World Bank approved a US$150m. loan to assist with the government decentralization process and enhance competitiveness.

VAT is 18%.

Performance

Peru's real GDP growth was above average for Latin America every year between 2002 and 2014 apart from 2004. The economy grew by 6.0% in 2012, 5.8% in 2013 and 2.4% in 2014. Total GDP in 2014 was US$202.6bn.

Banking and Finance

The bank of issue is the Banco Central de Reserva (President, Julio Velarde Flores), which was established in 1922. The government's fiscal agent is the Banco de la Nación. In 2002 there were three other government banks (Banco Central Hipotecario del Perú, Banco de la Nación and Corporación Financiera de Desarrollo), ten commercial banks, one regional bank and three foreign banks. Legislation of April 1991 permitted financial institutions to fix their own interest rates and reopened the country to foreign banks. The Central Reserve Bank sets the upper limit.

External debt in 2010 totalled US$36,271m., equivalent to 24.6% of GNI.

In 2013 Peru received US$10,172m. of foreign direct investment, down from a record US$12,240m. in 2012. The total stock of FDI at the end of 2013 was US$73.6bn.

There are stock exchanges in Lima and Arequipa.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Peru lays claim to 84 of the world's 114 ecosystems; 28 of its climate types; 19% of all bird species; 20% of all plant species; and 25 conservation areas (seven national parks, eight national reserves, seven national sanctuaries and three historic sanctuaries).

Environment

Peru's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2011 were the equivalent of 1.4 tonnes per capita.

Electricity

In 2011 output was 39.22bn. kWh (21.57bn. kWh hydro-electric and 17.65bn. kWh thermal). Total generating capacity was 8.6m. kW in 2011. Consumption per capita in 2011 was 1,325 kWh.

Oil and Gas

Proven oil reserves at the end of 2012 amounted to 1.2bn. bbls. Output, 2012, 4.8m. tonnes. Natural gas reserves in 2012 were 400bn. cu. metres; output in 2012 more than quadrupled since 2007 to 12.9bn. cu. metres. Commercial development of the huge Camisea gas field began in late 2004. In June 2010 Peru became a net gas exporter.

Minerals

The mining and fuel sectors accounted for some 8.1% of GDP in 2005. Lead, copper, iron, silver, zinc and petroleum are the chief minerals exploited. Mineral production, 2004 (in 1,000 tonnes): iron, 4,315; zinc, 1,209; copper, 1,036; lead, 306; silver, 3.1; gold, 0.17. 16,000 tonnes of coal were produced in 2004. Peru ranks as the world's third largest producer of copper, silver and zinc. Early in 1998 Southern Peru Copper, the country's largest mining company, estimated that 3,000 tonnes of copper production had been lost as a result of flooding caused by El Niño.

Agriculture

There are four natural zones: the Coast strip, with an average width of 80 km; the Sierra or Uplands, formed by the coast range of mountains and the Andes proper; the Montaña or high wooded region which lies on the eastern slopes of the Andes; and the jungle in the Amazon Basin, known as the Selva. Legislation of 1991 permits the unrestricted sale of agricultural land. Workers in co-operatives may elect to form limited liability companies and become shareholders.

Production in 2003 (in 1,000 tonnes): sugarcane, 9,550; potatoes, 3,300; rice, 2,139; bananas and plantains, 1,600; maize, 1,471; cassava, 890; onions, 450; oranges, 295; lemons and limes, 255; sweet potatoes, 225.

Livestock, 2003 estimates: sheep, 14.1m.; cattle, 5.0m.; pigs, 2.9m.; alpacas, 2.5m.; goats, 2.0m.; poultry, 95m. Livestock products (in 1,000 tonnes), 2003 estimates: poultry meat, 635; beef and veal, 146; pork and pork products, 85; mutton and lamb, 32; milk, 1,220.

In 2002 there were approximately 3.70m. ha. of arable land and 0.61m. ha. of permanent crops. About 1.2m. ha. were irrigated in 2002.

Coca, the raw material for cocaine, was cultivated in Dec. 2012 on approximately 60,400 ha., making Peru the country with the largest area of coca leaves.

Forestry

In 2010 the area covered by forests was 67.99m. ha., or 53% of the total land area. The forests contain valuable hardwoods; oak and cedar account for about 40%. In 2011 timber production was 8.92m. cu. metres.

Fisheries

Sardines and anchovies are caught offshore to be processed into fishmeal, of which Peru is the world's largest producer (with a 2009 output of 1,346,900 tonnes or 28% of world production). Total catch in 2010 was 4,261,091 tonnes, of which 99% was from sea fishing. In 2009 total exports of fishery commodities came to a value of US$2.21bn.

INDUSTRY

The leading company by market capitalization in Peru in April 2015 was Credicorp, a financial holding company (US$12.0bn.).

About 70% of industries are located in the Lima/Callao metropolitan area. Industry accounted for 36.8% of GDP in 2012, with manufacturing contributing 14.9%. Production (2007 unless otherwise indicated, in 1,000 tonnes): cement (2002), 4,120; distillate fuel oil, 3,063; prepared animal feeds (2012), 2,794; residual fuel oil, 2,693; petrol, 2,356; sugar (2012), 1,095; soft drinks (2002), 1,179.7m. litres; beer (2005), 797.0m. litres; cigarettes (2002), 3.8bn. units.

Labour

The labour force in 2014 totalled 16,396,400 (56% males). In 2014, 37.3% of those in employment were engaged in services, 24.9% in agriculture, forestry and fisheries, and 18.0% in commerce. In the same year 3.7% of the workforce was unemployed, down from 5.3% in 2004. On taking office in July 2011 the new president, Ollanta Humala, announced an immediate rise in the monthly minimum wage from 600 to 675 nuevos soles, with a further increase to 750 nuevos soles from Jan. 2012 (although this was subsequently postponed but did take effect from June 2012).

Peru had 82,000 people living in slavery according to the Walk Free Foundation's 2013 Global Slavery Index.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

An agreement of 1992 gives Bolivia duty-free transit for imports and exports through a corridor leading to the Peruvian Pacific port of Ilo from the Bolivian frontier town of Desaguadero, in return for Peruvian access to the Atlantic via Bolivia's roads and railways. In April 2006 Peru and the USA signed a free trade agreement that eliminates tariffs on each other's goods; it took effect in Jan. 2009.

Imports and Exports

The following table shows the value of Peru's foreign trade (in US$1m.):

	2007	2008	2009	2010
Imports c.i.f.	20,368.3	29,952.8	21,869.7	29,879.5
Exports f.o.b.	28,084.6	31,288.2	26,738.3	35,073.2

The principal import suppliers in 2009 were: USA, 19.8%; China, 14.9%; Brazil, 7.7%; Ecuador, 4.7%. The principal export markets in 2009 were: USA, 17.2%; China, 15.3%; Switzerland, 14.8%; Canada, 8.6%. In the meantime China has replaced the USA as Chile's largest trading partner overall.

The leading imports in 2009 were machinery and transport equipment (34.8%), manufactured goods (15.9%), chemicals and related products (15.0%), and petroleum and petroleum products (13.6%). Leading exports in 2009 were gold (25.2%), copper, copper ores and concentrates (22.9%), petroleum and petroleum products (7.2%), and animal feeds (5.7%).

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

In 2006 there were 78,986 km of roads, of which 13.9% were paved. In 2007 there were 917,100 passenger cars, 480,900 lorries and vans and 44,400 buses and coaches. There were 67,155 road accidents involving injury in 2006 with 3,481 fatalities.

Rail

Total length (2002), 2,121 km on 1,435- and 914-mm gauges. Passenger-km travelled in 2005 came to 126m. and freight tonne-km to 1,101m. A mass transit system opened in Lima in 2003. Peru's first metro, also in Lima, opened in Jan. 2012.

Civil Aviation

There is an international airport at Lima (Jorge Chávez International). The main airline is the Chilean-owned Lan Perú. In 2003 services were also provided by the domestic airlines Aero Cónдор, AVIANDINA and Transportes Aéreos Nacionales de Selva, and by more than 20 international carriers. In 2003 scheduled airline traffic of Peruvian-based carriers flew 44m. km, carrying 2,226,000 passengers (547,000 on international flights). In 2012 Jorge Chávez International handled 13,330,290 passengers (6,901,988 on international flights) and 293,675 tonnes of freight.

Shipping

In 2004 there were 46 sea-going vessels and 651 lake and river craft. In Jan. 2009 there were nine ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 87,000 GT. Callao is the busiest port, handling 18,191,000 tonnes of cargo in 2008. There are also ports at Chimbote, Paita and Talara.

Telecommunications

In 2010 there were 3,160,000 main (fixed) telephone lines; mobile phone subscriptions numbered 29,115,000 in 2010 (99.5 per 100 persons). In 2013, 39.2% of the population aged six and over were internet users. In March 2012 there were 8.2m. Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The judicial system is a pyramid at the base of which are the justices of the peace who decide minor criminal cases and civil cases involving small sums of money. The apex is the Supreme Court with a president and 12 members; in between are the judges of first instance, who usually sit in the provincial capitals, and the superior courts.

The police had 95,789 personnel in 2008. The population in penal institutions in Dec. 2012 was 61,390 (202 per 100,000 of national population). Peru was ranked 79th of 102 countries for criminal justice and 86th for civil justice in the 2015 World Justice Project Rule of Law Index, which provides data on how the rule of law is experienced by the general public across eight categories.

Education

Adult literacy was 90% in 2007. Elementary education is compulsory and free between the ages of six and 16; secondary education is also free. In 2007 there were 1,204,022 children in pre-school education with 58,177 teaching staff, 3,993,965 pupils in primary schools with 179,743 teaching staff and 2,861,313 pupils in secondary schools with 158,890 teaching staff. There were 952,437 students in tertiary education in 2006. The leading higher education institute is the National University of San Marcos (Universidad Nacional Mayor de San Marcos), founded in 1551, making it the oldest both in the country and in South America.

In 2007 public expenditure on education came to 2.7% of GNI and 16.4% of total government spending.

Health

There were 483 hospitals with 43,074 beds (provision of 16 beds per 10,000 inhabitants) in 2002. There were 29,138 physicians, 3,190 dentists and 21,351 nurses in 2002.

Peru has been one of the most successful countries in reducing undernourishment in the past 20 years. Between 1990–92 and 2001–03 the proportion of undernourished people declined from 42% of the population to 12%.

Welfare

An option to transfer from state social security (IPSS) to privately-managed funds was introduced in 1993.

RELIGION

Religious liberty exists, but the Roman Catholic religion is protected by the State, and since 1929 only Roman Catholic religious instruction is permitted in schools, state or private. In 2010 an estimated 95.5% of the population were Christians according to the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life, with 3.0% having no religious affiliation. Of the Christians, 85% were Catholics and 13% Protestants. In Feb. 2016 there was one cardinal.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

There are 12 sites under Peruvian jurisdiction that appear on the UNESCO World Heritage List. They are (with the year entered on the list): the City of Cusco (1983), the Historic Sanctuary of Machu Picchu (1983), Chavin Archaeological Site (1985), Huascarán National Park (1985), Chan Chan Archaeological Zone (1986), Manú National Park (1987), Historic Centre of Lima (1988 and 1991), Río Abiseo National Park (1990 and 1992), Lines and Geoglyphs of Nasca and Pampas de Jumana (1994), the Historical Centre of the City of Arequipa (2000) and the Sacred City of Caral-Supe (2009). Shared with Argentina, Bolivia, Colombia, Ecuador and Chile, Qhapaq Ñan, Andean Road System (2014) is an extensive Inca communication, trade and defence network of roads covering 30,000 km.

Press

In 2008 there were 89 paid-for daily newspapers, of which 23 were national and 66 regional and local. The leading dailies are Líbero (with an average daily circulation in 2008 of 214,000), Trome (average daily circulation in 2008 of 213,000) and El Comercio (average daily circulation in 2008 of 199,000).

Tourism

There were 2,846,000 non-resident tourists in 2012, up from 1,916,000 in 2007; tourist spending in 2012 totalled US$3,074m., compared to US$2,007m. in 2007.

Festivals

The Lord of Tremors festival (the second part of March and the first week of April) renders homage to the image of Taitacha Temblores, the Lord of the Earthquakes, and demonstrates the fusion of Andean religions and Christianity; Fiesta de las Cruces (3 May) is celebrated across Peru as well as Spain and other parts of Hispanic America, and includes processions, folk music and dance; Inti Raymi (24 June), one of the biggest celebrations in Peru, celebrates the winter solstice and the Inca sun god; Corpus Christi (June) includes a traditional and colourful procession of saints and virgins; Virgin of the Carmen (second week of July) takes place in the small town of Paucartambo and includes a series of processions in honour of Mamacha Carmen, the patron saint of the mestizo population; All Saints Day (1–2 Nov.) is dedicated to the memory of the dead.

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

Pottery was being made on the Philippine archipelago from at least 3000 BC, probably by people of Malay origin, and metals were being worked by the first millennium BC. Merchants from south China reached the islands during the 10th century AD (T'ang Dynasty), heralding centuries of Chinese trade with the region. Arab traders brought Islam from the Malay peninsula via Borneo and the Sulu archipelago in the late 13th century, and by the 15th century Islamic influence had spread as far north as Luzon. Most islanders lived in barangays, communities of 30–100 households based largely on kinship.

The Portuguese explorer, Ferdinand Magellan, landed at Samar on 16 April 1521 during his Spanish-financed expedition round the world. Subsequent expeditions consolidated Spanish control over the islands, which were named after Philip II of Spain in 1542. Manila was established by Miguel Lopez de Legaspi in 1571 on the site of an existing Moro (Muslim Filipinos) settlement. By the end of the 16th century the Philippines had become a major trading centre with India, China and the East Indies. The islands came under Dutch control from around 1600.

The waning of the Spanish Empire during the 18th century saw a rise in the power base of the Jesuit orders, which caused resentment and stoked demands for independence. In 1896 revolution in the province of Cavite, led by Emilio Aguinaldo among others, spread through the major islands. However, in Dec. 1898, following the Spanish-American War, the Philippines were ceded to the United States. Aguinaldo fought a guerrilla campaign but was captured in 1901. The US granted the Philippines partial autonomy in 1916 and the Hare-Hawes-Cutting Act of 1932 set a timetable for full independence after a ten-year period of self-governance as a Commonwealth of the USA. Manuel Quezon was elected the first president in Sept. 1935.

In Dec. 1941 the islands were invaded by Japanese troops, who went on to take complete control in 1942. Quezon escaped to the USA and established a government-in-exile in Washington, D.C. Sergio Osmena succeeded Quezon in 1944 and returned to the Philippines with a US-backed liberation force in Oct. 1944. Manuel Roxas defeated Osmena in the election of April 1946, becoming president of the Republic of the Philippines when independence was achieved on 4 July 1946. The USA continued to play a key role in its former colony, particularly in economic policy. In return for assistance in rebuilding the country's war-torn infrastructure, the USA secured 99-year leases over several air and naval bases. Relations with neighbouring countries improved and in 1954 the Philippines joined the Southeast Asia Treaty Organization, precursor to the Association of South East Asian Nations (ASEAN).

Ferdinand Marcos was elected president in 1965 and re-elected four years later, although his rule became increasingly unpopular. In Sept. 1972 Marcos declared martial law and thousands of political opponents were arrested. In May 1980 Benigno Aquino, Jr, the leading opponent of Marcos, was released from prison to go to the USA for medical treatment. His assassination, on his return to the Philippines in 1983, led to growing US pressure for Marcos to restore democracy. In late 1985 he announced a snap presidential election. He was challenged by Aquino's widow, Corazón, who eventually emerged victorious from a controversial poll and was installed as president on 25 Feb. 1986. Marcos fled the country and a new constitution limiting the president to a single, six-year term in office was ratified in Feb. 1987.

More than twenty years of insurgency by the Moro National Liberation Front were ended by a peace agreement of 2 Sept. 1996, providing for a Muslim autonomous region in an area of Mindanao island. The rebellion left more than 120,000 people dead. In Oct. 2000 impeachment proceedings began against President Estrada who was alleged to have received more than US$10.8m. from gambling kickbacks. His impeachment trial collapsed in Jan. 2001 when he was forced from office by mass protests. Subsequently Estrada's supporters tried to overthrow his successor, Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo.

In Nov. 2001 the fragile peace between the government and Islamic militants was shattered. Since then violence has frequently erupted, notably in early 2005, when fighting on the southern island of Jolo left 90 dead and caused 12,000 people to flee. On 14 Feb. 2005 three bombs were detonated killing nine and injuring 130. In Feb. 2006 President Arroyo declared a week-long state of emergency after the military declared it had discovered a coup plot.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

The Philippines is situated between 21° 25' and 4° 23' N. lat. and between 116° and 127° E. long. It is composed of 7,100 islands and islets, 3,144 of which are named. Approximate land area, 300,076 sq. km (115,859 sq. miles). The largest islands (in sq. km) are Luzon (104,688), Mindanao (94,630), Samar (13,080), Negros (12,710), Palawan (11,785), Panay (11,515), Mindoro (9,735), Leyte (7,214), Cebu (4,422), Bohol (3,865) and Masbate (3,269). The census population in May 2010 was 92,337,852; density, 307.7 per sq. km. In 2011, 49.1% of the population lived in urban areas.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 100.70m.

The Philippines is divided into 18 regions, subdivided into 81 provinces. The area and population of the 17 regions at the time of the 2010 census (from north to south):

Filipino (based on Tagalog) is spoken as a mother tongue by only 29.3%; among the 76 other indigenous languages spoken, Cebuano is spoken as a mother tongue by 23.3% and Ilocano by 9.3%. English, which along with Filipino is one of the official languages, is widely spoken.

In 2013, 10.2m. Filipinos were living and working abroad (permanently and temporarily), including 3.5m. in the USA, 1.0m. in Saudi Arabia and 822,000 in the United Arab Emirates.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

Births, 2007, 1,749,878; deaths, 2007, 441,956. Divorce is illegal. Birth rate per 1,000 population (2007), 19.7; death rate (2007), 5.1.

Expectation of life at birth, 2007, was 69.4 years for males and 73.9 years for females. Annual population growth rate, 2000–05, 2.2%. Infant mortality, 2010, 23 per 1,000 live births; fertility rate, 2008, 3.1 births per woman. Abortion is illegal.

CLIMATE

Some areas have an equatorial climate while others experience tropical monsoon conditions, with a wet season extending from June to Nov. Mean temperatures are high all year, with very little variation. Manila, Jan. 77°F (25°C), July 82°F (27.8°C). Annual rainfall 83.3" (2,115.9 mm).

On 8 Nov. 2013 tropical cyclone Typhoon Haiyan hit the Philippines, killing an estimated 6,000 people and leaving hundreds of thousands more homeless. The cost of the damage was put at nearly US$13bn.

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

A new constitution was ratified by referendum in Feb. 1987 with the approval of 78.5% of voters. The head of state is the President, directly elected for a non-renewable six-year term.

Congress consists of a 24-member upper house, the Senate (elected for a six-year term from 'at large' seats covering the country as a whole, half of them renewed every three years), and a House of Representatives of 291 members. In the House of Representatives 233 members are directly elected for a three-year term and the rest are chosen from party and minority-group lists.

A campaign led by the president at the time, Fidel Ramos, to amend the constitution to allow him to stand for a second term was voted down by the Senate by 23 to one in Dec. 1996.

Benigno Aquino III

Position

President

Introduction

Benigno Simeon Cojuangco Aquino III was sworn in as president in June 2010 after a landslide victory at the election in May. He campaigned on a platform of tackling corruption and eradicating poverty. He was due to leave office following elections in May 2016 in which he was ineligible to stand.

Early Life

Aquino, popularly known as Noynoy, was born on 8 Feb. 1960 in Manila into the influential Aquino political family. His father, Benigno Simeon 'Ninoy' Aquino, Jr, was a prominent opposition leader who was assassinated by Ferdinand Marcos' regime. His mother, Corazón Aquino, led a non-violent people's revolution following her husband's death that brought about an end to the Marcos dictatorship and secured her the presidency. Benigno Aquino III graduated in economics from Ateneo de Manila University in 1981 before joining his family in exile in the USA. On his father's death in 1983, he returned to the Philippines.

From 1983–98 Aquino worked in business for companies including Nike, Intra-Strata Assurance Corp., Best Security Agency Corporation and Central Azucarera Tarlac, an organization owned by the Cojuangco clan. In 1989 in an attempted coup led by Gregorio Honasan against his mother's administration Aquino narrowly escaped assassination.

Joining the Liberal Party in 1998, he was elected to the House of Representatives to represent the 2nd District of Tarlac, a seat he held until 2007. He served as deputy speaker of the House from Nov. 2004–Feb. 2006, resigning when he joined other Liberal leaders in calling for the resignation of President Macapagal-Arroyo at the height of the 'Hello Garci' vote-rigging scandal. On 17 March 2006 Aquino was appointed vice chairman of the Liberal Party. Constitutionally unable to seek a fourth term in the House of Representatives, he won a Senate seat in the May 2007 elections.

After the death of his mother in Aug. 2009, there was a swell of public support for Aquino to stand for the presidency. Announcing his candidacy on 9 Sept. 2009 his subsequent campaign used the colour yellow to evoke his mother's 'people power' movement. The front runner leading up to the election, Aquino went on to win with 42% of the vote.

Career in Office

On assuming office, Aquino announced the creation of an independent commission to investigate the alleged corruption of the Arroyo administration (which led to the former president's arrest in Oct. 2012) and appointed a new justice secretary, Leila de Lima, the former head of the commission on human rights. In education, he pushed for the extension of the basic education system from a ten-year programme to 12 years. He also came out in support of a controversial family planning bill which, despite strong opposition from the Catholic Church, was eventually approved by parliament in Dec. 2012 and by the Supreme Court in April 2014. Critics have nevertheless questioned Aquino's ability to introduce reforms that act against the interests of the Philippines' powerful clans, from which he himself comes.

In Oct. 2012 Aquino signed a framework agreement on peace and autonomy between the government and the Moro Islamic Liberation Front, the Muslim separatist movement operating in the Mindanao region, with the aim of ending years of armed conflict. A power-sharing accord was signed in Dec. 2013 and a peace deal was concluded in March 2014. However, in Sept. 2013 there were violent clashes between a faction of another militant group, the Moro National Liberation Front, and government forces in the southern city of Zamboanga. Further conflict between Muslim rebels and security forces in Mindanao was also reported in Jan. 2015.

At the international level, there have been territorial tensions with China since mid-2012 over a disputed area of the South China Sea, while in May 2013 a diplomatic clash similarly arose with Taiwan following the killing of a Taiwanese fisherman by Filipino coastguards in an area of sea claimed by both countries.

In May 2013 pro-Aquino candidates won the majority of congressional seats in mid-term elections. However, in Nov. that year the Supreme Court ruled that a widely misused government fund for development projects, known as the DAP, was unconstitutional, which has tainted Aquino's anti-corruption image and undermined his ability to pursue economic reforms.

In Nov. 2013 the central provinces of the Philippines were devastated by Typhoon Haiyan, which killed thousands of people and displaced around 4m. more.

DEFENCE

An extension of the 1947 agreement granting the USA the use of several Army, Navy and Air Force bases was rejected by the Senate in Sept. 1991. An agreement of Dec. 1994 authorizes US naval vessels to be repaired in Philippine ports. The Philippines is a signatory of the South-East Asia Collective Defence Treaty. The Armed Forces are organized into six unified commands, which are multi-service, regional entities.

Defence expenditure in 2013 totalled US$2,205m. (US$21 per capita), representing 0.8% of GDP.

Army

Strength (2011) 86,000, with reserves totalling 100,000. The paramilitary Philippines National Police numbered 40,500 in 2011 with 40,000 reservists.

Navy

The Navy consists principally of ex-US ships completed in 1944 and 1945, and serviceability and spares are a problem. The modernization programme in progress has been revised and delayed, but the first 30 inshore patrol craft of US and Korean design have been delivered. The present fleet includes one ex-US frigate.

Navy personnel in 2011 was estimated at 24,000 including 8,300 marines.

Air Force

The Air Force had an estimated strength of 15,000 in 2011, with 24 combat-capable aircraft. There was one fighter squadron of Agusta S-211s.

ECONOMY

Agriculture accounted for 12.3% of GDP in 2010, industry 32.6% and services 55.1%.

Overview

Market-oriented reforms have been implemented over the last two decades, with trade barriers dismantled and many industries deregulated. Most state industrial assets were privatized between 1992 and 1995 and monopolies were ended in the telecommunications, oil, civil aviation, shipping, water and power industries. Since the mid-2000s, chronic public deficits have been reduced, tax collection has become more aggressive and VAT reform was implemented in 2006.

Since 2002 growth has averaged around 5% per year and the economy has held strong against a number of external shocks. Despite growth plunging as a result of the global economic crisis, the economy avoided a technical recession in 2009 thanks to a combination of remittances and fiscal stimuli. 2010 saw recovery with broad-based growth across private consumption, investment and exports, despite the impact of the El Niño drought during the first half of the year. The call-centre industry has more employees than its counterpart in India and was expected to generate US$16bn. in 2013. After a smooth handover of political power in May 2010, Standard & Poor's upgraded the Philippines' credit rating to BB in Nov. 2010 in recognition of the stronger financial position.

High government spending and mounting exports culminated in GDP growth reaching 6.7% in 2012, up from less than 4% in 2011. The economy was the strongest in emerging Asia in the second quarter of 2013 thanks to strong domestic demand. However, robust growth has not translated into poverty reduction, with just over a quarter of the population living below the poverty line. A government development plan for 2011–16 aims to promote inclusive growth and counter high unemployment and underemployment (estimated at 7.3% and 19.8% respectively in 2013).

Typhoon Haiyan devastated much of the Philippines in Nov. 2013, killing over 6,000. President Benigno Aquino III put the total cost to the economy at nearly US$13bn. The World Bank pledged almost US$1bn. to reconstruction efforts.

Currency

The unit of currency is the peso (PHP) of 100 centavos. Inflation rates (based on IMF statistics):

2005	2006	2007	2008	2009	2010	2011	2012	2013	2014
6.6%	5.5%	2.9%	8.2%	4.2%	3.8%	4.7%	3.2%	2.9%	4.2%

Foreign exchange reserves were US$35,493m. in Aug. 2009 and gold reserves 5.08m. troy oz. Total money supply in Feb. 2008 was 836,709m. pesos.

Budget

Budgetary central government revenue and expenditure (in 1bn. pesos):

	2008	2009	2010
Revenue	1,172.8	1,123.1	1,208.0
Expenditure	1,265.6	1,425.3	1,519.6

Taxes accounted for 90.5% of revenues in 2010; compensation of employees accounted for 30.9% of expenditures, use of goods and services 26.7% and interest 19.9%.

VAT was introduced in 1988. The standard rate was raised from 10.0% to 12.0% in 2006.

Performance

Real GDP growth rates (based on IMF statistics):

2005	2006	2007	2008	2009	2010	2011	2012	2013	2014
4.8%	5.2%	6.6%	4.2%	1.1%	7.6%	3.7%	6.7%	7.1%	6.1%

The 2010 growth rate was the highest since democracy was restored to the Philippines in 1986 following the Marcos era. Total GDP in 2014 was US$284.8bn.

Banking and Finance

The Central Bank (Governor, Amando Tetangco, Jr) issues the currency, manages foreign exchange reserves and supervises the banking system. At 30 June 2003 there were 42 commercial banks (24 regular commercial banks and 18 universal banks), 93 thrift banks and 771 rural and co-operative banks. In June 2003 the total number of banking institutions was 6,414, with total assets of 3,529,128m. pesos.

External debt amounted to US$72,337m. in 2010, up from US$58,304m. in 2000—this was equivalent to 36.2% of GNI (compared to 72.0% in 2000).

Foreign direct investment was a record US$3,860m. in 2013, up from US$3,215m. in 2012.

The financial crisis that struck southeast Asia in 1997 led to the floating of the peso in July of that year. It subsequently lost 36% of its value against the dollar.

There is a stock exchange in Manila.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Environment

Carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2011 were the equivalent of 0.8 tonnes per capita.

The Climate Change and Environmental Risk Atlas 2014 produced by Maplecroft, a risk analytics company, ranked the Philippines as the country facing the ninth highest economic and social risk from climate change by 2025.

Electricity

Total installed capacity was 16.2m. kW in 2011. Production was 69.21bn. kWh in 2011 (49.46bn. kWh thermal and 9.72bn. kWh hydro-electric). Consumption per capita was 728 kWh in 2011.

Oil and Gas

The largest natural gas field is the Camago-Malampaya gas field, discovered off the island of Palawan in 1992, with reserves initially put at 76bn. cu. metres but now increased to 85bn. cu. metres. The Philippines' total natural gas reserves in 2013 were 99bn. cu. metres.

Crude petroleum reserves were 139m. bbls in 2011.

Minerals

Mineral production in 2003, unless otherwise indicated (in tonnes): coal (2004), 2,482,000; salt, 429,160; silica sand, 372,200; copper, 80,920; chromite refractory ore (chromium content), 13,220; nickel bearing ore (2002), 26,532 (nickel content); gold, 37,840 kg; silver, 9,530 kg. Other minerals include rock asphalt, sand and gravel. Total value of mineral production, 2003, 139,597m. pesos.

Agriculture

Agriculture is still a mainstay of the economy, although its share of national output has halved since the late 1980s. In 2013 there were an estimated 5.59m. ha. of arable land and 5.35m. ha. of permanent crops. In 2014, 30.4% of the working population was employed in agriculture. In 2002 agricultural production grew by 2.6% (7.4% in 2001).

Output (in 1,000 tonnes) in 2002: sugarcane, 21,417; coconuts, 13,683; rice, 13,271; bananas, 5,275; maize, 4,319; copra, 2,010; pineapples, 1,639; cassava, 1,626. The Philippines is the second largest producer of both coconuts and pineapples. Minor crops are fruits, nuts, vegetables, coffee, cacao, peanuts, ramie, rubber, maguey, kapok, abaca and tobacco.

Livestock, 2003: pigs, 12.36m.; goats, 3.27m.; buffaloes, 3.18m.; cattle, 2.56m.; chickens, 128.51m.; ducks, 9.81m.

Forestry

Forests covered 7.67m. ha. (26% of the land area) in 2010, up from 6.57m. ha. in 1990 and 7.12m. ha. in 2000. Of the total area under forests 11% was primary forest in 2010, 84% other naturally regenerated forest and 5% planted forest. Timber production was 16.12m. cu. metres in 2011.

Fisheries

The catch in 2010 was 2,611,720 tonnes (2,426,314 tonnes from marine waters).

INDUSTRY

The leading companies by market capitalization in the Philippines in March 2015 were: SM Investments, a shopping mall developer and operator (US$16.1bn.); and Philippine Long Distance Telephone (US$13.8bn.).

Leading sectors are foodstuffs, oil refining and chemicals. Production, 2002 (in 1,000 tonnes): cement, 11,396; residual fuel oil, 3,537; distillate fuel oil, 3,004; sugar, 1,988; petrol, 1,501; paper and paperboard, 1,056; plywood, 409,000 cu. metres.

Labour

The labour force in 2013 was 42,923,000 (34,721,000 in 2003). 67.0% of the population aged 15–64 was economically active in 2013. The unemployment rate in Oct. 2013 was 6.5%.

The Philippines had 0.15m. people living in slavery according to the Walk Free Foundation's 2013 Global Slavery Index.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

A law of June 1991 gave foreign nationals the right to full ownership of export and other firms considered strategic for the economy.

Imports and Exports

Imports (c.i.f.) in 2007 totalled US$57,995.7m. (US$54,078.0m. in 2006) and exports (f.o.b.) US$50,465.7m. (US$47,410.1m. in 2006).

Main imports: electronics and components, mineral fuels, lubricants and related materials, industrial machinery and equipment, telecommunications equipment and transport equipment. Principal exports: electronics, garments, machinery, transport equipment and apparatus, and processed foods. In 2001 electronics exports were worth US$21.4bn. and constituted 67% of all exports although this had shrunk to US$16.3bn. and 32% by 2007. In 1992 they had been worth just US$3bn.

Main sources of imports in 2007: USA, 14.0%; Japan, 12.4%; Singapore, 11.1%; China, 7.3%. Main export markets, 2007: USA, 17.0%; Japan, 14.5%; Hong Kong, 11.5%; China, 11.4%.

COMMUNICATIONS

Roads

In 2003 roads totalled 200,037 km; of these, 28,266 km were national roads and 49,782 km were regional roads. In 2007 there were 937,600 passenger cars in use, 55,200 buses and coaches, 1,875,300 vans and lorries, and 2,647,500 motorcycles and mopeds. There were 6,240 road accidents involving injury in 2006 with 961 fatalities.

Rail

In 2005 the National Railways totalled 419 km (1,067 mm gauge). In 2004 passenger-km totalled 83m. There is a light metro railway in Manila.

Civil Aviation

There are international airports at Manila (Ninoy Aquino) and Cebu (Mactan International). In Sept. 1998 the Asian economic crisis that had started more than a year earlier forced the closure of the national carrier, Philippine Airlines, after it had suffered huge losses. However, it has since resumed its operations both internally and externally. In 2005 scheduled airline traffic of Philippine-based carriers flew 28.4m. km, carrying 6,610,400 passengers. In 2012 Manila handled 31,878,935 passengers (17,739,000 on domestic flights) and 460,135 tonnes of freight.

Shipping

The main ports are Cagayan de Oro, Cebu, Davao, Iloilo, Manila and Zamboanga. Manila, the leading port, handled 45,230,000 tonnes of cargo in 2008. In Jan. 2009 there were 838 ships of 300 GT or over registered, totalling 4,771,000 GT. Of the 838 vessels registered, 415 were general cargo ships, 168 passenger ships, 128 oil tankers, 83 bulk carriers, 21 chemical tankers, 15 liquid gas tankers and eight container ships.

Telecommunications

In 2013 there were 3,149,000 main (fixed) telephone lines. In the same year mobile phone subscriptions numbered 102,824,000 (1,045.0 per 1,000 persons). An estimated 36.2% of the population were internet users in 2012. In March 2012 there were 27.7m. Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

There is a Supreme Court which is composed of a chief justice and 14 associate justices; it can declare a law or treaty unconstitutional by the concurrent votes of the majority sitting. There is a Court of Appeals, which consists of a presiding justice and 50 associate justices. There are 15 regional trial courts, one for each judicial region, with a presiding regional trial judge in each of its 720 branches. Municipal trial courts and municipal circuit trial courts are found in the municipalities of the Philippines. If the court covers one municipality it is a municipal trial court; if it covers two or more municipalities it is a municipal circuit trial court. In Metropolitan Manila the equivalents are metropolitan trial courts, and in the cities outside Metropolitan Manila the courts are known as municipal trial courts in cities.

The Supreme Court may designate certain branches of the regional trial courts to handle exclusively criminal cases, juvenile and domestic relations cases, agrarian cases, urban land reform cases which do not fall under the jurisdiction of quasijudicial bodies and agencies and/or such other special cases as the Supreme Court may determine. The death penalty, abolished in 1987, was officially restored in Dec. 1993 as punishment for 'heinous crimes'. In Feb. 1999 a rapist was executed, the first incident of capital punishment in the Philippines since 1976. The death penalty was abolished again for all crimes in 2006.

In Oct. 2011 there were 140,000 police officers. Local police forces are supplemented by the Philippine Constabulary, which is part of the armed forces.

In 2009 the prison population was 102,267 (111 per 100,000 of national population). The International Centre for Prison Studies estimated in 2014 that 63.6% of prisoners had yet to receive a trial. In 2015 the World Justice Project Rule of Law Index, which provides data on how the rule of law is experienced by the general public across eight categories, ranked the Philippines 66th of 102 countries for criminal justice and 75th for civil justice.

Constabulary

Since 1990 public order has been maintained completely by the Philippine National Police. Qualified Philippine Constabulary personnel were absorbed by the PNP or were transferred to branches or services of the Armed Forces of the Philippines.

Education

Public elementary education is free and schools are established in virtually all parts of the country. The majority of secondary and post-secondary schools are private. Formal education consists of an optional one to two years of pre-school education; six years of elementary education; four years of secondary education; and four to five years of tertiary or college education leading to academic degrees. Three-year post-secondary non-degree technical/vocational education is also considered formal education. In 2007 there were 961,397 children in pre-school institutions with (2006) 27,742 teaching staff; 13,145,210 pupils in primary schools with 390,432 teaching staff; and 6,365,985 pupils in secondary schools with 181,193 teaching staff. In 2005 there were 2,402,649 students in tertiary education with 112,941 academic staff.

Non-formal education consists of adult literacy classes, agricultural and farming training programmes, occupation skills training, youth clubs, and community programmes of instructions in health, nutrition, family planning and co-operatives.

In 2004–05 there were 176 public higher education institutions including 111 state and 50 local universities and colleges, and 1,443 private higher education institutions including 340 religious institutions. The adult literacy rate in 2008 was 94%.

Public expenditure on education in 2005 came to 2.3% of GNI and was equivalent to 15.2% of total government spending.

Health

In 2009 there were 1,796 hospitals (1,075 private); there were 94,199 beds in 2008 (1.0 beds per 1,000 inhabitants). In 2002 there were 91,408 physicians, 44,129 dentists, 347,349 nurses, 140,675 midwives and 47,463 pharmacists.

Welfare

The Social Security System (SSS) is a contributory scheme for employees. Benefit disbursements in 2014 included (in 1m. pesos): retirement, 56,086; death, 33,530; maternity, 4,416; disability, 3,763.

RELIGION

In 2010 an estimated 92.6% of the population were Christians according to the Pew Research Center's Forum on Religion & Public Life, with 5.5% Muslims and 1.5% folk religionists. Of the Christians, 87% were Catholics and 12% Protestants.

The Roman Catholic Church had four cardinals in Feb. 2016. There are 16 ecclesiastical provinces, each of which consists of an archdiocese and a number of suffragan dioceses and is overseen by an archbishop.

CULTURE

World Heritage Sites

The Philippines has six sites on the UNESCO World Heritage List: Tubbataha Reefs Natural Park (inscribed on the list in 1993 and 2009); the Baroque Churches of the Philippines (1993); the Rice Terraces of the Philippine Cordilleras (1995); the Historic Town of Vigan (1999); Puerto-Princesa Subterranean River National Park (1999); and Mount Hamiguitan Range Wildlife Sanctuary (2014).

Press

There were 28 daily newspapers in 2008, with a combined circulation of 3,870,000. The leading daily is Remate, with an average daily circulation of 620,000 in 2008.

Tourism

In 2012, 4,273,000 non-resident tourists brought revenue of US$4,963m.

POLAND

Jewish Liberties was published in 1264 by Bolesław V, the Duke of Kraków.

A series of Mongol invasions in 1241–42 laid waste much of Poland, and in 1308 the crusades of the Teutonic Knights captured Gdańsk, cutting off Poland's access to the sea. In 1320 Władysław I Łokietek (the Short) of Kraków reunited the majority of the Polish lands that had been divided in 1138 and was crowned king of a united Poland. His son Casimir III the Great (Kasimierz, ruled 1333–70) continued this work, and his reign brought prosperity and administrative efficiency. He negotiated a truce with the Teutonic Knights and fostered closer diplomatic relations with the neighbouring kingdoms of Bohemia and Hungary.

Casimir III was the last monarch in the Piast line, and when he died his nephew Louis of Anjou, simultaneously King Lajos I of Hungary, donned the Polish crown. His death led to a disjointed succession. After a brief civil war his eleven-year-old daughter Jadwiga married Jagiełło, the pagan Grand Duke of Lithuania, who converted to Catholicism. Their marital union in 1386 signalled the beginning of the Jagiellonian dynasty which ruled over Lithuania and Poland, at the time the largest state in Europe. The Jagiellonian period to 1572 is regarded as an economic and cultural 'golden age'. This joint, multi-ethnic power managed to quell opposition on its eastern and western fronts. Poland-Lithuania crushed the Tatars and in 1410 defeated an army of 27,000 Teutonic Knights at the Battle of Tannenberg. In 1454 the Polish-Teutonic war broke out. King Casimir IV (1427–92) led a successful campaign, taking control of Western Prussia. At the Peace of Toruń in 1466 Gdańsk was returned to the Polish crown. The city, granted autonomy in exchange for its efforts in the war, thrived on shipping trade with the Netherlands, Spain and England among others while the population outgrew that of Warsaw.

The link between Poland and Lithuania was further strengthened by the Union of Lublin in 1569, which was primarily signed to protect both parties from expansionist threats on the Eastern front from Russia's Tsar Ivan IV (the Terrible). Warsaw became the capital of the two kingdoms which were henceforth known as the Commonwealth of Poland-Lithuania.

The last Jagiellonian, Zygmunt II, died in 1572, after which the nobility introduced an elective monarchy with powers limited by the Acta Henriciana, so called because the first elected king to whom it applied was Henri III de Valois. He was obliged to swear his allegiance to maintaining the elective monarchy, which consulted the nobles on tax and warfare, respected religious tolerance and held a bi-annual meeting of the Sejm, the bicameral assembly dating from 1493. In contrast to many other countries in Europe, the Commonwealth was sufficiently broadminded on religious issues to abide by the Statute of Toleration (1573), although Catholicism was still the official religion.

Polish Wars

During this period, many foreign leaders were elected, partly to neutralize external interests. In 1573 Catherine de Médicis of France organized the election of her third son, Henry, duke of Anjou, to the Polish crown. When he returned to France as king on his brother's death, he was succeeded by a Transylvanian, Prince István Bathory. He increased Poland-Lithuania's military strength—a necessity given Ivan the Terrible's bellicose claims. In campaigns throughout 1578–81 the latter was beaten with a huge loss of Russian lives, and the territories he had encroached upon were restored.

1587 marked the beginning of Vasa rule, with Swedish-born Sigismund III taking the throne. But his succession led to

KEY HISTORICAL EVENTS

In the 7th and 8th centuries Slavic peoples first settled on the forest covered plains between the Odra and Vistula rivers. Poland takes its name from the Polanie ('plain dwellers'), whose ruler Mieszko I, first in line of the Piast dynasty, founded the Polish state in 966. Christianity came via Bohemia and Moravia to the Kraków region, and in 991 Mieszko I placed Poland under the Holy Roman See. His son and heir, Bolesław I the Brave (ruled 992–1025) continued his father's territorial expansionism until Poland's boundaries were much as they are today. He established an independent Polish Catholic Church in the year 1000 and was officially crowned the first king of Poland in 1024 with the support of Holy Roman Emperor Otto III. The growing power of the church stimulated economic activity ranging from the manufacture of parchment and glass to building and painting.

In the twelfth century, under the rule of Bolesław III, German infiltration and internecine struggles led to Bolesław's 1138 Testament which divided the kingdom between his three sons. Around this time, many Jewish immigrants from Western Europe were attracted by the offer of asylum. The General Charter of territorial claims from his native land. Disapproving of Sigismund's Catholic persuasion, Calvinist Sweden occupied Livonia and Pomerania. In alliance with Russia, King Karl X of Sweden mounted a full invasion of Poland-Lithuania, devastating Warsaw and Kraków. During the ensuing Polish-Swedish war of 1655-60, support for Poland-Lithuania came from the Netherlands and Denmark. The Poles fought back against the invaders, winning a major battle at Częstochowa, but were eventually defeated. King Jan Kazimierz (John Casimir), the last in line of the Vasa dynasty, abdicated in 1668.

Hopes of salvation for the Commonwealth came with Jan III Sobieski's election to the throne in 1674. He fought off the Ottomans who were advancing onto Polish territory. But further invasions and wars weakened Poland. The Great Northern War of 1700-21 had Poland as the battleground for fierce fighting between Russia, Denmark-Norway and Saxony-Poland (also Prussia from 1715) on one side against Sweden on the other. Each of the warring factions occupied parts of Poland, which was also subject to internecine fighting. Russia played the dominant role in Polish affairs until Frederick II, king of an increasingly powerful Prussia, proposed the division of Poland between Russia, Prussia and Austria. The outcome was the first Partition of Poland, in 1772. Austria was awarded the Kingdom of Galicia-Lodomeria, with 2.5m. inhabitants. Russia took over an area with a population of over 1m. Prussia contented itself with 0.5m. new citizens, and the long-desired connection between Western Pomerania and East Prussia.

In 1791 Stanisław II, the last king of the remaining Poland-Lithuania, introduced a constitution which amounted to a bid for independence. The three surrounding superpowers nonetheless engaged in a second partition in 1793. A peasant uprising against Russian rule, led by Tadeusz Kościuszko, was crushed, along with Poland itself which lost control of all its territory to Austria, Prussia and Russia in the third partition (1795).

The territory remained a battleground, particularly during the Napoleonic wars. Napoleon established the Grand Duchy of Warsaw in 1807, which had a French-style constitution, but came under Saxon, and later Russian, administration. Polish legions, which fought on the French side against Prussia, incurred heavy losses. In 1815, when the victorious Allies redistributed the territory Napoleon had won, the 'Congress' Kingdom of Poland reappeared, this time under Russian rule, with the Tsar as its hereditary king.

Thereafter the Poles suffered by their colonizers' attempts to assimilate their culture. A series of uprisings against the Russians took place throughout the century. In the November Revolution of 1830 inexperienced military cadets were suppressed by Tsar Nicholas, who led a campaign of bloody reprisals. Around 8,000 Poles emigrated after this defeat—many of them intellectuals, and most headed for France. During the peasants' revolt in Galicia in 1846 up to 2,000 nobles were murdered and their land ravaged. There was a strong insurgent movement among the peasants, but in 1848 they failed once more to topple their oppressors, this time the Prussians.

The January Uprising against the Russians which began in 1863-64 and ended in the spring of 1865 again led to defeat. Wide-scale Russianization followed, though the abolition of serfdom marked a significant concession. As part of Bismarck's 'Kulturkampf'—the Germanization of the Prussian zones—German was introduced as the official language and Polish began to be taught in schools as a foreign language. Anti-Semitism became rife, and pogroms were not unusual. Many Jewish and Gentile Poles fled.

The Habsburg-dominated part of Poland, Galicia, was more tolerant of Polish nationalism which centred on Kraków. At one point the Austrian prime minister, finance minister and foreign minister were all Polish. Newly formed parties began to gain ground, with the National Democrats under Roman Dmowski campaigning for autonomy and Józef Piłsudski's Socialists engaging in an underground struggle for independence. Piłsudski led an anti-Russian uprising in 1905, and was to take up arms against Russia in the First World War when Poland's territory again bore the brunt of much of the fighting between its three partitioners.

In 1917 a Polish National Committee, formed by Roman Dmowski in Paris, was recognized by the Allies. One of its members and US representative was the pianist Ignacy Jan Paderewski, who urged the Americans to support the cause for Polish independence. President Woodrow Wilson's 'Fourteen Points' for peace addressed the Polish issue, guaranteeing independence and access to the sea under point thirteen. A Polish army was formed in France in 1918. In Poland, Piłsudski set up the Polish legions and a rival government. Poland regained its independence under Piłsudski's leadership on 11 Nov. 1918.

But while the Paris Peace Conference recognized the republic, the question of its borders was highly contentious. Poland challenged Lithuania over Vilnius, the city changing hands more than once before the Second World War. Fighting also took place against Ukraine over the issue of Galicia. A war with Russia followed over the next two years, which Poland narrowly managed to win before signing the Soviet-Polish Peace Treaty in Riga in 1921. The Treaty established the borders between Russia, Ukraine and Belarus, the last two being swallowed up by the USSR the following year. Gdańsk was awarded the status of a free city, and the Polish Corridor was formed between German West and East Prussia and the rest of Germany.

Between the wars there were 16 palatinates, all centrally governed from Warsaw. The new republic was first headed by President Narutowicz, the representative of the left and centre parties, who served for only days before being assassinated by a right-wing fanatic, and replaced in 1922 by Stanisław Wojciechowski. A series of intra-party disputes and factionalisms led the way for Józef Piłsudski to mount a coup in May 1926, seizing the power he maintained under a dictatorship until his death in 1935.

Second World War

In foreign affairs Poland managed to maintain a balance between its two most intimidating neighbours, Germany and the USSR, signing a non-aggression pact with Germany in 1934. However, the Molotov-Ribbentrop non-aggression pact of Aug. 1939 secretly agreed to partition Poland between Germany and the Soviet Union in the event of war. British and French guarantees of Polish independence that had been agreed in April of the same year obliged them to declare war on Nazi Germany two days after Hitler's troops marched into Poland on 1 Sept. 1939.

The response of Britain and France signalled the start of the Second World War. The German army invaded Poland along the entire front from the Baltic Sea to Slovakia, annexing over half of the country within three weeks. Stalin's troops marched into Poland from the Eastern Front on 17 Sept., leaving the country occupied for most of the duration of the war. The Nazis undertook a policy of liquidation—not only of Jews and ethnic 'undesirables' but also of the intelligentsia, so as to avoid any possibility of a Polish leadership class. Many Polish children seen as racially pure were taken away from their parents to be brought up as Germans, while others were deported. A total of over 6m. Polish nationals, or 17% of the population, were killed in the war, half of them Jewish. Not all of the murders were attributable to the Nazis, however. In 1989 Soviet authorities finally admitted to having murdered 15,000 Polish officers who went missing in May 1940. The Soviet secret service had been equally keen to obliterate potential opposition leaders.

Polish forces regrouped on Allied soil under a government-in-exile headed by Gen. Władysław Sikorski, first in Paris and then, after 1940, in London. In Poland an underground national army, the AK, was formed under Gen. Komorowski to fight against the occupiers and to organize resistance. After Germany's invasion of the USSR in 1941, Poland was occupied solely by Nazi forces. Many of the largest concentration camps were built on Polish soil, including Auschwitz near Kraków.

In 1943 the exiled prime minister Gen. Sikorski was killed in a plane crash. He was replaced by Stanisław Mikołajczyk of the Polish Peasants' Party. The same year saw a Jewish uprising in the Warsaw ghetto, and in 1944 there was a second rebellion against the Nazi occupation which lasted for two months. The Red Army was on the threshold of Warsaw throughout the two month revolt, but did not intervene. 150,000 civilians and 18,000 members of the AK lost their lives with virtually the whole of the remaining urban population deported and 85% of the city destroyed. By the time of Warsaw's liberation in Jan. 1945, the Jewish population numbered 200. The decimated underground movement was forced to seek assistance from Moscow, and after a number of compromises the Soviets recognized the Polish Committee of National Liberation, or the 'Lublin Committee', which proclaimed itself the sole legal government when Lublin was liberated in July 1944.

Poland's post-war fate was decided by the Allies at the Yalta and Potsdam conferences. At Yalta, Stalin agreed that the Lublin government should be extended to include non-Communists from the exile government, a promise that he failed to keep. Stanisław Mikołajczyk and three other members joined the provisional cabinet in July 1945. Nonetheless, many Polish politicians left the country. The Potsdam conference set Poland's Western border along the Oder-Neisse line, with all former German territories east of these rivers handed to Poland. As a result, Poles and Germans had to be resettled.

The first post-war elections were held in Jan. 1947. The Stalinist Polish Workers' Party (PPR) managed to crush both official and underground opposition. A Communist-dominated coalition under the leadership of Władysław Gomułka, the 'Democratic Bloc', won over three-quarters of the votes. Bolesław Bierut, leader of the USSR-backed Polish Communist Party, was named president. Defeated, Stanisław Mikołajczyk fled the country. An independently minded politician, Gomułka entered into conflict with Stalin by opposing agricultural collectivization and by speaking out against the formation of Cominform (Communist Information Bureau) in 1947. As a result he was removed as Secretary General of the PPR in Sept. 1948. Expelled from the party in late 1949, he was put under house arrest in July 1951. In 1948 the Polish United Workers' Party (PZPR) was formed, with Bierut as first party secretary. The nationalization of industry, land expropriation and the restructuring of the economy to favour heavy industry, including arms production, were accompanied in 1952 by a Soviet-style constitution and the renaming of the country as the People's Republic of Poland. This 'Stalinization' also included political and religious suppression and persecution, which targeted the Catholic church in particular.

Post-War Reform

In 1955 Poland joined other Eastern bloc countries in signing the Warsaw Pact military treaty. Meanwhile, the planned economy was failing, leading to widespread public unrest as food prices spiralled. Workers' strikes and riots in Poznań in 1956 were brutally suppressed by the authorities resulting in the death of 53 people. At this time Gomułka, the opponent of Stalinism, gained popularity. Readmitted to the party in 1956, Gomułka was reinstated as first secretary of the Party.

He attempted to introduce reforms, winning public support for his pledges of a 'Polish way' to socialism. Gomułka cut the power of the secret police, halted agricultural collectivization and brought an end to attacks on the Catholic Church. However, the suppression of freedom of expression continued and the economy did not improve. Gomułka's popular appeal began to falter. Student riots sprang up throughout the 1960s. In the 'March events' of 1968, the campaign for intellectual freedom led to widespread student riots and a reactive Party campaign against intellectuals and Jews, many of whom were forced to flee abroad.

Unrest and dissatisfaction with the party remained. Increased food prices in Dec. 1970 resulted in riots and strikes in the shipyards of Gdańsk, Szczecin and Gdynia. These were met with armed opposition, the authorities firing into the masses and killing several demonstrators. Gomułka and other leaders subsequently resigned, although Gomułka at least had the satisfaction of procuring West Germany's recognition of the Oder-Neisse line as the official Western border of Poland in Dec. 1970.

Solidarity

Edward Gierk succeeded Gomułka as first secretary, and in the following years launched a reform programme which was chiefly financed by loans from Western banks. He was hoping for a Polish economic miracle, but lacked the will to push through the necessary reforms. Short-term rewards were not enough to overcome the problems of a failing infrastructure, economic mismanagement of successive governments and a faltering world economy following the 1973-74 world oil crisis. Further demonstrations took place in several cities in 1976 to protest at more food price increases, and in Radom a Workers' Defence Committee was founded. While the government expressed disapproval, it did not act against the Committee.

In 1978 the election of Karol Wojtyła, Cardinal of Kraków, as Pope John Paul II boosted Poland's national self-esteem, celebrated in his trip to his native country the following year. Nonetheless, increased meat prices in July 1980 led to more waves of strikes, rippling out from the Ursus tractor plant near Warsaw across the country, and culminating in the Lenin shipyards in Gdańsk, where the Solidarity movement was born. The first independent trade union to be established in a communist country soon boasted a membership of 10m. Its leader, Lech Wałęsa, a shipyard electrician, set up a strike committee, the first of a succession across the country, and drew up a 21-point accord, demanding the right to strike and to form independent trade unions, the abolition of censorship, freedom of expression, the release of political prisoners and access to the media. Soviet and Polish communist efforts to curb Solidarity's popularity failed and the group was officially recognized after some government resistance.

The social unrest, coupled with failing health, led to Gierk's resignation in Sept. 1980. In Feb. 1981 Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski, the defence minister, became prime minister. This brought the military into the political front line and in Dec. 1981 Jaruzelski imposed martial law. A Military Council of National Salvation was established and Solidarity was proscribed. Wałęsa was among the thousands of members who were arrested and imprisoned. Demonstrations and strikes provoked the government into even stricter controls with the banning of all independent trade unions, although martial law was dropped a year later.

New hope was given to Poland in 1983, by the Pope's second visit, and by the award of the Nobel Peace Prize to Lech Wałęsa. Economic difficulties continued throughout the 1980s, and when the government proposed unpopular economic reforms in 1987, support for Solidarity led to nationwide strikes during 1988. Jaruzelski was forced to embark on negotiations with Wałęsa and the Catholic Church. Agreement was reached in April 1989 and Solidarity was given legal status and freedom to fight the upcoming elections, whilst the previously ceremonial post of Presidency was vested with new legislative powers. In return, Solidarity agreed to compete for only 35% of the seats in the Sejm.

At the July 1989 elections Solidarity won virtually all the seats they contested but because of the 35% rule Jaruzelski was voted in as president. However, Solidarity refused to join the communists in a grand coalition and Jaruzelski had to appoint Tadeusz Mazowiecki, an official of Solidarity, to be Poland's first non-communist premier in over 40 years. Jaruzelski subsequently resigned.

The first round of presidential elections in Nov. 1990 pitted Lech Wałęsa against Tadeusz Mazowiecki. Wałęsa won 43% of the votes in the first round and 74% in the second round in Dec., when he was inaugurated. Mazowiecki resigned his premiership and was replaced by Jan Bielcki, whose government held office until Aug. 1991. Genuinely free parliamentary elections did not take place until Oct. 1991, when there was a surprisingly low electoral turnout. In the absence of a clear-cut winner, several parties combined to form a centre-right coalition headed by Jan Olszewski. Owing to disputes both within the party and with President Wałęsa, however, the government lasted only seven months. This factionalism and inability to make compromises was typical of Poland's early post-Communist years. The government formed under Hanna Suchocka, Poland's first female prime minister, fared no better.

As in other post-Communist states, the economic measures necessary for the transition to a profitable market economy were highly unpopular with the electorate, not least when industrial modernization led to unemployment. In 1990 the finance minister, Leszek Balcerowicz, had introduced a range of tight austerity measures, including price rises and currency devaluation in an attempt to stabilize the economy before opening it to market forces. The Polish economy prospered but Wałęsa's popular appeal diminished as his tenure progressed. His skills as Solidarity's leader revolved around his ability to speak for the common people, but in government his tone was often regarded as aggressive and his style of leadership autocratic. Solidarity's loyalties as a trade union were often incompatible with its responsibilities as a political party. The elections of 1993 saw the return of the left under Waldemar Pawlak of the Polish Peasants' Party. After a series of intra-party quarrels and accusations of corruption, Pawlak's premiership ended in Feb. 1995.

Western Integration

Pawlak was replaced by the Communist Józef Oleksy of the Democratic Left Alliance. The left gained further political clout when Wałęsa was ousted in the presidential elections of 1995 by Aleksander Kwaśniewski. Redundancies in the Gdańsk shipyards in 1997 saw a renewed outbreak of nationwide strikes. Revising its political agenda, Solidarity forged a coalition of 25 centre-right parties to create Solidarity Electoral Action. This party emerged as the strongest in the 1997 general election when Jerzy Buzek, a member of Solidarity since its inception, became prime minister. A new constitution came into effect, reducing the powers of the president and committing the country to a social market economy.

Kwaśniewski's communist heritage caused concern among many Western leaders, but he confirmed his intention to press for EU and NATO membership. Market reforms and privatization continued apace. In 1999, at a joint ceremony with Czech president Václav Havel, Kwaśniewski signed Poland into NATO. The following year Kwaśniewski secured a second term and in 2001 Buzek was succeeded by Leszek Miller. A former communist turned social democrat, Miller's key aim was to prepare Poland for entry into the EU. Facing a deteriorating economy, he cut the national debt by increases in taxation and spending cuts. On 1 May 2004 Poland became a member of the EU.

Lech Kaczyński succeeded Kwaśniewski in 2005, with his twin brother Jarosław Kaczyński, serving as prime minister in 2006–07. President Kaczyński was killed in April 2010 when his plane crashed over Russia on its way to a war memorial service. The head of the national bank, the entire command of the armed services and several senior government figures, MPs, clergy and academics also perished in the accident. Bronisław Komorowski succeeded Kaczyński as president.

In Oct. 2011 Donald Tusk of Civic Platform secured a further term as premier, having come to office in 2007. He resigned in Sept. 2014 to become president of the European Council and was replaced by Ewa Kopacz. Relations with Russia became strained in 2014, with Poland warning against increasing Russian militarism following the Kremlin's annexation of Crimea.

TERRITORY AND POPULATION

Poland is bounded in the north by the Baltic Sea and Russia, east by Lithuania, Belarus and Ukraine, south by the Czech Republic and Slovakia and west by Germany. Poland comprises an area of 312,685 sq. km (120,728 sq. miles).

At the census of 31 March 2011 the population was 38,511,824, giving a density of 123.2 per sq. km. Population estimate, Dec. 2014: 38,478,602. In 2009, 61.0% of the population lived in urban areas.

The UN gave an estimated population for 2015 of 38.61m.

The country is divided into 16 regions or voivodships (województwo), created from the previous 49 on 1 Jan. 1999 following administrative reform. Area (in sq. km) and census population (in 1,000) in 2011 (density per sq. km in brackets).

The population is 94% Polish. Minorities at the 2011 census included 418,000 who stated that they were Silesians as a national-ethnic identification, 49,000 Germans, 37,000 Belarusians and 36,000 Ukrainians. There are an estimated 230,000 people in Poland of Kashubian ethnicity (direct descendants of an early Slavic tribe of Pomeranians). They generally declare Polish nationality and consider themselves both Poles and Kashubians.

There is a large Polish diaspora, some 53% in the USA.

The official language is Polish.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

2014 (in 1,000): births, 376.5; deaths, 376.5; marriages, 188.5; divorces, 65.8; infant deaths, 1.6. Rates (per 1,000 population): birth, 9.9; death, 9.9; marriage, 5.0; divorce, 1.7; infant mortality (per 1,000 live births), 4.2. A law prohibiting abortion was passed in 1993, but an amendment of Aug. 1996 permits it in cases of hardship or difficult personal situation. The most popular age range for marrying in 2014 was 25–29 for both males and females. Expectation of life at birth, 2014, was 73.8 years for males and 81.6 years for females. In 2014 there were 28,080 emigrants (including 10,266 to Germany) and 12,330 immigrants. Number of suicides, 2013, 6,215; the suicide rate per 100,000 population was 29.2 among males and 4.3 among females in 2013. Population growth rate, 2014, 0.0%; fertility rate, 2014, 1.3 births per woman (one of the lowest rates in the world).

CLIMATE

Climate is continental, marked by long and severe winters. Rainfall amounts are moderate, with a marked summer maximum. Warsaw, Jan. 24°F (-4.3°C), July 64°F (17.9°C). Annual rainfall 18.3" (465 mm). Gdańsk, Jan. 29°F (-1.7°C), July 63°F (17.2°C). Annual rainfall 22.0" (559 mm). Kraków, Jan. 27°F (-2.8°C), July 67°F (19.4°C). Annual rainfall 28.7" (729 mm). Wrocław, Jan. 24°F (-4.3°C), July 64°F (17.9°C). Annual rainfall 20.7" (525 mm).

CONSTITUTION AND GOVERNMENT

The present Constitution was passed by national referendum on 25 May 1997 and became effective on 17 Oct. 1997. The head of state is the President, who is directly elected for a five-year term (renewable once). The President may appoint, but may not dismiss, cabinets.

The authority of the republic is vested in the Sejm (Parliament of 460 members), elected by proportional representation for four years by all citizens over 18. There is a 5% threshold for parties and 8% for coalitions, but seats are reserved for representatives of ethnic minorities even if their vote falls below 5%. 69 of the Sejm seats are awarded from the national lists of parties polling more than 7% of the vote. The Sejm elects a Council of State and a Council of Ministers. There is also an elected 100-member upper house, the Senate. The President and the Senate each has a power of veto which only a two-thirds majority of the Sejm can override. The President does not, however, have a veto over the annual budget. The Prime Minister is chosen by the President with the approval of the Sejm.

A Political Council consultative to the presidency consisting of representatives of all the major political tendencies was set up in Jan. 1991.

National Anthem

'Jeszcze Polska nie zginęła' ('Poland has not yet perished'); words by J. Wybicki, tune by M. Ogiński.

RECENT ELECTIONS

Parliamentary elections were held on 25 Oct. 2015. The opposition Law and Justice Party (PiS) won 235 of 460 seats with 37.6% of the vote, ahead of the ruling Civic Platform (PO), with 138 seats and 24.1%; Kukiz' 15 (K'15), with 42 and 8.8%; Modern, with 28 and 7.5%; Polish People's Party (PSL), with 16 and 5.1%; German Minority (MN), with 1 and 0.2%. In winning 235 seats the PiS became the first party to achieve an absolute majority at a free election in Poland. In the Senate elections held on the same day, the Law and Justice Party won 61 of 100 seats, the Civic Platform 34 and the Polish People's Party 1; four seats went to independents. Turnout was 50.9%.

Presidential elections were held in two rounds on 10 and 24 May 2015. In the first round 11 candidates stood; turnout was 49.0%. Andrzej Duda of the PiS gained 34.8% of votes cast, Bronisław Komorowski (ind.) 33.8%, Paweł Kukiz (ind.) 20.8%, Janusz Korwin-Mikke of the Coalition for the Restoration of Freedom and Hope to the Republic 3.3% and Magdalena Ogórek (ind.) 2.4%. Other candidates obtained less than 2%. In the second round run-off Andrzej Duda was elected president with 51.5% of the vote against 48.5% for Bronisław Komorowski.

European Parliament

Poland has 51 representatives. At the May 2014 elections turnout was 23.8% (24.5% in 2009). The PO won 19 seats with 32.1% of votes cast (political affiliation in European Parliament: European People's Party); the PiS, 19 with 31.8% (European Conservatives and Reformists); the Democratic Left Alliance–Union of Labour, 5 with 9.4% (Progressive Alliance of Socialists and Democrats); the Congress of the New Right, 4 with 7.2% (non-attached); the PSL, 4 with 6.8% (European People's Party).

CURRENT LEADERS

Andrzej Duda

Position

President

Introduction

As the candidate of the right-leaning Law and Justice Party (PiS), Andrzej Duda defeated incumbent Bronisław Komorowski in a presidential election run-off held on 24 May 2015. He is a lawyer and former member of the European Parliament.

Early Life

Duda was born on 16 May 1972 in Kraków and studied law at the Jagiellonian University, where his parents were both professors. In 2001 he became an assistant professor in the university's department of administrative law. Four years later he was awarded his doctorate in law.

Duda joined the Freedom Party in the early 2000s but joined the PiS in 2005. From 2006 until 2010 in the government of Lech Kaczyński he was variously undersecretary of state at the ministry of justice and in the chancellery of the president as well as a member of the state tribunal (a constitutional court). In 2010 Duda failed in his bid to become mayor of Kraków but was elected to parliament in the 2011 elections. In 2014 he became a member of the European Parliament, where he held a eurosceptic line, before being announced as the PiS' presidential candidate.

In the first round of the 2015 presidential election, Duda came first with 34.8% of votes. In the second round he polled 51.5% to force Bronisław Komorowski from office after a single term.

Career in Office

Duda was sworn in on 6 Aug. 2015 and consolidated his position in Oct. 2015 when his party won 51% of the seats in the parliamentary elections. Since taking office he has rejected the EU's proposals for a compulsory migrant quota. Wary of the threat from Russia, he has fostered closer ties with central and eastern European neighbours. On the domestic front, he has promised to lower the retirement age and raise the tax-free income threshold. In Jan. 2016 he signed a bill that ensures senior figures in the state media are appointed and dismissed by the treasury minister, rather than the National Broadcasting Council.

Beata Szydło

Position

Prime Minister

Introduction

Beata Szydło took office as prime minister on 16 Nov. 2015 following the success of her Law and Justice Party (PiS) at parliamentary elections a month earlier. A protégé of often controversial PiS leader Jarosław Kaczyński, Szydło's main challenge was to emerge from his shadow to present a more moderate governing style.

Early Life

Szydło was born on 15 April 1963 in Oświęcim, the daughter of a miner. In 1987 she graduated in ethnography from the Jagiellonian University in Kraków. From 1987–95 she worked as ethnographer at the Historical Museum of Kraków, before going on to establish the Libiąskiego Cultural Centre in 1995. In 1997 she became director of the Brzeszczach Cultural Centre, and in 1998 was appointed mayor of Brzeszcze. In her seven-year tenure she served on various regional councils, and in 2004 she participated in an international leadership programme organised by the US Department of State.

In 2005 Szydło joined the PiS, winning election to the Sejm in Sept. that year. She was re-elected to parliament in 2007, 2011 and 2015. On 24 July 2010 she was appointed PiS vice-president, and in Sept. 2014 became party treasurer. She was a leading figure in her party's 2015 presidential and parliamentary election bids, being credited for the management of Andrzej Duda's successful presidential campaign in May. On 20 June 2015 Kaczyński nominated Szydło as the party's prime ministerial candidate and on 9 Nov. her appointment was confirmed. She replaced Ewa Kopacz on 16 Nov.

Career in Office

Szydło was expected to pursue her party's conservative, nationalistic, anti-Russian and eurosceptic line and to introduce legislation to increase family-focused welfare spending, curb immigration, reduce the retirement age and raise the minimum wage. She indicated that her government would break ranks with the EU by refusing to take in the EU quota of 4,500 migrant refugees agreed by the previous administration, citing security concerns in light of the 2015 Paris Islamist terror attacks.

DEFENCE

Poland is divided into two military districts: Pomeranian (North) and Silesian (South). In 2013 defence expenditure totalled US$9,829m. (US$256 per capita), representing 1.9% of GDP.

Conscription ended on 1 Jan. 2010.

Army

Strength (2011) 46,900. In accordance with a programme of modernization of the armed forces, the strength has been gradually declining, from 230,000 in the socialist era in 1988 to 186,000 in 1995 and further to the current figure of under 50,000. In addition there were 14,100 border guards in 2011. Equipment in 2011 included 944 main battle tanks and 1,670 armoured infantry fighting vehicles.

Navy

The fleet comprises four ex-Soviet and one ex-Norwegian diesel submarines, two frigates, and six patrol and coastal combatants. There is a small Naval Aviation force.

Personnel in 2011 totalled 8,100 including 1,350 in Naval Aviation. Bases are at Gdynia, Hel, Świnoujście and Kolobrzeg.

Air Force

The Air Force had a strength (2011) of 17,200. There were 112 combat-capable aircraft in 2011 (including F-16s, MiG-29s and Su-22s). Since the end of the communist era in 1989, Poland has been steadily reducing its reliance on Russian-built aircraft.

INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

A treaty of friendship with Germany signed on 17 June 1991 renounced the use of force, recognized Poland's western border as laid down at the Potsdam conference of 1945 (the 'Oder–Neisse line') and guaranteed minority rights in both countries.

A referendum held on 8 June 2003 approved accession to the EU, with 77.4% of votes cast for membership and 22.6% against. Poland became a member of the EU on 1 May 2004.

Poland's Senate approved the European Union's Treaty of Lisbon on 2 April 2008, the day after the Sejm had done so. However, then President Lech Kaczyński did not ratify it until 12 Oct. 2009, following acceptance of the Treaty by Ireland in a referendum ten days earlier.

ECONOMY

In 2011 trade, restaurants and hotels contributed 17.1% to GDP; followed by finance and real estate, 16.6%; manufacturing, 16.6%; services, 11.1%; construction, 6.2%; and transport and communications, 6.1%.

Overview

Having pursued a policy of economic liberalization since 1990, Poland has the largest economy in Central Europe according to World Bank statistics. Under the communist regime the economy had been heavily skewed towards industry but since 1990 the service sector has expanded, contributing 64% of GDP in 2014 (compared to industry's 33%). Most of the banking sector has been privatized, as have many large industries. An unspectacular yet solid growth performance since the transition has helped raise living standards, with per capita income levels increasing by 250% between 1993 and 2010. Also, the business environment has been friendly, with transparent investment rules and equality for domestic and foreign firms. GDP has grown by 19% since 2008, a performance unmatched by any other EU nation.

In 1990 and 1991 the economy shrank by 11.5% and 7.0% respectively, but subsequent economic restructuring helped to achieve productivity gains. The Economist Intelligence Unit estimates that from 1994–2003 total factor productivity grew at an annual average of over 3%. This reflected sound macroeconomic management combined with a raft of transition policies, including price liberalization and lower import barriers. After accession to the European Union in 2004 growth was buoyant, with exporters benefiting from EU market integration.

The unemployment rate declined steadily (from 19.9% in 2002 to 7.1% in 2008) until the effects of the global financial crisis began to be felt. By Dec. 2012 it had risen to 10.4%. Joblessness has been highest where state farms once dominated (though accounting for only 3.4% of GDP in 2014, agriculture makes up 11% of total employment), while former industrial areas have proved more dynamic. By 2015 real wages had climbed by more than 10% since early 2008, while unemployment had fallen below the EU average to 7.8% by May 2015.

Despite being hit by the financial crisis, Poland fared better than many of its neighbours and became the only EU country in 2009 to avoid recession. This was largely a result of the floating exchange rate regime, which limited imbalances, allied to effective policy responses. Real GDP growth fell to 3.9% in 2008, down from 7.2% in 2007. In response the central bank cut the seven-day reference interest rate from 5.0% to 4.25%. Output in the industrial sector fell by 4.4% in Dec. 2008 and manufacturing output fell by 3.9%, mirroring a slowdown in the export market. Exports contracted by 30% year-on-year in the first quarter of 2009 and foreign direct investment fell by 50%.

In April 2009 the Polish government approached the IMF for US$20.5bn. from its flexible credit line to shore up borrowing needs in the face of the crisis. Real GDP growth rebounded to 5.0% in 2011, aided by the economy's large domestic market, stable private consumption and limited reliance on exports. However, tax cuts enacted in 2006 and 2007, combined with government counter-cyclical fiscal stimulus, saw the government deficit rise from 2% of GDP in 2007 to 7% in 2009.

Growth slowed to 1.6% in 2012 and 1.3% in 2013, reflecting uncertain prospects in the eurozone, a slowdown in exports (75% of which go to the EU) and lower public investment. However, it accelerated to 3.3% in 2014, propelled by increased domestic demand aided by a strong labour market and improved external conditions. Nonetheless, inflation measured below 0% in 2015.

The IMF has stressed the need for continuing privatization and structural reforms to strengthen the labour market and further improve the business climate. Other priorities are to reduce public debt, which stood at 50.4% of GDP in 2014, and to insulate Poland from the effects of eurozone sovereign debt crises.

Currency

The currency unit is the zloty (PLN) of 100 groszy. A new zloty was introduced on 1 Jan. 1995 at 1 new zloty = 10,000 old zlotys. Inflation rates (based on OECD statistics):

2005	2006	2007	2008	2009	2010	2011	2012	2013	2014
2.2%	1.3%	2.4%	4.2%	3.8%	2.6%	4.2%	3.6%	1.0%	0.1%

Inflation, in single figures since 1999, had been nearly 250% in 1990. The zloty became convertible on 1 Jan. 1990. In 1995 the zloty was subject to a creeping devaluation of 1.2% per month; it was allowed to float in a 14% (+/-7%) band from 16 May 1995. In April 2000 Poland introduced a floating exchange rate. Foreign exchange reserves were US$72,280m. and gold reserves 3.31m. troy oz in Sept. 2009. In July 2009 total money supply was 363,655m. zlotys.

Budget

Central government revenue and expenditure (in 1bn. zlotys):

	2007	2008	2009
Revenue	389.4	414.6	412.8
Expenditure	402.8	449.3	480.2

Poland's budget deficit in 2014 was 3.3% of GDP (2013, 4.0%; 2012, 3.7%). The required target set by the EU is a budget deficit of no more than 3%.

VAT is 23.0% (reduced rates, 8% and 5%). Taxes accounted for 53.2% of revenues in 2009; social benefits accounted for 44.5% of expenditures.

Performance

Real GDP growth rates (based on OECD statistics):

2005	2006	2007	2008	2009	2010	2011	2012	2013	2014
3.5%	6.2%	7.2%	3.9%	2.6%	3.7%	5.0%	1.6%	1.3%	3.3%

Poland was the only EU member country not to experience a recession in 2009 and the only one with positive growth. Total GDP in 2014 was US$545.0bn. The private sector accounts for more than 70% of GDP.

Banking and Finance

The National Bank of Poland (established 1945) is the central bank and bank of issue (President, Marek Belka). There were 67 commercial banks operating in 2011 and 574 co-operative banks. Poland's leading banks are PKO Bank Polski with assets of 156.5bn. zlotys in Dec. 2009 and Bank Pekao (assets of 130.6bn. zlotys in Dec. 2009).

Gross external debt amounted to US$331,790m. in June 2012.

In 2012 Poland received US$6.1bn. of foreign direct investment, down from US$20.6bn. in 2011. The total stock of FDI at the end of 2012 was US$235.1bn.

There is a stock exchange in Warsaw.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

In 2011, 10.4% of energy consumption came from renewables (wind power, solar power, hydro-electric power, tidal power, geothermal energy and biomass), compared to the European Union average of 13.0%. A target of 15% has been set by the EU for 2020.

Environment

Poland's carbon dioxide emissions from the consumption of energy in 2011 were the equivalent of 8.0 tonnes per capita.

Electricity

Installed capacity was 34.6m. kW in 2011. Production (2011) 163.55bn. kWh; consumption per capita was 4,144 kWh in 2011. Poland is a net exporter of electricity. There are plans to construct two nuclear power plants, with the first one potentially to open in 2024.

Oil and Gas

Total oil reserves (2011) amount to some 96m. bbls; natural gas reserves (2012), 100bn. cu. metres. Crude oil production was 5.1m. bbls in 2009; natural gas (2012), 4.2m. cu. metres. Poland is dependent on Russia for around 60% of its gas. The largest oil distributor is Polski Koncern Naftowy ORLEN SA, created by the merger of Petrochemia Płock and Centrala Produktów Naftowych.

Minerals

Poland is a major producer of coal (reserves of some 7,500m. tonnes), copper (26m. tonnes) and sulphur. Production (2012, in tonnes): coal, 79.9m.; brown coal, 64.3m.; salt, 4.1m.; copper, 427,064; silver, 1,149.

Agriculture

In 2014, 16.2% of the employed persons were engaged in agriculture. In 2014 there were 10.90m. ha. of arable land. There were 1.4m. farms in 2014; private farms accounted for 90.9% of the total area of agricultural land and state-owned farms for 9.1%. In March 2012 there were 7.5m. Facebook users.

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Justice

The penal code was adopted in 1969. Espionage and treason carry the severest penalties. For minor crimes there is provision for probation sentences and fines. In 1995 the death penalty was suspended for five years; it had not been applied since 1988. A new penal code abolishing the death penalty was adopted in June 1997.

In 2009 there were the following courts: one Supreme Court, one Supreme Administrative Court, 16 administrative courts of first instance, 11 appeal courts, 45 regional courts, 320 district courts, 68 family consultative centres and 35 juvenile institutions. Judges are appointed by the President of the Republic from candidatures proposed by the National Council of the Judiciary and have life tenure. An ombudsman's office was established in 1987.

Family consultative centres were established in 1977 for cases involving divorce and domestic relations, but in 1990 divorce suits were transferred to ordinary courts. In 2014, 295,353 criminal sentences were passed. There were 578 ascertained homicides in 2014. The population in penal institutions in Dec. 2014 was 77,371 (201 per 100,000 of national population). Poland was ranked 15th of 102 countries for criminal justice and 22nd for civil justice in the 2015 World Justice Project Rule of Law Index, which provides data on how the rule of law is experienced by the general public across eight categories.

Education

Education from six to 18 is free and compulsory, although from 16 to 18 it may be part-time. Secondary education is then optional in general or vocational schools. In the 2009–10 school year there were: pre-primary schools, 17,444 with 994,138 pupils and 53,103 full-time equivalent teachers; primary schools, 13,972 with 2,235,018 pupils and 224,351 full-time equivalent teachers; lower secondary schools, 7,810 with 1,346,112 pupils and 104,755 full-time equivalent teachers; upper secondary schools, 10,709 with 1,770,013 pupils and 134,573 full-time equivalent teachers; post-secondary schools, 3,108 with 266,057 pupils and 8,210 full-time equivalent teachers; tertiary institutions, 563 with 1,918,793 students and 105,309 academic staff (excluding postgraduate and doctoral courses). In 2009 institutions of higher education included 19 universities, 23 technical universities, seven agricultural schools, 80 schools of economics, 15 theological schools, nine medical schools and 102 teacher training colleges. In 2011, 39% of 25–34 year-olds had a tertiary qualification. Since the early 1990s there has been a boom in private higher education—in 2009–10 more than 30% of all students in higher education were at private colleges.

The adult literacy rate in 2008 was over 99%.

Religious (Catholic) instruction was introduced in all schools in 1990; for children of dissenting parents there are classes in ethics.

In 2009 total expenditure on education came to 5.8% of GDP and 11.5% of total government spending.

Health

Medical treatment is free and funded from public sources. Medical care is also available in private clinics. In 2009 there were 795 general hospitals with a total of 193,400 beds (including beds and incubators for newborn babies). 82,700 physicians, 12,100 dentists, 193,100 nurses, 24,200 pharmacists and 22,400 thousand midwives worked directly with patients within hospital and outpatient care in 2009. In Jan. 1999 reform of the health care system was inaugurated. All citizens can now choose their own doctor, who is paid by the public sector under the social security system. The share of health insurance paid mainly by employees, equalling 7.5% of the amount earned by them, is assigned for the financing of the health care system. In 2013 Poland spent 6.4% of its GDP on health, with 29.4% of health expenditure coming from private sources.
